In the afternoon several important Persians arrived and the talk of the Beloved was coruscating with wit and humour, telling one story after another. Really I have seldom enjoyed such a delicious afternoon!

{{p15}}

It was Mirza Ali Akbar Rafsanjani to whom the Master had sent a telegram to return from Luzanne (Switzerland). Well of course I was very happy to have come back after staying there 24 days. He has been very successful in teaching the souls and speaking at various gatherings.

{{p1}}

Dear Harriet!

The Persian New Year is approaching and I believe we may spend either in Paris or in Stuttgart. When we arrived in Paris on the 21st of January I never thought that the Beloved will stay here so long. However there must be a wisdom in this which will appear later. This morning he read some letters from California and dictates answers. When I presented to him the translation of the petition from one of the maid-servants in San Francisco his face became radiant, hopeful and smiling. Truly I say, he said. She is a real Bahai. See how the holy sanctified souls unconsciously express their sincerity and faithfulness in every word they utter or write! He began to read the letter. When he {{p2}} finished it he said: While in America I strove day and night to prepare a few holy sanctified souls to take up the burden of the Cause after my departure. A very few who have responded to this call have arisen to serve and teach. As they were capable souls they forged ahead and advanced without much coercion on my part. In the middle of the nights I constantly pray for them and beg of God to descend upon them His heavenly benediction! May they succeed in their noble task!

He asked me what was the subject of last night's meeting. I gave him an outline of the proceeding and then told him that someone in the audience inquired about the difference between Sufism and the Bahai Movement. The Master stated that he had explained the philosophical aspect of this subject. It is this: In Sufism there are only two stations; God and his creatures. In turn, the creatures are not only considered as {{p3}} God's emanations but they are parts of the essence of God. In other words with a slight interpretive variations pantheism is the basis upon which the Sufi philosophy is built. The Sufis likened the essence of God into a sea and the creatures are the waves of the sea. In a wave you find all the potential attributes of sea. The individual members of the world of humanity are therefore distinct waves which are temporarily cut off from the sea. They are parts of the sea. One day they will join the sea and partake of all its infinite attributes. However, in the Bahai Cause there are three stations. The Station of Divinity, the Station of the Will and the station of creatures. The phenomena proceed from the Will of the Almighty. They do not form parts {{p4}} of the essence of God. They are the creation of His Will.

Further he said: It is not through the philosophical interpretation of this or that subject that the souls are attracted to the Kingdom of Abha. Philosophy withers the spirit. We must stir the souls by proclaiming boldly the "Glad-tidings" of the Kingdom so that the souls may become cheered and breathe the fresh zephyr, wafting from the Paradise of Joy. We must intoxicate the people with the Wine of the Love of God. We must say: O ye people! do ye know in what radiant day you are living? Do you realize in what peerless age you are existing? Awake! Awake! This is the century of Our Glorious Lord! Be mindful! Be mindful! This is the period of the King of Kings! Arise! Arise! This is the Dispensation of the Light of lights! {{p5}} Be active! Be active! This is the sovereign of all ages! Be illumined! Be illumined! The lights of the Sun of Reality are pouring down! Sleep! Why are ye sleep! Negligent! Why are ye negligent! In this age the prophecies of all the holy Books are fulfilled! The desire of all the nations hath come! Hasten ye! Hasten ye! Gather around his hammer! Sing the songs of triumph! Raise your rich melodious voices toward the Supreme Concurrence! All the prophets of the past have longed for this Day! This day is yours! The doors of opportunities are opened before your face. Be stirred with the Glad-tidings of Abha! Shake away this slumber! Serve your God! Spread to all parts His Glorious Message! Be inspired with his wondrous revelations! Let your voices be heard by all {{p6}} the nations of the world. Be ye filled with the joy of the Kingdom! Listen to the voice of the Shepherd. Is he not calling his flock to gather around him? He is tender! He is loving. He is merciful! He is compassionate! I wish you were here to see the emotions played on the Master's face as he delivered the above pronouncement. Now powerful, again commanding, now sympathetic and again smiling! If a photographer was hidden somewhere behind the door and could take a series of snapshots of the rapid changes which flitted across his majestic countenance which swayed by the spiritual feelings of the heavenly words we would have had an excellent heritage for posterity! I was simply transfixed with wonder, awe and amazement! A torrent of words flowed from his lips! When I came out I was intoxicated and could remember out the sight of a few drops from the {{p7}} sea of divine utterance which was set in motion by the invisible gales and hurricanes the directions of which I could not guess!

Mirza Ali Akbar told the Master about his work in Luzanne and the interest shown by the people of Switzerland in the Bahai Teachings. He must have had a wonderful time! He is a good teacher and speaker.

The Master went out, calling me to follow him. It was very cold, so he stopped at Miss Sanderson's home to inquire about {{p8}} her mother's condition. In the course of conversation he said: Wherever we have gone people became attracted to the Cause and we were warmed but here in Paris there is not much interest and consequently we are getting cold. He spoke about the weather in Haifa and how with a few thousand frones one can build a lovely summer cottage on Mount Carmel. Miss Sanderson became interested in the idea of a delightful chalet on the slope of the Mountain of God, overlooking the blue Mediterranean and all the surrounding hills. Leaving Miss Sanderson we walk toward the Trocadero. It was a sunny day and we approached Napoleon's Bridge. He sat on a chair. The children, many of them {{p9}} dressed in white and all clean and beautiful roaming in the Park were attracted to the Master. How I love these children! he exclaimed, from the Orient the children are not kept so clean by their mothers and thus often leads to severe sicknesses.

He returned home, ready to receive the friends. There were many present and the new ones were cheered by his divine words. His talk was on the wisdom of His sickness. He said in part: There is a great wisdom in my illness. It will become apparent later. For two years and half I have been travelling around but was never attacked with such severe illness. I am under {{p10}} the Central of God; I am not governed by the dictates of nature. It is not that nature has conquered me, I have conquered nature a long time ago. I am the ruler over nature. I am under the control of God. That which is in accord with the wisdom of the Almighty that happens to me. It has been so from the beginnings of my life. While in Teheran I was seven years old. I became afflicted with consumption. All the physicians gave me up. The wisdom of this became apparent later on; because were I not sick I would not have remained in Teheran. I would have gone to Nour in Mazanderan. I could not be in Teheran where the Blessed Perfection was thrown into the prison. On account of that sickness I was kept in Teheran and later in company with Baha-o-llah I was exiled to Bagdad. When all the physicians said, that this fragile body is beyond the stage of recovery I suddenly got well. There was at the time an English physician in Teheran who pronounced my case as hopeless. All the physicians were amazed at my sudden recovery. They could not believe that I have got completely well. Therefore all the events of my life are shaped by divine hand and based upon heavenly wisdom. I am ever controlled by the will of God. He shook hand with everyone and went out with Mon. Dreyfus. On his return we all had lunch in his presence. After his rest {{p12}} he read letters just arrived from the Orient.

About nine o'clock, he ordered an automobile and he took me with himself to call on Moneer Pasha, the former Ambassador of Turkey in Paris who lives at 22 Rue de La Tremoille. He was a wide awake man, well informed. His wife was a charming Turkish Lady who had called several times on the Master. They were beside themselves with joy. Both kissed the Beloved's hands. For two hours he stayed there talking on many {{p13}} subjects which were interest to them. Both were very insistent that the Master should take a trip to Constantinople because his broad Teachings were much needed by the inhabitants of the near East.

Dear Harriet!

What will you give me if by quoting a few words from the lips of the Beloved, the American friends would soar in the atmosphere of joy with the wings of light? I let his own words sing and dance their happy meanings into your heart: "As regards the second trip of Abdul Baha to America. If the believers become enkindled and attracted in a superlative degree, perhaps this aim will be again obtained. Capability and ability are the magnetic powers." Is not this the most wonderful glad-tidings? The most intoxicating wine? The happiest promise? Can you dream of the glorious possibilities of another trip of the Beloved of our hearts? The King of Kings {{p2}} riding on the Clouds of Majesty. Will not this glowing promise give you greater strength to spread his message? to herald the news of brotherhood? to work harder for the Cause? to teach with more enthusiasm? to promote the ideas of international peace? to enlarge the sphere of your activities? to affiliate with all the children of men and to unfurl the standard of the oneness of the world of humanity? Let all the minor issues, petty ideas and personal preferences be cast into the corner of oblivion and let the brilliant star of hope ever shine before our vision! Let everyone arise and clean first his own home, prepare the way according to his or her capacity; for the Lord of mankind will come one way or another. Let us create the day and night the "magnetic powers" {{p3}} of which Abdul Baha speaks. What are these "magnetic powers"? Do you know what are they? They are the promotion of the principles of the Bahai revelation. Let not this spiritual opportunity slip out of our hands. Let us set to work now. Let us introduce the Cause into those cities that have not been blessed by the Beloved. The great Southern States were deprived of his Presence. If he ever comes for the second time, the "magnetic powers" must attract him. This is the time for work, again work and again work. Work and pray unceasingly till you find again the Beloved in your midst. The labourer is worthy of his hire. From one end of America to another {{p4}} the believers must marshal their forces, bring into active play their hidden energies and awaken the souls to the mighty importance of this fact. America has been already wonderfully blessed with the Gifts of God. The Breeze of God hath blown over its lands; the voice of the Lord of Hosts hath been raised from the dome of its churches and temples; the music of heaven hath been listened to buy the prepared souls, the angel of light hath manifested himself in vast congregations; the temple of the herald of the Kingdom hath been sounded; the parched ground hath been watered; the wild jungle changed into fruitful orchards; the thorny places transformed into fragrant rose-garden; hatred into love, strangeness into amity, satanic suggestions into divine attributes; {{p5}} fridity into flexibility and carnal desires into spiritual susceptibilities. Were we open our eyes, we would see that every day the Master while in America, not only performed one but many miracles. What glorious prospect to have him again amongst the open-minded, truth-loving people of America? King wide the doors of your hearts. Send away the stranger and let the Lord of Lords and the King of Kings come in and take possession of his throne. It is in our hand to attract the Beloved to that country. My hope is that all my friends and sympathizers will do their utmost in the greatest spirit of harmony and accord. Is there anything on the face of the earth that we are not willing to sacrifice so that we may receive the benediction of another {{p6}} visit from one whom we love and obey?

This was a beautiful day. Being Sunday many more could attend the meeting and the rooms were filled with Orientals and Europeans who mixed with each other with the greatest of joy and happiness. Two Persian Bahais from Hamadan arrived last night and added their gentle and quiet presence to the meeting. A Persian woman who has been in Paris for the last three months was also here. It was a union of the East and the West. You could not find another meeting anywhere similar to a Bahai meeting especially when our Beloved delivers to us his counsels and admonitions. All morning he received Persians, Syrians, Americans, {{p7}} English, Frenchs, Arabs, Indians etc. For each he had a word of wisdom and light adapted to his comprehension. I could feel the spirit of love and affection from those who come out from his room with radiant faces and happy expressions.

His address this noon was a prayer for the Parisians. He opened his remarks by saying that, although it was the friends who should inquire after his health he asked, how are they feeling? Although he was not meeting them as he would have liked yet he was ever engaged in their commemoration. In the middle of nights he supplicated and prayed for each and all and exenterating at the throne of the Almighty he uttered this prayers: This Paris is {{p8}} a lamp in the utmost transparency but it is in need of the light. It is a body in the greatest of comeliness but it is in need of the spirit. O God! Illumine this lamp. And confer life upon this body! It is a pity that Paris be deprived of Thy eternal Bestowals! It is a pity that a great city like unto this be prevented from obtaining the splendours of the Sun of Thy Mercy! O God! Awaken these souls! Make them mindful! Perfume their nostrils with the sweet fragrances of Thy spiritual rose-garden! Enlighten their eyes by the shafts of light which are streaming down from the Central Sun of Thy Majesty in order that their hearts may become as polished mirrors {{p9}} reflecting the rays of the Sun of Reality. O God! We are weak and Thou art Powerful! We are needy but Thou art Independent and the Most High! Although we have no ability and capacity, yet Thy Infinite Bounty is inexhaustible! Do Thou not look upon our deeds! Deal with us through Thy Mercy and Forgiveness! If Thy Bestowals descend, the ignorant will become wise, the dead will be quickened, the deaf will become hearing and the blind shall see. But if Thy Bounties are not forth coming, the seeing ones are blinded. If the light of Thy guidance is not vouch safe, the wise will become ignorant. O God! We are all sick and Thou art the Kind Physician! Heal our {{p10}} spiritual diseases! Lead us toward the road of Thy Kingdom! Deliver us from the vices of the world of nature and adorn our beings with the virtues of Thy Kingdom. O God! Verily Thou art the Kind! O God! Thou art the Forgiver! the Pardoner! O God! Thou art the Generous! and the Giver! This is my prayer in the middle of nights and I ever lay for you divine Confirmation and assistance!

In the afternoon Prof. E.G. Brown and his wife called on the Master. They have come from London to stay two or three days. Prof. Brown stayed for nearly 3 hours. The Master after talking with him in the general reception room took him in his private room and there the conversation {{p11}} was a private nature. When he came out he was very happy. I am sure he will be a different man after receiving so much the love and kindness of the Beloved. In the evening while the Beloved was lying in his bed he dictated a most inspiring article for the Asiatic Quarterly Review which will appear in its April number. The colored photograph of the Master has been out for two or three weeks but the price is 5 dollars each. For the present I am not able to buy one but I hope I will be able to do it later.

{{p1}}

Dear Harriet!

Are you not very happy? My heart sings the songs of praise and thanksgiving unto the Lord, because He has caused us to hear His voice; He has opened our eyes to see this glory and He has unlocked our ears. When I think of the possibility of another trip by the Beloved to America, I am overwhelmed with His infinite Bounty, but at the same time I think of the great amount of work that the friends must accomplish before sails for land. Anything is made possible if intelligent corporation is realized amongst all the friends. {{p2}} I feel arrangements must be made so that our abba Bahai speakers may deliver addresses just as the Master did before churches, societies and clubs along the lines of Abdul Baha's talks. Before secret public gatherings all dogmatic assertions must be avoided and simply the exposition of the Bahai principles suitable to the occasion be asserted. The circle of the Cause must constantly be widened and all the walls and barriers removed so that humanity may enter under the all-protecting Tent of Baha-o-llah and the Center of the Covenant. Let us make one of the principles of Baha-o-llah the dominant note of {{p3}} our lives that religion must be the cause of love and amity; religion creates hatred and animosity then irreligion is better than religion. This principle is strong enough to avoid all the means of differences. Is it not? Well, the first step is to hold fast to that which is conducive to love and amity. The most important thing just at present is to widen and widen the circle of the Bahai Cause. How are we going to do it? By following in the footsteps of the Master. He did not antagonize any sect or religion. Did he? Our work is the work of Construction and regeneration and to this ideal we have dedicated our fortunes, our possessions and our lives. Let our watchword be, Forward, O ye heavenly army! The victory is ahead of you.

This morning the Master was up early. At half-past six he was sitting near the window, the Persians were standing around, Sayad Assadollah was dispensing the tea and Mirza Ali Akbar Rafsanjani was chanting in musical tones the prayers of Baha-o-llah. The Master turned his face to Sayad Ahmad of Rasht and half-inquiring, half speaking said: The conditions of the Bahais in Rasht are good! Are they not? The believers have arisen to teach the souls. Is this not so? From Rasht in this days good news are being received. Today whosoever has arisen to teach the Cause and serve the believers, divine Confirmations {{p5}} shall discard upon him; otherwise, he is wasting his time. When he left Haifa two years and half ago, he was so weak that he could not walk 20 yards and his system was attacked by three kinds of illnesses, but praise unto God Confirmations reached us wherever we went. But in Paris he does not see an extraordinary exhilaration. It is like unto a lazy animal. All the beating in the world will not make him get up; even if you run a needle in his feet he will not get up. However, God will make him move. If not now, later on. There is no other way.

Mirza Ali Akbar told one of his experiences in Luzanne, which to my mind may be applied to many parts of {{p6}} Western world with equal accuracy. I used to go everyday to a grocery store to buy things. There was a young woman who expressed a great deal of interest in me, because I was dressed differently from the rest. She asked my history and instead I told her the history of the Cause with the few French words that I could command. Then I told her I have a little book that if she was really interested she could study the subject further. "Oh yes! Of course I am! Please bring the book next time." She enthusiastically answered. Next day I took to her the little book and she said in pulsively comment! "Je suis deverue Bahai". Before giving her the book I took notice of the fact that the pages were not yet cut. Several days passed and every day she would say in answer to my {{p7}} inquiry, "Yes I am reading it! It is most interesting." At last I told her that if she has finished it she could bring it to me and I will give her another. "All right! I finished it just last night" she said. When she brought me the book and I looked at the pages, I saw they were not yet cut.

I said that Madame Astre was here yesterday and told us that while she was speaking before the spiritual Alliance on the Bahai Cause, they hated her because she quoted Baha Wollah words that there is no glory in loving's one country, there is rather glory in this that one loves his kind; they were not interested in universal patriotism. They wanted to love their own country better than {{p8}} all the rest of the world.

The Master said: These objectives are always raised against the truth but the truth will march towards its ultimate goal of triumph. When the Bahais were exiled from Teheran to Bagdad they could not find one single Bahai on the way to Bagdad but see now how many Bahais are in each one of those cities! When Sultan Mohamad II , the Victor of Constantinople besieged the city and his army was constantly commanding the walls and the fortresses, one of the Greek generals entered into a cloister and saw a monk busy writing. He asked him, what are you doing? He said, I am writing a refutation against the religion of Mohamad. The general got {{p9}} furious and kicked the monk out of his cloister. "Get out of here, you idiot! When the banner of Mohamad was waving in Arabia, then it was the time to write a book against his religion but now that the noise of his cannons are booming behind our walls and fortifications what good will thy book achieve?" Now the Bahai Cause has gone too far, the principles are spread too widely, for the object are wasting their life.

He returned to his room to dictate Tablets for the friends of the East and the West. The friends began to arrive and many of them had long interviews. At noon he came out feeling {{p10}} well and happy. Today I feel much much better, he said. Then he spoke with great power and animation on the Glad-tidings of the Kingdom. The afternoon and evening was spent in quiet talk with the Persians and the callers. About 4 o'clock he went out with Mohamad Khan and the Persians went to Mr. Scott's studio meeting. I stayed home writing. When the Master returned he called me to his room and asked me to rub his feet, because he was tired walking for more than an hour. {{p11}} A clipping from New York Herald, European Edition will tell you the interesting story of President Wilson and his cabinet tabooing all kinds of liquors and intoxicants from any state banquets. It is in confirmation of a quotation from the Master's Tablet recently sent out. It only shows how his words are creative. He says a thing and the President of a great Republic puts it in execution unconsciously.

With much Bahai love

Ahmad

{{p1}}

Dear Harriet!

The day of our departure is in sight. The Master a few days ago cabled to Port Said to his daughter Rouha Khanom not leave for Paris but wait in Port Said until his arrival. Yesterday he cabled to twelve countries of the Orient that he was on the eve of his departure for the Holy Land. He has written to several friends that the Port of landing will be Port Said. All these are indications that ere long the Sun of the Covenant will shine from another horizon. Germany is destined to entertain the Beloved. The believers there are anxiously waiting to receive the King of Kings. They are very earnest, sincere Bahais. Already much literature is spread throughout the whole German Empire through the indefatigable zeal of Mr. Herrigel and his co-workers. Miss Alma Knoblock in the last year has been teaching the Cause in Leipzig and other cities. There are a number of friends scattered here and there who expect to go to Stuttgart and visit the Beloved.

{{p2}}

Tomorrow night Mon. and Madame Dreyfus have invited the Master and all the Persians-about- and some of the Paris believers to what I believe should be designated as a farewell Banquet; not as large as that of New York or Washington but interesting enough to be recorded as one of the events. A flashlight photograph will be taken.

{{p3}}

Today the Master felt much better. His address was on the subject of "Spiritual and Material Education". Both in the morning and the afternoon Aga Faraj and his poems played important part to entertain him and the Persian guests. He is a source of great joy to the heart of the Beloved. Although his poems have neither rhyme nor rhythm yet some of the lines contain lofty ideals.

The other day when the two new Persians Bahais arrived, having never visited the West, before entering the apart, they insisted on taking off their shoes as a sign of politeness and veneration to the Beloved. They would never think to enter the apt of the "Lord of Mankind" with their shoes on. Why, this was impossible and their eyes and facial expressions conveyed the ideas. I have no doubt they looked at the rest of us a lot of savage Hottentots. There was no use arguing with them, so they started to take their shoes off when the French maid arrived on the scene. She did not know what was going on and began to laugh! When someone told her of the difficulty, she cried out! "Why! This cannot be! Someone may come and carry them away! Then what are they going to do?"

{{p1}}

Dear Harriet!

In the Presence of Our Beloved every one must feel very happy. N'est pas? He is the spring from which flows the never-failing, water of joy. His happiness is contagious, his mirth is creative; his smile is a delight to the hearts. His peaceful countenance inspires the souls with new hope. His unshakable faith is an example to all men. His ineffable love for the creatures is incomparable. The sympathy of his nature, the tenderness of his heart, the whiteness of his soul, the simplicity of his life, the loftiness and immaculate purity of his ideals, the artistic appreciation of his spirit, the immensity of his patience, the divine vigor of his deeds, the majestic beauty of his words, the all-embracing attitude of his disposition, the {{p2}} magnitude of his forgiveness, the inconceivable measure of his foulance, and the godlike holiness of his character are the unmistakable evidences that the characteristics of the divine Humanity are now embodied in the visible Temple of man, preparing the way for the day when the children of the human race will receive a larger portion from these attributes; when the surface of the hearts will become like unto clear mirrors reflecting therein the heavenly images of the Kingdom of Abha! That day will be the Sun of all the past days. That age will be the Sovereign of all the ages! The hidden virtues of the world of humanity will be revealed; the Flag of universal Peace unfurled, the Place of the Brotherhood will open wide its golden gates; the hosts of the Supreme Concourse will flood the whole {{p3}} world with the glory of the Lord, the King of the Kingdom; the Banquet of the Spiritual Fraternity will be spread, around which all the nations shall gather, singing the songs of joy, the rose-garden of humanity will be adorned with new multi-colored flowers; the trees of existence will be clad with verdant leaves, delicate blossoms and outstretching branches, yielding luscious fruits during all the seasons; the spiritual verities will become manifest and mankind in its entirety will be surrounded with the moving sea of heavenly bestowals and become illumined with the refulgent rays of the Sun of Reality. Then there will be no war and no contention. Peace will reign from one end of the world to the other and the inspiring song of good will turn all men raised from every tongue.

Today we all drink tea in the Presence of the Beloved. There are nearly twelve Persians who are constantly here from early morning to evenings. At 6:30 a.m. when they start ringing the bell and by 7 o'clock they are all present to be ushered into the Beloved's room. They drink tea and the Master either speaks or asks a few questions. Mirza Ali Akbar chants most beautifully supplications from the pen of Baha-Wollah. He continues chanting till the Master tells him "Very well", meaning it is enough. Then he leaves the Persians and goes to his own room to read and answer letters. About 9 or ten o'clock a piece of bread is taken to him for his breakfast. The people start to come and he receives each with {{p5}} that unfailing courtesy and smile which are the inherent qualities of this Master of Men. For the last few days Aga Faraj and his poems have taken much of the Master's time, both in the morning and afternoon. Every day he writes new lives ready for the morning and the Beloved jokes with him all the time. One of the Persians wanted to buy the manuscript of his poems for one hundred franes. He would not sell it for a thousand. He believes that these lives which are read to the Master will be of great value to his household; so he will take them back to Persia to be read in the spiritual assemblies. One day he told the Master that he had already dreamed last night that he was reading his poems in a large meeting in Teheran.

Mr. and Mrs. Wilkins came this morning to visit the Master. They asked questions about Redemption and the Immortality of the Soul and he gave them by thy answers which apparently satisfied both of them. They are very intelligent and alive to the questions of the day. The Master said, because the French Catholic priests have taken always the side of Royalty and desired to have a Monarchy rather than a Republic, the government was suspicious of religion and had arisen to persecute them and debarring them from all the official positions. {{p7}} If these leaders of religions did not interfere with politics, they would not have been today in such a plight. He spoke briefly on the eradication of prejudices and dogmas from amongst all the religions and nations and showed how each religion believed that what it had was reality, while all the rest were counterfeits but the truth of the matter is that they are all holding fast to dogmas and have forgotten the reality which underlies all the religions.

After the talk he called me and Mirza Hossein, a Persian who has lived in Paris for fifteen years and loves the Master very much to go out and have a walk with him. We took a car and went toward Antevil. Alighting from the car {{p8}} at the end of the line we walked around the old rampart and fortification. I enjoyed the sight very much. The Master talked all the time about the abuses of freedom in Paris and jokingly beating Mirza Hossein with his stick. The poor man enjoyed the beating and said, it was a great honor to be beaten by Abdul Baha.

In the afternoon the Master sent me to call on Mirza Mehdi Khan, the brother of the Regast of Persia who was the new Persian Minister to America. He lives in Astoria Hotel in Champs Elysee. I was thinking all this time that he had left for America but it seems he was here yet. {{p9}} On my return I found two Americans in the Presence of the Beloved. They had heard about the Cause four years ago in Washington. They were artist and for the last two years they have lived in Paris. They did not know any of the Bahais here, so the Master sent them with Doctor Mohamad Khan to meet Miss Sanderson. Afterward the Beloved called on Rashid Pasha who does not live very far from here. On his return I was summoned to his room and read some letters and cables just received.

The question of his departure from Paris was discussed and he intimated that in a few days he will depart for Stuttgart. He said that he must get a little stronger; that he did not have the tongue of complaint. {{p10}} His sickness a few days ago was very serious. One night he got out of his bed to turn the electric light; he was so weak that he fell on the floor and swooned. For a long time he was unconscious. Then when he came to himself, cold perspirations run all over his body. With the greatest of difficulty he arose and reached the bed. He went under the cover bed and was shaking with cold. Under such conditions he stayed in Paris, hoping that perchance the Fire of the Love of God will be ignited in the hearts; otherwise he had nothing {{p11}} to do in this city; if he was pursuing pleasures he could very easily go to Nice when the climate was most moderate. He lived for the Cause and not for his health. If he saw just now that his presence was needed in St. Petersburg or Siberia he would leave without delay; he would not wait one moment; he would not stop to think whether he was healthy or not. These consideration never came with the range of his thought.

At nine o'clock we all started for the Restaurant Petit Durand which was not far. The Master went in an auto with Mon. Dreyfus. Only the Persians were {{p12}} invited with Mon and Madame Dreyfus. There were about eighteen guests in all. The photographer was there but his flashlight did not work and so the photo could not be taken. Here is the menu (copy menu from card). It was about 10:30 that we returned home. Aga Faraj had written a poem for the occasion but it was decided to read it tomorrow morning as the Master was quite tired and wished to retire as soon as the dinner was over.

{{p1}}

Dear Harriet!

It is five pm; I am sitting beside the Master; our car is driving in the Bais de Boulogne; crowd of pedestrians are walking on all sides; automobiles with their occupants dash rather and thothan; the fair trees are showing the signs of verdancy and tiny leaves push their heads forth; a gentle breeze is blowing; there is a silence; then I turn my head toward Abdul Baha saying: The American friends will become happy if they hear the news of your {{p2}} probable second visit to that country? He answered, we will go and meet the friends again, if they arise unitedly to spread the Cause and be exceedingly attracted and enkindled with the Fire of the Love of God. He looked around the Park, watching the trees with their faint green appearances and the gardeners preparing the flower-beds, to be transformed in a few days into a mass of luxurious colour and beauty. Then he turned to me and with one wave of his hand toward the open, I knew what he was going to say: Do you see these gardeners working faithfully all day here tilling the ground, sowing the seeds, watering and tenderly taking care of them? What is the result of {{p3}} all this labours? In a short while this bare, dark soil will be covered with thousand multi-coloured flowers, fair and beautiful as the Daven, perfuming the air with sweet and delicate fragrances! the gardeners, then will come and feast their eyes on scenes of ravishing beauty! That will be their highest reward! And their greatest happiness is to see the people appreciating and enjoying those flowery scenes! Now in America he has left behind many heavenly gardeners; he has given them the seeds of spiritual wisdom and Celestial Knowledge. These seeds must be sown, in prepared soil so that in case he returns he may not see a wild jungle but a rose-garden with hyacinths, anemones, nasturtium, rose and carnations, violets and tulips, jasmine's chrysanthemum and lilies of the valley. {{p4}} If all depends upon the effort of the gardeners. May they succeed! May they labour in this dark winter of materialism! May they put forth the highest effort! Actually he did not say a word of all that I have written here neither did he open his tongue. But in that one wave of hand I grasp the significance of his look. I hope all the friends will work with one accord so that the Divine Gardener may come and walk in the lovely rose-gardens that they have prepared for him.

This morning three celebrated Parisian physician came to the Master. They were one hour in his room with Mon. Dreyfus and prescribed a regime and medicine, I wonder whether he will follow their treatment.

There is a spiritual atmosphere in the morning gathering {{p6}} of the Persian Bahais in the Presence of the Beloved. They are all sitting around the room with the utmost dignity and politeness born of the ingrained idea that one is in the company of a Superior human being - a being who is the embodiment of spiritual perfections. And when Mirza Ali Akbar starts to chant with his musical voice the prayers of Baha Wollah there steals over one's spirit a calmness and a happiness which are not of this ethereal world.

The other day while a group of Persians were sitting and the Master was reading a letter an American lady came in. She looked all around; here we were all swarthy Orientals; I believed {{p7}} she was a little afraid but the Master welcomed her, bade her sit down and to talk with her. Before long she smiled; her apprehension was vanished and she felt as though she is sitting with her own leathers. She felt one with us. Such was the power of the Beloved. At 6 a.m. people started to come and each one in turn had an interview. About noon he came out and gave a short address on his approaching departure from Paris and the necessity of divine education. He said that he bows the friends in Paris as his own Souvenirs that they must be very attractive souvenirs {{p8}} and spread the message whenever opportunity is offered.

Mon. Dreyfus came and brought a cable from Port Said that, Rouha Obanour with Mirza Jalal and another lady have already sailed {{p9}} and will arrive in Morsuille about 18th. This will postpone the trip of the Beloved to Stuttgart for he was planning to depart on the 18th but now he will stay till they arrive.

At four the Master was motored to Astoria Hotel in Champs Elysee to call on Mirza Mehdi Khan, the Persian Minister to the United States. He stayed there for an hour. Tea was served in the beautiful salon. Much discussion was devoted to the striking differences between Western and Eastern civilization, the customs {{p10}} and manners prevalent in each country; also the status of the conditions of the Persian Students in Paris was touched. What the sons of Persia must learn in Europe are the sciences, engineering, arts, crafts, and medicines and not how to dance how to play with a cane, how to wear a collar or how to have the crease of the trousers undisturbed!

The Master was driven for two hours through Bologne. All the answers were illuminated; he was most of the time quiet and when he talked it was about the complete heedlessness of all these crowds who were immersed in the sea of {{p11}} desire. Today Saleh Effendi one of four Egyptian Bahai brothers who has been visiting the Master for several weeks departed for Lyon and from there he will go to Luzanne, where he will be joined by Mirza Ali Akbar. The latter will leave tomorrow to stay in Luzanne a month and then going to London for three months to teach the Cause.

Dear Harriet!

Days come and go and I cannot realize their importance. It has been made possible for every human being, who is a seeker after truth to stand before one in whom the Spirit of God dwells! He dwells amongst us as a King of Servitude, Patience and loving kindness. For the last few days I have had glimpses of his Patience. If he had no other attributes except Patience and forgiveness, he would yet be the Supreme Master of our hearts. {{p2}} Last night I sat in my bed and thought over the height and altitude of his Patience! One can never dream that divine Patience could rise to such imperial heights. The way he has overlooked the shortcomings of others - even of some who consider themselves Bahais - is my greatest example. In order to describe a thing I must comprehend it from every standpoint and it is possible to bring within my grasp, the wonderful majesty and beauty of his Patience. His is Glory and Power! May we all drink one drop from the sea of his Patience! May we all receive one ray from the sun of his Forgiveness!

{{p3}}

Today it was early when the Master called me into his Presence; soon other Persians arrived and in a while Samavar was brewing. Mirza Ali Akbar asked him that in the West it was often stated that in the Bahai Cause, work had taken the place of prayer and this had led to the wrong idea that there was no prayer in the Bahai Dispensation. The Master said: Religion without prayer is no religion; but in this Movement work and worship must go hand in hand; one must inspire the other. However, there may one who would quote this plan and claim that he did not need to pray, let him work all the time because his work will be accepted as prayers. This man is like the Mohammadan {{p4}} who never prayed in his life. The priest asked him: "How is it that you do not pray?" He said, "because the law of prayer is abrogated in the Koran." "Oh! I have never heard about it" "Yes! have you not read in the Koran where God says, do not approach prayer?" "Yes, but why do you not complete the verse by quoting the rest of it wherein God says Do not approach prayer while you are in a state of drunkenness." "All right! but it is impossible for a Muslim to remember everything in the Koran." "Yes! but the trouble with you is that you remember only that which is useful to your own purpose and forget the rest." The Master said that there will be found always in all the religions, people {{p5}} who will quote only a certain text which will advance their aims over and purposes, but such soul are not reliable.

The authenticity of the Bible was discussed. The Beloved said: It is evident that the five books which are generally attributed to Moses were written by Ezra the high priest. Only the Tablets and the Commandments belong to Moses. The contents of the Books will bear out this argument, because many events were recorded which transpired long after Moses death. There was a school of philosophers today in Europe who deny, not only the authenticity of the Bible but try to prove there was not such person as Jesus Christ; that the Christ was an Ideal invented {{p6}} by the apostles that the Evangelists in writing the Gospels stole the utterances of the ancient sages and Rabbi's and attributed them to this Ideal Christ. But all these are mere assertions and they cannot be proven.

His talk today concerned firmness and steadfastness in the Cause and the importance of the Covenant. This was the first time that he had ever spoken about the Covenant in Paris, because the conditions are different. People do not comprehend the significance and importance of the Covenant. They all love the Master {{p7}} and will do anything he says and obey his commands but the Covenant is a subject that is seldom discussed here. This shows us again that Abdul Baha like a skillful physician, prescribes medicine according to the ailments of the patients.

In the afternoon Miss Edith Sanderson called and begged the Master to allow her and her mother to entertain Rouha Rhanour and her husband. After much reluctance, this was accepted and so our honoured new guests will be living at Miss Sanderson for the next month or two.

At seven o'clock, Mirza Aga Khan Gaemmajami and Aga Faraj, our poet departed for Persia. Abdul Baha called them to his own room and {{p9}} talked to them in private. Then he came out of his room carrying two lovely carnations in his hands giving one to each. They fell at his feet and wept. They must not cry he told them! They must return to Persia with a heart full of the glad-tidings of heaven. They are in his hearts. He will lie always with them and they will never be forgotten. It was a touching separation. We were so sorry to lose them, especially Aga Faraj who was a source of great joy to the heart of the Beloved. He loves simple, sincere souls. Blessed are the pure in hearts for theirs is the Kingdom of heaven. {{p10}} Aga Faraj was a fine, simple, sincere Bahai; one who served the Cause at all time, not so much by word or eloquence but through deeds and actions! May God keep Aga Faraj for a long time and grant him health and strength to serve his Lord for many a year!

Mirza Ali Akbar became sick and his condition brought forth two stories from the Beloved. Here there are: In Acca there was a Persian Bahai who was a very good believer. An Arab who was very much attracted to the Cause, became his friend. Their friendship grew to such an extent that they called each other 'brother' and they were seen most of the time in one another's company. It happened that the Persian was stricken intermitted fever. His Arab friend was deeply grieved over the news and could not rest before seeing him. Once a day {{p12}} he entered the house with a big jar of cold water in his hand and was led to the room of the patient. He placed the jar of water beside the bed and inquired about the health of his friend. "How are you?" "Oh! I am not feeling well" The Arab got his hand inside of the bed. "Oh! Please do not let thy hand touch my body because I am shivering with cold." "I will not do anything of the kind." And without any sign of joking, with the greatest amount of dignity he raised the jar of icy cold water and poured over him. Bewildered with the sudden shock, like a wild animal, he sprang out of his bed. The Arab ran away and the Persian was running after him. Finally he was caught, thrown on the ground and given a good beating. The poor Arab cried out: My "brother", why do you hate me? Did I not treat you? "Treated me! Shame on you! {{p13}} calling yourself my 'brother'. The noise and the confusion brought many people to the rescue. The Persian was soaked to the skin, shuddering with cold and swearing aloud and beating the poor Arab. Finally they were separated and strange to say the Persian never had any more fever and the two become better friends and brothers!

Abdul Baha remembered that during his childhood he had a coloured servant whose name was Moharek. He was big and strong. At that time Abdul Baha was six or seven years old and with his family he was travelling, taking Moharek with them. On the way Moharek was stricken down with fever. In the Orient, often when a person is in fever, he goes and sits in the sun. Now Moharek had a very fur coat with {{p14}} which he covered himself and stretched in the sun. His fever was so severe that he shook and tremble like the leaf of a tree. In the party there were several children, amongst them Abdul Baha. Then children would hide themselves and watch Moharek going toward his sun my shot and lie down. His trembling at times was so violent that even the fur coat trembled. Then quietly, on tip toe the children approached, and one by one sat on him. When Abdul Baha's turn came he would go and sit on the children. Suddenly Moharek would have one of his terrible fits and the children rolled all over the ground. He took several loses of quinine with little result. One day he told the children to come early next morning and he will show them how he was going to heat himself. Early morning all the children were there and saw Moharek sitting in the sun and shaking as usual but with a big basket of prunes before him. He started to eat the {{p15}} prunes and every time he took one mouthful he shook more. After this treatment, he became well and never had any more attacks of fever.

Dear Harriet!

What is the object of the Bahai Movement? It is the unification of religions?

Is it universal Peace? Does the Bahai religion mean to go to the meeting and listen to a good speech? Does it mean a system of new ideals for the progress of humanity? The Bahai revelation means the succor of the poor and helpless in a practical manner. We must embody the lofty principles of Baha-ullah in our daily life. We must be as charitable, as loving, as helpful, and as benevolent to our brothers and sisters as Abdul Baha. If the Beloved heard that one Bahai had really helped another person, even if that person was his enemy, he would be made very happy. I hope the reports coming to Abdul Baha from many parts of {{p2}} America will not consist only of the gatherings held, speeches delivered, plans proposed, amended and never carried out, discussions continued and small things magnified while the big things overlooked - but the reports consist of the assistance given to the helpless, the hungry ones fed, the naked clothed, the children educated, social conditions bettered through the endeavors of the friends, the ignorant made wise, the poor succored, the orphans taken care of, the Cause proclaimed, the teachings promoted, the law of God made manifest in the hearts and the essentials of divine civilization upheld. Such news will always gladden the heart of Abdul-Baha. Such activities will confer upon the friends the heavenly benediction! Such deeds will make them the beloved by Baha-ullah!

If each Bahai made up his mind to speak about this Revelation at least to one new person in a month, or in each 3 months, or let us say one in a year, ere long the present merchant will be doubled. This is the Cause of God. He will assist whomsoever arises to serve Him! These teachings will be spread all over the world. There is not a shadow of doubt about this. But it is hoped that we earnest laborers in this Vineyard, sincere gardeners in this orchard and the stand bearers of this Army. If we only arise, the host of the supreme concourse will assist us, the Victorious Lord will reinforce us, the Countenance of the King of Kings will smile upon us and the sun of Reality will encircle us with its glorious rays.

Every morning is a heavenly blessing to be with the Beloved, because from his life fall pearls of wisdom and knowledge. While we drink tea he walked and spoke on spiritual matters, soul-uplifting, spirit-inspiring! He was walking strong with the constant descent of the Holy-Spirit! He said: The Cause of will soon throw a great reverberation throughout the pillars of the world. It will embrace in its fall the East and the west. Its pourer will penetrate through every stone of creation. Its imperial Tent will be filtered upon the apex of Existence. Its invisible Army will conquer the cities of the hearts! Its royal raider will be set upon the brow of humanity. Its throne will be established amongst the children of men. Its heavenly scepter will sway nations and {{p5}} empires! and its spiritual influence will be felt by the people of every clime. Let the weak in heart be cheered! and the despondent made hopeful! Lovingly remembered Aga Foray and willingly asked us whether we have kept any copy of his poetry.

We all answered in the negative. A propose of something he told us the story of two men in Acca: Reza borrowed from Hassein 300 dollars. As they relied upon each other they did not exchange any notes between themselves. After a while Reza gave Hassein an account. Later an incident created ill-feeling. Reza denied that Le owed anything to Hassein and Hassein insisted that he owed him $300 denying that he had ever received $100. Finally Hassein came to the Master and plead him to make Reza pay his three hundred dollars.

Have you received “the Master asked” anything on account? You must tell the truth; otherwise, I will not judge between you.” “How can I tell the truth, because if I confess that I have already received $100 he will not pay me the rest.”The Master sent for Reza and commanded him to pay back to Hassein $200.00. The man started to cry and lament but the Beloved stopped him short and talk him that there was no use in carrying along like this. He must pay back the money he has borrowed!

Two ladies were introduce and they inquired about the health of the Beloved. He said: Praise be to God that his spiritual health was very good. Physical health had no importance in his sight. If the friends were always attached with the Breaths of the Holy Spirit {{p7}} he would be ever in good health. This union was good. This was union not followed by any separation. Le then strive that they may always be alive with the Divine Breaths.

In answer to a question on the Bible he said: There are three ancient Bibles. 1st the Jewish Bible, 2nd the Sanhedrein bible which was by the seventy wisest Rabbis into Greek at the time of Plottergy, 3rd the Samaritan Bible. These three Bibles differ a great deal from each other on historical ground. For instance, in one Bible you read the age of a certain patriarch was 120 yrs; in another bible it says he was 80 yrs. old and in the third bible. It is most difficult to say while one of thier three Bible is correct, for each seat holding fast to his ever bible doing it to be the only authoritative one and the other two as unreadable. Therefore all the historical parts of the Bible were written by historians and commandments and the Decologne belong to Moses. To two other victories he said: The Sun of Truth has shone forth from the horizon of the East casting its rays in the West. Now it is the beginning of the Cause in Europe. It is the early dawn. Ere long the sun shall rise and will be stationed in its station then ye shall see now the whole of Europe is illumined. At noon the Beloved could out and gave a witty address on the “good and the better.”

Monsons one of the nobles of Persia, residing in Rosht. Sardan Monson is a very important personals and his influence it will spread beyond the conflict of Rasht. At five o'clock he returned but very tired for he had to talk with this man all the time. Mon. and Madame Dreyfus come in and {{p10}} they were ushered into the Beloved's private room. Aja Layad Abunad was also present.

I have seldom enjoyed anything as I enjoyed the anecdotes of the Cause related by the Master. It was to me a most wonderful afternoon.

Here I will relate a few stories I heard from Sayad Assadullah and Nurja Ali Akhar!

When Abdul Baber was a child. Baha-ullah lived in Majanderan. At that time Baha-u-llah owned large herds of cattle. One day Abdul Baha went to the village with a servant and while walking in the field he encountered one of the Shepherds who was taking care of a large number of sheep probably two or three hundred. The Shepherd knew Abdul Baha and asked: "Will you let me have this herd of sheep?" "All right! It is yours!" The shepherd did not dare to contradict Abdul Baha but he feared Baha'u'llah may get angry with him. After a day or two guests arrived and Baha'u'llah sent for a sheep to be killed and food prepared. They told him that "Aga" had given away all the sheep to the shepherd.

"Very good! You may then be busy. Fears afterwards, Baha-ullah one day recalling this might in Acca says: "Watch Aga for his generosity, someday he may even give himself away." One day when the Master was walking in the narrow street of Acca a beggar came to him and begged alms. The Beloved pushed his hand into his pocket and took out a piece of what should be silver money equal to one dollar and placed it in the hand of the beggar. He went away and after a minutes he returned with sign of excitement in his face. "O Master! O Master! Look what you have given me! This is a gold piece of $25." The Master {{p13}} looked at the Money and said My Mother! This is your Kismet! It is your money. What does out of my pocket never returned to it.

Another time Abdul Baha came across another beggar. This day one of the pilgrims was following him. The Master asked him whether he has a Majidi. He had not have! Immediately he took out a golden chain and gives it to the poor. Afterward the pilgrim located the beggar and his best to buy the chain for many Majistics but he would not sell it, when Mirza Ali Akhor was travelling in Persia teaching the Cause, great personage in the course {{p14}} of conversation told him that a Bahai but he had not seen the Bab nor met Baha-ullah but the traces and wonderful signs which appeared from this third who called himself the servant were miraculous enough to convince anyone of the greatness of his station and the submits of his divine spirit.

For the last few days I have been reading a little book called the little flowers of St. Francis of Assisi. It contains the interesting account of his travels and interesting account of his travel and preaching the Gospel of Jesus Christ and certain incidents in his holy and sweet life of poverty. The story is much similar to the accounts of the Bahai teachers in the Orient and it gives us a lovely glimpse into the past and how the history repeats itself in the present. I like to quote here one of his addresses to the birds of the air. St. Francis was travelling with two of his holy disciples toward another town. As with great fervor he was going on the way, he lifted up his eyes and {{p2}} beheld some trees hard by the road whereon sat a great company of been well-nigh without number. Here he stands still and shows that depth of tenderness and love towards all the creatures which we have often witnessed in Abdul Baha. "You shall wait here for me" he said to his companions," and I will go and preach unto my little sisters, the birds." Is not this beautiful? Which I read this, a similar talk of the Master came to my mind given in the Golden Gate Park in San-Francisco as a company of friends were follows him. He said that as we talked here about the Kingdom of Abha even the trees and the birds receive a share of this divine joy through {{p3}} their subtle senses that they were not depressed of the Knowledge of the Infinite; the trees with their outstretched branches pray to God; The birds through their wondrous song a glorify the Almighty.

Now of the address of St. Francis to birds of the air:

"My little sisters, the birds, much bounden are ye unto God, your Creator, and always in every place ought you to praise them, for that He hath given you liberty to fly about everywhere, and hath also given you double and triple raiment's. Still more are you beholden to Him for the ambient of the air which the hath appointed for you; beyond all this, you saw {{p4}} not, neither do you reap; and God feuded you, and gives you the streams and the fountains for your drink; the mountains and the valleys for you refuge and the high trees whereon to make your nests; and because you know not how to spin and sew, God clothed you, you and your children; wherefore you creator loveth you much, seeing that He hath bestowed upon you so many benefits, therefore, my little sisters study always to give praises unto God.

And so the book is filled with interesting episodes illustrating the life of St. Francis of Assisi corresponding so much to the muorners of oriental Bahai teachers.

Today the Master received many people in the morning. Being Sunday all those people who could not come during the week came today and so there was gathered a large company of hungry and thirsty souls after the bread and water of life. Early in the morning, he talked on the present situation of Turkey and its utter helplessness in the fac of the European coalition against her. Although a great door of salvation is open before her face, she lies down helpless; likewise the condition of Persia is pitiable indeed. God has prepared for them a Cause around which revolves the Kingdom of might and power yet they {{p6}} do not avoided themselves. They do not see the light neither do they hear the music. Many Persians and Armenians arrived on the scene and he received them with open heart and arm. He talks with everyone according to his comprehension and so if a thousand people seeing and hearing him and go away and write down their impressions, each one will have a different story to tell but none will represent him in his universal, all changing aspect. There are a thousands of divine aspects to him just as there are facets of light in the diamond and rays emanating from the sun!

To every person or to every group of persons, he shows one of his aspects. To the Bahaist he is Known as the “Center of the Covenant,” the Greatest Branch,” the Mystery of God,” “Him who is desired by God;” to the Mohamadans, the Christians, the Jesus, the Theosophists, the Spiritualists, the Materialists, the Atheists to each one of these, he may show one or several of his aspects, but he is above all these names and attributes, he is Imageless, Incomprehensible, deathless, Unchangeable. The other day as I was walked through the Oriental museum I saw many statues of the idols and gods as worshipped in India. Some of these statues had six {{p8}} faces, other four or twenty or hundreds of hands. Now we know that these idols are the statues of their prophets whom they considered as the mediumes between God and man. When they desired to express the idea that here was a prophet with many divine virtues and attributes they said he had a thousand hands. Later on the meaning was lost and the word was left; the kernel forgotten and the shell remained. Otherwise it is foolish to think of a man especially a divine Messenger with six faces, hundreds of eyes and a thousand hands. Such a person is an ultra freak of nature and most unpleasant to look at. His {{p9}} many hands would be always in his way and it would be too bothersome. Wouldn't it.

When Master came out to talk to reasons, crowded with Orientals and Occidentals he was in a laughing and happy mood. Evidently he wanted to laugh and make his audience laugh before delivering his short address. He looked around the rooms and spied the mother with her little daughter. With his blessed hands he made the sign saying French “Venez ice! Venez ice!” The girl runs toward him, insisting that her mother should go too. She sat next to the Master with the child in her lap.

Meanwhile most everybody felt happy and laughing. The face of the Master was wreathed with heavenly smiles. He asked for fruit and Sayad Assadollah brought an orange. The Master starts to talk in English with the little girl. “I love you very much; do you love me very much?” The girl stopped a second, as though divining that something else was going to come up and amidst the roar of laughter she mischievously answered: “No!” “Bravo” the Master came back more pleased. “Do you love your mother?” “No” the girl contented in her contrariness. “What! You do not love your mother! Do you love your father?” “No” the same {{p11}} mischievous answer was returned. “Then do you love God?” And instantly the answer was given in a loud, clear voice: “yes”. Everybody was amazed by this visible demonstration and many thought afterward that the Master wanted to give us a great lesson that we must not look at the personality but love the spirit which animates the personality, we must look at the light and not at the lamp; we must love the rose, no matter in which ground it grows, with his majestic wisdom he selected the tongue of a babe to teach us this matchless lesson of the Love of God!

Then immediately he changed his mood and became serious. With one hand he fixed his fez and with the other hand rubbed his eyes and you could see authority on his ample brow and seriousness on his face. He opened his address by the following pithy remarks: The proof of life in the world of existence is motion. Every living being moves. If a moving creature becomes stationary it means death. Progress is the Keynote of motion and motion is the sign of life. He went on explaining the different Kinds of motions.

After the meeting he shook hands with everyone and went out alone. In the afternoon he sent me to the house of Doctor Mohamad Khan to inquire about his health. I went there by the subway. Subway in Paris is very intricate affair and there are so many different roads to transfer, often one over another; long corridors and tortuous pathways joining different roads to each other and a stranger is amazed {{p14}} at the integrity of the Parisians who find their way easily and like go down in these subterraneous passages and come up at the other side of the city. It was about 4 o'clock when I returned with Doctor Mohamad Khan to find that Sardar Mansour and an Arermenian merchant were in the Presence of the Beloved. He was letting them about his experiences in America, his address in the Jewish Synagogues the account of a religious revival in Denver at the dedication of a catholic church. When they left, Madame Diastre {{p15}} and Mr. Gain (a young American who sings in Converts in Paris) were permitted to see him. The Master asked Doctor Mohamad Khan why he suddenly got sick. If our Doctor got sick others were expected to die. The landlord play on the piano, the tenants must dance.

He asked Mr. Gaoin's profession. "I sing at concerts and teach music" he answered: "Do you sing only earthly music or heavenly music too?" "Unfortunately only earthly music." "Yes, you must sing the melodies of heaven the notes and strains of which ravish the hearts."

What is heavenly music?" "It is the explanation of the mysteries of God and the exposition of the realities and significances of the Kingdom of Abha."

He went out and returned in half an hour. The Persian Ambassador called and had a long interview.

Miss Hadjson came and as she was writing to Honolulu she asked the Master for a message. It was dictated to her.

The two Persian Bahais from the Jesus of Hamadan left last night. They had a loving {{p17}} for well from the Beloved.

{{p1}}

Dear Harriet!

It was 7 am, the Master was in bed. He called me to himself and I hastened to him. He desired letters from America to be read to him. He was being made happy because they contained good news. Then he dictated answers. Words like unto the brilliant pearls from the divine treasury fall from his blessed lips. He wrote to a friend: "Thou hast written regarding the results of my trip to America." It's importance is not now manifest. Ere long you shall behold that these pure seeds have grown and how adorned the green meadow and verdant rose-garden. The hyacinths of realities and significances will appear and {{p2}} the plain and the country will be changed into the Paradise of Abha. Strive ye that they may grow very quickly. Water ye that field and take care of the tender shrubs planted by the hand of Abdul Baha so that they may yield luscious fruits, and become the fruit of the spirit. This is the greatest yearning of the heart of Abdul Baha that the American friends may grow in the life of the spirit, in the purity of the heart, in the sweetness of nature, in the beauty of character and in the strength of faith and assurance. Thus they may {{p3}} receive the inspiration of the Divine Spirit, increase their good deeds and advance daily along the path of spiritual Knowledge and wisdom. For only through the outpourings of the Holy Spirit will they become enabled to accomplish the services required from them by the Lord mankind. To accept the Bahai movement is very simple but to live up to its wonderful requirements is most difficult. We first forget all our former notions and make the principles of the Master as the guiding star of our lives. When we say, we are Bahais we are exceedingly honored, for we {{p4}} come under the Canopy of the most marvellous Cause in this world. We must fulfil our promises to Baha-o-llah! In the words of St. Francis: "Great things have we promised unto God, much greater far hath God promised unto us, if we observe what we have promised unto him." So we observed that we must become a Bahai not only be verbal declaration but by our deeds and actions. Otherwise, we may do more harm to the Cause than good. The people of the world except the Bahais to render the greatest service to the world of humanity.

Today the Master did not come out of his room. While lying down in bed he received the people. In the morning he called on Mirza Ali Akbar to his own room and asked to chant for him the prayers of Baha-Wollah. Tea was served to him in bed. When the people gathered in the salon he called them to his own room and gave them a very short address: He stated that his general health was well but his nerves were weak. His physical body was not afflicted with any ailment; but having lived forty years in the prison of Acca, the imprisonment often very severe, the air very {{p6}} bad, the climate humid, the conditions most harrowing, the confinement and anxiety nerve-racking, therefore his nervous system was weakened. When the Bahais arrived at Acca and the authorities imprisoned them in the Barrack, there was a very dump room that formerly the dead were washed in it - an undertaking - room. The floor was made of stone and covered with a thin old mat. This room was allotted to Abdul Baha and for more than two years he slept in it. That is why at this age he had a reaction in his nervous system. The nerves could not stand all these sufferings. It is more {{p7}} or less easy to strengthen every part of the body but when the nerves are weakened it is most difficult to reinforce them. Now he was suffering from a nervous breakdown; his body as a whole was well. Nervous ills play a great effect upon the human constitution and they stop him from all activities. He cannot see; he cannot eat; he cannot walk. But praise be to God that in the face of all these difficulties the outpourings of the Kingdom of Abha are descending uninterruptedly; the Providence of Baha Wollah is all-enriching, the rays of his Sun are shining and Abdul Baha's heart was in the utmost {{p8}} joy and fragrance. Although his body was weak, his heart was happy with the unutterable sweetness of Divine Presence. His point was this: He hoped that the friends will never become defeated. The more they are surrounded with tribulations and ordeals the greater may become their firmness and steadfastness. A person who withstands the attack of the army of persecutions and sufferings will become inherently great. He hoped that in the Cause of Baha-Wollah each one of the Bahai may become like unto a solid and immovable mountain and withstand {{p9}} firmly before every attack of calamity and adversity. Such were his holy commands! While he suffers from pain, he thinks of our progress! In sweet humility he admonishes us with the words of light and life. Untiringly he paves and straighten for us the path of duty and the road toward the Kingdom of Eternity; working on, preaching on, never dreaming of despair.

In the morning Entezam-es-Saltaneh came to call on the Master and was shown in his room. In the course of conversation about the confusion of the administration of Persian government {{p10}} the Master told him the following story: There was a Mirza Fazlollah who were looking for a government appointment. He came one day to the Blessed Perfection and begged him to use his influence before the Secretary of one of the Departments so that he may become appointed as a clerk. As he was a good and able man this was done and the next day the man took his position as a clerk. Now it so happened that the name of the Chief Clerk was also Mirza Fazlollah and as he was an old man he soon died. {{p11}} By sheer audacity the first man took on his own initiative the place of the chief clerk because of the identity of the names, he signed all the documents and were taken to His Majesty for royal approval. Without noticing the change, the Shah approved the papers and after that the man filled this important position for many years and few knew of the change of personality.

In the afternoon the Master ate a bowl of the chicken broth and asked all of us to go to Mr. Scott's meeting. People were grieved because they could not see the Master. Mrs. Richard gave {{p12}} a most brilliant talk on evolution in French and Mrs. Bernard spoke in English about the attributes of the spiritual man. Both of them talked most effectively and I felt their spirit of earnestness and firmness. Then Mirza Ali Akbar chanted some of the Tablets of Baha-Wollah. On our return we found Miss Sanderson and Mrs. Bernard talking with the Beloved. Miss Sanderson is going to have meetings in her house after the departure of the Beloved.

At this time the Master called me in. I saw him lying in his bed but a pile of letters just received from the Orient was before him. He was reading them one by one. He asked about the meeting, who talked, what was said topic which I answered accordingly. Mirza Hossein dropped in and he was talking very loudly in the other room with the Persians. The Master summoned him to his Presence and asked him what he was talking about. He said, he could not tell him now but it was about the Feast of Nou-Rouz. The Master laughed and said that there was no need {{p14}} of secrecy for he heard everything.

He told a story that once in Acca he was present in the Court room. The judge was deaf and could not hear everything. He was accused right along that he took bribes and granted judgements accordingly. On this special occasion the officers of the Court were divided into two parties; some upheld the integrity of the judge and others condemned him as a rascal and bribe-taker. Finally those who condemned him said, they were going to demonstrate to Abdul Baha that they were right in their suspicion. At the time there was a case pending before the {{p15}} judge. They got hold of the accused and told him to go beside the judge and whisper to his ear that he would give him an English pound if he would favour his case. The man did so and as the judge was deaf he had to talk aloud so that everybody could hear him. The judge assented to this proposition and gave him his small tobacco bag so that he may put the money in it as he was going to fill his pipe. Now the judge was waiting and the whole court's procedure was suspended. The accused man before everybody filled his pipe with tobacco and returned the bag to the judge. {{p16}} The judge felt the bag with his fingers but could feel no pound. Frowningly, he looked toward the man and beckoned him. "I do not find the money in the bag", he told the man in such a way that many people could hear him. "It is very strange, I surely put the money in." "Now! You rascal! You wanted to fool me! I knew you are a Jew! I should not have trusted you!" "Oh! Your honor! God forbid! Let me see the bag. Indeed I put the money in it." The judge furiously threw the bag towards him. The Jew instead of putting a pound in the bag dropped in a piece of five {{p17}} cents and handed it back to the Judge. He felt the size of the money outside and his face was then wreathed with smiles and amidst the uproar and confusion he sentenced the other party. But when he got out and found out that there was only five cents in the bag and his reputation as an incorruptible Judge ruined before everybody he fell into a fit of rage and fury and sent for the Jews and gave him a sound thrashing. As the above story was told, degree by degree the Master become more and more animated and with his hands and face {{p18}} he portrayed now the feeling of the crowd, now the rage of the Judge and again the glee of the Jew at his triumph.

Dear Harriet!

May I preface this day is communication by quoting Abdul Baha's message to the Bahai world: The invincible Hosts of divine Confirmations are standing in battle array upon the plain of the Kingdom of Abha, ready to rush to the assistance of any soul who steps upon the arena of service. This Army of God knows no defeat, and those who are enlisted in it will be reinforced by the invincible powers. This is the Truth and there is nothing beyond Truth but error.

May each one of us be faithful soldiers of this Celestial Army.

For the last few nights the Master has been retiring to his room early , getting up earlier than ever and this morning we were all dressed and sitting in his Presence at 5am.,drinking the ruby tea and the nectar of love. He was sitting in a large armchair near the window overlooking the spacious square below, and as he was looking down a few nuns passed by and they interested him; therefore he spoke thus: Although in this Cause there are no nuns and nunneries, yet truly some of these nuns serve most faithfully the world of humanity. They have given up everything for the sake of Christ and devoting their time and energy to the education of the race. They are divided, however into several societies; some retire to the monastery and never leave the place. This is not at all commendable. No result is gathered from their lives. They enter the monastery alive and they are taken out when dead. Their entire lives are spent in the dark cells; never speaking with any human being, always praying or subjecting themselves to severe self-tortures. Many cannot endure such life and die within a short while. Although from one standpoint this is the highest degree of severance , yet it is a kind of severance which is not only harmful to the body polity but it is productive of no result what so ever.

Other of nuns serves the society in a whole-hearted way. They have built a school on Mount Carmel and although they are exceedingly poor they take the greatest care of the girl's students, teaching them most thoroughly. Amongst them you find nuns who in reality are humble, evanescent, believer and assured. They have no attachment whatsoever. In the religion of Christ spirituality, severance and detachment were infinite and of a higher degree than other religions! Once Abdul Baha was walking on the slope of Mount Carmel and observed a nun pilgrim who was going up the mountain with a great humility, attraction, and enkindlement, and singing anthems of praise and glorification. Her spiritual state affected him for she was weeping and singing most sweetly, thanking God for the Glorious privilege of pilgrimage to His Mountain. Abdul Baha stayed in his place and watched her till she got out of his sight.

{{p3}}

At another time one of the most accomplished French girls from an aristocratic family came to Haifa and desired to become a Carmelite nun. She was very attractive and beautiful and many people came to her, explaining the hard and fast rules of the monastery. No! Nothing would move her from her resolution. She was willing to submit to all the severe disciplines. Then on a special day, she was dressed in her costly robes and entered the church. Many people had come from the neighboring lovers to witness the ceremony and the church was packed with a crowd of curiosity-seekers and in the audience there were many Musulmans. When she entered the church, all the eyes were focused on her face. Slowly she neared the altar and knelt down before the Crucifix. Then amidst the chanting of liturgies and incense burning her long golden hairs were shorn and she was taken behind the altar. After a while she was brought back dressed in a long, black, sackcloth and hood. The transformation was so tragic that the audience was shocked and men and women wept bitterly. Then gloomy priests brought in a hearse and as though she was dead, they placed her in it and forlorn music carried her out of the church, out of the world of sunshine and beauty into the nunnery, into the world of gloom and death.

{{p4}}

Abdul Baha spoke most lovingly about Mirza Abdul Fazl: He is a most blessed soul. He has sacrificed his life to the Cause of Baha-Ullah. He does not think of his own comfort, his ease and his life. He is a real monk living in the world. He is the embodiment of sincerity.

He called in Mirza Ali Khan Adeeb and instructed him to leave for Marseilles and welcome Aga Mirza Jalal and company and conduct them safely to Paris.

{{p5}}

About ten o'clock many people arrived and received the blessings of his words and presence. at noon, he come out and based his address upon the physical and spiritual health. Towards the end he said: He hoped the holy Reality deposited in the Bahais by the hand of God may gain victory over the physical reality so that at every moment they may obtain a new spirit, a new illumination, a new power and a new honor.

{{p6}}

He did not go out today and after lunch a young Turk from Luzanne came to see him. The talk was very animated and interesting. Abdul Baha's gestures and the movements of his hands are the most eloquent traces of his divinity. Under strong emotions he is changed into Divine Humanity.

{{p7}}

He went out with Doctor Mohamad Khan and Aga Sayad Ahmad to see our new apartment and returned perfectly satisfied. The rooms are on the third floor. The number of the Beloved's room is 17 and 18 is allotted to Mirza Mahmond and myself. No. 20 is for Sayad Assadulla. It is called Martha-Pension 97 Rue Lauriston and is only two short blocks from our present address. Arrangement is made for us to board there and the Master's lunch and dinner will be cooked in Mon. and Madame Dreyfus apartment and brought here. Mon. and Madame Dreyfus were most anxious to have the Master with one of his secretaries line in their apart; but he did not accepted their kind invitation and hospitality, because as he lovingly remarked: He had travelled with his secretaries for one year and he could not think to separate from them. They must live all together.

{{p8}}

On his return from the inspection of the new apartment he was going to open the door of his room. For a few moments he searched through his pocket to find the key but he could not. In a harmonious helpless manner he called: Doctor Mohamad Khan! Come here and search the key through my pockets. Dr. Mohamad Khan ransacked the pockets of the Master and a pile of silver coins and candies were brought and the key was found and then the door unblocked.

He entered the large salon and there were a few Persians present. He spoke on the materialism of Paris. He said: Paris is like a very large, clean stable where many millions of horses are well fed, well-kept and well trained; but you do not expect to find spirituality, the Knowledge of God, the Love of God in a stable. Do you? If you do find, then God has worked a miracle.

Mon. and Madame Bernard and Miss Sanderson came in and the Master talked with them. To Mrs. Bernard he said: You have travelled through India and know what kind of people they are; now is the time to go to Persia and see with your own eyes how the Bahais are enkindled and attracted! They are the flames of the divine torch. When you came in touch with the Persian Bahais, you will forget everything. Abdul Baha illustrated this by a story. When the Persian government imprisoned Baha-Ullah in Teheran and all his prosperity was confiscated, Abdul Baha's mother, his younger sister and himself were left homeless.

In order to release herself from the constant persecutions of the people she rented a humble house in another part of the city, where people could not recognize her. She would go out herself and buy for her children bread and cheese; that was all she could afford. Notwithstanding this they were in constant danger of the attack, for it was enough to be known as Bahai and life would be forfeited. One midnight they heard loud knocking at the door. Abdul Baha went behind the door and asked: "Who art thou?" "I am Mirza Mohamad of Tabriz" a voice answered. The door was opened and he came in. First he chanted one of the supplications of Baha-Ullah; then he started to sing and dance saying, tomorrow he will be martyred in the path of the Blessed Perfection. Was he not the happiest man in the world until dawn he saying and danced. No one could not keep him quiet. Then after sunrise, he went out and immediately he was taken by the enemies and put to death. While he was under the sword he threw the spectators into a panic of wonder and amazement by raising his voice to a high pitch and singing verses and poems of Baha-Ullah. Thus he met death with a cheerful countenance.

This is the exalted state of divine attraction and happiness. Happiness consists of the Love of God.

When Abdul Baha was in the barrack of Acca he was most happy. When they pillaged all his family belongings in Teheran he was most happy. He remembered a time when as a child he was very hungry. He told his mother that he was hungry. She did not have anything in the house except a handful of flower which she put it in the palm of his hands and with a little water turned it into dough and he ate it because she could not afford anything else. Under all circumstances Abdul Baha has been most happy.

{{p12}}

It often happens that a man with the greatest amount of wealth is detached and another man's heart attached to a small thing. There was once two men, the first unbeliever but wealthy, the second believer but poor. The latter called on the former and after dinner they went out to take a walk. On the way they started to talk about the holy land and its historical interests. The poor man said to his wealthy companion, it would be so wonderful if we could take a trip to those sacred places. "All right! I am ready." They walked and walked till sunset. Then the poor man asked his friend "Where are you going?" "What have you forgotten! We were going to the Holy Land!" the other answered, "Certainly not like this." "Oh! Yes! We are going to walk on foot!" "This is impossible." "Why not?" "Because it is too far." "If you want really to go, wait a little while and I will go and bring my donkey." "Your donkey! I have so many horses in my stable and never thought of them! Strange that you are a believer and your heart is attached to a donkey!"

{{p13}}

I received today a newspaper from Finland containing a long article on the Bahai Cause with the photograph of the Master. It was very interesting! One of his addresses delivered in London was printed in it.

Love to all.

{{p1}}

Dear Harriet!

It is now after midnight the Master just returned from Miss Sanderson. Rouha Khanom and Mirza Galal having arrived at ten o'clock tonight and he was waiting at Miss Sanderson to greet them. The meeting of the father and daughter was most tender and touching. There is no doubt that after one year of separation the longing was most intense. She fell at the father's feet and wept the tears of joy. The father consoled her and inquired about her health and then a general discussion was followed and later dinner served. They had one day of rough weather after leaving Port-Said but the rest of the passage was smooth. Rouha Khanom and her companion as I heard from Mirza Ali Adeeb who went to Marseilles to accompany them to Paris were dressed in European style with this exception that their heads were covered with shawls. He also told me Rouha Khanom's physiognomy is similar to the Master's. Is it not wonderful to have her in Paris! Miss Sanderson is very privileged indeed to entertain her. It is a rare gift of heaven that is allotted to few mortals.

{{p2}}

At 3:30am I was awakened from I awoke of sleep and heard the voice of the Beloved next door. He was communing with God! "O God! Thou art the Deliverer! O God! Thou art the Deliverer! Ya Baha El-Abha!" Thus for a long time he was supplicating and praying unto the Lord! I was now fully wide awake and could hear the groaning of his heavenly heart and the lamentation of his divine Spirit! I was never so effected in my life. Here was the Beloved of the world all alone in his room praying for all the friends all over the world. It was indeed a spiritual experience; one never to be forgotten in this life, a consolation to the spirit and the balm of the heart. After a while I saw through the crack of the door his candle lighted and he got out of the bed and began to pray: Oh! So earnestly tell the doven. Wonderful night! Thus to be privileged to witness and to hear the Words of invocation ascending to the Throne of the Almighty from the holy lips of One who is today the nearest to God! While I was lying down in bed and hearing the Master's prayers meth ought the angels of light descending and carrying away the Celestial words to the Court of heaven.

{{p3}}

When I stood before the Beloved this morning he was in a contemplative mood. He said that every deed, action, word and the manner of one's walking must diffuse spiritually and detachment. Then he shut his eyes, as though tired from all this travelling and very slowly he spoke: We must try to return very soon to Haifa. Then upon the mountain all above pray and supplicate with God. His voice had now become very soft and as though talking in a whisper he continued: There one finds the ecstasy of spiritual bliss supplication invocation prayer inspiration. The atmosphere of the room had become by this time very spiritual and most elevating.

{{p4}}

Although he was very busy packing his own belongings and papers he found time to meet the people and dictate Tablet for some important personages. At twelve o'clock he gave his last address in 30 St., Didier. There were quite a number of people present and his talk was on Macrocosm and Microcosm, a very wonderful address. It was very instructive.

{{p5}}

At the table he told us a funny story: There was a Baktashi who passed by the door of a theological seminary. He saw the attendant beating a dog. "Why do you beat this dumb dog?" asked the Baktashi."Because it has entered the seminary and made the place unclean." "But this dog is unintelligent man. Look at me! I who am an intelligent man never enter a theological seminary! Do I?"

{{p6}}

In the afternoon Mon. and Madame Dreyfus and a few other Persians came. We were busy packing and at 5 o'clock all over trunks were transferred to Mortha-Persian. The Master's room was prepared and conquests of flowers, loving remembrances from the friends adorned the mouthpiece. For the last few days the Master ate only chicken.

Ahmad.

{{p1}}

Dear Harriet!

Before writing the events of the day I like to translate a few general quotations from the Tablets of Our Beloved:

##Prevention of Cruelty to Animals

"The perfect man is a mine of mercy and benevolence. It is necessary to be kind to both man and animal; for both have received a share from this life and are endowed with feelings. Mercy is commended and accepted by His Highness the Almighty whether exercised toward man or animal; even mercy and kindness practiced toward the plant is acceptable and beloved. Undoubtedly it is more praiseworthy to rear and water a tree than to exterminate it from its root."

##Significance of the sixth hidden words

"Receptivity is necessary. The love of God is like unto the ray of the Sun. As long as the mirror is not polished from the dust, the rays of the Sun shall not become manifest and revealed therein. For the appearance of the ray of the Sun which is the love of God depend upon the transparency and clearness of the mirror."

##Significance of the 25 hidden words

“It means that there are degrees in the world of existence. However much the inferior degree may progress it cannot become equal to the superior degree, but each degree can advance through its own sphere wherein infinite virtues are obtainable. For example however much the mineral may advance it cannot gain hearing and sight. But in the mineral Kingdom there are infinite degree of advancements. For instance it is possible for the coal to become diamond, but the stone will never obtain sight and hearing. It will advance in its own degree. Likewise, the finite will never become the Infinite neither the Infinite will become the finite.”

##Significance of: Thou shalt find me standing within thyself mighty powerful and supreme in the Hidden Words

“This means, when the mirror is purified and turned toward the sun, the Bestowels of the Sun will become reflected therein. The dice of the Sun does not enter in the mirror, nay rather it is stationed in its own station of sublimity. But because the mirror is pure only a reflection of the Sun is seen therein.”

##The Influence of the Cause

“In this day the call of ya Baha El-Abha is raised from all the regions and the lights of the Teachings of Baha-Ullah have illumined the globe.”

##The results of the Master’s stay in the house of an American Bahai

“Thy house become my abode and my house. We lived in that house many days with the utmost joy and fragrance. Day and night we were engaged in mentioning ya Baha El-Abha and promoted the religion of God. Truly I say that house is my house; therefore the name of God must be raised from it forever.”

The hotel life has for the present destroyed our regime so that today we took our tea downstairs in the general dining room and the Master had his in his own room. Before 7 o’clock he called me to his own room and dictated many Tablets for the Persian believers. There was one to a South African friend the translation of which you will read in another communication. I send you also a little Bahai pamphlet which has been published there on the Bahai Movement for “home consumption”.

About 9 o’clock the Master left the hotel for Miss Sanderson’s home to see Rouha Khanom and Aga Mirza Jalal. He stayed there till noon, had his lunch at Mon. Dreyfus and rested there for the afternoon. at four o'clock he called again at Miss Sanderson. A doctor has already been consulted and has given the hope that Rouha Khanom will be well before long; however, there will be a specialist in a day or two to examine the patient thoroughly. At five o'clock the Master came to the hotel and it was as though we have been separated from him for an age. He came in our room and sat near the window. He related the story of the serious sickness of Aga Mirza Jalal many years ago and how everybody thought him dead for two hours. He was attacked with typhoid and when the crisis came he swooned and was unconscious for almost 2 days. The Master healed him and today he is a very strong man.

In the morning we stayed in Mirza Hossein arrived. He read to us his poem which he will read tomorrow afternoon on the occasion of Non Rouz before nearly 200 Persians in the Persian Embassy. They are gathering there to celebrate the national Fete. He told us the story of his visit to Tiberius to see the Master nearly 20 years ago. In the afternoon Aga Mirza Jalal came to the hotel and we were most pleased to see him. I found him a gentleman in every way. We received a large bouquet of lovely flowers from the Persian Ambassador for the Beloved as a token of his remembrance for the Non Rouz. The Master went again to Miss Sanderson and returned at nine. He ate only a few spoon of chicken broth and after taking a bath he retired to his bedroom.

The woman companion of Rouha Khanom is named Rezvonieh. She is the wife of the brother of Ahmad Yozdi, the daughter of Haji Sayad Jonad and the mother of 2 or 3 children. She speaks French very well.

MARTHA-PENSION FAMILY-HOTEL 97, rue Lauriston PARIS, March 21st 1913

{{p1}}

Dear Harriet!

Today the Bahais all over the world are celebrating Now Rouz, the glorious New Year. It is a day of new resolutions, higher aims and loftier intentions. It is a day that new lives are consecrated to the holy purposes of the Bahai Cause. My resolution is short and very simple. I wish to pledge my life anew to the noblest Cause and the purest Ideal of this Radiant Century. I desire to serve whole-heartedly my fellow men. I yearn to contribute my share of work to the construction of the glorious place of Peace. I long to be a faithful labourer in the Vineyard of Our Lord! I wish to be always truthful, sincere, faithful and grateful. I pray to be freed from the ties of attachment. I supplicate to God for the daily increase of capacity, understanding illumination {{p2}} and Knowledge. On this day I empty my heart from all the traces of ill-feeling, envy, jealousy and courteousness. I pray for the purification of heart, the clearness of vision, the wide range of sympathy, the simplicity of the child and the attraction of divine love. I aspire the flight to the highest summit of heavenly felicity. I long for the calmness of the soul, the peace of the mind, the serenity of conscious, the humility of the spirit and the patience of the elect. I beg for the virtues of Celestial world, the perfections of the angels of the Supreme Concourse, the resignation of the martyrs, the fire of the Love of God, the Breaths of the Holy Spirit, the enthusiasm of the Blessed faith and the flame of spiritual contemplation. May I ever be a fit instrument to serve the oneness of the world of humanity, to assist all the sincere lovers of man to raise the Banner of Conciliation in all regions and countries.

