Beating The Clock

Helen Douglas wound up her campaign in a financial hole that some of us she's helped might want to kick in on . . . Boston's Matthew Bullock is in Haiti for the winter . . . National Council of Negro Women's Intercultural Committee is mulling plans for a Caribbean goodwill tour in the early spring . . . Paul Robeson's suing the State Department for refusing him a passport. NCNW is shopping for a top executive director and a field secretary, Dorothy Height writes this week. Dutton Ferguson passed a State Department exam for script writing for Western Germany, but his long-ago National Negro Congress membership may rise up to smite him again, despite the fact he bowed out of the organization long before it was branded a front organization.
