Introduction

The following is an unofficial catalog of over 680 works attributed to the Báb, 11,900 works attributed to Bahá'u'lláh, and 12,800 works attributed to 'Abdu'l-Bahá which are accessible to the public, either in published form, in manuscripts held in national or university archives, or in digital images, texts and translations found on the Internet. The holdings of the Bahá'í World Centre Archives in Haifa, Israel, which are not open to the public, are not included.

The primary goals of the catalog are to compile all publicly available sources of the works of the three Central Figures of the Bahá'í Faith both in their original languages and in English translation, and where possible to facilitate online access to these sources via hyperlinks to page images or typed texts. As the goal is maximal inclusion, works of unknown authentication status, oral statements and provisional translations are all included. The Bahá'í Reference Library website at www.bahai.org/library is the official online repository of fully authenticated Bahá'í scriptures and their translations, and entries in that repository are accorded priority in this catalog.

As the surviving works of the Báb are known to comprise around 2,000 items, those of Bahá'u'lláh nearly 20,000 items, and those of 'Abdu'l-Bahá over 30,000 items, the present catalog represents roughly 35%, 60%, and 40%, respectively, of the known item count for each author. By cumulative word count, it represents somewhat more than half of the known total (over 9 million out of an estimated 16 million words).[1]

Catalog entries follow a standardized shorthand format. Each entry contains the following elements:

> ID: Each work is assigned a unique ID or "PIN" (Partial Inventory Number), comprising a two-digit author code (BB for the Báb, BH for Bahá'u'lláh, and AB for 'Abdu'l-Bahá) and a five-digit number in generally descending order of approximate word count.
> In keeping with the goal of maximum inclusivity, oral statements are included in this catalog, although they were excluded in the above statistics (sometimes referred to as "pilgrims' notes"; they comprise around 15% of the catalog by item count). They receive entries in separate sequences prefixed with BBU, BHU, and ABU (U for "utterances"), respectively. This category includes a range of material of varying proximity to the source, from talks approved for publication by 'Abdu'l-Bahá for which published Persian transcriptions also exist, to personal recollections written down in another language years later. All are non-authoritative owing to the lack of an original text authenticated by its author. As a letter written on behalf of Shoghi Effendi states: "According to the Teachings of Bahá'u'lláh no authority can be attached to a mere hearsay, no matter through whom it may come. The Tablets that bear the seal or signature of Bahá'u'lláh and the Master ['Abdu'l-Bahá] are the only parts of the literature that have any authority and that constitute the basis of our belief. All other forms of literature may bear points of interest but they cannot be considered as authentic." (18 Nov. 1931, LG#1437)

[1] See Bahá'í World Centre Research Department memoranda dated 1 October 2010 and 6 June 2013, https://bahai-library.com/uhj_numbers_sacred_writings.

One consequence of the goal of maximum inclusivity is that further research on authorship may lead to a few items being removed from the Inventory; this is particularly the case with the Writings of the Báb.

Any future editions of this catalog will preserve the existing inventory numbers so that they can be used as stable references. Thus, newly added works will be assigned numbers at the end of their respective series regardless of word count. In addition, some items are extracts or fragments which have not yet been located within a complete text, or translations not yet matched with the original. Further research may lead to some items being merged, creating gaps in the sequence.

Ordering items by word count will tend to elevate the prominence of longer items that may be more peripheral while diminishing that of shorter but more central items. To partially compensate, two or three of these latter works of the three authors were placed at the heads of their respective sequences.

Title or description: Titles in Shoghi Effendi's lists of best-known works appearing in the original The Bahá'í World series are used when they exist, and are printed in bold font to highlight their assumed canonical status. Other works may be given a commonly used title, brief description or informal working title; otherwise this field is left blank. Diacritical marks are dropped for simplicity.

Word count: Word counts should be regarded as estimates and are rounded off to the nearest ten. Addressee, salutations and closing may be included in the word counts of some items but not in others. Where only excerpts of a work are available, the word count roughly represents the length of the excerpt. Some discrepancies may arise when only a translation is available because word counts for the same passage are usually higher in English than in Persian and Arabic. In a few cases the existence of a work is known but its word count is not.

Language: Over 90% of the works of the Báb, well over half of the works of Bahá'u'lláh, and one third of the works of 'Abdu'-Bahá, are in Arabic (Ara); the remainder are in Persian (Per) or a mixture of the two (mixed). The language may be listed as mixed even if the ratio of one or the other is small. A small fraction of 'Abdu'l-Bahá's correspondence is in Ottoman Turkish (Trk), and there are a few dozen cablegrams in English (Eng) for which it is assumed that there is no Persian original. For several dozen utterances of Abdu'l-Bahá the only available text is in German.