This morning the Beloved called me twice and I hastened to get ready to go to him in as few minutes as possible. Being the New year I went right to him and kissed his blessed hands and according to our custom, I wished him a happy New Year. He hoped that in this new year there will be a greater spread of the Cause throughout the world and a greater outpouring of the holy-Spirit.

Having received lately cable messages from Chicago about the health of Mrs. Getsinger he asked me whether I have received any news about her condition. Of course I have had no intelligence of the matter whatsoever. He said: He was praying for her; because in the past she has served this Cause very faithfully. He desired to see her advance day unto day, to become more {{p4}} spiritual day unto day and to progress in the Cause day unto day.

He said that in this day the Bahais throughout the world celebrate the Feast of Nou Rouz and spend the hours in great rejoicing and happiness. He prayed that this Fete be blessed to all the friends in America! May each one of them become a mighty teacher in this Cause and spread the Glad-tidings of the Kingdom! In about ten years this Cause will be promoted most marvellously in America. He was ever expecting to see the appearance of a few souls upon the arena of action - souls who are detached, attracted, enkindled, devout and active, then this will be no doubt the majority of the people will become Bahais. This Cause will be promoted through severance from all else save God. Our capital is severance. He hoped each one of us may become the embodiment of this attribute.

When Abdul Baha was in Bagdad he had a coat which he wore over his shirt. It was made of very cheap stuff, the whole thing costing only one dollar. Having not the means to buy another he wore it till it was threadbare and he associated with all the friends and strangers while wearing it, notwithstanding this he was full of happiness, full of severance and his joy had no bound. In Bagdad the severance of the believers of God was a subject of discussion in all the circles. There were ten people living in one small room and after they did not have any other food then a few dates, yet from sunset till midnight and long after that hour they chanted prayers, sang and showed a merry heart, forgetting their outward circumstances and living only {{p6}} in spiritual atmosphere, full of sweet communion and delightful converse. Once there arose a dispute between the members of a family about the division of inheritance. The litigation dragged along and day by day the difference became more acute. When they realized that even the court will not do them any justice, they came to Baha-Wollah and pleaded him for a verdict and the readjustments of their claims. Baha-Wollah at first refused to discuss the case but they implored so persistently that finally he delegated Abdul Baha to go and settle their case in one day. Abdul Baha went and after reconciling the various factions divided the property into two parts. When noon arrived he went out and returned in an hour. He observed that the inheritors had divided the two parts into three parts. He inquired the reason. They said, that the third part was for him, on other word his fee. {{p7}} At the hour, he wore his threadbare coat on. He looked at the pile of all those objects and then he looked at his coat; he saw that he was independent of these things and he refused to accept. They insisted and he resisted. Finally Abdul Baha observed that it was useless to argue any longer with them. He said, all right; put all these things in one room. They did. He made them lock the door and seal it with wax. He got the key and went straight to Baha-Wollah. He related to him the transaction and begged him in case they came to him for further pleading to allow this third part to go to another member of the family who was disinherited through no fault of his own. Soon they arrived and started their pleading that Abdul Baha must accept his share - it was no more than right. {{p8}} On that day Baha-Wollah did not give them any definite answer; but they continued to come for several days, always urging the acceptance of the third part. Finally one day Baha-Wollah told them: Abdul Baha will accept his share unconditionally, that he must have the right to dispose of it as he is pleased; he may throw it into the sea or commit it to fire. They accepted this condition and Baha-Wollah calling in the disinherited man, gave him the key of the room wherein the objects and the documents were stored by Abdul Baha on that eventful day. A Tablet was revealed to our dear brother Doctor Zia Bagdad in Chicago in which a greeting for Nou Rouz was sent by the Beloved to all the friends.

Another Tablet with the Master's own hand was written for the family of Sayad Ahmad Bageroff of Teheran. The members of this family from the time of Baha-Wollah have rendered conspicuous services to the Cause. There were five brothers, all of whom {{p9}} were Bahais, and they were the descendants of Mohamad the prophet and consequently Baha-Wollah gave them the title of the "Five Sayads". This Sayad Ahmad is the son of one of those five herein is the Tablet: To the household oh his holiness Bageroff. Upon them be Baha-Wollah! He is God! O ye self-sacrificing household in the Path of the Merciful! It is the early morn of the Blessed Day of Nou-Rouz; the rays of the Sun of Reality are refulgent and manifest and Abdul Baha with infinite attraction, happiness and joyousness had taken the pen in his hand - so that he may write to that favoured and famous household, the felicitations of this acispicious Fete and congratulate {{p10}} you on this New year, in order that all of you may render thanksgiving unto the Glorious Lord for thus that entire family taking a shelter beneath the shade of the Providence of His Highness the One that generation becoming encircled with the rays of imperishable Glory. For the pillars (the “Five Sayads” who become Bahais and there founded this family) during the day of the Manifestation of the Revelator on Mount Sinai (Baha-Wollah) become attracted to the Forgiving Lord! O Lord! Reinforce all of them with Thy most great Power. (Signed) Abdul Baha Abbas.

He called on Miss Sanderson and Sayad Ahmad and myself went out to buy candies, fruits, nuts and cakes for the Fete. We got two large tables in the salon and decorated them tastily with lilacs, roses and other flowers. {{p11}} The Master sat in the Salon and received large delegations from amongst the Europeans and Orientals. Every one expressed his hearty felicitation and he discoursed on the significance of the Nou Rouz. In the afternoon important Persians like Sardar Asad and others payed calls. The Beloved urged everyone, especially the Western Bahais to eat candies. Many friends brought flowers. Large members of Persian students amongst them the brother of Godsea Khanour come to see him, and many of them were invited to sit at his table.

In the afternoon {{p12}} he told us to call in a body at the Persian Legation. There were more than hundred young Persians many of them dressed in French army clothes as they are army students. Mirza Hossein read his poem and toward the end a volume of applause greeted him. The whole embassy was decorated with flags and flowers. Large tables were grooming under the weight of delicacies. It was a lively scene of Persia in the making that one can seldom see anywhere else in Europe. After an hour we said goodbye to the Persian Ambassador. The Master also called and delivered an eloquent address. In the evening the meeting at Mon. Dreyfus was delightful and many people were present. Miss Fraser from London had just returned and she received a hearty welcome from the Beloved. His talk was a discourse on the Feast of Nou Rouz.

Love to all

Ahmad

Upon her be Baha-o-llah!

He is God!

O thou daughter of the Kingdom!

Thy letter was received. Owing to the lack of time I write a brief answer. Its contents was in the utmost of sweetness. The letter was a sign of Love for the Manifest Light. Offer thou a thousand thanks unto the Lord for thou hast turned thy face toward the horizon of Reality and hast beheld the rays of the Sun of the Higher Universe. Thou hast a seeing eye, a hearing ear and a heart attracted toward the Kingdom of Abha!

Therefore with thy revered husband, thy beloved daughter, and those souls who have caught the splendours of the {{p14}} Sun of Reality, strive unanimously so that the Continent of Africa may become illumined that the world may become another world, divine enlightenment be diffused and the Blessed Tree of the Oneness of the world of humanity cast its shade.

I give thee the good news. Rest thou assured that thou wilt become assisted and confirmed. Consequently, arise with the greatest confidence of the heart and summon the people to the Kingdom of God and proclaim: Glad-tiding! Glad-tiding! The Morn of Guidance hath dawned! Glad-tiding! Glad-tiding! The Sun of Reality hath shone forth! Glad-tiding! Glad-tiding! The Breeze of the Rose-garden of God hath wafted. Glad-tiding! Glad-tiding! A new Grace hath appeared in the world of humanity. Glad-tiding! Glad-tiding! The ideal of the solidarity of the human race hath pitched its Tent upon the apex of the world. Glad-tiding! Glad-tiding! The Flag of Peace and Salvation hath been unfurled in this century, waving over the East and the West!

Upon thee be Baha El Abha!

Dear Harriet!

This Pension life has disturbed our program. The Master does not deliver any more morning addresses and besides much of his time is spent with over new guests at Miss Sanderson. He passes there many hours during the day and as there are some specialist who have been called to examine the condition of the health of Rouha Khanom, his presence and assistance has been necessary.

{{p2}}

This morning several letters were read to the Beloved and in the course of his talk he said: Everyone of the believers of God must shine like unto the sun. The believers are the suns of the heaven of Baha-Ullah. They must illumine the world and exhilarate the souls and import spirit to the dead bodies.

{{p3}}

After drinking tea and meeting a few people, gathered downstairs, he went to Miss Sanderson. He had his dinner with Mon. Dreyfus and returned at half past two. Miss Fraser and Miss Hodgson were here. The Master pointing them out to a new corner he said: These two women are real Bahai workers. They serve the Cause day and night. Miss Fraser said, that on her return to London, Miss Buckton and herself will start for Edinburgh to teach the Cause. The Master praised her enthusiasm and zeal.

{{p4}}

On automobile was called and he took me with himself to meet Moneer Pasha. All the way along he was steeped in thought awhile did not say one word. At the door of the apartment he was welcomed by the Pasha and his wife. Both kissed his hands. There was present a journalist who had travelled in the Orient. Madame Lasherly who had visited the Master years ago in Acca and a few Turks and Parisians. It was quite an informal affair for they did not expect the arrival of the Master. He came upon them unexpectedly. The journalist asked many questions from the Master. The Beloved spoke in excellent eloquent Turkish and Moneer Pasha translated into French. The talk was an exposition of true religions, that religion is divided into two parts essential and non essential; that religion serves the world of morality; that the aim of religion must be a centre around which all the nations and people may gather. These are the basis of religion. But the priests and the Nullos and the Robbies have caused it to become a means of friction and discord. If religion is the cause of discord and hatred it is a divine calamity and we must shun it. He related instances from the Koran and the traditions that Mohamad was the greatest friend of Christ. The journalist and others were most delighted with the Beloved's talk. He took notes of the Master's talk and will incorporate them in an article. He requested the Master for a photograph and sent someone with us to get it.

{{p5}}

At five o'clock General Sherif Pasha who edicts a monthly magazine in French, defending the rights of the Ottoman Empire cause to see the Beloved. He is a very important personage, big physically and mentally.

{{p6}}

When he left, the Master went to his own room to rest awhile. About 7 o'clock, 3 very prominent Persians were presented to the Beloved with whom he talked for half an hour. Mirza Lotfollah Hakum from London arrived and was ushered into the Presence of the Master. He had the news of the meetings and the friends of that city, Lady Bloomfield and Mrs. Cropper, General Jack and Miss Rosenberg. All are well and engaged in spreading the Cause of God.

In the morning, the Secretary of the Esperanto Society called and he told the Master that yesterday he delivered an address on the Bahai Movement in Esperanto language before a large gathering in Sorbonne University. I asked him to bring me an outline of his address both in French and Esperanto.

Long after midnight- it was probably three o'clock and then at five I could hear the Master praying, his voice rising melodiously. For a long time I sat up in my bed straining my ears to hear every burning word which issued from his holy lips and then in that calm and quiet atmosphere I fell again into sleep.

The magazine "Vahan" of the Theosophical Society in London has published an article on the Bahai Movement in this month issue.

Love to all.

Dear Harriet!

While the Master was walking today through the streets of Paris, two women passed by. They turned back and looked at him with wonder in their eyes. One whispered to the other: "Voyez, me cherie le Jesus Christ est retourne dans ce monde." (Look my dear, Jesus Christ has returned to this world.) Miss Hadjson who was walking behind, hearing this remark returned and talked to them about the message. They were much interested. Those who are endowed with spiritual perception can realize the importance of the Cause in a comprehensive way and feel that the foundation of the Bahai Movement is laid on the rock bed of eternal realities. For the presence of the Master is a mighty proof, for all the dreams and visions of the past prophets are embodied in this holy Personality. His example makes it possible for us to live the life of goodness, charity and {{p2}} loving kindness. He is the Pathfinder, the Pioneer, and we will follow in his wake with perfect faith and assurance. Our standard-bearer shall never make any mistake. With great sagacity and wisdom, he will carry to final victory his devoted army and crown all their campaigns with glorious triumphs.

Since we have come to this Pension, our morning visit to the Beloved are disturbed; Sayad Assadollah makes tea on a little alcohol stove, and takes it to the Master and we eat our breakfast in the divine room. Besides, there are not as many Persians as there were before and that Samavar which was brewing every morning in the other apart is silenced through the force of circumstances. However we enjoy the presence of the Beloved just the same. He shines like unto the sun upon all the people, wether believers or unbelievers; his mercy is universal, his love is unutterably divine, his compassion sweet and most beautiful.

In Rasht we have a Bahai, well known to many believers in America by his title, Eltehajad Molk. This morning, the Master through his great love wrote him a wonderful Tablet with his own hand. I translate the first part: "He is shining from the Horizon of Faithfulness, Praise be to God, the Lamp is lighted and the Path hath become straight and manifest. The Breeze of Providence is spirit-imparting and the Sun of Reality brilliant and rays-giving. His holiness the Christ at the time of his ascension left behind only eleven disciples. Look at the results of the work of those souls! Praise be to God, that this Call is raised in Africa and in Asia; Turk and Tajik are awakened and made mindful and from America the reverbrating sound of the bombardment {{p4}} of the Oneness of the world of humanity is reaching the ears of every intelligent and sagacious person. Therefore, compare the present with the past and then thou canst realize what will happen in the not distant future.

The mail from America brought some letters, the contents of which were read to the Master. The good news made him happy, and he ever anticipates the progress of the Cause and the love and amity of the friends toward one another. Can America make itself a birth place of joy? A center of Bahai activity in charity, in practical philanthropy, in divine susceptibilities, in spiritual ideals? If such condition of accord and unity is realized, the Beloved will be made most happy!

Mirza Lotfollah Hakim was in Presence of the Beloved for a long time, receiving messages for various believers in London. To teach one of the friends he sent a loving message the result of which must be greater effort in the Cause.

{{p5}}

While I was translating in my room, word was sent up that someone is waiting downstairs to see me. I was wondering who should be this person who wants especially to see me. With much pleasant uncertainty, I went down and whom do you think I saw? Guess if you can! It was Mr. Stanwood Cobb! Well! of all of the places to see him in Paris! I couldn't believe my eyes! Oriental fashion, I kissed his face and then of course I was sure that he was not the ghost of Mr. Cobb. What is he doing? He is the Prof. of Latin etc in a travelling school headed by Prof. Sargent. There are eleven American boys who travel for eight months all over Europe and study, sight-see, and go from one country to another. They have been travelling already six months and the last places they {{p6}} visited were many cities in Germany and Holland. They are going to stay six weeks in Paris then England, then home. The boys study all the morning, go out together to see the historical places and museum in the afternoon, return to their hotel at 5 o'clock, write for one hour their diaries etc. I took brother Cobb upstairs and immediately the Beloved received him with an enthusiasm and intimacy that is born out of long acquaintance and friendship. He asked what he is doing in Paris.

Stanwood Cobb: I am on an excursion through Europe with a travelling school of boys.

A.B.: Do you take the boys also on an excursion through the world of the Kingdom?

S.C.: I have spoken with Prof. Sargent about the movement and have read the Paris talks to the students. They are all anxious to see the Master. Prof Sargent has written a poem to Abdul Baha. (Here the poem was produced and read).

A.B.: Excellent. Very good indeed. {{p7}} I am searching for a person like unto him, God willing, through your effort he will become spiritual, divine and illumined.

S.C.: I pray for him every night. He is a remarkable personality, a genius in many ways but he does not believe in religion. He is just now in great troubles and needs spiritual assistance. He is really a lover of the world of humanity. A.B.: God willing, the window of his heart will be opened and the sun of the hope will shine upon him. Hope is made possible through turning one's face toward God. If all the benefits of the world are made possible for man and he has no hope, he will not enjoy them. When man is surrounded with the difficulties and troubles, the only thing that will pull him through is the hope of the dawn of better days.

S.C.: While in Germany I spoke with a woman who is the President of a college for girls. The mental abilities and spiritual susceptibilities were combined in her. I told her about the Cause and gave her the Paris talks. That night she read them to her pupils and when I called again, they all expressed great pleasure. I found amongst them a girl who had heard about the Cause in America from Miss Louise Stopfer (Mrs Manwell friend)

A.B.: God willing through the effort she will become fully informed with this Cause. I hope she will become divine, obtain heavenly Bestowals, make ideal advancement, and become the means of the illumination of those girls.

It is good that they breath is very effective. No mother with whomsoever, thou speakest about the Cause, he will be impressed and accept the revelation. This is because {{p9}} thou art seeking the good pleasure of the Lord. Thou art not serving the Cause for fame but to be drawn near unto God. I hope that thou mayst become embodied spirit and personified light. Rest than assured that thou will become confirmed and assisted. I give thee the glad-tiding that thou will become inspired, thy heart will become illumined, thy thought will be enlarged. I give thee again the glad-tiding. Strive and strive that thou mayst become a pure light and a sanctified ray. Aga Mirza Jalal with Foad Effendi arrived and the Beloved left with them to call at Miss Sanderson. As he was going to stay there till 3 o'clock I took a long walk through Bais de Bologne with Mr. Cobb talking all the time about the {{p10}} Master, his teachings and the Cause in America. As it was Sunday and the sun was shining gloriously, thousands of men and women were walking through the spacious boulevards of the Bais. Mr. Cobb before leaving the Master arranged for a meeting on tuesday at 5 pm to bring the students and the Prof. to meet him.

On my return I found Miss Beatrice Erwin. She came to see the Master in London several times. She is a poetess and writer. She writes mystic and spiritual poems before various audiences and impersonates as she says the sound, the music and colours of life. She is a very interesting woman and she is most anxious to serve. She has now decided to write two articles on the Bahai Cause for an English Review, a most important British weekly which is circulated in intellectual and spiritual circles of England. {{p11}} We talked a great deal on the points that she must include in these articles and she was pleased with the result of our conversation. We invited her to have lunch with us. Miss Fraser came in and introduced them to each other. They were yet talking interestingly together when I left the salon and came up to my room.

At 3'oclock the Master sent for me from Miss Sanderson's house. He ordered to get a taxi and taking me with himself we called at the home of Ahmad Pasha, a Turkish general whose father was a lover of Baha-Wollah during the imprisonment in Adrianople. He was not at home, so the Beloved ordered another taxi and alone with him we drove through the Park Bais for two hours. {{p12}} The meadows, the trees were all green and refreshing to the eyes. We drove on and on passing by the lakes, cascades, open meadows verdant foliage and the Master all the time commenting upon the beauty of scenery. The Bais was simply crowded with people. Soon the clouds gathered in the sky and a terrific shower poured down, sending the people into a panic, heltic-sketter. On his return he found several people waiting for him. He asked a young man from what country he comes? He answered with fervor and real much vehemence. I am from —. In order to gently rebuke him and show him the false emotion of patriotism he related the following story: Once upon a time the King of a certain country got hold of an owl and put it in a large golden cage hanging it in his royal Park which the King observed that the owl was not happy in his wonderful Park and always lament. "Oh! my {{p13}} country! O my country!" He ordered to let the owl fly out of the cage and with a number of his retinue he follows the course of the owl flight. After many hours the owl alighted on the dilapidated wall of a ruined and deserted castle and scratchingly cried out. "Oh how happy am I! At last I reached my beloved country! My abode of rest! My paradise of delight! My heavenly hope is now fulfilled!"

A propos of other subjects, the Beloved spoke about the pigeon carries. Hundred of years ago large correspondence was carried on between Bagdad and Damascus, Egypt and Palestine. Officials trained these pigeons, tied the letters to their feet and let them fly away. {{p14}} After days of flying the pigeons reached safely their destination. The delicacy, the beauty, the flavour of the fruits of the Orient and the accident were compared, giving preference, now to this and again to that.

The Beloved spoke earnestly on war and Peace. Ignorance and prejudice have encircled the nations of the earth and they are attacking each other with weapons of death instead of love. God has created man for the exercise of love; the will of God is spelled in letters of love but man acts against this will and presumptuously addresses God. God, thou dost not know the results of war. War leads us on to victory, to glory, to conquest, to prosperity. War is the path to honour. We love war, but thou dost tell us war is evil. We cannot believe in thy word. Thus {{p15}} mankind is immersed in the Sea of ignorance and blindness. While Abdul Baha was living in Acca he was always able to established peace amongst the Christians, the Jews and the Mohamadans, but when an orthodox priest or a Mullah or Rabbi would come to head these various sects, immediately the fire of hatred would be ignited by them. Because each one of them would thought that if he wanna let them joined another religion, calling its followers, infidels and heathers, his own station would be raised in the estimation of his people. These prejudices reached to such a high degree that the people killed each other in Fetoum not long ago. Strange!

The leaders of religions must teach their followers love and fellowship; they must exhort them to unity and agreement. They must show the greatest exertion in their direction. They must address the people and say! O ye people! What is this strife! What is this strangeness! What is this hatred! Verily, verily your God is one God! You are all his sheep. He is the kind shepherd! Let go of this dissention! Forget this animosity. Relinquish war! Follow Peace. Now the nations of the world are adding daily to the means of warfare and have become military lunatics. These are their thoughts. God has also His thoughts. Let us wait and watch to see whose thoughts will gain the upper hand!

{{p17}}

A Persian was sitting on a chair, far away. The Master called him to come to the front. He asked him his profession and the answer was "tailor". Then he spoke again: There are some people who study for dress, work for dress, live for dress, walk for dress, eat for dress; in brief their lives are spent for the dress, the clothe, the style, fashion and made. To them the beginning and the ending of creation is spilled in one word. "Dress". They believe that God has created them for "Dress". There was a judge in Acca who spent two hours every morning over his toilet. He would sit before the mirror and painstakingly arrange his coat on West, brush his hair and at every turn {{p18}} he would look at the mirror (during these remarks he showed us with his hands, how the Judge conducted himself his morning toilets and it was simply side-splitting with laughter). One morning Abdul Baha called on him, not knowing his habit. His servant told him, the judge will be ready in a little while. He stayed ten minutes, twenty minutes, half an hour, one hour; finally he called the servant and asked him what was the matter? He laughed and said, the judge was making his toilet. Abdul Baha said, he could wait any longer let him come immediately. When the judge arrived he rebuked and told him that if he ever called again in the morning, let him just put on his long one coat and come out to see him afterward, he can go leave and make his toilet which injunction he followed ever after.

There was also a man by the name Mohamad Bey, a Kurd, of short stature, fat and a long beard. He had met Baha-Wollah when he was living in the Mountain of Sobymanieb and became His ardent follower. When Baha-Wollah returned from the mountains after two years of absence, this Mohamad Bey also came to Bagdad bringing 46 mares for the governor, Ohear Pasha. He was dressed in long flowing robe and had a big turban on his head. Now just think of his strange appearance. Short, fat, long black beard, long Oriental robe and a big turban on his head! After a few days he came to see the Blessed Perfection and lo! there was a complete change in his costume! He was dressed in European clothes but he looked very fantastic {{p20}} while he was sitting in the room with Baha-Wollah talking, Abdul Baha was out standing in front of the house. Suddenly he saw a raging Kurd running from far away toward. On the way he stopped all the pedestrians asking them: Oh Sir! “Where is the house of Darvish Mohamad (this was the name of Baha-Wollah, which he assumed during his two years absence). I will give my life if i could just look into his face!” They directed him to Abdul Baha asking his question with such eagerness, such love, such impatience he took him by the hand and carried him without any notice into the room in which Baha-Wollah was speaking with Mohamad Bey. The whole frame was of the young Turk quivering with the force of {{p21}} love, and his eyes were dazzling with the light of love. When he saw Baha-Wollah, he wept and joyed with such depth of feeling that all the friends wept at the sight of it. It turned out that he was the servant of Mohamad Bey and had this extraordinary love for the Blessed Perfection. Baha-Wollah arose from his seat and made him sit beside his master. Abdul Baha could never forget him as the Turk was sitting there, his eyes like unto two lamps of light ringed upon Baha-Wollah. The Master left us and went upstairs. For dinner he had only a piece {{p22}} of bread and the juice of pomegranate. At nine he took a bath and retired to his room.

Love to all

Ahmad

{{p1}}

Dear Harriet!

One of the most interesting events of our Paris sojourn is the arrival of Mirza Jalal, the son-in-law of the Master with Rouha Khanom. Having seen three or four times our beloved brother Mirza Jalal, I was impressed with his dignity, quietness of spirit, deep faith in the Cause and strong assurance. In the Presence of the Master he is always silent, sitting with the utmost politeness. He is thirty four years old and wears European clothes with a black Persian cap on his head. He is rather tall, well built and has large quiet eyes. For thirty years he has lived in Acca, he was only four years old when brought to holy land by his mother, after the martyrdom of his father - “Sutan of the Martyrs” in Esphahan. He remembers Baha-Wollah and for the last thirty years he has watched {{p2}} the Cause grows from step to step. All the Persians love him not only because he is related to the Master but because he is such a faithful believer. Tonight he was invited by Sayad Ahmad Bageroff to dine with us. As the Master was not at the table I asked him to tell me briefly the story of the martyrdom of his father “the Sultan of the Martyrs” and his uncle the “Beloved of the Martyrs”.

He said in part: My father was always most fortunate in agricultural undertakings. Under his constant care and attention the soil yielded rich harvests and his fame became widely spread. The chief Pontiff of Esphahan at that time was a great landed proprietor and he had eight villages which needed supervision. He asked my father to rent these villages for a definite amount of money. My father accepted the proposition and for four years manage the affairs most wisely and prudently. Imam Joma (or the chief pontiff) opened an account {{p3}} with my father, drawing checks upon him almost every day. After the end of four years when my father made up the books, he saw the Imam Joma had overdrawn his account to the amount of 45 thousand dollars. The pontiff gave then my father two receipts, one of $30,000 and the other $15,000 to be paid later. One day, as though the same old business relation existed, Imam Joma sent a check with his servant. My father looking the servant that there was no money left, that Imam Joma had overdrawn his account and his impatience tore the check to pieces. The servant returned to his chief and reported what had happened. Although Imam Joma did not say anything yet, secretly he harboured in his heart retaliation and {{p4}} enmity. As my father had two other brothers, one Mirza Hossien and the other Mirza Ismail, they shared together everything they possessed Mirza Ismail not being a Bahai, was mimical to his two brothers. He thought that by giving to the Ulemas and declaring his brothers as Bahais, they would be quickly put out of the way and the path will be clear for him to inherit all the property. So he started to go to Imam Joma and Aga Najafy accusing his brothers as heretics. These two in turn went to the governor of the city and told him that these were two Sayyads in this city who were Bahais and they insisted that they should be summoned and called to court. At that time all the Bahai meetings were held in my father's house and people come and went without any secret; everybody knew that my father was a Bahai. The governor sent for the two brothers and they went to him {{p5}} without premonition. When they arrived he was walking in the garden of his palace known as "Tchehel-Sotoun". He carried a cane in his hand and Aga Najafy was standing before him. The governor addressing my father said that "we have heard you are Bahais". "People say many things", he answered. "Then if you are not Bahais, curse the Cause." "We have seen nothing bad from these people." "Then you are Bahais", and raising his cane and coming near to my father and uncle beat them for several minutes. He called for his servants and commanded them to throw those vile Bahais into the dungeon. Next day the Mullahs clamoured for their blood and after four days of imprisonment {{p6}} they took them out and in the public square, before the eyes of many spectators they are put to death. In the evening a cable was received from the central government in Teheran that they must not kill the two Bahais but it was too late. For two or three days, their bodies were exposed to the public view, then they were entered in "Tatkte-Foulad." During the few days of their imprisonment through the instigation of the Mullahs and the government's authorities, the rabble attacked our house and pillaged everything. Those furnitures that they could not conveniently carry away they destroyed. Their vandalism reached to such a degree that they uprooted the trees and flowers in the garden. At that time I was only six months old and my mother was in that house during those trying days. Then all the {{p7}} property and real state of my father and uncle were divided between the Ulamas and the governor and all of that wealth nothing was left to us! I was four years old when the Command of the Blessed Perfection came that my mother with my brother and sister must leave for Acca. After an eventful journey we arrived in and lived in the vicinity of Baha-Wollah even afterward. Twelve years ago I made a trip to Esphahan, stayed there for a year and two months and then returned again to Acca. The Bahai library collected by my father was unique in all Persia. There one could see many a rare manuscript, many original writings of Baha-Wollah and they all went out of our hands! {{p8}} Now, praise be to God that we are all beneath the overshadowing protection of the Center of the Covenant and all our happiness and joy is centered his good-pleasure. This was just a brief outline of what Mirza Jalal told me tonight.

This morning where we presented ourselves in the Holy Presence of Abdul Baha, he was well and happy and talked about Ferdousi, the great poet of Persia who wrote in poetry the ancient history of that country in his immortal Epic Shah-Nanah. He quoted many lines from that book showing the matchless beauty of the poet eloquence as well as his flight of imagination.

Miss Fraser and Miss Hadjson with bouquets of flowers {{p9}} entered the room. He was writing a Tablet for America with his own hand and as he raised his noble head and saw them with smiles on their faces he exclaimed happily. You are two good sisters. Bahai sisterhood is very precious. It is not like material sisterhood. Material sisterhood is forgotten and often changed into hatred. Material sisters often have not much affection for each other but then sisterhood was eternal, because it was spiritual, Bahai and divine. The greatness of this sisterhood will become more manifest and clear in the worlds of God. There may be a twin sisters in the matrix of the mother but they do not {{p10}} know each other. However when they step into this world, after they have grown, they recognize each other and realize that they have a father and mother and how great and self-sacrificing have been their parent. So when they (Miss Fraser and Miss Hadjson) ascend into the realm of light, they will realize how great was his fatherhood for them. Miss Fraser laughingly said: "I hope we will not have to wait till then", Abdul Baha answered: Here we comprehend things according to our environment and adaptation. This world has not much capacity to conceive the truth. Twin sisters may embrace each other in the matrix and be entirely unconscious of the knowledge of their father and mother. But when they are born into this world theirs will be this deep consciousness.

Madame Marcovitch a French authoress who has written the life of Gurra-Wollayire in a dramatic play came to see the Beloved. She is a wonderfully intelligent woman and the Master was most kind to her. As she is going to lecture on the "Religious evolution of Persia" before the Theosophists on the 20th of May and bring in the Cause the Master spoke to her in length about the principles of the movement and gave her some of the newspapers and magazines.

He left for Miss Sanderson's house and did not return till late in the evening. All the Persians went to Mr. and Mrs. Scott's {{p12}} meeting at 5 o'clock. Mr. Cobb was there and gave a fine talk on Abdul Baha's trip throughout America. Mon. Bernard spoke in French on "Spiritual man" and at the end I spoke a few minutes and the meeting came to a close with a prayer chanted by Mirza Mahmoud.

The other day Sayad Ahmad Bageroff went downstairs to see the maid to tell her that the Master wanted to take a bath tonight and the water must be very hot. In order to impress her with the importance of the situation he spoke theirs: "Last night I took a bath but the water was cold." "Oh! Je suis trisle, Monsieur", "Please wait till I finish! Now there was every possibility that I might have caught a cold". {{p13}} "I would gladly come and nursed you back to health", rejoined the obliging maid. "Please! This is very important! I have only one wife and four children. If I caught cold and the worst had happened, somehow they could get along without me." "Poor things! I am glad that nothing happened though." "Tonight Monsieur le Maitre wants to get a bath and the water must be very hot. You know he has millions of sons and daughters all over the world and if he gets the cold you will be blowed." "What! he has millions of sons and daughters! This is extraordinary". That is true though. Now can we {{p14}} depend on you? "For the sake of those millions of children I will do my very best." That night the water was very warm and the Master was also warm in his praise of the maid.

In Persia lived a Bahai athlete, very strong and in teaching the Cause to others he had evolved an argument in the language of sport. He said: "We want a champion who can enter in the diamond - ring - and carry away the palm of victory. He must be the champion of the world. Mohamad Ali has gone into his own room and sitting there boasts of courage and strength. But Abdul Baha is in the diamond ring of America and Europe wrestling with everybody and coming out victorious everywhere. Is this not the test of his supreme courage and invincible power? Is not this enough to convince anybody? This was a fine argument for a sport and he thought many people in this way.

Dear Harriet!

The receipt of three letters today gave much happiness to Abdul Baha, for thy contained good news. One from Miss Juanita M. Storch, Oakland Calif, another from Mother Beecher and the third from Miss Juliet Thompson. The letter from Oakland was much praised by the Master both as regards to its contents and its style. I would like to quote here the part the Beloved loved the best: "Last night when I came home I found the papers you sent me. Words cannot express the happiness I felt. You are the first person to have sent me anything from Paris, and I was so surprised and happy to receive the things I love best. Many people love to receive garments and jewels from Paris and to their eyes if a thing be labelled "Paris", it is best {{p2}} obtainable. But I am so glad that first thing I have had sent to me was the very best. Nothing do I love to obtain more than the teachings of Baha'w'llah. God's garments are never outworn and the brilliancy of his jewels is beyond comparison." The Beloved when heard the last statement said: Bravo! Bravo! This is a most beautiful idea well expressed. Then with enthusiasm in his eyes he said: I have set a conflagration throughout America. Its results will become known later. Wait for a few years and you will behold the appearance of many traces. I do not like to talk about these things for the present because the people cannot understand them but you be patient for a little while and you will see what I have done in America. It took three hundred years for the Cause of Christ to be spread but in the first century the Cause of Baha-ollah will be pragmatic everywhere. We who are so weak are carrying constant conquests while others {{p3}} notwithstanding their greatness and power are being defeated, therefore it is evident that the Confirmations of God are with us.

Mirza Lotfallah Hakim came in and the Master addressing the rest in the room said: We went to London and Mirza Lotfallah served us very faithfully, very sincerely. At this time he is likewise engaged in the Service of the Cause. In this Dispensation those Israelites who have become believers have arisen to serve the Cause with the greatest of steadfastness.

Other Persians arrived and were permitted to go in the Presence of our Beloved. He spoke to them about the lack of administrative capacity and ability amongst the Persian governors and Ministers and {{p4}} how during the last few years instead of devoting their time and energy to the amelioration of the conditions of their country they wasted their precious time over the formation of political parties and in a short while many incongruous parties stalked abroad. What is this? It is the Democratic party. What is that? It is the Conservative party, the Liberal party, and the royalist party, the constitutional party, the republican party, and infunitions. These were only mere word with no meanings behind them. These parties instead of uniting on some general principles divided the people worst than ever and made confusion worst confounded. They could not agree upon anything. Instead of fighting the enemy, they fought amongst themselves and weakened their moral fiber till they have now reached to this deplorable condition.

At 9:30 the Master in company with Sayad Ahmad Bageroff and myself drove to the hotel of Sepahdar Azam who had just returned from Nice. He came out of his room to welcome the Master and kissed his hands. The Beloved told us to wait in the other room and later he will call us in. For half an hour they were alone together and then we were called in. The Master asked me to translate to Sepahdar Azam the letters of Miss Storch, Miss Thompson and Mother Beecher which I did. Sepahdar listened most carefully and his silence was now and then punctuated with words of praise and surprise. He was {{p6}} most pleased and impressed.

After this he told us the wonderful story of the martyrdom of Badi, the youth who carried the Epistle of Baha-wllah to the Shah of Persia. As he was at the time an eye-witness of this tragic event, it makes it most significant and doubly interesting from a historical standpoint. The Master listened to the recital of the story with the greatest silence; sympathy and love pictured in his glorious Face. Yesterday Sapahdar said, I called on Sardar Mansour and while there I saw a printed copy of the Epistle of Baha-wllah to Nasser-din Shah. I told those who were present that I have been an eye-witness of the death of Badi and then related to them the whole story as I knew it. Then I brought that Epistle with myself to read it here. Besides this, I wrote with my own hand this story behind a book for Mon. Dreyfus. {{p7}} At the time that this event transpired I was a colonel in the Army and my father had not yet received his title. The Shah had pitched his tents many miles away from Teheran and my father and myself were commissioned to go around the surrounding villages and prepare the commissionist. While we were riding and trying to get ready to go out, we heard a great noise and confusion, servants running to and fro in great consternation. My father asked what is the cause of all these noises. An officer who was coming in from the scene said, that a few minutes ago the Imperial Majesty was driving in the royal carriage when a youth waved a banner towards him. The Shah sent for him several of his {{p8}} bodyguards to find out what he wanted. He told them that he had to see the Shah in person; he had a message to deliver into his hand. At first they searched him, fearing he may attack the Shah with a secret weapon and tried to make him tell the message to them; but he repeated: No, I must see the Shah and give the message to him. The Shah seeing that his bodyguards did not return, sent some more servants to bring them back. What was the reason of your delay? the Shah asked imperiously. "This man", they said desires to deliver a message personally to your Majesty. We tried to get it from him but he would not give it. Bring him then. Badi was brought before the carriage of the Shah. "What is your wish young man?" "I have brought a Firman from the port of my Lord for thee! and he took {{p9}} out immediately the Tablet of Baha-wllah and delivered it into the hand of the Shah. The bodyguards realizing what had happened gathered around Badi and the Shah almost beside himself with anger ordered Kazam Khan to take the young man and force him to give the names of his accomplices. It took the officer hardly a minute to tell us these things when I saw a soldier surrounded by many others, was carrying on his back a young man whose hands and feet were strongly tied with ropes. They were making sport of him that this is the man who had brought a "Firman" for the Shah! Just think of his foolhardiness and audacity to say loudly to the King of Kings that he had brought a "Firman" and not a petition! Hearing this, I did gave no importance to the event {{p10}} and with my father went out to fulfil our duties. On our return, after three days, we were so busy that we did not ask about the Bahai messenger and after 8 days we heard that he was killed. One morning my father told me, let us go and call on Kazam Khan. We started on our way till we reached the door of his tent. He hailed us in and we commented on various events of the Court. Then my father asked Kazam Khan: "What did happen to that young Bahai who had brought a letter from Baha-wllah for the Shah! We heard that he is killed. As you had him in your charge, tell us about it." Really! Kazam Khan answered. It was one of the most marvellous things that has ever transpired, a very marvellous event, almost a miracle! It is an outstanding story. You remember the day he was caught while handing the "Firman of his Lord" to the Shah. Well! His majesty turned him to me with the injunction that {{p11}} I must get out of him the names of his friends. I brought him to my tent and while his hands and feet were tied, I addressed him thus: "Thou art a young, comely youth! Tell me where are thy friends? And I will give you freedom". He answered: My dear Sir! I have no friends! I do not know anyone! I have not even seen the Revelator of the Firman. I am not informed with its contents. The Firman was given me to deliver it into the hands of the Shah! I have not seen anyone either on my way or in Teheran. Now I am most happy that I have fulfilled my duty. I have nothing else to say. I told him: "Young man! Art thou mad? Dost thou not know that this is the sacred Command of his Majesty? If thou dost not reveal the names of thy friends and accomplices in {{p12}} Teheran we will be forced to make thee confess by inflicting upon the severe tortures." He said: "I have already said what I know, whatever punishment you inflict upon me it will be of essence of happiness; the severer the torture the greater my gratitude to you. I am ready." While I was beside myself with rage, I was secretly admiring the calmness and imperturbability of the youth. So I ordered the Farrashes to bring the Bastonadal and putting his feet through it they inflicted a severe beating with fresh branches of the tree upon the sole of his feet. The more they struck the more marvellous was his calmness and poise. He cried not neither did he plead for mercy. Wonder of wonder! he laughed, he sang! Was it possible? It was as though this punishments had no effects upon him! All the Farrashes {{p13}} were by this time tired. I was angry. I was amazed. The fortitude, the patience of this young man stupefied me. Blood flowed from his feet and toes. I jumped out of my seat, got several branches together and continued to beat him as though the demon had possessed me. Great Allah! Again he laughed! His face was wreathed with smiles! He chanted the songs of praise and glorifications! He cried out. O my God! O my Lord! I thank thee for this great bounty! I praise thee for this most eminent favour! Now I was tired in turn! I could not go any further. I run out of the tent and with consternation in my eyes I presented myself before the Shah! "Your Majesty! There is no use! We have almost killed {{p14}} him under Bastonads but he does not reveal anything. On the contrary! He sings!" "Go!", the Shah said, "he must divulge the names of his accomplices or he will be put to death." I returned to my tent. I ordered my servants to prepare a great fire in the large braziers, and many iron rods and bricks brought in. The rods and bricks were put in the midst of the burning coal till they got as red as fire. Then I addressed Badi: If thou dost not reveal the names of thy friends, thy whole body will be branded with these fiery spikes and bricks. Thou must, beside, confess that thou hast brought a “petition” for the Shah and not a “Firman”. I thought that these means of torture will so frighten him that he will confess without any further difficulty. But he astonished me when he said: “I have brought a”Firman” for {{p15}} the Shah and not a “petition”. All my life I have been longing for the realization of this day. Whatever torture you heap upon me, you must know of a certainty that it is not torture but it is the greatest of all the divine Gifts. I am ready Sir. Well, we started to brand his breast, his hands, his feet. Yet he did not flinch, he did not show any sign of pain. He was not even perturbed. His face was peaceful his heart was strong. Oh! Merciful Allah! Is there nothing in this world to make this youth suffer? The room was filled with the smoke and the odour of his burning flesh. I could not stand the sight and the smell any longer. I came out for a moment to breathe the fresh air. {{p16}} Going in after a few minutes, in my blind anger I took out of the fire the red hot spike and branded his back and front and run it through his body, here and there. No! He was completely insensible to pains. He did not feel any torture. When the executioners would get tired, lo and behold he would take with his own hand one of the red spikes and put it on his body. Under all these excruciating sufferings he laughed, he was really happy, he chanted some Arabic prayers. We were simply awe-struck! This young man must be invincible, a veritable Rustan! At this juncture the Shah passed by the tent and called for me. “Kazem Khan” the Shah said “has the young man confessed?” “No” I answered “We have {{p17}} inflicted upon him the worst kinds of tortures, but they have made no effect whatever upon him. He does not even condescend to say that he has brought a”petition” for his Majesty; all the time he says “I have brought the Firman from my Lord”. Then the Shah said: “He must either tell the names of his friends or he dies.” Then I returned again to the tent and ordered the Farrashes to bring a big piece of log. I asked him to put his head on the log which he did willingly. Then I put a heavy bludgeon in the hand of one of the Farrashes, told him to raise it in the air and stand over his head. Then I addressed him: Young man {{p18}} if thou dost not desire to divulge the names of thy friends, all right; at least say I have brought a “petition” for his Majesty and not a Firman. Then thou will be made free. “Free!” in exasperation he cried out. “Do not talk to me about freedom! I am free, I am the freest man in the world.” All my life I have been yearning for this day, for this hour. Now that this Chalice of divine felicity is made ready, it is not unjust that I may heedlessly let it pass by without drinking it! I tell you Sir, for the last time thou I have brought the “Firman of my Lord and not a petition”. Then I made a sign to the man with his raised mace to do his work and with the first and second strike his head was splintered and life flew out of {{p19}} his body. A report of what transpired was submitted to the Shah and he in turn commanded me to bury his remains secretly which I did that very hour. Such was the story of the Martyrdom of Badi as related to my father and myself by Kazem Khan himself after eight days of acts of superhuman tortures. One of the strangest things, however is that Kazem Khan and his whole family were entirely destroyed afterwards and no trace of them is left in Persia. This was the wonderful story of the martyrdom of Badi as heard by me today related by Sepahdar Azam {{p20}} before our Beloved. Truly I say, I would travelled from America to Paris just to hear this story from the lips of a nobleman of Persia such as Sepahdar Azam!

After drinking tea and talking other topics the Master arose to depart. Rest thou assured he told him as his parting words, "that God will confirm and assist thee and as a sign of this, I will kiss both thy cheeks." Sepahdar likewise kissed the Blessed hands of the Beloved.

Coming out of the hotel a taxi cab was hired and a ride in the Bois was taken. On reaching a very large lake over which hundreds of ducks were riding gorgeously the Master came out and walked around it. Many trees in white blooms attracted his {{p21}} attention. Sayad Ahmad said it will be well if every day the Master could come out in the Park and inhale the breeze. He answered: Our air consists of the Breeze of the Providence of His Holiness Baha-wllah. If it wafts from the direction of Mercy, we are stirred with happiness; if not, not.

He stopped at Miss Sanderson to meet his daughter for awhile then he called on Mon. and Madame Dreyfus and come back to the hotel about three to meet Foad Effendi and a Frenchman. The Beloved spoke to them on the prophecies of the Holy Books concerning this day and how all the nations are expecting the coming of a promised one. In closing {{p22}} he told the Frenchman that the beginning of this movement is like the commencement of the Christian Dispensation. Just as they gave no importance to Christian Movement, in the same manner they may not give due importance to the Bahai Cause but its greatness become known later on.

At five o'clock, Mr. Cobb with other young American students came to see the Master. They were excellent men at the prime age. The Beloved welcomed them most cordially. One of them said that they have heard much about the Bahai Movement from Mr. Cobb and they think it a great privilege to find themselves in the Presence of Abdul Baha. Abdul Baha said that he was likewise most pleased to meet them, that this Cause has become worldwide. In a short space of time it has permeated throughout all the regions {{p23}} for it has a magnetic power which attracts all the intelligent men and women toward its center. Were a person be informed with the reality of this Cause he would believe in it; for these teachings are the Spirit of this age. The Bahai Movement imparts life. It is the Cause of love and amity amongst mankind. It establishes communication between various religions and different nations. It removes all out agonism. Therefore when this Cause is full, spread in Europe, warfare will be a thing of the past, universal Peace will be realized, the oneness of the world of humanity will be practised, religion and science will work hand in hand. Then these various human families will become one family. There will remain {{p24}} no racial distinction such as French, English, American, German, Arab, Turk and Persian. They will become all one. The Bahai Movement bestows upon man a new spirit, a new light and a new motion. It enlarges the sphere of thought. It illumines the horizon of the intellect. It expands the arena of comprehension. This world is like unto an egg. As long as man lives within the shell of the egg he cannot soar heaven word. All the nostrils are afflicted with cold and they cannot inhale the sweet fragrances. All the eyes are blind and they cannot see the rays of the sun of Reality. In brief, the Master talked at length about the intellectual and spiritual powers {{p25}} latent in man and in what manner was man enabled to bring under his contract all the phenomena of nature through this god-given power and how through this heavenly power Divine Avilization will be established. After the meetings they asked questions and received satisfactory answers. Then tea was served and when they left the Master they were all inspired with the noblest ideals of brotherhood. His last words to them was “I hope each one of you be as luminous as this electric light” and unconsciously they all turned their eyes and looked at the globe of light!

Dear Harriet!

For the last few days the Master had been able to devote one hour every morning to answering the letters which were pouring in from every direction. These hours were and were will ever be to me the most saved and the most beautiful. It was never later than 6am when I found myself with him alone in his room. It was the hour of the revelation of Teachings and the descent of Manna from heaven. I had my pen and paper ready and then the Nightingale of the Holy-Spirit sung in celestial harmonies and divine melodies. he touched all the invisible keys of spiritual music, his voice changing to the unseen chords of life. Now he sung a note of consolation; then he struck a key of authority; again he soared toward the imperial realm of Light bringing back to us the glorious possibilities of divine Civilization. As he revealed the Tablets he either sat in a chair, wrap up in divine contemplation, with his eyes shut or he walked back and forth impelled by the power of the Holy-Spirit. The words of light and life flowed from his silvery lips like a rushing river; for the parched ground of humanity was ready to be irrigated with this pure water which was descending like unto the torrent from the Mountains of God. For one hour or more without being disturbed by anyone the Beloved dictated these Tablets to various parts of the world and at every instance showing his foresight, wisdom, knowledge and perseverance.

Then he took my writing and went over every Tablet correcting or adding a few words here and there with his own blessed hand. Then he gave them to Mirza Mahmoud to copy them. When they were ready he turned them to me. I translated them into English and took them to him to be mailed. The Beloved would read again every Tablet and if any word was left out he added it with his own hand or called Mirza Mahmoud to do it the same addition or correction to be made by me in the translation. Then he sealed with his signet ring the upper right corner of the Tablet and signed the lower left hand both in English and Persian. Then with his own hands he closed the envelope ready to be mailed either by one of the secretaries or myself. The Tablet for the East are taken by Mirza Mahmoud right to the Master and after going through the same process- of course without any English signatures- they are given by the Beloved to Sayad Assadullah to mail them to their various destinations.

{{p3}}

At 8:30 this morning several young French men came and had an interview with the Beloved on philosophy and religion. Then he went out with Food Effendi to Miss Sanderson. Two interesting things that I heard today were first the story of the daily life of Baha-Ullah from Mirza Jalal and the personal experiences of Doctor Ahmad Khan who had come from London to see the Master. This latter is a Bahai and has made years of study in Arabic and Persian literatures and graduated from Parisian and London schools. He is very intelligent and learned. When he was eight years old, his father being a Bahai, made him memorize long Tablets of Baha-Ullah and Abdul Baha. He did not know what they were but his memory was so extraordinary that he could recite for hours. For several years he studied Arabic, law etc in Mohamadan Universities and at the age of fourteen he was graduated as a prodigy ; one of his difficult mental recreations being to recite from the end to the beginning of a poem containing one thousand verses in Arabic. Then he comes to Paris and after three years of study went to London. He has been there for three years pursuing.

{{p1}}

Dear Harriet!

The fall of Adrianople and the tragic cyclone and hurricane in Ohio and Indiana with their direful consequent results have saddened the heart of the Beloved of the world. His heart weeps over the sufferings of our brothers and sisters both in America and in the Orient. You can never realize how sad and sorry he was over the terrific disaster and deluge which we read is appealing in the history of America since the foundation of Republic. If his own country was stormed with a calamity like unto this he could not feel more sad. Oh! It is dreadful and heart-breaking to read the news in the New York Herald and other French newspaper of the perfectly diabolic devastation by the general overflow of the waters and the breaking of reservoirs; the famine, the cold and impossibilities of sending relief. This morning in his room he prayed for the sufferers. His heart was swelling with sympathy and although he was far away from the scenes of destruction yet it was as though he was in their midst.

As regards to the fall of Adrianople into the hands of the Bulgars the Master said: Fifty years ago Baha-Ullah prophesized: Adrianople shall go out of the hand of the Sultan and today that prophecy is fulfilled. This is one of the greatest proofs of the Blessed Perfection .what all the prophecies that he has made concerning the future events have come to pass. Yet people are sleep and do not comprehend the wonders of this Revelation.

A few Persians came in to see him and the surrender of Constanipole was discussed. The Beloved said: It is evident that negligence from God brings a nation to this path; lack of sound administration throws people into such defeats. If the Turks were watchful of their interests, a thousand years may have passed without losing any of their domains. But they were sleep and spent their times in the pursuit of pleasures. They were steeped in the sea of self. They never thought of the preservation of the rights of their Motherland.

Madame Scott with an American woman and her 7 year-old boy were led into his Presence. As soon as the boy came in, the Master called to him and taking him in arms hugged him close to his breast and kissed him many times. His mother was very happy to see the Master showering so much love upon her boy and she wept the tears of joy. Then he took from the mantel piece two oranges and gave them to the child, he also filled his two pockets with almonds. It was a very lovely sight to see the Beloved stooping down to the size of the child and filling his pockets. He told the mother to give a good education to her son and speak with him always about God so that his eyes may behold the rays of the Sun of Reality and his ears may hearken the melody of the Supreme Concourse.

After this he went out to Miss Sanderson returning several times each time to meet some people who had gathered here. According to what I hear we will be leaving soon for Stuttgart but nothing definite yes. The German Bahais are waiting patiently. They have been disappointed so many times.

I hear that an operation will be performed on the Master's daughter's throat. The specialists have discovered the source of her sickness and have assured us that she will get well after the operation.

{{p4}}

The Master ate today with us at the table. He had invited Doctor Ahmad Khan and a few others to dine with him and he spoke at length on the majesty and glory of Baha-Ullah even when in the prison of Acca . Right after his rest he went to Miss Sanderson and we did not see him till 9 o'clock. He came home at night with Food Effendi and cooking in his own room some eggs we had supper with him. At that hour Mon. and Madame Dreyfus came in and stayed a long time, the Master reading to them as he read to us in the afternoon some of the funny and fantastic writings of Subhe Azal. These writings are all childish and full of mistakes and meaningless.

{{p1}}

Dear Harriet!

It is now nearly four months that Abdul Baha has left the “new world” carrying with himself the fresh Breeze of the Kingdom of Abha, diffusing everywhere the Fragrances of the Rose garden of Reality, singing the rapturous melodies of the angelic spheres, playing divinely on the lyre of the Supreme Concourse, heralding the glad-tidings of the dawn of the sun of universal Religion, promulgating the underlying principles of the heavenly Faiths, spreading the effective Breaths of the Holy-Spirit, teaching the doctrine of spiritual brotherhood, unveiling the Beauty of then Love of God, interpreting the life of selflessness and sanctification, unfolding the path of the knowledge of God, preparing the highway of humanity, painting out the exalted destiny of the children of man and expounding the lofty ideal of the solidarity of human race and the fundamental unity of all phenomenon. Throughout all his private and public talks he has struck one divine note: One people. One nation. One language. One religion. One Faith. One Brotherhood. This is the age of unity and the drawing together of the nations of the earth. This is the country of the manifestation of the heavenly radiance. This is the day of God. This is the period of the Lord of Mankind. This is the Dispensation of Spiritual love. We must forget our prejudices. We must work for the Cause of universal Peace. We must serve our fellow men, irrespective of sect or nationality. We must practice charity and loving kindness. We must overlook the faults of others. We must gird up the loin endeavor and exert ourselves so that this dark world may become illumined, the satanic characters may become angelic and the earthly souls may be transformed into heavenly beings.

This morning the news of American cyclone and flood again made him sad and I read to hi the dispatches giving the description of the tragic events and the appalling loss of life he face was the embodiment of divine sympathy and spiritual consolation. Then he asked Mirza Mahmoud to chants the prayers of Baha-Ullah in behalf of these departed ones. As he chanted the wonderful communes of the Blessed Perfection, all of us prayed from our hearts and souls for America at this hour of her misfortune and suffering! When the prayer was finished the Beloved as though coming from the world of light said: Although outwardly these cataclysmal disaster are hard to bear yet inwardly there lies a great wisdom behind them which will appear later. All the visible, material events are inter-related with invisible, spiritual forces. The infinite phenomena of creation are interdependent with each other as the many links in a chain. When certain links become rusty they are broken by unseen forces to be replaced by newer and better ones. On the other hand, there are certain colossal events which transpire in the world of humanity, which colossal events are required by the nature of the time. For example, the requirement of winter, snow, storm, hail, rain etc. We cannot call a winter a winter unless these events do come to pass. But the birds or the animals whose span of life is only for six months or a year cannot realize the wisdom of the winter; they chide and lament and are discontented. They raise a howl saying: Why this winter? Why this awful frost? Why this hail and storm? Why not the balmy weather? Why not eternal spring time? Why this injustice on the part of the Creator? Why this suffering? What have we done to be meted out with this catastrophe? However those souls who have lived many years and have had much experiences and weathered many severe winters, they realize that in order to enjoy the coming spring they must have this cold winter. The bird living only this month does not know there is a spring. Man alone knows that after every hard winter, the spring with its thousand vary-colored flowers will bloom forth. After the velocity of the gale the soul-refreshing breeze will waft. After the sterility and apparent death; fertility and life will manifest. After the hurricane and storm, quietness and calmness will reign. After the silence of the birds in winter they will all break forth into joyous songs of spring. Now the wisdom of this American disaster is not known to the many people of this generation, because they are too much absorbed in the immediate sufferings and hardships that it has brought in its train. When the flood is subside and people shake off the temporary gloom, they will then realize that after this destruction, there is construction; after this suffering there will be blessing; after this death there will be life; after this darkness there will be light; after this loss there will be profit; after this devastation there will be up building; after this havoc there will be prosperity; after this failure there will be success and after this war of elements there will be glorious peace and greater civilization.

Mr. E.W. Moore an American, the cousin of Doctor Moody arrived from London on his way to Budapest and had an interview with the Beloved. He is a merchant in Budapest and has been there for the last five years. He has become interested in the Movement through Doctor Moody and has become a Bahai on account of the teaching of universal language and universal religion because in Budapest alone there is a babel of languages and religions and people always quarreling over these petty misunderstandings. The Master told him: These Bahai teachings were for the unification of the human race, and the freedom of man from superstitions. He hoped he will become the cause of the illumination of the city of Budapest. He saw in Mr. Moore's face the light of reality and this was the sign of the purity of his heart. In this day the world of humanity was very dark. Warfare was destroying the foundation of man's edifice and the false ideas of patriotism, as taught on the leaders of nations today did more harm to the body politic than anything else. He must make the utmost effort so that this hatred be abolished from amongst the people.

Abdul Baha said that he loved Doctor Moody very much. she was a sincere believer, assured and faithful. In Teheran she was very happy amongst the friends of God and she was serving the people and the cause most whole-heartedly.

{{p4}}

Mr. Moore asked about the probable visit of the Master to Budapest. He did not give any definite answer. He was not yet decided whether Budapest and Vienna will be included in his itinerary. I gave him the address of one of the friends in Budapest to go and call on him on his arrival. When the time of departure come the Master kissed his two cheeks and showed him much love.

Mrs. Hieston in whose apart, the Master spoke a few weeks ago was ushered into the room of the Beloved. She was disturbed about her affairs in America and begged him to pray for her.

{{p5}}

Speaking about his long stay in Paris the Master said: We are now caught here. We do not like to stay one day longer but so many events have come up all the time to postpone our departure. He said that his spirit was not at ease here, otherwise all the means of physical comfort were present. The unrest of the spirit was a thousand times worse than the unrest of the body. If a person passed by a city or town and whaled the Fragrances of the Merciful from the whalictants he might stay for sometimes there, even if it was a small place. Many other people came to see him and he received all with gentleness, love and spiritual courtesy.

About 11 o'clock he went to Miss Sanderson to look over the final arrangements of transferring Rouhanieh Khanom to a hospital or "Maison de Saute" when the operation will be made. she was taken to the hospital toward the evening and immediately the Master went to see how she was situated . The operation will be made tomorrow morning and she may have to stay there from two week to three weeks.

He returned for lunch to our place. Miss Hodgson and Miss Fraser and Madame D'Astre were at the table. Mirza Jalal also will stay at this hotel during the time that Rouhanieh Khanom will be at the "Maison de Saute".

In the afternoon a French poet come to see the Master and he spoke to him thus: Man must spend his talent in a cause the result of which was eternal. If we spent our talent in the cause of God its outcome will be everlasting, but if we waste it over worldly affairs, it was like drawing pictures over the surface of the water. For example if he wrote a book, it may perpetuate his name for a thousand or 2000 years and it will be forgotten afterwards. But if he breathed one breath in the path of God, it will immortalize him through him throughout ages and cycles. If he composed a poem or wrote a book on the Cause of God they will bring forth eternal fruits. Therefore man must devote his talents to such causes which spell service to the Kingdom of God. Consequently let him consecrate his poetic imagination to the cause of God. The end of all these undertaking that you observe is ruin except service to the Kingdom of Abha. Every building that man construct will be destroyed some day except the palace of the cause of God. The palace built by Christ is and will ever be indestructible, likewise the mansions of his apostles. Now Abdul Baha desired that he may likewise lay the foundation of such a palace which will stand the attack of the accidents of all time. He was sure that God will confirm and assist him.

Miss Beatrice Irwin visited the Beloved and he told her that she was good Bahai that in reality her heart was attracted toward God and her whole desire was to serve the Cause of God. The first day that he met her he observed in her face the signs of the love of God and he prayed in her behalf. From God he begged for her assistance and confirmation so that in the city of Paris she may become a green tree whose fruits may be enjoyed by all the people; that she may become a fragrant flower whose perfume may be inhaled by all the nostrils; that she may obtain an illumined heart and a spirit rejoiced with divine glad-tidings and that she may arise to serve the Cause of God with the power of sanctity and holiness.

{{p9}}

After meeting a few important Persians and discussing with them the fall of Adrianople as prophesied by Baha-Ullah fifty years ago, Mr. Cobb and a Turkish friend arrived. The Master spoke at length on the peculiar Sect of Baktashi, pointing out their two distinctive dispositions. One being on friendly term with all the people and religions and the other harboring no prejudices against any religion. Then he spoke on the uninterrupted descent of the Grace of God, that there was no suspension in his bounty, that he has ever been the Creator and has always sent his prophets.

{{p10}}

Mr. Cobb asked whether there will be any clergy in the Bahai Cause? Immediately the Beloved said: No. And continued: in this movement there will never be any paid ministers, no appointed clergy, no bishops, no cardinals, no popes, no ceremonies. A clergy, assuming that he is ordain to his ministry thinks that he knows more about God, while in reality the humble unordained man in his congregation or in the street may know more. The sacerdotal and theological position makes many a clergy proud and haughty! But there is one thing in this cause. Some people may become greater than the rest not through appointment but through the purity of their hearts, their unselfish deeds, their heroic sacrifices and their knowledge of God. Such illumined souls like unto the kind fathers or teachers will guide and teach those less fortunate. They are the elder brothers of the members of the community. They do not arrogate unto themselves any title or any position. You will know them by their humility, sincerity, deeds, severance, knowledge spirituality and attraction.

Another question was asked by someone present about marriage relations, whether there will be any modifications. He said that there are two relations between man and wife, one real, the other unreal. The real relation which is based upon spiritual love and companionship will ever remain the same; the other relation which is unreal will be done away with. The love between man and wife must ever be kept sacred and holy. Marriage was necessary. It was a command of God. Humanity was continued through the practice of this law but the life in the family must be loved as an art soul-elevating so that the children may breathe the uncontaminated atmosphere of joy and the love of their parent may be a great example to them.

Someone asked about divorce. He said that when there exists incompatibility of temper and complete antipathy between the man and wife, then divorce was permitted. For if they live together under such stifling conditions it will be worse than hell.

Another person asked about the future of the science of aviation and the master promptly answered: The science of aviation will make great progress in the immediate future and people will travel at ease from one city to another without any danger. Aeroplanes will become as popular as automobiles. Just as now every well-to-do person has an automobile then he will have an aeroplane. Although for the present it is not yet perfected but ere long it will be within the reach of everyone to have a ride through the air.

The Beloved went out with Doctor Mohamad Khan to call on Ahmad Pasha. Mirza Lotfollah and myself took a walk as far as the other side of Eiffel Tower. I have been so busy that for the last few days I have not been out of the hotel so this half an hour walk turned me up. It is wonderful how the spirit and the Presence of the Master keep one working for hours without feeling any fatigue.

The news of the Cause from the Orient are inspiring. Hundreds of letters are received from all parts of the world giving the news of the progress of the Cause and the attraction of the Souls to the Kingdom of Abha.

{{p1}}

Dear Harriet!

I may just as well begin this day with a few quotations from the recent utterances of Our Beloved:

##On Universal Religion

“Praise be to God that the Sun of Universal Religion hath dawned. From all parts of the world host after host enter under its Radiance. Ere long it will become worldwide.”

##On Universal Patriotism

“Every high-soaring bird does not attach its heart to its low nest and abode. At every morn it sings a new melody in a rose-garden and at every eve it warbles the strains of Divine mysteries in a new meadow. At one time it rises above the summit of the green mountains and again it flies spreading its imperial wings over deserts and plains. Now it breaks into ideal harmonies and again chanting sweetly the secrets of God. It does not wish home and comfort nor seek after nest and abode. It is intoxicated with the wine of the Love of God, singing at all time the anthems and praises of the Almighty. This is the custom of the heavenly birds. This is the manner and conduct of the nightingales of the rose-garden of the Merciful.”

{{p3}}

##On the Covenant

“Today firmness in the Covenant is the means of the promotion of the word of God and conducive to the effect of the word of the teacher.”

##On spreading the Cause

“Today whosoever arises to herald the Kingdom of Abha, a magnetic power will be produced which shall attract the rays of Confirmation; the hosts of the Supreme Concourse will make him victorious and the power of the Holy Spirit will support and assist him.”

{{p5}}

##On the Ministers of the Church

“In this world millions of Ministers have been ordained but the majority of them have been useless and atrophied organs. They left behind neither a fruit nor a trace except living a few limited days, walking in the paths of their own egos and gratification of their own desires and at last bidding farewell to this ephemeral world, leaving behind no trace. But praise be to God that thou art confirmed, thou hearkened to the Call of the Kingdom, thou art informed with the teachings of Baha-Ullah, the doors of the Kingdom are opened before Thy face and Eternal Life hath become manifest. Therefore strive that in this world and in the world of the Kingdom, thou mayst deposit a treasury and leave behind a trace and a result; so that day unto day thou mayst become more favored in the divine Threshold and be classed as one of the most faithful and sincere servants of His Holiness Baha-Ullah.”

##Spiritual Discovery

“I beg of God that thou mayst discover the stars of the Kingdom of Abha, behold the zodiacal towers on the world on High, unfold the secrets of God and worship a Sun which never sets in the horizon and its rays are the mysteries of phenomena.”

{{p7}}

This morning the Master called me very early. As I entered in his holy presence I saw him sitting on the floor praying at the Threshold of the Almighty. He asked me about Mon. Dreyfus' meeting last night. I answered that a large number of people were present and eagerly inquired about his health and were disappointed not to see him. Mon. Dreyfus read paragraph from the words of Paradise and elucidating them as he went along. Then Mr. Cobb gave a most instructive talk on how he became a Bahai, how he found the position of Ministry untenable for which position he was fitting himself in Howard Divinity College. “Imagine” he said “a young man without any experience in life but simply because he was graduated from a theological seminary, rises in the pulpit before a large audience in the church, the majority of the members of which are much older and have had more experiences in life and tries to tell them how to live such a position in this enlightened age is to say the least, not very enviable. Then I thought I will write to Abdul Baha and ask his advice. He wrote me back ‘it is much better if you can gain your livelihood through another source’ ”.

{{p8}}

The Beloved called other Persians and after drinking tea he spoke to us with much animations against habitual gambling and drinking reciting the stories of men who have wrecked their lives through such evil practices. He said that praise be to God we have no such things in this Cause. It is pure and entirely free from these blemishes.

A few people came to see him. We asked about his health. He said: I am under the protection and preservation of God. God looks after me. He guards me against any danger. Sometimes he comes and caresses me. He kisses my lips and touches my back. He talks with me in the midnight and wakes me in the morning. Throughout the cities and over the seas, in the mountains and valleys God has been my close companion and intimate friend. In the time loneliness he consoles me. When I am alone He calls me by my name. He has never forgotten me and will never forget me. He is my faithful friend. His friendship sustains me. His love inspires me. His tenderness watches over me and His affection hovers like unto a white dove around me.

{{p10}}

Miss Fraser going into his divine presence asked whether the manifestation of God was ever sad? The Master said: Yes! But his sadness did not come from anything belonging to himself. He desired to make a many illumined but more preferred darkness; this made the manifestation sad. He wished to change the ignorance of the people into knowledge; their error into guidance; their insincerity into sincerity; their faithlessness into faithfulness, but people preferred the latter qualities and so the manifestation of God was made sad and unhappy over the heedlessness and negligence of those sleepy “souls”.

{{p11}}

She asked: “Will the Master visit again America?” He said that if much result were witnessed as the outcome of his first trip, if many harvests were gathered after the first sowing of the seeds then, God willing he will go.

{{p12}}

Madame Sacy and her three daughters came to see the Beloved. He was most kind to them. He said that he loved Mon. Sacy and he loved all his family. They are considered as his own family. In the future their grandchildren will glorify because they belonged to a family, the first one of which harbored the Love of Baha-Ullah in his heart. Addressing the eldest girl he said: He saw already her children glorifying in this. She could not see now but he saw them. To each, he gave a gold piece as souvenirs. They left his heavenly presence with their hearts overflowing with love.

{{p13}}

Four other ladies arrived. They have lived in London for many years and know Lady Bloomfield well. The Beloved received them with his heavenly courtesy and opened his remarks by saying: So they were the friends of Lady Bloomfield. No doubt she had informed them with these teachings. he loved Lady Bloomfield very much because all her efforts were directed toward spreading the glad-tidings of the Kingdom. She had no other thought outside the Kingdom of God and she will be very much blessed. He hoped they will become informed of the Mysteries of the Love of God. These heavenly possibilities he desired for them.

One asked how should they come into closer relation with God? The Master answered: Any soul entering the Kingdom of Baha-Ullah will enjoy an eternal communism with God. It was his hope that each one of them become thirsty for the water of Reality. May they become hungry for the Bread of the Kingdom! It was in this instance that His Holiness Christ said: He that drinketh of this water shall never thirst! This means the infinite Bestowels of God, the virtues of the Divine world, the perfections of the world of humanity and the ideals of the heavenly realm. May they receive day unto day these bounties. May they draw nearer unto God day unto day! May they be submerged in the sea of these iridescent lights! May they be characterized with these praiseworthy virtues! This is the ultimate result of human life! This is the fruit of existence!

This is the brilliant pearl of cosmic consciousness! This is the shining star of spiritual destiny!

To another person he said: Did she say that she was from England? In reality we are all one nation - England. France, Germany, Persia, America, they are all one country. However, thus much can be said. It often happened that the inhabitants of a given country were more receptive to truth than other parts. Since we have arrived in France, there has been much interest in the Bahai Cause but not as much as in England or in America. While in London many people were attracted and large meetings were organized. The English people were sincere, truth-loving, determined and seekers of reality. They were thirsty after knowledge. They explored the furthest ends of the earth in order to throw light upon puzzling problems. They were a determined, persevering nation. They were enterprising and investigators of reality. In the immediate future, much interest will be aroused in France about the Bahai Cause. They will see that there were so many Bahais in other parts and they will follow their example.

He was most pleased to have met all of them. He will pray in this behalf that the heavenly powers may descend upon them, that each one of them may come under the guidance of God.

{{p16}}

He took his lunch in the general dining room. The dishes were prepared especially by the household of one of the Turkish Pasha residing now in Paris and sent for him. He was sleep yet when at the kind invitation of Miss Fraser and with the permission of the Master, seven of the Persians with Miss Hodgson and herself sailed out on the sight-seeing tour in a Cook and Sons automobile. The car took us through the principal streets and oversees, the guide pointing out each historical building or church, telling us in what century they have been built etc. We visited several buildings and churches and Pantheon. I admired very much the large windows of a church constructed in the 13th century. They were remarkable for their beauty, combination of colors. It was about half past five when we returned home, our minds becoming a little store houses of pleas and memories. On our way the car stopped at a famous cafe for several minutes and again Miss Fraser insists that we must drink a cup of tea. The Persians were most grateful to her in giving them such a lovely recreation and sight-seeing experience which could not be done without her gentle and loving hospitality.

Coming home we met the Master just arrived from the "Mansion de Saute", praying a visit to Rouha Khanom who was rapidly recovering from the effect of operation on her thirst.

{{p17}}

One of the birds of England in writing a letter to the Master and expressing his pleasure in seeing him while in London makes the following significant remark:

“I believe the religion you teach and practice will be the foundation of future universal Faith; for people must come to learn that the Kingdom of God is amongst them.”

Love to all.

{{p1}}

Dear Harriet!

Miss Beatrice Irwin, our new English Bahai who has been staying in Paris during the last month has composed a lovely poem called “New years greeting’s for our Persian sisters dedicated to Nou Rouz March 21st 1913”. It is as follows:

“Beloved sisters in the rose garden of Persia, On this, the first day of the year, we send greetings! Spiritual light and fragrance has come to us from your land, The New Moon of a new faith, floats above the ocean of truth across whose depths It lays a silver path, On which our souls are thronging joyous by toward you, No longer do seas and continents divide us, The white winged messenger of unity and Peace has alighted in our midst, And we speed back that message tinged With the dawn of our awakening, Anointed with attar of our thanksgiving! O sisters! In the throne-room of the Sun, You whose beauty has cast a spell across the centuries, For you as for us a new day is dawning. At the altar of love, let us meet and clasp hands, And lay therein the lamp of burning And the rose of faith, Interwoven as blossoms in one garland, Be our prayers of gratitude. For the freedom that is coming to us Daily in fuller measure, As we realize the inner meaning of this divine message of Unity, That rids us of limitations of casts, creed, distance and education. This message that merges the music of a myriad waves Into one echo of the blessed name! Beloved sisters! A new moon floats above the ocean of truth, Oh! By the guidance of its light Tearless, may we fare forth!”<<

Today Mirza Davoud Youhanna of London, the translator of the mysterious forces of civilization arrived and immediately had a long interview with the Beloved. He inquired about the health of all the friends in London. Referring to the spread of the Cause in London he said: The enjoyment of the world of humanity comes through spiritual Bestowals and not material luxuries. When he was in London he was very happy because the people were receptive and investigators of reality.

{{p3}}

The two points about which the Master talked with the Persians under various forms in these days were the fall of Adrianople and the predictions of Baha-Ullah fifty years ago as well as the fantastic and entirely meaningless writings of Sobhi Azul. The extracts he read are taken from the books of Subhi Azul, now catalogued in the British museum. They are supposed to be in Arabic but so full of mistakes, so overflowing with repetitions that are really ridiculous. I wonder how the man could ever write such rubbish. I tried to translate one line of it and I found it is impossible because the words have no meaning at all. A madman in an insane asylum speaks much more coherently and consentingly. Mirza Dawound is a very intelligent, lovely Bahai, full of connection and sweetness. He has studied a great deal and has served and is now serving the Cause very efficiently in London. The Master also loves him very much. He is going to bring a number of his friends tomorrow to see the Beloved.

{{p4}}

Being Sunday many people came to be blessed by the Master. Amongst them there was a Frenchman of unusual attainment and capacity. When he entered the room the Beloved was writing. He raised his noble head and welcomed the newcomer. He told him that: Just as that moment he was thinking of him. He was most welcomed. Let him be happy for he has heard the Call of the Kingdom of Abha. This is indeed a great privilege! Its importance is not known at this time. It will become evident in the future. The Apostles of Christ attained to the greatest station in life, yet they were vilified and scorned in their days because they were followers of the humble Nazarene and thus considered as the most despised and ignorant! But now the brilliant lights of their stations have flooded the whole world with knowledge and wisdom. Each one of the Apostles is shining like unto a star from the horizon of Eternal Glory. Now it has become evident to what a glorious station they reached in their own days! Likewise no one can adequately express the greatness of the station of the friends of God in their Dispensation. The glorious possibilities of this station will become manifest in the future. It is Abdul Baha's hope that in Paris the Frenchmen may become ignited like unto a candle and arouse the people with the Call of God- so that in reality they may become Bahais and practice the Teachings of Baha-Ullah. He was made most happy to have seen him because in his face he saw the light of the Love of Baha-Ullah! He will give him a ring over which the name of the Blessed Perfection is engraved. He loved him very much. Later the greatness of Abdul Baha's love for him will become clear. He expected to hear good news from him that his heart is so illumined and that he has guided many souls in Paris.

{{p5}}

Two other Bahais entered in his Presence. He told them: They must become fully informed with these Teachings. It was very good to be thoroughly informed with science or arts or literature likewise they must be established in the Kingdom of God. The results of material sciences were limited. They train only the physical man. That is why His Holiness Christ said: Love thy net. Come and I will make thee the fisher of man. The results of the divine science, the guidance of God, the spiritual Arts are unlimited and train the real man. His spirit communicates with them. It annihilates space and time. There are some believers in Persia with whom his spirit always speaks but he has never seen them.

