

Dissapproves of Segregation

The Chicago Defender (Big Weekend Edition) (1905-1966); Aug 11, 1917;

ProQuest Historical Newspapers: Chicago Defender

pg. 1

Dissapproves of Segregation

In the survey work being done by physicians in the city to get information on tubercular conditions, a number of cases were found on the south side. The headquarters was at 2950 Calumet avenue. In order to relieve the strain at that place a similar place was opened at 4746 South Wabash avenue. It was then reported that there was segregation, but it was later learned that such was not the case. However, Dr. George C. Hall, Rev. A. J. Carey, Dr. M. J. Brown, Hon. E. H. Wright, Alderman L. B. Anderson and Editor Robert S. Abbott called upon Dr. John Dill Robertson, health commissioner, and he assured the committee that no such order had been sent out and that he would not allow such an order to be issued from his office. If he did he would feel unworthy of living in a state that gave us Lincoln and Logan. The committee was satisfied that the discrimination as reported was merely a rumor.