First line (where available): First lines in Arabic and Persian may omit introductory phrases and may contain typing errors and discrepancies against the best available text. Diatricitical marks such as tashdid, maddah, and hamzah are usually omitted. In some cases the existence of a work is known, possibly in translation, but its original-language first line is not. Corresponding first lines in English translation are listed in black font if the translation is authorized at the Bahá'í World Centre and in light grey font if any portion is provisional.

To assist in the identification of Tablets, first lines with no available translation have been experimentally and provisionally rendered into English using Claude 3.5 Sonnet and GPT-4o; these are flagged with "[3.5s]" or "[4o]" and, as with all LLM-based translations, may contain substantial inaccuracies and should not be used as a basis for analysis of content without verifying against the original text. Similar (but rarely identical) results are freely obtainable by visiting claude.ai or chatgpt.com and including the prompt "Translate the following in the eloquent, slightly archaic style of Shoghi Effendi". As LLM technology is experiencing rapid development, it is hoped that future editions of this Inventory will be able to take advantage of improvements to the models.

Manuscript sources (Mss): Manuscript references are given in a condensed format for efficiency, as follows: Source code (a few letters long; see the key to source codes), volume (as needed), a period or colon separator, page number (followed by "r" for recto and "v" for verso, as needed), another period separator, and finally the line number (or order on the page when there are multiple items, "a", "b", "c", etc.—if there are multiple quotations on a page then those from well-known works may be ignored), as needed. So "PR02.069v01" is Princeton manuscript #2, page 69 verso, line 1. There are some variations in this format; the meaning should be decipherable in context (and by consulting the source index to see how other items within the same source are indexed). Sometimes the ending page is also given. In a few cases the reference is by order of item in the volume (#) rather than by page number. Entries suffixed with "x" are extracts. The ordering of listing within this section has no significance.

Hyperlinks to content hosted on various web sites are included where available. Some effort has been made to link to the exact page, but links may land many pages from the target (and the links may work better on a PC than on a cellphone). As with all Internet content, links may become broken; in such cases the Wayback Machine at archive.org may contain an archived copy.

Original language publications (Pubs): Sources listed in this section include print publications and Internet content, and are also given in condensed format, with links provided where available. Precedence in listing order is accorded to the official repository at www.bahai.org/library (BRL), otherwise order of listing is not important. Not all sources have been exhaustivly indexed. Priority has been assigned in the indexing to publications containing works not found elsewhere. This may include controversial or polemical works when they are the only available source. Extracts from the most well-known works, such as the Kitáb-i-Aqdas and other named Tablets, are usually not indexed.

Incoming question or context (Question): Included for a minority of works, mostly reported utterances of 'Abdu'l-Bahá. They have also been compiled in an index of questions following the catalogs.

English translations (Trans): Includes both print publications and content found on the Internet. Similarly listed in condensed format, with hyperlinks provided where available. Translations authorized at the Bahá'í World Centre are listed before others; otherwise the listing order is not significant. Full translations are often listed before extracts (the latter suffixed as always with an "x"). Many provisional translations are works in progress or otherwise tentative, and inclusion in this catalog does not constitute an endorsement of their accuracy.

Musical interpretations (Musical interps.): Musical compositions are one marker of the influence and centrality of a work within the community. Criteria for inclusion here are minimal: Works must be available on the Internet and should be studio recorded. An index of musical interpretations is provided, grouped by catalog ID in descending order of song frequency. There are over 1,600 works in this initial listing, dominated by English, Persian and Arabic songs and chants, with a smaller number of other languages represented.

Miscellaneous notes and index entries (Notes): Also listed in condensed format, with links provided where available. A few previous handlists and catalogs, often containing useful information, are included here, as well as a small number of miscellaneous notes, and references to discussions in the secondary literature; only a fraction of the possible references have been included.

Abstract: Available for selected items. Abstracts of best-known works of Baha'u'llah are taken from chapter 5 of The World of the Bahá'í Faith (Routledge, 2022).

Subjects: Included in version 5 for the first time. This shows the results of the first corpus-wide LLM-assisted content survey, described in more detail here. Subject categories have been assigned to most catalog entries by analyzing, using Claude 3.5 Sonnet, each text against the list of 650 subject categories found at the end of this volume. While these categories have been selected to cover a broad range of topics addressed in the Bahá'í Writings, they reflect personal understanding and bias; a different interpretational lens will produce a different categorization. Each subject tag is hyperlinked to a corresponding compilation of relevant brief translated extracts (those following the separator ========= may be machine generated, and there may be redundances). Within each item subjects are listed in ascending order as measured by word counts of the extracts found in their corresponding compilations. A frequency table showing a rough sense of the dominant themes across all three authors is also found in part 2.