{{p6}}

Another friend just arrived from London! At her entrance the Master exclaimed! Oh! She was here? She was very welcome! How was she? How were the friends in London? Did she meet them? Were they happy? Were they spreading the glad-tidings of the Kingdom? Were their tongues engaged in the Commemoration of God? Were they full of zeal? Did they comfort the unhappy ones? Did they raise the fallen? Were they kind to all the people of the world? Did they serve the Cause of universal Peace and good will amongst nations? Did they sympathize with the fortunate? Were they the stars of the heaven of Baha? Were they the weaves of the Most Great Sea? Were they illumining the dark path of the travelers? Were they the bright torches of Reality? When she is returning to London let her convey to them his longing and greeting and tell them that Abdul Baha loves those friends of God for they are faithful Bahais; they are from in the Covenant; they are the sincere servants of His Highness Baha-Ullah; they are calling the people to the Kingdom of God. Abdul Baha was extremely pleased with them. They must not rest by day and by night! They must strive to illumine the hearts children of men! Awaken the souls! This is not the day of silence! This is not the day of rest! Each one of them in this day must become a crier of the Kingdom of Abha a herald of the glad-tidings of the Supreme Concourse. Each one must become attracted and enkindled! God willing the Confirmations of God shall descend upon the uninterruptedly. He shall never forget them and will ever pray for them.

The Beloved took his lunch with us, He spoke few words at the table. In the afternoon Persians, Americans and Parisians came one after another and the table of spiritual Feast was spread, each person eating according to his hunger. At five o'clock Sapahdor called and a long discussion was followed on the subject of the fall of Adrianople and Persian problem. Abdul Baha said that 50 years ago a journalist wrote an article ridiculing the Cause, saying, this God of Acca had predicted the fall of Adrianople, while in reality the Forts of that city are impregnable. Where is that journalist now come and see how this prophecy was fulfilled.

The Master in company with Mirza Jalal, Doctor Mohamad Khan and Food

Effendi went to call on Rouha Khanom in the “Maison de Saute” and from there he called on Mon. and Madame Dreyfus and arrived at the hotel about 9:30. He took his dinner in his own room.

Mirza Dawood Youhanna had brought the copy of a Tablet to Haji Ameen which was revealed by Abdul Baha when he left Paris for Persia. It's original was in the Master's own handwriting. It is a very wonderful Tablet and I will close this day's communicate with its translation.

He is the Mighty! The Powerful! O thou Ameen of the Blessed Perfection! Praise be to God that thou hast covered the long distance and become my companion and associate in London and Paris. Many a night and day we spoke together and commemorated the mention of His Highness the Friend and the remembrance of the believers of God. The praises of the beloved ones were constantly upon our tongues and conducive to the joy and the fragrance of this Exiled on our mountains and plains and the Wanderer and Traveler over the lands and seas. Praise be to God that all the friends are the fragrant, laughing hundred-petalled roses in the garden of the Love of God and they are the hyacinths and anemones along the stream of Reality. Like unto the unshakable mountains and victorious, unfaded Banners they are firm and steadfast in the Cause of God.

O thou Ameen! Thou beholdest that I have neither time nor any opportunity for writing. Thou must beg pardon on my behalf from the friends of God; for in this journey correspondence was impossible and I was excused from writing letters to anyone. God willing, after the arrival in the Holy Land this broken thread will be resumed and the past will be amended!

O thou Ameen! Praise be to God that thou were assisted to mention the good names of all the friends and the maid-servants of the Merciful. All that thou hast said was right and in accord with facts. Truly I say, the believers of Persia are self-sacrificing in the path of God and each one of them is shining and scintillating like unto the luminous lamp. In the path of God they have accepted every hardship and gladly embraced every suffering, drinking the bitter cup with thanksgiving. Now they were thrown in the prison under the chains and anon were they threatened with death beneath the sharp sword. A number while dancing hastened toward the arena of martyrdom and unfurled their banners upon the Altar of Love. Their houses were pillaged, repined and devastated. These souls are fearless in the worlds of existence and these people are the sincere servants of the Blessed Perfection.

Now convey infinite longing on my behalf to all the friends of God and advise them that this is the time of spreading the Cause of God. They must consider how Abdul Baha, although bodily weak and infirm yet he is travelling over mountains and deserts. He does not rest one moment neither does he seek one second of tranquility by day and by night. In every gathering he raises his voice and in every meeting he cries out 'ya “Baha El Abha”. The friends of God must show an effort, scattered themselves in all directions and be engaged by day and by night in the guidance of the people; so that this world may become the paradise of Abha and the light of the most great guidance be ignited in the most transparent lamp for the Orient is the dawning place of the Sun of Reality and the planting ground of the Blessed Tree! Upon thee be Baha El Abha.

Dear Harriet!

At last the Stuttgart trip is in sight! Tomorrow morning at 9 o'clock we will leave by the North Station. So this is my last communication from Paris for this time. After a short stay in Stuttgart the Beloved will again return here. His present intention is to stay only a few days and then start for Syria. I am glad to have it so in order that the friends of other cities may enjoy the Presence of our Beloved. We have stayed almost seventy consecutive days in this city. I believe this is a great privilege for Paris and I hope its results will be correspondingly great. may the seeds sown in the hearts be watered by others so that they may grow into mighty tree, yielding delicious fruits at all times!

{{p2}}

This morning our dear sister Miss Beatrice Irwin had a very wonderful interview. The Beloved praised highly her practice nature and hoped she will grow day by day in this noble art of human expression. He hoped she will compose such poems as to inspire the hearts with great ideals and that they may be read throughout all ages. He said that she has great capabilities and through the Bounties of the Kingdom of Abha they will become realized. She read the following symbolic poem which was much admired by the Beloved. It was called "The Mount".

The Mount

O Mount! O blessed Mount afar, Beyond the Ken of mortal eyes, O Mount of Crystal! Source of streams, O Mount towards whom the moon doth turn, From whom the gold-seed of the sun cast on span, O throne! whose base is wreathed with "milky ways", Whose crevices are bright with the stars, O Mount! Beneath whose dome the universe and man Are clasped like hands in supplication, Stretching aye, towards thy faint, ineffable for dream, Of light and leaping waters, and or music That o'erflows oceans and continents and our small souls. O Mount! Whose summit is the source of streams That wind upon an endless course Through worlds seen and unseen, Worlds that like dewdrops gleam a fleeting space! Mount! Crystal Mount past Ken of mortal eyes! Oh let the trembling span of these bright atoms Be dissolved into the glory of Thy streams. The streams that spring from that for source.

That source past mortal Ken.<<

{{p3}}

The Master gave her a stove of the greatest name and the Persian name “Mehreban”. Besides he wrote a very inspiring prayer in her autograph book as follows: O Thou God, the Mehreban! Suffer Thy Mehreban to become the Cries of Heaven! Confer upon her spirituality and fragrance! Confirm her in eloquence and explanation so that she may become the cause of the guidance of the souls and become the manifestor of Thy Favor! Abdul Baha Abha!

{{p4}}

Before the arrival of Miss Irwin an English friend called on the Beloved. She said that the Master’s prayers and supplications in her behalf were all answered and she was now very happy and out of misfortunes and troubles. On her return to England she desired to have a weekly meeting in her apartment. The Beloved praised her efforts in the service of the Cause. He told her that whosoever with a contrite heart prays and begs from Baha-Ullah help and assistance he will be aided, even if he is sincere and whole-hearted in his prayers.

{{p5}}

At 10 o’clock, the friends of Mirza Dowond arrived Mon and Madame Moser. They have a wonderful palace in Switzerland in which they have collected a rare collection of Persian arms, ancient and modern. This museum is famous all over Europe. The man has published a very rare book with photographs of these arms. The book is in all the large libraries of European Capitals and his name is well-known everywhere. He has been much imbosed in the cause for the last few years and has done much service in Stuttgart. The Master’s talk with him and his wife covered a vast range of subjects and he is going to translate and publish it in a special pamphlet, so I do not need to repeat the same here. It will cover many pages and is most interesting and instructive. The Master in reality was going to have for Stuttgart today and he stayed especially to meet these important people. They went away very happy with the life giving words of the Beloved. Other people had interviews and all were sorry because the Beloved was going away.

About noon he called me and together we went to Miss Sanderson to say goodbye to her mother and herself. He was most eloquent in his praise of their services to him and to the Cause, cataloging the beautiful qualities of Miss Sanderson. He was so wonderful in his praise for her that anybody should be proud just to know her. The Master has often praised her attributes, her sincerity in the Cause, her beautiful spirit, her calmness, her sweetness of nature, her services but never have I heard him so wonderfully eloquent. He declared by Baha-Ullah, again he declared by Baha-Ullah that she was his real daughter that in his estimation, there was no difference between her and Rouha. Both were his real daughters. Does anyone in this world expects to hear a greater commendation from the Sacred lips of the Center of the Covenant?

Rouha Khanom is feeling much better and I think after tomorrow she will come out of the Maison de Saute and will be again with Miss Sanderson this time to recuperate. The Master was going to rent an apartment for her but neither Mrs. Sanderson nor Miss Sanderson would think of such a thing and at last he yielded them. Coming back, he sat at the table with the rest of the friends and ate his lunch most heartily. After his rest some letters were read to him from America and answers were revealed immediately.

at three o'clock two of the important princes of Persia called on him and they were most lovingly received in his own room. One of them said that he had rented an apartment in the same building that the Master was living on his first trip. The concierge finding that he was a Persian showed toward him extraordinary honor and asked him whether he belonged to the same nation that "Le maitre Abdul Baha" came. If so he was ready to serve him at all time. The concierge told to this prince that when the Beloved left the apartment last year one of the American friends went there and bought the special chain over which the Master often sat for seven hundred dollars. The Beloved spoke about America and its natural scenery, especially the mountains of Colorado looking up to the sky. Then because one of them had read in the American papers the account of the Beloved's address in the Jewish Synagogue, they asked about it and the Master spoke at length on this subject.

At five o'clock he told us to call an automobile and with Doctor Mahmoud Khan and Food Effendi he went to call for the last time on Rouha Khanom till after his return from Stuttgart.

He returned at 7 o'clock and Ahmad Pasha was waiting. For about half an hour he spoke with him and then he come up to his room.

He called Mirza Mahmoud and myself to his presence and spoke about the wonderful confirmation which will descend upon all those who arise with the deepest sincerity to teach the Cause of God.

Monsieur Dreyfus had sent us the railway tickets and in order to avoid any difficulty each one got his. The members of the part are Sayad Ahmad Bageroff, Mirza Mahmoud, Sayad Assadullah and your humble servant. My next communication from Stuttgart! Hurrah!

###HOTEL MARQUARDT H. & O. Marqurot STUTTGART April 1st, 1913

{{p1}}

Dear Harriet!

Praise be to God that after many days of expectation on the part of German Believers they are at last favored with the Presence of the Beloved. We arrived at 8pm and immediately took quarters in this hotel near the station. 'With joy and happiness we have arrived at Stuttgart. Abdul Baha's message was flushed to all parts of the Orient Paris, London, Newyork Washington, Chicago, San_Francisco etc.

Today we were p unusually early. Although I had arranged all my affairs - by affairs I mean my one satchel yet the joy of visiting the friends {{p2}} of another country made the heart pulsate quicker. France had more than its shore; now the Sun of the Covenant must dawn from another horizon and cast its rays upon other people. As our sojourn in Stuttgart will be short we are not going to take with us much baggage our trunks in the same hotel. Mirza Jalal will stay in Martha Pension. Mr. Fraser and Miss Hadjson came to see the Master. He told them we are leaving for Stuttgart. While there, we will be engaged in spreading the Cause of God. We are looking forward to raise the Call of the Kingdom {{p3}} in that city and to cry at the top of our voice. The friends must also travel around. If possible, as many of them as they can, they shored more from place to place; days here, 15 days there. Where we they go, they must cry the message of their Kingdom like unto him.

He will be with them always. Wherever they are his heart will be with them. Let them know this of a certainty. The Bahais spread around, and promote the glad_tiding of the Kingdom of Abba. Let them open their wings, and fly in the atmosphere of heavenly Teachings. Do they not sit silent. This is the day of speech. They must work' they must strive.

When he leaves Paris they Miss Fraser and Miss Hadjson and also leave for London and while there spent their time in calling the people to the Kingdom. Wherever they go they must teach the cause and speak about the Kingdom. Let them not spend their time in alter discussions. Let them dedicate then lives to the Cause. It is his hope that they may became heavenly, divine, spiritual, attracted, enkindled!

Mou and Madame Dreyfus and many Persians come to say goodbye and it was about 15 minutes after eight when we left the Hotel for the Gore de L'est. The Master went with Mou. Dreyfus in his auto and we got two taxis for ourselves and other friends.

{{p5}}

Arriving at the station I hurried ahead and got the seats for the Master. He and Ahmad Bageroff had first class tickets and the rest I'd class but we were all on the same train. At the station there were many Bahais with bouquets of flowers for the Master and the little girls with her mother to whom I have referred in other places. The Master loves this girl very much and she is also attached to him when he saw her he exclaimed the joy: Oh! my friend has come also to bid farewell. I am very glad!

Now he is in his comportment. His arms are full of flowers. He looks out of the window. His face is benign and smiling. His moving hands shower divine blessings upon the friends and then he utters his last words: I shall never forget you. You will be always in my memory. I leave you here as my own Souvenirs. May God assist and confirm you! My last advice to you is: Arise and the teaching of the souls! The train moves and slowly adds to its speed. We look out of the window, we see the weeping faces of the beloved, then hands are in the air, hats and handkerchiefs are waving and then only one turn, and they are shut off from our view and we find ourselves looking at the meadows, blooming trees, green valleys, cultivated fields, vast stretches of forests, happy, contented forming communities, busy industrial cities, rushing rivers large towers, and beautiful hills covered with blossoming trees all abloom! These latter affect from a distance as snow Capped mountains. Every now and then the Master gleefully exclaim. How divine! How beautiful nature is! It is clothed in its color! I am glad to travel at this time of the year. How all creation is transformed {{p9}} with the touch of the spring! He asked me to read to him the news. I told him of the death of Mr. Porpons Marzon. Regretfully he said that it would have been well, had he breathed one breath in the Cause of Baha-ollah! He has left all that wealth which he accumulated during his life time and which now will serve him to us purposed! When I told him that the stock Exchange in My stopped five minutes to pay homage to this financial genius Mosgan he was accused. "Only five minutes!" he exclaimed.

Sayad Assadullah had prepared a five bunch for us, rice, chicken, matzo on etc.

The Master said that as soon as he started travelling he felt much better. This is very significant indeed and showed the place of God that he must not stay in one place, too long!

An interesting phase of the Stuttgart trips was the total ignorance of the German friends about the Beloved's departed from Paris. He told Mom Dreyfus not to telegraph them at all because he was going to "surprise" them. While the train was speeding along, laughing and boyishly he was telling us that this was the best thing: We will arrive in Stuttgart, take our rooms in a hotel, settle down {{p10}} and then call up the friends! How will they be surprised! Was not this a five plan? We were going to surprise them! When they come to the hotel they will find us in their midst; but now they know nothing about it at all years this is the very best plan! About 3 o'clock tea was served and then he read a few letters from America, revealing answer to each, He was very happy as he dictated Tablet after Tablet while looking out of the window into the lovely country adorned with blossoming trees! White pink and red. At 8 o'clock we reached the station and the Master alighting from the train walked upright {{p11}} to hotel Marquardt. Rooms were engaged and then I telephoned to Mr. Herrigel and Mr. Ekstein and a letter was despatched by special messenger to Miss Kuablock. When over the phone I told Mr to Mrs. Werrigil that Abdul Baha was in Stuuatgart. I could feel by the intonation of her voice that sleet almost pumped up with the air with delight and surprise! "What! What! Abdul Baha here! in Stuttgart! Is this possible!" Within a few minutes Mr. Herrijel arrived and was taken into the Mt. Master's room. The Beloved embraced and kissed him very affectionately and said: you see! I have come! I have fulfilled my promise! God willing you will also come to Haiji. On Mount Carmel there are many of your conformist—God hath chosen him from amongst the German for the sake of his oven Love. His Holiness Christ hath said : many are called but few are chosen! At this time Mr. Eksteir was announced. He has been to Paris last year and had seen the Master, so they Know each other and he received a warm welcome. Then the Beloved continued: Consider the Beauty and Favor of Baha-ollah! How he has wanted us together in Faith and assurance. He hath cemented together our hearts, our {{p13}} spirits and our souls. Our love is stranger and more powerful than the love which exists between the members of one family. This is real union for whenever I thought of you I was made very happy. Outwardly a few years ago we had never heard the name of Stuttgart and you had never heard the name of "Now!" Such is the rectifying power of the Word of God! It is not yet known what hers created in the hearts but when this grows and observes and yields delightful fruits then its importance will be fully understood; {{p14}} then the world of morality will become illumined, spiritual susceptibilities will be obtained, the minds and the souls will be educated, the lights of sanctification will shine forth the people will became real since Bahais; the lights of reality will be reflected through the transparent glass and the solidarity of humanity will become apparent and manifest. He spoke in detail which is impossible to now. Arrangements were made that tomorrow he devoted {{p15}} to the formation of the Cause. Siffer was said to be brought to the Master and he spoke while he was eating. We went into a restaurant near bye and after 45 minutes we returned to the hotel. Miss Alma Knoblock and Miss Doring were waiting. We talked with them a few minutes about the Master and the joy and sacrifice of the believers when they hear that he was actually amongst them! Miss Doring is a good and faithful Bahai and she serves the Cause very faithfully.

The Master had by this {{p16}} time retired so they could see him but tomorrow morning!

I feel very happy in Stuttgart. The friend here are very warm, very genuine, very sincere, very earnest. The Cause has taken a firm hold of the truth seeking German people and it will grow and grow.

The Master's room is on the second floor no. 150 overlooking the broad avenue; the Royal Pork and the palace are not for.

All Germany must sing the songs of joy because the Beloved of the World is in her midst! Germany has news had a more honored and a more divine Guest than Abdul Baha the Mystery of God. Happy Germany.

HOTEL MARQUARTDT H. & O. Marquarot STUTTGART April 2, 1913

{{p1}}

Dear Harriet!

This was a day similar to the busy days of the Master in America, through the air of Stuttgart we inhaled a scent of spiritual activity, even in the early morning. Of course everybody was up before six and Sayad Assadullah was preparing the Beloved's tea over his small alcohol stove. I was in the Master's room waiting his commands. Letters and telegrams arriving from Budapest urging him to go there, but no definite decision yet. The Beloved dictated telegraphic messages to various parts. He walked from one to the other and of his unusually large room.

For breakfast he ordered a glass of milk. At half-past light the believers started to come. Everyone carried a bouquet of flowers. Mr. Herrigal, Doctor Fisher, Mr. Ekstein or Miss Knoblock translate translation of my English into German. A number of the friends, however speak English. Love and sincerity are the two supreme characteristics that I have observed in these people streaming in from 8:30 am to 1 pm. Many of them were weeping with joy and kissing the hands of the Beloved or the hew of his garments. What heart-trilling scenes were witnessed all morning! He also unveiled the face of his love in a manner not witnessed and affection before to all those who had the privilege {{p3}} of visiting him this morning. Afterwards he said; He inhaled the fragrance of humanity in this city. One cannot properly know the depth of his sweet and heavenly love for his own children. In order to let you have a peep at the room no 150 and what was being said and I will quote a few of his works. Some are asked about his health and expressed the heavenly joy of having Abdul Baha in our midst although they were not worthy of it. He said that he was enjoying eternal spiritual health. It was a health, never followed by any sickness! There was no doubt that the Germans were very worthy because God has sent him here so that he may summon the people to {{p4}} the Kingdom of Abha. This was a blessed day because he was associating with the German Bahais. This was the cause of his joy. The greatest happiness for man was to behold the faces of the friends of God. How sweet it was to converse with the believing Praise be to God that this is made possible. He hoped that great insults will be the outcome of these meetings; the rays of the Sun of Reality may shine forth and the Kingdom of God be established. Just at this moment the East and the west were gathered together in this room, exercising toward each other the utmost of kindness. This was through the power of the Love of God <5> otherwise it would have been impossible.

To another group of visitors he said: This was a good city. It was very delightfully situated. It was a worthy place to become the Vineyard of the Kingdom and like unto trees which are covered with foliage blast our and fruits, the human temples also may be revealed in adorned with heavenly Virtues. He hoped that each one of them may become a heavenly gardener so that there may saw pure seeds in the prepared soils and the variegated flowers may grow they grow!

The visitors hoped that this well {{p6}} be accomplished through the assistant of Baha-ullah and Abdul Baha. Another group of Bahais entered and the Beloved welcoming them said: As soon as he heard that a number of souls have embraced this Cause in Stuttgart he became infinitely happy. He told the friends at that time that the circle of this Effulgence will widen and widen in this city and because the ground was fertile the people were recipient, therefore the seeds of the Love of God shall grow into mighty trees.

Three friends came in with flowers in their hands and the tears of joy in their eyes. He said that these flowers were the harpings of spring! He was very happy {{p7}} because he came to Stuttgart while nature was welcoming the spring. Although this is the beginning of the material spring, may the beauty of the divine spring petals its tent in Stuttgart.

To another delegation he said: He had cause to pay them a visit. He hoped they will pay back his visit while he returned to Haifa. He had travelled more than 20.00 miles to reach here, but they will not have to cover so much distance! This was a mother than proof of his intense longing to visit them!

Miss Alma Knoblock came and the Master arose from his seat and greeted her most warmly Oh! Miss Knoblock {{p8}} Oh! Miss Knoblock! She was very welcome! very welcome! He loved her very much! His heart was attached to her. In reality she was the behold of the Kingdom. Her heart was pure and attracted otherwise she could not serve the cause so well. Her society confirmed her in the services of the cause. While in America he always remembered her. He now forgot her. He was greatly attached to their severe friends who are selfless. Let her thank God than she attained to such a bounty! God willing her heart will become more illumined day unto day. He will ever pray for her and {{p9}} all the German believes so that the confirmations of God may descended upon them. Let her teach always the Cause of God. If she taught soul in a city and he was being attracted after one year he would make tour. And so it went on and on and on. I can write many many pages but there is no time. Doctor Fisher brought two actors to meet the Master in Laloniki and one of them spoke Turkish. The Beloved talked with them on the evils of war which are perpetrated in the name of religion. They were very much impressed. One of them asked about theatre {{p10}} and its influence upon the public. The Master said. The plays should endeavor elevate the ideals of humanity and not degrade them. The theatre is life unto a school and the playing here must ever think how to educate his audience through the characterizations of noble ideals and personalities. The actors must embody in their uttered words and deeds, which in their roles, the noblest emotion of the highest motives, the most delicate art, the tenderness feelings and the most attractive appearance. The chief aim of the theatres should become the spiritualization of humanity.

Throughout all the interviews that the Master gave this morning. I could feel a new vibration in his power and an added majesty to his station. Many of the friends came with their children and he embraced them, Kissed them, made them sit on his hope or stand on both side of his chain, caressing them and gently touching with His Blessed hands their faces and hairs.

“He had his lunch in his room and we had ours into a good Restaurant. At 3 o'clock Mr. Herrigel arrived with an automobile to take the Master for a ride. We drove through the hills and valleys allowed their spring garments {{p12}} for one hour we drove and we reached the Royal Park. Here the Master alighted and walked through the Park. He entered from one gate and the automobile was going to pick him at the other gate. He walked through the spacious avenue, picnickers wonderingly looking at him, not knowing who was this glorious man. He sat in the middle of his walk on a bench and Mr. Herrigel cut a sign on it so that the friend may come and visit the peace afterward. He called the gardener who was working nearly and gave him a few Marks. The man was surprised and astonished and started {{p13}} to thank profusely. Mr. Herrigel immediately took out of his pocket German Bahai booklets and gave them to him.”This Man he told him” is the friend of all the poor and laboring classes. He is your friend too.” The gardener was touched very much. Returning house Mr. Herrigel was all the time pointing to us the interesting buildings, both public and private, the police of the King, the new museum, the new hospital, the new large royal theatre etc. We arrive at his residence at about five o'clock. At first the Master rested in the bed room for half an hour, which the friends gathered{{p14}} for the meetings. Four large rooms thrown to one another were filled with the friends their faces full of joyful expectation. It is impossible to describe the contagious happiness of the German believers. They are brimful with optimism came into the crowded rooms they all arose and many eyes were weeping copiously. Mr. Heirigel said: we the German believers shall now forget this day! It will be remembered throughout all our lives. It is the day of great rejoicing for all Germany. May we be all worthy of this heavenly Bestowal! We welcome Abdul Baha {{p15}} in our midst with a heart over flowing with joy. Then the Beloved with the light of great happiness in his eyes said: Praise be to God that he had come to Stuttgart and he was associating with the friends in this blessed house! Praise be to God that their faces were illumined with the rays of the Love of God, and then hearts attracted to the Kingdom of Abha. Let them thank God because they had heard the call of God and were living in the world in the Glorious Day of the Lord of Hosts; they were witnessing the wonderful down of the Sun of Reality, whose rays home cost their {{p16}} splendors and reflections upon the mirrors of their hearts; then souls were illumines; their spirits assured, and their consciousness stirred with the glad-tidings of God. Therefore let them strive that they may become radiant through the lights of Baha-u-llah. There may be rose from his seats, took away the child he had in his lap while he was speaking and then walked around, shaking hands with the friends, everyone, even the little girls and boys reverently kissing. May each one of them become like a light candle. Perchance through their efforts these darkness may {{p17}} be dispelled (now he was in the other room gently passing by their one or that, like a fragrant breeze) and the lights of the love of God may enlighten the East and the West. This hatred and enmity may be changed into joy and fragrance; these foul clouds may disappear. Now be kissed a child who offered him a banquet of flowers and joy and fragrance be obtained, this world may become another world; Eternal life may be made possible and the Breathes of the Holy Spirits may surround all.

Then with an ample of flowers, roses, carnations, {{p18}} violets, tulips he walked into the private room, leaving behind and only the fragrance of these material flowers but a perfume of the spiritual flowers of the Rose-gardener that will ever enrich the lines of those who were friend of Abha! Many of the believers who had arrived late and did not hear his talk were taken into his room and while relieving on bed he spoke to them. There were professors, Sculflo, Artists, musicians, etc, each one asking questions and receiving answers to satisfy his minors bead.

An automobile was brought at the door and with two Baha young men and Mr. Herrigel, we lead <19> to another half an hour ride. While the automobile was speeding along he said: you must thank God that at this hour you are sitting in this car with the Center of the Covenant. The importance of this event cannot be fully appreciated at this time. It will became known in the future. Looking over the bills were covered with blossoming trees, he said : A man not acquainted with botany could not know what kind of fruits there trees will yield at the time of fruition but a skillful gardener does know. Therefore in this day those souls who have {{p20}} spiritual perceptions are capable to appreciate the importance of this event.

Arriving at the hotel the Master rested for awhile, and then the large and magnificent car of Counsul Schwartz who called on the Beloved this morning with his wife and daughter come to take him to the second meeting in Mr. Henrigelis name Cousul Schwartz has offered his car to the Master to use it at his discrete. First we had a ride through the bills overlooking the city. It was the most beautiful sight that I have ever seen! It looked like heaven upon earth. Thousands and two thousands {{p21}} electric lights illumined the encircling hills, the valley and the distant horizons. The Master looking at the wonderful panorama of scintillating lights and dazzling illumination said: How really beautiful would it have been if the people were as light as these lights. Baha-ollah always loved to have many lights in the evening. In the darkness of the world he has ignited many thousand lights he has studded the heaven of his Cause with many stars! May they ever shine and gleam!

We reached at Mr. Herigel's home. Although it was raining, a large group of {{p2}} friend had waited outside for half an hour to be the first ones to greet him. The Beloved looking into their blooming face said: "How attracted and enkindled are the German Bahais. How much full of love they are! Love does not need a teacher.

Walking ahead of this large group. I was surprised to see so many people. I am sure there were more than 200 and yet half of the friends are not notified about the Beloved's arrival.

What a glowing, enthusiastic beaming faces! The Master then entered the house and all arose. He lead them to be seated and called one of the little children {{p23}} to his side and then continued to speak: This was a very blessed night for he was meeting souls who were believers in God; souls who have turned their faces toward the Kingdom of Abha; souls in whose face one witnessed the rays of the Sun of reality; souls who were of the chosen ones and not of those who are called. He gave a brilliant address on the prophecies of the coming of the Promised One. His last word was: Tonight he felt very happy to find himself in their midst!

There were so many people {{p24}} that some in the other rooms were standing on their choice in order to get a glimpse of the Master as he walked to and from. Amongst those who were present was Miss Pallock who had travelled from Gotha, a distance of 10 hours to see the Master. She is the sister of Miss Assayah Allen of Wash. D.C.

One of our Bahais in Stuttgart is a book binder. With the hope that the Master will visit this city he had prepared a most precious book with the finest paper and cover so that the history of the Cause in Germany may be written in it. His hope was that when the Master come <25> to he may write on the first page and then Mr. Herrigel compose the history.

At ten P.M. dinner served at Mr. and Mrs. Herrigel and the Master spoke about the prophecies of Baha-ollah which were fulfilled today as well as the Germans who have built a large colony on Mount Carmel. These Germans were honest, sincere seekers of truth and according to their calculation. Christ was going to descend from heaven on Mount Carmel, so they migrated to Holy land and laid the foundation of the present colony. It was very {{p26}} significant that in the very year that they reached Mount Carmel Baha-ollah also arrived-thus fulfilling the prophecies.

After dinner the Beloved shook hands with all those who were present at the table and in the Cousul Sehwarz he was driven back to the Hotel.

Thus the first day in Germany came to an end with the greatest of happiness. The Beloved was most delighted to see so many children of the Kingdom, all united with one thought and accord serving the cause and letting the light of revelation Shine forth.

Love to all

Ahmad

April 3rd 1913

{{p1}}

Dear Harriet!

Wherever the Beloved goes he carries with him the spirit of life. His presence creates spiritual atmosphere; his words confer assurance; his teachings elevate the thought; his voice draws one near unto God; his love teaches us to love mankind; and his tenderness makes us affectionate to all humanity. In him we find all-life and all-light combined. He is the Alpha and the Omega, the beginning and the ending. Whether in Germany or in France, America or England, Egypt or Syria he is the King of Kings. The German people love and honor him with the same sincerity and loyalty as do three of other nation. His throne is in the Palace of universal brotherhood and all the tribes and races of the earth are welcome to his audience-chamber. The most civilized man of the West whose mind is a treasure-house of Knowledge and wisdom and the simplest man from the steppes of Russia or the illiterate Arab from the Sahara of Africa find the Beloved on Elder Brother and one in whom the spirit of God dwells. His heavenly spirit has broken the barriers language and nationality. All the people are humble before him because he considers himself the humblest. Day by day I marvel at his wonderful power of attraction. His unifying spirit is the most stupendous fact of the present century. How scarcely any rotation unity between the Germans and Persians? Abdul Baha is able to make the two forget their customs and show toward each a love and fellowship which are the standing miracles of this age. There are certain inner experiences that we have to go through before we can get the adequate insight into the marvelous powers of the Master.

This morning the sun shone forth gloriously upon Stuttgart to welcome the God-like guest who looks out of the window watching the crowds of Germans going to their work. The Germans generally speaking are strong in physique, vigorous in their mental activity, industrial in their practical lives, earnest in their pursuits, devoted to love and substantial in every way. They are a noble race. Their love for this Cause is in describable, their respect for the Master is unimaginable, their firmness in the Covenant is unquestioned. In three days we have grown to love them as our own Kith and Kin. I could never dream that the Cause had taken such a firm hold of the German mind and heart. Really it is nothing short of a miracle!

Before nine o'clock the friends started to come. I may say there were many "meetings" instead of interviews from 9 to 10 o'clock. Every few minutes the room was filled, the Beloved delivered an address and then emptied and other delegations arrived. Among the first arrivals were Knoblock, Miss Kostlin, Miss Doring and many others. The Master spoke about the last night meeting: He was very happy last night. He saw that in their midst the fire of the love of God was enkindled. Last night one beheld in that meeting the breaths of the Holy Spirit and the Confirmations of the Kingdom of Abha! The influence of that meeting will be felt throughout all Germany because the effulgence of the Sun of Reality was cast upon it. It was a very radiant meeting, the hearts were turned toward the Kingdom of Abha, the eyes were looking forward the Supreme horizon, the spirits were rejoiced with the glad-tidings of God. In that meeting there was baptism with the spirit and fire. He hoped it may yield great results and the lights of love may radiate from that meeting to all the regions of the world.

To another group: Today God has conferred upon them a new Confirmation and a new power. He testified that their hearts was pure, there they had no other aim except the good-pleasure of the Lord. They were the servants of the overtness of the world of humanity. They were kind to all the religions. They loved all the people. Their longing was for the realization of public weal. Their lofty intentions on their part shall lead them to the highest destination. As he was surrounded by several lovely German children, one of them lying her head on his breast, he spoke on education and how they must teach the children English- so that they may be able to correspond with American Bahais and may travel to each other's countries.

{{p5}}

One asked whether Christ ever traveled to India to study Indian philosophy. He laughed: No! Christ did not go to India. He did not need the Indian philosophy. Then he spoke at length about the Covenant. Through the power of the Covenant they can withstand the attack of all those who are on the earth. The victorious army of the Covenant was waiting on the field of the Supreme Concourse to assist all those who were firm and steadfast and crown them with the diadem of triumph.

{{p6}}

Others come in and the voice of the Master was raised again in praise of last night meeting. It was a divine gathering! All of those who were present enjoyed it. It was a Bahai meeting. There were the susceptibilities of the Kingdom. There one witnessed the Love of God. He hoped that many such meeting will be organized here in the future. To a lady he said: Our year of real Bahai life is equal to a thousand years. If a man lived 1000 years he may not attain to eternal life but if he lived one day according to the precepts of Baha-Ullah he shall obtain Everlasting Existence. One of your days is better than a thousand years of others. For the doors of the Kingdom are opened before your faces; the light of reality is shining upon you; the eyes of your perception are unstopped. You are informed with the realities of all phenomena; you are acquainted with the mysteries of the Kingdom of God.

{{p7}}

The room was again filled with newcomers and he said: As he believers of Stuttgart arrive and deport this morning each one of them was to him like a fragrant, fresh, imperishable bouquet of roses ; each one was like unto a brilliant lamp and a shining star. In their faces he beheld the effulgence's of the Love of His Holiness Baha-Ullah. Happy were they! Happy were they to obtain to such a Bestowal. This is the day of the Lord. The birds of bygone ages who were caught by the go and wind of autumn longed for this delightful spring. The flowers which were thirsty in those days were yearning for the dove power of this rain from the clouds of Providence. They were thirsty for the water of life and hungry for the food which is now descending from heaven. Praise be to God that they have attained there unto. Two talks were given an marriage and the education of the children, each one containing many ripe opinions and directions.

{{p8}}

A painter who has made a pencil sketch from Abdul Baha's photograph taken in Paris brought him a few copies. The Master praised his work and said: Can he paint upon the page of the world the ideal pictures of the Supreme Concourse? The pictures which are in the ideal world are eternal. He desired him to become such an Artist. Man can paint those ideal pictures upon the Tablet of existence with the brush of deeds. The holy divine manifestations are heavenly Artists. Upon the canvas of creation, with the brush of their deeds and actions, they have painted immortal pictures which could not be found in any art museum of Europe and America but he could find then divine Masterpieces of the Spiritual Artists in the galleries of the hearts.

{{p9}}

Miss Pollock came. Several others were present. The Master asked what news she had from her sister Mrs. Allen in Wash? "She lends her love to Abdul Baha and lock of Roushan's hair to me." "Did she send you also a fragrance from Golshan?" the Master answered. (This was a play on word. Golshan means "rose-garden" and is the name given by the Beloved to the second child of Mrs. Allen) The Master said that Mrs. Allen was serving the Cause; that she was very attracted and enkindled. Miss Pollock asked what could she say when people asked her; whom did you go to see? He said: Tell them I went to see Abdul Baha, the Spreader of the religion of Baha-Ullah, the Standard-bearer of universal Peace, the Crier to the Kingdom of God, the Servant of God and the servant of humanity.

{{p10}}

Many, many more groups arrived and the Beloved talked and talked. It was as though the sea of his utterance was set in motion. Within one hour Mr. Herrigel and Mr. Ekstein who were assisting me in translation left the hotel exhausted and at the same time delighted to see the results of the Cause.

{{p11}}

The Master had his lunch and he told us of a dream he had last night. He dreamed he was in Tiberius. Along the shore he was living alone in a small cottage which was built with mud bricks but he was most happy and surrounded with a spiritual atmosphere indescribable in its beauty and calmness. There was Esmael Aga with him. As Abdul Baha talked with him, he was silent. Then he told Esmael Aga that small humble cottage was more beautiful and exquisite than the palace of the King. And Esmael Aga answered in reality it is so, it is so.

{{p12}}

At 3 o'clock Consul Schwartz came to the hotel with his car and took the Master for a ride. He drove us through most beautiful country places and the valleys covered with the blossoming trees and the forests of pines and the prairies carpeted with wild violets and flowers. We inhaled their sweet adorn bringing to us the messages of spring. We drove as far as "Schloss Solitude" a wonderful palace built 200 years ago by one of the Kings of Wurttemberg. The palace is now empty and open to the tourists. Napoleon lived in it for more than 2 weeks as he was in friendly relation with the then King of Wurttemberg. He was there before his Russian campaign and had in army nearly 30,000 of the men of this King; but only 800 returned. It was also this King who persecuted Schiller the great poet and he had to fly by night from Stuttgart. The Master walked through the whole palace was greatly interested in all the historical events connected with it, especially the room in which Napoleon had slept. When he came out of the palace many children were gathered there from a nearby village and he gave to each one a work. Sayad Ahmad Bageroff wrote the day of the Master's visit to the palace on the wall, facing the Grand Staircase. The palace was built on a hill and overlooked a wonderful valley for miles and miles. The panorama was most unique.

On our return the Master spoke about the future of Stuttgart, that it will progress extraordinarily because the Call of the Kingdom of Abha was first raised here! He was very loving to Consul Schwartz, He held his hands all the time, kissing him and calling him: "My son, my son I love you very much!" The car brought us to 3 Alexanderstrasse, the home of the Consul. At the Threshold the Master kissed his both cheeks. His wife, his daughter and two sons were waiting at the door to greet the Master. They kissed his hands and with the greatest joy they took him to a room to rest before the meeting. The Minister of the Church of the King will be present at the meeting. After a few minutes the Beloved entered the large parlor. Prominent men and women of Stuttgart were present. Rusul Schwartz had his own special stenographer to take down the address. As Mirza Mahmoud was not here its Persian could not be preserved. The Master delivered a wonderful talk on the fundamental unity of religions, the oneness of the world of humanity and toward the end he made a dramatic appeal that this century is the century of brotherhood, this day is the day of love, this period is the period of convocation.

After the meeting, tea and refreshment were served and the Minister of the King who spoke English fluently had a private interview. The Master, then retired to the bedroom and from the window he watched the whole valley suddenly illumined by thousands of electric lights. It was a magical transformation of darkness into light.

{{p14}}

At eight o'clock we were taken to a hall where the first public meeting was to be held. As we entered the place, there was no room to move. Hundreds, probably five or six hundred Bahais and friends were gathered. With much difficulty a lane was made for the Master to ascend the platform. All arose from their seats. Mr. Herrigel introduced him. There the Master spoke, I translated his words into English and Mr. Ekstein translated my English into German. It was a very interesting scene! When Mr. Ekstein could not remember the exact word in German, dozens of vows were raised from different corners, giving him the English word; showing that there were quite a considerable number who could understand English. Here are the opening remarks of the Master: He has come to them from a very distant land. He has traveled back and forth more than 20,000 miles to reach to Germany. He has been in prison for 40 years. Young he entered the prison he came out as he stood before them. Notwithstanding the vicissitudes of prison life and the weakness of the body he accepted the hardships and inconveniences of traveling, covering such long distances to come here and behold then illumined faces. His aim was that perchance the world of humanity may be illumined. Praise be to God that the Radiant Century hath come. Praise be God that the spiritual springtime hath pitched its tent. Praise be God this is the age of the discovery of the realities of things. Verily, verily he saw unto them. This age is the age of lights! This age is the age of sciences! This age is the of the appearance of Truth! This age is the age of the extension of the sphere of thought! This age is greatest divine age! This age is the age of Everlasting Life! This age is the age of the blossoming forth of all the hidden virtues of the world of humanity! Then his thoughts flew toward the spiritual realm and brilliant pearls of wisdom, he displayed on the benefits of divine civilization.

Then he desired to offer a prayer at the Threshold of the Almighty in their behalf: O Thou Kind God! This congregation are the sheep of the flock and Thou art the real Shepherd! These souls are Thy children and Thou art the loving Father! O God! Encircle them with the glances of Thy Mercifulness! Open before their faces the doors of Thy Guidance! O God! Descend upon them Thy heavenly Confirmation make their eyes seeing and their ears hearing! Quicken their hearts are gladden their spirits. May all of us take a portion and a share from the Sea of Thy Providence! May each one of us be sheltered beneath the Tabernacle of Thy Protection! O God! We are poor, unlock before us the doors of the Treasures of Thy Kingdom! O God! We are humble endear us in Thy Realm! O God! Establish affiliation between the hearts and attract the spirits to each other so that all humanity may enter beneath the all inclusive Tent of the Oneness of the world of humanity! May wars and rumors of wars be entirely forgotten! May humankind attain to the highest summit of felicity! O God! Answer our prayers! Verily Thou art the Kind! The Giver! The generous! And the Bounteous!

After the meeting there were so many people who wanted to shake hands with the Master that it was impossible to move around. Every lady rushed forward to kiss his hands yet in all their movements there was dignity and respect. As the Master came out they filed like a regiment of soldiers and he shook hands with almost everyone. Outside around the car they were again gathered together and as he entered it, there were hundreds of hands with hats and handkerchiefs waving loving farewell to the Beloved of their hearts!

{{p17}}

We were again driven back to the house of Consul Schwartz for driven. At the table there was a physician who was quite corpulent. The Master joked with him: He did not need to say that he was a physician. He looked it! If anyone doubled his efficiency in keeping the body whole, tell him, look at me! Several courses were served and at half past eleven we were back again to the hotel. The Master prayed before Consul Schwartz is have that divine blessings may descend upon him and his family. They are really wonderful Bahais, sincere and devoted to the Cause.

Hotel Marquardt, Stuttgart April 4, 1913

{{p1}}

Dear Harriet!

The Bahai Cause is firmly established in Germany. No power on earth can ever uproot it. It has attracted unto itself some of the best elements of this country. In Stuttgart we have many Bahais who are very prominent even from a material or intellectual standpoint. What I admire about them- men, women, children alike- is their deep correctness and faithfulness in the Cause. They appreciate the value of the Teachings and unitedly have they arisen to promote them. They have done and are doing a great deal of translation and although the Cause is very young here, yet they have already a good Library on Bahai literature. The master is most pleased and very happy over the conditions of the Cause here and has often remarked that the movement will be promulgated far and wide.

As this morning a group of the friends gathered around him, while closing his eyes as though looking into the future, he said: At this time it was not known what a bounty has been destined for Stuttgart. It will become evident in the future. When the rain pours, the sun shines and the zephyrs blow, the bounty hidden in each is not known, but when the prairies become verdant and trees green, then everyone will see the result! When the divine speedower comes along and scatters the seed, nothing is visible except the black soil, but when the harvest is gathered, the success will be evident. Similarly the grace of God which has surrounded Stuttgart cannot be seen now, but ere long every eye shall witness the results! Last night he prayed for the people, the city and the government of Stuttgart. He begged of God divine Blessing. In reality Wurttemberg was an excellent country, its people were very progressive and its government fair, therefore he asked heavenly Confirmation for them so that the Favor and Grace of God and the Supreme Bestowals of the Merciful may encircle them.

{{p3}}

When years ago the Germans arrived from Stuttgart to Haifa to lay the foundation of their colony, their leader Hoffman Herteck became Abdul Baha's friend. He called on Abdul Baha. At that time Abdul Baha was a prisoner but Herteck showed him much love. From that time on Abdul Baha became great admirer of the Germans. The Germans in Haifa did not associate with any one except with the Bahais. There was a German carriage-driver who worked between Haifa and Acca. Somehow he was attracted to the Cause and whenever he came to Acca he would call on Abdul Baha. But as Abdul Baha was a prisoner the guards would not let the German speak with him fearing the latter may communicate to the former some dangerous to the state. So the Germans stood far away and looked at Abdul Baha and he would look at him then smile and smile. Thus, each time they communicated with one another. By this, Abdul Baha meant that the Bahais' friendship with Stuttgart people was very old. Now in order to strengthen this tie of friendship he has come to pay the Germans a visit. In reality we are the members of one family, because the Love of Baha-Ullah has cemented together over hearts. He has already sent many cab grows to all parts of the Orient and America that he was now in Stuttgart. This news will give them great rejoicing and happiness. Then he spoke about the devotion and the self-sacrifice of the Persian believers.

{{p4}}

As regards the last night public meeting he said: It was a spiritual meeting, a heavenly gathering. The lights of the Kingdom were shining upon it; the Confirmations of the Holy-Spirit descended upon it. Consider what a wonderful Bounty and Favor this was that a personage from the East and the German from the West were gathered together. The result of these meetings will be known later.

{{p5}}

To another group of friends gathered about him he said: We are all close relations. We are the members of one family and one household. We receive the lights of one sun, drink from the same fountain, walk in the same rose-garden, and are under the protection of one gardener, therefore we enjoy amongst ourselves the utmost of amity and unity. He hoped that day unto day this communication may increase. This age is the age of lights! This century is the century of love! This period is the period of the oneness of the world of humanity! This cycle is the cycle of the down pouring of the Bestowals of God!

There was amongst those who were present a very all man with a very long beard and a very young heart. The Master talked with him a great deal, kissed his beard and they become great friend. It is most interesting to observe the love and the respect that the German children have for the Master; even the children who are four or six years old came into his Presence with such a reverence that is impossible to describe! They all bring flowers and fruits. The Beloved gathers them around himself, near the window and showers upon them his blessings. To see him sitting on the chair near the window every morning and surrounded often with six or ten children is the most ideal picture I have seen! Now and then he gets up from his seat, takes a child by his two arms, lifts him up and puts him on the bed to the delight of the mothers and those who are present.

{{p7}}

Same one said, if we have worked in the Cause a hundred years we could not attract so many different elements to the Cause, only Abdul Baha can do that. He answered: He hoped that each one of them may become a divine former and each one may cultivate a large blessed form. The real Bahai forming is through deeds. May they become become adorned and confirmed with such deeds and actions that they may become the pure seeds. The Bahais must be known by their deeds. That is why His Holiness the Christ says: Ye shall know the trees by their fruits. God hath chosen the Bahais from amongst the people and has opened the doors of His Kingdom before their faces. Therefore they must appreciate the value of this gift so that each one of them may become a lamp lighted with the Fire of the Love of God; day unto day may they be driven nearer unto God in order that their hearts be inspired with divine Inspirations. May they become as fruitful trees producing luscious fruits for all the seasons. He has desired this station for them. The majority of the people are the lovers of shells, praise be to God the Bahais are lovers of the kernel. The people are deprived of reality but the friends have reached the home of Truth!

A mother with three of her daughters who were all good Bahais were presented to the Beloved. After welcoming them he said: He was very happy to have came to Stuttgart and he supplicated at the Threshold of the Almighty to descend upon them His eternal blessings. They were his friends, his real friends and he shall never forget them. He shall continually remember them. They were his own daughters. He hoped that in the orchard of God they may become fruitful trees. Let them be happy because they have entered under the protection of Baha-Ullah. They were all the sheep of God and the Blessed Perfection was then shepherd. Let them be confident in the Favors and Bounties of Baha-Ullah. His everlasting Bestowals shall surround them and shall choose them for a great service from amongst his own maid servants. Their mention will become eternal in the Kingdom and their names still be handed down to prosperity and in the divine world they will like ignited lamps and they will be related hi God.

In short, I may go on writing many more pages about the Beloved talks on the morning but these few drops are sufficient. A one o'clock we found him almost exhausted from the four hours consecutive talk. He said he was most happy to see the believers of Germany so holy, so pure and so united. They were the angels of Paradise of Abha! You pray that the Flame of this divine Fire may be ignited in all Germany. He had his lunch and took his rest.

{{p10}}

At half-past two we had tea in his presence and at four o'clock Consul Schwartz with his wife and daughter came with their car to take the Master to Esshinger where Miss Anna Kostlin, a most devoted enthusiastic Bahai has prepared a children's party to greet Abdul Baha. Another onto was hired for the other Persian friends and after a few minutes we were driving through the most beautiful part of the country, all abhors in a riot of colors and hues! We passed by rivers and falls, mountains and hills, all clothed in the joyful garments of spring. How I wished the American friends could share these hours in the divine presence of the Master! This is the most beautiful season and I am glad that we did not come last month. On our way to Esshingen we saw many vineyard, mountains from bottom to summit are changed into vineyards.

Consul Schwartz asked about the future events in Europe. He answered: There will be a general war between the European powers and Germany of course will take a prominent part. Baha-Ullah has predicted a war between Germany and France and this will be fulfilled! Consul Schwartz is the Representative of the Norwegian government and is the president and proprietor of a banking institution which was founded by his father. As we sped along the road the Master enjoying the wonderful changing scenes of nature. The Consul told him about himself and his visions of life and the Master assured him that everything will be well with him. We were driven through the famous Blackwoods of Stuttgart and were simply charmed with the heavenly panorama constantly opening before us. It was as though we were driving through a fairy land.

At last we arrived at Esshigen a giant lovely tower. Here there are a large number of young men who have become Bahais. Miss Kostlin, the hostess who always smiles and laughs and is charming young lady was dressed in beautiful white silk. She was radiant with happiness and bubbling over with joy. She and a large number of mothers were waiting at the door of the Royal King. As our beloved ascended the stairs, they followed him reverently. Now we were in a spacious room, just before entering the Hall. What is this entrancing scene before our eyes? More than one hundred children boys and girls most of them dressed in spotless white, each one a bouquet of flowers in his or her hand, waving in the air as a welcome to the Kingdom and suddenly the Chorus of "Allah Abha" was raised from all! I was overtaken with surprise emotion, joy and could not contain myself! Tears filled my eyes! It was the most beautiful, the most heavenly, the most artistic picture that I have ever seen in all my life. Then the Beloved walked in their midst, touching the head of this, looking into the radiant face of that and meanwhile talking the words of light. He had brought with him candies in small decorated boxes and he divided amongst them. Then he entered into the large Hall. Here there were many tables big and small decorated with flowers and candies and fruits. All the children and their mothers sat at the table. A long table at the upper side of the hall was prepared for the Master, the platform was decorated with large palms and orange trees. Oh! It was so beautiful! I cannot describe these things. One must feel them, see them! It was a glorious day indeed for these people in a far away tavern of Germany to see with their own eyes the Desire of all nations! What love! What attraction! What enkindlement these German believers have! As to Miss Kostlin, she was serving and looking after the happiness of the friends. I have seen few girls who are as happy and as radiant as this really remarkable girl!

The Master and his friend sat at the table and later he delivered an address which i translated into English and Mr. Ekstein translated my English into German. When the Beloved finished speaking, tea and refreshments were served and afterward all the children and the mothers and fathers were called to go out to a photograph with the Master. When the Master come out in front of the Hall everybody in the large gathering had a flowers in his or her hand. It was a lovely idea! The Master sat in a chair and I begged him to have a red rose in his hand! Two pictures were taken and I am sure they will turn out to be very good. After this the Master had farewell to everyone and walked toward his car. Everybody gathered around the car and offered him their flowers; others holding their flowers in their hands waved them in the air.

While the picture was being taken more than 500 men and women and children as curiosity seekers had gathered in front of the Hall because they had never experience such an event in all their lives.

{{p13}}

Before the car started on its way the Master called Miss Kostlin and thanked her and her associates for the splendid arrangements of the Feast. She was overwhelmed with joy with this marked distinction.

{{p14}}

We left Essshingen with a heart full of happiness; borders of our hearts inundated with a flood of emotions. On our return they took us through another road and again we beheld the constant shifting scenes of the beautiful country and vineyards. Arriving at the hotel the master invited Consul, his wife and daughter to come up. As the daughter is studying art, the Master asked what was the best for her children to take up. The Master said: The parent must let the children study that which they like best. If your daughter loves art she can devote her time to it and surely she will succeed. Painting was a lovely art and most refined. We have a Bahai artist in New York. Her name is Miss Juliet Thompson. At first, she requested me if I give her one or two sittings she would found my picture. I consented but the one or two sittings become many. I wondered whether after all she got all the sittings she wanted (here the Master laughed). Then the daughter of Consul asked, whether she would be permitted to paint him. "All right" the resigned answer came out with a twinkling of smile in his eyes. "How many hours do you require?" "About three hours." "This is too much; would fifteen minutes do?" "Oh no! It is not enough." "Would half an hour do?" At last it was arranged for Monday that Frauline may paint him. "I hope you will not walk in Miss Thompson's foot steps." He told her laughing.

The Beloved rested the evening. Mr. and Mrs. Herrigel called and he served them tea prepared with his own hand.

{{p15}}

Our trip to Budapest at last decided. we will leave for that city on Tuesday evening by way of Munich and Vienna.

Hotel Marquardt, Stuttgart April 5, 1913

{{p1}}

Dear Harriet!

It was the fifth of December 1912 that we sailed away from New York and this is the fifth of April 1913 that I write to you from Stuttgart, so it's four months that the Master has been traveling in Europe, spreading the message of the Kingdom and promoting the principles of the Bahai Cause. Now we have before us another trip to Budapest and on our return we will probably make a short stay in Vienna. This German sojourn although only a few days old yet so far much work has been accomplished and innumerable souls are attracted to the Cause and will no doubt be more drawn to it as soon as the Master leaves the city. It is interesting to note that from the time the Beloved arrived in Stuttgart to the time he is going to leave will be exactly 8 days and before arriving he expected to stay only one day or two, but he found the German believers so warm so enkindled that he decided otherwise. Owing to certain reasons known only to himself he requested the friends to avoid newspaper publicity, although the city knows him and speaks about then Cause. As he goes out and enters the hotel the eyes are turned toward him and wonder at his majesty.

This morning he prepared the tea with his own hand and served us most lovingly. A little incident which shows more than anything else his extreme courtesy and thoughtfulness was this: He had just given me the cup of tea and I was going to drink it, when he remembered, Sayad Assadullah had no tea; so he told me, he was going to call him to come in. I put my cup on the table and wanted to go in his place. "No, no" he said. "You drink your tea. It will get cold. I will go and tell him to come." Just think of it! How thoughtful and considerable he is even to his nearest servants who are ready to sacrifice their lives for him.

{{p3}}

After a while he revealed several Tablets for the American believers especially one for the Bowery Mission which were immediately translated and forwarded. In the book which is intended for the historical records of the Cause he wrote: "O God! Confer Thou a shelter upon this person under Thy Protection and surround him with Thy Infinite Bounties! Verily Thou art the Generous and the Merciful.

{{p4}}

In the family book of Consul Schwartz he wrote: "O Thou Incomparable Lord! Bless Thou the members of this Household and endear these souls in Thy Kingdom and confirm them in the service of Thy Cause! Verily Thou art the Powerful! The Mighty"

{{p5}}

"Young Hefner" with his mother and father came to see the Master. I do not think the boy is more than 4 years old but very intelligent and a true Bahai. He has been coming every day and receiving much love from the Master. They told the Master he had already taught all the children of his quarter about the Bahai Cause and was full of love for Abdul Baha. This morning his parents asked him "Where should we go?" "Of course he directly answered" "We will go and pay our homage to Abdul Baha. Is there any other place to go while he is here?" "What will you take for him?" "A basket of apples and flowers." "All right."

And so he entered the room, a basket of red apples in his hand, decorated with pink carnations; with curly hair, smiling face and the words of Allaho Abha on his lips running toward Abdul Baha.

When the Beloved heard how "Young Hefner" was teaching the Cause, he embraced and kissed him and said: It is most excellent to be a teacher in the Cause from childhood. When he was at the age of this little boy he was also teaching. While he was still living in Persia there was a believer whose brother was not a Bahai and he was very anxious to make him one. He was brought to Abdul Baha and he spoke to him about the Cause. At last he said: "I am not convinced. I am not yet satisfied.” Abdul Baha told him that if a person was not hungry he would not long for food; if he was not thirsty he would not yearn for water; only a seeing eye could be convinced of the existence of the sun; only a hearing ear could hear sweet melodies. Therefore first of all he must find the seeing eye, he must become hungry and thirsty; but he could go now and when he got these attributes he could come back. He went away and after sometimes he returned. Abdul Baha spoke with him again and this time he become a good Bahai. There were many children today and the Master took them one by one and made them sit in front of him on the bed. He gave to each candy and fruit and they sat quiet all the time.

His first address to a group of people was about the four periodical seasons of each religious movements. Now, he said it is the spiritual springtime of the world and the spirit of God is soaring over the sea of existence.

{{p8}}

He picked out from another group a man and addressed him this: I love thee very much, I desire thy illumination with the light of God. May thou discover the secrets of realities! Mayst thou obtain seeing eyes so that thou mayst behold the Kingdom of God! Mayst thou receive hearing ears in order to hear the heavenly Call! Mayst thou be baptized with the Fire of the Love of God, with the Breaths of the Holy Spirit and with the water of Life!

{{p9}}

To another group he spoke in detail about the two kinds of Happiness; material and spiritual. Man through spiritual happiness alone finds peace and contentment. All other material means are a temporary satisfaction.

To another group he spoke on the importance of spreading the message: Today if you teach one person it is as though you have resurrected a dead soul into life. It is as though you have changed the black stone into diamond. It is as though you have transmuted metal into gold, Satan into angel, animal into man.

{{p11}}

About noon, Mr. Ekstein was in the room alone with the Master. He said, for many years he has been the President of different societies and has tried to serve each according to his ability but now he has realized that all these denominations did not contain the whole truth and in the Bahai revelation he has found the complete truth. Yes, the Master answered: A thirsty man will run after every fountain, he may drink bitter and stagnant water but at last he will reach to the sweet spring. Now praise be to God that he has attained. All these roads are narrow and will end either to precipices or wild jungles but the highway of truth is clear and all the smaller roads converge into it. The Bahai Cause is the sweet spring of water which is never dried up. It is the great highway which leads man to the glorious palace of the King of Kings. It is the limitless sea and all the lakes and rivers are limited. In other word, all the religions and societies find their principles not only unfolded in this Dispensation but well-developed.

The Editor of a monthly German magazine which is published in Switzerland came to see the Beloved and saying that he desired to write a monthly article on the Bahai revelation. The Master approved his plan and he will start next month.

{{p13}}

Many other friends were presented to the Beloved, some receiving Persian names for their children, others asking for the stone of the greatest name.

{{p14}}

At 3 o'clock the Beloved with Doctor Fisher. Mrs. and Miss Schwartz and myself motored to one of the loveliest palaces built according to the plan of Elhambra in Spain. There were many halls, reception rooms, sleeping rooms, and hot houses! For two hours the Master walked through the buildings, the furniture oriental, and the paintings oriental. There were several graded buildings and cupolas and picture galleries in most beautiful and ideal place. It is called the "Royal Palace of Wilhelm". It was built by one of the Kings of Wurttemberg 90 years ago. He loved Arabian architecture so much that he commissioned the architects to draw the plan of Elhambra for his palace. He spent at that time about 10 million marks in building it and it is a dream of beauty as you walk around, it is as though you were reading the Arabian night story. The Master said: On one hand this wonderful palace shows the high civilization of the Saracens in Spain and on the other hand it makes one sad to contemplate that all these marvelous traces of geniuses of Arabian civilization are entirely forgotten by the people of the Orient and instead of advancing they have been retrograding. Returning to the hotel the Master thanked most heartily from Consul for giving us such a good time in the afternoon. He evidently enjoyed the outing very much. They were invited to drink tea with him. Both mother and daughter as well as the Consul are very rare Bahais and most sincere.

{{p15}}

At eight o'clock the Consul with Mr. Herrigel came to take the Master to an Esperanto meeting. Arriving at the meeting the President of Esperanto Society in Stuttgart took the chair and delivered quite a long and interesting address in German. Afterward the Master spoke in detail on the usefulness of a universal language quite from another standpoint than the two former ones in Edinburgh and Paris. Mr. Ekstein translated my English and the audience listened most carefully. Miss Pollock was in the automobile with the Master.

{{p16}}

After the meeting we were taken to Mr. and Mrs. Ekstein for supper. Miss Pollock was also invited. A large table was decorated with lovely flowers and many delicious eatables; the two sons of Mr. Ekstein had come from another part of Germany to be present. Mr. Ekstein showed the photograph of his father to the Master. "My father was clergy man", he said. Back came the divine answer. "Thy father was the minister of a church of clay; mayst thou become a minister of the Kingdom of God." Miss Pollock said: "I am teaching English in Gotha. Thou hast been a teacher of the earthly language, now is the time to become the teacher of the heavenly language. Spread the message wherever thou art. Teach your pupils both languages." "I will do my best. In order to make them study English I will teach them the Bahai literature." "All right! This is very good." the Beloved said. "For seven years my sister tried to make me a Bahai; now I am one. I know Abdul Baha as the manifestation of Reality." "The Bahais never give up till they succeed."

{{p17}}

Mr. and Mrs. Ekstein of course were most happy to have the Beloved of the world in their home and at the head of their table. After the dinner the Master looking at Mr. Ekstein Consul Schwartz and Mr. Herrigel said: "You are a wonderful triumvirate; three fine spiritual champions. I am going to let you wrestle unto each other to see which one is the victor." After talking with them for a few minutes the Beloved was taken to the hotel. It was very late and we retired after a full and busy day.

HOTEL MARQUARDT STUTTGART April 6 1913

{{p1}}

Dear Harriet!

The Master had today the most beautiful sight of Germany passing before his glorious vision. We motored through the "cherry-blossom country", a few miles outside of Stuttgart. Such a scene of white and pink blossoms I had never seen in my life. The consul at three o'clock brought his machine and we motored first to Esslingen, the scene of the children's party, then through a portion of the Black Woods and then suddenly we came upon the "cherry-blossom country". For miles up the mountains and down the valleys, thousands of tree were adorned with the white garments of spring. If the meadows were not green and the weather was not balmy and thousands of men {{p2}} women and children were not out to have a view of this indescribable scene of beauty, one would have just all these trees were covered with snow and that we were in the grip of winter. From very far places people drive to this village at this season to enjoy this wonder of creation! The Master was simply enraptured with the loveliness and attraction of this panorama of nature. First we drove uphill, then down, enjoying the view from every point. It was also a balmy and delightful day and the crowds holiday were either walking in the meadows or stretched under the trees. It was one of the rare experiences that one can never forget. For me these days are the days of Paradise, filled with {{p3}} happiness never ending!

Thus being Sunday, before nine o'clock the believers started to come. There were so many that crowds were standing outside ready for the room to be emptied so that they may be able to come in. The Beloved was the incarnation of love and affection. There were many children and to these he was specially attentive. He gathered them around himself near the window and showered his love upon all without any distinction. The mothers were made very happy. For them this has been their supreme joy.

While he kissed and caressed the children he spoke: What did the Esperantians say last night? {{p4}} I delivered an address to them according to their conception of truth. They were the beginners therefore I spoke to them with gentleness. The Bahais must speak always with the people from their own standpoint. If you explain the difficult problems of mathematics or geometry for the children they will not understand, it is above and beyond their comprehension. That is why his holiness Christ says: I have many things to say unto you but you cannot comprehend them now howbeit when the spirit of truth shall come he will lead you unto all the truth. Therefore the friends must always consider {{p5}} the mental capacity of an audience and speak to them from their standpoint so that they may not be shocked and run away and that by degrees they may attain to the reality. Can we give strong food to a suckling babe? If we do such a thing the life of the babe will be in danger. Its constitution cannot assimilate roast chicken - or beef-steak but only pure milk. Now you have reached to the age of maturity. You can comprehend the secrets of the Kingdom, but the majority of the people are yet as children, they must be fed with the milk {{p6}} of gentleness. Therefore deal with them ever gently so that they attain to the age of maturity; for this reason his holiness Christ said to his disciples: To you it is given to understand the mysteries of the Kingdom and again he said, do not eat the pearls before the swine; because the apostles were the people of reality and others were the followers of superficiality.

Then he spoke how the Jews expected the descent of Christ from heaven, while in reality there was no heaven. Praise be to God that your eyes are opened and you are witnessing the mysteries of God; your ears are unstopped and you are listening to the divine Call. Consequently with these people whose eyes and ears are shut {{p7}} you must be gentle and patient. These children shall reach to the age of maturity; these tender plants shall attain to the stage of fruition, these sleepy ones shall become awakened from the slumber of negligence. But then at that time their station will not be as great as now! Now is the accepted time. Those souls who became awakened during the life time of Christ, they were the chosen ones, they were the stars of the heavens of Truth, they were the lamps of guidance. How can we ever compare the station of the apostles and those who came later! Therefore your station cannot be compared with those who will be awakened {{p8}} later. You are the first fruits of the season and very much sought after but afterward the newest will become surfeited with fruits. You are the first budding flowers in the rose garden of Knowledge. I am most pleased with the believers of Stuttgart. Truly I do; they are illumined, even their children are radiant.

Looking at an old man with long flowing beard he said: This old man is a real lion, nay rather he is greater than the lion, because the lion has only the brute force while he has the spiritual power.

Speaking to Mr. Ekstein he said: Last night we dined in your home and we were very happy there! {{p9}} Mr. Ekstein said that his home was now dedicated to the Cause. The Master said that his home has been always dedicated.

Then a young couple who are engaged come to see the Master. Their names are Miss Bertha Babmiller and Mr. Boppe. The Beloved received them with great love and cordiality. They looked as sweet as one can expect very demure and very loving. Abdul Baha told them that they were most welcome! He was very pleased with them. He prayed that the benediction of God may descend upon them, the Breathes of the Holy Spirit may surround them and may they be submerged in the sea of the Mercy of God. If the heavenly blessing does not descend, no matter how much man may strive it will be fruitless. If the rays of the Sun {{p10}} do not radiate, the trees will not yield fruits. If you find a lamp lighted, it will be the result of the training of the Sun. The rays of the Sun of Reality are the Divine Confirmations and in turn these confirmations are like unto the showers of the spring. If we see the torrential rivers flowing, they are the result of the aggregation of the rain. Without the Confirmation of God nothing is possible of attainment. He hoped that the divine Confirmations may descend upon them. May they find the highest state of happiness! May they live together in the utmost state of joy and beatitude! May they advance day unto day in all the degrees of ideal perfections! {{p11}} May their thoughts gain a wider range of reflow. May their ideas develop. May their information wisest! May they become like unto ignited lamps and the lights of divine Bestowals may appear from them so that in this world they may live together in the utmost state of felicity and obtain eternal life in the Divine Kingdom, that they may become beloved in both worlds. This was his prayer in their behalves. God-willing they will be in the greatest state of joy.

There was a girl who desired to enter into the Monastery as a nun. The Beloved said: There is no such thing in the Bahai Cause but one may engage in the spread of the cause {{p12}} and dedicate as much of her time as possible and spend her days in the service of the Kingdom and whenever apparently come up, she may marry. There was perfect freedom in this Movement.

Many more people entered the Master's room and the Master continued to speak to this and to that group till well nigh one o'clock. When at last everybody left, as he was walking back and forth, he said: The believers of Germany are very warm, very sincere, very attracted. They shall be confirmed to teach throughout Europe.

Just then large number of the believers from Esslingen come and the Beloved ever kind and compassionate received them. He said: They were welcome. They must thank God that meeting like unto this is being held; for this meeting cannot be compared {{p13}} with other meetings. This meeting is for bringing together those souls which are illumined. This meeting is through the power of the Glad-tidings of God. This meeting is for the people of the Kingdom. This meeting is like unto the magnet and the iron. This meeting is like unto the meeting of the rain and the earth. This meeting is like unto the meeting of the fire and the oil. This meeting is like unto the meeting of the breeze and the trees. Therefore it contains many important results. Now its fruits are not seen. When the rain is falling, the wise man will see the transformation of the earth into verdant meadows and flowers. At present it is not known what forces are set to work, ere long it will become {{p14}} apparent. The results of this meeting are the change of the hearts into sweet and verdant flower-gardens; the out flux of the fire of the Love of God, the discovery of the mysteries of the Kingdom; the enfoldment of the knowledge of God; the attainment to eternal life; entrance into the mount of transfiguration; the effulgence of rays of the Sun of Reality; the acquirement of the excellences of the worlds of humanity and the realization of everlasting felicity. He hoped that through this system of Bahai education may become the light reflecting lamps of the assemblage of mankind.

To Mr. Herryel he laughingly remarked that the German Bahais were coming here as {{p15}} such numbers that the proprietor may leave the premises and run away for his life, saying I leave the hotel in the hand of Mr. Herryel and his friends! No doubt everybody was wondering, what was the business of all these people coming here every morning.

After our delightful excursion through the cherry blossom country, we resided the house of the Mother of the wife of the Consul. There all the friends had gathered to take photograph with the Master in the large pack of Wangerlungsh 5. There were so many that we had to divide into seven groups; one for men {{p16}} alone. Then Consul Schmidz took some small photos of the Master under a cherry blossom tree which I hope will turn out to be good.

After drinking tea and thanking everyone, especially the mother of Mrs. Schmidz and the mother of the Consul, the Beloved drove to the home of Mr. and Mrs. Friedrich Schweizer in Karlstrasse 25 Zuffenhousen. They are excellent Bahais. Mrs. Schweizer was simply beside herself with joy. She is filled with the Love of the Master. Consul Schmidz said later that he was a German yet he often wondered at the rapt enthusiasm of these two souls. {{p17}} The Beloved drink a cup of tea and made a few remarks as follow: Here he came to their home! May God encircle it forever with the lights of Truth. May it be blessed always. We have come here in the name of Baha-wllah. Any house in which the name of Baha-wllah is raised, the blessing of God will descend upon it; the divine light will shine upon it, and the Breathes of the holy-spirit will waft over it. Therefore he prayed to God that special blessing may descend upon their home. May it become a heavenly home, may the mention of Baha-wllah be made always in that home.

We drove back to the hotel {{p18}} and after a little rest, at half-past eight we were again on our way to Oberes Museum. This was a public meeting arranged by a committee of Bahai women in the largest hall of the Museum. It was a big, beautiful building. The Master on entering was greeted by the rise of the audience. The big hall was filled to the door. More than 800 hundred people were present and the Beloved gave a stirring and eloquent address on peace and Love. Mr. Ekstein translated again my English and whenever he could not think of the right word, voices were heard again from the front seats and all parts of the Hall, coming to his assistance. After the lecture the Master walked around the audience and shook hand with everyone. {{p19}} This was the largest meeting ever held in Germany in the Bahai Cause and no doubt its results will be immense in the future.

After this meeting the Beloved was driven to Miss Alma Knablock and Miss Doring's apartment for supper at Neue Weinsteizer 23. The apartment is on the fourth floor and after such a strenuous day it was a little difficult to walk up to the fourth floor but in order to make them happy the Beloved did it with pleasure. After a few moments rest, supper was served and the Consul told the Master about the constitutional loves of the country and many legends {{p20}} and stories enacted with different castles.

The story of the Faithful woman appealed the Master. There was a castle which was besieged by an enemy and his army. After some months, at the point of starvation the castle capitulates. The general of the victorious army issued a proclamation that all the women may leave the castle with their most precious possessions. Within half an hour, the women piled out, each holding the hand of her husband or sweetheart or brother. At first, the victor objected to such a proceeding, but when the humanity, sympathy and the humorous situation of it struck him, he laughed heartily and let them go free. After the supper we returned to the hotel. It was rather very late and he went directly on our rooms to sleep.

Dear Harriet!

Here we are in the most beautiful part of Germany! Mergentheim baths! I have never heard its name before and it is only through the heavenly blessing of the Beloved that we are enjoying such a wonderful time! It was about 10:15 this morning when in two of the finest automobiles of Consul Schwarz we left Marquardt Hotel for Mergentheim Baths, a distance of 130 miles from Stuttgart. This was arranged by the insistent invitation of Consul Schwarz who is not only the President of the Mergentheim baths but has the controlling share {{p2}} in the company. In the first car the Beloved, Consul, his wife and daughter, Doctor Fisher and myself and in the second, Mirza Mahmoud, Sayad Assadowllah and Sayad Ahmad Bageroff. We gave up our rooms in the hotel because we are returning tomorrow and leave at 7:54 pm for Budapest. We started from the hotel while it was pouring but after half an hour driving, the air was cleared. Till half-past twelve we drove over rolling green hills, mountains and valleys. The most ideal spots on the face of the earth.

We passed by many villages and towns and here and there I saw women, harrowing the earth, sowing the seeds, driving cattle, cutting the grass; in brief doing all the works that the men generally do in America. {{p3}} It was very interesting to see this because it seemed to be such a common thing here. The daughter of the Consul told me, yes women in this part of Germany do most of the farming and the men are tailors, shopkeepers, etc. I thought, I would like to know whether these women hear anything about the rising of the New Woman, the lofty position that she fills in the modern social world and the demand for suffrage which is carried on like a holy war in England and with dignity and diplomacy in {{p4}} America. Because these German farmerettes seemed so resigned to or rather satisfied with their lots. At half past twelve we arrived at the Hall, a quaint old town and the hotel Lamm and Past stopped for an hour and half to rest and have our lunch. At two o'clock we started again and it was 4 o'clock that we arrived at the most luxurious hotel of Mergentheim.

On the way the Master spoke to Consul about Bismark and how he was enabled to bring the confederation of German principalities through the idea of the unity of language and unity of race. {{p5}} Consul Schwarz was astonished to hear such a clear and loud account from the lips of the Master. The country was again most charming, the scenery very attractive and our eyes were delighted with such green garments of nature. The Beloved looked all the time at the verdant meadows, and was very pleased. He said that God has sent him to Germany during the spring so that he may love every part of it.

Soon the town of Mergentheim become visible on the horizon and after a few minutes we passed through {{p6}} it and reached the hotel which is built on the slope of a hill, overlooking a vast panorama of other hills and valleys, a most attractive situation. The buildings of the Mineral baths are in front. Our rooms having been assigned, the Master drunk a cup of tea and retired. After awhile we walked around the ground, climbed the hills and the Consul took some photos of the Master. He visited the baths and blessed the place. Abdul Baha said that this place was under the protection of God. It will become a very important center. He prayed to Baha-wllah to assist and confirm Consul Schwarz. A Bahai woman from Stuttgart had an interview with the Master. She had came especially here to see the him, showing no matter where the Master goes he was followed by those who desire advice and assistance. He told her to be happy and joyful! Trust in God! He is a faithful friend! He shall never leave her.

The evening the Master heard the history of the development of the baths and how from 1905 to 1911 the list of foreign guests had increased from 700 to 3000 during the season. The baths is for internal maladies, kidney, gall stone, constipation, etc. The mineral water is also bottled up and sold for this purpose. There are electric baths, massage, etc.

At nine o'clock we had our supper and when the Consul related a funny story, and that opened the way for the Master to come back with 6 or 8 funny, side-splitting stories, one after another. The party divided about 10:45, the Master also retiring first to take a bath and then sleep. It was arranged to leave Mergentheim the next day before noon so that we may reach the city in time for Budapest train.

This morning before leaving Stuttgart the Master had a call from a prominent German clergyman who had read the book of some answered questions in French and become greatly interested in the Cause. The Beloved spoke with him on the materialism of the present country and how dogmas and imitations of religions have divided the people. He said that he hoped that the clergyman would become confirmed to awaken those soul, who are sleep {{p9}} and illumine with the light of spirituality the German Empire! Two little gems of heavenly thought were left behind by the Master in Stuttgart that are translated here for the benefit of all. The first was in the book of Mr. and Mrs. Friedrich Schweizer of Fuffenhousen, a town near Stuttgart. They are simply lovers of this Cause. They are like two shining lamps, two brilliant stars. Their faces show the love they have in their hearts for the Master. They are most joyful. They radiate happiness. {{p10}} Here is the prayer written by the Beloved in their book: "O God! Endear this maid - servant of Thine in Thy Kingdom. Verily her heart is filled with Love and Happiness. Bless her family and encircle her husband with the Glances of Thy Providence."

In the book of Miss Anna Kostleir he wrote: O Thou Kind Lord! Accept this pure and holy girl in Thy new Kingdom. Make her beloved by all and glorify her in their sight. Intoxicate her with the overflowing cup of Thy Love. Confer upon her tumultuous joy and irresistible attraction. Grant her an eloquent tongue and suffer her to become an embodiment of wisdom and divine understanding so that she may arise to diffuse the sweet Fragrances of the Paradise of Abha!

HOTEL MARQUARDT H. & O. Marquardt STUTTGART April 8th 1913 on train toward Budapest

{{p1}}

Dear Harriet!

With hearts full of love, with memories encircled by the devoted services of the German friends, with minds illumined by the light of hospitality they have shown toward us we have departed from Stuttgart tonight at 8 o'clock while more than one hundred Bahais were gathered at the station to say Godspeed to Our Beloved. What wonderful Bahais these people have made of themselves! It seems they are the possessors of all the divine attributes. It was a compliment when the Master said: The German Bahais are angels. During our 8 days' sojourn in Stuttgart, we observed every mark of love from the Bahais and respect from the outsiders.

This morning I awoken in Mergentheim at 4:30 and looking out of my window I felt the great calmness of nature which steals over one in such quiet and faraway places; then I prayed for all the believers in America, that they may become confirmed in the good-pleasure of our Master. I wrote a few letters and went out to see the Beloved, his room being in another wing of the building. As I entered, he was also looking out of the window listening to the sweet melodies of the nightingale which are found in these enchanting woods and forests. They sing very charmingly and as the Persians and lovers of this bird, the Master remarked, they would give anything in the world to come here and enjoy this earthly paradise. He thanked Baha-wllah, he said, that he has established such a great bond of love and communication {{p3}} between the people of the East and the West, otherwise what relation exists between Consul Schwarz and us! It is the power of Baha-wllah that has made possible this! You must appreciate the value of this Bounty so that day unto day it may become greater and more widely spread. Last night and yesterday he was thinking all the time over certain news that he had received.

The weather in Mergentheim was cool and vitalizing and this morning's air was bracing. Consul Schwarz took us around to show his mineral water factory. The water is bottled and dispatched all over Germany for internal maladies. The physician of the place was introduced to the Master. He told him: He must feel very happy because everyone comes here to seek health and he was channel to whom they received health. He was a dispenser {{p4}} of health! He prayed to God that he may be always successful in his mission and that this place prosper and develop!

After breakfast the special book in which noted guests write their names was brought to the Master. It was opened in 1911 by the Emperor of Germany and his royal train who stayed here for a few days. The following short prayer was written in it by a different kind of an Emperor. O Almighty! Abdul Baha arrived in this hotel and observes the utmost of consideration on the part of everyone. For one night he rested here. O God! make this hotel blessed and successful. All maids and servants were called and the Master gave money to each one. After taking a photograph in front of {{p5}} the hotel, we started our drive of 130 miles back to Stuttgart.

This time we took a more picturesque road and we saw yet, more charming, more beautiful, grand scenes of nature! Suddenly we observed that the other car which was following us disappeared. We slowed down but no use. In order to wait for them to catch up, we stopped at the village of Weinsburg in a little hotel called "Casthofz Tranble v. Fr Woforth". The Master rested in room No.10, drunk a cup of milk, visited for a few minutes at the home of Theobald Kerner, a writer of great fame in these parts but dead for the last 20 years. His home is a little museum containing his personal belongings. The Master walked through the room and was interested in everything.

Seeing our Persian friends not caught up with us, we telephoned to two village through which we passed to learn whether they had any accident. No! They had seen car passing by. Of course we concluded that they must have returned to the city by the same road we came to Mergentheim. Starting again we passed by Beilingen where an enormous factory for generating electrical power is being installed by Consul Schwarz and a number of Capitalists. The factory will distribute electricity to 105 town and villages and will cost 7 million pounds when finished. The Master came down and blessed the ground. Hundreds of men were busy installing machinery and digging the foundation etc. It was 1:30 pm when we reached at the house of the Consul and found the Persians already there 2 hours and half ahead of us. The Master was very tired and after a little rest, lunch was served. Bageroff and myself went out to send away a few telegram to Budapest.

According to telegrams received from Budapest there have been articles in Hungarian papers about the Beloved's arrival. Mr. L. Stark is the man, a Hungarian by birth who was arranging the program. In one telegram he says: "Everything ready. Lecture rooms, translators, reception, newspapers, over one thousand invitations issued." In another telegram he says: "Thursday evening theosophical society; friday evening public meetings of different societies. Preparing everything, all the friends are very happy." In another telegram he says: "Newspapers announcing arrival and lecture". Mr. Stark is a good Bahai and full of enthusiasm. It is mainly due to his tireless effort and work that the Master is going to Hungary. This again will show how one sincere man can draw the Master with the power of his love. I told the Beloved, it seems to me the sudden appearance of this man was the most wonderful thing, almost a miracle! Where this man Stark came from? He said: God had sent him. He was an angel in disguise. Wait a few years after my trip to America and Europe many great personage shall arise to serve the Cause.

At 4:30 the Master come out of his room and met several of the friends who had come to see him. We told them that he was most pleased with the believers of Stuttgart. They were attracted and sincere. After his departure they must all arise to serve the Bahai Cause with great firmness and let nothing on earth them. To Mr. Ekstein who wanted to go next year to Dresden, near Saxony to teach he said: This will be very good. He will ever expect to receive good news from him. Miss Anna Kosthin brought the photos of the children's party in Esslingen. They were very fine. The other photos were also brought in and they all have turned out to be very good. The Master was most pleased unto them. Everything in Stuttgart, he said was excellent and now even their photos are very good indeed. Miss Knoblock and Miss Kosthin had a long interview. They asked several questions which were answered to their satisfaction.

At 7 o'clock we were all ready to leave and the Consul took us in his car and in a few minutes we arrived at the station; the train leaving at 7:54. Group after group, the friends arrived carrying a bouquet of flowers and before all the people unembarrassed they went kissing the Master's hand. By half past seven more than one hundred had gathered the railroad officials and the passengers wondering of the strange spectacle! The train being ready, the Beloved with the rest of us started to get on the platform. The largest bouquet of flowers was brought by one of the friends.

Miss Knoblock, Miss Kosthin and Mrs. Schwizer and a Bahai young man requested the Master to accompany us for a few stations! It was a most moving scene of departure! Many were weeping, kissing fervently the {{p12}} hem of his garment! When the train pulled out all the hands, handkerchiefs and hats were up in the air waving farewell, farewell till we meet again! The Master's compartment was a rose-garden. The farewell scene of the Stuttgart friends, I shall never forget, because it was so genuine, so heartfelt, so spontaneous, such a great reality, showing how them people of the North were set aglow with the Fire of the Love of God!

I think one of the most original ideas ever conceived was that of Esslingen Bahais. Our train was going to pass through their station but would not stop there nevertheless all the friends are {{p13}} there just the same. Miss Kosthin was in the secret and knew all about it; she was their representative but she did not tell us anything about it till one station before Esslingen. Then she asked the Master to come near the window for a minute or two and as the train rushed forward by the platform, ever so many white handkerchiefs and flowers like buds were waving in the air! At that very moment, the Master realizing the situation waved back his blessing to them and Oh his radiant, surprised happy face! It was only for one second, but its memory will lasts with me all through my life! I did not see their faces but it seemed each one of them was an angel of light and love swinging through the air. One station after Esslingen our friends left us to return to their homes and relate the wonderful story of Abdul Baha. Surprise and love for now they could feel happy that they also surprise their Beloved on his departure, that way he surprised them on his arrival! It was about 9:30 and the train was going on rapidly when the Master called me to his compartment and for half an hour I spoke to him about the latest news of the Cause in America and the letters received. Being very tired, because the extraordinary auto trip of the last two days, he desired to sleep and I retired.

I slept too and at 2 am the Austrian custom officials awakened us to ask whether we had anything liable to duty. Having had my sleep I thought I would start to write this communication now. It is 4 am, {{p15}} Sayad Assadollah, Mirza Mahmoud and Mr. Heirigil who accompanies the Beloved are sleeping and I am writing. At 8:10 we will reach Vienna and after one hour will start for Budapest. I believe on our return the Master may stay a day or two in Vienna.

Dear Harriet!

Now the horizon of Budapest is illumined with the world-illuminating rays of the Sun of the Center of the Covenant. For the next few days this city is the field upon which the spiritual forces of the Beloved will play and interplay. The ground is prepared, the people ready, the public informed and the Master as a Supreme General will direct his forces. Of all the places in the world Hungary is the land which needs these Teachings of fraternity. It is a land torn up by strife and contention. Religious prejudices hold high position and national hatred rankle in the breasts. The Master comes as a spiritual physician, carrying in his hand {{p2}} the balm of goodwill toward all men; as a divine peacemaker, holding aloft the olive-branch of Eternal Peace; as a unifier, showing to all mankind the benefits of corporation and reciprocity; as a heavenly musician, ravishing the hearts of men with his sublime strains and sweet melodies; as the sun of reality, radiating his rays upon all the people of the world; as a lover of the human kind, teaching the religion of love; as an ideal gardener, scattering the seeds of amity and affection in the pure ground of the hearts. In Budapest the spread of the Bahai Teachings will have a lasting effect, in creating better feeling amongst various antagonistic sects. Moreover the introduction of the Cause to Hungary has fallen in good hands. It will have an extraordinary progress.

This morning we found ourselves in the train and in Austria. Just to think that the Master is on the Austrian land thrills me with joy! Will wonder never cease! The Austrian government has mobilized four hundred and fifty thousand men ready to invade Turkish dominion at a moments notice. Abdul Baha is invading the Austrian dominion without a moment's notice but as a Conqueror of Peace. He has love to enlist and enrol soldiers in his army but soldiers that give life! Under his universal flag all the nationalities are gathering, singing anthem of brotherhood and he has love his Austrian-Hungarian contingents. They will ere long defeat and put to rout {{p4}} the demons of war.

The country of Austria is very beautiful, the mountains and meadows are very green, the calm rivers are flowing, the houses and cottages are all white. There are many large buildings which we were told are no other than Convents. At ten minutes after eight we entered the Station of Vienna. Here the brother of Ahmad Bageroff with his wife and three children welcomed the Beloved with happy faces and bouquets of flowers. In order to leave for Budapest, we had to go to another station in the other side of the city. We got two taxis and in great hurry speeded along. I was pleased with the cleanliness of the streets of Vienna and the architectural beauty of its buildings. Having arrived at the {{p5}} other station, it was 8:50 when we pulled out but I made a mistake in not taking the train of 9:05; because the latter would have entered the station in which the friends were waiting to greet the Master while the one we took entered another. I did not know Budapest had two stations. In Hungary the country we passed through, was plain meadows and not mountainous, nor as cultivated as other parts of Europe we have seen so far. On the way Mr. Herrigel spoke about the Cause with many Hungarians {{p6}} and several were presented to the Master and he spoke to them on the Teachings.

The train entered the station at 1:40 pm and finding no one to greet the Master but knowing the name of the hotel in which rooms are engaged, we hired two carriages and drove through the principle streets of Budapest till we reached the Ritz Hotel which is one of the most elegant. It is built on the bank of Danoe, a fine broad river which empties itself into the black sea. On the other side of the river, on a high hill facing the hotel is the wonderful palace of Emperor Joseph of Austria-Hungary. The room of the Master was No. 47 on the second floor overlooking {{p7}} the palace, the noble river and the country all around. I can say that it is one of the most beautiful views we have ever seen. The room was full of light for the sun shone through the windows. The Master pronounced the view as most beautiful and when in the evening the electric lights were lighted, it was sublime! It was a calm night, the crescent moon was silvering the clear heaven and the stars were radiant, the little cargo steamers were passing before the eyes. For a long time the Master stopped before the window and watched the scene. Then he turned to us and said: It was a good night, {{p8}} only three months ago this hotel was opened and so everything was new and up to date. Hardly we have arrived at the hotel when word was sent up that Mr. and Mrs. L. Stark with friends have just returned from the other station and would be honoured to be received by the Master. Beside Mr. and Mrs. L. Stark there were Sirdar Unbrasingh Sher-gil of Majitha, a Hindu nobleman of Lahor, well educated, Dr. Kunos Igna'ez, President of Oriental Commercial University, Mr. Edward W. Moore, the manager of mining Machinery of America, Prof. Kovacsne, Balogh Wilma, Dr. Germanus Gyula, Alexander Simouyi, Editor of Pesti Hirlap and several other prominent men and women of Budapest. After a few moments the Master received them. Prof. {{p9}} Germanus greeted the Master in the names of different humanitarian societies; Mr. Stark gave me several Hungarian newspapers which contained notices of the Master's expected arrival and they were first translated into English and then into Persian.

Then the Beloved said: He was very grateful to their spiritual susceptibilities. For them he begged invisible confirmations. He had the greatest longing to meet them; but there were many difficulties in the way; praise be to God they are removed and now he found himself in their midst. Mr. Stark said that they were exceedingly {{p10}} grateful that the Beloved had accepted these hardships of travelling. There was no doubt that he was working for the public weal and for the progress of humanity. Therefore they thanked him for this self-sacrifice. This in itself was a great example to them so that they may know how to live and act. The Beloved said: He hoped that every one of them may become assisted in the service of the world of humanity. Today there is no greater Cause than the oneness of the world of humanity and Universal Peace. They must set the souls free from ancient religions, racial political and patriotic prejudices. As long as these prejudices lasted it would be impossible for the human world to find peace and security. {{p11}} Here in Hungary they must emphatically proclaim the oneness of human race, the oneness of native land and the oneness of kind; that they were all the fragrance of one Adam, the sheep of one Shepherd and the trees of one Orchard. God loved all his sheep. They were very dear and beloved in His estimation while the real Shepherd is kind, why should the sheep fight amongst themselves? The Sun of God shines upon all, the rain of his Mercy pours upon all, the Zephyr of his Favour wafts over all. He is the Universal Provider, the Great Educator, the heavenly {{p12}} teacher. While God is kind to us, why should we be unkind? God has created this humanity. It is his edifice. Is it just to destroy God's home? How short-sighted this. We are not only satisfied with political murder but we glorify in it, haunting that we have killed so many thousand people, that we have razed to the ground so many villages! It is similar to the criminal glory of a wolf, because he has killed so many lambs, because he has devoured 200 sheep. God has created us that we may be loving and compassionate toward each other and not like blood-thirsty animal suck the blood of our fellowmen. {{p13}} The Beloved continues to talk and those who were present were taking notes. It was again most interesting to see the words of life translated first into English and then my English into Hungarian by Mr. Stark. The Hungarian language sound strange but they tell me it is very poetic and flowery. It has however most unusually long words almost unpronounceable.

A photographer from one of the papers requested to take the picture of the Master in front of the hotel which he graciously consented. The first was taken with all the people around {{p14}} the Master, the second with only the Persians, the third alone. Coming back we had our dinner, inviting Mr. Moore with us. A Hungarian journalist came and the discussion took a wide range, the object and some of the Bahai principles. His interview will appear tomorrow morning in the journal called Pesti Hirlap. Later Mr. Stark, and his wife, Mr. Moore and others came and the Beloved talked with them on subjects which will take many more pages to write but my eyes are tired and I must retire to get a few hours sleep.

Hotel Ritz Budapest April 10th 1913

{{p1}}

Dear Harriet!

It is past midnight and I have just returned from a Hungarian supper given to the Persian party of the Beloved after a most interesting meeting in the headquarter of the Theosophical Society of Hungary. They are an intelligent set of people, full of animation and zeal. Amongst them there are many young men and women who are working with main and force for the spread of universal brotherhood. They listened with deepest interest to the heavenly address of the Beloved. It was an exposition of divine and material civilization; that although {{p2}} material civilization at present is at a standstill in the Orient, yet it was cradled and originated there and slowly marched toward the western climes. On the other hand the founders of divine civilization were always born in the East. He elucidated the benefits drawn from both kinds of civilization and that in this age they must go hand in hand. Easily, without anyone noticing it, he took another topic, weaving it dextrously into the main subject. He said, that in man there are three realities, physical reality, intellectual reality and spiritual reality. The animals had only one reality and is deprived of the other two. The physical man is co-partner with animal, in sharing the physical reality. Because {{p3}} animals are materialistic, aggressive and blood thirsty so likewise those men who engage in killing their fellowmen are no less and no greater than animals. They are mere brutes, pure and simple. Never you must think for a moment that these man who have been fighting in the Balkans are intelligent beings. They are ferocious beasts. The second reality is Reason or intellect. The founders of this school are the philosophers. The third reality is spiritual and the founders have ever been the prophets of God who have appeared from time immemorial in the orient.

In introducing the Master, Mr. {{p4}} Nadler Robert, the President of Theosophical Society of Hungary said: On behalf of all the brothers and sisters of the Theosophical Society in Hungary many of whom many are present I bid welcome our Master Abdul Baha. I have no doubt that I express the feelings of those who are present that it is the greatest privilege of our lives and our supreme happiness to entertain in our midst one who is such a pure channel of the spirit of God. Many of us have studied these Teachings and have come to admire its progressiveness and its lofty idealism. Last year Mr. Stark kindly delivered before the members of our Society a delightful address on the Bahai Movement which appeared in {{p5}} its entirety in our monthly review. Many of us have imagined that the Oriental nations have instead of going forward, they are taking backward steps. This may be true in certain isolated cases; for all the latest inventions have appeared in the West, great factories have reared their smoking chimneys to the sky, industrialism has advanced and the commercial world by reason of modern discoveries has revolutionized the old methods. However, there are still many ideal Treasures in the East of which we are completely deprived. The western people in striving to discover {{p6}} the physical laws of nature have completely forgotten the spiritual laws of inner life and have overlooked idealism and absolute Reality. We are doing now our utmost effort to gain the lost ground and for this very reason it is with the greatest pleasure that we welcome in our midst the noblest and the sublimest Representative of the spiritual life of the East and we hope that he will feed us tonight with the ideal sustenance which God so abundantly has showered upon him. Abdul Baha, I welcome you with all my heart and soul. Before this introduction Mr. Robert in Hungarian language spoke briefly of the history of the Cause and its marvellous progress in this century.

When the Beloved finished speaking the President in thanking him said: My dear Master. My tongue is unable to express our thanks for the eloquent and righteous words you have spoken to us tonight. It is true that I am expressing the feelings of all those who are present that we are deeply grateful to God for this rare privilege of your presence. When the heart is filled with feelings, the tongue is mute and dumb, because it cannot find adequate words to clothes his thoughts and longing. Therefore I only thank you in the name {{p8}} of those who are present.

The Master answered: Our hearts like unto pure mirrors receive the impressions and these spiritual images are reflected from one mirror upon another without the medium of language. As spiritual susceptibilities have encircled us tonight and as the mirrors of the hearts are pure, therefore we can understand each other. No matter how eloquent and oratorical the outward tongue, it cannot adequately express the riches of the spirit. The eloquent tongue is the tongue of consciousness. Praise be to God that the tongue is explaining the real feelings of the hearts and expresses our spiritual susceptibilities. Therefore {{p9}} I too with the tongue of consciousness express my gratitude to you in being so patient and so good to listen to me tonight. I shall never forget this love on your part and I will ever remember you and will beg for all of you divine Confirmations. It was announced that all those who would like to see the Beloved may call on him in the mornings from nine to twelve. After shaking hands with all the present members of the Society we departed for the hotel.

In the morning we were happy to see the Master in good {{p10}} health and happy. He spoke to us about Baha-wllah and while looking from the window upon the broad river, he said, how the Blessed Perfections loved such places and how he would have enjoyed these scenes, were he here. Then Mr. Herrigel came in and he translated two German papers that had quite long articles about the Cause. The rest were in Hungarian. Here are the names of some of the papers which I am sending you in a separate package; Theosofia; Magyar Hirlap; Az Ujsag; Nap; Pesti Hirlap; Neues Pester Journal; Pester Lloyd; Pesti Napld; Pesti Hirlap, Vilag, Pesti Tuiker. Strange names and papers to contain articles on the Cause! You may find in New York some Hungarian gentlemen to translate them for you.

Mr. and Mrs. Moore with his two boys of eleven and seven years called on the Beloved. The Master immediately loved Charles, the smaller boy and carried with him a long conversation about taking him to the Orient, giving him white donkeys and ponies and letting him play with the children on Mount Carmel. While he was sitting on his lap, the Master asked him to let his hands become limp and bring his head forward, when suddenly he took one of the hands and gently slap his own face. The boy thought clever trick was played upon him. Speaking to him about the <p12? white small donkeys of Cairo, Abdul Baha told us the following story. There were two men who meet each other in Cairo. A. said to B. that "I saw today in the market three donkeys". "Yes! how did they looked?" B. asked. "The first was a white donkey which was valued for one hundred English pounds, the second was the one I wanted to buy and the third was the owner who did not want to sell it."

About eleven o'clock the Master took us from a walk and the little child, Charles, asked his mother's permission to join us. "All right" the mother answered "you can go and I will wait for you in the hotel till you return.” Later he told his father: Oh! I love the Master very much! I wish so much I could travel with him {{p13}} and speak with him without any interpreter.” The child “Mr. Moore told me in the evening after the Theosophical meeting” is filled with the Master. He speaks of him all the time.

Crossing one bridge over the other side we met our Hindu gentleman and the Master spoke to him about the expectation of the Theosophists in regard to the coming of the Universal Master. The Manifestation of God, he said, is not taught in college. He does not need human knowledge. He is here to teach and not to be taught. He is to lead and not to be led. He is an educator and not educated.

A man came to him and asked for his autograph on a newspaper containing an article on the Cause. I will write my signature in English for you, the Master said. Without hesitation the unknown man answered: In whatever language you write, it is the signature of the Master and of the lover of mankind and I will treasure it just the same.

An Englishman who had lived in Budapest for five years being attracted by the Master’s appearance came to us and spoke, introduced himself. He had a pleasant face and the Beloved spoke with him. “May I come one day and take you around and show you this wonderful palace overhanging above our heads?” Abdul Baha said: You are {{p15}} always welcomed both you and your friends. But can you take us through the Eternal palace of God? That palace is heavenly, it is never destroyed and its foundation is firm! At first our Englishman could not understand what the Master meant but after repeating the same idea in different form, he got a glimpse of it. He said, he will bring his sister and his brother to see the Master tomorrow morning.

The Beloved took a carriage to return to the hotel, because he had an engagement and the little Charles returned with {{p16}} him. The Master had him in his lap, kissing and caressing him and saying sweet words to him. When we arrived Mrs. Anna Fipernowsky of the International Peace Bureau of Bern, Prof. Nadler Robert, Dr. Geza Vikar, Mr. L Stark were waiting for his arrival. He took them with himself to his room and after talking over the arrangement of the meeting tonight, the Hungarian history was discussed. Abdul Baha told them that he had many intimate friends amongst the Hungarians. They were his intimate associates. When Russia, Germany and Austria combined together and crushed the Hungarian longing for Independence, many generals and soldiers {{p17}} migrated to Turkey and were received with great honor. The Turkish government gave to each one an important military position and many of them were given titles of Pashas. But these Hungarian immigrants changed their names and choose for themselves, Turkish names. He mentioned the names of several of those men who were well-known to our present friends and who knew him most intimately. They were all delighted with the sympathy {{p18}}

and knowledge of the Master and there and then an invisible link of friendship was established! The Master had his lunch in the hotel all alone. In the afternoon the Hindu gentleman, Nandor de Eizel Secretary of the Consul General of Turkey, Abdul Latif Effendi, the President of the Islami Association and the Consul General of Turkey who is at the same time the Persian Consul came and prayed their homage and respect to the Beloved and each one stared a long time with him.

One of the Hungarian papers had a story that the Master's {{p19}} wealth was valued at fifteen million dollars. When we told him this, he had a good laugh over it. "All right", he said. "We have them a good credit? May we borrow a million from the Hungarian National Bank?" When the waiter come to me with the above story, asking me to verify it. I said: The whole world belongs to Abdul Baha. He is richer than all the Kings and Emperors of the Earth. They are all beggars in His Presence. He stared at me with wonder and surprise in his face. Was that really so?" {{p20}} "Sure" I answered. "Then, do I have a chance to enter into his service?" he eagerly asked.

At five o'clock the Master with all of us following him walked along France Joseph strass in front of the river. It is the promenading boulevard of the whole city. Several people accosted him and talked. Especially there was an old man with white beard and with fez exactly like the Master, except that his fez was red. He was a Hungarian and because he had stayed 20 years in Constantinople and associated with the Persians, he could speak the language quite freely. Arriving in the hotel the Master rested for a while and the Mr. Stark and Mr. Nadler Robert came to take him to the Theosophical Society.

Dear Harriet!

Although few had heard about the Bahai Cause in Budapest before the Beloved's arrival, for the last three days the interest on the part of the public has been growing in size and dimension. The papers have written interesting articles and today I mailed to you a big package of German and Hungarian newspapers containing some long and short accounts. They are uniformly dignified in tone and many people have come to the hotel because they have read articles in the dailies and are very much attracted to the Cause. The Beloved seeing this manifest interest on the part of public is very pleased and said that, the future of the Cause in Hungary will be very great and many people shall enter the Kingdom of God. When the seeds are scattered in a pure and fertile ground they will grow very quickly.

Today I received a letter from one of the City of Hungary called Vac'z. The writer say, "I have read in yesterday's daily papers something about" Bahaismus" which greatly interested me. In fact, I feel that “Bahaismus” is the real, true religion which fills the mind with real, lofty ideals and assists mankind to develop its better self. I would therefore esteem it a favor if you should kindly write me where I could obtain the ‘Bahaismus’ literature”.

{{p3}}

As a result of last night’s meeting in the Theosophical Society at 20 Iranyi Utca many people came this morning to hear the Master and ask questions on various puzzling problems which today are occupying the minds of the public. A Hungarian who spoke French fluently asked about Love and God. The Master promptly told him that he to love God let him love his fellowmen. In them he can see the image and likeness of God. If he was eager to serve God let him serve mankind; let him lose his self in the self of God. When the aerial mariner steers his airship skyward, little by little, the in harmony and incongruity of the world of nature are lost and before his astonished eyes, he sees, widespread, the wonderful, harmonious panorama of God’s creation. Likewise when the student of the Path of Reality has attained to the loftiest summit of divine Love, he will not look upon the ugliness and misery of mankind, he will not observe any differences, he will not see any racial and patriotic misfits but he will look upon humanity with the glorified vision of a seen and a prophet. Let us all strive that we may attain to this highest pinnacle of ideal and spiritual life.

{{p4}}

Some of the newspapers containing articles on the Cause were translated to the Master and although he did not make any comment, was pleased with their contents.

{{p5}}

Prof. Germanus and a friend of his who was going to the Orient came and the master spoke to them on the Eastern customs and it was arranged that he would be taken away to the Parliament building at 7 o’clock that evening where he was going to address a public meeting in the house of the Representatives of the Hungarian nations.

{{p6}}

A large delegation of the Theosophists belonging to the White Lodge of the Star of the East were presented to the Beloved with bouquets of flowers in their hands. Their leader, a bright and intellectual woman asked the Master what the conditions for the coming of the Great Master were. “We are taught” she said, ”That soon the Saviour of the world shall come and once a week we gather together and contemplate on the coming of the Master. Our next meeting will be tomorrow at 6:30 pm and we will be greatly honored if you could come. The Master accepted graciously their invitation and then said: Praise be to God that means were brought about that he may come to Budapest and associate with them. He was very pleased with their last night meeting. It was a most ideal gathering. The spiritual susceptibilities had encircled the hearts. He hoped that day unto day these feelings and communications may increase so that the City of Budapest may become the center of the appearance of the principles of the oneness of the world of humanity and the lights may be spread from this place to all parts of Europe.

{{p7}}

Now as to the coming of the great Master. His appearance must be dependent upon the realization of certain conditions. Investigate the reality and in whomsoever these conditions are fulfilled, know ye of a certainty that he is the Great Master.

Firstly: That great Master will be the Educator of the world of humanity.

Secondly: His teachings must be universal and confer illumination upon humankind.

Thirdly: His knowledge must be innate and spontaneous and not acquired.

Fourthly: He must answer the questions of all the ages, solve all the difficult problems of humanity and be able to withstand all the persecutions and sufferings heaped upon him.

Fifthly: He must be a joy-bringer and the Herald of the Kingdom of Happiness.

Sixthly: His Knowledge must be infinite and his wisdom all comprehensive.

Seventhly: The penetration of His Word and the potency of influence must be so great as to humble even his worst enemies.

Eighthly: Sorrows and tribulations must not vex him. His courage and conviction must be God-like. Day unto day he must become firmer and more zealous.

Ninthly: He must be the Establisher of Universal Civilization; the Unifier of religions, the standard-bearer of universal Peace and the embodiment of all the highest and noblest virtues of the world of humanity. Wherever you find these conditions realized in a human temple turn to him for guidance and illumination.

The listeners were touched extremely but if I had my way, I would have cried at the top of my voice, that person, that Great Master they are so anxious about his coming was before their very eyes. The desire of their hearts hath come, why this needless expectation?

Mr. O.M.A. Frosell who met the Master the other day in the street came to see him with his brother. They are two very excellent young men and are much attracted. After welcoming them he said: It is very good that we made each other's acquaintance without any formal introduction, right in the street. This was much better you have a very progressive city. it is very delightful, the inhabitants also are wide-awake. Praise be to God that in Budapest one feels the spiritual emotions; many people are investigating the fundamental realities of life; their desire is to reach at the core of everything. Hungary has given us many thinkers, many linguists, generals and dramatists. I hope they will become informed with the world of God, be acquainted with the Mysteries of the Kingdom. May they become radiant, illumined and Merciful! In short, he had grown to love Budapest and its inhabitants; Stuttgart and its people. Just as there are political treaties between European nations, may heavenly treaties bind them eternally together. The heavenly treaties are inviolable and cannot be dissolved, but political treaties may be broken roughshod within a few hours. It was his hope that those indissoluble treaties may be created between all the people. Now in European countries, materialism is stalking abroad, seemingly victorious; then the ideal powers of spirituality will gain the ascendancy!

He asked whether the Master had seen any of the sight of the beautiful Budapest. He answered that he had come here to see men and not piles of stones and clay. These buildings you can find everywhere; for his part he was searching for men. Buildings are many, men are few. There are even so many palaces in this world. There have been great palaces built by the ancient Kings and today not a stone has been left to tell the sad story of their decay. The present palaces will go through the same process of destruction. When you lay the foundation of a wonderful palace, at that very moment you must think that a day shall come- it may be a hundred years, one thousand years- ten or 20 thousand years- when not one stone of your palace will be left.

But the divine Palace shall never be destroyed, its traces are eternal. He desired them to see that palace. That everlasting palace is the reality of man which reality is indestructible. Therefore he was searching throughout the world to find men and women in whom the divine palace was completed. In this heart of every man and woman the construction of this heavenly palace was going on. Praiseworthy deeds and philanthropic actions were the materials with which the palace was built. Vices and negligence of God's laws were the axes with which the very foundation of this eternal palace laid by the hand of God was uprooted.

Amongst those who were present was a young man who had traveled throughout the world and spoke many language. The following Conversation was carried along between him and the Master to the delight and profit of all:

A.B.: Now that you have seen many parts of the world, I hope you will also make a voyage to the country of Baha.

M.F.: I have never heard the name of such a country in my life.

A.B.: How strange! There are thousands of people who have been there and upon their return have given glowing accounts of their experiences.

M.F.: Have they written any books?

A.B.: I think they have. But they could not find adequate words to describe their impressions.

M.F.: Have you seen any of these travelers after their return from the city of Baha.

A.B.: Yes.

M.F.: What do they say?

A.B.: They say, the country of Baha is the most beautiful and artistic city they have ever seen.

M.F.: I would like to get some particulars about it. When could I inform myself? I may decide to go there if it is worth while.

A.B.: They have reported that the country of Baha has the most equitable weather, perennial spring reigns throughout all the seasons; there is neither the heat of the summer nor the forlorn outlook of autumn or the frost of the winter. Its gardens are ever abloom, its fragrant flowers are imperishable, its fountains are at all time flowing, its birds are always singing, its happiness is not alloyed with sorrow, its sun is never set, its stars are ever twinkling, its day is not followed by any night, its moon is eternally full.

M.F.: Oh! How wonderful! I would like to go there! It must be an ideal country!

A.B.: It is a very extraordinary country. Its inhabitants are all angels and they speak one universal language.

M.F.: Then everybody understands each other? It is not like Hungary where one must speak many languages? How can I reach then quickly?

A.B.: Come! Come! I will be thy guide. I will take thee through its broad avenues shaded by verdant, never-fading trees. I will unfold before thy vision, the most heavenly panorama, the like of which thou hast never seen. I will, little by little teach thee the secrets of the ever-changing hues of its flowers, the murmuring of its breezes and the divine notes of its music. I will take thee through its imperial palaces and I will show thee the most wonderful scenes.

M.F.: When should I make myself ready to start with you?

A.B.: Now.

M.F.: I believe my brother would like to accompany us. May I go and fetch him?

A.B.: All right.

When these people left a delegation of more than 25 young men from the Oriental Commercial University headed by a very excellent orator entered the room. He had a nosegay of roses in his hand and while all the rest were standing behind him he delivered a very powerful address greeting "Our prophet from the Orient" in the warmest and sincerest terms and then offered the nosegay into his hands.

The Master delivered in turn a strong speech on the closer relations between the East and the West and hoped they will do their share in this great service.

The President of the Touranian Society with a high military officer and several others were presented. After hearing the Master speak on the two essential aspects of universal Peace Mr. Paikert Alajos requested him to deliver an address on Monday at 6 pm before the members of Touranian Society in the Senate chamber of Hungary.

{{p13}}

Many more people were presented and at last it was long after one o'clock before the Beloved could free himself to go to the studies of Mr. Nodler Robert in the National School of Art so that he may make a painting of him. Mr. Robert was with us and when we arrived he had everything ready and started to work. After an hour, we returned to the hotel, the Master ate his lunch and retired to rest to be ready for four o'clock to go out with one Indian nobleman to call on Prof. Vambery and Prof. Ignaj Goldziher.

We found Prof. Vambery home. He was waiting. He is a famous orientalist, is 82 years now, has traveled throughout Persia, Turkey, Russia etc. for many years has written many authoritative books on Eastern question speaks Persian and Turkish like natives and has been in Persia for more than 14 years under the guise of a Mohamadan servant. For one month he was the guest of the chief of the Ulemas of Esphahan and nobody detected him that he was a European. He considered this day as the greatest day of his life, because the Beloved called on him. They talked together more than one hour on Persia, on America etc. He showed us the photograph that was taken of him when he was travelling as a Mohamadan Mollah. Prof. Vambery is very famous throughout Europe for his services and his works and his word has been always accepted on Eastern question as authoritative.

From there we drove to Prof. Goldziher. Mr. Stark and Prof. Germames were waiting at the door to greet the Master. He was taken up stair and introduced to Prof. Goldziher. He is an Arabic scholar of great erudition and his library of the Bahai literature was quite unique. Here we found several works of Baha-Ullah translated into Russian, especially the Ketab-El Akdas; here I saw a copy of the Star of the West having the article on the departure of Mr. Chase; many newspaper clipping, especially the one containing the Master's letter to Cornegic and then a letter from Mrs. True giving a short account of the Mastekal Azkar.

Prof. Goldziher has delivered a series of lectures on Islam and one of these addresses is on the Bahai Movement. These articles have been already published a book. The book is in German and as he told me, a Philadelphia lady is now engaged in translating it into English. The Master carried along with him a most interesting conversation in Arabic on the early history of the Cause and he was so happy to have the Beloved in his home.

{{p16}}

From here we drove to the old Parliament building. at first the Master was taken into one of the Committee rooms and the chairman of the meeting was introduced. Doctor Geeswive is a most prominent Catholic priest and is the president of the Peace Society of Hungary. When the Master entered the Parliament there were more than 800 people present and every lady spontaneously arose from his seat. After the introduction by the President, the Master delivered a powerful address on international Peace, Esperanto, Suffrage and the closer relation between the East and the West. When the Master spoke on suffrage the audience became wild with enthusiasm and applauded again and again. It was a remarkable demonstration, considering the fact that the words of the Beloved had to be translated by two interpreters and our Hungarian translator was not at all equal to the task. Mr. Stark translated much better the other night. When the Master finished his talk they applauded for a long time. They left their seats and crowded around the platform. Again the Beloved spoke a few appreciate words of thanks. Entering the private room many prominent men and women came in to thank him for his encouraging words. Tired and fatigued from the excessive amount of talking we returned to the hotel, had our dinner and went to sleep.

Hotel Ritz Budapest April 12th 1913

Dear Harriet!

“The lamp of God is in the utmost of luminosity in the city of Budapest. Large meetings are held and detailed addresses delivered.” This was the text of the telegram which was forwarded by the Beloved to many cities of the East and the West. I am sure all the believers will be delighted to receive this glad news of the spread of the Kingdom of Abha and the further spiritual triumphs of Abdul Baha. His power and majesty, his simplicity and humility are witnessed and admired by all men. People are trying to emulate him in every station in life.

During the days of our passage from New York to England, the Master dictated a number of Tablets for the American believers. They were copied in turn by Mirza Mahmoud and given back to him for correction. For the last four months they were left in his handbag till just a day before leaving the Paris he gave them to me for translation. While in Stuttgart I was so busy that I could not attend to this but today I availed myself of the opportunity and sat behind my writing desk and translated them all. Apropos of this delay, the Master said that he never wrote to the people just for the sake of writing. He had definite, specific object in writing. His letters were the results of deep cogitation and contemplation. Often over one sentence in a letter he thought all night; even it had happened that at times he thought in sleep. Once he wanted to write a letter to a certain important person and he thought over it one year. Another time he wrote a letter to a person and kept it in his handbag for 10 months. The wisdom of these postponements have always appeared later. His letters were the results of deep thought and not the superficial expressions which appeared today and disappeared tomorrow.

One of the interesting personalities that came this afternoon to meet the Master was a Jewish Rabbi. He had heard last night his talk and he came today to agree with him that the equality of the sexes and universal language were not necessary and that Christ of whom he spoke with such reverence did not bring anything new into this world may rather be caused the dispersion of the Jews to the four corners of the earth. The Master listened to him with a twinkle of amusement in his eyes. Then he started to speak and step by step the Rabbi forced to accept the logic of the Beloved and he left the room happy and satisfied. The wonder of the Master lies in the fact that no one leaves his presence with a better sense of defeat, but with a happy heart; happy, because he has been able to learn something he did not know or that he knew only very dimly.

The President of Touranian Society came and another long discussion on the subject of international peace was carried on. "Your aim, of course is the realization of universal Peace. Abdul Baha said, but with what power or with what executive force will you be able to bring it about? He hoped that the President will find this propelling power so that he would be assisted. In the matter of universal Peace, a great universal Power was necessary, which, we may name a "Universal Collection Center". In the past there have appeared several "Collective Centers". These "Collective Centers" not being general in their various aspects have given only limited results. One of the "Collective Centers” has been and is yet considered the “spirit of nationalism”. This “spirit” has brought together the various individual members of different tribes and communities into one “Collective Center” called a “nation”. For example the different petty principalities of Germany for a long time worked against each other’s interests, jealously protecting their so called “freedom”. The “spirit of nationalism” which was meant to become a most powerful “Collective Center” was born through the genius of Bismarck. Again the birth of this “spirit” was evidenced in America in the union of the states through the wisdom of Washington, Franklin and Jefferson. In like manner other nations have come into being at various period of human history when the “spirit of nationalism” was born and the existence of the “Collective Center” felt essential.

Another “Collective Center” is patriotism; the watchword and the battle-cry of the present nations. A third “Collective Center” is politics. It is evident that the interest of one nation is in the loss to another and we can see that as long as these three “Collective Centers” are dominant in the affairs of the world, Universal Peace will not be realized. These “nations” look upon each other with the series of difference; they try to improve the conditions of their native, countries at the expense of others and their interests clash and came within the range of conflict. Therefore all these “collective centers” instead of helping the cause of international Peace they prevent its realization. Consequently in this illumined century, the intellectual evolution of humanity has advanced far enough as to create a “Universal Collective Center” around which all the nations may revolve, thus sacrificing their petty interests for the progress of the whole. When the Beloved went on speaking of Baha-Ullah and the “Divine Universal Collective Center” which he has created and how all the nations and religions will ultimately came under its influence. The audience was astonished at the wonderful felicity of the Beloved’s ideas. “I am really astonished” he said, “to hear such a marvelous exposition of universal Peace from an Easterner and I am more than glad to know that such a universal Cause has appeared in the Orient.”

The Beloved dined in the hotel and at four o’clock, after having tea, he called at the office of Consul General of Turkey. He was a polished gentlemen and was last night in the meeting. He was most pleased because the Master referred to the Balkan situation in his speech.

{{p6}}

After two hours of conversation Abdul Baha attended the meeting of members of the Star of the East in the headquarter of the Theosophical Society. There were a large number a bright-looking men and women, very intelligent and full of animation. The Master sat in a large chair and the meeting was opened by 5 minutes silence after which the President read the following prayer in Hungarian for the coming of the Universal Teacher:

“Master of the Great White Lodge, Lord of the Religions of the World! Come down again to the earth that needs Thee. And help the nations that are longing for Thy Presence. Speak the word of peace that the people may cease from quarrellings. Speak the word of Brotherhood that the warring classes and Castes may know themselves as one. Come in the night of Thy Love Come in the splendor of Thy Power And save the world that is longing for Thy coming Thou the teachers alike of handles and of men.”<<

Another five minutes of silence and then the President requested “the Master to teach us. We are all Thy pupils and are now sitting at thy feet to learn the Mysteries of the Kingdom and of life”. Then the Master stated that was much as they have already heard the name of Baha-Ullah he would like to relate to them tonight the history of his life. It was most wonderful to hear him speak about his great Father. He is the only person who can speak about him with emotions and holy feeling. The address was translated into English and then by a very clever and cultivated lady into Hungarian. She did it very well and I was pleased. The audience listened with the rapt attention seldom witnessed anywhere. They were interested deeply, movingly.

when he finished his great heavenly address, he delivered an invocation in their behalf. Here I give you a translation of prayer:

O Thou Compassionate Lord! Illumine these hearts with the light of the Most Great Guidance! Confer life upon these spirits through the divine glad tidings! Enlighten these eyes by beholding the splendors of Thy Sun! Make these ears hearing by hearkening Thy most glorious Call! Suffer them to enter in the Kingdom of Thy Holiness! Resuscitate them through the Breaths of Thy Holy Spirit! Grant them eternal life! Bestow upon them heavenly perfections! O God! Sacrifice our lives for Thy self! Give us a new spirit! Clear our vision with Thy spiritual Power! Surround us with Thy eternal joy! Confirm us in the service of the world of humanity! Make us the cause of good fellowship between the hearts! O God! Awaken us from the deep slumber of negligence! Suffer us to become merciful and aware! So that one may become informed with the Mysteries of the Holy Books and comprehend the allegories of the spiritual utterances. Verily Thou art the Powerful! Thou art the Giver! And Thou art the Kind!

The President thanked Abdul Baha for his wonderful address and the heavenly benediction of his prayers. “This day will be remembered during all our lives and we request the Master to remember us in his prayers”. After a few more words from the Beloved they all gathered around him, kissing his hands and expressing such deep love and respect that one could never express in words.

On his return to the hotel Sirdor and his wife called on him. Our Sirdor, the Indian gentleman has a very charming Hungarian wife who speaks English fluently and is very talented. They are living happily in Budapest. The Sirdor met her in India and they were married. Both are very much attracted to the Cause and love the Master. They invited him to have tea in their apartment tomorrow afternoon so that he may bless their two months baby. "I want to bring her up as a Bahai" she said. "This is the only religion in the world that I would like her to believe and practice".

Love to all

Ahmad

{{p1}}

Dear Harriet!

As I looked out of the window this morning my eyes beheld a wonderful scene! It was snowing! But how? Already one foot of snow had covered the field and the air was filled with its fleecy white particles! The wind was blowing violently, carrying the snowflakes wither and thither. At this time of the year the snow may not be considered unusual in Hungary but I looked at it with much interest. In reality this year did not experience the severity of winter but for the last three days we have felt it in Budapest. Early in the morning the Beloved called us to him and gave to each a cup of tea. "Come here" he said, "and look out of the window! How all nature, the trees, the mountains, the houses, the Danube, the streets are wearing the white garment of the angels." Snow is the sign of purity. Just as this snow is white so man's consciousness must be adorned with the mantle of purity. This is also a token of the Mercy of God to the people. The future of the Cause in this city will be as white as the garment of the snow with which Budapest is clothed by God.

Speaking about last night's meeting the Master said: If the speaker's intention be pure, if his heart be transparent, no matter through how many translators the words may go, the audience will be touched. After Mohamad, many great orators appeared in the Islamic religion. One of these orators who wielded a tremendous power over his audience, swaying their emotions towards any direction he intended was Hassan Khargani. This orator had a son who had studied philosophy and sciences and considered himself secretly greater than his father. He marveled at the simple words of his father, playing such wonderful affect upon the hearts of his hearers. Then he said to himself, if these people were so touched by the simple preaching of his father, how greatly will they be affected if he preached to them. Then he asked his father to give him permission to go and preach in his stead. The father gladly assented. The son, then ascending the platform took as his text one of the most difficult verses of the Khoran and round it he wove many subtle interpretations, philosophic anxious etc. The audience was not only not moved but to distraction bored at such a dry sermon and instead listening to him the began to speak amongst themselves. He was disgusted and having the platform went home angry with himself and the stupid people. The father knew this but did not say anything. Next day he took the hand of his son and went to the Mosque to preach. As soon as the people saw Hassan Khargani was going to preach, a deep silence fell upon them. Hassan went up to the pulpit and after looking tenderly into the eyes of his audience, he said: My friends! Last night something very important transpired in our quarter. We have a neighbor a very old woman. She is eighty years old; laden with age. She is a holy woman. She prays all night and serves the people all day. She had a goat and her milk was the source of her livelihood. She had no other means of support.

Now, my dear friends, she is sorely tried, because the she-goat died and she is left all alone and helpless in this world. He went on to picture her saintly life, and her unselfish deeds. The audience was so moved by this sniffle story that not only may wept but a crowd came forward offering aid and assistance. When Hassan left the mosque with his son, he turned to him and said: Did you see how a simple story stirred the audience to its depth? You must purify your heart. This is the most important thing, otherwise all your learning and philosophy will not assist you. Now in Budapest the Confirmations of God are with us, otherwise how could a large audience like last night be moved and interested through two translators?

Although the snow was falling heavily, many people from the Esperanto Society and the Theosophical and Peace Societies called on the Master. Almost everyone had either a photograph of Abdul Baha from "Vahan" or a card to be autographed by him. I believe it is a fashion here to request important personages to sign their names on the back of ones card.

{{p4}}

In speaking with the President of the Star of the East he said: I was most pleased with last night's meeting. I spoke to you on the history of the life of Baha-Ullah. Now is the beginning of the progress of the Bahai Cause in Europe; it is the hour of the early morn. Ere long the sun shall rise and station itself in the zest of its glory. During the life of Christ, people did not accept his Cause. They ridiculed him and his disciples. It was only after 300 years that Christianity was established in some parts of Europe but the Cause of Baha-Ullah during the last 60 years has covered the East and the West. While in America we traveled as far as Los Angeles and everywhere we found Bahais, even in the Islands of Honolulu there is a Bahai Assembly. Wherever you go you find these souls working for the progress of humanity and the promotion of international Peace. Now this light is enkindled in Budapest; these seeds are scattered in this field. We have brought this torch to Hungary to ignite the hearts and transform them into palaces of lights. We have carried with us these seeds and have already sown them. I hope they will grow and develop. This great tree was once within a seed.

{{p5}}

To the members of the Star of the East he said: If the Confirmation of Baha-Ullah surround your society, it will develop very quickly and you will be enabled to render great services.

{{p6}}

Several Turks, Arabs and a Persian came to see him. Here in Budapest we have only one Persian, a merchant of rugs by the name of Abbas Aga. He has been here for several years and speaks Hungarian quite well.

{{p7}}

At half past two, the Master accompanied by myself, although cold and snowing called on Mr. Nadler Robert in the College of Art to give him another setting for the very wonderful painting he is making of Abdul Baha. As he lives on the fourth floor and the building had no elevator it was very fatiguing to mount the steps.

{{p8}}

On the way he spoke of the strength of his youth: You are young and strong. When I was at your age I never felt the cold. I loved the snow. I was strong enough to wrestle with a bear. Here with my fist I would have liked to go for him.

After spending more than one hour in the studio we took a carriage to call on our Indian Sorder and his wife at Szilagyi Dextater.

On the way in the carriage the Master spoke very tenderly about Baha-Ullah: For nine years he did not see a green leaf. He loved nature. His sensibilities and powers of observation were miraculous! The tips of his fingers were the most sensitive parts of his holy temple. His sense of smell was most keen. If he walked along this avenue although, his mind was occupied with other thoughts, he would on his arrival home relate most profitably every small detail of the Urobtling life. Often he would order us to go and prepare tea five or six miles away from the city because one could see there a patch of green or a five tree. He would cut a cucumber into two pieces and smell only its odor and enjoy it as though he had eaten it. While dictating Tablets to his secretary at a rapid rate, he had papers in his hand and writing on some entirely different topic and now and then carried an interesting conversation with those who were present and suddenly the would raise his head and point to us from the window a wonderful tall, noble tree in a garden far away. One occupation never prevented him from attending to other things.

Our Indian Sirdor had a beautiful apartment, part Oriental and Western. The Master and the rest of the guests were served tea and refreshments. He looked around the large rooms and after blessing the little baby returned to the hotel.

{{p11}}

In the evening an American and his wife from New York who are traveling through Europe with a few Hungarians called the Master. He spoke to them about the gross materialism of the French people and how the Americans are a noble nation of investigators of Reality. They enjoyed his talk very much; for the materialism of the agnostics was likened into the materialism of the cow who does not know anything about God and is out of touch with His Kingdom. The materialists believe in what they see, so does the cow. The former sees the flower and believes in it, the latter sees the meadow and the cooling spring and believes in it.

Dear Harriet!

The snowstorm continues, the wind is blowing at a terrific velocity. More than 6000 telephone lines are affected, gardens are uprooted and all the blossoming trees destroyed. Much damage is done and communication, by telegraph and telephone is very difficult. I tried to get hold of several people over the phone; it was impossible, the wires are either cut off or disorganized. Availing ourselves of this opportunity this morning, we wrapped packages of Hungarian and German newspapers and the Master attended to his mail.

Notwithstanding the weather several important people came to see him but each one stayed a few minutes and conversation was limited. Last night when the Master was speaking to our American friends on the unreliability of the criterion of the sense, Mr. Moore with his two sons were present. On his return home, he was astonished to hear his eldest son- 11 years old- reciting the talk of Abdul Baha almost word for word to her mother. An American woman, visiting Mr. Moore became so interested that she said that she must call on the Master before he leaves Budapest. This morning she came in led by the child into the Master's presence. She said: Charles is always talking about you, by day and by night!

About noon the weather was cleared and the Master hiring a carriage we drove to the home of the Turkish Consul General to bid him farewell. For a long time they spoke together on the crucial situation of Asia. I have seldom heard the Master speaking with such fiery animation; his facial and hand gestures were the most remarkable. Often when the Master is under the spell of the spirit, every little while, he takes off his turban, arranges his hair and puts it on again. This is done so unconsciously, so gracefully that one is charmed and delighted. He spoke all the time in Turkish, his voice high and sweet, his tone determined and earnest, his face aflame with the light of love and pity, his eyes twinkling like two globes of fire, his countenance now stern, now wreathed with the sun-kissed smiles of the angels, his hands swiftly moving up and down, now showing the palm, again two or three fingers and at all time portraying most graphically his feelings and emotions! When he is swayed by these superhuman inspirations just sit in a corner and oblivious of all other things, watch him.

One of his remarks was the following: Today the armies of Europe, well-drilled, well-provisioned, phalanx-like are similar unto the waves of the ocean-pounding against the shores of Asia. Asia in her present state cannot stand before these irresistible, victory-inspired armies. There is not only the army of war to contend with; there are other more influential, economic armies that surround the Eastern countries. There is an army of commerce, an army of industry, an army of agriculture, an army of sciences and arts. All these well-disciplined hosts, supplied with the latest modern methods and instruments are bent upon great conquests in their respective fields. They are constantly gathering greater momentum to carry their final assault. Asia is pressed from all sides and no matter toward what horizon she may look anxiously for a ray of hope- so that she may be delivered from this death- she cannot see but threatening clouds. The only deliverer for her in this day is the Cause of Baha-Ullah. Because this movement teaches the oneness of the world of humanity and universal Peace. The Asiatic nations must become united together, not against the West, not on the basis of antagonism and religious prejudice. They must become united on the principle of reality, forget all their dogmas and hold fast to one divine Reality. A union of all the Asiatic countries on such a basis of friendship and co-operation with all humanity will be welcomed by the Western nations. But an offensive and defensive union will fail to accomplish this purpose. The greatest means of such a union is the universal language. It is most certain and indubitable that the universal language will completely wipe away all the differences from amongst mankind. This is clear and does not need any proof. Then he spoke on the fundamental unity of the divine religions and how in San Francisco in a Jewish Synagogue, he established this fact. Then speaking about his prison day he said: Abdul Hamad often used to say: "What can I do with this man! I have imprisoned him in the barrack of Acca, he attracts unto himself the people of America! It is most marvelous! How does he do it?"

{{p5}}

From the Consul General's house we went to call once more on Professor Vambery. Here again more than two hours they talked together in Persian and Turkish. Prof. Vambery telling interesting reminiscences of his journeys throughout Oriental countries. He was much interested in the Cause and begged the Master to permit him to write a series of articles in European papers. He is a man that all Europe listens and his opinions is sought after by the statesmen and diplomatists.

Returning to the hotel it was 4:30 pm. Lunch was ordered to the Master's room and I had the great privilege to eat with him. After that he rested for awhile and at 6 o'clock Mr. Paikert Alajos, the President of the Touranian Society came to take him to the meeting which was arranged by this Society for him to address its members and the public. The meeting was held in the national museum, the former Senate of the Hungarian Parliament, in the very chamber where the Senators used to sit before the New Parliament was built a few years ago. It is a most magnificent marble buildings! Although the weather was inclement yet several hundreds were present. The President spoke very briefly, just expressing his deep pleasure and gratitude to the Master for accepting the invitation of the Touranian Society. Everybody was on their feet when the Beloved entered the Senate Chamber and gave him a rousing reception. He first thanked the Society for having such a lofty object as to bring together all the Touranian nations. Then he gave a brief account of the ancient history of Touran and its former civilization, then an account of the Bahai principles and closed his remarks with the life of Gurratreb Agnes. The Society is going to translate the address into Turkish, French and Hungarian and publish it in its bi-monthly review.

After the meeting the Master was invited to the home of Abbas Aga, the only Persian rug-dealer in Budapest. All the Persians, Mr. Herrigel and Mr. Moore were also invited. There were also several Turks and from 7:30 to eleven thirty the Master spoke to them in Turkish, always illustrating his points with original stories. At 10:30 dinner was served and it consisted of soup, rice, chicken etc. I was glad that even in Budapest there was one Persian who invited the Beloved to his home and spread a very good table for his friends. He considered this feast as the greatest event of his life. He was very good young man and the Master was very kind to him.

Dear Harriet!

The falling of snow is continuing and the wind is blowing. The air is filled with cold. It seems this is a general condition all over Europe. Reports are being received from Germany, Austria, France and England that in many parts of those countries King snow is reigning supreme and expressions of deep regret are being heard right and left of the great loss which shall be entailed upon the farming communities. Abdul felt sorry for all these losses but he assured me that God from this great Treasure shall compensate them.

I Mr. and Mrs. Leopold Stark who have become the pure channels of introducing the Cause to Hungary are most interesting people. Mr. Stark is a cultured, learned Hungarian, who speaks seven languages very well and his wife speaks six languages very fluently. She is charming, sympathetic, very attractive. Her face is lighted with tenderness and her eyes radiate spiritual rays. She is most talented and active. The very first since I looked into her face, I was attracted to her. Her smile is most pleasant and winsome. She has soul-quality. As Mr. Stark says: "the success of these meetings chiefly belongs to my wife, because when she is interested in a Cause {{p3}} she works untiringly and enthusiastically. I have done very little. I am a busy man." And when you look into the face of Mrs. Stark you are convinced that she is a very rare woman and has exceptional virtues. "We will do everything we can to spread these teachings in Hungary" she impulsively yet deliberately declared to the Master. "Oh I am so very happy to see the Master so pleased with our humble effort. Really I am myself astonished at the interest manifested all around. People before the coming of the Master were {{p4}} surprised at our daring to invite him to a country wherein no one has heard anything about the Bahai revelation. I was afraid a little myself that perhaps the public and the press will be indifferent but, I said, I will do anything possible and leave the rest in the hand of the Master. Now I am so glad so happy that the Cause is received in Budapest with such seriousness and dignity. We could not do this in a hundred yrs." And here she is a noble, fine, heavenly woman, full of Bahai spirit, courage, hope, optimism and her eyes dancing with a happiness which is not of this world. I may write pages and pages, pressing her qualities and beautiful {{p5}} spirit but if you could see her for one hour you would realize that which is impossible to write! Mr. Stark lived 9 yrs. ago in London for nine months. As he has been always a member of Theosophical Society he became a friend of Mr. A.P. Cattinck who was at the same time interested in the Theosophical Movement. This link of friendship once established between them, they keep in touch with each other through correspondence. About 2 or 3 yrs ago Mr. Cattinck heard about the Bahai Cause {{p6}} and accepted it immediately. Soon afterwards, he sent a package of Bahai literature to his old friend Mr. Stark in Hungary. Mr. Stark having read these writings became greatly interested and studied Baha-ullah's Tablets and books. When he heard last December that Abdul Baha was again in England he wrote without delay to Mr. Cattinck whether he could direct him to once with whom he may correspond about the possibility of Abdul Baha's trip to Hungary. Mr. Cattinck gave him my address and then he wrote to me at that time, writing the Master on the part of various Societies and offering to pay all the expenses of the trip. The Master told {{p7}} me to write him that he had not accepted anything from any one for his lectures and travelling expenses, that he was trying to follow the injunction of Christ freely you have received freely you give;" that although he could not promise at that time whether he could go to Hungary but it will be well for him to correspond further on the subject when we arrived in Paris. While in Paris I received again Mr. Stark's courteous letter and again the answer was postponed to Stuttgart. Upon our arrival in Stuttgart his letter and telegrams were {{p8}} awaiting us and kept us busy till the Master yielded to his urge of imitation and told me to send him a wire that he was coming. This was in brief the account of the introduction of the Cause to Hungary which I thought may be of interest to record herein.

This morning the Beloved was going to call on Mr. and Mrs. Stark but as the weather was extremely cold last night, he caught a slight cold and therefore he sent Mr. Herrigel to them with the message that he could not go today but will visit later. Soon Mr. and Mrs. Stark and Mr. Moore came and spoke about the future of the Cause in Hungary. The Master said: The Cause will be spread very much in this {{p9}} country. Blessed souls shall arise to serve the Bahai revelation. They will be the means of the happiness of your hearts. The banner of the Cause shall be unfold over the cities of Hungary. For the present those amongst you who are interested in the Cause, gather together once a week, read the Tablets of Baha-ullah, speak on the Cause and whenever you find a thirst soul, offer him the cup of this salubrious water. Rest you assured that Baha-ullah shall confirm you and you shall be {{p10}} assisted by God in this work! Mr. Stark asked the Master what books he could trusted in. Hungarian so that he may publish and circulate amongst the reading public. He said: Translate the hidden words, the words of Paradise, Tojalleyot, Tarazat, the Bahai proof and other small pamphlets containing short historical accounts you and your wife have rendered already a great service to the Cause of Baha-ullah. I will pray to God that you may always be surrounded with his benedictions. When I have Budapest you correspond with me and let me hear your news.

To Mrs. Starks who come in the afternoon to inquire about the Master's health he said: I love you and your husband very much, you are my daughter and he is my son. You are the first apostles to introduce the Cause of Bah-ullah to Hungary and this honor shall be handed down to all your future posterity. The numbers of your family shall glorify in you. God shall confirm you always. Rest thou assured I will be always with you and your husband. "I will spare no effort and shall strive all the tribe to promulgate {{p12}} these spiritual principles in Hungary and will do my utmost to serve the Cause" she answered.

Mr. Paikert Alajos of the Touranian Society came to see the Master and brought two beautiful books of the views of Budapest. He spoke on the objects of his Society and left a pamphlet in French detailing its constitution. He said to Abdul Baha; "This Society is eternally blessed because it had the favor and distinction of receiving you. Your words of praise and encouragement will inspire all the future workers of this society." "I will pray to God", the Master answered that the circle of the influence of your Society increase daily and may render great services to the world of {{p13}} humanity.

Mr. Herrigel presented the love and greeting of many German fiends and appropriate messages were sent to each. Mr. Herrigel asked how they should conduit the meetings in Stuttgart. He answered: "Gather once a week in a public meeting. Before the meeting begins, one must read a prayer. Afterward they may sing together an all an anthem or a song. This optional. They may do it or not. According to their taste. Then {{p14}} one may give an address, on a Bahai subjects. Then they may read Tablets or extracts from the writings of Baha-ullah such as the hidden words, Forgot etc. or the news or letters received from other Bahai centers. Then with another supplication they may close gathering. The object is: let the meeting be spiritual and productive of unity and harmony, so that where you leave it you may feel much better than when you entered. Let the meetings be formless as possible. Crystallization of forms will kill the spirit. Let simplicity progressiveness, naturalness, beauty of ideas, love and fellowship emanate from your meetings. The mother of {{p15}} all the questions is to promote the Cause and spread the Teachings.

Prof. Goldziher cause and the Master talked with him at great length in Arabic. On the knowledge of divinity, the four criteria of knowledge, the transference of the single atom through all the Kingdoms of life. The talk was very long and the professor listened with rapt attention and delight.

A few Arabs and Turks had interviews and the Beloved spoke to them, although {{p16}} he felt very tired.

By chance Mr. Stark dropped in and I gave him the addresses of the Bahais of the various Eastern and American Bahai centers so that he and his wife may keep in touch with the friends of other parts of the world. The Master, then advised him to correspond with as many Bahais centers as he saw. At this time the correspondent of "Az Est" came in to have an interview. The Beloved gave him the subjects of the Bahai revelation in fifteen principles and also an outline of the economic Bahai plan. The correspondent was extremely interested and went away {{p17}} convinced that this was a wonderful spiritual movement. Mr. Stark translated for him into Hungarian the talk of the Master.

Today I received a nice letter from Consul Schwarz of Stuttgart. It was full of love for the Master and I may let you have a glimpse at the sincerity of the man by a quoting here a portion of it: "My wife and myself as well as my children were sad when the train left the Stuttgart. But we are so extremely happy having been together with the Master the last week and are still quite under the divine influence of His Presence. We speak of him and the wonderful influence he has made on us and the deep love we felt for {{p18}} him as well as the love he has for us, so we feel very happy. We would do so also signs of love he has given us by taking on him the troubles of the trip to Mergentheim and the blessings he has given to the paths will be of enormous influence of its future. I am quite deeply grateful to the Master for this great kindness and love. He is all to me, my wife and my children and my whole family. We commonly try to give him back a little bit of the great love he has shown to us by telling to all our friends of Him and the holy Mission he is fulfilling so that Stuttgart may become a firm and strong fortress for His Wishes and Teachings. We all live here in the thought and love of Him. My wife and {{p19}} my children and myself are at all times remembering the Master and the fulfillment of His High Mission.

We are his pupils and will work so that we may become as he wishes us to be and tell others in order that they may take a shore of the happiness and blessing which are coming from him. Tell the Master that we love him and that we by him for his blessings.”

This is a letter written by a German of a very high standing in the community; a strong, practical, solid man, and it shows how {{p20}} the Beloved affects even the strongest mind with his divine love.

Mr. Moore brought gramophone to the hotel and Mirza Mohamad chanted through it the beautiful prayer delivered at the Teosophical Society for their future Bahai Meetings.

I forgot rather a very important point in writing the story of the country of Baha.” In the place where the Master says “Come, come and I will be thy guide” the following sentence is to be inserted : I am a native of that land and will return to it. All the Bahais are the deniers of that country.”

Dear Harriet!

The Convention days of Mashregol Azkar in America are approaching and I hope that they may become days pregnant with significance and importance for the future of the Cause. Such practical and spiritual Conventions of Bahais must become like power-houses of heaven by Confirmation and divine Assistance. Each Convention must take into consideration the further promotion of the word of God, the diffusion of the Fragrances of God, the {{p2}} promulgation of the Teaching of God, and the spread of the influence and penetration of the Bahai principles. A Conventional must be the greatest standing-proof of Bahai unity and the symbol of Bahai harmony. Which Abdul Baha is far away he will pray and supplicate at the Presence of God that the results of this Convention may be far-reaching and that all the friends may become encouraged and strengthened by reading the report. May it impart a great joy to the heart of Abdul Baha! May it spiritual effect permeable to all parts of the world! May it render a great service to the Cause of international Peace! May its stars ever shine! May its flowers ever diffuse {{p3}} sweet fragrances! May its holy influence be felt by all the people on the face of the earth! May its gentle breezes of love and affection ever waft! May its noble trees yield luscious fruits! May its crystalline water alloy the thirst of the thirsty ones! May its divine table satisfy the hunger of those who are spiritually hungry! May its pure, blue heaven never be darkened by the clouds of ill-feeling and strangeness! May it infurl the banner of Reconciliation and good-fellowship amongst the nations! May the glorious {{p4}} victories of its invisible army be ever successive! May the invisible hast of the Kingdom of Abha be its helper and assistant! May it be a brilliant light in the darkness of the world! The eyes of all the Bahais throughout the world are turning to America and are anxiously expecting to hear the glorious news of the Convention. The prayers of the believers ascend to heaven for itsunqualified success in every way. Although physically the Beloved will not be in your midst yet I have no doubt through your union of thought and action his spiritual presence will be felt. He prays-earnestly that the breaths of the Holy-Spirit may encircle the Convention!

This morning the Beloved looking at the heavy snow-fall, remarked that as it will called on the mountains, within a few days it will melt and there will be the swelling of streams and rivers and the possibility of a flood in some parts. One may be able to stop this flood by human agencies and if not, the flood will subside by itself; but no power on the face of the earth {{p6}} will be able to stop the onrushing flood of the Cause of Baha-ullah. Its force is irresistible and its energy unconquerable. It will sweep away from before its path all the thorns and thistles of hatred and animosity planting the seeds of the flowers and hyacinths of affection. It brings in its wake life and not death; construction and not destruction progress and not ruin!

Today the Master did not go out. In his room he received the callers and with each he spoke in detail. One of the callers was an old, banned man who was extremely interested in Sociology. He told his ideas along these lines and the Beloved prayed that he may become confirmed to serve worthily the world of humanity.

Mr. Paikert Alajos called bringing his photograph in Hungarian dress for the Master. He has been for three yrs the Austro-Hungarian Chargiod affairs in Washington, from 1900 to 1903 and is simply charmed with the Teachings and will do everything in his power to spread them in Budapest. He said: "I feel sure that the Bahai principles will be readily accepted by the Hungarian people and I will do all I can to stimulate this interest." The Master answered: I feel also quite assured of this, because such noble souls are found here such as yourself.

Sardar and Mr. Moore arrived and each had an interview. Mr. Moore represents one of the largest mining machinery firm in the United States. When he told the Master about his work immediately he was interested and made him explain some of its intricate points. Mr. and Mrs. Stark came in with happy faces. They were very glad because the Hungarian and German papers of Budapest had very excellent reports of the Touranian meeting. I am sending you all these papers in a separate package. Although they are short yet they are written most sympathetically. They were so happy that I could not account for it; but realizing the cold indifference they had experienced in the past and {{p9}} this warm and glowing reception given to the Master by all classes. I could feel how they felt on this occasion. "Oh! We want to do everything for the Cause and the Master!" She warmly declared looking smilingly at her husband.

Later Prof Fipernowsky. A great pacifist of Hungary called and presented one of his addresses, delivered before the international law Congress. The Master spoke with him on peace and equality of sex.

And so it went on all day and part of the night; people {{p10}} of all class and races came to see the Beloved of the world. We were in his presence till late at night. He was extremely tired and his voice was a little hoarse. For the last two days e has not been out and cancelled several engagements. What is interesting is to see so many professors, scholars, and thinkers coming to hear the Master's words and going away convinced that here was a Person, the like of whom could not be found anywhere.

Dear Harriet!

Tomorrow afternoon Our Beloved will leave for Vienna and thus bring to a close our very wonderful experience in the Capital of Hungary. Another chaper was added to the Western tour of the Master and a few more notes will bring it to a close.

The curtain over the stage of Hungary was raised, the divine dramatist entered, instructing and teaching the audience with his varied and unexampled art and now his engagement coming to an end, the curtain is slowly brought down. The spectators will have {{p2}} time to think over what they have heard and seen. Like the flushes of lightening, the importance of the words and action of the heavenly dramatist will be revealed to them as time rolls on and in God's appointed hour they shall arise to serve the Cause with heart and soul and duly appreciate the great flavors with which they were encircled. As soon as enough books and pamphlets are translated into the Hungarian language and the mass of the people become informed with the Bahai teachings there will be a general interest in what Our Beloved did during his stay in Budapest. He has scattered the seeds in the ground of the hearts and with proper irrigation, there will be a great blossoming forth of the flowers.

Today the weather was spring-like. Now and then the sun shone forth from behind the clouds, melting mountains of snow which have been gathered in the streets and on the top of the hills. The Master felt much better and his voice quite clear, loosing its yesterday's huskiness. After drinking tea in his Presence, he related certain interesting episodes of the life of Baha-ullah. It seems to me few will be capable to write a complete history of Baha-ullah like Abdul Baha. Its general outline is already Known to us but these {{p4}} fascinating rich details must be written and preserved for humanity and no one knows these like the Master. Now and then he relates to us one of these anecdotes but he has not the time to write them. Once I asked him to dictate to me a few pages each day but he did not yield to my request. Who will write the life-drama of Baha-ullah! Who will essay this sublime, superhuman theme?

About 9'oclock a carriage was ordered and the Beloved following by me called on Mr. and Mrs. Stark "Nyul Utea<sup>5</sup>. On the way I received two or three slaps on my cheeks and become mentally richer by the recital of two more stories of a Baktashi in Acca. Arriving at Mr. Stark's home he received the Master with outstretched arms and joyful heart. His little son {{p5}} was there to attract the attention of the Master and receive his divine caress and kisses. After a minutes Mrs. Atock came into the large reception room and expressed her happiness that the Master at last blessed her home. She brought in her cook, her maid and the governess of the children that the Master may also bless them. He shook hands with each and gave them a few words of benediction! Sitting on a chair he addressed Mr. and Mrs. Stark. This is a blessed home and will be a very important center in the future. From this home, the lights of Guidance have shone forth. From this home the call of the Kingdom {{p6}} of Abha has been raised. This is the first home in Hungary in which the name of Baha-ullah was mentioned. May it become always a center of guidance! May many Bahai meetings be held here! May the Teachings of the Blessed Perfections be diffused to all parts of Hungary from this home! I have come and sown the seeds. Now you must arise and water them. This is your duty. Be you confident that Baha-ullah shall assist you. He will inspire your hearts you two are the first man and women to up rise the banner of Bahai Cause in Hungary, your station is very great in the Kingdom of Abha! This is not Known at present. In the future people {{p7}} will come from all parts to visit this home, because this is the first home from which the Glad-tiding of the appearance of the Kingdom of Abha was issued. Years ago why was travellings toward Tiberias, I saw a large number of people gathered in one place. I asked one why these people have congregated there?" He said: It is a matter of tradition that once was a time, one of the apostles sat on one of these racks. Now these pilgrims came from all parts of the world and kiss all the rocks perchance they may Kiss the right one.

More praise be to God that you are the objects of the Favor of Baha-ullah. Mr. Stark took us to the palatial residence of Mrs. Toupernawsky. This home was built 200 years ago and at the end of the reception room, there was a flower garden with a fountain in which red and golden fish disport. Mrs. Topernowsky, her daughter, her son-in-law and her three grandchildren greeted the Master. The three little girls were from ten to three dressed in white and very pretty. When they came in the {{p9}} room they looked like three angels. They gathered around the Master with much love and affection and he spoke to his two hostesses on the importance of the spiritual of ife and the poverty of the physical life. In orer to illustrate this, he told a story about Alexander the Great during his Eastern expectation. At the time of departure he said Madame Toupernawsky. Endeavor that the light of God {{p10}} may ever shine from thy home. This is my advice to thee. From there we drove to the house of Prof. Goldziher.

I have come to say farewell to thee the Master told him when he was greeting the Prof. A long discussion on the early history of the Bah, and the prophecies given by the Bah about the carried on in eloquent Arabic. The Master spoke with earnestness and fire. We went to the hotel and Mr. Stark was minded to eat with us.

After lunch he was asked to stay and have tea. When the Master arose from {{p11}} his nap we gathered in his room and Mr. Stark asked about the Society of the East. The answer was in detail, showing that the present unrest of the people push them to expect the dawn of hope. He also spoke on three kind of freedom, freedom of thought, freedom of speech and freedom of action.

In the evening Mr. Moore came and he invited us to dinner, being the last night, we are spending in Budapest. We write a postal card to Doctor Moody Teheran and all of us signed it.

I have to hurry because I am called to go and translate. Many people have come to see Abdul Baha tonight to say goodbye!

###Grand Hotel, Wien I. Karntnerring G. April 18th 1913

Dear Harriet!

Now from Vienna from the Breeze of God is blowing to all parts of the world. We felt Budapest at 2 pm and arrived in Vienna at 6:30. Persian was at the station and in two automobiles we were driven fust to hotel Beatrix about 15 minutes distance. A room No. 4 I was designated for the Master and rooms for us next to it. But the hotel was neither in a good locality nor what it ought to be, so the Master decided to move to tomorrow morning.

{{p2}}

As Abdul Baha was invited to dinner we took ours in the hotel and with Mr. Herigel, in the rain I went out to find the right kind of quarters so that in the morning we may not have to look around. After looking over six hotels we selected satisfied, because we had accomplished our task. On our arrival in the Beatris the manager told us that the Persians had already left for the Grand Hotel. We took the car and came to Grand Hotel and found our friends well situated. The number of the Master's room is 22. This hotel is the largest and the best in Vienna; it is something like Plaza in New York. I have had no time to go down stair and see the dining room but {{p3}} they tell me the five o'clock tea of Grand Hotel is famous; the royalty and the society folks of Vienna gather here. The trip from Budapest to Vienna was uneventful. As we were in the second class and the Master with Sayad Ahmad Bageroff the first class and the trip was a short one I did not call on him. On the way I saw the mountain covered with snow and here and there green grass! It was a cloudy day but now and then the sun shone forth for a few minutes. On our arrival in Veinna it rained a good symbol of the rain of the Knowledge of the Kingdom {{p4}} which will pour upon the sail of the hearts.

In the morning after drinking tea with the Master as he was looking at the Great Palace of the Emperor of Austria-Hungary on the opposite side of Danube he said: I would have liked to see this place. As say it is built recently. I desired to see what innovations they have introduced in but we did not find any time. However it is not important. There is a verse in the Khoran in which it is said: As you walk in the Desert, you may see a piece of crumbled wall here and a forsaken well there; both of which may have been in the past years, centers of great cities and civilization.

At eight o'clock the Master through insistent entreaty of Mr. Nadler {{p5}} Robert called at his Studio to give him the last sitting so that he may finish his painting. His addresses Nadler Robert Andrassy - UT 7.1. Budapest. He has certainly painted a wonderful portrait of the Beloved and it will be a great heritage and memorial to the city for future time. Returning we found many people waiting to see him. Our Indian Sirdan was taken into the Presence. The Beloved exhorted him to work for the glory and honor of India, that although many of the Rajohs and Novvales have been the cause of the decline of their native land, may he be the means of her rise. He can do this through the Favor and Bounty of Baha-ullah. As an example to this. The grandees and Ministers {{p6}} of Persia have in the past and in the present degraded the prestige and influence of their country, while the Bahais through the assistance and aid of the Blessed Perfection of Persia. Ere long than shalt see that Persia has become very beloved in the Eyes of the whole world.