There are many caveats for the reader: The thematic compilations have no internal organization; they are simply collections of uncut gems, offering a glimpse of what lies in the uncharted ocean of the Baha'i Revelation and bringing to the surface potentially interesting passages for further investigation. The subject categories are overlapping and partially redundant by design (to maximize uptake). The translated excerpts with which they are associated may be irrelevant, translated inaccurately, or ignore existing authorized translations. They may lack impotant context before or after the quotation, which must be sought by reference to the source text. Diacriticals are dropped, and the archaic style characteristic of authorized Baha'i translations may not be used consistently. Although some vetting has been done by hand, the large quantity of material (over 15 million words in translation) made detailed checking impossible. Users are advised to be cautious with all these texts and to check them against the original sources and existing translations before using them further.

As AI technology continues to rapidly improve, it is anticipated that improvements will be made to both the accuracy and style of the machine translations found in the thematic compilations. However, in the domain of sacred texts human translations are the ultimate standard, and as always, the official repository at https://www.bahai.org/library is the sole authoritative reference for both original Bahá'í texts and their authorized translations.

A bibliography with key to the source codes follows the catalog entries, with hyperlinks to scanned or typed works where available.

As mentioned above, one attempt to organize some of the subject matter of the works indexed in the catalogs is present at the end of this volume. It offers a subject classification scheme comprising five main sections, corresponding roughly to questions of being, knowledge, conduct, governance, and the historical contingencies of past, present and future. A side column suggests areas of overlap with traditional disciplines. The overall structure generally follows Immanuel Kant's three questions of reason:[2] "What can we know?" (sections I and II), "What ought we to do?" (sections III and IV); "What may we hope?" (section V).

Approximately 650 subheadings follow the main subject headings. These conceptual building blocks, which are interconnected and overlapping, are in most cases hyperlinked to thematic compilations of quotations from the Bahá'í Writings and beyond hosted at http://loom.loomofreality.org and now greatly enhanced with AI-generated thematic extracts below the ========= line.

A second volume contains a series of finding aids, all keyed to the ID numbers and source codes:

- An index of source references. While lengthy, this is the backbone of the catalogs, and essentially presents a scriptural table of contents for each quoted source.
- An index of first lines (in the original language, with invocations removed). This is offered especially as an aid to researchers in identifying newly discovered manuscripts.
- An index of questions (applying mainly to some of the reported utterances of 'Abdu'l-Bahá).
- An index of musical compositions, in descending order of frequency.

A project of this scope will inevitably contain many errors and omissions. Errata, broken or misdirected links, quotations to fill out underrepresented subject categories, links to scanned versions of additional source texts, additions and corrections to abstracts and machine translations, and other feedback can be sent to loom.of.reality@gmail.com.

Occasional updates are planned. The latest version of this catalog can be found at http://blog.loomofreality.org/.

Abstract: Alludes to the identity of the Stone of the Philosophers, declaring that it is "cast down in every place", that it is single in its essence yet diverse in its manifestations, and that the alchemical process is brought to completion solely by that which resides within it. Explains that the water which is extracted from it, which has been called mercury and which is the key of the operation, nurtures the earth of the stone until the red sulfur, which was concealed within the earth, rises to the surface through the power of the water. Reveals that the red sulfur, which has been called by many names, is the essence of the active agent (jawharu'l-fa'il), the activity of which "astounds the hearts of those who have attained". Enjoins those who have discovered the secret not to make it for themselves. Accuses Mirza Yahya of producing false treatises on the subject based on what he had heard, and misunderstood, from Baha'u'llah's many Tablets on the subject. Subjects: alchemy; the elixir, soul; spirit after death, free will and predestination; fate, rebellion and misdeeds of Mirza Yahya; the Azalis, prayer for forgiveness.

Pubs: LHKM3.070, MUH3.273-274, ASAT4.060x, OOL.B191.05. Trans: ADMS#169. Abstract: Praises God for creating the "treasure of creation" in Paradise and manifesting fire and water together through His power. Marvels at the serpent He made as the guardian of this treasure, endowed with His divine breath. Requests that through this serpent, God unites the hearts of His loved ones and brings them together, just as He brought together fire and water. Reflects on the wonders of God's creation and His mysterious works, including creating this serpent to test the strength of His devoted followers. Recognizes that despite the hardships caused by this serpent, the believers look to God for solace and continue to seek His divine grace. Acknowledges that God has promised heavenly rewards for the righteous and the punishment of hellfire for the disobedient. Expresses bewilderment at the workings of God and submits oneself to His will, seeking refuge in Him alone. Subjects: symbolism, mysteries and their discovery; the mystical vision, pain of love; love as veil, spiritual emotions and susceptibilities, fire and light; fire and water.