Dr. Hagara Victor with his wife and daughter come in. Doctor Victor is a most spiritual, cultured Hungarian. He speaks English most fluently, likewise his daughter and wife. His daughter is the woman who translated the Master's address from English into Hungarian at the meeting of the Star of the East. She is a most intelligent earnest learned, lovely woman. The Master liked her {{p7}} translation and praised her for it. "You have brought to us light." She said today to the Beloved and in these few words she not only showed the mission of the Master but her spiritual perception and capacity. She is a writer of exceptional ability and she is going to write a series of articles on the cause for the Hungarian Press so that the Public may Know the Bahai teachings. She desired to have the literature and books so that she may fully acquaint herself. The Master praised all the three very much and expressed the hope that they will do their lust to spread these Teachings.

Mr. Moore requested the {{p8}} Beloved to chant in his gramophone a prayer for the people of Budapest. The Master accepted it and Mr. Moore brought his machine into his room. He chanted through the tube a wonderful prayer, leaving another eternal heritage for Budapest. The prayer was in Arabic and as he was chanting I was standing behind him writing it. It is as follows: "O God! O God! I supplicate towards Thee with a heart overflowing with Thy Love. I call on Thee, O Lord in the middle of nights: O God! save me through Thy Grace and Bounty! Suffer me to speak thy praises amongst Thy creatures! O God! O God! These are Thy Servants who have turned their faces toward the direction of Thy Providence.

They are attracted to Thy voice. They believe in Thy Singleness! O Lord! Make them the signs of Thy Mercy amongst Thy children and the tokens of Thy Bestowal amongst Thy servants! O Lord! O Lord! Descend upon them Thy blessing. Illumine their heart by the lights of Thy Knowledge. Dilate their breasts by the Verses of Thy Glory and Sanctity! Make them brilliant lamps shining with the light of Thy Love. Verily Thou art the Merciful and the clement!

O Lord! O! Lord! This is a city in which are gathered the {{p10}} wise ones from amongst Thy Servants and the mighty ones of the countries. Guide them always in the Straight Path. Enlighten their eyes by beholding Thy Manifest Light. Suffer them to become the servants of the oneness of the world of humanity; unfurling the banner of the Most Great Guidance betwist the heaven and earth, serving with all their might in the cause of Peace and Salvation and wishing that humankind may attain to the summit of Everlasting Glory! Verily Thou art the clement! Verily Thou art the Compassionate! and Verily Thou art the {{p11}} Powerful and the Glorious!"

Mr. Moore took a few photo of the Master in his room and of the Master in his room and of his bed.

Many people arrived, especially Mr. Stark. I evenanticipate receive good news from you he said to Mr. Stark. I will write to you and hope the the Cause will advance greatly. At one o'clock carriages were ready and the Master took Mr. Stark with him. On the way to the station he spoke to him about the future <12> of the Cause in Budapest. At the station Mrs. Strak with a bouquet of flowers greeted him. Our Sardar, Mr. Nadler, Mr. and Mrs. Vicar, the Consul General of Turkeya and more than 20 more friends were there to say farewell to the Beloved. He expressed his gratefulness to those present and at 2 o'clock the train pulled out of the station. A photo was taken by Mr. Moore as he looked out of the window of the train. Many hands and handkerchiefs were waving in the air many eyes were wet with tears. After a minutes the chapter of Budapest was closed, the curtain fell down and we were travelling towards a new fields of labor.

Grand Hotel, Wien I. Karntnerring G. April 19,1913

{{p1}}

Dear Harriet!

Since our departure from Paris I have not received any news from America. I am eager to receive the news and the Master too, because he asked me the other day in Budapest, whether I have received any letters from America.

{{p2}}

As the Master was invited last night to dinner by one of the Persian friends in Vienna, he slept there and came to the hotel early morning. The present Turkish Ambassador is an old friend of the Master so he asked me to go and call and inform him of his Presence in Vienna. Having heard that the Master is in Budapest he had written to the Consul General of that city to let him know when arrives in Vienna. The Turkish Embassy is at IV Prinz Eugenstrasse 34, five minutes' walk from our hotel. When I called I was informed that the Ambassador was as set sleep so I left a card, with my message on it.

When I returned at the hotel the Master told us of a meeting in which the present Ambassador with a few other Turkish offices were present in Acca. When I entered the meeting the Beloved continued. I observed they were all looking askance at me. They just salaamed and started to speak amongst themselves as though I was a stranger and introducer. Then one of them asked the governor of Acca about the theory of a writer in regard to Trinity just published in a book. The Governor not knowing what to say waved the question aside. I realize the questioner's aim was for me to answer and not the governor.

I spoke at length on the significance of Trinity; the Manifestation of God, the holy-spirit the Father, the Son and the Holy Ghost. Next day sunrise I was awakened from my sleep that the present Ambassador and his friends were down stair and desire to see me.... He was one of the wisest men of Turkey. He had been twice the Grand Vizir and he had carried out all the missions entrusted to him successfully. He was a diplomat of the first rank learned and intelligent. In those days it was rumored that his political procurements were given serious attention by the Cabinets of European Powers. Once he was appointed as the Governor of yaman. Thinking that the inhabitants were very {{p5}} fanatical he wore a big turban and ordered all his staff to do the same so that he may be able to assuage their anger against any innovation.

After a while Mr. Cordes and the Secretary of the Theosophical Society with a few others came to welcome the Master to Vienna. Mr. Cordes said, the first time he heard about the Bahai Cause and was immediately attracted to it was two yrs ago in Adyar India- the headquarters of the Theosophical. He heard a lecture given by a Bahai traveller. This lecturer stood just in the same spot where Mrs. Besant stood every time she delivered an address and as the result of this many people {{p6}} became interested in the Bahai Movement. This instance again showed us how the wonderful Cause of Baha-ullah was being permeable everywhere. There were some hidden, invisible forces that were constantly working to spread the Teachings but could not be seen by the outward eyes.

In welcoming them the Master said: I have not come to see Vienna as many tourists do but I have come to see you. I am longing always to see perfect souls. Wherever I see noble men and women I am made happy, even if it is in prison. I hope that as a result of my trip to Vienna, the light of guidance may shine, the eyes may receive a new sight, the hearts be gladdened and the spirits rejoiced. For the realization of this object I have {{p7}} come to Vienna. The quotation of nationality and language was touched. The Beloved said: The Persians, the Austrians, the Germans, the French, the Italian and the English people belong to one common stock of Aryan race.

originally this sturdy race lived along the river of Ganges in India. This people grew rapidly in number and plate strength. Having become too numerous they migrated to the platen of Iran - (Persia). From the tableland of Iran, a second migration was set in motion toward Caucasus. After many ages of expansion, the third migration started westward. Then a stream of migration {{p8}} at various periods flowed toward Europe, each one, inhabiting a portion of the land. Lack of intercourse and communication created differences of language and customs. Little by little they were more and more stringed from each other. Now my hope is this: Just as originally these various nations belonged to one family; may they again return to their primal unity. Formerly they were one as regards to their physical life; may they become united in this age as regard to their spiritual life; After this the Master went out to walk in the city Park not far away. This is flower day in Vienna and all the young girls have little imitations a basket of flowers {{p9}} in their hands with small deposit boxes selling flowers for charity. As the Master was walking, many came to him and instead of dropping small coins in the box he would drop one or two Kormas. There were literally thousands of people in the street and Park and everybody stopped to look at the Master, wondering who was this strange man! I have seldom seen anywhere people standing still and looking so intently at him. Thousands of eyes were upon him. This brought to my mind the story he told us about Baha ullah; that his person was so majestic and so glorious that as he walked in the streets of Bagdad all eyes were upon turned to him.

When in the Park a little girl run to him to sell the flowers. He got hold of her and Kissed her and filled her packed with many Korunas. Her mother who was watching this scene came to her and asked to kiss the hand of "Monsieur" become he was so lovely to you." Very courtesy she bowed and Kissed the hands, the blessed hands.

It surprised me very much was to see young girls working as brick and had-carriers on the buildings. Our their heads they carried heavy loads of bricks and mud. This was most astonishing and explained to my unaccustomed eyes the sad story of social indifference. To gain a livelihood by the fair sex must be extremely hard {{p11}} otherwise these young girls and old women would not have to become stone-carriers. The Master on his return about noon took with himself Sayad Ahmad Bogerrof and called on the Turkish Ambassador. He was kept for lunch and it was about 3 o'clock that he returned extremely fatigued by speaking. At four Mr. Alexander Engelhardt called on the Master and made a model clay of his face. This morning he met the Master down stair and being attracted by his extraordinary countenance, pleaded him to <12> come and make of model. He lives most of the time in this hotel and makes statuettes of important personages. For twenty minutes he worked and out of the soft clay he brought out the wonderful face of the Beloved. He will have another sitting. As the day was full of sunshine the Master with all the Persians took another walk through the public Park. Again he was stopped by the girls and dropped many a Kromas in their boxes. Having returned he rested for a few minutes and {{p13}} then Mr. Cordes came to take him to the home of Prof Thern, Kastlergasse II where the Theosophists will be gathered to hear him speak. It took us little time to be there. Mrs. Thern conducted the Master to a private room. At half past seven the meeting opened and he came in and everyone got up from their seat. There were about one hundred people present. The Theosophical Society has just been formed in the month of October and is therefore quite young. There were many young people {{p14}} and they greeted him with enthusiasm and warm feeling. The English address was translated into German by Mr. Cordes. His theme was the dogmas which exist in the present day religious the freedom of the Theosophists from such superstitious and the preserve of there realities in Man. After the meeting he Shook hand with all the people and returned to the other room. Here many were presented for private interviews and each person receive new hope and new courage. They were all attracted to the Cause and were glad to receive the {{p15}} light from the source and not from in a second hand way. There we met a Persian girl who was studying in Vienna. I was surprised to hear her speak in Persian in the first time but was glad to find one from my native land. After the meeting the Master was driven in a carriage to the house of the "Persian" friend to take his supper. We were also invited. Many delicious Persian dishes were served. This hotel is so big that our rooms were quite far from the elevated, so we have again moved to another <16> part on the same floor. We have an excellent suite of three connecting rooms No. 46,47,48. The Master is living in front room No. 46 overlooking the broad avenue. We are pleased with our place now and don't think there will be another change. Now that the Master was here, the Cause will be spread along spiritual lives; there will be no mistakes and a good foundation will be laid for the future.

My Dear Harriet!

This morning I received a few letters from America. The Master was pleased to hear good news from the believes. The greater the progress of the Cause and its promotion of the Teachings, the more his happiness. He is now invading new fields and new countries. He is teaching us how to introduce the Cause to a public {{p2}} who has not yet heard the name of Baha-ullah. Uniformly every one who has had this privilege of presenting himself before the Master has left him, unimpressed with his spiritual personality and divine Teachings. His example of unselfishness and heavenly character has made thousands of people live better lives and inspired with holier purposes. His is the authority of the spirit the simplicity of truth and the sublimity of ideals. He has filled the world with light and beauty, love and peace. The greatest honor for us is to follow his example, spread his words, upraise his standard, cry out in his name, diffuse the Fragrances of his flowers and summon the people to his principles.

This morning the Beloved sent several telegrams to various cities of the orient giving the news of his safe arrival in Vienna. After drinking tea he said to Mr. Herrigel: The City of when will become a center for the Cause of God; Only after my departure the friends must not remain inactive. They must work with greater zeal and enthusiasm. They must not say; now that Abdul Baha is gone let us take a rest first, and then work. There is no such a thing as rest in the Bahai Cause in its present stage. Ceaseless activity continuous teaching must be our watchword. Every Bahai must become a trumpet {{p4}} of the Cause. All the ears must become filled with its voice. What is the use of a voiceless trumpet? A Bahai must be like a sweet-fragrant rose, diffusing to perfume all around. This period must be dedicated to the promotion of the principles of Baha-ullah! you must be exceedingly kind to the Theosophists. When you meet them tell them that they are freed from blind dogmas. that they are investigating the Reality that they are very near to the Bahai Cause. From time to time, the believers of Stuttgart must come to Wien and give addresses on the Revelation. Last night I observed spiritual motion and ecstasy in the Theosophical Society. They were very alive.

Mr. Herrigel said that he has translated Our Beloved's address in the Jewish Synagogues of San-Francisco into German and expects to read it at a public meeting. The Master said: See to it that it is also published in a German newspaper and later in a pamphlet. This address is very useful for the Christians, because some of the Ministers have secretarily spread the rumor that the Bahais are the enemies of Christ. Now they will see that in a Jewish Signage; we have established the validity of Jesus Christ that we are lovers of Christ. If today the male took hold of a thousand average ministers {{p6}} of the Gospel and brought them in the public square and address them; you must either deny Christ or you will killed. I wonder how many of them will remain friend! When Napoleon wanted to marry again, he applied to the Pope for permission. The pope said it is impossible! Then Napoleon put him in prison. Not being able to stand the ignoring of prison, he gone the permission. But, it on the other hand, if they took us to the public square and with the sword of executioner commanded us to state that Christ was only the prophet of God and then be free we will cry out; Verily, Christ was the word of God and the spirit of God and we will {{p7}} most joyfully give up our lives for Christ.

Sapahdar Agam who also has been travelling in these parts sieve his departure from Paris came to call on the Beloved. In the course of conversion with him the Master said: After the ascent of Baha-ullah I was all done. Enemies within and enemies without had attacked me and thousand difficulties surrounded me. But my confidence and trust was within, because deriving the days of this life be explicitly promised me that he will assist me always. I heard this promise from his oven lips, therefore {{p8}} I knew that under all circumstances I will be confirmed and all my enemies will be defeated. Then he told him of a wonderful dream he had right after the departure of Baha-ullah.

Being a fine fay he called me to have a walk with him. It was Sunday and the people were out going to their churches. He walked toward a church, about three blocks from the hotel. Its outside looked like a palace and its dome rose up to the sky. The Beloved entered the Church. All the eyes of the worshippers were upon him. The inside roof contained wonderful paintings, the columns were of marble the decoration was magnificent and rich. It was a catholic church, and before the statue {{p9}} of every Saint in the different corners of the Temple candles were lighted and many souls were Kneeling. The Master walked around for ten minutes looking intently upon the Statue of the Crucified Christ and the Saints. Coming out he dropped several Kronnas in the box near the gate. These people may have thought he said musingly that we are there ridicule. God forbid! They do not Know, how the pictures and statues Christ affect me. It was better to come out, because I might have prevented them from their worship on account of my strange appearance.

Arriving at the hotel {{p10}} we found many Theosophists waiting to see him. He greeted them with heartfelt cordiality and spoke about the meeting last night: I was most pleased to present myself in your midst and speak with you; a meeting which believes in the spiritual power, a power which is supernatural and super-intellectual. Therefore I hope that this Theosophical Society may helped and its members gain victory over the pillars of the world of nature who are the materialists of this age. It is evident that today the material philosophers have overcome the religionists. The influence exerted by nature and its admirers is by far greater than the influence wielded by religion and its devotees. Because {{p11}} all the religious are submerged in the sea of dogmas and sacerdotal ritualism of course the followers of nature overcome the worshippers of superstitious. But these who are truly spiritual and immersed in the sea of God's spiritual Graces, they overcome all things. Consequently I trust that the darkness of this city may be dispelled through the appearance of the lights of the spirit. Strive! make ye an effort! and work by day and by night so that a time may soon come when the continent of Europe is illumined. At present it is very dark and one cannot walk {{p12}} surely and steadfastly. One of those present said: "We hope to do this service through your assistance and the power of the Holy Spirit."

It is very true the Master said; Because the limited human powers are unable to render such a great universal service. The power of the Holy Spirit causes the appearance of reality and as the reality is one, all of us will become one.” Someone asked that he has read in the literature of the Bahais that they believe Baha-ollah is the Father. What did you mean by this? By the Master said: Father we mean the Educator. Just as the Father is tender to his children, likewise, the instructor teaches them. The function of the Father and the Educator is material life, the Educator {{p13}} gives the mental and the spiritual life. Therefore when we say Baha-ullah is the Father, we mean he is an Educator - a spiritual Educator - or in other word, he is the Manifestation of divine attributes. Moreover as one of the perfect qualities of the Divinity is Fatherhood, therefore we give him the little of the Father; because the Manifestation of God is like unto a clear mirror in which is reflected the rays of the Sun of Reality and one of these rays is Fatherhood. Generally, there is the teacher of the children in the Educational Institutions, from {{p14}} Kindergarten school to the university. They are all teachers in various degrees. Secondly. In philosophy a teacher means a person who has studied all the sciences and arts, has become well-established in all the branches of human endeavors and is unique and peerless in his age. According to oriental history there has been in the past two such Master in philosophy. The first one was Aristotle who was well-versed in all the sciences and accomplishments of his time. The Second one was Farabi who announced that he was the second teacher. The King ordered the organization of an Academy of learned men and Farabi was examined by the master of every branch of Knowledge. Not only he demonstrated {{p15}} that he Knows as much as they Know but he established his superiority over them. Even he was examined in the art of music and he displayed his marvelous versatility and many-sidedness. The academy unanimously voted to give him the most coveted title of the Master. Avicenna also in his time claimed to be the third teacher. Consequently an Academy of the thinkers of the age was formed. At the time of examination he showed his almost miraculous knowledge in every branch and easily established his superiority over all the rest. When the hour for the {{p16}} musical examination come around he was found that his Knowledge of music is only equal and not superior to the musical art his age. After much consultation they did not concerned upon him the title of “Master”, because in one of the branches of Arts he had an equal, therefore they give him the little of Raiis (chief). Thirdly, according to spiritual terminology which is our way of expression a “teacher” is the Center of the divine lights, so we say Christ was a Teacher of men. By the word “teacher” we mean, the perfect source of universal virtues in the world of humanity.

Someone asked: “I have been told that the objects of the Bahai Movement and the Theosophical Society are one and the same. If so, why there should be two names, two distinct organizations, two made of expression?” The Master: Well said, you have brought up a good point. According to our faith whosoever investigates independently the reality, he is a Bahai although he may not Know this himself. We do not desire to add another name or word to the already many names. Our aim is to spread the Knowledge of reality, and diffuse the fragrance of the rose. Because there are two or many roses {{p18}} of the same color and perfume, can we say that one of them is not necessary? Let us have all the sweet roses we can get. We can never have enough roses. Can we? Besides this the Bahai Movement is not an organization. It is the fresh Breeze of the Garden of God. You can never organize the Bahai Cause. It cannot be located in one single place or centered in one individual. The Bahai Movement is the spirit of this age. It is everywhere. It has no geographical limits. It is the essence of all the highest ideals of this century. A person may claim to be a Bahai or may be Known as a Bahai for all his life and may not Know at {{p19}} all what a Bahai means. Another person may never have heard the name of Bahai and may at the same time practice all the attributes which are necessary to make one a Bahai. That is why his holiness Christ says, those who are not against us are with us. You must Know the tree by its fruits. Now to answer your question from another standpoint. Everyone Knows that in a seed, their lay enveloped, the young plant, the root, the tree, the branches the blossoms and the fruits. This simple Knowledge is however not sufficient. There must need a {{p20}} gardener to plant the seed in a pure ground to water it to take care of it till it reaches to the stages of fruition. There must need the power of the Holy Spirit to put into practice the divine principles. All that his holiness Baha-ullah has written are today practiced by the Bahais. More than 20.00 people have sacrifice their lives. One of the principles of Baha-ullah is universal Peace amongst the religious. In the Orient, the religious were inimical toward each other; now through this power they are united. In the world of existence every understanding is dependent {{p21}} upon the realization of three things. First Knowledge. 2nd Decision. 3rd Executive power. For example in building this hotel, First the plan was drawn. 2nd the company approved and decided upon the plan, 3rd the Capitalists put their money together to build it. Again the Bahai Cause is an all-inclusive Movement, the teachings of all the religions and societies are foun here. The Christians, the Buddhists the Zoroostrians, the Theosophists the Freemasons, the Spiritualists {{p22}} etc etc do found their highest aims in this Cause, while this cannot be applied to other religious, sects and societies. Even the Socialists and philosophers find their theories fully developed in this movement the Master spoke at length about a famine in Persia where the rich Bahais gave up willingly all their possessions so that the members of the Community may be protected. The question of Moukhoad and celibacy was touched; and the Beloved dwelt upon this Subject, giving instances as to low an unproductive life, such as the one led in most of the {{p23}} Monasteries and covenants is not commendable; that we must be useful members of the human Society, that we must serve our fellowmen in a practical way. He told them of the mummery and convent in Mount Carmel, of a big Monastery in Russia with more than 5000 monks. The lives of these people are spent in prayers and worship while God has created them to work for the betterment of humanity.

In the afternoon the Master called on Lapabdor in Hotel Imperial but he was not there. His Secretary {{p24}} entertained the Beloved when you return to Persia Abdul Baha told him. Give my greeting to the green Mountains and rolling valleys, to the singing nightingales and the cooling springs, to the fragrant rose-gardens and the fresh breeze of Persia. I love them all. Remember me to them.

Returning to the hotel and drinking his tea he called on the Persian Minister. The subject of his discussion was America and his trip through that vast land.

Not resting for one moment, on his return he told me {{p25}} to have some of the Newspapers ready such as Asiatic Quarterly Review. Christian Commonwealth, waking Mirror. Palo Altan etc and we called on the Turkish Ambassador. For one hour the Beloved talked on the principles of the Cause and his Western trip for the last 2 yrs and half and leaving the newspapers with the Ambassador he was taken to the house of the 'Persian' friend for supper. It was about midnight when the Beloved returned to the hotel to rest for a few {{p26}} hours before the down of another long day.

Grand Hotel, Wien I.Karntnerring. April 21st 1913

Dear Harriet!

At last I received your two good letters of March 29th and April 4th. I also received other letters from the friends, giving news of the progress of the Cause. The Master was more than pleased over the harmonious condition of the Cause in New York. He was glad that like unto the disciplined soldiers, they were engaged in the spread and promotion of the Teachings. If the believers could faintly realize how happy the Beloved was made when he heard they were united and active {{p2}} they would always work for unity and agreement. The friends are the waves of one sea, the stars of one heaven, the pearls of one ocean, the jewels of one mine, the fruits of one tree, the rays of one sun, the flowers of one garden and the rains of one cloud.

Packages of letters were also received from the Oriental assemblies, each bringing the good news of the progress of the Cause. The Master spent two hours in looking over his mail and then going out for half an hour to call on a friend, he returned with the Persian Minister and three {{p3}} other Persians. He was speaking to them about Persia's condition and the non-interference of the Bahais in political matters when Mrs. Marie Thaller was announced. She was a very enthusiastic and happy woman and tremendously attracted to the Cause; bubbling over the results of His talk. Since hearing him, she has been the happiest woman in the world. She could not sleep last night at all thinking of his spiritual power and his nearness to her. She was really full of life. The Master {{p4}} showed her the photograph of Mrs. Stark. He told her: I like you to become as perfect as this woman. She is a flame of fire. She is very spiritual, very pure and overflowing with aesthetic susceptibilities. For the benefit of the Persian Minister and a few other friends he gave a review of his address before the Open Forum in San Francisco and put them in good humour when the story of the Cause and the materialists was recited.

Two automobiles carried him and the friends to the Schonbrunn palace, the summer {{p5}} residence of Emperor. While the automobile was driving through the avenue and the streets of Vienna, I told the Master the news just received from America. He spoke for the benefit of other Persians about Mrs. Fruf and while he was talking about her courage and firmness and enthusiasm he was laughing and in good humour. For more than one hour we walked through {{p6}} the Schonbrunn, passing by the cages of the bears and many wild animals. The Master said: If one of these bears got hold of Mirza Ahmad Solnab in the mountains of Alaska, what would he do with him? Will he give the bear a Bahai love-hug? One of the most novel sights to be seen was the peculiar arrangement of the trees, so that if one stopped in the beginning of the avenue, he would see a high wall, straight as an arrow, green and verdant! The Park was very large and the flower beds arranged most artistically. You can easily imagine what will be {{p7}} the Park of an Emperor! About 2 o'clock we returned to the hotel. The Master eating his lunch, rested for awhile. In the afternoon we enjoyed a quiet rest and at five three callers arrived.

Fran Professor Thern in whose house we had our first meeting, brought her book so that the Master may write something in it and he wrote the following prayer: O Thou Almighty! Make this Theosophical Society {{p8}} a rose-garden and a meadow through the downpour of the rain of Thy Providence; so that they may become delivered from expectation, behold the rays of the Sun of Reality, become informed with the existence of the invisible world and attain to the Mystery of Mysteries. Verily Thou Art the Guide! (Sig) Abdul Baha Abbas.

At seven Mr. Eder, the President of Psychological Society and the Vice President of Theosophical Society came to take the Master to the Lodge in Johannesgasse 2 IV at Mr. Paul Luckeneder. {{p9}} As it was quite near we walked and the avenues packed with moving, pushing humanity, gazed wonderingly at the Beloved. Many people stopped and looked at him long. Arriving at the place we found it to be newly built apartment house and no elevator; The Theosophical Lodge being on the fourth floor. With great difficulty the Master ascended the stairs. There were more people present than the other night, nearly two hundred, all anxious to hear {{p10}} him speak. After a few minutes rest he came out and sitting on a chair designated for him, delivered a wonderful address on the influence of the spirit and the transference of the single indivisible atom throughout all the degrees of the Kingdoms. The audience listened with rapt attention and when he finished they were so attracted that they clamoured for another lecture to be delivered on Wednesday night. The Beloved accepted their plea {{p11}} and brought the meeting to a close by delivering a beautiful prayer. Then he retired to another room and spoke with many of the friends individually. When he left the house he said to Mrs. Luckeneder: I was most pleased with this meeting because it was a nest of the heavenly birds. He took his supper tonight in the hotel. His voice is yet a little hoarse.

In his address on the Spirit he said: The glory of the world of humanity is not {{p12}} through the body. This is the honor of the animal world; but the Glory of man came through the spirit. Spirit quickens and regenerates humankind and not the body. Spirit draws man near into God and not the body. Spirit is the discoverer of the realities of phenomena and not the body. Spirit establishes love and amity amongst the human race and not the body. Spirit will usher in the era of Peace and Salvation and not the body. Spirit attract the hearts together and not the body. Spirit {{p13}} has drawn me to Vienna so that I may associate with you and not the body. I am an Easterner and you are from the West. It is the power of the Spirit that has gathered us together. It is the Spirit that gives wings to man so that he may soar in the immensity of God's Kingdom. Spirit is the Collective Center of all the perfections. Take away the spirit from man and he is an animal!

I will end this letter with the Master's supplication. "O Thou Kind God! The members of this society have {{p14}} turned their faces toward Thee. They are begging to receive the lights from Thy Most Great Guidance. They enjoy spiritual susceptibilities. O God! Quicken the spirits! Extend the horizon of their thoughts. Bestow upon them the Power of the Kingdom! Confer upon them the Confirmations of the Holy-Spirit! O God! Endear these souls and give unto them merciful powers, so that they may illumine this country with Thy Light! May they resuscitate these dead bodies! May they cause the disappearance of the {{p15}} darkness of nature through the rays of Thy Sun! O God! Assist these souls and deliver them from the darkness of nature. Clothe them with the heavenly body and surround them with spiritual Forces. Verily Thou art the Generous and the Mighty!

Dear Harriet!

One of the most precious souvenirs of our sojourn in Vienna is the delightful little bust made of the Master by Mr. Alexander Engelehardt, the artist. Unconsciously, he has eternalized his name in the Bahai history. He is a young man with a fine face, keen eyes, ample hairs and altogether a very nice fellow. The clay model was finished in two sittings, each sitting taking from twenty to thirty minutes. He is a native of Dresden and his father is the Editor of an influential paper in that city. You may call him a travelling artist. He has made {{p2}} busts of King Edward and other famous men. From the clay model, a few busts are being made in imitation bronze and they will be ready in a week. The price which he charges will be a nominal one. I think it will be three dollars. I have ordered two for myself - myself in the sense of sending one to you and the other to Washington - and if the friends desire to have any, they can put their order together and I will see that they will get them in time. I believe it is one of the best heritages to posterity. How these matters concern one after another quite miraculously when you look upon each incident from an isolated point of view.

{{p3}}

This morning a reporter from “Die Feit” called on the Beloved and asked many questions and received satisfying answers. As the Master has spoken in this city only to the Theosophists, the reporter asked whether he is the leader of this Society.

A.B.: We are Bahais but on certain questions we find ourselves in agreement with the Theosophists.

Reporter: In which part of the world this Cause is more spread?

A.B.: In Persia, although there are many of them in America.

Reporter: Is this a Mohamadan sect?

A.B.: This movement is neither a sect nor an Islamic denomination. It is the religion of love and brotherhood toward all humanity.

{{p4}}

Reporter: I have read the principles of your movement and find everything in it reasonable.

A.B.: In these parts no one as yet is completely informed of the Bahai Cause. If a person learns all the teachings of Baha-wllah he will acknowledge that they are the spirit of this age, the light of this country.

Reporter: Are there Bahais all over the world?

A.B.: Yes.

Reporter: Where do you come from?

A.B.: I came now from Budapest. I have been in America where I have travelled through many large cities and spoke in many churches. After nearly 8 months, returning from California to New York I sailed for Liverpool. {{p5}} The London, Bristol, Edinburgh, Paris, Stuttgart, Margentheim, Budapest and now in your delightful city.

Reporter: You are wonderful to travel so much at this age!

A.B.: The power of God assists me.

Reporter: How long are you going to stay here?

A.B.: I will leave for Paris in a day or two.

Reporter: Do you find many people are interested in your Cause.

A.B.: Now it is the beginning of this movement in Europe but it will be soon spread to all parts.

Reporter: How long have you been travelling for the propagation of your principles?

A.B.: It is now 2 years and half.

Reporter: Will you tell me something about your teachings? Then the Master told him how previous to the coming of Baha-wllah, darkness and ignorance prevailed amongst all the religions and nations of the East, how Baha-wllah like unto a glorious sun appeared and established certain teachings. Then he enumerates this principles, 1st Investigation of Reality. 2, the oneness of the world of humanity, 3rd Religion must be the Cause of love and amity. 4th Religion must be in accord with science and reason. 5th Universal Peace. 6th Economic plan. 7th Equality of man and woman etc. Then he gave him an exposition {{p7}} of natural and divine civilization. The reporter asked a question about the American people. The Master answered: They are very progressive and well-established in modern civilization. They are the investigators of Reality and thirsty for every salubrious water. They have a vast and unlimited continent, capable of undreamed of development. They are ever pushing forward. One must move and push and be alert and active in America, otherwise it is not his place. The reporter smiled and said: "How well you understand them?" Then there was more talk about the exile and imprisonment of Baha-wllah, the limitation {{p8}} of material civilization. The reporter left the Presence of the Beloved impressed not only with the Teachings but with his wonderful personality.

Many friends came to see him. They were all gathered around him. One woman asked "how should we join eternal happiness?" Answer: you must enter in the Kingdom of Abha. In the Kingdom of Abha, there is light upon light. The darkness of sorrow and pain is banished forever from that region. His Holiness Baha-wllah today has opened the Doors of the Kingdom and people are receiving vision of that far-off palace {{p9}} of happiness. They are made so happy that they sing and dance under the sword. Eternal happiness is all-inclusive. In it is unbraced material happiness. This world is like unto ant-houses. Have you ever observed how the ants are ever busy to gather provisions, sometimes carrying heavier loads than themselves? But once in a while some of these ants grow wings and soar away. I hope you will be like them.

A few of the Persians called. There are I think about 20 Persians in Vienna who have called {{p10}} to meet the Master, either through curiosity or interest.

At noon the Master and all of us accompanying him went out to take a walk in the National park. After half an hour walk he rested in a cupola in front of the Lake to watch the ducks and geese and swans! They were very pretty and of many colors. He was enthusiastic in his praise of them. He went out of the Park with our brother Bageroff to dinner to the house of a "Persian friend".

As we were walking back, a young man {{p11}} approached and inquired whether we are Persians. After some conversation it turned out that he was a Bahai from Tabriz and he wanted to come to Paris to see the Master. Mirza Ali Akbar had given him the address on Mon. Dreyfus; he was so glad when he heard that the Master was here. About five o'clock he came to the hotel and was presented to him. Incidentally I may slate that Mirza Ali Akbar who was with Abdul Baha in America has returned to Haifa and is awaiting his arrival {{p12}} and the other Mirza Ali Akbar has gone from Luzanne to London.

Dear Harriet!

This is the last day we are in Vienna and tomorrow morning at ten we leave for Stuttgart from Westbanhoff station. Here during these few days the Cause was well spread, many people have become deeply interested and ere long Vienna will be one of the many Bahai Centers. The pure seeds of the word of God were sown and God shall cause them to grow through the downpour of the rain of Mercy and the wafting of the gentle breezes. We are all very hopeful as to the future of the Cause {{p2}} in Vienna.

One of the most amusing reports which somehow has been given out innocently by someone was that Abdul Baha was a fortune-teller. Therefore for the last few days most of those who came to have an interview with Abdul Baha inquired about their future. This morning two ladies arrived very early, each carrying in her hand a bouquet of flowers and after the preliminary greeting, asked the Master what kind of progress will they make in the future? There are two kinds of progress, {{p3}} the Beloved said, Spiritual progress and material progress. Material progress is temporal and vanishing, for no matter how much man may advance his body, at last he shall become subject to death; but there is no limit to spiritual progress and its results are infinite and glorious. For you, therefore I desire this spiritual progress which is eternal.

Someone asked how can she better assist the world? The Master said: Assistance is of two kinds: Material assistance and spiritual assistance. {{p4}} Material assistance is limited to one locality and place but spiritual assistance is measureless. However if a person is enabled to render assistance in both ways, then, it is light upon light. But if he cannot render material assistance, he must not feel sad, because he is not responsible. You must not feel unhappy, because you are not rich. Strive then to assist the world spiritually. Consider how many souls have assisted the community with millions yet its result has not been widespread, but those souls who have arisen to guide the people spiritually, their {{p5}} results are unlimited. Therefore make ye an effort to gain this power. In what way will you gain this power? By entrance in the Kingdom of Baha-wllah. Then shall ye be surrounded with invisible confirmations.

There are many women in Persia who have no worldly possession whatever, but they render spiritual assistance to the people. You must likewise make an effort as that you may guide and educate the souls spiritually. Do not attach your hearts to the worldly possessions. Attachment alloys happiness. {{p6}} There are some people who dream that if they had ten thousand dollars, they would be happy; but they do not know that those who have already 10,000 dollars are unhappy and sad because they do not have 100,000 and so on. If you want to be happy, attach your hearts to nothing. Be ye free, so that ye may be always joyful. Attach your heart to spiritual principles. They are the divine virtues, heavenly perfections, the knowledge of God, the Love of God and the attractions of the spirits.

Someone asked what is the Bahai Cause. The Master said: The Cause of Bahawillah is incomparable to any other Cause, because it is the Collective Center of this age. This Cause regenerates the souls, everyone receives a new egotism and attains to the station of the new birth. If he was a liar, he becomes truthful, whereas formerly he was coward, he becomes courageous. Whereas formerly he was morally sated, he becomes pure. Whereas formerly he was ignorant, he becomes wise. He is transformed entirely into the angelic state. Any person, undergoing this process of {{p8}} purification, know ye of a certainty that he is a Bahai, otherwise he has only changed his ideas and is a Bahai in name. All the present communities do only change their names, but in the Bahai Cause, it is different. If a person was dark, he becomes illumined, characterized with the attributes of Holiness and Sanctity; he will be set aglow with the Fire of the Love of God; and will become a new creation. The Bahai Cause is the fountain of Job. Whosoever enters therein will become freed from all the moral and spiritual diseases. I hope all the people {{p9}} will attain to this high station.

One of the Theosophists asked the Master to write in her book. On the page having the date of May 23rd being his birthday he wrote the following: "O Thou Sun of Reality! Cast Thou a splendour from the Light of Reality upon the heart and conscious of this seeker of Reality."

Someone suggested it will be very good if a meeting between Abdul Baha and a prominent Austrian Count could be brought about. The Master said: The thirsty one must run {{p10}} after the water; the fountain will not run after those who are thirsty.

Another visitor asked: "What is the greatest duty of man in this world?" The Master said: To enter in the Kingdom of God is the greatest and most important duty.

One inquired: "How can the heart be consoled?" The Master said: The greatest consolation for the heart is the Love of God. This is the balm for every wound and the remedy for every ailment. This world is full of pain and afflictions. Therefore the foundation upon which the eternal consolation of the human heart is based {{p11}} is the Love of God. Every new day brings in its train new difficulties and ordeals. The world is very dark and the only light which is capable to penetrate through this darkness is the Light of Love of God and entrance into the Kingdom of Baha-wllah. This is the Cause of happiness! This is the means of consolation! The glory of man is through the Love of God, entrance into His Kingdom and being involved with His divine characteristics.

All morning a stream of callers received the encouragement and inspiration of the {{p12}} the Master. As one of the ladies said: "I don't know why I came here but I feel so happy to be near the Master. Since I have seen him, I like to fly with happiness. With a look, a few words and a smile, he has entirely transformed my life. I feel in my heart the springing up of new hopes, new inspirations, the stirring of new ideals." In the afternoon several Persians came and the Master spoke about the wonderful blessings which will descend in the future upon Persia and how that country will become very beloved, because the Peace-maker of the world {{p13}} has been born there.

Arrangements were made that Baroness Bertha Von Suttner, the great Austrian percipient may call on the Master at 3:30 pm. Before her arrival, the Beloved sent to her a large bouquet of roses, lilacs and lily of the valley. She has written many books on Universal Peace, one of her most famous works is "Lay down the arms". As she entered the room she expressed sorrow over the events of the past few months, a note of hopelessness and pessimism and of despondency on her tongue. The Master came back with hope. Ah, {{p14}} the day of Hope hath dawned! After every sorrow there is joy, after every night there is the glorious day. God willing through your efforts, we will succeed. I have heard much of your name and your unselfish service to the Cause of Peace. I testify that you are a lover of humanity. Baroness B. Von Suttner: "I am very grateful for your words of encouragements and inspirations. I have done very little and with less results."

A.B. You have sown the seeds and God shall cause them to grow.

B.S. I hope so. {{p15}}

A.B. I have been looking forward to this visit. While I was in Chicago and Omaha you were there of the same time but it was not destined that we meet each other. I had to come to Austria to pay you a visit.

B.S. I was very sorry that I could not meet you in America for I have always heard of this Movement.

A.B. Yes! One of the greatest teachings of Baha-wllah is regarding international Peace. We must not lose our hope and courage. The beginning of a {{p16}} downpour of rain is only a few drops. In the early dawn, the Sun rises slowly, giving us here and there a few feeble rays but it is sure that before long it will be stationed in the meridian of its glory. Truly I say, the spirit of this age is universal Peace. In every age a great impelling idea has been born and developed. There has been an age of sehabasicism, another age belonging to the development of philosophy and natural sciences. The lost age was the age of freedom and the march of democracy throughout many lands. But this 20th century is the century of the promotion of international {{p17}} Peace, the proclamation of the oneness of the world of humanity, the brotherhood of man, the union of religions, the solidarity of various nations and the universalization of all the great ideals, common to the children of man. All the people are the sheep and God is the real Shepherd of this flock and is kind to all. The earth is one sphere. This geographical boundaries are made by man, calling one piece of land Austria, another Germany, a third French, a fourth England and so forth. The days in Oriental cities instinctively divide the various quarters {{p18}} amongst themselves and if by chance one crosses the boundary of another, he will be attacked. But these boundary lines are all imaginary. They have no real existence.

B.S. I had never heard this before. But I suppose those days are not aggressive. They are satisfied with their own domain and do not carry fire and sword in their neighbour's home.

A.B. You are right! Aggression is the attribute of man and the ferocious beasts but the domestic animals never fight. Much more could I write on the interesting conversation of the Master and the Baroness {{p19}} but space forbids. Towards the end he invited her to come to the Orient because the Bahais who are the servants of Peace will be glad to see and hear her. She thanked the Master for the lovely flowers. They were not flowers, he said. They were the expressions of my esteem and admiration for your noble services to the Cause of humanity. She left the Presence of the Master much impressed and I am sure this interview will be of incalculable benefit to the Cause in Austria.

Then the Master dictated two Tablets for Mr. and Mrs. {{p20}} Stark and Mr. Moore of Budapest. I was standing near the window writing and he was walking back and forth. As he dictated he become so excited that several times he approached where I stood, shouting the words into my ears and his eyes were ablaze with the fire of divine enthusiasm. I could feel through every fibre of my being his wonderful spirit and energy. Suddenly he wheeled around and before finishing the sentence, he slapped my face so powerfully that not only I was dazed but its reverberating noise brought other Persians who were in their adjoining rooms. {{p21}} The Master laughing heartily asked them: Did you hear it? Did you hear it? I was giving Mirza Ahmad just a love-pat or rather his daily wages, and again he broke forth into laugh and continued dictating.

In the middle of all this the bell was rung and Mrs. Stark rushed in. What! Mrs. Stark here in Wien? She was bubbling over with life and spiritual power! The Master was so pleased to see her. He told her: I have just dictated a Tablet to you and your {{p22}} husband. I have a special attachment to you and Mr. Stark and will always pray for you! She said she was now on her way to a summer resort for a rest of ten days. Already 25 people in Budapest have expressed their belief in Baha-wllah and on her return they will have their first meeting and start to translate the Words into Hungarian language. "Everybody speaks about the Cause" she said, with the greatest reverence. They respect us more than ever before because are Bahais. We will do everything to spread the Cause. She brought to us copies of a Hungarian {{p23}} magazine containing the picture of the Master and also a group picture taken in Budapest.

Then at five thirty the Master called on the Persian Ambassador with Ahmad Bageroff and it was about 7:30 when he came to the Theosophical Society directly from the Embassy. We were all there waiting for him, meanwhile Mr. Herrigel was speaking in German about the Cause to the assembled {{p24}} audience. On his arrival he said: I am so tired. I have been talking for two hours and now I must talk again. Let me rest at least for a minute or two. After awhile he entered the large hall. At his entrance everyone arose and he spoke a great silence of attention fell over the audience. He spoke on how all the manifestations of God have ever come from the East, gave a resume of the principles and the life of Baha-wllah and finally ended his address by delivering a wonderful prayer in Persian. The prayer was not translated. The people preferring to hear {{p25}} the voice of the Master without interruption.

I will bring this to a close with a translation of the same: "O Thou King of Existence! O Thou Kind Beloved! The members of this meeting are the lovers of Thy Face. They seek after Thee and they long to converse with Thee. They are the investigators of Reality and the wooers of Thy Countenance! They are thirsty for Thy salubrious stream and have turned their attention toward Thee. O Thou Kind Beloved! {{p26}} Illumined the world of humanity! Enlighten the hearts with the effulgence of Thy Love! Perfume the nostrils with Thy sweet Fragrances. Confer upon us a new Bestowal! Give unto us a strong power! Open the eyes! Make the ears hearing! O God! Thirsty are we, Thy Grace is the cooling spring! Homeless and shelterless are we. Thy court is the asylum for these poor ones. Indigent are we, give unto us the Treasury of Thy Kingdom. Prisoners are we, free us from ought else same Thee. Nameless and traceless are we, accept us at Thy divine Threshold! O God! Do not look upon our desert. Have mercy upon us! Be compassionate to us! Grant us Thy Favour and guide us to the right Path. Verily Thou art the Powerful and Mighty."

Dear Harriet!

We were up early this morning to pack up our bags. All yesterday I had a bad headache and so when last night we arrived from the Theosophical Society. I felt almost dead and after writing half an hour I found myself later sleeping over the desk. Yesterday many people came to see the Beloved showing the great interest on the part of the people. This morning Mr. Edder, Mrs. Thaller, Mr. and Mrs. Luckneder and others came to say goodbye to him. Mrs. Luckneder brought a bouquet of {{p2}} red roses with lily of the valleys. I could not bring anything sweeter and more fragrant than these flowers for they relate to you the story of our love and attachment to your Cause more than our poor words can express. The Master told them: Praise be to God that means were brought about for me to come to Vienna. I shall never forget these days spent with you with joy and fragrance. I found souls here who are awakened and intelligent and who love to serve the world of humanity. I hope also that you will not forget me. I will ever remember you, {{p3}} I will ever pray for you and beg divine guidance for you. You must now arise to teach this Cause. First teach yourselves and then teach others.

At nine o'clock and fifteen minutes we left the hotel, Mr. Herrigel and Ahmad Bageroff going ahead of us to buy tickets. The Master as usual gave a great deal of money to the maids, servants, messenger boys and a host of other servants. The Manager came personally and thanked him. Ahmad Bageroff will {{p4}} return from Vienna to Persia, thus we are losing a fine travelling companion. The Master wrote him a beautiful Tablet with His own hand.

From ten o'clock in the morning to 2:10 minutes after midnight we travelled. The train stopping one hour in each city. We passed many mountains capped with snow. The Master devoted much of his time to the reading of letters. Mr. Herrigel talked with two ladies going to Munich about the Cause and brought {{p5}} them to the Master. He spoke to each a few minutes giving them the glad-tidings of this Glorious Day and exhorting to investigate more about this great Cause. At one o'clock we had our lunch and at three the Master was served with his tea.

It was about just 2 hours after midnight when our train made a short stop in Esslinger and lo and behold, there were four Bahais waiting to greet the Master. They had their tickets and accompanied us to Stuttgart.

In the station there {{p6}} were more than twelve Bahais amongst them Consul Schevaz, Mrs. Herrigel, Bertha Bahmuller, Miss Stabler, Miss Anna Kosthin, Marie Schwaizer, Miss Thurer, Mr. Thaumman etc. Just think of it! Two o'clock a.m. to came to the station! They were all supremely happy to greet again the Master in Stuttgart. He shook hands with each and immediately was taken to the Hotel Marquardt. He has the room 141 second floor and we have the same number of rooms as before. He may stay two nights here. Tomorrow night he will speak on a public hall. The newspapers have announced the meeting so I suppose there will be a whole lot of people.

HOTEL MARQUARDT STUTTGART April 25th 1913

{{p1}}

Dear Harriet!

We are again back in Stuttgart and are feeling the warmth and the affections of the friends of God. Their heavenly sincerity, their divine love for the Cause, their burning devotion to the Master, their unflinching faith in the revelation of Baha-wllah, their spiritual perception of the realities of this Movement, their supreme desire to serve, their affection and amity amongst themselves will melt the stony heart of any person who comes in touch with them, looks into their happy shining faces and speaks with them on the spiritual verities of life. The believers in Stuttgart are really Bahais. They live and act in accord with the Teachings and principles of the Blessed Perfection and they try to help others and spread the message to the extent of their knowledge and ability. They know that this is the seed-sowing time and like unto good farmers, they have availed themselves of this unparalleled opportunity. Everyone knows his duty. Every soldier to his post. With their disciplined ranks they are attacking the fortifications of the myrmidons of darkness and ignorance and step by step they are gaining the ground. Desperately they shall fight till their struggle is crowned with success and they {{p2}} have planted their flag of “ya Baha El Abha” on that you hill of Light, putting to rout and defeat the army of darkness.

Today the Master did not feel well. The trace of the cold taken in Budapest is yet with him. He could not sleep last night, coughing most of the time. We feel so wretched whenever he feels sick, because we cannot see him suffer and often he would not tell us his real pain till it is all over. It is a strange coincidence that when we arrived last night in the hotel about 2:15 am and our rooms were assigned, I did not feel sleepy at all and having changed my clothes, I sat behind the desk and wrote till the sun downed from the Eastern horizon. I find always the late hours after midnight and the early wee hours of the morning better suited for my scribbling. It is most interesting to watch the gloomy darkness of the night transformed slowly into the bright light of the day. It is so much like the changes going on through the inner man. A sudden light breaking through the darkness, changing everything and clothing the essences of humanity with the white garment of sanctity and iridescent intelligence. Often have I witnessed this invisible transformation of heart affected so naturally and simply by the mighty power of the Master!

This morning New York herald of European edition contained an item of news which cheered the heart of the Master. It was as regards a speech given by Mr. W. J. Bryan, the Secretary of State at a farewell dinner to Mr. James Bryce. His idea of a reduction of the American Navy and a policy of gradual disarmament is a hopeful sign of the spread of the desire for universal Peace. I am pleased, he said, to hear the voice of Mr. Bryan raised from time to time in favor of peace. While travelling in America I often mentioned the fact that as the American nation is a noble nation and as the American government is fair and just. I hope the Banner of international Peace will be unfurled here. Now I am very happy to see these hopeful signs coming from that wonderful country.

Speaking about the great expenses of this Western trip he said: The believers of Persia made the greatest self-sacrifice and this trip was made possible. They made large and small contributions and as this was for the sake of the promotion of the Word of God we in turn did not observe the dictates of economy. In every matter, first of all I consider the glory of the {{p4}} Cause of God. All these expenses which are being made are for the promulgation of the Bahai principles in the world. We do not charge anything for them. Freely we have received freely we give. For two years and half we have been travelling and we hope to finish this tour with joy and fragrance and the great glorification of the Cause of God. My affairs are very strange and few can understand my motives. For example for the last 2 years and half I have not sent one dollar to my own family to buy clothes with, neither have I bought for them one yard of cloth. But I bought this winter more than one hundred overcoats for the poor of Acca. One who may hear these things may not believe in them but nevertheless they are true.

Mr. Herrigel and Dr. Fisher came and translated an article which had appeared yesterday in a local paper. It was a very good one and I enclose a copy of the paper in a separate package with others.

Mrs. Consul Schwarz with her two daughters and sons came to pay a visit to the Master. He said: You are the members of my own family. God bears testimony {{p5}} that there is no distinction. I love you very much. You are my own daughter and your children are my grandchildren. While we were away we often remembered you and were grateful for your services to the Cause. The little young man was a pet of the Master and was loved very much by him. He was surrounded today with his affection and tenderness.

To another group who entered in his Presence with fragrant roses in their hands: I have come back again to Stuttgart. This shows that Stuttgart has a great deal of capability and the people are worthy of entrance in the Kingdom of Abha. God willing the Cause of God will advance greatly in Stuttgart and its promotion will be extraordinary, many souls shall accept the revelation and all will be made happy.

Consul Schwaz invited the Master to eat in his home after the meeting but he excused himself because he did not feel well. He felt as though he could not go tonight to the meeting, he wanted us to go, Mirza Mahmoud to chant a prayer, myself to speak and Mr. Herrigel to read the translation {{p6}} of the Master's address in the Jewish Synagogue in San Francisco. We were all very disappointed, especially this meeting has been announced in the papers and many strangers would naturally come and not hearing the Master would go away unsatisfied.

Miss Alma Knoblock and a few of the friends were introduced into his Presence. They were greeted most heartily. The love of Baha-wllah, the Master said, is the essence of happiness. Any heart which will become the depository of this love is always happy. There have been many people sad and despondent but as soon as the sun of the love of Baha-wllah shown in their hearts they become happy. Therefore you must be very happy because you are living in the day of the Blessed Perfection. All the prophets longed for this day. They yearned for one moment of this time. Appreciate the value of this age. The more you appreciate the glories of these days, the greater will be your blessings.

A friend asked how can we ever keep {{p7}} this before our minds all the time?

often we desire to do it but in the hurry and rush of time we will forget it. He said: A Real Bahai who acts and lives in accord with the teachings of Baha-wllah will never forget.

Someone expressed the disappointment that the people will experience tonight in not finding the Master in the meeting. He said: My spirit will be there. You must speak with great confidence and set the hearts on fire. You must turn your face to the Kingdom of Abha. Rely upon the Confirmation of God. Sincerity is the keynote of eloquence. Look at me. I have not entered any school. I have not studied the sciences of the world but my trust is in Baha-wllah. Whenever I want to enter any meeting I say "O Baha-wllah! Confirm me".

To another one he said: When I was in Paris I caught a cold, in Budapest I caught a another, in Vienna it accompanied me and while there, I walked up twice 120 steps to the fourth floor to speak to the Theosophical Society, and last night {{p8}} on the train I felt the chills. Now it is impossible for me to go to the meeting tonight. You express my apology and deep sorrow in not being able to come. For lunch he ate a bowl of clear broth and was in bed all afternoon. Just the same, many people came and he spoke to them and encouraged them to go on teaching the Cause and spreading the message.

While he was lying in bed he told me two stories; both showing courage, his pluck, resourcefulness and supreme confidence and divine knowledge in his youth. The first story runs as follows: During the first year of our arrival in Bagdad one day Mirza Javad asked me to go out with him to an outlying district. At this time, Arabian robbers frequented the roads and no one dared to go out of the tavern. In the morning we two started to walk to that district. Having spent part of the day, toward the evening we started to return. However, before leaving Bagdad, Mirza Javad took for precautions sake, an old rifle he had carried around for many years. As we were walking back toward the city we spied in the far off horizon, several horsemen coming toward us. {{p9}} Seeing we were all alone, they galloped toward our left and right and back so that we may not run away and in front of us three men appeared with rifles in their hands. Mirza Javad was much agitated. He got hold of his rifle but to his further confusion he realized that he had neither powder nor cartridges so his rifle was more useless than a piece of stick. Then I told him take your rifle in your hand, keeping it in a position as though he was going to aim at them. Don't heed them at all. Don't look at them. Walk straight. Laugh and speak with me. The three men ahead of us cried out "down with your rifle!" Mirza Javad did not give any attention to them. They were amazed at our audacity! "Down with your arm!" they cried all at once. No result. They were cowered and paced back a few steps. In this way we walked and laughed and talked till we reached the gate of the city and all the time our "friends" going backward. When the horsemen saw the futility of their pursuit, they spied another pedestrian on the road and galloped toward him. This man seeing {{p10}} us coming with a rifle in hand hastened towards us and cried for protection from the robbers. Meanwhile the gate was opened and our "friends" realizing the hopelessness of their hide back into the darkness. We did not have anything but the other man had some money and was grateful to us because we saved him. Addressing Mirza Javad he said: I am glad you did not kill them. The way you took your rifle in your hands I thought every moment you will shoot at them. Here the Master had a hearty laugh and added: And all this time our rifle was empty.

The other story illustrates his wonderful versatility during conversation: I was only fifteen. One day in the Mosque of Bagdad I was surrounded by a number of Mohamadan Clergy. They were asking many questions about jurisprudence law, logic etc. Although I had never read their books, yet I was giving them answers {{p11}} which satisfied and at the same time caused them great astonishment. While I was speaking to them on theological doctrines, suddenly I saw the governor entered the circle of the listeners. Immediately I felt that the governor being a philosophic man abhorred such dry theological discussions so without any preliminary remark I quoted a verse from the Koran in which it is said: "Therefore Moses cried out, O Lord! let me behold Thy Face" and the Lord answered: "Look and thou shall see me! (Now according to the orthodox school of theology the "face of God" cannot be seen, because they argue; God is spirit and formless and how can a formless spirit be endowed with face?) Then I said: We all believe that the prophets of God never speak vainly and their words are the words of truth. Therefore if it was impossible to see the face of God Moses would have not asked it, neither would he have received such a favorable reply on {{p12}} the part of God. The Mohamadan clergymen were all the time wondering why I changed the topic of my conversation but seeing the governor in their midst all aglow with attention they understood. Then I desired to mollify them so that they may not think I am a heretic in teaching them the incarnation of God in the flesh, therefore, I continued my talk: Verily when Moses drunk the wine of the Love of God and heard the voice of the Lord and was submerged in the sea of abstraction - he forgot the world and all therein and saw himself in the "Abode of Paradise" and as the "Abode of Paradise" is the station of divine transfiguration and visitation, therefore he cried out: O Lord! Let me behold Thy Face! The governor was so interested that he invited me that night to his house to speak to his friends. The clergymen were angry and thought this was an oratorical trickery and cleverness, but it was the confirmation and inspiration of God.

About 8 o'clock Mr. Herrigel came and as the Berger Museum where the meeting will be held is near we walked to it. As I entered the large hall and saw the expectant happy crowd I felt in my heart the pangs of pain. There were more than 1500 people present and people were coming in, filling the galleries. Consul Schwarz, Mirza Mahmoud and myself had a hasty consultation and thought it our duty to notify the Master about the unusual aspect of this meeting. It was evidently the largest gathering ever brought together to hear the Bahai Cause in Germany. With Consul Schwarz I rushed out of the hall, called an automobile and were in the room of the Master in three minutes. He had just taken some simple Persian medicine and was sitting the chair. I told him of the greatness of the meeting and the Consul pleaded to come just for a few minutes. He thought {{p14}} for a minute or two and for the sake of the Consul decided to go, although he did not feel well at all. We were of course overjoyed. When we entered the hall, the audience was listening to a very good address by Mr. Herrigel on the life and ideals of the Master and when they heard that he had come, their enthusiasm knew no bound. They arose from their seats and gave him a wonderful reception. It was a waving, moving sea of humanity, all eager to hear the words of the Master. Many of them had come from the surrounding towns. The Master ascended the platform and sat on a chair and without any introduction started to speak. His address on this unique occasion was a matchless beauty which will be set on the crown of Stuttgart. His voice, his love, his sympathy won all the hearts. When he finished his short speech many eyes were weeping. We had a good translator, the Prof. of English language in the university of this city. He translated with ready diction and much feeling. When the Master came down from the platform {{p15}} many strangers gathered around him, trying to shake and kiss his hands. A lady was so affected by his words that she run to him weeping. She got hold of his arm, and walked by his side till he reached the automobile. All along the steps and the hall two columns of men and women were formed and we passed in their midst, all looking at the Master with reverence and respect. I was walking behind him carrying in my arm the love-offering of many people - roses and carnations, lilacs and lily of the valleys. When we reached the car hundreds of people those who could not enter the hall had gathered. Hats were raised and handkerchiefs were waving when they saw the Master coming down from the stairs. The car carried away the King of Kings amidst the rejoicing and happiness of all these devout people!

The Master said in the car: It was a remarkable meeting and its effect in the Bahai world will be far-reaching. Consul Schwarz was of course the happiest man in the world because at last the Cause was publicly proclaimed before the people of Stuttgart! He said: You have won the hearts of our people with love and the renown of this spiritual victory shall reverberate throughout all ages. The Beloved was also pleased because his Presence gave so much joy to so many people. It was indeed an ideal triumph! Miss Pollock is here yet and I was glad to see her last night. She brought three people to the meeting and she was all enkindled with the Fire of the Love of God!

{{p17}}

To Mr. and Mrs. Stark

Upon them be Baha-o-llah El Abha.

Budapest.

He is God!

O ye two revered souls!

Since the day of my departure from Budapest I have been always remembering you and have begged from his holiness Baha-wllah protection and providence for you, so that divine spirituality and the Bestowals of the Kingdom of Abha may surround you and the most holy Power may so reveal itself in your hearts that from all your limbs the cry of “Ya Baha El Abha” may raised and be heard by all the people. With one hand may you upraise the heavenly Banner and with the other hand, may you hold the overflowing cup with the wine of the Love of God, offering it to all and exhilarating everyone with its spiritual nectar. Open ye the eloquent tongues and utter ye fluent speeches. Sing ye such a melody that while I am in the East {{p18}} I may hear its clear echo and all the Bahais may become rejoiced and happy.

Convey to all the friends the wonderful Abha greeting Upon ye be Baha El Abha!

To his honor Mr. E. W. Moore.

Upon him be Baha-o-llah El Abha!

Budapest.

He is God!

O thou servant of Baha-wllah and the beloved of Abdul Baha!

Thy letter was received and its contents imported the utmost happiness. Praise be to God that my journey to Budapest was productive of certain definite results, for the people were attracted to the Kingdom of Abha and enkindled with the Fire of the Love of God. During the Dispensation of Christ notwithstanding the power of the Holy Spirit only eleven souls were attracted but during the nine days stay in Budapest blessed souls entered the Kingdom of Abha. Now consider how marvellous is the potency of the Kingdom of Abha that as soon as the call was raised, the souls were attracted and set aglow with the Fire of the Love of God. If at the present time such results are becoming manifest, reflect what will transpire in the future! Eleven souls become believers and assured during the days of Christ. Now behold the results! Millions of voices are joined with the chimes calling out O Christ! O Christ!

After a short while thou shall hear that the cry of “ye Baha El Abha” is being raised from all the continents of the world. Convey to all the friends the wonderful Abha greeting and give them the Glad-tidings of the Divine Favors! Give my special greeting to thy respectful wife and show the utmost of love on my behalf to thy beloved sons.

###April 26th 1913 HOTEL MARQUARDT STUTTGART

Dear Harriet!

This was Saturday and all day I was in Spirit with the New York friends, the luncheon at our dear sister Mrs Krug, the Executive Business meeting and the general reception. I hope all the noble efforts of the believers are crowned with success and the result of the Convention will be a general spread of the Cause and the closer relationship of the different assemblies. When the friends of the different cities come together, the spirit, the spirit of mutual friendship and love is increased and the hearts are tied together with the golden thread of spiritual affection. I hope to receive the good reports of the Convention days for they are marked days in the Bahai calendar. How strange and mystical that last year at this time the Master was in America and this year, he is in Germany! This may in itself be a symbol of the future ideal friendship of these two countries!

One of the newspapers contained quite a long article on last night's meeting and it was translated to the Master. He feels much better this morning and right early the people commenced to come. To the first group of friends he said: What did the people say last night? Were they not dissatisfied? Did they not exclaim what this Persian has to do with us? Why has he come to Germany? What do we want to do with these pacific principles? Let peace be for the weaker nations but war is for the mighty! Germany is a warlike, demonstrative nation! This morning looking down from the window, I saw a regiment of soldiers passing by in fine shape. They were ready to fight for the fatherhood. How barbarous and foolish it is to send men who know not each other at all to the battlefield and order them to shoot down each other and cut one another's throat. But friends let us talk about our own war. Our Grand Army consists of the invisible angles of the Supreme {{p3}} Concourse; our swords are the swords of light. Our armaments are the invincible armaments of heaven. We are fighting against the forces of darkness. Oh! My soldiers! My beloved soldiers, forward! Forward! Have no fear of defeat! Have no failing hearts! Our Supreme Commander is Baha-Ullah! From the height of his glory he is directing this dramatic engagement. He commands us. Push onwards, push forward! Show the strength of your arms! Ye shall scatter the powers of ignorance! Your war confers life, theirs brings death. Your war is the cause of the illumination of human kind; theirs is the means of the darkness of the hearts. Your war is victory upon victory; their war is defeat upon defeat. Your war is the source of construction; their war is the origin of destruction. There are no dangers before you. Push forward! Fire! Fire! Attack the enemy! Your efforts {{p4}} shall be crowned with the diadem of eternal Peace and brotherhood! See ye not the crown of victory shining from the Kingdom of Abha? His Holiness the Christ was fighting even upon the Cross and his triumphs have continued throughout all centuries and cycles!

To a Bahai farmer who has come from one of the towns of Switzerland to see the aster he said: Two years ago I was in Tonou. I was staying in a hotel. I found the hotel people who consisted mostly of Tourists upon the pursuit of pleasure but walking in the streets and looking in the faces of the inhabitants, I observed intelligence, industry, capability and seriousness. They are very good people and are ready to receive the glad-tidings of the kingdom. If the fragrances of this holy Cause waft by that country, blessed souls shall arise to serve the world of humanity.

To another group of the Bahais he said: You must be very happy because you are of those souls whom God has chosen for the sake of his love and has guided you to his Kingdom. He has crowned our heads with the diadems of everlasting glory. You must be most thankful to god for this great Favor. It is known for the present what wonderful bounty is this! It will become known in the future. The station of those souls who believed in Christ in his oven day was not appreciated. They were ridiculed and scorned.

Someone asked the Master whether he is happy. He said: I am happy whenever I meet you. The greatest pleasure of my life is to meet people like you. Whenever I look upon each one of you, I believe you are one of my nearest relatives. Now I have again returned to see you.

Another group entered his Presence. They expressed happiness over the result {{p6}} of last night's meeting and how the people were attracted to the cause and to him. He said: Although I could not walk one step last night and it was quite dangerous to go out I said I will go. The utmost is that will become a sacrifice to the friends of God. My greatest longing is also to sacrifice myself in the path of the believers. There is nothing sweeter and more wonderful than this! But praise is to God, we went, we spoke, we met the people, we returned and nothing happened. God has protected us. So, when I said last night that to go to the meeting was equal to throw myself into the sea, I meant the sea of love. When God interferes with our places we are helpless. First I come to Stuttgart to stay only two days. I stayed 8 days. Now, again I desired to leave today but sickness preventing me to do so I am going to stay longer. There must be wisdom in this.

This comes from the sincerity of the friends of Stuttgart. Undoubtedly my longer stay will have imparted results. The first result will be the creation of love in the hearts of the believers. The second result will be the progress of the Cause in Germany. The third result will be the penetration of the word of God.

To a caller he said: I am glad to see you. The meeting of the friends is the food of the spirit. To a friend who had seen a vision he said: This vision is an indication of thy advancement in the Love of God.

About noon many of the believers came. The Master received them with love and said: I will pray in your behalf and entreat divine Confirmation for each one of you so that you may so advance in spiritual life as to attract to the Cause every soul who comes in contact with you just as you have attracted me.

{{p8}}

Your love has attracted me to this city. I hope that day unto day your love may increase. I am most pleased and happy with you. May you become more enkindled with the Fire of the Love of God, so that through the Light of the Kingdom you may illumine all these religions. I love you very much. Should you realize how much I love you, you will soon with happiness in the atmosphere of God. Consul Schwarz asked the Master whether he would like to consult a doctor. He said: God is my physician. He will treat me.

Miss Pollock had a pleasant interview with the Master. He joked with her about his second trip to America. If I want to go to America, I will take you with me and leave Ahmad here. We do not need any interpreter. We will travel in {{p10}} an airship and go right to Washington and alight at the door of Mrs Allen's house. How do you like this? She was of course very happy but she wanted to have the interpreter in the airship also, in order to make the aerial navigation more pleasant. Then he asked her whether last night the people were happy or frowning, and he frowned so that made us all laugh heartily.

Doctor Faber, a celebrated physician of Morgeutheim who has declared he publicly to be a Bahai called on the Beloved and invited him to go for a month to Morgeutheim and take the mineral baths every day. The Master said: You take the baths in my place and I will get well. The Doctor thought he could not represent the Master to that extent, but in order to make him and the rest laugh he told the following story: One of the Kings of Persia once got sick. This {{p11}} King was very proud and despotic. All the people at the court feared him and cowered before him. One day he sent for the Court physician to treat him. When the physician arrived and prescribed a large dose of quinine the King in his wrath cried out . Who should take this medicine? The physician fearing the anger of the King said, "I am the one to take the quinine," "All right," the King said and he ordered his chaucherlain to bring the largest dose of quinine and made his physician to take it. By mere chance, the health of the King was improved and after a while he got well. From that time on whenever he became sick he sent for his physician and made him take a dose of quinine. Then the Master applying the moral of the story, said to Doctor {{p12}} that you take the mineral baths and I will get well, even if i am not there. Mr and Ms Herrigel, Miss Knoblock, Consul Schwarz, his wife and daughter and many others came in the afternoon and each one had interesting interviewed going out of his Presence inspired and refreshed, To Mr Herrigel he said: The future of the Cause in Germany is very bright Likewise Budapest and Vienna will become Bahai Centres. One could never have believed that such whole and pure souls will be found in those cities. The Cause of God will be spread in all those countries. The progress of the Cause is like unto the coming of the spring and its early signs. Suddenly one sees here a tree is putting for to leaves, there a bush being adorned with roses, the nightingales are singing and the meadows are seen!

Often letters were received from unknown places, giving the news that some souls are found who are attracted to the Kingdom of Abha. These are the signs of the spiritual springtime. Thou shalt become assisted in the service of the Cause so that the morality of the people may be improved; the souls may become regenerated and the hearts cleansed from the impurity of vices and defects. This matter of the regeneration of the moral life of man is quite important. Where this is realized one fluid himself in a wonderful spiritual atmosphere which is impossible to describe; he finds himself a ruler over all things, he is the controller and the Master of his own destiny, he gains strength and illumination, he became like unto the ray of the Sun.

About five o'clock Mirza Mahmoud and myself were in our rooms when the Master sent Sayad Assadollah after us to have tea with him. He offered a cup with his own hand to me and said: Mirza Ahmad, drink this cup of tea and "see" how delicious it is. This is the nectar of life! Drink it and thank God that in Stuttgart Abdul Baha is serving thee tea. We must thank God for all his bounties. Let me tell you a story which has come just now to my mind, Abdul Baha said. When I was in Baghdad, one day I was walking through the poor quarter of the city. I saw an old Arab standing in front of store. He had neither hat nor shoes and wore only a long tottered coat over his naked body. He had no shirt. Between his coat and his skin, he had a loaf of coarse black bread. {{p15}} His appearance attracted my attention and I stopped in a corner to watch him what he is going to do. As I stood there i saw him putting his hand in his breast, taking out a piece of bread, looking at it with the utmost satisfaction and smile then raising his head toward the sky, saying 'O, God I thank Thee for this Thy Favor' and then eating it. He continued to do the same thing for every piece of bread he did put in his mouth with the utmost simplicity and trust. This thanksgiving of him attracted me very much and I went to him and invited him to dinner. Having given him the address,

I returned home and ordered the preparation of pillow and chicken. When he came and the table was spread before him he looked at the various dishes with wonder in his eyes. "Come, sit down and eat. {{p16}} This dinner is prepared for thee," I said. "Really," he said, "this is the food of Paradise but it lacks one thing." "What is it?" "Sour milk." "All right. You shall get that too" and I sent someone to get it for him. When everything was ready, I told him: "Now start eating but with the same thankfulness, you ate your bread yesterday." I did not need to say that, he would have done it anyway but we enjoyed seeing him so thankful.

He continued telling us other stories illustrating the thanksgiving of man to his Master for all the blessings which He showers upon him.

Reading to him an item of news about the capture of Sentauro by Montenegrins. He said: When Baha-Ullah was imprisoned in the Barrack of Acca, he could see the disintegration of Ottoman Empire under the despotic and fanatical {{p17}} rule of the Sultans; for He said: the only things that will stop the tide of misfortune is the proclamation of complete equality and the enjoyment of the freedom of rights by all the Ottoman subjects, Mohamadans, and Christians, Jews and Armenians, etc.

Speaking about the progress of the Cause he said: Many blessed and holy should have appeared in this Cause who has been the essence of essences. That is why the Cause is so wonderfully spread all over the world. These holy souls were the means of upraising the Bahai standard. The Islands of Jove, Sumatra and one other contains millions of inhabitants and many of them were converted from idolatry into Mohammedan religion by one single person. {{p18}} Just think of that Mohammedan missionary attraction and of accomplishing such a mighty task! When he finished his work he left the Islands for an unknown destination and after that no one heard anything about him. Even his name is not known. Now it is evident that one single soul was greater than a million of the present day. Whereas for he worked for God and not for fame or name or wealth. There is the proverb that "one man is equal to one thousand"; one man maybe the cause of the illumination of one city filling it with his services and his impersonal humanity. For example the city of in Persia was formerly very active and alive in the Cause, but today it is as though entirely extinct. This is because at that time there was {{p19}} one real, genuine, enthusiastic Bahai and he kept all the friends in a state of enkindlement and activity. When he passed away from this life, the fire was extinguished and there was no one in his place to keep the wheels rolling.

Speaking about the journey of Baha-Ullah from Baghdad to Constantinople he said: "There were 60 stages from Baghdad to Samson and the trip was made under the most difficult circumstances. It was a time of famine and scarcity of food. We had beside, more than 70 people in the party and nearly 30 horses and other animals. These horses had to be fed and as it was most difficult for others to feed straw, grass, barley for the animals and food for the men, I appointed myself at the head of commissions department. As soon as we reached <20> the end of one stage, I would go all alone in the villages and amongst the wild tribes of and with the greatest amount of persuasion, I would make them sell me the necessary provisions for horses and men. I always first thought about the feed for the animals. Once they were provided I would think of the men. With gold in hand, often I was refused provision. They would tell me roughly: We do not have straw or barley! I would answer: Are we not your guests passing through your country and has not the prophet said: 'Be ye kind to your guest even though he be an infidel.' They would then frown and say: We will not sell you anything. I answer: All right. Then, give them to me, gratis!

Often from afternoon till midnight {{p21}} I was going from one village to another trying to find food and provision and on my return, I was so tired that I could not stand on my feet. then I had to supervise the division of the provision for the animals so that no one may take more than his share. By this time I was so tired that I would go to sleep without eating anything. The Blessed Perfection travelled in "Kajave" but we had a horse for him and sometimes, he would ride. From Baghdad to the first stage he was on horseback while in Acca, we had a wonderful white donkey which belonged to him. The name of the donkey was "Barg" lightning. When we arrived at "Kharout" whose present name is "Mamouratol-Aziz," I was at {{p22}} a loss how to get food and provision when I saw a gentleman coming toward me and behind him there were many labourers carrying loads on their shoulders. He said: Ezzah Pasha has offered thee presents for Baha-Ullah and humbly prays him to accept them. The presents consisted of barley, straw, forage, rice, sugar, bread, tea, butter, etc., a large quantity of each. For the first time after many nights and days of worry I felt relieved. I asked one of the believers to look over the delivery of these goods, thanked the gentleman and went straight to sleep. I slept all that afternoon, all that night and all the next morning till noon. We stayed 8 days in "Kaspout" and I did hardly anything else but sleeping because we had everything supplied.

Stuttgart

Hello Harriet! The public meeting last night in Burger Museum was assuredly the largest Bahai meeting were held in Germany. There were present at least 1500 present of the most representative element on Stuttgart and the talk of the Master enkindled their hearts with the Fire of the Love of God. He talked on Universal Peace and Universal Love. Many eyes were weeping. When he wanted to leave, around his automobile hundreds of men and women were gathered, giving him a most enthusiastic farewell. It was a wonderful night and its influence in the future will be very great.

###April 27th 1913 HOTEL MARQUARDT STUTTGART

Dear Harriet!

The love of the German believers for the Master is the most remarkable thing I have ever witnessed anywhere. This love is shown toward him even by their children. Their sturdiest and strongest men have the greatest respect and veneration for him. As they enter his room, it is as though they are in the Presence of the Superior Being. Everyone kisses his hand and keeps silent, ever eager to listen to his words of wisdom and knowledge. The kissing of his hands is the most natural and spontaneous thing you have ever witnessed. No one has told them to do this and the Master discourages them but it springs from their hearts. It is the most interesting sight to see children of a very few years running to him with love and then kissing his hand. His love for the children is a source of never {{p2}} failing joy to all those who come to see him which immediately put them in touch with his all-prevailing spirit of kindness and tenderness. For the last month or two the great prophecy of Isaiah often comes to my mind: For unto us a child is born, unto us a Son is given, and the government shall be upon his shoulder; and His name called Wonderful, Counsellor, The Mighty God, The Everlasting Father, and The Prince of Peace. I do not claim that the Master is the fulfilment of this prophecy but I can say thus much safely that all these qualities are found in him to perfection. Anyone who is endowed with the spiritual perception and stays one morning in his Presence and sees with his own eyes all that occur, he becomes convinced of this statement. One does not need to go out to see the world; the world comes to him with all its puzzling problems. All types of men and women sit at his feet and in {{p3}} his heavenly environment all their seemingly insurmountable barriers are wiped away and they become as one. He carries them away into the empyrean realm of brotherhood and while living there, these people who were total strangers to each other - lo and behold they have become brothers! What made this sudden transformation possible? The Universal Consciousness of the Master with the magic wand of spirit, he unfolds before our vision, the glories of human solidarity but often the light being too dazzling we turn away from it, preferring our dim ray of patriotism. He teaches his audience, he amuses them, he instructs them, he inspires their hearts with noble ideals, he fires their spirit with enthusiasm for greater faith, he counsels them, he guides them through the rocky paths {{p4}} of life, he gives them sound advice regarding their affairs, he confers upon them happiness, he improves their minds, and he exalts their thoughts. In deed and word, he is the Great Ensample of divine Humanity. We must plan our imperfect lives after his Perfect example, the lesser must revolve around the Greater, the part must follow the whole, and the drop must emulate the ocean. The infinite possibilities of progress are before us, the trumpet has sounded the Great Call, the mighty rivers of knowledge are flowing, the Breeze of the holy Spirit is wafted, the doors of the rose-garden of Abha are open, the heavenly banquet is spread, the divine Beloved has unveiled his face and the day of the spiritual brotherhood is close at hand. Now what our effort and our endeavor might accomplish remain to be seen!

This morning before the friends started to come he told us something about the life of Bismarck: He was the most wonderful genius i statesmanship. He was a wise, shrewd and most intelligent diplomatist. First he conceived the plan of the confederation of the scattered German principalities into one great Empire and then for long many years he worked persistently for its realization till at last his labours were crowned with success. To accomplish such a great task of union was superhuman. Now all this German development and its modern culture owe its origin to the confederation. Notwithstanding all these services, all that is left of him is a name in history and statues erected in his memory here and there. But if he had served one thousandths {{p6}} part, the Cause of God, eternally he would have shown forth from the boryan of everlasting glory.

Then the believers started to come. Mr and Mrs Hofner brought their son who is a favourite of Our Beloved. Having not enough seats, many of the friends were standing all around the room. The Master took the little boy in his arms, kissed him, played with his locks and while he was nestled in his lap he spoke: The love of the children is pure; therefore you can see it in their faces. All of us must have loved; especially this love, because it is the Love of God. Our hearts must be like the hearts of the children which are without deceit or dust. The susceptibilities of the children rule over their wills. If the children do not love some {{p7}} one they do not approach him. Of double-dealing, they know nothing. They are nor hypocritical. Their outward and inward are the same. Children must be well-educated. These children are like unto the tender plants. If the plant is trained straight by the skilful gardener it will become straight and if it is trained crookedly, it will become crooked. From babyhood, the Love of God must be deposited in their hearts. They will, then, be well educated, they will become illumined, and they will be imbued with praiseworthy qualities. I love the children very much, because they are of the Kingdom of God. I hope that all these children may attain to the stage if fruition because they are Bahai children.

Then he got up from his chair and divided the any bouquets of flowers amongst the friends. Reaching Mr Rouff he stroked his face and gave him more flowers than the rest. "Because thou art my"baby", therefore thy shore is larger," he said and from that time Mr Rouff is proudly - "although I suppose 50 years - nicknamed"Abdul Baha's baby." "Although in age thou art old, yet in spirit thou art young, the Master remarked with one tap on his shoulder and everybody was laughing with the keen humor of the King of Kings.

Another group of the friends were admitted into his Presence. He said: Affairs so shaped themselves that I may stay longer in this city.

In this there lies a consummate wisdom. It will become evident in the future.

There is no doubt that the believers of Stuttgart have ability and capability. Although I got the call, yet you are the ones to be profited by it. Your sincerity in the cause has caused these delays in my departure. When I leave this city I even anticipate receiving good news from you. I hope to get the glad-tidings that you are enkindled with the fire of the Love of God, day unto day ye are advancing along ideal paths. Whenever the heat of the Sun is diffused and the rain pours down. Then the tree shall grow and develop. Likewise may you grow and develop through the divine Bestowal and {{p10}} exercise toward each other the utmost of affecting and love.

To another group he gave a long talk about the Crown of Everlasting Glory which Baha-Ullah has prepared for all his friends, how this station is not appreciated today just as they did not appreciate Christ and his Teachings. "I give you the glad-tidings," he said towards the end, "that ye are accepted at the Threshold of God and the doors of the Kingdom of Abha are open before your faces. Ere long ye shall observe the traces of this promise I shall never forget Stuttgart; for in this city I inhale the fragrances of spirituality..."

There was a man in the audience who had very long moustaches. {{p11}} He was the father of Mrs Herrigel. The Master looking at his moustaches said jokingly: You are like a lion. People may become afraid of you. Lions are of two kind. The lion of the jungle and the lion of God. The former takes life, the latter confers life. Now thou art the lion of God. Both lions are courageous. The courage of one comes from the brute force, the courage of the other from heart. He is not afraid of any danger; in the field of self-sacrifice he is ready to give up his life. This is real heroism. The "lion of God", Mrs Herrigel's father said was now a Bahai and he could testify that these teachings have entirely transformed him.

The Master said: And so it must be, otherwise a person is not a Bahai. It will be only the change of a name and not that of identity. There were many souls in the East who have been formerly weak, vicious, tyrannical, and dark but having become Bahais now they are strong, sanctified, just and luminous.

A Bahai father and mother with their three little radiant boys came in. The Beloved called them to himself and gave those fruits and candy. He said: "How I love these children! How pure and innocent they are! They are the embodiments of light. Look at their blue eyes, how beautiful they are! How lovely their looks! Oh! How I love them!"

Till 12 o'clock the room was filled with emptied group after group. Consul Schwarz, with his daughter was waiting for a one hour to take the Master for a ride. At last we were free and ready to start out when another group arrived and for a few minutes the Master entertained them. Many of the friends brought their German Hidden words and Abdul Baha's photos for him to sign. Miss

Olly Schwarz, the daughter of Consul had her book brought for the Beloved to write something and he wrote the following beautiful prayer:

“O Thou Beauty of Abha! Make {{p14}} Thou this maid-servant of Thy Threshold a radiant lamp so that like unto a star she may shine with the Light of Thy Love.”

We had more than one hour drive though the royal Park called the “Solitude”. There were many old trees, lovely lakes, and innumerable deers. On our return the Consul was showing the Master the palace belonging to a Barou. “This is the best private residence in Stuttgart,” he said. “No,” the Master answered immediately, “The best private residence in Stuttgart is your, because we have been there and have raised the mention of God.”

Again Consul Schwarz expatiating on the antiquity of a noble family the Master answered, “The noble family will be the one which you will found, because you are a believer in Baha-Ullah.” The Consul also showed us the “Bismarck Tower” high on a hill, having a commanding view over all the city. On the 21st of June every year, during the night a great fire is lighted on this tower in commemoration of the Confederation of German Empire. On the way the Master called at the office of Doctor Fisher, stayed there for a few minutes and as we were all invited for lunch to the Consul’s house we were taken to 3 Alexanderstrasse. Here the Master rested for a while before lunch and then told Consul the lovely story of the “thorn-seller” of Baghdad who invited him to his tent 20 miles outside of the city. The dinner consisted of baked dough and dates but the delicious tastes of it has yet remained {{p16}} in his palate because he had cooked it with love. At four o’clock many prominent men and women of the royal Court of the King of Wurtemberg were invited to meet the Master. Happily they all understood English and the address of the Master could be made more interesting to them. Many of them were Counts and Countesses, Barous and Baronesses and of the cabinet of the King. It was a very significant meeting and the result of it will be far-reaching for the Cause in Germany. The Consul and his wife were very glad because they were enabled to bring about such a brilliant gathering. They were without exception most attracted to the Master’s address. Which the Beloved was speaking in Consul’s young son cause to have him sat in his lap. Some photos were {{p17}} taken of that natural position. At five o’clock the beloved motored to Fraven club, Kouzleistr to deliver an address before the Bahais at their 19 days Feast. Four rooms were thrown open to each other and in all of them many tables were arranged over which candies, flowers, fruits, etc. were served. As this feast was decided upon only yesterday, all the Bahais did not know about it. There were more than 150 present. The Master gave an eloquent address which imparted happiness to the hearts. Amongst those who were invited {{p18}} there were many important men and women in the social life of Stuttgart. After this meeting the Beloved came to the hotel. In the evening Consul Schwarz came and begged him to decide upon a date so that they could have another public gathering. This time the meeting to be held in a larger hall. He, however, could not accept this kind of invitation because he expected to leave for Paris. Beside he must rest two days before leaving the city. Consequently he hoped they will excuse him. We have had already many heavenly meetings, the seeds have been sown, now the friends must arise to water them.

###April 28,1913 Hote Marquardt, Stuttgart

{{p1}}

I think Stuttgart will keep the Master three days longer. As he has received many cablegram from Haifa that pilgrims from all parts of the Orient have arrived and are awaiting his return, he is trying to make all the possible haste to bring the Western journey to a close. When we left America no one ever dreamed that his European tour will run into so many months; but the unexpected happened and many parts of Europe were illumined with this light and many people were awakened to the importance of these teachings. Consciously or unconsciously, by word or by deed, they testify that this Cause is the spirit of this age the light of this age and the hope of this age.

{{p2}}

This morning quite naturally Master talked to us three servants of his, for nearly one hour. There was no one else in the room. When he talks only to a few people, his charm and attraction as a divine conversationalist becomes more manifest and evident. His knowledge and varied human experiences, as he goes on talking keep one hanging to every word which drops from his blessed tongue and one is never tired to listen to him. His most heavenly talks are always seasoned with a touching human story or a sweet demonstration of love towards the children or humorous remarks about someone in the audience or the stroking of the beard of a friend or slapping gently on the cheek of another. Thus the people are immediately put in touch with his divine spirit of love and affection. They feel the beauty of his humanity and divinity at the same time.

Opening his remarks as he sat on the chair he said:- If we could appreciate more the bounties of this age and the marvels of this century we would be more thankful to God than ever. For example, let us take this room. Cyrus the great King of Persia could not enjoy the luxuries of a room like this. Solomon with all his glories did not have a mirror like this! (and he pushed me jokingly before the mirror and said: look into it!) Solomon had not an automobile but only a wooden chariot a little gilded though. The audience chamber of Alexander the great was not lighted with electricity. Now most everybody enjoys the possession of an automobile or his room is lighted with electricity. Haroun-Er-Rashid who ruled over many countries of the East had not a clock like this one in his room. The first clock was made during his reign {{p4}} and it was such a novelty that he ordered another one to be made and sent as a great gift to Charlemagne the Great. When it was presented to him all the people were astonished that it worked automatically. The priests of the Court stood before it wonder-struck and could not explain to themselves, the secret power which made it work. Finally after much reflection and consultation they decided that the Arab machinist has imprisoned the devil within the clock and it was the devil that makes it work. Thus they unloosed the various instruments of the clock and found nothing in it neither could they put them together. In those days one could not find a piece of paper to write on, but if someone could get a page of papyrus or skin he would consider himself very fortunate all the verses of the Khoran were written on the shoulders of the muttons {{p5}} and palm leaves. God has opened the doors of inconceivable bounties to the people of this age but many are thoughtless and never think to thank the Maker. Stranger than all the rest is that while God has showered His infinite blessings upon the people of this century. Yet there are some so-called materialists who go to the point of denying His existence. God is very patient but even the patience of God has a limit. What wonderful gifts this age offers to the children of man! Like unto these flowers their fragrances are diffused to all parts of the world. Formerly they had houses built of mud, wood, reed and rough stone but the house of every well-to-do man today is better equipped than the palaces of {{p6}} of the Kings of ancient time. Consider how the world has advanced that today this one room has more modern conveniences than the great Hall of Cyrus in Persepolis. When I was in Bagdad I was invited to the palace of Egbaleh Doulet. He was an Indian Novvab, very wealthy and rich. He had many palaces in different parts of the Orient and would travel all the year around. While going through his palace and decorated Halls I told him that his palace was more wonderful than the palace of Cyrus. He said: 'I must then be greater than Cyrus.' I answered you are not as great as Cyrus but you enjoy more modern conveniences than ever Cyrus did. One evening he stayed in his palace. After dinner we went to sleep. At midnight {{p7}} I got up as usual, we went out, made ablution and came in the room and engaged my time in prayer and supplication toward God with the utmost joy and fragrance. Suddenly I heard Egbaleh Doulet crying like a child and sobbing loudly. I went to him and asked what was it Novvab? Why art thou crying. Why this weeping? He said 'Oh! nothing! I answered: 'But there must be a reason for it! You are not crying without any cause. Tell me the cause and I may at least console you, 'No!' he rejoined 'you cannot console me! I am faithless but you are faithful. You have belief in God but I have lost all my belief. I took a trip to Europe. I carried in its great capitals and my conversations with the westerners made me an unbeliever. But this evening {{p8}} I observed with what radiant hope what heavenly spirituality, what strong faith, what divine assurance you were praying to God. I envied you! I wished I could give away all my wealth and get one grain of your faith. I know I am going to die after a few days or years and it is the greatest mortification of my life to think that I will leave this world without the radiance of hope and faith in my heart! I told him: 'Well let us talk it together. Let me give you an exposition of divine philosophy! He said 'No! There is no use, you cannot put any faith in my heart. I wish I was as poor as the beggar in the street and had the faith you have. What can I do with all this money!

This Novvab was extremely wealthy. In his palace he had many rooms and in each room he had piled sacks of money belonging to various nationalities.

{{p9}}

His library contained the richest collection of books and rare manuscripts. One room contained the precious stones, diamonds, rubies, turquoise, amethyst, etc. Once the English Consul wanted to bring 700 mules and did not have any ready cash. He came to the Novvab and borrowed the amount. The money was weighed in sacks. He had been to Persia, was presented to the Shah and had no favorable opinion of him. He told us many stories about hi, and his rule in India. He told us the story of another Indian, a philosopher and a thinker but a poor man who lived at the same time in Bagdad. He was perfectly contented with his lot and never complained. He believed this world was a theater and in it he was a spectator. Whenever we asked him what art thou doing he would {{p10}} answer, I am watching one of the scenes of the play. After we found him in deep contemplation. "What art thou doing now?" There is an intermission so I am thinking over the situation of what I have just seen! Someone inquired of him what is your opinion about the Westerners? He answered. These people are parts of their machinery. Just as the machinery is constantly working in a factory automatically without knowing why or wherefore, so these people are working. The machinery is oiled once in a day to run smoothly. These westerners are oiled three times a day! Another person asked him, what do you think of the Eastern and western nations? He rejoined. They are all laborers some are working, others are out of work. Some are busy, others are lazy, but all of them are plain workmen!

This Hindu Saheb was much attracted to Baha Ullah. They asked him "what do you think about Baha Ullah?" He answered: 'He is the greatest of the world of humanity. He is peerless. He is beyond my limited knowledge. I cannot describe him. Do you want any miracle? His very existence is a miracle; his walking is a miracle his speaking is a miracle. I have seen many people in this world. I have associated with the most important learned men of India and Europe. I have discussed problems of this with all of them but I have never been drawn to anyone. But no sooner I met this man I was attracted to him. All his deeds, his words and his conducts are standing miracles. Were you to observe carefully, you would realize no one can do {{p12}} exactly the same thing. This man was really free and detached. He had a small room. From the ceiling, many packages were hanging. These packages contain rice, beans, bread, etc. He cooked his own simple food and then sitting in a corner he was drowned in a sea of reflection. He had the greatest power of concentration. For hours he would concentrate his thoughts upon one definite object. Finally he became a Bahai and went to India to teach this Cause. While there he was stricken down with a peculiar malady and his spirit ascended to the Kingdom of Abba."

Thus I can go on writing all the wonderful things he told us this morning and I have not written even half of them but this sample will show you what a glorious hour we had with him, all alone to ourselves.

{{p13}}

Right after our heavenly hour with the Master Mr Eugene Diebald and Miss Helen Wieland who are engaged come to the Beloved to receive his benediction. They are a fine, loving couple. He smiled at them, the smile of approval and joy. He said: "I have heard you are engaged to get married. It will be a blessed union. A marriage performed according to the religion of God will be very blessed. A young man cannot appreciate fully the blessings of marriage. When he grows older he will realized its supreme importance in life. When he sees that through the sacred bon of matrimony he has formed a beautiful family, he soars into the heaven of bliss, especially when he is laden with years. Marriage is the greatest fortress for the preservation of man's purity. It shall protect him from immoral deeds.

It will be the means of his chastity and sanctity. In the estimation of God there are no greater attributes than chastity and sanctity. The greatest virtue of man is his chastity. The most wonderful Bestowed of God is sanctity. These time qualities are specialized in man. Their absence means animalism and the ascendancy of brute passions. Therefore marriage in the estimation of God is very much beloved so that man and woman may live together in the utmost union of the soul and the highest degree of love and the purity of the family atmosphere. Whenever I see a man and wife love each other and are united together I am now made supremely happy. Therefore I hope you will live together with the sweetest affection and tenderest {{p15}} feelings and will form a blessed family with joy and happiness.

Then Mr. G. Wornle, an artist come and made a most life-like painting of the Master. This will be photographed and copies forwarded to America as soon as they are made ready.

By this time many friends had come in and were welcomed. His voice was not yet clear from cold so he spoke in his quiet undertone musical way. His eyes were shut all the time he was speaking. Now and then he would raise his right hand in the air with his blessed fingers far apart, or take off his turban and put it on again or stroke his beard. He said in part: "Your meeting yesterday afternoon was very good. I did not feel well but for your sake I come. The gathering of the believers is the assembly {{p16}} of the spiritual ones. The spirit of God descends upon the assembly of the friends. They are the spiritual power-houses and confer bliss and jot. During the last days of his life. His Holiness Christ held one meeting for the apostles, and all of them sat around the same table. From that time it has been called the Lords supper, because they discussed subjects pertaining to the Kingdom of God. Therefore if a meeting is held, the general discussion of which is spiritual undoubtedly that meeting is godlike. Strive day and night that your assembly may become radiant and the hearts illumined. Consort with each other so that your spirits may be stirred into cheerfulness through the glad tidings of the Kingdom. If these conditions are fulfilled, rest assured that your assemblage is merciful; it is {{p17}} the cause of illumination of the world of humanity and it shall bestow everlasting life to all the people. I hope many such meetings will be held in Stuttgart. Consider how many meetings have been held in the past. The results of none have been eternal except the meeting of his holiness Christ. Two thousand years have elapsed and yet its beneficent fruits are evident. Consequently the result of every divine meeting is eternal. Show ye an effort that become the meeting of the Kingdom. Whenever you desire to enter a Bahai meeting, first purify your hearts from all outside questions, put aside all the material or physical emotions, be ye in the utmost holiness and sanctification, be ye the channels for the {{p18}} love of God, then be ye occupied with the mention of the name of God, hearken to the heavenly words and advice of His Holiness Baha-ullah, deliver eloquent and inspiring addresses-so that ye may become abstracted from ought else save God, your spirits may take higher flights, the sphere of your thoughts may be widened, the spiritual susceptibility become predominant, the material emotions be entirely forgotten and all be submerged in the luminous sea of the Breaths of the Holy Spirit. I desire this token for you. I hope you shall attain thereto.

He spoke about the marriage of Mr and Mrs Gregory very beautifully and of the meetings of the white and colored friends and of the great {{p19}} power of Baha-ullah and of the harmony which He has established amongst the races. He said in a reminiscent mood half to himself, half to us:- Truly I say those meetings in America were most marvellous meetings. They were strange and mystical events so colossal in their proportions and miraculous in their aspects. Later on the significance and result of those meetings will become manifest.

A blind believer was brought in and introduced. He was a man of elderly age. The master told him 'Praise be to God that thy insight is open and thou art witnessing the realities with the eyes of perception. Spiritual blindness is worse than material blindness. That is why Christ says: these people have eyes but they see not.

Someone spoke Bahai. He said:-It will be very beneficial to the Cause if a tie of correspondence is established between the German and the American Bahais. Spiritual correspondence must be continued not for a month or two or a year or this and then dropped. Complete affection and amity must be established between them. This is very important.

A number of children were brought in all beautifully dressed. They had bouquets of flowers in their hands. Reverently they approached their Father and kissed his hand. To one of them he said: "I do not speak German but our hearts are one! The face of the little tot brightened up and gleefully cried out:"Don't I know it!" His mother told us he was crying all this {{p21}} morning because he hear the Master was going to leave Stuttgart. There was another little girl of two years old who first cried and did not wanted to go to him but little by little with that divine patience of his he tamed her and after 10 minutes she was contentedly sitting in his lap and eating candy from his hands. "I have bribed her." he sai laughing. "In Turkey when you go to see a Pasha and you wish him to attend to your affairs quickly, you must give him some gifts. This is called" Bakhsheesh" to this little German Pasha." Her parent wanted to take her to him several times, but the Master said: let her be free. Don't interfere with her freedom. It was the greatest example of winning {{p22}} through the Power of love. He gathered all the children around himself, some sitting on his lap, others sitting before him on the floor, some standing on his right and left and all smiling; their hats filled with candies, oranges and bananas. The master was also very happy. It was one of the most beautiful pictures of his divine fatherhood. Now and then he stroked their heads or kissed their cheeks or hugged them close to his breasts. "I am going to put you in my trunk and take you to Syria. Will you come?" he said to one. "Of course!" the child answered, his eyes dancing with joy. I will buy you a pony he said to another. You can play with the lovely children on Mount Carmel he addressed a third.

Then the Beloved spoke:-From amongst these children, blessed souls shall arise. These children must be instructed in the wisdom of reality; they must be given divine education. The plants which are trained by the hand of the gardener have a different growth and development. The system education must be so thorough that day unto day their intelligences may increase, their minds be developed and their spin trial emotions become keener. The education of the children must began from early childhood, not by cramping their head with dead formulas and historical datas which they cannot understand. This is a mistake. The elements of sciences , oils, crafts, etc must be taught to them through object lessons, as though they are {{p24}} playing and amusing themselves. With sunshine, with music, with happiness they must learn these things. There should be no suggestion of hard study but all their studies. Again, the children must be encouraged to convey their thoughts in simple, direct words. The teachers must speak with them intelligently and respectfully as though they speak with grown-up people. Everything must be explained to them in the most, fascinating, simple language. In turn, they must let the children speak those things they learn, amongst themselves, ask questions from each other and the one who gives the best answer receive a reward so that others {{p25}} may emulate him. For example one child may ask questions quite informally from another on geography, mathematics, etc and the other may answer. These simple questions and answers must be learnt by heart and as the Knowledge of the students increase in any branch of learning their questions may be spontaneous. Similarly all the divine questions must be taught ti the children in questions and answers. With happiness, joy and delight they must learn these things, The abstruse and spiritual subjects must be put in as simple language as possible.

To another group of believers he said:- We are very happy here because the Power of Baha-ullah has gathered us together {{p26}} although our countries are wide apart from each other yet we are closer together than relatives. Although the sun is far away from the earth yet its rays are shining upon it. Although Germany is remote from Persia yet the lights of the Orient have illumined it. That is why Christ says; the children of the Kingdom shall go out and people from the four corners of the earth shall enter. Now although the inhabitants of Persia are from the land wherein the Blessed Perfection appeared, yet many of them are heedless. But you who are far from Persia have taken a share from the Bestowels of Baha-ullah. You who were remote, thousands of miles became near and those who were near to him remained far away. This is through the pure mercy of God. Thank ye God that ye have attained {{p27}} thereunto. I hope that day unto day you may be drawn neared to the Kingdom of Baha-ullah, he enkindled more with the Fire of the Love of God, receive a good portion from the Breaths of the Holy Spirit and day unto day, may you be more imbued unto the virtues of the humankind. I shall beg of God for you invisible Confirmations.

Afterward a minister of the Church was presented to the Master who received a wonderful confirmation and went away inspired with the word of the Beloved. At 12 o'clock Dr Kahlhas called on the Master, examined his chest and advised him not to go out for the next few days and not speak much. These suggestions were timely and the believers obeyed the Doctor's orders in going away earlier today.

In the afternoon he was quiet without but toward the evening several friends called and received refreshing words from the garden of his knowledge. Mr and Mrs Kerrigel prepare his food in their home and bring it to the hotel. They are so happy the master has given them this service.

Ahmad

April 29 1913 HOTEL MARQUARDT, STUTTGART

{{p1}}

Dear Harriet!

Compared with the activities and the coming and going of the friends for the last few days this was a quiet one. Many anxious believers called with nosegays of flowers inquiring after the health of the Beloved and most of them were permitted to shake hand with him while lying on the couch but there were no exclusive talks except toward the evening when he felt better. The injunction of the Doctor has been followed as closely as possible and the effect was noticeable.

I was surprised when I observed most of the friends congratulating and offering me flowers and gifts. At first I thought it was a joke but afterwards I realized someone had given them a hint that this was my birthday. Of course this was not my birthday and we had a very amusing time of it. Miss {{p2}} Anna Kosthin and Mrs. Schweizer and Miss Turner have given me a watch; Mr. Herrigel the chain, someone else a book of the views of the city and many bouquets of roses, carnations, sweet-peas. When they offered me the flowers, I thought of course they were for the Master. "No! They are for you! They are your birthday presents!" I was never able to find out who played this joke on me. If you were in my place what would you have done?

In the afternoon Mrs. Ekstein called and the Beloved talked with her on the progress of the Cause in Stuttgart: Your husband he said, is firm and sincere in the Cause and assuredly he shall be confirmed in spreading the glad-tidings of the Kingdom. He is an active Bahai. In this Cause there are two kinds of Bahais. The first kind is active and speaking; the second is inactive and {{p3}} silent. These two although Bahais, yet they are wildly different from each other. The former is more beloved than the latter. The body has two hands, one is active, the other paralyzed. Which one do you prefer?

The Minister who called on him yesterday come again today. The Master said: Ordained ministers are many, confirmed ministers are few. During the day of Christ there were many Rabbis and high-priests but none of them was confirmed except Paul. All of them were deprived but he became the confirmed King of the ministers. I hope that thou mayst become like Paul, receive a goodly portion from the heavenly Bestowals and arise in the service of thy fellowmen. Do not look upon thyself and thine own capacity. When man is abstracted from the conditions of this earth {{p4}}, release from the fetters of the world of nature and quickened through the Breaths of the Holy Spirit - he shall become very much confirmed, and the divine powers shall encircle him; to such an extent that he shall become himself astonished. Therefore, turn thy attention unto God! Look upon the infinite Bounties of God. Do not look upon thine own incapability. Although the earth is composed of the black sail, yet through the downpour of rain and the heat of the sun, flowers and anemones shall grow therefrom. This Minister has written a good article on the Bahai Cause which will appear in a Protestant German magazine for the month of May.

Mr. Schweizer called. He and his wife are two of the lovely Bahais we have here. {{p5}} They are so devoted to the Master and so enkindled with the fire of the Love of God! He is a government surveyor and for six months in the year he is called away from home. The Master was in bed and he made him sit beside himself and brought his head close to his breast and kissed him several times. He told him: In thy face I see great capacity. I give thee the promise that if thou shalt arise to spread the message of the Kingdom, thou shall become marvellously confirmed. He answered: I hope I will become a teacher in deed as well as in word. Very true, the Master said, if a person does not practice what he teaches, his words will have no effect. A person who calls himself a Bahai and does not try to live in accord with {{p6}} the Teachings he is like the man who on one hand invites all men to Peace and Conciliation and on the other cuts the heads of innocent people. The Manifestation of Baha-wllah was for the appearance of Deeds. Therefore I hope that you may be assisted to teach both with Deeds and Words. Read the hidden words and practice accordingly.

Mr. Schweizer is translating the book of the Brilliant Proof by Mirza Abul Fazl the Master said: This Mirza Abul Fazl whose book you are translating is a man who teaches the Cause by deeds and by words. His trip to America was a blessed one! His station is greater even than the apostles. He is the sincere servant of the Cause. He has {{p7}} sacrificed everything for the sake of the Cause. He does not rest for one moment. He either teaches the Cause or compiles books or travels around. I love him very much.

Fran and Frauline Consul called to inquire about the health of the Beloved. In the course of conversation he said: Complete physical health is to be enjoyed by the animals. Consider when the animal possesses perfect health, it brays, it rolls on the grass, it grazes in the meadows, it dances and kicks and it does perform all kinds of prank. But man may enjoy the completest physical health, live in the palace and be surrounded with all the luxuries of modern civilization, yet he may not feel happy, mental anxieties attack him, spiritual worries encircle him, he {{p8}} weeps, laments and stalks a broad ghost-like. This in itself shows that man must take greater care of his spiritual health. Again a person may be sick, lying in bed a piece of good news is brought to him suddenly he is revived and often he is healed. The happiness of man is through his spiritual health and not bodily health. My spirit is always healthy, therefore I am always happy. You must likewise strive again this spiritual health and happiness and thank ye God that ye are living in the age of the Blessed Perfection; ye have heard his resounding call; ye are awakened from the slumber of negligence, ye have attained to the most great bounty and ye have obtained eternal life. If ye had given the treasures of the whole world, {{p9}} ye could not obtained this most great bounty. Consider that Mr. Morgan, the American multi-millionaire died and left behind his wealth but ye shall never die, ye are always living in the Kingdom of Abha and the traces of your faith and assurance shall ever live.

Afterward Consul Schwarz and Doctor Faber arrived. They asked many questions in regard to the possibility of a European war over Sentow and the Master like a true physician diagnosed for them the malady. The greatest need of Europe, he said, is the organization of a European Congress in which the delegates of various Powers may discuss seriously the possibility of immediate, concurrent {{p10}} disarmament but they do not listen to any advice. Thirty years ago I wrote to Sultan Abdul Hamid that if he desired to protect his Empire, he must give ample equality and freedom of rights to all his subjects no matter to what religion they may belong and establish a constitution but he did not listen and you see today the results. Many other wonderful remarks were made by the Master about the triple alliance, Triple Eutenle and the disturbance of the Balance of Power in Europe that I have no time to write but they all showed his omniscient knowledge.

HOTEL MARQUARDT STUTTGART April 30, 1913

Dear Harriet!

This is the last day of the month and the last day of our stay in Stuttgart. Tomorrow morning 10:53 we will leave for Paris, arriving there, about 9 o'clock pm. The enforced rest of the last two days has improved the Master's health and the Doctor told us that he can leave easily tomorrow. We left Paris the first of April and we are returning the first of May. In this one month many events were chronicled and the Cause was promoted through three other European countries, Germany, Austria and Hungary. What a wonderful month! Like a glorious vision it <2> passed away never to be repeated! I can never explain in words the inner, spiritual experiences of these days. They were days printed upon the page of memory with the ink of gold. I have witnessed the Victory of our King of Kings on every occasion and the love and reverence shower to him both by strangers and friends are the greatest proofs of his power. We will enter Paris with glad hearts, because this trip has been more successful than we ever could conceive! The Master is also very happy, because the Call of the Kingdom was raised, the Fragrance of the rays of the Sun of Reality spread. What greater joy do we need? What more perfect beatitude do we long for?

{{p3}}

This morning the Beloved felt much better, his throat being cleaner. Mr. Herigel Causul Schwaz, Mr. Reiff and several other friends were the early callers to inquire about his health. About half past nine a group of the believers had gathered in his Presence and he addressed the themes: Having arrived in Stuttgart we have become your guest. We have the greatest attachment for you. We are striving that perchance the East and the West, God willing, may become unified. My western trip was an introduction to this long, sought consummation. This is the beginning of the dawn. I hope the lights of oneness may >4> shine upon all the regions. The people of the world are like unto the drops and when these drops are gathered together, they will form a great sea. I hope that all of them may become united and conjoined, then the sea of the oneness of the world of humanity shall warm gloriously. The inhabitants of the world are like unto the sheep but they are scattered; we hope to gather these dispersed sheep into one flock and shepherd them under the divine training of the Ideal Shepherd; so they may find comfort and rest in the verdant meadow of Everlasting happiness and drink from the {{p5}} the fountain of eternal life. This is my aim in life. What do you say? Does it agree with yours or does it conflict? These sheep of God are very much dispersed. They are scattered over the rocky mountains, down in the valleys of darkness, over the burning Sahara and are constantly surrounded by the blood- thirsty wales. How wonderful will it be if they could be brought together in this green Divine plain, live in the utmost joy and be protected and preserved by the compassionate Shepherd! The demines of the world are like unto the children and the real Father is God. How sweet will it be if all these children could {{p6}} be brought under the Education of the heavenly Teacher and every one seek the instruction of the Kind Father!

All morning people continued to come and to everyone the Master delivered an address, each a little bright gem of the Spiritual Kingdom.

When Mrs. and Miss Schwarz arrived he asked them to bring there at 3 o'clock and take him out over the "green mountains" of Stuttgart for the last time.

About two o'clock the Master gave a "little talk" to a growth of ladies on the woman's rights. Herin it is reproduced: "In former times no one would have believed that woman shall arise and demand equal rights and suffrage.

{{p7}}

Now in America the women have received suffrage in member of states and their cause is marching on. One of the meaning of the prophecy in the old Testament that the lion and the deer shall graze together in one meadow is that men and women shall be equal and have the same rights. For example Doctor Faber who is so small will be equal! This remark made everybody laugh and for more than half an hour the Beloved kept them in constant room of laughter by telling them a number of amusing militant stories of the English suffragettes.

At three o'clock many Bahais came and were sad to hear the Master was going to leave tomorrow. He told them: Consider what wonderful love is this that has been established between us through the Power of His Holiness Baha-ullah! The Shah of Persia came twice ro Stuttgart. Although he was a royal King he did not find one real, heartfelt friend. The utmost was this that the government received him officially according to its long-established custom just as it would have received any other royal Personage. But we who were Prisoner for 40 yrs have cause here and have found so many heartfelt, cordial friends whose love and affection are lasting and not temporary. Therefore it is made clear to you {{p9}} that this love and amity have been brought into being through an extraordinary power; otherwise it would have been impossible for our hearts to be so cemented together; while from a worldly stand point, the King of Persia must have been the object of love and estimation. The holy divine Manifestation of God through whom this mighty and potent power appears are the very quintessence's of existence and the plain people who follow their Teachings are greater than the Kings and queens of the earth. Reflect what the Power of the Kingdom of {{p10}} Abha has accomplished! Its rays are shining upon the hearts! Its Bestowals have established communication between the spirits; Its principles have ushered in a new era of spiritual brotherhood! Ere long ye shall observe that the splendors of the Kingdom of Abha have illumined the East and the West! Then he lovingly distributed fruits and bonbons amongst the children. There was a young musician who has just become interested in the Cause and the Beloved before bidding them alien addressed him thus: Music is a sign of the signs {{p11}} of God. Just as the earthy music bestows exhilaration and rejoicing to the bodies so the spiritual music stirs into cheerfulness and beatific bliss the hearts and the spirits. The prophets of God are the heavenly Artists or Musicians. Therefore, I hope that whenever you are playing upon your instrument, you may hear the invisible song of the Kingdom and the divine anthem. Just as the material, martial music stirs the hearts of the warriors, may your ethereal music inspire the spirits of the warriors of Peace and salvation!

The Beloved came down and with Fraw and Frauline Causul and the two little souls and myself and we started on drink for the lastle Beben housen. We passed through wonderful royal woods all verdant. Hills and mountains were in their gala dresses and the Master enjoyed a two hours continual drive through the most beautiful, divine country, the like of which nature seldom produce anywhere else. On the way he stopped at the village called Steinenbronn. He came down from the car and distributed money {{p13}} and candies amongst a few children and started to walk through the streets. Immediately the rumor was spread that the :King of the East” has come and more than one hundred children were after the Master. He gave me some money and I changed it i a nearly store and he asked we to distribute it amongst them. I ordered them to form a long line and put a piece of money in the hand of each. When I finished my pleasant “job” the Master told me: you bow now mustered an army and you can fight against any Power!

Arriving at Bebenhouson {{p14}} he walked through the castle. It is a hunting castle of the King and Queen who come during the summer to hunt in the woods. Formerly its has been a monastery but now it is transformed into a royal castle. It has a fine church which dates back to 12th country. The Master walked through the rooms and there we saw a chess box with which Napoleon the Great had played with the King. Contrary to his custom the Beloved wrote a line of poetry in the guest book, a rough translation of which is as follow: {{p15}} “The Imperial Court is empty because I do not see the royal face of the King. The verdant meadow is chagrined because it is not adorned with the stately stature of the Queen.”

The car which brought the rest of our company had three accidents an its way to the Castle and they had to telephone to the city for another one. While they were in the country waiting for the arrival of the new car, Sayad assadullah had a good sleep on the grass.

In the car the Master said to Fran and Frauline Consul: Praise be {{p16}} to God that I have come to Stuttgart and summoned the people to the Kingdom of Abha. I am pleased that God has assisted me. Now, that noble souls like unto you have heard the Call of the Kingdom, you must arise with enthusiasm and courage to teach and spread the Glad. I have the utmost confidence in you and ever expect to received good news from you. After me raise your voice and cry out in the name of Abha {{p17}} and suffer the people to enter the Kingdom of God. My heart is with you. My spirit is with you. I must now go. I have accomplished my work. I will be always with you. In reality Stuttgart has the Capability of becoming the Center of the Glorious Cause in Europe.

We reached at the hotel about 8 o'clock. Many of the friends were waiting at the door and greeted the Master as he entered. Several were called into his Presence and spoke with them.

Mr. and Mrs. Werrigel brought {{p18}} suffer for all of us because we did not have time to go out. Really, these two souls have served the Cause most wonderfully. My close association with Mr. Herrigel during the past month has made us to love him than even more.

Good bye to Stuttgart! We take way with us tomorrow the love and affection of all the believers of God!

Greetings Mr. and Mrs. Herrigel

BALTIMORE HOTEL 88 BIS, AVENUE KLEBER May 1st 1913

{{p1}}

Dear Harriet!

We are again back in Paris and pleasantly quartered in a lovely apartment in Baltimore Hotel Suite 35-37, one address is 88 ave. Kleber. Baltimore is certainly American and so I feel as though I am on "home soil." The trip from Stuttgart to Paris was made quit. The Master was in the first and we were in the second class. I do not see much difference between the first and second class except that the velvet of the first class is red and that of the second class yellow-brown; the compartment in the first class has four seats in the second class six seats and then there is a door dividing the coach into two halves. That is all. The Master was alone in his compartment and we had two gentlemen, a German and a young travelling American. With the first {{p2}} we could not speak but the second, a clear-cut American of probably 28 yrs old attracted my attention. His name is H.E. warneke of 9 East 37th New York City. He buys China and bronze statues from European factories for a large china wares store on 5th ave near 37th st. I spoke with him about the Cause and the Master. He became very much interested and I gave him Mr. Roy Wilhelms address so that on his return he may be get in touch with the friends of God. He had never heard the Bahai name, although he was in New York last April on the arrival of the Master. Having found many things in common we talked till 5pm. I went and told the Master about him and he called him into his Presence. Of course the first topic of discussion was America. The American people, the Master said are not satisfied with their present day civilization. It is true that {{p3}} they have built a marvelous civilization of their own through giant-like forces and energy which in many respects is bigger to that of the European civilization, yet they are striving for higher things, nobler ideals and universal principles. Look at the majority of the French people! How complacently satisfied they are! They think they have reached the highest aim of civilization and there is no higher step to take. But with the Americans it is different. They may be proud of their civilization, because they have made the desert blossom like unto the rose, but they are not satisfied with it, they are seeking after new solutions of old and modern problems, they are thirsty for salubrious water, they are hungry for the bread of life, they are investigating the reality of everything. Their {{p4}} hearts are open, their minds receptive and in discussion never overbearing. They believe there is always a place on the top and so they go forward and upward. They never look backward or downward. They say, what we have accomplished in the past may be “all right”, but we are going to do “the good” and after that, there is “the better” and then “the best” and is there any end to the infinite degrees of the “best”; For every “best” is followed by another “best” which is “better” than the former “best”. When you observe carefully you shall see that the economic prosperity of a community or a nation is maintained by reciprocity and co-operation. In the whole world, you do not find one man, no matter how varied in his accomplishments who can be sufficient unto himself. All that he can do is to contribute one thousand the share to the well-being of the nation. He studies for ten or 20 yrs and then he is able to co-operate with the other thousands of his fellowmen to make them happier. He supplies them with part of their {{p5}} needs and as a reciprocal action they supply him with all his needs. But on the other hand, take the example of the honey bee. The bee is an independent, self-sufficient member of the bee-community. In itself, it is the source of supply and demand. It gives the sweet honey and it does not require anything in return. Similarly the little and is an individualist and can live and support itself standpoint the bee and the ant must be, then very happy and enjoy all the privileges of greatness, because they are self-satisfied. However, the glory of man is not in these things. Man becomes man through ideal virtues, through the excellences of the world of humanity, through intellectual superiority, through the Knowledge of God and the illumination of his heart!

If he is imbued with these qualities, he is Man, otherwise he is lower than the animal.” This was the gist of the Master’s talk with our newly acquired American friend. As he is a patriot he was delighted to hear the Master praising so highly America and the American civilization. After this, accidentally we met two Zoroastrian ladies and a young man who have just arrived from Bombay and were on their way to London. The Master invited them to his compartment and gave them the glad-tidings of the rising of the sun of the new glory of Persia. Persia will advance very rapidly, he said,” She will be crowned with her former glory and Phoenix-like she will spring up out of the ashes of shame and humiliation. You shall return to your beloved land and you will be respected by all the nations of the world. You will be honored and loved by everyone. Thirteen hundred years, you have wanderers over the face of the world. Now it is high time to go back and assist in the reconstruction of your country.

I could see in their faces the light of gladness and joy. The Master showed them the photos taken in Stuttgart and they were extremely happy to know that all these people, even the inhabitants of America do believe in the prophetic hood of Zoroaster through the light of this Revelation. They will call on the Master while in Paris.

At 9:15 pm, the train entered the station-Gare de l'Est-. The loving and luminous faces of Mors. and Madame Richard welcomed the Beloved and leaving the train he walked to the waiting room where a number of the friends prominent amongst them. Mrs. Alice Beede with a bouquet of white lilies and Mrs. Lilianthal, a bouquet of roses greeted him, Mon. and Madame Scott, Mrs. Holly, Miss Sanderson, Mirja Jalal and {{p8}} several others clustered around the Beloved welcoming him back to Paris and expressing joy and pleasure over the spiritual victories he had won while on his heavenly mission. In a special automobile he was driven to this hotel. To Miss Sanderson and a friend of her he spoke briefly and then retired to his bed.

This morning long before 8 o'clock the Stuttgart friends started to come to bid farewell to the Beloved of the world. Amongst those who arrived very early, were Mr. and Mrs. Herrigel. Little by little a large number were gathered and were permitted to present themselves to the Beloved. Many eyes were weeping, many hearts were sad. The little Hefner child was there and he was run to him and was in his arm. The Master playing with his curly hair and kissing him now and then, his divine eyes emanating the rays of love and compassion. While holding the child in his loving arms, he raised his voice, clear, resounding and beautiful: This is the day of farewell with you.

Farewell is of two kinds. The first kind of farewell is followed by forgetfulness. This is the condition of the material souls. Some forget sooner, others later, but sooner or later, everyone forgets. The second kind of farewell is not followed by forgetfulness. This is the condition of the believers of Baha-ullah. Although from a physical standpoint, they may grow further and further from each other, yet in spirit, they are grown nearer and nearer and their longing for each other is increased. Their union is not followed by any separation. There are some of the believers whom I have not met for the last fifty years. These blessed souls are living in Persia and now I am in Europe, but day and night, I am with them. For example, I shall never forget this friend of mine (pointing to the little boy in his arm and hugging him closer to his breast - thus causing laughter and genuine pleasure amongst all those who were present). The mother told the Master that she has been asking him to say every morning Allah Abha "so that Abdul Baha may get better but he said, :if I say it, then, he will feel well and leave us."

To the second group of the friends he said: "The darkness of materialism has enveloped Europe. Natural civilization has advanced tremendously and progress is magical and by leaps and bounds but the spiritual Sun with all its glorious lights is set below the horizon. Perchance God willing, you may be the means of spreading divine illumination. Be ye hopeful in the Confirmations of the Kingdom of Abha. Whenever the heavenly Assistance is much saved, every difficult undertaking is simplified. The horizon of Persia was much darker; but as soon as the lights of the Kingdom appeared all the horizons were made luminous. Ere long the sun of Reality shall flood the regions with its refulgent rays.

Be ye confident in the confirmations of Baha-ullah. His Favors will change the drop into the sea; the small plant is developed into a mighty, overshadowing tree; the weak transformed into a powerful eagle; the impotent strengthened, the old rejuvenated, the patient healed, the unknown made famous, the babe attains the age of maturity and the “nothing” becomes “everything”. In short, I bid you farewell and leave you under the Protection of the True One. I never expect to receive good news from you. They left silent and with a spirit of deep reverence. Another group entered the room with beautiful flowers in their hands and several children in their midst. They were greeted with the word of Allaho Abha. The words fell from his golden lips like stranded jewels: I wish to bid you farewell. {{p12}} My heart wishes to be always with you. To the same degree that meeting is sweet, separation is bitter. This farewell and remoteness do not prevent our communication; for the Love of Baha-ullah has united our souls and spirits. Our union is indissoluble. If we are far from one another, as the East from the West, we are nearer to each other than the angular vein; because spiritual susceptibilities are uninterrupted so that when the bodies are brought into contact, the spirits enjoy mutual association. Therefore, these super-human emotions rub in the Bahai world. I leave you beneath the shelter of Baha-ullah and as the brilliant signs of the Supreme Concourse. May you ever be protected and preserved!

The voice of the Master was the incarnation of spirituality, ethereal music. You could almost hear the angels of the Kingdom singing the anthems of glory. The room was filled again with eager, wonderful Bahais. The Master arose from his seat and was walking and speaking: Praise be to God that you have attained. This is our last day in Stuttgart and the first day of your entrance into the Kingdom. Which I am away, I shall offer the utmost supplication {{p13}} toward the Kingdom of Abha, begging for your firmness and steadfastness, It is easy to enter in the Kingdom but it is difficult to remain in it firm and steadfast. It is possible for man to scale a mountain, and the road no matter how rocky and uneven will come to an end but it needs a strong constitution to breathe the rarified ether, once stationed on the summit of the mountain. I hope you will attain to the utmost degree of firmness and steadfastness so that the Bestowels of Baha-ullah may surround you from all directions. The tests of God are violent. You must under all circumstances be firm and steadfast. There are often many events which happen against the expectation of man and which may shake his faith; but if he continues to remain firm through them, his head will be adorned with the Crown of happiness and he will become the center and greater usefulness in the Cause. You must {{p14}} exercise toward each other the utmost degree of love and friendship. Let not anything separate you from each other. Have always, the object of the Cause in view and the not the passing events. If some one commits any mistakes forgive him. Overlook the sins of others. Do not let the sinner know by any illusion or suggestion that you know his shortcomings. Pardon the transgression of the sinner and God shall forgive your sins. Be ye firm. Be ye not like into a piece of straw to be blown either and thither by the contrary winds. You must be unshakable like into mountains and be imperturbable under the attack of ordeals and calamities. I will leave you in the hands of God. May you be protected under this all-encircling Canopy! May day unto day your hearts be induced with heavenly virtues; your severance from ought else save God become more pronounced! May you ever become lighter and lighter so that ye may soar freely toward the apex of Everlasting Glory!

Several other groups had the privilege of meeting the Master and hearing his inspiring words. As these various groups left his room, they were gathered {{p15}} in the long corridor. By this time, there were more than one hundred people, all waiting to go to the station. Then more people came and no one could refuse them entrance into the Presence of the King. Do you see them entering, each kissing his hand and do you hear his voice; Welcome! Most welcome!" I desire to speak with you but my ears ever anticipate to receive good news from you; the news of your love and affection towards each other; the news of your establishment in the Kingdom of Baha-ullah; the news of your advancement along ideal virtues. I have sown pure seeds arise to irrigate them and become the farmers of this divine plantation. Strive that these seeds may spring up, that they may grow, become thousands {{p16}} of sheds and form innumerable harvests. I expect this service from you. I shall never forget you. I shall ever remember you. They go out and another group enters: It is enough that I say unto you: I love all of you very much. My love for you is eternal and cordial. Space and Time do not present our ideal communication. Although my body will be away, my spirit is here and I shall feel strongly your spiritual susceptibilities. Whenever I shall receive good news from you I will be made very happy. Rest ye assured that I will not forget you. All of us are beneath the canopy of His Holiness Baha-ullah! We are under the Tent of His Covenant; therefore this physical separation has no influence. The foundation is the Love which exists between our hearts. May all of us gather in the Kingdom of Baha-ullah which is the world of light, the world of spirit and the world of Being. That meeting is eternal. Be ye confident in this promise. I am not far away from you I am eternally with you.

To the last group he touched the main idea of the Bahai Cause. He said: We are all the drops of one sea, the trees of one orchards, and the flowers of one rose gardens.

Therefore there is no separation between us. We are all under the Tabernacle of Baha-ullah. The lights of His Bestowals are shining upon us. The rays of one sun illumine our hearts, the breeze of one rose-garden perfumes our nostrils; the water always together. We shall never be separate. Although I stayed only a few days in Stuttgart but I hope the results will be infinite. May each one of you be the shining lamp of the Love of God and be the means of the illumination of this city!

Outside in the corridor by this time nearly two hundreds Bahais have been gathered, all talking in a subdued manner, many of them weeping. Innumerable Bahai looks and photos were brought to the Master to sign his name. In the look of Miss Daring he wrote:

“O Thou Possessor of the Kingdom! Accept this maid servant of Thy Threshold in {{p18}} the Count of Thy Holiness and bestow an illumined face to this attracted and enkindled one! Verily Thou art the Given and the Kind.”

The Beloved left the hotel at 10:30 giving money to all the servants and maids who were on his way. Just before leaving the hotel, suddenly all the friends disappeared and as the Master entered the station, there they were - a long line of smiling-weeping faces. Crowds of people were curious. “Who is this man?” was on every lips. The train was ten minutes late so the Master was conducted into the waiting room. Immediately, he gathered about himself all the children. It was a most heavenly picture: The pretty heads of three bays on his breast, the others surrendered him; the Bahais clustered around. The time now is at hand. The Master starts for the train platform, the friends are after him. Before going into his compartment, every one again before the eyes of the public Kisses his hand. Oh! many of them are weeping! Many of them are {{p19}} sorrow-striker. It was a wonderful scene! I do not think Stuttgart had ever seen a scene like this! Handkerchiefs, hands and hats are being waved into the air. The Master comes to the window and consoles them. The passengers are wonderstruck at this extraordinary manifestation of love and reverence. The train now moves and a great scene appears before our eyes. How can I ever forget that miraculous demonstration! It is impossible to describe! It is impossible to think! The tumultuous scene was like unto a sea of love and affection. With this heavenly picture in our minds we faced Paris and left behind Stuttgart. It is only the power of Abhdul Baha that has made possible the realization of such {{p20}} glowing scene that King may well envy and emperor may sigh in vain. From the flowers in his compartment we inhaled the Fragrance of their love. We are extremely happy to live in this day and witness the power and majesty of the King of Kings!

Dear Harriet,

Abdul Baha is the spiritual spring of this age. Around this fountain all the nations of the peoples of the world have gathered to alloy their thirst. From this divine spring gushes forth the cooling water of life, irrigating the parched ground of the hearts and causing the growth of the hyacinths and anemones of love and affection. The supply of this heavenly fountain is inexhaustible, because it is connected with the most great sea of wisdom. Those people who have gathered around this fountain must not think only of themselves, but before starting on their pilgrimage, they must carry along then most capacious jars so on the eve of their return, they may fill them for thirsty at home. The jar is our capacity. We must present ourselves before Abdul {{p2}} Baha with free minds so that we may fill them with the jewels of his spiritual conceptions. Otherwise we may live with him for years and yet remain unchangeable. Day and night must we pray and strive in order that our capacity may be enlarge, our intelligence Keener, and our minds freed of all dreams so that we may become purer and purer channels for the expressions of his lofty ideals and noble principles. In the Kingdom of Abha we are all his children and we must be willing to learn the lessons which he teaches us. The greatest honor in this world is to be a Bahai and of course such a glorious faith carries with itself great responsibilities. May all of us became assisted to carry out at least one thousandth part of what Baha-ullah has revealed. The teachings of Our Beloved change the coal into his diamond and darkness into light. His glorious is mind is a secret place of thoughts and his heart a clear heaven studded with countless stars. His head is a heavenly factory wherein universal principles {{p3}} are fashioned and brought forth into the light of day. At all time he reveals to us the spiritual mysteries of the Kingdom and the deeper conceptions of the future humanity. His starry eyes pierce through the mist and fog of past and coming events, portraying to us the invisible images of truth. He observes what we do not see, he hears what we do not hear. His heart is attained with the infinite chards of life and his consciousness immersed in the sea of spiritual glories. From his tongue and his pen a river of light is flowing: world-regenerating ideas which would go into the make-up of a universal civilization and universal religion. He stands on the height of the mountain of Divine Humanity and invites us all to rise to his attitude.

This morning Mon and Madame Dreyfies brought and a package of letters from American and after to the Beloved. Your letter was, interesting one and its contents gave much happiness to his heart of Abdul Baha, especially pleasing to him was the news that same of the sessions of the Bahai Convention will be held in the Masonic Temple and the Common of the Colombia University. He said: We have reconciled all the communities and sects together, because we are at peace with all and at war with none. For the benefit of Mon and Madame Dreyfus he spoke about his trip and the significant meetings held in various cities. He said: Indeed the highest and most perfect form of natural civilization has pitched its tent in Europe and people are enjoying the fruits of culture and sciences. The German people are very civilized. They are serious and earnest. They are industrious and energetic. He told them about his meetings with Prof Vambéry and {{p5}} Prof. Goldzier in Budapest.

Mrs. Alice Beede then came with bouquets of flowers from Mrs Lilianthal. She was of course very happy to be with the Master in Paris. God has brought about the means to bring her here. Then she told him about the meetings in Mrs. Krugg, Miss Thompson, Mrs. C. Kimmy etc and presented messages from various Bahais and received answers. A name was given to the expected child of your sister — “Feevar” - it means Adornment.”

Mrs. Scott called to inquire about the health of the Beloved. He said I have come again to Paris to see you. The believers of Stuttgart are blessed souls. They shall advance extraordinarily. I was most pleased with them. Today the Cause is being spread all over the world. {{p6}} The severe cities have become the enthusiastic admirers. The scoffers of yesterday are praising the Cause today. Those who in former time went up the pulpit and censured the Bahais are today lauding them all to the sky. Those who were against it are for. This change has come over the Bahai worlds through the confirmations of God! May we all appreciate it and hold fast to the Cause.

A very curious illustrated article was brought to the Master. It contained the photo of the Master with his two hands upraised to heaven, standing on the stairs of a Mohamadan Mosque in Constantinople with many turbaned and fez Musulmans. Kneeling before him. Under this serio-comic illustration was written “The New Prophet of Islam: Abdul Baha, teaching the relinquishment of prejudices and the holiday to fraternity in a Mosque in Constantinople.”

The paper is called “Le petit Journal” and a copy of the same I am forwarding to you. The photographs of Stuttgart gatherings were in full evidence and shown to all those who came to see us.” You must have had a wonderful time!” was the expression on every lip. The morning of our departure from Stuttgart, I mailed to you a set of six group photos autographed by the Master. It is needless to tell you; how much I value this set. Take good care of them.

About 4 o’clock Mrs. Lilianthal and Mrs. Beede were presented to the Beloved and he took them to his own room. For nearly one hour conversation continued and emphasized the fact that {{p8}} today every Bahai must teach the Cause and spread the glad-tidings of the Kingdom. One Bahai must stand firm before the whole world and gain victory over them. Any soul who enters under the protection of Baha-ullah his receptivity will increase. He is a seed to a tree which comes under the training of the sun. Day unto day, it will grow and develop. Consider at the time of Christ. The souls who become believers were either fishermen, taxgatherers and a peasant woman. But as they received a divine education they advanced and receive a share from the Breathings of the Holy Spirit. When we are surrounded with the confirmations of the Kingdom, God will confer upon us also the receptivity. Then spirituality and beatific consciousness shall be obtained. Teaching the Cause is of two Kinds. By words and by deeds. If both are found in {{p9}} one person then it is light upon light. Mrs. Lilianthal said going through a cathedral, she bought a few candles and lights them on the altar in memory of the Master. He said: God has put in your hands a candle whose light is inextinguishable and is eternal. That candle is the candle of divine guidance and that light is the light of the Love of God. Be ye happy! Be ye fearless! Be ye joyful. Do not let anything worry you! Let your light shine! Teach the Cause! Do not tarry one moment. Raise your voice! Throw tumult in the hearts! Unfurl the banner of the Kingdom! This is not the day of silence! This is not the day of slothfulness! Awaken the people out of their deep slumber! Quicken the heedless ones and confess life upon the dead!

The Master was very happy today because he had received letters from Teheran giving the glorious news of the promulgation of the Cause. They are holding meetings full of the Love of God. Some of the gatherings are attended from 700 to 2000 people in which the principles of the Cause are publicly proclaimed. The doors of these meetings are open to all and strangers are welcomed. Just think of these wonderful events in the capital of Persia where a few years ago the Bahais were martyred and haunted to death!

In the evening all the Persians attended Man Dreyfus meeting. They were holding the Feast of Rizwan. The Master did not go, as he had to take care of his health. Many people were present. Although they were all happy to hear of the Beloved's return, yet there were expressions of regrets that he could not gladden their hearts with his holy Presence.

Man Dreyfus read some Tablets and then asked me to give them an account of the last month's experience which I did to the best of my ability. After the meeting I spoke with Mr Holace Holly. The publishers both in America and England are printing his book on the Cause simultaneously and will be out on the market before long. Miss Erwin's two articles are accepted by a London magazine and will come out this month. Mrs. Mors, a French Bahai is writing a pamphlet on the Cause, especially adopted to the French temperament. Mr. Scott's meetings have been continued during {{p12}} our absence and new faces were seen, indicating the growth of the Cause. Rezwanich Khanam, the Persia woman who is with the Master's daughter chanted very sweetly one of Baha-ollah's prayers. Everyone was interested in her and she was encircled by the inquiring women. Ronha Khanam is yet in the hospital but her general health is improving. The Doctor has advised her to stay one month longer in the hospital.

Mirja Mahmaud and Myself walked home with Mrs Lilianthal and Mrs. Beede. The latter told me the news at home. We are all very glad to have them with us. They live in the hotel International which is only a few minute's walk from our hotel.

BALTIMORE HOTEL 88 BIS, AVENUE KLEBER. May 3rd 1913

Dear Harriet!

As the word is given out that the Master is resting after his arduous trip and illness we have had no morning meeting yet and if I am not mistaken we may not have any regular meetings before the departure of the Beloved. This morning the Master sent many cables to Oriental Assemblies giving them the news of his arrival in Paris. Many friends called and brought flowers, others sending messages of inquiries and welcome. The hours of morning were spent in private interviews and reading letters from the Orient. I translated many Tablets for Our American brothers and sisters which were revealed in Vienna and other places.

{{p2}}

A few Persians hearing about the arrival of the Beloved came to the hotel to welcome him, back to Paris. They were received with gracious manner and heartfelt cordiality. In speaking to them he said: The spirit of patriotism has never been the means of progress in Asia. The love of country has never united the Eastern people; but the spirit of religion has ever given them marvelous advancement and progress. It is the same in this day. They must get hold of a new power of religion through which they may develop their latent possibilities. The Beloved invited Mrs Lilianthal and Mrs. Beede to take lunch with him today at one o'clock and they rejoicing accepted. In one of the private and quite rooms of the hotel a table was decorated with flowers and it was about half-past one when the Master followed by the rest of us went down. Doctor Mohamad Khan was present. There were many delicious courses, cooked of course a' la' Francais.

Consider how miraculous is the power of Baha-ollah that has brought us together around this table and has encircled us with his majestic glorie. He spoke about the life of Christ, his ordeals and sufferings and how today the people are worshipping him. Mrs. Lilian that said that she had read in one of the American newspapers, that Abdul Baha was the only oriental teacher who visited the United States without accepting a cent but spent large sums for the alleviation of the poor and the needy. The Master said: Praise be to God that we became assisted to follow the command of Christ; for he said, {{p4}} to his disciples, when you leave any city clear off your shoes even from its dust; meaning you have received the teachings freely, give them freely. About his American addresses he said: The contents of the speeches delivered before the churches and societies in America cannot be denied by any soul. For this reason everyone was attracted was attracted to the Cause." He spoke about the sensitiveness of the plants and how they have a degree of "feeling" according to their environments. There are various degrees of sensitiveness in all the Kingdoms of creation. Often, one word may reform a man, while on the other hand, all the processes of criminal laws may fail to ready just the moral life of another. One man may be highly sensitized tend responds quickly to all advices and exhortations but another may need sharper measures. This was illustrated in the case of a prime Minister of Persia who having a wonderfully intelligent and keen <5> man in his service rebuked him one day for some slight thing which he had done unwittingly. This man left the presence of the Prime Minister and for a long time was sick through the effect of that one rebuke. Later on another Prince Minister was appointed. The police reported to him of the notorious deeds of a rough criminal who was making life miserable to the inhabitants of one of the sections of the city. Bring him to me I know how to punish him.”

When they brought the criminal in order to walk in the footstep of his predecessor - he started to advise him, to threaten him and to show him with gentle words the evils of criminal actions. Hoping that this moral lesson will be sufficient, he let {{p6}} him go free. After a few days, they brought him the news that this man has committed worse crimes than ever, He was perplexed and he did not know what to do; because in this case a moral persuasion proved a failure. He went, to the ex-prime Minister and explained the situation. “Ask the police to bring him here. I know how to punish him,” the former Minister said. As soon as the man was brought he ordered the Farrashs to bring the Bastonadoes, his feet were raised up in the air and with fresh sticks just gotten from the trees, he was severely beaten. He was then taken afterwards to the prison and for sometimes vigorously handled. When the term of his prison life came to an end and was given freedom, he never dared to commit and their crime. “Ypu must reach that man through the sole of his feet and not moral persuasion” one day remarked the retired Primer Minister to his successor.

Beloved talked very much along these lives. He was very witty. {{p7}} After lunch he retired to his room and our American friends stayed over for tea.

At five o'clock a number of the friends dropped in to meet the Master. They were all happy to have heard so many wonderful events transpiring during his one month of the absence. He said: On this journey many souls were set glow with {{p8}} the Fire of the Love of God and they became exceedingly attracted to the Cause. I hope that you may also become the means of transplanting the indifference and shallowness of Paris. While staying in those cities we came in contact with many sects and many religions, each one holding fast to his own dogmas and superstitions. Each one investigating the reality according to his own thought and each person was happy to cling to his notions no matter how much how fantastic! We spoke with many such people. We presented to them irrefutable proofs and evidences as regards to certain divine principles. We asked of the Theosophists: ‘How long is it that you believe this system of thought? What has been the results of the activities of your society?’ They answered: We have our beliefs, our secret doctoring our theories. We came together every week and speak about these things and initiate the inquirers.’ The spiritualists answered: ‘We have <9> materialization seances: we communicate with the spirits and we bring into closer relationship the visible with the invisible: In short we found the majority of these people follow blindly what others teach them and they are submerged in the sea of blind dogmas. We told them: In the world of existence there is a center for every great undertaking. You must investigate that center and once you have got hold of it, it will make you independent of all else saw God. For example; the planets have a center. Through that center the whole world is illumined. There are many light-giving bodies but they can only illumine a small tract of the space but sun shines upon all earth and its light enlightens it.

Consequently, there are many affairs in this world which are beneficial to the human society but are not universal in their results. These different interests need a common center around which they may revolve. The great universal center in this age is the Love of God and the Knowledge of God. Now, you must throw away all your oven thoughts and turn your attention to this center. Then all your conflicting ideas shall be reconciled and perfect assurance will be obtained. The lights of this lamps is not sufficient for you but the light of the sun shall make you independent. The wires which conduit the electric energy, the globes which confer lustre will same day be broken but the brilliancy of the Sun is eternal, its bestowals are everlasting, it's heat is never-ending. Then he raised his hands full of longing and desire for action, for great service in the Cause. His voice was full, {{p11}} throbbing with life-vibrations: Flame forth! Flame forth! Be a torch! Be a torch! Be not silent! Be not silent! Shine! Shine! Unless each one of you become a burning torch, the cause will not be spread, the influence of the Words will not be felt, the souls will not be attracted, the hearts will not be moved. Unless you get wings, you cannot fly; and soar over word. Hold the torches of the Love of God in your hands! Let your wings grow! I expect these things from you and I beg and entreat that in Paris you may become the brilliant lamps of the divine guidance!

Abdul Baha continued an hour ago I took a slow automobile ride through the street and Boulevard <12> of the city. I looked hard in the faces of the people but could not find the least sign of spirituality. They were all submerged in the sea of nature. There was not one luminous countenance to be seen. All were engulfed in the ocean of materialism. I observed most of them are as busy as ants and bees, trying to bring together the means of thrier comfort and livelihood. These people have studied many years to prepare themselves for their various vocations but the bees and ants are ready to occupy themselves with their duties as soon as they are born. An architect must study several years before he can practice but the bee without any study is a perfect architect. Therefore this highest summit of economic independence and happiness that man strives to attain has already been sealed without any exertion on the port of the bee and the ant. Just think of the perfect architectural flow of the bee {{p13}} which builds its hexagonal combs with such precision and exactitude that one is astonished! Its food is the extract of the flowers and its independence is so complete that it does not require any assistance from others but it assists others by giving them a quantity of sweet honey. But man must study hard, many years and then labor, night and day in order to be able to build a house, prepare a table which may not be as perfect architecturally as honey-comb; thus man desires to become as low in his ambition as the bees and ants. The bee ever hopes from one bush to another, thoughtless and carefree, inhaling {{p14}} the fragrance of the variegated flowers and new thinking of tomorrow. If such is the highest stab of human happiness and virtue, then the bees and the ants are the happiest and most virtues! Therefore the happiness of man and the eternal prosperity of the people lie in the Knowledge of God, the Love of God the virtue of the world of humanity and the ideal perfections. If man obtains these virtues, he is superior to the animals; otherwise he is inferior to them. When I was in Acca one day I went into a garden and sat on the veranda, my attention was attracted by a spider building its nest. I watched it and was so amazed at its deatreyty going on making sure perfect triangles and geometrical designs, all equal to each other, and many wonderful parable lines etc.

The lives were so perfect geometrically that it would no doubt have taken two days for an architect, with all its instruments to do the same amount of work. Then I thought to myself: 'How civilized and cultured is this spider! Let all the geometricians come and learn from it! Civilization unquestionable is beneficial! Perfection in every line is praise worthy, whether material or spiritual. But the natural civilization must not prevent us from the Graces of the spiritual civilization! We must not let ourselves be so drowned in the sea of materialism as there may not remain any chance of our salvation and be deprived of all the bounties and Favor of the Kingdom. God has deposited in man a {{p16}} holy power which is the discovery of the reality of phenomena, which transcends the regulations of nature and which rules over the powers of the physical world. Through that power man is distinguished from the animal. Is it not regretful that man loses his great opportunity by not employing this power properly and like unto the worms go deeper and deeper below the earth. O hope that you may become the means of quickening of their people, that they may be drown unto the Kingdom; their susceptibilities, become illumined, the perfections of humanity, be revealed and the divine attributes become manifest. I will pray for you.

Such were the wonderful words of the Beloved on this day!

{{p1}}

Day unto day we realize to a Greater degree the spiritual stations of the Master and his wonderful prescience in all things. His thought encircles the universe! His ideal embraces the world of creation. His ethereal music enraptures the hearts. His presence inspires the souls. His conceptions rekindled the fire of youth. His divine vitality regenerates the old. His sun quickens into full activity the latent forces of nature. His stars shed lambent and soft lights of reality. His breeze stirs into motion the branches of the trees of life. His words bring order out of chaos. His principles giant-like, march on the surface of the earth making conquest at every turn. His Presence is a joy. His smile is a benediction! His truth triumphant and his life is light.

This morning the Master received many people among them was Mrs. Henry P. Fraser from Johansberg; S. Africa who is a great intimate friend of Mrs Ella A Cooper. She is a California woman but married to an Englishman and is now living in S. Africa. She told once that she is the first spiritual child of Mrs. Cooper. She was taught by her twelve yrs. ago. She has been always longing to see the Master and often expected to go to Acca. When she arrived in London and heard that the Master was going to be in Paris she asked the permission of her husband to come here and see him. The Master inquire from her about Johausberg and whether there were any Bahais there. He said: "I will pray to God that you may receive a great power where to teach many souls and convince many people about the validity of this truth. Be confided that Baha-ollah shall assist and confirm you."

The meeting of the Bahais is based upon spiritual susceptibilities but the meeting of other people is based from physical emotions. The attraction of the Bahais toward each other is divine and spiritual. When I heard thy name this morning, I felt a sweet fragrance and as I look into the face now, I see thou hast great receptivity. Some people are like iron. They are hard, cold and black; others are like unto the wick and oil. As soon as the two are brought into contact with the fire, they are illumined. Thou shalt receive the breathes of the Holy Spirit and thou shalt become assisted to teach the Cause. About {{p4}} Mrs. Goodoll and Mrs. Cooper he said: They are very spiritual souls. They are the brilliant Jewels of the Kingdom of Abha."

Mrs Lilianthal and Mrs. Beede had an interview and permission was granted them to come to Egypt, where the Beloved is going to sojourn for a while and later on they will go to visit the Holy Touch of Baha-ullah.

To Mr. Richard and a few other French Bahais he said: you are welcome! We have returned to Paris to see what the believers have been doing; whether the Fragrances of the Kingdom of Abha have been spread. We have been travelling last month through Germany, Hungary and Austria and in each country we found souls, ready to hearken to the call of the Kingdom. Many large meetings were held and addresses {{p5}} were delivered. A number of souls become informed and turned their faces toward the Kingdom of Abha. During the few weeks we were there, extraordinary progress was made.

To a few others he said: We have come to Paris and are saving the seeds. Can you arise and irrigate them? When the divine farmer ploughs the ground and salters the seeds, his heart is attached to it. Day and night, he is watching his field to see when the tiny seeds push out of the earth. Then he trains them, waters them till they grow, reach to the stage of friction and his labors of many month is crowned at last with rich a harvest: but if he sees the field was barren, the seeds not germinating and he feels sad and the labor lost {{p6}} despondent. I desire you to become the ideal farmers and irrigate the trees of existence.

Some are farmers of commerce; others farmers of industry, a number of people are farmers of politics, but these farms only become verdant and do not yield any fruits. However, there is a heavenly forming whose fruits are eternal. Look at the farm of Christ which yields harvests every year increasingly and has done for the last 2000 years. His holiness Christ was himself of a farmer, for he said: I scatter the seeds. Some of them fall by the way and they are wasted, others fall on the rock, they grow for a day or two and their whether away, while others fall upon pure ground. They will grow and develop and bring many harvests. We must sow such seeds in the blessed ground of the hearts. His Holiness Baha {{p7}} ollah has given us such wonderful seeds that they will grow in spite of all the contrary winds and hurricane! He is our heavenly Agriculturist. He teaches us how to do this spiritual farming.

To a Frenel Bahai who has been giving a few pictures in the meetings he said: I am most pleased with you, because you are attracted to the Kingdom of Abha and art uttering the words of God. You have become active soldiers who is in the thick of fight and art gaining victories for the King of Kings. The supreme commander looks always with solicitude towards the battle ground, thinking of the protection of his courageous army, but the Reservists who {{p8}} stay behind in the barracks do not receive much of his attention until they also enter the field of action.

Mr. Holly who has written a book on the cause and the publishers both in America and England have accepted it and will be out on the market before long came with his wife and his little girl of two years to see the Master. The girl at first did not go to the beloved but candy and fruits tamed her. He had a box of Candy in his hand. She did not wanted to take all the candies but she took one piece and running back gave it to Madame Dreyfus. She went back and forth taking one piece from the Master and bringing it for Madame Dreyfus. Then she took them one by one to the Master again. Someone mentioned thet Mr. Holly's book will be out soon and the Beloved painting to the child said: This is another book of Mr. Holly. This is a living book, a book of God. God has written this book.

Speaking on healing in answer {{p9}} to the question of Mrs. Holly, the Master said: For healing, prayer and medicine both are necessary. God has created the herbs and the plants with their useful properties. God has deposited in all the objects a definite effect. The effect of fire, for example is burning. It is ridiculous for one to enter in the fire and say repeatedly "I am not burned. I am not burning. He will be burned in spite of himself. One of the followers of this school came to me and said 'There is no pain. Pain is a phantasm of the brain.' I said: 'All right. I am going to get a big cone and beat hard on your back. By this actual demonstration we will find out whether there is such a thing as pain: He did not submit to the experiment.

Another lady who was most dogmatic and demonstrative in this belief carried a long controversy with me on this subject.

Finally I got out of patience. I told her, I observe one of your eyes is a little cross: Then say, 'there is no cross-eye; there is no cross eye. My eye is perfect. And we will see whether this negative repetition will do way with an actual disease. By these things, I do not mean that there is no effect in prayer. In certain nervous and spiritual diseases, prayer is most effective and bestows divine healing. Disease is nothing else but a disturbance of equilibrium between the various organisms and functions of the body; healing is to gain that equilibrium. When the measures of the various elements which go into the make up of a healthy constitution are disturbed, sickness is produced. For instance let us suppose that there must need to be 2000 grows of saccharine element and 2000 grows of gelatin element in the body of man in order to live normally. Now when the quantities of these measures are disturbed, then, the body is attacked with disease. A course of treatment which will give back the normal standard to these elements will be {{p11}} conducive to health. Again, thirst, is a kind of sickness. When the quantity of humidity becomes less in the constitution, it demands water. How much ever we may think and try to demonstrate that we have no thirst, it will be of no avail, and when you are hungry all the thoughts and demonstrations of the world will not satisfy you. You would like to have perhaps a roast-chicken or a beef steak or a juicy goose-berry per. In brief there are physical diseases and spiritual diseases. The farmer must be treated with medicine and prayer and the latter with prayer alone.

A few friends came in and for a while the thread of conversation was lost. The Master raising His voice after greeting he newcomers and said: We have been talking about healing. {{p12}} The physical body after all is not important. This material world is not important neither its contingencies should affect us. The natural world in comparison to the spiritual is non-existent. We speak about ideal virtues and heavenly healing. This body of man is subject to decomposition no matter how much he may try to preserve it. The importance lies in the spirit of man which is eternal. One must think of that. Often the body is sick but the spirit is healthy and again the body may enjoy the utmost of health but spirit is sick. I hope you will obtain both conditions. Turn your faces to God and he will answer all your prayers.

To another he said: Today the Bestowals of the Kingdom of Abha are waving like unto a limitless sea; only capacity is necessary. The soul's must become like unto the fish and swim in this great sea.

He said to another: Today those who arise to spread the news of the Kingdom of Abha are confirmed. {{p13}} Whenever I see enkindled souls I am made happy. When the holy Fragrances of the divine rose-garden reach my nostril I am rejoiced.

Mrs. Lilianthal mentioned the fact that going through many churches, she was shown the remains of the real cross. The Master gave a most interesting amount of how after 300 yrs this alleged cross was found in Jerusalem by St. Hellew, the mother of Coustantine the Great, while no wood no mother how string its resisting power can stand the ravaging and corroding influence of the time under the earth.

For dinner and supper the Beloved comedown to the general dining room and we three servants of his had him to ourselves. He is so wonderfully loving and Kind to us all.

{{p14}}

In the afternoon a believers came to see the Master. When I sense the love and unity of the friend I gain health and fresh strength. I have heard that thou art speaking in the meetings and read the prayers. Read always the supplications. Turn always thy attention toward God. Be always stirred with divine Fragrances; then eternal happiness will be thy share. The everlasting bliss inspires the heart of man to sing and dance and be happy even under the sword of the execution. Once there was a Bahai teacher who went to the city of Khashan. Whenever he went he thought this revelation till one day he was invited to a large meeting. No sooner he sat down than he began to teach the Cause. The people objected and the guests complained to the host to stop him. It was winter and according to Oriental custom a brazier of live burning charcoal was in the middle of the room. He said to the assembled guests and his host : I cannot stop. I cannot remain silent. I want to be quiet but an invisible force impels me to speak. It has taken the rein out of my hand. I am unconscious! I have lost myself. I have forgotten all my conditions! One of the enemies then addressed him; If thou art unconscious put thy hand in thy fire! While he was speaking <15> to them he extended his hand and put it on the fire. His hand was burning and he was teaching the Cause; he was laughing, and happy. Someone told him. For heaven's sake! it is enough! take out thy hand from the fire! He said: 'No! let it burn! I am enjoying it! This is the day of my happiness! Let me continue to tell you about Baha-ullah and his life and his teachings! Another person jumped from his seat and by force took his hand out of the fire. It was very much burned. This man - this Bahai - was so immersed in the sea of spiritual susceptibilities that he did not feel this pain and suffering. I hope that all the believers of God may {{p16}} attain to this exalted station and be so engulfed in the ocean of superhuman emotions as to forget themselves and the world; thus opening the eloquent tongue and receiving the successive assistance of the Kingdom of Abha.

BALTIMOREHOTEL 88 BIS, AVENUE KLEBER. May 5th 1913

Dear Harriet!

The longer the Master stays in Europe the greater will be the promotion of the Bahai Teachings. As his work is universal and as he speaks with and teaches all the people without any distinction of creed, color or race, everyone is attracted, not only to him but to the sublime ideals which appear from his pure mind and transparent heart. He goes before every church, he enters every Society, and he associates with every nation with a view of assisting them to look away, the scale from their eyes, to look upon, the reality from its general aspect and to enter upon a larger field of moral and social activity. A Bahai is not a sectarian or dogmatic. He is not exclusive but inclusive and he practices what he preaches.

“I am a lover of mankind” he declares. He is ever ready to sacrifice everything to demonstrate his love for humanity. “I have burned away all the traces of self and ego”. He shows this is his self-control and sanctification. A Bahai is not a leader but a servant. There are no ordained ministers in this Cause but everyone whose heart is pure, whose motive is unselfish, whose deeds conform to his words, whose tongue is eloquent, he is a teacher of the Divine Logos. The Bahais are a community of spiritual servants and social workers. They are not bound with the fetters of dogmas and the chains of withering creeds. Like the birds of the air, they are free. Like the refreshing breezes of the morn, they waft from all direction of any reward; they have dedicated their lives to the service of their fellowmen. Their minds are the treasures of the New Ideals of this age which shine like unto the jewels and gleam with the purity of the pearls. They hate cant and uphold the standard of honesty. They are in the Vanguard of the army of universal {{p3}} civilization. A Bahai is a lover of the rose and its fragrance. He is a lover of light no matter in which glass it shines. He is an adorer of Reality no matter from which direction it appears. Untrammelled from all past traditions, he is a Cosmopolitan in its truest and widest application. He sympathizes with every movement which broadens the horizon of human intellect and uplifts his conceptions to a higher level of divine consciousness, and to the best of his ability he will strive to co-operate with them in the light of the Bahai Movement. The teachings of Baha-ullah are for all the people and all the races. He has flung wide the doors of the Kingdom and all men have witnessed the Glory of the Lord and the Excellency of His Countenance.

As there are no “secret doctrines” in the Bahai movement, there are no “secret classes”. Open are the doors! Everywhere we raise our eyes we read in burning letters of gold the heavenly sign: “Welcome! All men are welcomed!” The divine trumpet has sounded. The Call of Reality is heard. The oneness of the world of humanity is proclaimed. The angels of heaven have descended. The age of narrowness and sectarianism has passed away. The Light of God has appeared. The century of Radiancy has come. The divine Tent of spiritual brotherhood is pitched. The principles of universal civilization are declared. Mankind is being stirred with a new dynamic spirit. Spiritual susceptibilities are born in many hearts. The East and the West are brought nearer to each other. A new era of interracial justice is upon us. Hidden forces are bringing into activity the thoughts which are half felt in the hearts. All mankind has heard the sweet rapturous song of “Divine Humanity” sung by the heavenly Artist and they are new straining their ears to listen to all its soft, mellow, undertones which stream down from the spiritual spheres.

This morning the Master served tea with his own hand and a propos of the weather he grew reminiscent and gave us some interesting side-light upon the history of the Cause in Adrianople. “When we were exiled again from Begolad” he commenced“, in our company there was a Bahai by the name Mirza Ahmad Kashani. He accompanied Baha-ollah to Constantinople and later on to Adrianople. One night we were invited to a feast. The guests were divided into two and when the supper time came each company was served with a dish of rice and one chicken. It so happened that I was made the partner of Mirza Ahmad. As we sat around the table to eat, my partner humorously remarked to get a wing from the chicken of our neighbor, a piece of breast from another company, a leg from a {{p6}} third and so on. I did so, thinking that he will in turn decide our chicken amongst the believers; instead of doing this he ate all and everybody was most amused. He ate also my share. He was your namesake (the Master turned to me laughing). I had given him the title of “geometrician“, because he liked to get the first of everything and in order to gain his aim, he would devise many humorous plans, calculated to make anybody laugh. When he entered a meeting, he would look all around and then sit a place where the “humble-bubble” would be one of the believers, he would go to him in a hurried fashion. “I have a most important affair to attend to and I must go out now. I cannot wait any longer. Please have a glass of tea.” All these innocent plans, he would resort to, in order to drink a cup of tea before anybody else; because he believed all the aroma of the tea was in the first cup. One day he asked, why do you call me “geometrician?” I know not even the first principle of geometry.” I told him that I will answer his question in the form of a story. Once upon a time {{p7}} a rich merchant was passing by a slave-market. The noise and tumult attracted his attention and he joined the crowd. He saw the slave-trader was sanctioning a slave and mentioning, accounting“, as one of his talents. The Merchant said to himself. I have an accountant in my office to whom. I pay $100 a month. Now I will buy this slave him for life - thus saving much money. He then bought the slave and brought him to his home, rejoicing in his heart that he has been today a shrewd business man. He sat in his room and as the slave was standing near the door, he told him to go and bring him a glass of water. The slave did not move from his place but made several motions with his fingers (here the Master represented the Motions). The Merchants getting out of his patience told angrily to the slave; What do you {{p8}} mean by disobeying me?” The slave said: I was counting just now with my hands that 1st I must go and bring the water 2nd I must return, 3rd I must stand a long time till you drink, 4th I must take back the empty glass, 5th I must return to my place; but you can save three times, if you go, drink the water and come back. The merchant was white with rage. ‘Is this the way you are an accountant?” “Yes”, the submissive slave answered.

The first winter we spent in Adrianople was severely cold and this Mirza Ahmad Kashani not being accustomed to hard was severely cold and this Mirza Ahmad Kashani not being accustomed to hard climate suffered very much. In fact all of us endured the most difficult hardship. Having lived all our lives in moderate and warm climate, the rigorous air of Adrianople was unendurable. The weather was so called that the water was frozen in copper jars and vases and as a result, they were broken to pieces. One morning I wanted to open the door. My fingers were congealed to the bar of iron and when I tried to push them back the skin was torn off. As the home where the women lived was a little far, whenever I wanted to call on them, I would cover all my {{p9}} my head and face with the Aba, "leaving only a small hole for one of my eye to see my way. Notwithstanding this, the cold was so bitter, the wind, so biting that it was as though someone drove a sword, a dagger or an arrow into my eye. Although we had several rooms in the house, we decided that twelve of us stay in one room to get warmer. We did not have any heavy clothing's and the one who had even a light overcoat was considered most fortunate. In this one room we had a tin-plate oven and we made fire to keep us warm. The oven would get as red as fire. Near it we would put two or three bottles of water to be kept warm for drinking. When we got up after midnight to drink, the fire of the oven had naturally given out and the water in the bottles was frozen. We had to make fire, than the ice and drink a glass of the water. That year a flock of sheep with their shepherd were frozen to death in the country. The inhabitants said, they had never seen such a winter in their lives. In short through it and when the spring came around, the country became verdant and the hearts were made glad.

And in order that I may also feel if not the rigor of Adrianople winter at least the rigor of his hands he stride toward me and said: "Would you like to have a slap this early morning? He did not wait for my answer and doves came the thunder and the booming of the heavenly artillery! On my right and left cheek, I received the strokes of gone, but stood on my ground.

During the day Mrs. Beede and a number of other friends called, each receiving the celestial benediction of his words. He took his lunch with us and before that he went out to take a walk. In the afternoon {{p12}} he called at the hospital to pay a visit on Rauha Khanom. She has improved much and in a few weeks she will become entirely well. On his return he sent us to Mr. and Mrs. Seatt's meeting. Mrs. Richard spoke in French on Love and the Equality of the senses. As the Master had asked me to speak I obeyed.

In the evening a number of the Persians came and he asked from one who was a student: How many Persian Bahais are in Paris? The number was given. Then he said: "The life of man is very precious; so he must spent it in a precious Cause. To study the sciences of commerce, agriculture and medicine is very praiseworthy but to concentrate all our time upon such things is not good. If the Persian believers <12> arise to teach the Cause of God in Paris it will be very good. At least they must try to teach others Persians. The believers of God must not remain silent. They must not be quiet. They must not be speechless. They must not be withered. They must not be lukewarm. They must have life, motion, spirit. It is true that man must work, engage in an occupation so that he may not become a burden on the community but all his ambition must not revalue around this. His aim must be to rise day unto day in the scale of divine and human virtues; his today be better than his yesterday and his tomorrow better than today. If this condition does not exist in the life of every Bahai there is no doubt that he is a loser and is in manifest regret, "What did you do today?" The answer is: we ate, we walked, we slept, we dressed.' 'What are you going to do tomorrow.' The same thing.' 'And after-tomorrow.' The same thing! How low and despicable must be the thoughts of men and women who satisfy themselves with these animal propensities. Man must render a worthy service to the world of humanity. He must plant a tree which may produce fruits. He must lay a foundation which may remain unshakable throughout all the coming ages. His heart must find satisfaction in God. Do not believe for one moment that it is possible for man to obtain happiness, joy, serenity and confidence save through God. If his heart is not attached to God, no matter how seemingly permanent is the structure of his material happiness, it will latter down. The utmost is this: He will live a few days, he will (over) {{p13}} drink a few cups, he will smoke a few cigar, thus he will dance a few steps, he will call on a few friends and then, what then the curtain will fall down, the voices are hushed, the darkness prevail and eternal silence and oblivion spread their ominous wings.

Love to all,

Ahmad

Dear Harriet!

Paris is the heaven and Abdul Baha is the sun which shines upon all creation. This is his third visit to this city and much hope is expressed on all sides that the spiritual life of Paris may become vibrant with a new quickening. The friends of God are doing their utmost to create interest in the Bahai Cause and spread the teachings as far and as widely as possible but much individual work is necessary. With the sound of trumpet, these people must become awakened out of their gross negligence and sleep. While the divine beloved is amongst them, they must realize its great importance and the blessing which will bring in its train.

This morning the Master called me about 6 o'clock and asked me to go out and buy a newspaper. His keen interest in the important news of the day is the most wonderful thing I have ever seen. Seldom a day passes without I read to him the news out of New York Herald (Paris Edition) or other French papers.

Many Arabic newspapers from Egypt are sent to him and he reads them with great attention. Those who think they do not have time to read at least a few minutes, the daily news may learn from the Master. Often I would think I am too busy to read the papers and I confess were it not for the Master, I would have hardly opened any of the continental newspapers.

These sad events, he said after hearing the news, which are transpiring in the East and the results of thoughtlessness. Thoughtlessness is the worst calamity of the human race. When constitution was declared in Turkey, the people demonstrated their joy and happiness in thousand of ways. They decorated the streets and the beggars with {{p3}} flags and buntings. They thought that the magic, words of liberty, equality and fraternity will immediately adjust all the accumulated wrongs of the past regime. The governor of Akka after our freedom asked my opinion as regards to the success of the Constitutional government in Turkey. I told him so far as we are concerned, we are grateful to the young Turks because they have given us our liberty but their own future is fraught with danger and instability. It is good for a country's development to have two or more political parties, for they check and oppose each other's excesses. But if these parties become selfish and inimical toward each other, they will destroy the happiness of the people. The political organizations must pledge themselves {{p4}} in the sight of God to work for the general progress of the country irrespective of party line and party allegiance. A person becomes the member of a political party in order that he may become a more useful citizen of the country. In short, the political parties in Turkey and Persia failed deplorably, because as they were fundamentally antagonistic to each other, they assisted substantially the downfall of their countries.

I told him that while he is now in Paris it will be a good thing if he could go one day to Fontainbbaun. He laughed and said: The people of this world are thinking of building palaces but the believers of God are thinking to build the Palace of Eternal Life. That palace is only for a few days, this Palace is for eternity. God has built for you a palace which is indestructible and luminous with the glories of Baha-wllah and as there was no one else in the room he approached me, quietly smiling, striking two hard blows on my right and left cheeks and strode away. My good son! That heavenly palace is worthy. That palace is the palace of the Teaching's of God, that Palace is the religion of God, that Palace is the Love of God, {{p5}} that palace is universal Peace, that palace is the oneness of the world of humanity. We are laying the foundation of that Palace and ere long its turrets shall reach to the sky.

As soon as the Master left America, now and then, letters were received that some of the believers thought and felt that the activities of the Persian American Educational Society in Washington DC were against the desire and consent of the Beloved. The contents of these letters were presented to him and in several instances answers were revealed and forwarded. I have refrained up to this time to mention anything in the diary in regard to this matter, because having founded the Society, the friends may have thought that I have some personal aims to further or cherish. But I believe now the time has come for the removal of this wrong impression from amongst the friends. This {{p6}} morning two other such letters were received by the Master. This Beloved was very much affected and told me emphatically to write to the Secretary of the Society to contradict such erroneous feeling: It is strange! he said, that the people put aside my many Tablets written on this matter and go by their own feelings. Write to Mr. Jos Hannen to make public my explicit texts concerning the Society and its future. Do I changed my mind from time to time? There may be some people who not desiring to assist the Society may invent such feelings. If anyone has a Tablet in his hand proving that I am not in Favour of the progress of the Society, let him bring it out, otherwise why should anyone rely upon such hearsays? I have often remarked in America that only my Tablets are authority and nothing else. In my last address in California and in conversation with the friends, I have encouraged them to assist the Society. Today the most important affair in the world is cooperation between the East and the West. Is it possible that I may be against such a great principle? The Orient-Occident Unity has undertaken to carry out this {{p7}} wonderful idea and it needs the assistance of all the friends. Then he dictated a Tablet to one of the American friends as follows: "Thou hast written concerning contributions for the education of the pupils of the school of Tarbiat. Cooperation and mutual assistance are the fundamental principles of the religion of God. The East must assist the West and the West must assist the East. Whosoever quotes a statement from my tongue, ask from him the authority for the same, either in my handwriting or with my signature. If he has such an authority in his hand, all right; if he has no such authority, do not give any importance to traditions. Keep this criterion always, before your view." In another Tablet revealed by him on the steamer Celtic just one day after our departure from New York he said: "You have written that you desire to assist {{p8}} the Orient-Occident Unity. Undoubtedly the Orient and the Occident must assist each other; especially in the question of the school of Tarbiat. The believers of the East have contributed toward the Mashrek-Azkar of America, although they were in the utmost state of poverty and confusion. If the school of Tarbiat in Teheran is assisted by the Western believers, unquestionably it is the cause of happiness." The Society before Abdul Baha's arrival in America undertook the publication of Bahai literature and informing the American press about the history and teachings of the Cause in a manner which was impossible for any other agency to do at that time exactly the same kind of work. Besides this, it kept informing outside organizations and churches about the nature of the mission of Abdul Baha and as a result of this, innumerable invitations were forwarded to the Beloved long before he left Egypt. In a Tablet received by the Society at that time the Master himself mentioned the receipt of 30 invitations. All this work was undertaken and praise be to God, carried to consummation not only in the {{p9}} face of manifest or silent opposition from certain quarters but it was done with pure faith and assurance. Some of the friends gave financial assistance to publish and circulate all this literature but it was not sufficient. Now, the Society is in debt to the amount of nearly $600 which must be paid as soon as possible. This debt is already of a year standing. God bears testimony to what I say, that if I was in America I would have worked with great joy, even as a laborer in the streets to pay off this debt, and I know I would have succeeded. But I am not in there. At present I have nothing but a willing heart to serve and I assure you it will not pay the printer's bill. I must say also that the debt of the Society consists of one item and that is only the printer's bill. Mr. Jos Hannen can give you the details. The Master hopes {{p10}} that this debt of the Society is soon cleared so that unhampered, it may take up new activities and new channels for bringing the East and the West closer together. The Orient-Occident Unity is a wonderful agency of Union between the East and the West if we use it and keep it oiled and foster it wisely till step by step it may attain to its full stature. Another aspect of the activity of the Society is the maintenance of a number of scholarships in the school of Tarbiat in Teheran. This has been more or less the chief contained activity of the Society since its organization. It is hoped that these scholarships will be continued and those who are in arrears - if impossible for them to meet this small obligation - others may take their places. This is only a very small service on the part of the Western Bahais to their brothers and sisters in Persia. It will be very regrettable indeed if these scholarships are discontinued and the interest in the activities of the Society waned in the face of the great desire of the Beloved. He had hoped and he is yet hoping to see the aims of this Society progressing and advancing, ever becoming a more and more useful {{p11}} instrument for the closer relationship of the East and the West.

The Beloved revealed some wonderful Tablets for the believers of Stuttgart; one to Mr. Herrigel, another to Consul Schwarz, to Miss Anna Kasthin, Miss Alma Knoblock etc. When he finished dictating the Tablet he said: Truly I say the believers of Stuttgart merit every Love! What blessed souls they are! What heavenly beings they are! their faces were illumined and their hearts were pure!

He told to be ready to go out with him and for an hour I walked behind him in the avenue Kleber in the sunshine for about one hour and then returned. He said: The sun is the fire-place of God, it warms all the world and all the people.

{{p12}}

Upon our arrival we found several friends were waiting, amongst them Mrs. Beede, Mrs. Fraser of Johannesburg, South Africa. The Master remarked jokingly that he desires to stay here a few days to rest before he leave for the East, if Mirza Ahmad would let him.

A propos of something he said to another: Before you teach others, teach yourself. Man must first test his knowledge in himself to see whether it is workable on theoretical.

Mrs. Ethel Fraser asked him about his health and he answered: I do not give any importance to physical health. The real health is spiritual and that is eternal. The spirit of man must become reinforced. This body will be decayed; this building no matter how solid it's basis will be destroyed some day. Just think how J. P. Morgan travelled everywhere to get back his health but there was no result. The spirit of man which is the effulgence of God and the eternal Bestowal of the Almighty has importance. We must think of the health of the spirit more than the body. What importance lies in the glass! We must think of the light which illumines the glass. {{p13}} The light of the spirit illumines the world of existence and release it from the clutches of materialism. The ears can hear the voice in a limited distance, the vision of the eyes similarly is circumscribed but the spirit sees the East and the West; while in the West it organizes important affairs in the East; while on earth it discovers heavenly satellites, it unfolds the mysteries of phenomena; it goes under the earth and brings into the light of day the geologic secrets. These are some of the discoveries of the spirit on the physical plane; which the wonders of its spiritual discoveries are infinite; through them the dark man is made luminous; if he is thrown in the sea of tests, he is yet dry and if he is in the midst of burning furnace he is yet cool. This is important.

The Master introduced Mrs. Fraser to some of the friends present and then said: The Bahais do not need any introduction. God has introduced them to each other. There is a mystical union between their hearts. In Persia the believers know each other without any introduction.

Many American friends were present. He said: It is good that even in Paris there are so many Americans in the meeting; even the Cause was first introduced to America and later on it was brought to Europe. Undoubtedly the Americans were worthy of this privilege.

Then the Master went out with Doctor Mohamad Khan to take a walk and on his return we had lunch with him. In the afternoon Madame D. Astre came in and had a long talk with the Master about the freedom of Oriental women and how it was necessary to bring some of the Persian women either to Europe or America to breathe the fresh air of social intercourse. The Beloved assured her that all these things shall come to pass but we must wait so that the seeds sown may germinate and take root.

In the evening Miss Sanderson {{p14}} Rezwanieh Khanom and another friend come and called on the Master. They had a long talk with him. Rezwanieh Khanom and Mirza Jalal are leaving for Haifa after tomorrow; but he will return later to Paris to take his wife. Meanwhile she is in the hospital and according to the report she has improved wonderfully. Formerly her headache troubled her very much and she could not sleep, now she sleeps seven hours. I think she will stay in the hospital for another month.

After four o'clock I had a fine ride with the Master. For more than one hour we drove through the avenues. It was so great and so heavenly to sit beside him, look into his face all the time instead of watching the aimless crowd. He said: I do not feel happy in Paris. I do not know whether it is its depressing {{p16}} atmosphere or the effect of the indifference of the people in spiritual things. As I look upon these crowds and these buildings my heart is compressed. I wish to leave this city as soon as possible. I wonder how the people can live in such an atmosphere all their lives and be happy, spending their precious time in hunting, racing and devising new games and pastimes.

He grow silent and when our carriage arrived near the Seine he raised his head and said: Last night I had a dream. In this dream I saw the Blessed Perfection standing before a large gathering. I was also amongst those people. He was speaking in a new language that all of us could understand. It was not Arabic or Persian or Turkish but a new language. My heart was filled with joy because I thought this must be the universal language spoken of by himself 50 years ago. Then I began to think whether the Holy Tablets were translated in these new language but as the Blessed Perfection was speaking I was ashamed to asked {{p17}} from the friend who was sitting next to me. Then a voice was heard from the outside and the Blessed Perfection told me to go out and find who was he. As I came out I saw a tall man with luminous face, white beard and white locks falling down his shoulder. He had a most pleasant countenance and sweet voice. He also spoke in this new language. I asked him from which part of the world does he come from? He said: From Jabolgo and Jaborsa! (Now these two cities are the two imaginary places where according to Mohamadan traditions the Promised one is living and the Bahais exploded this idea). When he said that I have come from Jabolgo and Jaborsa, I thought now how are we going to answer the Mohamadans? Then I asked him {{p18}} in which part of the world these two cities are situated? He smiled and said: These cities are not on the earth, they are in heaven. I became very happy and exclaimed. You are a heavenly being! Let us go to Baha-wllah? While he was engaged in a wonderful divine conversation with the Blessed Perfection in the new language. I was so overjoyed that I awake. I have been happy since then.

Love to all

Ahmad

Dear Harriet!

Today the King of Spain payed an official visit to the French Republic and the principal Boulevards and avenues were bedecked with the Flags of the two nations. For the next three days he will be the guest of the government in the Palace of the State Department and then he will return to Madrid. Most elaborate program for his entertainment was announced in the dailies and his photos and descriptions are in every hand and on every tongue. A certain section of the French people do not like entertaining Royalty and manifest their dislike in no unmistakable manner. "We claim to be a Republic", they vociferously cry out "what have we to do with an old tattering Monarchy of the worst type". But no one listens to them and the procession {{p2}} of events go on gayly. Extreme precaution is being taken by the Police department to avoid any eventualities and many arrests have been made of the so-called hair-brained anarchists and radical socialists. Bitter and venomous speeches were delivered attacking the character of the visiting Monarch. But if one takes the tone of the French press, he is impressed with fair and restrained comments, predicting closer relations and better feelings between the two nations. We have been so busy with our own thoughts that I did not dream of the coming of the Spanish King to Paris. I read something in the papers but I did not give attention to dates; even early this morning the hotel man entered my room with several Flags to hang them in front and on the side of the building. I did not ask him any question, having in mind the feast of Joan of Arc which was celebrated a day or two ago. I thought to myself this must be the continuation of that Feast. It was a fair day with sunshine rolling down from the blue sky; the air was wedded to a wee-bit of gentle breeze just to show us what constitutes an ideal May day in Paris. It is 9 o'clock in the {{p3}} morning. As he has been doing for the last few days, the Master called me again to go out with him and have a walk. I jumped up from my seat and was ready in no time. We were walking along the avenue Kleber toward the "Arc de Triumphe" when suddenly we heard the sound of Martial music. Through one of the cross streets a regiment of soldiers were walking with military steps toward the Champ Elysee. The Beloved stopped on the sidewalk and reviewed the whole regiment. As the soldiers passed by they all looked at him and if they only knew that they are being reviewed by the Supreme heavenly Commander of the Kingdom of God they would have gladly given up their lives with joy and happiness. We continued towards the Arc de Triumphe. The large square was filled with soldiers and {{p4}} artillery. No one was allowed to enter the circle; a cordon of soldiers preventing entrance. We walked toward champs Elysee and from end to the other we could see nothing but crowds, the spectators by hundreds of thousands lined behind the French soldiers on the sidewalks.

At last we got a place where we could see the King passing. President Poincari with members of Cabinet, military generals etc. are welcoming him at the station of Bois de Boulogne at 10:10 am and escort him to the Palace. From where we stood we could see the points of the thousands of rifles and the head gear and cuirasses of the soldiers, shining and dazzling in the sun. It was indeed a spectacular sight which I will not easily forget. As the Master looked upon this seemingly victorious army he said: The wise man sees that another army with no cannons or rifles but with quiet other armaments shall defeat this army. The day is coming when all these armies and regiments are vanquished {{p5}} by the ever - victorious armies of the Kingdom of Abha and theirs shall be the glorious triumphs of Peace and brotherhood. When we arrived in Bagdad, one day there was a great maneuvers of the Turkish army corps and as Baha-wllah looked upon them said. My army shall win the eternal victories. These shall be put to rout and defeated!

The Beloved was interested in the artillery and watched it for a long time. Suddenly we observed all the eyes were looking up. It was large balloon floating calmly through the air. It came and stood high in the middle of the Champs Elysee. It was a beautiful sight! Someone remarked jokingly that it would set at nought all the precautions of the Police if just at right time a bomb was thrown down from the balloon.

{{p6}}

The Master apropos of marksmanship said: When I was young they would light ten candles and at the range of a very long distance I would put out the lights one after another without missing one.

The time for the arrival of the King approached. Notice was given to all the soldiers and everybody was ready. A regiment of the French guards riding on five horses passed by and the King with the President of Republic sitting side by side in the state carriage came to view. The people hurrahed and cheered and the King smiled and made graceful acknowledgement. Oh! If only they knew that the King of Kings was standing so near to them. What would have they done? How blind and negligent are the people! They do not approach the real King but they run after these children's plays. They do not open their eyes to the glories of the Kingdom but they prefer darkness. Oh! And I wanted to get up and cry out oh people! Here is your King! Here is your divine Master! Here stands the life-giver of the world! Turn to him! This will be conducive {{p7}} to your everlasting honor!

When we returned to our hotel on our way we found a funeral procession waiting for the other procession to end. It was such a contrast of life and death. The hearse was covered with beautiful wreathes and garlands of flowers. As ever, he looked at the bright side of this contrast and said: This is a very lovely custom to cover the hearse with bouquets of all kinds of flowers. It is very beautiful.

As we reached the hotel we found a number of people waiting patiently for the Master. There was a Bahai who has been taught by Mrs. May Maxwell and another by Mr. Woodcock. The Master praised both these illumined souls and then said: Some souls are like unto the glass-chimneys. They are pure and transparent but an outside light must come in and illumined them; still there are others who are illumined but they do not confer illumination; again these are some people who are {{p8}} illumined themselves and they also illumine others. These are the blessed souls. These are favored in the Kingdom of Abha! When we associate with such real educators who confer general instruction upon the world of humanity and guide them in the path of Reality, day unto day our eyes are more illumined, our ears more hearing and our hearts more perfumed with the Fragrances of God.

To a young girl from Scotland who is studying painting in Paris he said: His Holiness Baha-wllah has commanded the study of arts and crafts; that when we undertake the study of any branch of arts we must perfect ourselves in it and strive to master its technicalities and expressions but the study of art must not hinder the enfoldment of the sweet flowers of our spiritual life. One must become a compliment to the other. Art without the subtle music of the spirit which is only heard by the still small voice; art without the spiritual inspiration of the higher spheres; art without the infinite waves and vibrations of the super-human; art without the tender messages of the anemones and hyacinths of the spiritual rose-garden is not art but artifice. {{p9}} Therefore you must make an effort to master both branches of Art.

The prophets of God who are the Masters of the spiritual art school teach men how to paint on the canvas of the spirits, the ideal images and virtues of the world of humanity. From time to time these masterpieces are exhibited in the wonderful Gallery of Sacrifice - on the Mount of divine Transfiguration. There and only there you are allowed to witness these life-like dramatic exhibitions. It is a marvellous gallery! The Principal of this Gallery today is Baha-wllah and up to this time more than 20000 portraits have been painted. Would you like to see these tragic, and dramatic life-size portraits?

Without any notice on our part he changed his topic and continued: When Baha-wllah appeared, the moral {{p10}} life of the people was degraded, they were not living like unto human beings. There was no trace of love, sincerity and good-fellowship but through his Teachings, the Fragrances of God were diffused, people were educated to such an extent that a child of 12 years old while under the sword cried out "Ya Baha El Abha". You must likewise strive to become more perfect day unto day. His Holiness the Bab has said, a believer must review his deeds every evening to see what has he done and accomplished during the day. If he has done something worthy and noble, if his spiritual susceptibilities are increased he must be thankful to God; if not, repent and try to live a better life tomorrow.

Mr. and Mrs. Scott entered the room. They were welcome and thus addressed: You are the flowers of Paris and the cause of my happiness. All the inhabitants of this city are either thinking of industry or wealth as they are chasing after the worldly pleasures except the few Bahais who are thinking of God. In a very large impenetrable jungle we have found a few fruit-bearing trees; therefore you are very much loved. When we were exiled from Teheran to Bagdad {{p11}} although we were one month on the way, we did not find a single Bahai and upon our arrival in Bagdad we found only three friends; notwithstanding this we were made very happy. The other day I desired to come to your meeting but I was not feeling well. Your meetings are very spiritual. They will progress in the future. Do not look at the present. The greatest meeting held during the day of Christ was the Lord's Supper. There were only twelve. The meeting was held in a very humble quarter with no table, no chairs and no rugs. They sat around a simple wooden board and spoke on the glad-tidings of the Kingdom. Now consider the results of that one supper. One end of the Christ's table is in the East, the other is in the West and many nations and tongues are sitting around it!

To Mrs. Ethel Fraser the Master said: When thou art returning to Johannesburg thou must be like an eloquent, living letter. There are two kinds of letters, living and lifeless. I desire that thou mayst become a living, detailed, eloquent letter. A letter which is the cause of eternal life, a letter which confers happiness, a letter which illumine the hearts, a letter which spreads the message of the Kingdom of Abha, a letter which contains ideal significances, a letter which is the embodiment of deeds and not words, a letter which cries out and is not silent, in short a letter of Reality and light, a letter out of the Book of Life. Convey to all the friends the wonderful Abha greeting on my behalf. Be thou to them my eloquent, living and spiritual letters. Then he gave another wonderful talk on the Bounties of Baha-wllah who through his supernatural power has cemented these hearts together; that he has established such a union that even a sword cannot divide us.

In the afternoon Mr. Arnold William Rosenthal, the Editorial Foreign Correspondent of Pittsburgh Spectator with a friend of his called on the Master to get an interview for his paper. As the Beloved was asleep I spoke to him about the Cause and when he got up there issued between them the longest interview I have ever experienced. As I look over the Persian notes of Mirza Mahmoud I see there are about 8 pages rapid handwriting. Mr. Rosenthal wrote down everything and on his return to America which will be about the end of this month he will publish the article. I have given him Mr. Roy Wilhelm's address so that he may call on him when in N.Y. He is leaving for N.Y. on S.S. Martha Washington on May 24th. Please notify Mr. Wilhelm about this man. He was very {{p14}} favorably impressed with the Master and will write an excellent article. He begged the Beloved to write also a Tablet for the readers of the Spectators which he has promised to do tomorrow. It will be mailed to him.

After this long and most interested interview the Master told me to go and get a carriage and have a drive with him. We drove through the Bais de Bologne, Champs Elysee, the Garden of Tuilleries, on the Quai for 2 hours. He told me many interesting stories about Jazzar Pasha, the defender of the Fortress of Acca at the time of Napoleon the Great, the ideas of Napoleon about the formation of an Eastern Empire and how he was unhappy by the defeat he got from the hand of the valiant Jazzar Pasha. Returning home, there were several Persians and the discussions were turn upon the founders of the Present dynasty of the Persian Kings. The history of several of them was recited. It was a Feast of Persian history. What a marvellous memory the Master has! It is a divine, heavenly memory! I can write 30 pages more but I have no more time.

Dear Harriet!

The months of May and June are most beautiful and wonderful in Paris. People from many parts of the world come here to spent these two months in pleasure and merry-making. Every means of enjoyments is available and nature and all its ravishing beauty and luxuriance adds its charm and attraction. The very word “Paris” conjures before one’s eyes certain types of amusements and attractions that cannot be found anywhere else on the face of the earth. Paris is a magical garden which draws within its sphere people from all parts of the world. Just at this time Bais de Bologne is an Elysian field of loveliness. “Les Jardins des Tuilleries” are visions of Paradise. The fine Parks have clad themselves with garments of luxuriant verdancy. The ever-shifting scenes {{p2}} of nature call the people out of their holes into the open space to bask under the sunshine and to breathe in the vital air, pure and limpid.

The other day someone inquired whether I have seen such and such a garden. I answered “No”. “Why?” he asked. Because I rejoiced here I have the most beautiful garden. When I have the love of Abdul Baha I am in the rose-garden of God. When I hear his words I am listening to the most sweet singing nightingale. When I am in his Presence I am inhaling the Fragrances of the Ideal Flowers. If I stay with him in a cell it is delectable paradise. He is my rose-garden!

“Are you going to have a vacation this summer?” a friend asked. “What do I want to do with vacation!” I said. “When I am with our Beloved I am enjoying an eternal holiday. Once I did not go out of the hotel for 5 days but I was very happy because I was with him. Whenever I get tired I looked into his face and lo! I am refreshed! To served him and to be near him is my greatest hope! It is better to be the servant of Abdul Baha than the King of the World! Servitude at his Threshold is greater {{p3}} than the sovereignty of an empire. To win the good-pleasure of Abdul Baha through the sincerity of purpose and the devotion of the spirit is to win the good-pleasure of God. To possess his love, to feel the throles of his pulsating heart is the greatest privilege in life!”

This morning Mirza Jalal and Rezwanich Khanom came to say goodbye to the Master, because their train was leaving at 9 o’clock. Rezwanich during her stay of nearly 50 days in Paris has been the guest of Miss Sanderson. The Master thanked her for entertaining so beautifully Rezwanich. When she arrives home, the Beloved said, she will speak all the time about you and your hospitality. There are two kinds of love. Divine love which is eternal and lasting and a love which is {{p4}} born through acquaintance and is soon forgotten. Divine love is an eternal foundation not subject to ruin. Now there is divine love between you two sisters of the East and the West. Mirza Jalal will return after 3 weeks to take back his wife and I am wondering whether the Master will start here till his return.

Mrs. Ethel Fraser was also going to leave for London where she is going to stay the rest of the year before leaving for Johannesburg. She came in about half past nine to say goodbye to the Master. She was welcomed and thus addressed by the King of Kings: Convey on my behalf the wonderful Abha greeting to the believers in London. Own ounce to them the uninterrupted assistance of the Holy Spirit. Confer upon them the Supreme glad tidings of the Manifestation of Baha-wllah which are descending from His invisible Kingdom. They bestow health to the sick, happiness to the sorrowful, exhilaration to the downeast, hope to the hopeless and life to the dead one. Praise be to God that the Sun of Reality is shining upon all the regions, the divine Bestowals are all-enriching, the doors of the Kingdom are open, {{p5}} the call of Ya Baha El Abha is being raised from the East and the West. Now it is the beginning of the dawn of this light in the West. I hope that the East and the West may become submerged in the ocean of these heavenly effulgences. I am very pleased with the Believers of London for they heard the divine Call of Baha-wllah. Their meetings are warm and I hope that day unto day they may become warmer and more perfect, day unto day they may be drawn nearer unto God, day unto day they may become more spiritual, day unto day they may become more assisted and confirmed. I will pray for you also and beg for you confirmations from Threshold of Baha-wllah. Rest assured! God-willing you will become the means of conferring life upon dead. {{p6}} This is the most great affair today. I pray that you may be assisted with the Cohorts of the Angels of heaven. Rest assured! Rest assured! My heart will be with you. My spirit will be with you! My soul will be with you and I will never forget you.

Mrs. Fraser asked the Master's prayer for her father who is a very old man living at this time in Oakland California. The Beloved said: I will pray for him, that God may submerge him in the ocean of his blessings, and day unto day he may be drawn nearer unto the source of all Life. When the fruit is good the tree is also endeared in our eyes. You are his daughter and the fruit of the tree of his life. Your love for him cause you to mention his name and we have prayed for him. Other matters about the spread of the Cause in South Africa was touched and the Master told her to teach this Cause and spread its glorious glad-tidings. She went away with happy heart, confident spirit and soaring hope. We were all glad to make her acquaintance. She was a sweet, unselfish good Bahai. May god be with her wherever she goes!

Several Bahais came and the Master spoke about his stay in San Francisco, and his meeting with a Japanese poet who had married an American girl. This Japanese poet became so attracted to the Cause as to write a poem, to deliver lectures and write articles in the local Japanese papers while Abdul Baha were there. He praised the Japanese intelligence and adaptability. He said: When the confirmations of God descend the distance of one hundred years is covered in one night. Then he gave the graphic life story of "Rouhallah Vargha", twelve years old, a martyr at that tender age. When he was in Acca, with his father I asked him one day. Tell me Rouhallah! What is the greatest desire of thy life? Immediately he answered! I long martyrdom in the path of God. Again I asked him: 'Why do you believe in {{p8}} the religion of Baha-wllah?' He answered. 'Because I have investigated it for myself. I am not a Bahai, because my father is one, but because I have thoroughly investigated it!'

Then he said: Man must never get satisfied. He must ever be thirsty. There is nothing worse in this world than satisfy. Man must drink from every fountain. His Holiness Baha-wllah says: 'Your thirst must be so great that if you quaff the seven seas of the world you may yet be thirsty and dry.

To a friend who just entered the room he said: God has created in you a great capability. You must expend this capability in the Cause of the Kingdom. If you consecrate it to any other cause except the promotion of the virtues of the world of humanity, its results will be finite. If you devote it to the spread of the Teachings of God and self-sacrifice in the path of God you will become like a bright candle. Just think that Peter and other apostles of Christ belonged to the common people and were not educated but as they expended whatever capacity they had in the path of {{p9}} Christ and they shone forth from the horizon of eternity. The results of the dedication of their lives to the Cause of Christ are yet continued. This Mary Magdelaine in whose name they have built a most wonderful Church in Paris was a peasant girl. As she dedicated her simple capacity to the Cause of Christ, she became well-known throughout all ages. Therefore strive that thou mayst spend thy capacity in the Cause of God.

Speaking about the coming together of the friends he said: The meetings of the friends are like unto the delightful rose-gardens in which you find variegated flowers adding to each other's charm. It is evident that when the intellectual forces of the minds are joined, the result will be correspondingly greater. Likewise the spirit of men do reinforce and strengthen each other. If man does not receive spiritual assistance {{p10}} from others his spirit will become weakened. The believers of God must reinforce each other's spirits, sacrifice their lives in the path of each other so that through their mutual assistance, the utmost of unity be obtained. The shop of one flock must gather together and do not let anything cause dispersion amongst them.

There was a musical artist in the room and the discussion was turned upon that subject. The Beloved spoke as follow: Music was an ancient art in Persia. The old People of Persia loved music very much and their artists contributed to its development. When the Arabs conquered Persia after the appearance of Mohamad, they learned from the Persians the notes and measures and brought back with them to Bagdad, the seat of Arabian Kalifott of the time. The Persian Music had rich and various harmonies known by the names of the cities, because every city had a different school of singing and they taught their artists, the special harmony which belonged to themselves. Persian music became very much in vogue in Bagdad and its fame was spread far and wide. From Bagdad the Arabs carried {{p11}} it to Cordova and Andalusia in Spain, where they had their universities. Here many European students studied the Persian school of music and made it as a foundation for their further and more original compositions. Thus Persian Music has contributed to European Music, although this is not quite well-known. Besides these historical testimonies the word "Music" is Persian. It comes from "Musik" and the word "Musik" comes from the word "Musighar", a sweet singing bird. The beak of this bird is so made as to contain many holes and as it respire, various and different sounds issue from its hole, thus making a combination of pleasant sounds.

The first musician of Persia was Barbad who lived about 2000 years ago. He was the first man who translated these pleasant {{p12}} sounds into the voice of man. He divided the music into twelve measures giving to each measure a particular name. He became famous and well-known for his great service to the musical world. The second musical genius of Persia was "Faraby" who lived 1000 years ago and invented the musical notes. The Europeans claim that they are the ones who originated the notes but the book of "Faraby" was found in the Arabian Library of Spain and sets and nought such a claim. Faraby taught music to his pupil by the motion of his hands. For example the right hand was taken as the "harmony" and the left hand the "measures". When the pupil came to him for a lesson he would sit on a chair and move his right or left hand, the pupil ever following those motions. There is a story in connection with the life of "Barbad" and his struggle to get royal recognition that I would like to tell you. When he invented the twelve measures of music he was a poor bard {{p13}} and no one knew anything about him. He tried every means to reach the royal Court and play for the King but he failed every time; the court Musicians even blockading his way. They feared his talent. Finally he eluded them one night and entered the Imperial Park; hiding himself under the bushes till long after midnight. Then slowly he crept out and walked toward the Palace where the King was sleeping. He spied a tall tree near the King's apartment and ascended to the top. He carried along of course the musical instrument invented by himself. About dawn he began to play and sing and little by little he added to the richness and volume of his voice till it filled the whole Park. The King was awakened out of his sleep, his heart enraptured with the sweet music. He came out of his apartment with several Courtiers who were also {{p14}} awakened and together they started a search for the Artist. They were at last brought under the tree on the top of which "Barbad" was filling the space with his ethereal voice. The King and the Courtiers thought an angel had come down from heaven. At last they asked him "Art thou human or divine?" He said "I am Barbad". "Come down then!" He came down. "Why did you go on the top of this tree to sing?" The King asked. "Because your court musicians through jealousy did not let me have an audience with my King, therefore finding no other way and being determined to sing for you I decided to follow this plan." The King was most pleased with him and kept him ever afterward with himself.

The Beloved went out for a walk and on his return he ate with us at the table in the general dining room. Mon. Dreyfus called and talked with him about various subjects such as the present visit of the King of Spain to {{p15}} Paris. In this instance he recited a story about the visit of one of the Western Rulers to Constantinople and how he was lavishly entertained by the Sultan of Turkey. Apropos of something he said: I am always thinking how to carry the loads of others and not to put my own loads on their shoulders. The Blessed Perfection has taught me this. We must prove this. We must prove this through deed and not by mere word. Ahmad Pasha called and for one hour he was in the Presence of Our Beloved. His father has been a great admirer of Baha-wllah when he lived in Adrianople. Abdul Baha gave him today one of his large photos and a copy of Asiatic Review. {{p16}} With Doctor Mohamad Khan, he went out to take a walk, calling at the same time on Mon. Dreyfus and Miss Sanderson.

Ahmad Pasha had prepared for the Master bottles of sour milk. As he was living near us I went and got there. The Master had just arrived and they were on the table. He sent to the dining room all the Persians to take their lunch and as I was not hungry I stayed in my room. The Master instead of asking me to take a bottle of sour milk for the Persians, he took it himself. The diners were surprised to see Abdul Baha entering the dining room and carrying in his hand a bottle of milk for his secretary. Is not this really wonderful? Why did he not asked me to do this except to teach us the lesson of true servitude? Is there any other way for us to show our deep appreciation for all that he is doing for us than he ever ready to sacrifice our lives in his path?

To honor his Consul Schwarz

Upon him be Baha-o-llah El Abha!

He is God!

O thou dear son!

Under the protection and providence of His Holiness Baha-o-llah we reached Paris safely. We are always engaged in the commemORIZATION of your love, your kindness, the spiritual emotion of the hearts of the members of that households and your attention and devotion to the Kingdom of Abha! Truly I say you didst manifested toward us the infinite degree of real love and Bahai hospitality. We shall never forget you and from the divine Bestowals beg for your assistance and {{p18}} confirmation and we will strive that God willing, perchance, you may obtain happiness and success.

Convey greeting and kindness on my behalf to thy revered wife and thy beloved children.

Convey likewise wonderful Abha greeting to Doctor Faber. The medicine which he gave me for the alleviation of cold I am yet using.

Upon thee be Baha El Abha!

To the believers of God and the maid servants of the Merciful!

Upon them be Baha-o-llah El Abha!

Stuttgart and Esslingen.

He is God!

Ye sons and daughters of the Kingdom!

The Stuttgart days! How happy were they! The meetings! How illumined were they! The heavenly confirmations! How manifest were they! The Breaths of the Holy Spirit! How were they set in motion! The Call of the Kingdom of Abha! How did it ascend the apex of the Supreme Concourse! Whenever the hours spent in Stuttgart are remembered, the soul and the heart are made happy!

Blessed is the Lord of Hosts who in that country appraised the summon of the Kingdom, strived the hearts with spiritual susceptibilities, gladdened the souls and rejoiced the spirits with {{p20}} the divine glad-tidings. I hope that the Confirmations of Baha-ollah may descend upon you uninterruptedly, every moment may you receive a new spirit so that the Kingdom of God may be spread very rapidly and the gospel of the appearance of Baha-ollah may resuscitate all the regions. The Days that I lived in your midst were spiritual and illumined. The heavenly food descended, the eternal bestowal was unveiled, the emotions of consciousness were incessant, the eyes were radiant and the ears were listening with the utmost exhilaration to the celestial song. I beg of God to make this confirmation continual and the reality of the teachings of His Holiness Baha-ollah may become incarnated thus the hearts may become attracted and the souls quickened through the Breaths of the Holy Spirit.

Upon ye be Baha El Abha!

Dear Harriet!

As the Beloved came out of his room this morning he said: All the people are sleeping! Why are they so negligent and neglectful of the glorious destiny which His Holiness Baha-wllah has appointed for them? The time has come when they must turn their faces toward the Kingdom of Abha; instead they are asleep upon the bed of unawareness. The Sun of Reality is in the height of its power and majesty but they prefer dark rooms and the light of the candles. The Bahais all over the world must awaken them with the trumpets of the Word of God. This is the time of real, active work! We must arise with great energy and fire to quicken the souls.

This morning Mrs. Beede brought a French Melle whom she has taught two years ago and her interest has been kept up all this time. The Beloved talked with her a long time about the atheists and the religionists, the two most prominent schools in France and told her how she should speak with them. With one she should speak about nature and its defects, with the other about divine religion and the appearance of the Kingdom of Abha.

Later Mrs. Lilianthal arrived and she said to the Master that there was a bird near her window which sings very beautiful and its melody brought to her mind the lovely and heavenly disposition of the Beloved. He answered: My sweet-singing birds are your hearts, for they sing the song of the Kingdom. Through this I am made very happy. The twittering of the birds is good for some people but we have sharpened our ears to listen to the songs of the birds of Paradise. The rich notes of this melody is eternal. I love to hear the "Song of the Heart" which is streaming down from the Kingdom of Abha, stirring the hearts of men with {{p3}} deeper and purer emotions. Have you ever thought that the one heavenly song which issued from the sweet mouth of Christ found millions of echoes in the hearts of men and women throughout ages and cycles and has grown into thousand rich accompaniments? That was a real melody; all others were imitations. We must sing such a melody, the effect of which will be lasting. The songs of the birds are the result of the vibrations which are set in motion in the air. They reach the tympanum of our ears and are forgotten after a few minutes. If you hear continually the songs of the birds, you will be tired. This very thing happened in Montclair N. J. When I was {{p4}} there, there were so many birds that the people did not know what to do. They complained to the local authority, because their sounds at nights disturbed their sleep. Now you must think of the Melody of the Kingdom and that is the Call of God.

There is a station destined for man that if he ever reaches to it, he will find all the created phenomena holding conversation with him; he will see that everything is speaking with him. For example, when he looks upon the Sun, it will speak with him addressing him in the most eloquent language as follow: O Son of Man! Behold! How light is good! I am a body composed of mineral elements! There is no importance in the mineral but as I am as a light-giving body, I am educating the whole world. I am developing all the minerals in the bowels of the earth. I am the cause of all these luxuriant vegetations. I am the means {{p5}} of the continuation of life in the animal and human kingdoms. I render all these services because I am an illumined body. Therefore, O thou man! Strive that thou mayst likewise become enlightened, thus becoming the means of general education and the upliftment of humanity.

Someone asked about the health of the Master. He answered: Under all circumstances, I am happy and well. I am never unwell. The body of man is the result of the composition of the elements and these elements are constantly at war with each other. They wage such a better war on each other that at last both sides come to defeat and disintegration. But the spirit of man is from the world of God. In the world of God {{p6}} there is no strife. It is a world of simplicity and absolute unity. There is no war and no alteration. There is absolute peace and pure reconciliation.

Then Mrs. Lilian that asked many questions about the theory of “electrical body” to which the Beloved gave quite lengthy answers. He went out with Mirza Hossein and walked for 2 hours, for the day was very fine. On his return we all had lunch in the dining room in his Holy Presence. He was in good humour and spoke jokingly about me all the time. At 3 o’clock Mon. Dreyfus came and the Master went with him to pay a visit to Rouha Khanom in the hospital.

During his absence Mr Lee {{p7}} and Miss Hadjson arrived and we had a long talk with them of how to spread the Cause more widely in Paris. They were here when the Master came in. They asked the same question from him. He said: Every soul must first teach himself; he must be severed, attracted, enkindled; he must be living the life - then his words will have effect. Whenever you see a thirsty soul, give him a cup of this salubrious water. This Cause has cost us very dear. We have not received it cheaply. It is the pearl of the great price. The believers of God have accepted this Cause through self-sacrifice. {{p8}} They have given up their lives for it. They have accepted happily, chains and fetters in order to promote these Teachings.

Tonight we all went to Mon. Dreyfus’ Meeting. The Master stayed home. Mr. Horace Holly read portion of his book on the Cause which is being published both in London and America. Mon. Dreyfus read a letter from Rezwanich Khanom on the necessity of the freedom for the women in the East. It was written before her departure. We are all very happy because the Master’s health is much improved. This week of rest in Paris has done him lots of good. We do not yet know when he leaves for Egypt.

Dear Harriet!

A very wonderful Tablet containing a glorious Message of Peace and goodwill for all the American people was revealed yesterday for Pittsburgh Spectator. I have just finished translating it and am forwarding it to the Correspondent who had a long interview the other day and is now travelling in Europe. This Tablet with its original Persian will appear probably in the month of June in a daily or Sunday edition. Both the interview and the Tablet are unique, instructive and brilliant. If the correspondent who was most sympathetic write everything that was given to him, it will be one of the best articles of the year.

This morning a letter from Los Angeles was read to the Beloved. The news contained therein about the meetings made the Master very happy. He said: Consider the Power of the Covenant! Where is Acca and where is Los Angeles! Yet the Power of the Covenant of Baha-wllah has united these two distant points! As people in Southern California are religious, the Cause shall advance there, and many people will become attracted and the Word of God will be promoted. In order to preserve the unity of the Cause and to spread the religion of God Baha-wllah established this Covenant and Testament. Were it not for the power of the Covenant, you would have witnessed the dispersion of the believers and the total disappearance of the Cause of God. When I say the Covenant, I mean the power and the authority of Baha-wllah given to me. In this station the consideration of sonship and fatherhood is forgotten. Baha-wllah did not appoint {{p3}} Abdul Baha as the Center of His Covenant because he was his son but because he was the purest and the readiest channel on the face of the earth to carry on this work. The believers must realize that the Power of the Covenant is for the protection of the Cause of God, the promulgation of the religion of God and the brotherhood of the East and the West.

About 9 o'clock Mon. Richard arrived and the Master took him to his room. He spoke about the ideal freedom of the Persian Bahai women, how they are being educated and the new ideals spread amongst them. Their hearts and consciences are free. They move in a calm, spiritual atmosphere. Their intuitions are developed very marvellously. They have received {{p4}} the moral and ethical education. Baha-wllah has made the Oriental women free from the fetters of bondage and captivity. They are the equals of men. Man and wife are partners and life companions and not master and slave. Of course the progress of one fundamental law must not be lost sight of and that is this the complete intellectual freedom and social and civic equality of women in Oriental countries must come about by intelligent, normal evolution and not in a haphazard abnormal revolution. The men are cooperating with their sisters to open schools for girls and introduce scientific courses for their instructions. All this will take time and continued vigilance and activity. The Bahais are doing everything in their power to further these high ideals and the authorities of the School of Tarbiat in Teheran have opened a girl's school and have an American teacher. The future of the Oriental women is bright but she is now in a period of transition. {{p5}} She is trying to discard the old, archaic garments and putting on the new and modern garments of spiritual and intellectual thoughts. She is striving. She is looking forward. She is searching for the new light. Valiantly she is going ahead and at every step she is removing her path new and unexpected stumbling-blocks thus she is paving the road for her sisters yet unborn. With the lantern of Baha-wllah in her hand, fearlessly she walks abroad while the night of ignorance is inky dark; the winds of prejudices howling; the hobgoblins of illiteracy intimidating; the fanaticism of the Mullahs surging; the nightmare of unexpected attacks growling; the powers of darkness surrounding and oriental nugatory staring {{p6}} in the eyes. But our “New Oriental Woman” like unto her “new occidental sister” has seen the light and her star-like destiny. With unwavering courage and indomitable energy she has resolved to reach her glorious destination and no power can stop her from achieving her exalted mission of ideal and practical emancipation. It is very clear that in the immediate future woman shall play a great role in the progress of civilization. There is a surging unrest in the woman’s world. The seed of the new ideals which have been sown in the soil of their hearts are beginning to push out their tender heads and soon they will grow and develop and produce luscious fruits. We are at the most interesting period of woman’s development. While they are acquiring virtues, studying sciences, equipping themselves with artistic careers and entering upon the field of active work, the old foundations are tottering, the old earth is passing away and the new heaven appearing. May the stars of this new heaven increase daily in brilliancy.

The difference between the Sufi system of thought and the Bahai revelation was dwelt on by the Master in detail in the most clear and logical manner. He quoted the philosophic apothegms of the Sufi leaders stating that the Sufi idea about God is pantheistic. The one supreme essence individualizing itself in all the succession of phenomena. One of them says: The creatures are as a mass of congealed ice, but God - the essence of God is the water. When the ice is thawed down - or when we shuffle off this mortal coil - it will become part of the water again. Another Sufi poet says: The sea - God - has been from time immemorial and is eternal but these contingencies and creatures are the waves and the ripples the reef.

{{p8}}

Another celebrated Sufi poet “Altar” portrays this idea of pantheism in a long wonderful poem called the “Parliament of Birds”. The poem is written allegorically. It is said that “Hodhod”, a very beautiful bird came one day to all the other birds and said, let us all gather together and make a pilgrimage to the mountain of “Gaff” - where the king of birds “Seymorg” dwells on a lofty peak. (Now “Seymorg” is a fabulous mythological bird in the ancient literature of Persia but it means literally 30 birds; “Sey” means 30, “Morg”, bird.) Then “Hodhod” sent out messengers to all parts of the world to announce the approaching departure of the birds for the Mountain of “Gaff”. Millions of birds joined the Caravan. At last they were ready and started on their long journey. They had to cross many waste deserts and many desolated valleys. They flew over many high mountains. For days they could get neither food nor water. {{p9}} Many of them died on the way and the rays of the Sun burned and scorched the wings and feathers of several thousand and they fell on the hot sand of the desert. Finally the large army was woefully decimated and only “30 birds” reached the mountain of “Gaff”. Having attained to the summit, they did not find any “Seymorg” but looking around they saw they were the “Seymorg” themselves.

Now it is evident that the Sufis believe in two stations - God and creatures. They express this pantheism in the simile of the sea and the waves. This is the foundation of the school of the Sufi philosophy which runs under various aspects throughout {{p10}} all the higher structures of their idealism philosophically. They consider all the phenomena as parts and parcels of God but limited in their own influences. For example they say, this single wave is limited but the ocean in comparison to the single wave is unlimited, nevertheless, the wave is part of the sea. This will naturally bring them to the preposterous declaration that the Eternal will become accidental and the Powerful, the weak. They say that the reality of divinity descends into the world appearing and reappearing under infinite forms. But the Bahais say there is God, the creatures and the medium. They state that the Reality of Divinity is Absolute Independence; if it comes within the circle of Necessity, it is not Divinity; the Reality of Divinity is Absolute Perfection but the creatures are pure imperfection. Consequently there are channels between God and man. These channels are the Holy Divine Manifestations. In short the Beloved spoke more along these lofty thoughts and as Mon. Richard had studied the Sufi School, he was most delighted with this subtle exposition.

Several friend entered with lovely bouquets of flowers. Amongst other things he said: I am very pleased with your meeting. I love those souls who are attracted and enkindled. As you are in this state, my heart is attracted to you. You must become like unto the flowers of fire. You must become as burning torches. You must teach the Truth. The more you are enkindled, the more you are set aglow with the Fire of the Love of God, and the more your holiness and sanctification, the lighter my load will it be. I have sown only one seed in Paris. Now you must irrigate it till it becomes a great harvest. You must be good farmers, spiritual scientific farmers. {{p12}} Tablet (Erased part) Bahais. Many (erased part) and he spoke to them for a long while. At five Mon. Dreyfus called and he went out with him to meet his mother. On his return he took me with himself to call on Rashid Pasha, the former governor of Syria. Here after talking on the current misfortunes of Turkey, he told the Pasha about his experiences in Calif, his lectures before various Societies and more interesting than anything else the accumulative incidents which led him to take the long trip to Calif and meet the friends there. The Pasha said: "This has been a great service to the world". Abdul Baha replied: This was through the Confirmations of God, otherwise I could not take such as long and arduous journey. I have done my duty. Now may God create the effect. We returned home and as there were present a few of the Persians the name of Prof. E. G. Browne was mentioned and he became the subject of discussion and his relation to the Bahai Cause.

{{p1}}

Dear Harriet!

The more one sits at the feet of the Master, the more one hears his wisdom and his Knowledge; the more one observes his godlike patience, the more one becomes in touch with his fire and enthusiasm; the more one realizes his infinite variety of experiences, the more one is charmed with the eloquence of his words, the directness of his appeal, the attraction of his smile, and the brilliancy of his ideals, the greater is one's admiration and wonder. How he wields the mighty sword of love, gaining fresh and new victories every day! How he makes happy those who are sorrowful! How he surrounds us with an atmosphere of spirituality! How he encourages us through the valley of distress and {{p2}} disappointment! How he inspires us when we are broken-winged! How he prays for us in the middle of nights! How he reveals to us the secret of power and success! How he shields us from all the errors of judgment! He is the unerring mind, the seeing heart, the hearing ear!

The sun rises in Paris very early and we get up with the seen, often about 4:30 and seldom later than 5'oclock. Thus we have 3 to 4 quiet hours without anyone calling upon us. Paris is differently constituted and we are not early callers like America. In fact the Master has addressed no meeting since his return from Germany; he has of course spoken informally to different groups gathered in his reception room in the hotel. These talks in a way reveal more of the Beloved to us, because they are the unconscious outpourings of his divine mind and heart. He has not been called upon to make any exertion. Naturally and beautifully a number of his devoted followers gather around him everyday-just as children gather around their dear father - and listen with rapt attention to his {{p3}} advices and heavenly Counsels. Around the Master there is an invisible, ineffable reality. You feel "at home" as soon as you enter his Presence. You may have had audience with all the emperors and Kings of the world, you may have spoken with all thinkers and philosophers of the age, you may have met all the spiritual lights of this century but as soon as you are in the Presence of Abdul Baha, you feel you are before a cyclonic force of spirituality not a man, not an extraordinary man, not even a miraculous man, but a superman. His spirit immediately captivates you, you are made a prisoner, you struggle to wave inside this influence but you are a captives, a prison, a bird in the cogent of his love to a freedman! You shall know the truth and the truth shall make {{p4}} you free. You have witnessed the truth face to face. Now you are really liberated. You are soaring in the immensity of the Love of God; You are travelling in the highroad of the Kingdom, you are up hold by a new power, you are inspired by a heavenly Presence. Nothing now, mothers! "Let me serve my fellowman" you say to yourself!" Let me go out and spread these principles amongst mankind! Let me decided myself to the Cause of universal Peace. I have no other ambition, no other thought except this. I have seen at last the Light that illumines the world of humanity! I have quaffed from the solubrious fountain of life. I have partaken of the heavenly Food. I feel the motion of new waves on the marmoreal sea of my existence. I witness the quick whirl and stir of new ideals in the unseen chambers of my heart. O observe the wafting of divine breezes through the interlaced branches of the tree of my being!" Thus you address yourself when you leave the Presence of Abdul Baha, praying to God to assist you in the fulfillment of these pledges! {{p5}} This morning the Beloved spoke to us on "how the countenance is the mirror of the heart." He said: If y u have the perception power, as soon as you look in the faces of the people, you can observe what ideals are reigning in their hearts. The other day I walked through the oneness but did not find one face reflecting the spiritual ideals of the heart. In American it was different. Mighty thoughts of philanthropy and illumined ideals of humanitarianism are set in motion and you find their reflections in the faces, because they were lodged in the hearts. One woman told me, she was working day and night to abolish the law of capital punishment; another person told me she desired to have a uniform inter-state divorce law; a third was devoting his time {{p6}} to the betterment of the conditions of criminals in the penitentiaries and the abolishes of capital punishment; another one was trying to introduce a new system of education etc etc. I found these noble ideals have permeated throughout all the classes of America. Civilized and refining influences are work. Everyone was thinking in terms of progress, and upward march. In the strictest sense of the word, there was no reactionary movement in America. What was called reactionary there will be radical progressions in other parts of the world.

In regard to answering the petitions which are received from the East and the West he said: " I read all of them but I have no time to send answer to each one. It is impossible. Some of the friends may think they are the only ones who write to me and so they wonder why they do not receive answers but it is simply beyond any human possibility to answer all the letters. The believers of God can write freely to Our Beloved at any time and under all circumstances but if they don't receive any answer; they must know he is praying for them and after all material correspondence is of n importance, and {{p7}} spiritual correspondence is continuous between them and the Master.

Mrs. Dreyfus brought for the master a very large bush of red roses. It is in the center of the salon. It is very beautiful and with the addition of other flowers our room has become a symbol of the heart of Abdul Baha a rose-garden-very fragrant.

About 10 o'clock a number of the friends gathered in the room. The Master asked from Mr. Holly when his book will be out of print? He said, about 4 weeks. The Beloved got silent and then he spoke: I was thinking that during the days of Christ not one word was written about him. We have at the present time 4 Gospels, two of these were {{p8}} written 60 yrs. after Christ; but today there are ever so many books written on the Bahai Cause, proving its authority and greatness. In this day, the most useful books are those which demonstrate the validity of the Cause with logical proofs, intellectual evidences and spiritual arguments. In answer to a question put by Mr. Holly the Master said: In the spiritual mirror, the virtues of the world of humanity are visible. Just as the intellectual law unravels the mysteries of phenomena, similarly the spiritual law acquires the ideal principles of humanity. Just as in the world of nature there is the “survival of the fittest”, likewise in the spiritual world there are the perfections of the divine realm. Just as order and peace are continued in a community through the strong hand of law, in the same manner the world of humanity exists through the acquirement of divine and spiritual virtues. The struggle for existence ensures the growth and development of the species; likewise the spiritual {{p9}} law secures the enfoldment and progress of the spirit.

In answer to another question he said: The Greatness prison is the material world. Prison is the antithesis of freedom. Now man is a prisoner of food, of sleep, of comfort and thousand other similar prisons. Therefore the material body of man is a prisoner of these things and he cannot fill himself from them. On the other hand, he is also a prisoner of greed, of rapacity, of tyro, of ill-feeling against others, of envy, of jealousy etc. He can free himself from these things. He is able to free his heart from the love of this world. He is able to release himself from anger, greed, ego, passion and all the vices of the material world. How {{p10}} is he enabled to free himself from these vices? He can render this service unto himself and then unto others through the influence of the Divine Law. The Divine Law warms man from falling precipices and frees him from the filters of self. Whereas formerly he was dark, he is made illumined. Whereas formerly he was limited, he becomes unlimited. Whereas formerly he was withered, he becomes enkindled. Whereas formerly he was blind, deaf and mute, he becomes seeing, hearing and the power of speech is given unto him. Whereas formerly he was dead, he becomes alive! This is the real freedom!

Someone asked about spiritual happiness. The Master answered: There are three paths through which man obtains spiritual happiness. The first path is the path of ordeals, trials and difficulties. His feet are torn with thorns and thistle, he goes through many pains and torments {{p11}} but finally he reaches his destination. The second path is a pleasant path but the traveller makes slow progress. He advances surely but slowly. Step by step he comes nearer and nearer to the goal. It may take many years but the persevering determined, cheerful traveller goes on and on. The third path is the path of faith. With one step the traveller finds himself in the Kingdom; even less than the twinkling of an eye the change is wrought. In one moment he travels from the world of negation into the world of affirmation. We have seen this with our own eyes. A man who has been the collective center of all the vices, having become a Bahai is changed completely in less than a second. He became another man. He entered a new world of light.

In answer to the questions of others he spoke in detail on the non-existence of

Time and Space, a very wonderful explanation which will take several pages to translate.

The last delights talk that I am going to translate here is “On the relative importance of the affairs of life.” He said: Different things are considered by us as of absolute importance at various stages of our development. For example when we were children, we considered “plays” as of absolute importance but now that we are grown up more important matters engage our attention. A little tooth ache may be considered as of absolute importance to some, which giving our life itself is of no importance whatsoever in the estimation of others. The martyrs in this Cause gave up their lives rejoicing without any hesitation but if a finger is pricked with a thorn we run to the Doctor and are worried and anxious about it. When the doll is broken the little girl mourns and laments {{p13}} as though her living child was dead but when she grows up she may herself break the doll.

Someone asked about the feelings of the martyrs; whether they were conscious of any pain when they were tortured. The Beloved answered: Baha-ullah in one of his Tablets says, therefore I will explain for your benefit certain luminous and shining mysteries, whereby you will become so attracted toward the loftiest station as to forget completely the world and all that contains therein. Then you will feel only the Presence of the Almighty. If you reach to this station you will be in the station of abstraction and you will see nothing else except God. When living in this great station, if the enemies tear you to pieces, you do {{p14}} not feel the pain and suffering. This is the station of “submersion.” It is as though man was submerged in the sea. He knows nothing of the outside conditions of life.

In short, the Beloved spoke on many subjects. Then he went out all alone and had a very long walk. In the afternoon many Persians came to see him and he kept them entertained with amusing stories of Acca life. I have seldom seen him enjoying himself so much. He spoke interrupted for several hours and he laughed and kept others laughing with humorous and funny stories. It was one of the few most enjoyable afternoons that we shall never forget. During these hours his humanity, his divine humor, his irresistible charm, his heavenly versatility, his inimitable loveliness, and his depth and breadth became more appreciated and better Known than any other occasions.

It is impossible to picture him when he is under the spell of these pleasant moods.

At eight o'clock in the evening a carriage was hired and he called me to his side we drove through Bois de Balogne and Champs Elysees. Having received letters from New York, giving the details of the convention, he discussed a great deal on the subject, asking me questions about the contents of the letters. He will no doubt write on this subject directly to the friends. I can say thus much that he was pleased with the general reports of harmony and unity which existed during the sessions of the Convention as well as the Feasts which were held in {{p16}} the homes of the friends.

Speaking about his western trip and the spread of the divine principles through Europe and American he said: In the future there will arise many souls who will promulgate the Cause of God but it was always my supreme desire to accomplish this service myself, to cry the word of ya Baha El Abha in all the gatherings and to attract all the people to the Kingdom of the Blessed Perfection. Praise be to God that I have performed my duty!

Ahmad.

{{p1}}

Future generations will receive comfort inspiration from the words and deeds of Abdul Baha for he is the inspirer of the hearts. Through him we are enabled to accomplish any task. With his encouragement we can achieve divine victories and crown our life with spiritual success. His good-pleasure is of a value greater than all the gold of the earth; he is more faithful and loving than all the inhabitants of the globe. His love is assuredness; his compassion all-encircling; his benevolence incomparable.

Every day I am more than we thankful in these permitting me to be with him and to receive the gracious joy of his Presence. Words are such poor vehicles to express the emotions of the heart. What I do is so less little less than nothing compared to what my heart wishes to do.

To drink tea with the Master is to drink the nectar of life. How sweet his voice sounds when he calls us every morning no sooner tea is set before him by the ever faithful Sayad Assadullah: Mirza Ahmad, Mirza Mahmaud, Come and have tea! Then we enter his room. He pours tea with his own hand, offering us the cup, and speaking according to his pleasure.

He said a proposal of a suggestion: This cannot be done. In everything I must use a thousand considerations. Even when I breathe, I must first think, whether I should breathe on the right or on the left.

A few of the friends came in. One of them know Mrs. Stannard who is now living in Egypt and serving the Cause of God. The Master praised her activities in the Movement. He said: She has dedicated her life to the service of the world of humanity. She has no other thought except this. She works very faithfully. When I lived in Alexandria I could see her almost daily doing her work most sincerely.

He spoke about the believers in Germany; he showed their {{p4}} pictures to the friends who were present and said that their faces were illumined, their faith is strong and their future assured!

There was a friend in the meeting from Scotland and the Beloved addressing her said: We have many friends in Scotland; many devoted friends; amongst them is Mrs. Whyte. I was most pleased with my visit to that country. Scotland weather is very invigorating. The City of Edinburgh is beautiful and its inhabitants progressive and deeply religious. Thesis is firm and strong character. They are thirsty for spiritual water. They are not dogmatic but they feel a heartfelt sincerity about their religion. This is good. They have a deep sense for spiritual ideals. While there, they asked me many questions; and several large meetings were organized and we delivered addresses. The people of Edinburgh are intelligent and critical. They investigate. They do not accept their questions were dignified and based upon a desire to learn.

A meeting was held in Mrs. Whyte's house for the Oriental students. They were from China, Japan, Persia, India, Turkey, Syria, Arabia, etc. It was a wonderful demonstration of the universe of the East and of the West. These were strong, purposeful young men. Another meeting was organized by the Esperantists and one by the Theosophists. Both these meetings were marvelous. Mr. Page the Secretary of the Esperanto Association and Mr. Graham Paale, the General Secretary of the Theosophical Society was most intelligent and sympathetic. They were very kind and hospitable. In short I met many people in Edinburgh whom I shall never forget. There are certain souls whose thirst is never alloyed, while others are satisfied with one {{p6}} drop. The larger the vase the greater its capacity to hold water, but when the vase is small, there will be very little water in it. When his holiness Christ appeared, the Jews said: 'We have enough water in our vases. We do not need the fountain of Christ. We have been blessed with many prophets during the Jewish history. These prophets have been the divine Cup-bearers. We have quaffed the pure water from their hands. Are we going to run after this new spring? But those souls who were really blessed and glorious they drunk deeply from the fountain of Christ and yet were they thirsty, yet were they seeking. His Hahness Baha-ullah, says in one of his Tablets; if you drink all the seas of the earth there must be no sign of witness on your lips. You must be always thirsty for the water of significances. The more the circle of your information is widened, the greater must become your search. Only through this open attitude man will become {{p7}} perfect, but a soul whose cup is filled with a few drops will never become perfect.

He spoke on how Christ always spoke with his disciples in parables and gone in his own simple language the parable of the Feast and the imitations sent to all the great people and how each one gave an excuse for not being able to be present and how the Lord sent through the highways and byways to gather and bring the poor people. Also he gave the parable of the farmer and the sowing of the seeds on the rock, on the brackish ground and on the pure ground. All these illustrations show that capacity is necessary. We must plough the ground of our hearts so that the divine {{p8}} seeds may grow therein. In order to show that without capacity even the breaths of the holy Spirit will not assist related the following story: There is a story attributed to Christ in the oriental literature that is not found in any of four gospels. It is reported that our day a number of people saw Christ flying away with great haste. They asked him, why are you hurrying away? He did not give them any answer but continued to run. Finally they caught him in his flight and told him. Why this haste? Are you flying away from a lion or a panther or a leopard or a wolf or a bear? There are no such wild beasts in this vicinity and we do not see any reason for this precipitations flight! Then Christ said 'I am flying away from a fool.' They were astonished at this declaration. 'Are you not the Christ? Blow them the Power of the Holy Spirit over this fool man and, he will become wise. Christ said: "With the same breath {{p9}} of the Holy Spirit that I blew over the ignorant and he became lamed; the deaf found hearing; the blind seeing, the mute speaking, the sick became well and the dead received a new Life. I blew the same breath of the holy Spirit more than one thousand times over this fool and there was no result; consequently I am flying away from him.

Some one asked the meaning of the miracle of the five loaves, the twelve remains baskets and the feeding of the multitude. It answered : His holiness Christ said: I am the bread which has come down from heaven. Again he said: whosoever eats of this bread, he shall find a new life. The heavenly Food is the divine virtues of the world of humanity. {{p10}} In other word, he said: I am the infinite Bestowal; whosoever takes a good show of me he shall never die. It is evident that his holiness Christ was a pure channel for the diffusion of the Bounties of God amongst humanity. He was the one who spread these Bestowels. He made the fisherman the great Peter. We can understand these symbolic teachings better when we remember another saying of Christ: the Father is in me and I am in you. Now it is clear that the physical body of Christ was not in the apostles; nay rather they received from him the heavenly Bestowals. The sun shining upon the mirror and its disk heat and rays are reflected therein, so that mirror can truthfully claim; I am the sun. In other words, the Sun of Reality with all its characteristics was reflected upon the transparent mirror of Christ sliding before Christ were observes the mirrors of his disciples. Now by a process of radiation, the reflection of the Sun of Reality upon the mirror of Christ was in turn reflected upon the mirrors of the apostles.

With this manifest explanation you can better understand the meaning of the verse: The father is in me and I am in you. In short the heavenly Food signifies divine perfections. The five loaves are the five stages of inner enfoldment; the second stage is spiritual illumination. The third stage is the prophet's experience; the fourth stage is the baptism of the Holy Spirit and the fifth stage is the Divine Bestowals. With these five loaves the multitude were fed and satisfied; but the 12 apostles were the twelve baskets which were "filled" with the heavenly Food- that is their hearts became the recipients {{p12}} of all the five stages of spiritual food, which the multitude were fed only on one or two Kinds. In the estimation of Christ, this material bread had no importance, but to spread the heavenly Table before the eyes of all the inhabitants of the earth was the most important. This material bread sustains us only from day to day but the heavenly food bestowals upon us eternal life. Therefore you must ever strive to eat of the divine bread in order to join the life everlasting. Do not see after a drop of water but search after the illimitable sea. Let the spark go and draw light from the sun whose rays and beaten perpetual.

Another Bahai asked about the meaning of the miracle of wine performed at the marriage feast and the Master again gave a long exposition on the subject.

In the afternoon Rasheed Pasha called and later several French Bahais. The Beloved spoke with them, in details on the awakening of the {{p13}} French people out of the slumber of spiritual tarpon. He gave them a powerful electrifying talk that had I time I would have translated it here but space does it allow. At five o'clock Mirza Fazlallah, the brother of Doctor Younoss Khan of Tlheran came to see the Master with his newly-wedded French wife. The Master greeted them cordially and with happiness radiating from his face: you are welcomed; you are welcome! I am most pleased with your marriage. For this is a marriage between the East and the West. The more inter-marriage between the Europeans, Americans and Persians the better for the world! I like to see intermarriages between the inhabitants of these parts of the world increasing. In our country whenever there is a long-standing {{p14}} feud between two tribes, in order to remove it they inter marry. In reality, it has a wonderful effect. In Persia there are many of the nomadic tribes who pass all their lives under the tent, in the open air. Often between two tribes there has existed enmity and hatred for many years. They have fought against each other; pillaged each other's project, and people were killed on both sides. Now if an outside disinterested influence came in and try to reconcile these two contending parties he will use the same old eternal rule. The son of the chief of one tribe will marry the daughter of the chief of the other tribe. Immediately enmity is changed into anxiety and hatred into love. This rule has been tried again and again and has not been found wanting! It has a great efficacy. Now that the Persians and the Americans, the Americans and the Persians, the Europeans and the Persians and the Persians and the Europeans have begun to give daughters and sons into each other, I hope that the {{p15}} bond of affection and unity between the East and the West will be reinforced and spiritual communication many living them into closer relationships. May this union flood the unexplored regions of the hearts with the rays of the Love of God! May such happy events hasten the day of the oneness of the world of humanity! Every movements which increases love and affection amongst the children of men is a divine movement and any Cause creating alleviation or even ill-feeding is diabolic in origin. In reality the world of humanity is one family but these ignorant fellows have come and divided it into French and German, Austrian and Italian. Persia and Arabs etc. How sweet will it be to {{p16}} see the French marrying with the English the English with the German and Vega versa. This will be the means of a greater and more lasting unity, agreement and concord. God has created all the female. Therefore marriage is a divine and natural institute. There is no celibacy in the Bahai Cause. I am msot pleased with your union and I hope that in the utmost of Kindness, you shall live together the rest of your days. May you be ever happy and the means of comfort and joy be ever prepared for you. May God pour upon you His blessing and shower you with His benediction! You will be always under the shelter of the Almighty! And you will be encircled with his preservation.

After this in his company we called on His Excellency the Persian Ambassador. He talked on many subjects with him. This was also a rare accessories. On our return we took quite a walk through the various avenues, the Beloved ever teaching me and giving me heavenly lessons for the guidance of my future in the Cause.

Dear Harriet!

High is as heaven, higher is the character of Abdul Baha! Brilliant are as the stars in the firmament, more brilliant are the stars of the life of Abdul Baha! Salubrious is as the water of the cool spring, more salubrious is the water of the Teachings of Abdul Baha! Tempestuous is as the great sea more tempestuous is the great sea of the utterances of Abdul Baha! Intoxicating is as the Burgundian wine, more intoxicating is the wine of the Love of Abdul Baha! Inspiring is as the association of the holy men, more inspiring is the association with Abdul Baha! Fruitful is as the tree of the orchard, more fruitful is the tree of the existence of Abdul Baha! Fragrant are as the sweet anemones {{p2}} and hyacinths of the rose-garden, more fragrant are the flowers of the mercy and tenderness of Abdul Baha! Refreshing is as the gentle Zephyr of the early haven, more refreshing is the Zephyr of the humanity of Abdul Baha! Life giving are as the rays of the phenomenal sun, more life-giving are the rays of the ideal sun of Abdul Baha! Clear and transparent is as the mirror, more clear and transparent is the mirror of the heart of Abdul Baha! Torrential is as the rain, more torrential is the rain of the Bounties of Abdul Baha! Beautiful and iridescent is as the rain, how in heaven, more beautiful is the rainbow of the Covenant of Abdul Baha! Deep is as the ocean, deeper is the ocean of the Knowledge of Abdul Baha! Scintillating are as the precious jewels, more scintillating are the jewels of the Graces of Abdul Baha! Glorious and shimmering is as the Sunrise, more glorious is the sunrise of the wonders of Abdul Baha! Heart-entrancing is as the music of the great Artist, more soul-captivating is the spiritual voice of Abdul Baha!

This morning the Master sent me down town to attend to some business and it was long after noon when I return and found several believers in the room waiting their turn to be receive by here. I him. I heard his voice in my heart was glad. He was explaining to Mon. Dreyfus the Pathway of the disciples of Christ and how they sacrifice everything in order to promote his teachings!

Apropos of the contents of a letter just receive he said: In this Cause of God there is no secret doctrine or secret society or club or gathering. I want you to be impressed with {{p4}} the importance of this fact; that there is no secret doctrine in this Cause at all. If some secret gatherings are held or organized, they will harm the Cause more than benefit it. Even if the intentions of the present organizer of such secret societies are pure, it is not good. The door of the cause is open. No one must even harbor the idea of forming any secret Society in the Cause. This will be a detriment to the movement.

In the afternoon an English lady called and he spoke briefly on his trip in London, Liverpool, Clifton and Edinborgh and invited her to come again to the meetings.

The Persian Ambassador called on the Beloved and for a hour they talked with each other. It was about half past six when he called on Mrs. and Miss Sanderson. He again thanked them for their services tend hospitability intended {{p5}} to Rouha Khanour and Rezwaweli Khanour and stayed there for half an hour. He came out and for more than an hour we walked through the avenues. I followed him and he ever so kindly speaking on the Cause, on the principle of activity and self-sacrifice. Returning home he had his supper and returned to his room.

This was an American day. American must rejoice because the Eyes of the Beloved have turned toward that region. The words of wisdom like unto the white pearls fell from his golden lips. Many Tablets were revealed for the believers, each one a shining crown of the friends. If we could appreciate but dimly the heavenly value of his Tablets we would soar with joy and happiness toward the apex of the everlasting glory. The only way we can show our appreciation is to arise with greater firmness and steadfastness and {{p2}} herald the coming of the Kingdom. If we continue to be firm in the Cause, God will surround us with His divine Blessings! Nothing on the face of the earth must shake our faith. Let us rise higher and higher! Backward? No indeed! Why should we look backward? Forward? Yes! Always forward, friends! The star of human brotherhood is shining ahead of us and not behind! The fountain of spiritual life is in front of us and not on our back! Which way our Beloved is looking? Are not his teachings ahead of time? Is he not telling us constantly to work for the day when justice and peace shall reign on the earth as it is in heaven. Let all the critics of the world distort the truth; the truth will become straight again. The moon shall not stop to shed its silvery beams upon the beautiful scenes calm night, because the dogs are barking. The {{p3}} precious jewels will not become crockeries, because someone through maliciousness calls them so. The cooling water gushing forth out of the breast of the mountain will not be considered as muddy because someone thinks it is. God has given us intelligence so that we may test everything with our own reason and not rely upon hearsays. The diamond will not become thistle; the truth will not become false head, even if a million people believe that they will. So far as I am concerned servitude at the Threshold of Abdul Baha is my greatest crown. No one can rob me of this {{p4}} nor any can take it away from me. Let others gain fame. I love to lose mine in his path. Let others accumulate gold, but let me share in the riches of his Kingdom. In this Holy Cause we must become pure, evanescent, humble and lowly. The least trace of envy, jealousy or ill-feeling shall cast us out of the Kingdom. If we are commanded to love the whole world, how much more must we be loving, to our own spiritual brothers and sisters? O God, O God! I must ever pray, a new heart give unto me! A new consciousness grant me! A new spirit confer upon me! I am weak make me strong! I am poverty-striker, make me rich, through Thy heavenly Treasury! If I have Thy good pleasure, the criticism of the whole world will not sadden me; but if I am ashamed to stand in Thy Presence, the praises and commendations of all the people will not me firmness and resolution!

I have just received a copy of “La Revuo”; Esperants magazine of May containing not only the translation of the Esperanto Address in Paris but a very interesting article on the Bahai Movement. One every two month, this Magazine will publish a most valuable Tablet of Baha-ullah, or an address of Abdul Baha, always in Esperante. “La Revuo” is the only Magazine that carries Dr. Zamenhoff’s articles.

I always liked to write something about one of our most devoted Bahais in Paris. This person happens to be Miss Chevalier, a French believer. She is very charming, very sincere, very quiet. I have heard her read the French hidden words in the meetings and immediately I liked her, because {{p6}} she reads with so much earnestness and sweetness. Cowardly she looks very much like one of Davis’ girls in Chicago. Those who have had the good fortune of meeting them Know how devoted they are in the Cause and how happy were they the last time the Beloved attended a Feast in their home. They were like surcharged batteries of divine joy! I shall never forget that heavenly night in Chicago! What holy and spiritual experiences have been our shares in this glorious Cause! May God grant us a celestial vision to cherish these important events in their true bearing’s. This morning Miss Chevalier came to see the Master. He told her: What I admire in you is your firmness in the Cause! Although you have had many things to discourage you, yet through them all you have weathered the worst storms. I love people, who are firm in any case, whether national or spiritual. Bravo! Bravo! that you have stood like a soldier in your past! There are some people who are like weather cocks! They turn their faces <7> toward any direction the winds happen to blow! Those who are active and will ever remain active in the Cause, shall win the crown of the Everlasting Glory! Let nothing discourage you! Be fearless! Turn all thy attention toward the Kingdom of Abha! Speak about the Cause. Raise thy voice in meetings and assemblages! Try this and thou shalt stand amazed at the results! Thou shalt observe how the confirmations of the Kingdom of Abha are encircling thee! Never mind if thou hast not spoken before! Open thy tongue in the praises and glorifications of Thy Lord! I shall pray for thee that thou mayst become a heavenly daughter, a radiant angel, a herald of the Kingdom and a gleaming star in the horizon of Abha!

To another French Bahai he said: The world of matter is full of vices and the people of these regions are engaged too much in chasing material things. They are thinking too much of money and the tinsels and play things they can buy with it. The precious hours of the day and the night are devoted to thinking and speaking in terms of France; what should they eat today; how can they buy that especial dress tomorrow; when can they go to the ballroom and have a dizzy whirl around; what time can they attend the latest sensation in the theatrical world! If these people are so captivated in the claws of senses, they are less than the animals. God has distinguished man through his spiritual and intellectual powers. He has conferred upon him the invisible forces of conception and ideation - so that he may become celestial, just, intelligent, and attracted to the Kingdom of God! You must make these people understand {{p9}} these ideal principles so that they became aware and mindful! Tell them: you have tried the material world and intriguing its seductive pleasures; now come, and travel with us for a while through the spiritual world. If the experiences are pleasing, continue to travel with us; if they are not you can return easily to your ways. Let us together fly toward the realm of light; if the lights are too strong for you, you may come back to your black cell. How do you like this of teaching plan? Is that a good bargain? This way speaking you to the materialists. But address the religionists as follow: O ye people! How long, how long are ye submerged in deep slumber! O ye brothers! How long, how long are ye satisfied with traditions and dogmas! The Sun of Rightheousness has arisen

Awake ye! The morn of Eternity has appeared! shake off from your bodies this spiritual lethargy. The portals of the celestial Kingdom are open, enter ye therein! The divine Treasury is rediscovered, enrich yourselves! The Merciful Graces are all encircling, avail the opportunity! Awake! Awake! This is the day of wakefulness and not sleep! This is the century of deeds and not words! This is the age of production and not sterility. This is the period of conflagration and not extinction! This is the time of contagious enthusiasm and not luke warmth. Gird ye up the lions of endeavor, band ye together! Be ye loving towards each other! Banish, banish the nightmare of differences and ill-feeling. Your maker has created, you for love's sake! Arise, arise, for the glorious Luminary has arisen and has healing in its royal wings! Be ye as balls of fire! Be ye as torches of guidance! Increase your love daily! Add to your affection hourly! Ye are the children of God and the has endowed you with the possibilities of infinite progress.

In the afternoon Gaemmagam and Entezamas - Saltanah came to see our Beloved. After drinking tea and enjoying a most beautiful talk from his heavenly tongue, he invited them to a drive through the Bois de Balogne. At first I thought I will be deprived of the dear privilege of accompanying them but then the Master sent Enteza-Mas Salteneh wonderful, wonderful drive! I had never enjoyed anything exactly like this. It takes my breath away whenever I think I am sitting face to face with the Light of the world! The park was luxuriantly green, the flowers were entrancingly beautiful, the lakes were dotted with pleasure-boats and their fairy-like occupants, the tall trees were dreamily verdant. The automobile drove through the most delightful tunnels of trees. I was fairly floating {{p12}} on the shimmering sea of Happiness. From the depth of my heart I wished all the Believers were with us there and then and hear the Beloved talk on Baha-ullah. He told us three stories; one about his early childhood; another about Baha-ullah and the third a romantic, most artistic and postural story about the charming custom of the lover and loved one in Mazanderan. I wish I had time to incorporate these three-original stories in this letter but like many other things I relegate them to the future. I hope I will have time to write a little book especially on the stories as told by Abdul Baha! Wouldn't that be interesting! I have already more than a hundred stories tucked up in my note books! Stories which I would have gladly shared them with you had I have more time to write them out. But I think at this time his life-giving utterances on spiritual subjects are of more benefit than the stories. What do you think? {{p13}} On our return we took a walk through Rue Lauriston, Avenue Bois de Balogue, back to Eloile and then through avenue Kleber to the hotel.

Tonight Mon. and Madame Richard came and from 8 to 11 o'clock a most wonderful discussion flowed back and forth on the proofs of the existence of God, on divine philosophy, on Sufism, on pantheism. I have the notes of this significant conversation in my share it with me. The Master recited other logical and irrefutable evidences about the existence of divinity which were not in the talk that I sent you sometimes ago.

Although God has perfected {{p14}} his bounties for us. We have nothing to murmur against! His spiritual and material generosity have enveloped us. Now in order to be faithful to him and to his noble - exalted Teachings, let us all do our best and promote as for and as wildly as possible.

America! Always America! America is getting the lion's share of spiritual Knowledge and divine wisdom! The Persian Bahais who have done so much, who have sacrificed everything for the sake of the Cause seldom get in these days any Tablets. Stacks of letters arrive from the Oriental countries and are left unanswered; but since our departure from America is more than one hundred and fifty Tablets have been revealed, translated and mailed to the United States. Is not this a most manifest sign of Abdul Baha's divine Love for the inhabitants of those regions? {{p2}} There are Bahais in Persia who will gladly give up everything if they could receive just one lines from the Master and this is not an exaggeration! The America Bahais must truly appreciate the inestimable value of these heavenly gifts! Every Tablet is a fountain of divine Knowledge and a rose-garden in which the hyacinths and anemones of Love Grow and spread their Fragrances, a celestial Table on which is prepared all Kinds of delicious; and a most priceless heritage to posterity. Let those who are fortunate to get Our Beloved's Tablets protect and take good care of them, as the apples of their eyes. The descendants of the present Bahais will feel proud because in their houses will be found the Tablets of Abdul Baha.

This morning after the revelation of many Tablets for America the Master rested and later received the friends in his room. Mrs. Lilianthal and Mrs. Beede. He told them about the wonderful spirituality of the Bahai meetings in Persia, how the believers love each other, how they are devoted to the Cause, and how they cooperate and assist each other. He expressed the hope that such divine and illumined gatherings may be established all over America, that the friends in those parts may show to all the people of the world that they are the embodiments of unity and the personifications of disinterested love. {{p4}} To another person he said: God has created man so that he may advance along all the degrees of progress. If such a state exists! He will become successful, he will obtain eternal joy; he will not be withered and unhappy. He will be always young and fresh.

To a mother he said: How are your children? Are they well? Do you give them an ideal education? The children of today are the citizens of tomorrow. The mothers of today inculcate so many material ideas in the minds of their children in the way of encouragement; Study hard and shall become the general of an army. They do not incite them in the acquirement of the ideal virtues. They do not tell them: 'Strive that you may become a sincere, just now; that you may serve faithfully the world of humanity.' It is in the power of a mother to educate {{p5}} her child in such wise that he may be the leader amongst the leaders or let him grow amidst such depressing environments as to become the worst criminal! Now you (addressing all the room) are all my own children. I desire to educate you in such wise as to become illumined, divine and godlike; day unto day you may advance; your conduct and character may improve, your spiritual perception may increase and your minds become more radiant. May each one of you become as an ignited lamp, shedding the rays of wisdom to all the dark corners and crevices! {{p6}} Consider the condition of the people! From morning til evening, they run hither and thither, working and laboring, sweating and striving! All their thoughts are weighed by the measures of Frames. The man who has one hundred Frames does his utmost to make it a thousand; the person who has one thousands works like a bearer to make it ten thousand. The ten thousand man has his eyes fixed on a million; and the millionaire with the greatest avidity longs to become a mutli-millionaire. All of them are submerge in this sea of insatiable hunger for gold. Let me get all I can out of the other fellow” is the universal dictum. What is the end of it all? At last he leaves behind his accumulated wealth and goes away empty handed. But if such a man was imbued with spiritual characteristics he would have become the light of the world and the guide of the nations. All that you see is subject to change. Where is the {{p7}} living, fire-breathing, past generation? Where is Napoleon, the Great with his Austerity victory and Moscow Retreat? Where are the unconquerable phalanxes of his Imperial guards? Where are the long lines of the French Kings? Where are the many Louises? Where are the children of Orleans? Where are the descendants of Philipppines? All, all gone! They have walked through the wilderness of oblivion and the valley of the shadow of death.

Speaking about the future of the Cause in Paris he said: The present indifference shall be replaced by a great enthusiasm; the call of Abha shall be raised from every house and the Banner of “Ya Baha El Abha” shall become unformed from the top of every home. Rest {{p8}} ye assured of this.

To a number of French Bahais he said: Day and night strive and teach. Do ye not rest for one moment? Organize meetings. Deliver speeches in the gatherings. Speak with eloquence and fluency of tongue. Proclaim: O ye French people! How long are ye sleep upon the couch of ease! How long do you prefer unbelievers of the beliefs! How long are ye in advertent! The divine Shepherd has come to you. To not run in the joins of the wolves. The real shepherd loves you and desires to gather you in one flock. Do not fly away from him. The celestial Orb is shining. The Sun of Reality is in the meridian. The rain of Bestowal is pouring down! Are ye yet sleep? Consider what an eternal Sovereignty was founded by those came beneath the shadow of the True One! How many Queens have come into this world and after a few years their names and fame entirely forgotten. But the Queenship of Mary Magdelaine {{p9}} is yet eternal in the Kingdom of Christ.

Today he was invited to lunch in the house of Mon and Madame Dreyfus. At one o'clock he came with his automobile and took him there. At five returned and took me with himself for a long walk through the avenue Kleber, avenue Victor Hugo etc. Returning home he felt quite tired. He ate very little, - a glass of milk and retired to his room. Thus another divine day lapsed into the past, never to return again but ever living in the memory, even after death.

We are receiving interesting about the New York Convention. Miss Hart who attended all the sessions was in the meeting tonight at Mon. Dreyfus and spoke on her impressions of the Feasts the meetings etc. She expressed the greatest pleasure at knowing Mrs Kring, Mrs Kinny. Miss Thompson, yourself and many other Newyork Bahais. She praised the spirit of unanimity and enthusiasm. We were that most happy to hear from one who has been actually present. {{p2}} We have not yet received the official report of the Convention, but hope to receive it soon. I have also received quite a number of newspaper clippings on the subject and some of them I read to the Master.

This morning the Beloved received the callers privately. It is evident that an individual receives more spiritual uplift and inspiration by meeting him alone the presence of any other person. In this manner they open to him their hearts ask any question they have in mind and carry back with themselves an irrevocable impression of beauty, spirituality and holiness. One of those who called on him was Miss B. Erwin. She asked many questions about the ninety names of Gods I of which are mentioned in the Koran; about {{p3}} the detached letters in the beginnings of several chapters in the Koran; about the "four holy months" in the Mohamadan calendar and about the ideal significances of the various organs of the body etc. The Master patiently and sweetly gave full answers to their interesting questions. Miss Erwin is a girl of unusual talent. She has studied the Oriental religious literature, especially its mystic and philosophic aspect. She recites well and writes fine poems. She is now a devoted Bahai. She asked what practical work she can do for the movement. He said: Spread the Glad tidings. Teach the Cause. Dedicate as much of thy time as that cause to the promotion {{p4}} of the word of God. I will pray for thee that like into a torch thou mayst burn with the Fire of the Love of God. Teach the Cause. This is the most practical and most important work of the day. In the afternoon Miss Hogdson dropped in and told the Master of an interesting letter written in the Christian Commonwealth by a woman. Sh has one son and writes that she has one son and one daughter. As she is not wealthy she has wrough money to put his son through the university but having read the teaching of Abdul Baha that the education of the girls is of more importance, she is in adilemma and does not know what to do? The Master laughed heartily over the situation and told Miss Hadgson to write to this lady: Educate thy daughter because later on she will become a mother and will be able {{p5}} to train well your grand children. If you educate her, it means you have educated many. The mothers are the real educators of the human race. The importance of this great fact is not yet fully known. It is the sun of all the questions of this age. Then Mon. Dreyfus come and took him to call on Ronha Khanom. He returned about seven o'clock.

A propos of something he said: Whosoever schemes in this Cause will come to no good end. Above all other things are must be honest to over consciences and not dissimulate. {{p6}} We must not speak against each other either publicly or privately. We must not belittle the services rendered by others because they are not so fortunately situated as ourselves. We must be humble. We must not have the spirit of destructive criticism. Before making any statement we must investigate it first thoroughly, whether it is true or not. We must not make the hearts of others sad. We must speak with gentleness and brotherliness. We must not backbite. We must speak about each other with consideration and infinite courtesy. We must adorn our temples with extreme politeness. We must not be rude to any human being. We must judge the people by their inward word, spiritual qualities. Let no one raise his tongue in intentional or unintentional malice against his brother or sister. We must watch our tongues. This Cause is great {{p7}} and the circle of our patience must be very wide. Let every man write this sentence 'Watch thy tongue on the tablet of his heart. Let me relate to you a story which shows you more than anything else that we must ever look beyond the outward appearance and form and judge a person by his spiritual worth. After the appearance of the Bab the disciple who succeeded him was called "Baha-el Bab". The believers of God at that time gave him the greatest homage and respect. When Baha-el Bab was in the fortress of Tabarassi surrounded by thousands of enemies, Khuddus another great teacher was in the company of the 360 Babis who were to be seized in this fortress. No one gave any {{p8}} importance to Khuddus, He was one amongst the brothers. No one looked upon him with any deference. He mingled with all the friends and always when Bab-el Bab was sitting he was standing reverently before him. However one day there was observed a great change. The friends found Khuddus sitting and Bab-El Bab standing before him far away near the door. Of course every one was astonished. Then Bab-El Bab addressing the believers said in hushed voices. I did not know before the station of Khuddus. Tonight I realize that I am less than the dust under his feet. "From that time on he served Khuddus like a servant and later on Khuddus receiving a fracture of tooth through the passing of a rifle cartridge, Bab-El Bab came to him and begged him to let him go out of the fortress and sacrifice his life in his path and he did so.

Dear Harriet!

When Miss Hart gave an interesting account of the meeting and sessions of the Convention he was very pleased and then he said: - "Praise is to God that in many American cities the Divine summons is raised and the glad-tidings of the Kingdom of Abba are heard. In the future it will become illumined!" She mentioned the names of the many united Bahais and their messages of love and devotion. {{p2}} While Miss Hart was present, Mrs Noel came in. She was welcomed by the Master. She had heard about the cause but had never seen him. As soon as she entered her face and carriage impressed me as a woman of intellectual power and ability. She said to the Master that she has a clear comprehension of religion as an intellectual fact but not as a spiritual reality. She has come this morning to his Half Presence and is seeking the illumination of the heart. The more your faith grow in Baha-allah, the greater will be the illumination of your heart because the spirit of man is strengthened and reinforced through the utterances and the love of Baha-allah. Just as the body receives force through food, so the spirit is in need of the spiritual food. What is the food of the spirit? It is the love of God and the Knowledge of God, the praiseworthy. Endeavor that you may adorn thyself with these heavenly virtues, be attracted to the Kingdom of Abba and arise with the greatest joy to serve your fellowmen, as long as your aim is pure joy shall become confirmed. If our object is unselfish, we must feel assured that the highest desire of our heart shall be obtained. I will pray for you.....My prayers are something universal and sometimes special. I will specially pray for you. She was made very happy and wept with joy. She said "after I have glimpses of truth but at other times I am left in darkness." The Master said :-" you must strive to enter into the spiritual state and be established in the Kingdom. Once these, you are eternally submerged in a sea of light. There will be no unhappiness and no sadness. She asked about renunciation. Do we attain to the state of renunciation after we have realized God and his powers or we must renounce our desires before our attainment to this spiritual condition? "The Master said: -"First we must make ourselves receptive, then the bounties of God descend upon us. The mirror must become clear from rust first then the sun with all its glory will be reflected therein. Prepare your apartment first before you invite the guests. Therefore, first we must become severed and detached then we will obtain the divine Bounties. Renunciation or severance does not mean to suppress you and sensuous much feelings to shun the activities of life and to shift the responsibilities that God has laid upon our shoulders. It means to overcome the dark powers of nature, to be free from the promptings of self, to become a governor over one's ego and the passions, to let the susceptibilities of the spirit rule over the body. This is the meaning of renunciation. In short, man must become a radiant being and a heavenly spirit.

Several other people came and then he spoke to them privately. They came out of his room with joyful faces. In the afternoon three very important Persians called on the Master Fayyad Assadullah prepared tea and till 5'oclock he was speaking with them on Persia, Turkey etc. He sent us to Mr Scoth's meeting and he went out to walk alone.

{{p5}}

On our return from the meeting, he called on Miss Sanderson to inquire about her Mother's health. In the course of conversation he praised very much the Persians. She speaks quite clearly. "Shape,"he said you will study the Persian language to the extent of writing letters and comparing poems. There I will send you to Persian. This will be most wonderful you have the power of composition and style. Memorize the poems of Baba Allah. All the old Bahais know that I have never studied Arabic. I have not taken one lesson in Arabic. No one may believe this but there are still some believers living who hear testimony to this fact. Yet my arabic, both written and spoken is the masterpiece all over the East. I will tell how I became to know Arabic. when I was very, very young, I found in our house in Teheran a large voluminous book containing many in Arabic prayers revealed by the Baba and copied by Baba -allah. I had such a longing that I used to read the contents of this book all the time. Often I would get up in the middle of night, light the candle and then read and read this book without understanding its meaning. The effect of those prayer was so great that I would weep over them. all of a sudden I observed that I could understand the significance of the book without being laugh by any soul. He returned to the hotel and I look the sheet and went to the East station to welcome {{p6}} Miss Fanny Knoblock who has travelled from Shettfort to meet the Master. The train arrived at 9.20 and by previous arrangement I took her to the International hotel who Miss Lilianthat and Mrs Beede are living. They were waiting in the reception room to greet her. She will come to see the Master tomorrow and may stay in Paris till Saturday then she will return to Sheetfort to be with her sister for two weeks and after that back to America. I hope she will go by way of New York so that you may hear her speak shout her experiences in Germany and France. when I returned to the hotel the Master was up and speaking with the Persians. He had made them laugh all night. they were all in food humor.

Dear Harriet!

The other day the Beloved received a lovely letter from Mr. and Mrs. Stark of Budapest in answer to his wonderful Tablet! He has revealed for them another Tablet but herein I like to quote a portion of their letter which to me is an indication to their faith and assurance. It is as follow:-“The revelation you were so exceedingly kind to communicate to us contains the most welcome blessing for our souls, which are craving after Love and Spirituality and is giving also a powerful encouragement to us to offer our humble personalities as channels for the Love of God. We pray you to accept our deepest thanks for these heavenly bestowals. It is not ours to thank you for your coming to our city. Now we, but hidden powers incomparably greater than ours brought about this historic event, But we may be allowed to rejoice that we have been found worthy to be chosen as a mouth piece for the call of a striving group of souls. The consciousness of our vocation shall give eloquence to our speech and fluency to our pen. We pray ardently for the aid of Baha El Abha!”

Is not this a simple direct beautiful letter flowing from the heart? How great is to live in this day and receive the Knowledge of God direct from its pure source! The privilege is so wonderful, the blessing is so divine, the thought is so sublime that we can hardly realize it! Like unto the fish we are swimming in the sea of spiritual Favors! Wherever we look we behold the signs of His Love and Benevolence! We are soaring in the etherial regions of light!

{{p2}}

When we were in Germany I received letters from Mrs. Maude M. Holbach from England. The New York friends know her well. The Master wrote there to come to Paris if possible and this morning to our delight and pleasure she arrived. Her aim is to come next winter to Haifa with her husband, stay there several months, received daily lessons from the Master, study Bahai life and teachings and then write a story for the Western public. Of course all these depends upon the Master's presence in Haifa. She had a long and interesting interview with him, devoted mainly to an exposition of the meaning of the resurrection of Christ. She was very glad to see him again and will be a daily visitor for the next four or five days, after which she will return again to England. She is a wonderfully intelligent keen woman and a Bahai story from her pen will be of deep interest to all the students of the movement.

{{p3}}

Next Miss Fanny Knoblock was presented to the Master. He asked about the German Bahais and their meetings, He said: Thy sister has served the Cause very much. That is why I wrote her to travel throughout all the cities of Germany and summon the people to the Kingdom of Abha! She must feel assured that Baha-Ullah will assist her. You are her partner in the promotion of the Cause. You must praise God because you are such three heavenly sisters, each one serving the Cause day and night!

{{p4}}

She asked a question about the Bahai Sunday school. He said: This is very important. The Sunday school for the children must be continued. Thus will they be informed with the history of Cause, the Bahai teachings and principles. Their morality will then become Bahai morality. Let the circle of the Sunday school for the children be constantly enlarge and not contracted. She asked several other questions to all of which the Beloved gave definite answers.

{{p5}}

A few others received the benign blessing of his Presence and then he come out and gave a talk divided into two parts. The first part I will translate in this letter; the second part I will leave for the future; being mainly about the heedlessness of the Jews in the day of Christ and their subsequent degradation. He said: In his own days they placed a crown of thorns upon Christ head, but today they put a crown of gold upon the head of his statue and painting. It would have been a hundred thousand times better if they payed him these homages when alive.

{{p6}}

They diverted to another subject saying are like unto the children. The most unimportant event gives them happiness and the most trifling incident saddens their hearts. For example, if you give one franc to a child, it will make him very happy, but if he loses it he is sorrow-stricken. If you carry a doll to a little girl she flies to the heaven of joy and if the doll is stolen by her playmates she is cast to the depth of despair. In short, an infinitesimal incident gives happiness to some; and the most inconsequential event makes other sad. In the morning, they are boiling over with the exuberance of joyousness and in the evening they have simmered down to the point of despondency and sheer disappointment. This is a sign of the weakness of their character and the feebleness of their faith. But a wisely-directed soul, a person whose heart is illumined with the Light of God, who is imbued with the quality of radiant acquiescence, and who is informed with the open mysteries of the divine world- is always in the same condition and is never upset by the constantly changing events of life. His heart is attached to the Spring of All; his happiness is eternal, because it comes from God; his rejoicing is perpetual, because it is based upon the eternal rock of the Knowledge of God, his beatitude is never-failing because it is emanated from the virtues of the world of humanity. This joy undergoes no change and transformation. This happiness is age-abiding! If a person is thirsty for the water of the Knowledge of God, his happiness is unfailing. If a soul is interested in humanitarian deeds, his joy is perennial. Therefore, the happiness that comes through God is a light that is not followed by any darkness; a healing which is not ended by any disease; a glory which is not consummated by any shame. Consequently, we must search diligently after the everlasting and not temporary happiness.

{{p7}}

For a few seconds the Master got silent and then looking toward the window he said to Miss Sanderson:- The sky in Paris is often cloudy. A Persian poet was present and immediately answered: "One sky cannot have two suns!" Wasn't that a most appropriate remark!

{{p8}}

Afterwards he called Entezamos-Saltaneh to himself and together they went out to take a walk. On their return he brought in a basket of apricots which he divided amongst all of us. He gave four to each. Sayad Assadullah had prepared for him dish of pillow and he kept Entezomos-Saltaneh to eat with him and urged him to eat as much rice as possible.

In the afternoon he went to Bais de Bologue with Doctor Mohamad Khan and as he walked along he sang most of the time Bahai poems and chanting the prayers of Baha-Ullah. Then he called on Mon. and Madame Dreyfus. They served him tea. It was about 8 o'clock when he came to the hotel. After an hour of rest he took a bath and retired to his room.

I am glad to report that I have seldom seen the Master feeling so well as these days. He enjoys perfect health and he is happy. He makes us all feel rejoiced when we see him well.

I have written so much for the last few months that I am afraid I am getting the writer's cramp. After writing a few pages, I feel a burning pain in my arm and fingers; but I am sure this is only temporary. It will pass away. I must use my pen for a long time yet I have not commenced writing. I have been doing some scribblings. My heart is dancing with joy, because I am trying to serve the Beloved and the believers. You pray for me that God may make me a sincere servant of Abdul Baha.

Baltimore Hotel 88 bis, Avenue Klebler Adresse Telegraphique

Dear Harriet!

Now that thou returnest to America carry for the friends of God the glad-tidings of the Kingdom of Abha! Confer upon them rejoicing! Exhilarate them with the wine of happiness. Stir them with the Breeze of joyousness! Move them with the cry of ya Baha El Abha! This wonderful message was given to Miss Fanny Knoblock in the course of Conversation with the Beloved this morning!

His desire is to see America aflame with the Fire of the Love of God, to hear the news that the friends are striving day and night to establish the Kingdom of God upon the earth, to upraise the standard of good fellowship amongst all the nations of the world and that they are associating with all the people with joy and Fragrance. The greater the unity of the friends, the happier the heart of Abdul Baha. The believers of God must not only practice unity but they must sacrifice their lives for each other if necessary. The Cause of Baha-Ullah is the Cause of life and love; the religion of the Blessed Perfection is the religion of peace and reality. The Bahais must walk in the footsteps of the standard bearer of this Truth. They must hear no evil, see no evil and talk no evil. The Bahais are the positive forces of life. They must generate only life-giving qualities. There are many pessimists and prophets of evils nowadays. The friends of God are the real optimists and bringers of glad news to all humanity. No difference exists amongst them. They are a united band, eager to serve.

This morning we had a call from a Persian poet who talked a good deal about the ingratitude of the Persian people who do not become Bahais, because this Cause was the only solution for all their difficulties. Abdul Baha was rendering a greater service to Persia than all the combined efforts of the Persians themselves that He was bringing the East and the West nearer to each other that he was creating love between the Persians and Americans a thing undreamed of by others. Who could do this? Whoever was able to perform such a miracle? If someone asked him through what means Persia could be saved? He would answer, through the Bahai religion that the Bahai religion was the only salvation for Persia and no intelligent person could deny this.

{{p3}}

Then he spoke about the Editor of a Persian Journal in Egypt who has written and published a book against the Bahai cause. When this book was brought to the attention of the Master he sent him the following wonderful message:- If I know that thou wouldst not think that I am afraid I would have sent thee a gift for writing such a book against the Bahai Movement. Thy example is like unto the ant who scaled a high, sturdy poplar tree and once reaching the top, it tried to shake the tree and uproot it. The poplar tree laughed at the ant and said:- Don't thou not know that I have experienced many storms, gales, hurricanes and wild tempestuous nights! And now thou little and hast come to shake and uproot me! Vain is thy thought! And the poplar tree laughed again.

{{p4}}

A story was related of a Bahai who was questioned by a great enemy of this Movement: why did you accept this Cause? He answered: Because of your opposition!

Mrs. Monde Holbach had an interview with the Beloved discussing further the plan of her journey to Haifa in the month of October. She is very enthusiastic about this work.

{{p5}}

A Bahai hearing the Master speak, took off her hat, stepped humbly before him and asked: What can I do that I may not see the faults of others? He said: Thou must look for thy self and within thy self and find thine own errors and weaknesses. If thou hast any imperfection thy self, try to improve it. Busy thy self with thine own improvement. Man is a blind far-seeing creature. He is blind to his own faults but he far sees the faults of others, thousands of miles away. Think always how to become more spiritual, to receive a larger portion from the Bounties of Baha-Ullah, to be submerged in the sea of his Mercy. Thank ye God that ye are living in the age of Baha-Ullah and you have recognized Him in his own day. Your station is very high. You have won the Crown of the Everlasting Glory! For lunch he was invited to Mon. Dreyfus.

{{p6}}

After lunch and rest he called on Rouha Khanom. From there he went to Pathe's Fieres where his voice is being taken in phonograph and there will be four records. On his return to the hotel he was some what tired and ordered his food to be brought up to his room. He was very happy and while eating he spoke to us about the Cause.

Baltimore Hotel 88 bis, Avenue Kleber Adresse Telegraphique

Dear Harriet!

In a few days Mirza Jalal will be back and then we shall know when the Beloved decides on his return to Egypt. Egypt during the summer is very hot but I am told. Ramlah, a resort in the vicinity of Alexandria is cooler and from the present indications the Master may not go to Haifa before the coming winter. However his Presence in Paris is a spiritual blessing to all Europe, because even if we do not have public meetings he irradiates from his central being light and joy from the centre of his being. Those who are spiritually-minded feel the quick vibrations of his individuality. His divine spirit of beauty quickens the souls and enraptures the hearts.

This morning after drinking tea and enjoying quietly the presence of the Beauty of the Covenant, he called me to himself and following him he called on S.S. -This gentleman has rented the same apartment that the Master had it on his first visit to Paris about two years ago. He is one of the most prominent men of Persia and while in London he was entertained by many English Lords. In each one of those meetings, they had asked him whether he knows Abdul Baha. He said to the Master: "I was most pleased and very proud to know that there was at least one Persian who has come to the West and was the cause of the glory of Persia and had such lofty thoughts and exalted ideas as to stir the Western world."

{{p3}}

He asked about the progress of the Cause in America. The Beloved spoke in detail and summed up as follows:- There was a very large number of people who only love this Cause and are in sympathy with its principles and like to see them spread. There was another class of people who think Baha-Ullah to be a very great personage and they classify him along with other spiritual thinkers of this age. They even go to the point of saying. His teachings are good for the Orient and may assist to solve some of our problems in the Occident. There was a third class, however, who believe that Baha-Ullah was the Manifestation of the will of God, the Promised One of all nations and who try to spread his Teachings by deeds and by words. This third class are called Bahais.

The question of "Light" was discussed. What was the meaning of light mentioned in the holy books? Was it this physical light? The Master said:- There are three kinds of lights. The light of the sun has only one function and that is to make things manifest. This light is not important. It is only the result of ethereal vibrations. The second light is the light of the Eye which has two functions. It is the manifestor of phenomena and the seer of phenomena. The third light is the light of intellect. This has three functions. It is the Manifestor, the seer and the comprehender of phenomena. The light which is mentioned in the holy books is therefore the light of the intellect.

Master gave for the interest of those who were present, a review of the history of the Cause, its successive tribulations and vicissitudes. The question of divinity was touched and many similar interesting subjects. S.S. was greatly impressed and it was long after eleven o'clock when we left the apartment and came to the hotel. There were several Bahais waiting patiently. The Master received them one by one, and talked with each on his individual problems. He did not go out today but rested. At 3 o'clock several Persians came and then he spoke with them till four. Mon. Dreyfus came and took him to call on Madame Jackson who has just returned from Nice. On his return, the Correspondent of the Christian Commonwealth was waiting. He praised the Editor of that weekly and sent him his loving messages. He talked about the Cause in the various cities he has recently visited and gave glowing tribute to the German people. This man will come to our meeting tomorrow night to report it for the C.C.N.s. one of the princes of Persia who has been away and just returned called and the Master spoke with him a long time about the recent troubles in Persia against Bahais.

It was altogether a busy day and the Master enjoyed to meet these various people. How he spoke with each according to his capacity and understanding! He has the key to every heart and without any effort on his part, all the hearts are opened before him! He is alone the reader of our inmost thoughts and ideas.

Mayth 23rd 1913 BALTIMORE HOTEL 88 BIS, AVENUE KLEBER

To the Bahai world this is doubly sacred. It is the Birthday of Abdul Baha and the Declaration of the Bab. The Bahais everywhere are spreading the Banquet of happiness and here in Paris we are in the Presence of the One in whose name and Teaching Countenance is our daily Feast. Much light is thrown upon the divine character of Abdul Baha when we consider that he exhorts us to celebrate this Feast, because, it is the day of the Declaration of the Bab and not because it is his birthday Anniversary: Of course, two such important events transpired {{p2}} on the same day; therefore it is a blessed day. It is of wide significance and interest even to an outsider to think that two spiritual leaders of the past and present century have been by Providence born to commence and finish a work for told by all the prophets and fulfilled by Baha-ollah. Through the untiring zeal of the Bab, the coming of the Kingdom was heralded throughout the length and breadth of Persia. He was the morning-star of this glorious Revelation which led all mankind to the heavenly Goal. He prepared the way for the appearance of the Lord and foretold the appearance of the Lord and for told the approaching rise of the sun of Reality. He exhilarated all the hearts with the wine of longing and declared the establishment of the Kingdom of the Father upon earth. Now our Beloved is calling upon men to enter into the Kingdom of Abha, the Doors of which are open before all the faces.

Our earliest callers this morning were Mrs. M. Holback and Miss Fanny Knoblock. They had come with lovely bouquets of flowers and basket of fruits to greet the Master on his birthday. It was about 7 o'clock. The Beloved greeted them and they too took their seats. Then Conversation started naturally about the Bab. Later on Mrs. Lilianthal and Mrs. Beede and many others came, all bringing roses, carnations, pots of blooms etc. By twelve o'clock to the reception room was a rose-garden and several baskets of fruits and candies were on the table. The faces of the believers were radiant with joy and each expressed his or her happiness {{p4}} to be on such a day in the company of the Master. Although the American friends were not here, yet on this day of all days, he found time to reveal many Tablets for them. The calm and quiet hours in his room- with no one but me - while he walks majestically to and for dictating Tablets-are such heavenly experiences which will never be effaced from the page of my memory. How fortunate are those souls whose names are mentioned by Our Beloved on a day like unto this! A message of Peace and greeting was brought to him from America indirectly through New York Herald. It was part of the speech of Mr. Bryan Secretary of State, given before the Army and Navy Club on May 14th in which he gives his conception of the battle ship of the future. The Beloved was most pleased not only the thought but the consistent earnestness and splendid enthusiasm and optimism of Mr. Bryan. I will quote it herein, because the Master praised {{p5}} it and all the friends loved it. It is so much in line with the Bahai principles of Peace and justice. Therefore the Dreadnoughts of the future according to Mr. Bryan's conception is as follow: "Its compass is the heart; its shells carry good will; its missiries are projected by the smokeless powder of love; its Captain is the Prince of Peace. I want you to drink with me to the battleship, Friendship. No target will withstand the projectiles which Friendship sends abroad."

For the last three or four days I have not been feeling well at all; so when this morning I entered the Presence of the Beloved he inquired about my health. I said: it seems to me that as long as we are enjoying good health, we do not appreciate it enough; what a divine {{p6}} blessing is health! He said: "We know things by their opposites. Knowledge is more appreciated when we observe the stultifying influence of ignorance. Sight and hearing is more thought of when we see the conditions of thr blind and the deaf. A person living on the border of a flowing river all his life does not know what thirst is. When we were travelling from w thought we go ahead of the family, pitch the tent and prepare everything till Baha-ollah and the rest of the party arrive. There were twenty three of us, all on horses. When we got away several miles from the main body, the sun rose high in the heavens and it shone dozzlingly upon our heads.

We became aware that in our hurry to get away quickly we has forgotten to bring with us the water-bags. We looked around and there was nothing visible but a wilderness of hot sand and getting hotter every hour. We asked our guide whether there was any spring in the vicinity and he said: no. We could not have any water before we reached the next station, sixteen miles away! What could we do now? Our lips were parched with thirst; some of us almost to the point of fainting. I urged the company onward, my friends, Spur your houses!. We galloped several miles and we were nearly succumbed to the awful heat when in the far off horizon, we observed several block tents of the nomads. Those black tents to my eyes were at the time greater than the palaces of the Kings. We hastened toward the tents and reached them literally half-dead. There was no human being visible, so I called out aloud; water! water! water! An old woman came out of one of tents and shook her head, meaning that she has no water. Them I asked her: 'Have you 'Doing'? 9sour milk diluted {{p8}} with water). She answered in the affirmation. She took us then to a tripod made of wood over which was hanging a black skin, sack filled with"Doug". She opened its aperture and each one of us drunk one cup. It was as cold as ice. In this part of the world, there is a wind, blowing at this season as hot as fire. It scorches one's face and lips and peals the skin; it makes the earth dry but when it blow over a jar of water or a skin-bag of Doug, it makes it as cold as ice. This wind other times is called sometimes 'Sam' and 'Sharghi'. In short, we drunk three skinfold of"Doug" and then we laid stretched down our bodies, some under the shade of the tents, others right beneath the sun. We could not enter then tents, because, these nomads live with their castles. When we awake we felt as new being and continued our journey. Experience teaches us many lessons that we are not apt to forget."

About eleven o'clock the Master came out and greeted the friends who had gathered in the reception room. He inquired about the health of every one and they expressed thankfulness unto the Lord because they were permitted to be in the Holy Presence of the Beloved on such a blessed and significant day. He said: One day in Bagdad "Baha-ollah was walking beside the bank of Euphrates in Bagdad. A learned men of that city who had never seen Baha-ollah passed and was greatly impressed by his majestic learning and divine Face. He came to him with great reverence and humility and asked; 'Sir! Which country do you come from?' 'I come from the country of Baha.' The man was puzzled. {{p10}} 'In which part of the world is it situated? he hesitatingly inquired. 'It is in the Eastern direction! What temperature?' the man asked. 'Always moderate.' 'What kind of a country is it?' he interrogated with evident curiosity. 'It is a most marvelous country; its inhabitants are angelic; its spring for the twelve months of the year; its trees are always green, its fruits luscious; its flowers imperishable and of many hues; its roses ever spreading sweet fragrances; its meadows are perennially verdant; its sun has no setting, its stars always shining, its moon is ever full; its denizens enjoy eternal youth; its gardens are always a bloom; its sweet-singing birds ever melodious; its wine imparting everlasting exhilaration and its bounties and blessings limitless. 'Sir! he gasped with astonishment, 'I have never heard of such a country. It is not on the old maps.' 'Well!' Baha-ollah answered, 'you may find it on a new {{p11}} map which is being drawn now! 'But how can one reach there?' 'The guide to that country is One. If you follow him you shall enter the portals of that country' the Blessed perfection answered him and passed by.

When the nature of Mr. Bryan's battleships was read to him he said: "The spirit of this age demands the establishment of universal Peace. No power on earth can withstand before it. God has destined that Peace must reign in this age and it will come to pass. Let the advocates of Peace work with greater zeal and courage, for the Lord of Hosts is their Supporter.' In this radiant century and merciful age, the ears are opened, the hearts are awakened, the eyes are seeing and the consciousness are stirred. The age of strangeness has passed, the century of {{p12}} friendship has arrived. The dark hours have disappeared and the luminary of unity hath dawned. Now is the time to be illumined with the the rays of the sun of the solidarity of the human race. This is not the hour to imparting life; this is the hour of self-sacrifice for the commonwealth of humanity. When I was very young, I remember one day, I was setting with a number of friends. A Kurd who was very inimical to the Persians entered the gathering and started to boast of his courage and viler. Warming with his subject, he vaunted with a great bravado that in this year he had Killed 13 Persians! Consider to what extent people are thoughtless and unaware of the ideal virtues of the world of humanity!

He spoke them on the education of the orphans: If the parents educate their own children, this is done by every one. There is no special virtues in it. But privilege and distinction lie in the direction of educating the children {{p13}} of others. When these children grow up, they are even grateful and thankful to their adopted parents.' For the existence of a new guest he was gave a lucid exposition of the Bahai principles on economics. Then he said: the real enjoyment of the world of humanity consists in the fact that every individual may think of the wellbeing of others and sacrifice his own rest for the rest of his fellowman. Then and not until then will he be really happy. I hope that all of you will attain to this station. Then you will be real Bahais. When the life-long of Mohamad was living one day his son in-law, Ali, his wife and two sous kept fast. Now, according to the Mohamadan law a person {{p14}} fasting, must not eat or drink anything from sunrise to sunset. In order to break their fasts after sunset, Ali had prepared four small loaves of bread. They had nothing else. Just before sunset poor people knocked at the door and begged for alms. Ali gave them all the loaves of bread. The four continued to fast neat day without eating anything. Four other loaves were prepared and they were again given away to a number of orphans who called about sunset time. The sun rose on the third day and they continued to fast without eating anything. They prepared for the third time four loaves of bread and just before eating a few strangers passed by the house and the loaves were given them. When Mohamad heard of the self-sacrifice of his son-in-law, his daughter and his two grandsons he sent them special food and asked them to eat themselves.

Mon, therefore must be self-sacrificing to such an extent; otherwise if he {{p15}} seeks after his own interest, he is like unto an animals. Strive that ye may assist the children of man both materially and spiritually, and be the means their guidance and illumination.

For lunch the Master went to Martha-Pension, our old hotel. At three o'clock Mon and Madame Richard came and at their request the Beloved told them three stories about Christ which are in the Gospel. Then with Mon Dreyfus, he went to the flower show. He must how made a most beautiful picture walking through lanes of flowers. {{p16}} He returned at 6 o'clock and after half an hour walked out again with Doctor Mohamad Khan to call on prominent Persians and Turkish Pashas. Tonight everybody was invited to Mon and Madame Dreyfus, the Beloved also was there. Persian Arabs French, America, English, etc; associates with each other in the spirit of Bahai love and fellowship. The Beloved gave a wonderful talk on the life of the Bab as a preparation to the coming of Him whom God should manifest. It was a heavenly feast. He also asked Miss Erwin to read from the Hidden Words. Refreshments of various Kinds were served of Abdul Baha was happy to find himself amongst all these loving and sincere Bahais.

From April 1st to April 8th, 1913 Abdul Baha visited Germany and stayed in Stuttgart. He stopped at a hotel overlooking the plaza.

While Abdul Baha was one day looking out of his hotel window he observed a regiment of soldiers passing of in great array and he said:

"They are ready to fight for their fatherland. How barbarous it seems to send men, who do not even know each other, to the battlefield in order to shoot each other down.

"The Bahai Grand Army consist of the invisible angels of the Supreme Concourse. Our swords are the words of Light. Our armament is the armament of heaven. We are fighting against the forces of darkness.

"O my soldiers! My beloved soldier! Forward! Forward! Home no fear of defeat do not have facing hearts. Our supreme Commander is Baha-o-llah. From the height of Glory He is directly this dramatic engagement. He commands us! Rush forward! Rush forward! {{p18}} Show the strength of your arms. You shall scatter the forces of ignorance! 'Your war confers life; their war brings death. Your war is the cause of the illumination of mankind; their war means the breaking and darkness of hearts. Your war means victory upon victory; their war is defeat upon defect. Your war is the means of construction; their war is the origin of destruction.

"There are no dangers before you. Push formed! Push forward! Attack the enemy!

"Your efforts shall be crowned with the diadem of Eternal Peace and Brotherhood.

'His holiness the Christ was fighting even upon the Cross at His triumphant work continued through ages as cycles."

Dear Harriet!

We who circle around the Master are very happy because he is enjoying complete health of body. Although he has emphasized repeatedly that the spiritual health is all-important and that his spirit is free and above any human illness, yet we cannot help but to be distressed when he is not feeling well and feel correspondingly joyous when he is in the utmost of health. His Presence, under all circumstances radiates Peace and happiness. Day unto day through his divine Patience, he is adding new stones to the Temple of the Bahai Cause, gathering new laborers and masons and collecting fresh materials. Whether the whole world praises him or blames him he is the same, eternal being. He is free of all ties except the Cause of God. All traces of self and personality are lost in him. He is the embodiment of disinterestedness. He loves us for the sake of Baha-Ullah. If he gives us any Counsel, it is conducive to our own spiritual development. He is the loving father of the world of humanity. He is the glorious light that shineth in darkness illuminating the path of the wandering travelers. He is the fountain of eternal life that allays the thirst of the thirsty ones. Through him we receive the inexhaustible bounties of spirituality. His Power makes the army of the Lord invincible! His teachings encourage us to rise higher and higher toward the throne of the Almighty! His words are the imperishable flowers of the paradise of Abha!

{{p2}}

This morning after drinking tea in his holy Presence, he dictated many Tablets for the believers of London. We receive excellent reports about the progress of the Cause in that great metropolis. Of late Miss Buckton, Mrs. Fraser and General Jack have been to Edinburgh, have given a series lectures and as a result a weekly meeting is organized. The next step they are going to take is to go to Liverpool and Manchester. They are now preparing their little army so that when they reach the field of operation they will carry a vigorous campaign. England is alive to the opportunities of the Cause and therefore the friends are doing their utmost to promote the glad-tidings of the kingdom of Abha.

Several friends from America found themselves in the Presence of the Beloved and they asked whether the efforts of Mr. Wilson and Mr. Bryan toward the realization of international Peace will have anything of a tangible result. He answered: Of course, these two men are sincere and honest in their aims and purposes and I pray to God that they may become successful. They are the servants of universal Peace and the oneness of the world of humanity. America has the capacity of becoming the standard bearer of international Peace. Geographically it is a vast continent far away from the jealous eyes of the envious neighbors; politically, democratic and holding aloof from the wrangling complications of Europe. Therefore America is the most ready and the most free nation to arise in the service of humanity and initiate new plans of philanthropy and encourage the establishment of eternal Peace throughout all parts of the world. I always pray that the banner of international comity and the solidarity of human race may be hoisted from America. To a number of callers he said: I am most pleased with America. I ever supplicate in behalf of America so that the Confirmations of His Holiness Baha-Ullah may encircle it. After this many friends went into his presence and received from his Silvery lips the Holy words of light. He did not speak to the assembled believers but met instead individually everyone in the Holy of Holies.

{{p4}}

For lunch he went to Martha-Pension and after his return Mon. Dreyfus and Gaemmagam were waiting for him. He talked with them for a while and then took his nap. In the afternoon he called me and we walked together to 22 Rue de Tremoille where Moneer Pasha lives. He was not home but tired with walking he stayed for half an hour in the room of the Concierge. He had two or three packages of candy and dried fruits in his pocket and gave them the little child of the Concierge. Coming out of the house we saw a mother with her child. The child was very attractive and had such blue eyes that the Master smiled and he caressed her and gave her money and candy. Then we got a carriage and had a wonderful drive through Bois de Bologne. He came down in front of the cascade and sat down, submerged in a sea of thought.

{{p5}}

It was long after eight when we reached home. I did not feel well at all and went right to bed. All night I was suffering with a fiery fever and called on Baha-Ullah and the Beloved ever so many times. The Doctor told me that I must not work for three weeks and keep perfectly quiet. My goodness! How could I do this? I can't sit quiet or stay in bed even one day. I must be up at 5 or the utmost 5:30 every morning. Doctor is talking through his hat. Isn't he? I am going to be well in a few days.

{{p6}}

In the evening three very important Persian gentlemen came to see the Master. Now and then I could hear him speak with such earnestness and power that it was exhilarating. Although they were Mohamadans, European educators had undermined their faith in the Arabian prophets and the Master was giving them proofs and evidences as to his prophet hood. The enemies had always spread around that the Bahais deny Mohamad- just as our antagonists in the West pretend that we are against Christ- so these Muslims were very much shame-struck and dumbfounded to find Abdul Baha proving to them incontestably the prophet hood of their own divine Messenger. They left the heavenly Presence at about half past eleven wonderfully impressed.

Dear Harriet!

We are all serving at one divine Threshold. It is the service that is valued and not the personality. We are all equal in the sight of the Beloved. In his estimation there is no distinction. His prayer for one is for all. He loves to see every Bahai, a flame of fire burning away the superstitions of men. In the palace of his heart there is no favoritism. We are all standing before him. Often those who are nearest to him are farthest from him. His love is not a respecter of time and space. Anyone who sincerely arises to serve the cause of humanity becomes near and dear to him. His love is universal!

{{p2}}

This morning the Beloved got up a little late, because he retired after midnight. As he rises up and comes out of his room, the rays of the sun of his smile, his words and his Presence warm and illumine the dark chambers of our hearts. I wonder how I could live in the past without his actual presence. True happiness is by his side or in his service. One second of his good-pleasure is equal to an eternity of temporal power. After drinking tea he told me to be ready and go out with him to call on one of the Persian princes who is sick. As his apartment was rather near we walked, but on the way we sat in two parks, a few minutes in each. In the second park the Master sat down on the grass and reclined on a tree trunk. I was also sitting at his left. He made a wonderful picture with the sunshine, the green meadow and the fresh trees around. I wished I had a Kodak with me to take his photograph in this position. Having finally reached the apartment of the Prince, the Master went into his bedroom and for one hour was talking with and consoling him.

{{p3}}

On our return we took an automobile and in the hotel a number of friends were waiting. He called them in one by one and spoke to each personally. with Mr. Holly and his wife he spoke about Mashrekal Azkar and its accessories and what a far-reaching affect will it have when the foundation is laid in Chicago. The Beloved hoped that this will be very soon and that the friends will exert themselves to make it realized.

{{p5}}

with another friend he spoke about singing. He said: Whenever you sing be in a state of supplication and prayer. Sing as though you are praying. Let your song carry with it spiritual effect, an effect which is lasting, long to be continued. Then he came out and delivered the shortest address and yet the most beautiful and comprehensive. It is a jewel of beauty. Here it is: The weather in Paris for the last two days has been clear and the sun has been shining. My hope is that the ideal weather of Paris may also become clear, the sun of reality may shine forth, great spirituality may be obtained, the hearts be stirred, spiritual discoveries be realized, the Luminary which has appeared in the East may down from the horizon of the West and flood these regions with its heart-illuminating rays. This is my desire!

{{p6}}

At four o'clock Mon. Dreyfus had sent a carriage to take the Beloved to Mon. and Madame Richard which is quite far from here. This is the first time the Master is going to their home. They had invited a number of their friends to hear him speak. On the way he spoke to me about the Cause in America.

Mon. Richard and Mon. Dreyfus were at the door to welcome him. We passed through a garden and then into the house. Mon. Richard welcomed the Master in a few gracious words and asked him to speak to them on how they could best serve the world of humanity. He gave a very brilliant and lucid address on the subject which made everyone feel the power of the spirit. A few questions and answers were exchanged, tea was served, the Master shook hand with everyone and he left in the carriage with Mon. Dreyfus. We took a taxi and returned home. The Beloved did not return till late in the evening.

I am writing these pages with a great effort. When I feel better I hope to be able to make up for this loss. But my heart is happy and am glad that in this day and in this hour I am permitted to look daily in the Face of the Beloved of the world who is the source of all health and safety.

Paris, may 25th 1913. Baltimore Hotel 88 bis Avenue Kleber

To the believers of God and the maid servants of the Merciful! Upon them be Bahai-ullah El Abha! Stuttgart and Epluigen.

He is God!

Oye Bahais!

There is no greater will in this world so that I may call you; for to be known as a Bahai, it means to be a heavenly, radiant personage and the collective center of the virtues of the world of humanity.

Four letter was received and its contents imparted the utmost of joy; because its significances were the susceptibilities of conscience and the iridescent rays from your luminous hearts. Therefore I supplicated and entreated toward the Kingdom of Baha-Ullah and begged for those Bahais inexhaustible Bestowals- so that day by day you may become more illumined, you may be driven nearer unto God, summoning the people to the Divine Kingdom and become the cause of the spiritual guidance of the souls; thus the shining ray of the sun of reality may illumine that country.

Upon ye be Baha El Abha!

Dear Harriet!

The Anniversary of the Beloved on the 23rd brought forth congratulatory cables from different parts of the America, Europe and the Orient. They were the deep expression of love and happiness. Every one of those cables told the story of the progress of the Bahai Cause all over the world. We must not look at the difficulties that the Cause is beset with from time to time but we must ever think of the end which is the universal spread of the Movement. The trials no matter how severe they are at the moment will spend their forces and pass away, leaving the Cause stronger, sturdier and more powerful; just as when the forces of nature have done their worst, they leave the atmosphere clearer and purer. This Bahai Cause is tested a hundred times, kings and rulers have arisen to rage it to its very foundation and they have failed. So on this very happy day the Beloved answered the cables in words of light and truth This was the first work done this morning. It is a wonderful thing that he lives in Paris and he thinks of all his faithful flock all over the world. I think those people whose names are on the tongue of the Beloved are very fortunate, for in this very thing there is a mystic power.

About half past seven Miss F.Knoblock came to say goodbye to the Master. She is returning to Stuttgart to be with her sister for three weeks and then she goes to America. The Master has showered upon her many blessings and tapping on her shoulder he has often called her "my daughter, my own dear daughter." So this morning she was welcomed with evident happiness. "I am happy, Abdul Baha", she said her eyes dancing with joy and her face wreathed with Bahai smiles. "I leave your presence with the determination of teaching and spreading more and more the Message of the Kingdom of Abha. The Master said: I hope thou will leave Paris as the messenger of the divine Joseph. Carry with thy self wherever thou goest the most great glad-tidings. Perfume the nostrils with the Fragrance of the garment of the divine Joseph. Give thou my greetings to all the believers of God! Rejoice third spirits with then heavenly glad news. I always remember them and beg for each special Confirmations. Give my wonderful Abha greeting to all friends, notably thy sisters, Miss A.Knoblock and Mrs. G.Hannen and her two dear sons. I am very happy on account of the services rendered by Mr. Hannen. He is my son. I pray to Baha-Ullah that the spiritual benedictions and confirmations may ever encircle him. As a parting word the Master said these few beautiful words to her: I shall always keep thee in my mind. I hope that thou mayst be always a herald of the cause of God.

A girl who is good singer entered. The Master beamed on her asking: Are you progressing in your art? The heavenly song is good. It is my hope that you mayst sing that song. When we left America on the steamer Celtic, there were several musicians and singers. They played and sung every day and every night. When they stopped playing the listeners clapped their hands and all was ended. This was its result. But you must sing a melody as to move and stir the hearts of the Supreme Concourse and its effects may be eternal. The earthly notes and strains are limited as to their influence. The conditions of the world are physical and their importance according to the importance of physical life. Therefore I hope you will find spiritual success whose importance is eternal. Strive that you may be drawn nearer unto God.

{{p4}}

After this he got Ahmad Pasha's address and went out to call on him alone. He came back about noon saying as he entered the room: I spoke much with Ahmad Pasha today. I hope that God will create the effect. He took a very simple lunch in his own room and retired to rest.

{{p5}}

In the afternoon we were drinking tea in his Presence and I was reading to him a newspaper when the telephone rung and I answered. It was from Martha Pension. It seemed that the last few days which the Master was launching there he had told them to let him know when they had vacant rooms. Now having 3 rooms, they had telephoned. With the Master, we went there to inspect the rooms and he was pleased with them. Arrangement was made to move tomorrow to our former hotel. As he was not very well satisfied with his own room, I said it will be well if he would exchange it with mine. He said: Never! I do not desire to decrease one of your comfort. I declare by God that were not for the sake of the Cause, I would have served the friends day and night.

{{p6}}

One must never feel superior to anyone else. This feeling of superiority destroys all restages of friendship and love. I give thee this will to be remembered throughout all thy life:- Whenever thou seest that a person feels to the measure of one atom superior to another or prefers himself to his brother or sister, have no hope in him. He is deprived of the Bounties and Mercies of God.

{{p7}}

He did not go up to his room in the hotel but he bought a small hammer nails etc. from a store nearby. He said: When I reach Haifa I went to go to the mountains and live alone for a while and these instruments will be helpful in pitching up the tents and driving in the nails. We walked through Rue St. Didier to Avenue Victor Hugo and spent half an hour in a store looking over canes and umbrellas.

{{p8}}

We got into a carriage and drove for another half an hour through the Bois de Bologne. Thousands upon thousands were walking or driving or lying on the grass or gliding in fairy-like boats over the enchanting lakes. The Master was meanwhile looking over the great sceneries of verdure and trees. He said: How glorious it would be if these people instead of whiling away their time here with no result, would have gathered together in groups, reading the Hidden Words, singing the praises of God, chanting the communes and prayers! Then this Park would have been transformed into a Paradise of Spirituality and Holiness; but now it breeds the qualities which are not praiseworthy of the world of humanity.

{{p9}}

Mr. and Mrs. Scott's address was given to the driver and the Master was there in half an hour. He rested first. Mrs. Scott read from the hidden Words, Miss Erwin read from the Seven Valleys and gave an interesting exposition of the meaning of the first Arabic Hidden Words. The Beloved came out and gave a glorious speech on "How to advance from the lowest degree of existence to the highest summit of perfection". Madame Richard translated from English for the French Bahais. Then the Master shook hands with each blessing everyone with a few heavenly words and we came out with the greatest of joy and peace. To Mon. Scott he said: Your studio is a radiant place. It is the gathering place of the friends of God. It will have great importance in the future.

{{p10}}

Hardly arriving at the hotel when the Master was up again and we went out to call on Miss Sanderson. He took tea there and spoke with her on the immortality of the soul. Her mother is not felling any better but she is a most devoted, sweet daughter and takes the best care of her by day and by night.

{{p11}}

From her home we came back to the hotel and after a few minutes we were out again driving toward Moneer Pasha's home. Here the Master stayed till 11 o'clock talking with him, his wife and a few other invited guests. The question of the disassociation of the spirit from the body took much time. The wife of Moneer Pasha from her childhood has had spiritual experiences and visitations and she related these things to the Master. Wonderful explanations were given by him. Long after eleven we left the Pasha's apartment and returned to the hotel. Mirza Mahmoud and Sayad Assadullah were up and waiting for the coming of the King.

As Ahmad Pasha and another Persian had prepared food for the Master and sent it to the hotel he had told our two brothers not to eat dinner downstairs but wait and eat with him; so after our return from Moneer Pasha about midnight we spread an impromptu table and his holy presence we partook of supper. It was a symbol of the divine Table which he has spread before us and from which we partake daily.

Martha-Pension Family-Hotel 97, rue Lauriston Paris. May 27th 1913

{{p1}}

Dear Harriet!

Here we are, back again to Martha Pension. The proprietor, the servants and the guests love the Master and show him great veneration and respect. He feels more at home in this than in Baltimore Hotel. Besides it is built in a quieter street. Rue than a large avenue which pulsates with the ever rushing stream and tide of life. In the morning we were all busy packing. The Master always attends to his four handbags of papers. No other person is allowed to do this for him because they may displace the letters or papers he needs most. Although I did not feel well I had to be up and try to perform to the best of my ability my various duties. Never have I appreciated more than now the value of health. I used to enjoy in America and in various parts of Europe. I did not know what is fatigue or sickness. It is alright for a person who has little to do to get sick but those who have many duties to perform must not be attacked. However, I put myself in the mood of the Master and do not give any importance to the bodily failing but look always for strength and health to the source which is the spirit.

This morning Miss Hodgson came to bid farewell to the Master as she was going with her father to Brittany in the South of France for summer. "Thou art my dear daughter" he told her as they shook hands and she sat down. "I love thee very much. I have heartfelt attachment for thee. Thou will ever be in my memory. Wherever thou goest, teach the Cause. Inform the people about the realities of this Manifestation. The more thou spreadest the glad-tidings, the greater will be thy spirituality. Teaching the Cause of God is like unto the sweet singing of an Artist. The Artist enjoys more the song than an indifferent audience because she has studied for a long time and knows too well the hardships and the sufferings of the student life.”

{{p3}}

Miss Cruttwell an English woman came in with Miss Sanderson. She has had just heard about the Movement from her and the reading of a Tablet revealed to New York friends years ago, had entirely transformed her views of life and attracted her to the Cause. She is a writer of novel and articles for the English magazines and at this very time she is engaged in writing a book. Now having heard of the revelation, her greatest desire is to inculcate the Bahai principles in this book. She was all aflame with the Fire of the Love of God and tears of joy flowed from her eyes. She was so overwhelmed with the holy presence of the Beloved that she could hardly say one word. All that she could ask was to receive the blessing of the Master and to remain steadfast in the Cause. Praise be to God the heavenly Voice of the Beloved was heard that the glances of the Favors of Baha-Ullah have encircled thee and thou hast attained to the Knowledge of the Kingdom. The Doors of the Kingdom of God are open before thy face! Happy is thy condition for thou hast attained. i hope that thou will become one of the elect. Be thou ever firm, ever steadfast. Firmness and Steadfastness are the two great attributes of God. Adorn thy self with these spiritual garments. As long as the tree is not well rooted it will not yield luscious fruits. As long as the foundation is not well laid, the building shall not stand for ever.

{{p4}}

Miss Cruttwell took off her hat and knelt before the Beloved, begging for his Confirmations and assistance. The Master putting his hand on her head delivered in a hushed voice the following prayer:- “O Thou Almighty! Direct Thou this traveler toward the Pathway of Thy Guidance! Suffer this thirsty one to reach to the Fountainhead of Thy Bestowal! Confer upon this indigent one an abode in the Neighborhood of Thy infinite Mercy. Let this hungry one sit around the celestial Table of Thy heavenly Food! O God! Encircle her with the glances of Thy Providence! Immerse her in the refulgent sea of Thy Glorious Lights! Grant her the swift wings of Inspiration so that she may soar toward the realm of the exalted ideals and universal Love! Protect her and guard her in Thy Fortress! Verily Thou art the Generous! The Compassionate and the Merciful!”

{{p5}}

Mrs. Lilianthal and Mrs. Beede, Mon. and Madame Mors and others came in and the Master praised the marvelous civilization of France and the high degree of attainment of the people. In the afternoon Ahmad Pasha came in and the Master sat with him in a store next to the hotel and spoke with him in Turkish. At 4 o'clock we moved our trunks and satchels to Marta Pension and by six we were all settled in our new rooms. It was about 9 o'clock when they announced the arrival of Mon. and Madame Richard. Meanwhile the Master had called alone on Rouha Khanom and returned about 8 and went out again to take a walk. They waited for a few minutes and he came in. The conversation started on the indifference of the French thinkers to all religion subjects and how to reach them, on the beliefs of the Sufi adepts on Yod and creation, on Spiritualism and Kindred phenomena. from nine till 12 o'clock they spoke the Master relating some very queer stories about the common beliefs held in the Orient on haunted houses and graveyards. These imaginary ideas have lighted the life of the Orient. They have wrecked many homes and many happy families. They are pure imaginations and superstitions, Abdul Baha said at last. Two of the stories were about the "Jins" and ghosts in Acca. When I feel better I will write them for you because the Master played an important part in each story to break the nation of Jins and ghosts.

Dear Harriet!

The other day I was reading a book in which I found a few lines of poetry on divine Love and I would like to quote it here:

"Ah, sweet strange fruit! The which if any taste, They may no longer keep their lives of old Or their own selves unchanged, but some divine change And subtle alchemy comes which can transmute To some new magical form.
Not as before, Our life comes to us, May, never as before."<<

To the Bahais these simple, true lines convey new significances and more subtle meaning. The Teachings of Baha-Ullah have freed us from past dogmas and imitations and have unfolded before our eyes a new heavenly Vista which heavenly Vista is Universal Love and Universal Charity; love to all the inhabitants of the earth; charity for all the creatures of God. If the alchemy of the words of Baha-Ullah and the matchless addresses of Abdul Baha has not transmuted the gross metals of any prudish selfishness and crude uncharitableness into the pure gold of radiant selflessness and sweet charity- then of course I am not a Bahai- even if I announce it with the flare of trumpet and the fanfare of music. We must show this spiritual transformation in our deeds, words, conduct and behavior. We must demonstrate to the rest of the world, the ideal standard of universal tolerance and heavenly friendship; otherwise we will not be privileged to become the servants and the maid servants of this Cause. A new people shall arise, consecrating their lives to the welfare of humanity.

Therefore if we desire to manifest Bahai qualities and show to everyone that by eating this sweet, strange fruit we have no longer kept our older selves, we must practice the following precepts which I have gathered from the Garden of Beatitude:

“Blessed is he who is charitable, for he shall inherit Eternal Life! Blessed is he who overlooks the faults of others for he shall enjoy divine beatitude! Blessed is he who associates with all with joy and fragrance for he has obeyed the command of Baha-Ullah! Blessed is he who loves mankind for he has heeded the advice of Abdul Baha! Blessed is he who is kind to his enemies for he has walked in the footsteps of Christ! Blessed is he who proclaims the doctrine of spiritual brotherhood for he shall be the child of light! Blessed is he whose heart is tender and compassionate for he will throw stone at no one! Blessed is he who will speak evil against no one for he has attained to the good-pleasure of the Lord! Blessed is he who will not uncover the sins of others for he will become favored at the Threshold of the Almighty! Blessed is he who has a forgiving nature for he will win the spiritual Graces of God! Blessed is he who diffuses only the sweet fragrances of the flowers of friendship and mutual association for he will obtain a goodly portion of the Bounties of the Merciful! Blessed is he who teaches union and concord for he will shine like unto a star in heaven! Blessed is he who practices loving kindness and cooperation for he will be encircled with celestial benedictions. Blessed is he who comforts the downtrodden for he will be the friend of God.”

Today our Beloved spent quietly in the hotel receiving visitors from morning till night. In the morning after drinking tea he attended for an hour or two to his oriental correspondence which is always unwieldy and in large volume. For a few minutes we went into his Presence and received his blessing. As he lives one floor above us we were not informed as to the time of the tea. Mon. Dreyfus came in and brought our mail. he is always welcome because he brings our letters so promptly and regularly. A Russian lady who has interested herself in a band of Indian Musicians arrived and brought five tickets inviting the Master and his secretaries to attend the concert on Friday afternoon. He accepted the tickets with thanks and said he will send us and if he has no engagement he may go himself. Madame Dreyfus came and the Master greeted her most cordially. She has not been feeling well for the last few days but she is much better. A Turkish gentleman entered the Presence and he spoke with him till noon, when he went out to take a walk. After his return he ate his simple lunch in his own room. At four o'clock Halim Bey, a prominent Turkish gentleman came to see him. He spoke with him about his recent trip and gave him eight photos of Stuttgart Bahais. The wife of Moneer Pasha with several other women found their way to the Holy Presence. He spoke with them in detail about the spiritual reality which is in man and is the discoverer of the realities of phenomena. They were much interested and while he was speaking to them the Turkish Ambassador to Spain entered the room. His father knew the Master. He stayed only a few minutes as he had other engagements.

Meanwhile Doctor Mohamad Khan and another newly arrived Persian were waiting for the Beloved. When he finished his work he went out with them and returned about 9 o'clock. As we did not have any callers he retired to his room.

Dear Harriet!

When we look upon the Bahai Cause with an impartial eye, we observe that it is a growing movement. It is growing and unfolding its potential characteristics because it is divine in origin. Mankind is spiritually benefitted and uplifted by accepting its teachings and by practicing its principles. We have an all sides evidences to the forward march of the Cause. Baha-Ullah today assists those who arise whole-heartedly to spread the Glorious Message of the Kingdom and unfurl the Banner of Universal Love and Charity. It is the hope of each one of us to become a worthy servant at this holy Threshold. We have found the greatest spiritual Movement of the age and we have dedicated our lives and our hearts to it. Every Bahai no matter what his situation and environment must strive to the utmost of his ability to diffuse the fragrances of the rose-garden of Abha. Baha-Ullah has not given us this treasure so that we may hid it under the ground. We must distribute it amongst the poor in soul consciousness; we must let them have a share from this inexhaustible wealth; we must invite them to sit around this heavenly Table; we must lead them to the green bank of this divine River. If we sacrifice our lives to this Cause we have done less than nothing. Who dares to claim for himself any station while the Lord is standing in the Congregation of the Elect! We are all trying to serve, but as to real service accomplished by any of us-not yet-not yet.

This morning the Beloved quietness of his room, No. 12 on the first floor wrote several important Tablet with his own hand and later dictated cables in answer to those he has received.

Prof. Enayet Khan, the Indian musician and Suffi with several other Bahais were introduced into the Presence of the Beloved. At first the conversation was on the study of the Persian language and the deeper, spiritual significances of the Koran, the Master giving us very illuminating interpretations. Prof. Enayet asked a question about Nirvana, the Freedom or Salvation of the soul. The Master said: To attain the Nirvana means to reach perfection. This is made possible through the Bestowals of God. When these are none safed, their man attains to the summit of perfection. A seed has reached to the station of Nirvana once it springs out of the earth, it grows, putting forth trunk, branches, loves blossoms and finally luscious ripe fruits. The fruit is the Nirvana of the tree. This comes through education. The seed became a tree through the training of the gardener. Man attains to perfection through the education of the divine Instructor. His injustice is changed into justice; his greed into trust, his avarice into generosity, his hard-heartedness into pity and charity; in short he will be adorned with all the divine characteristics. The more he acquires these spiritual qualities, the nearer his spirit will be to perfection according to our terminology;

but according to Christian idea he will be close to salvation and according to the Hindus he will attain to Nirvana. The object in each case is the same but interpretation differs.

Several other questions were asked which the Master gave elucidating answers. At noon the Master with Mirza Mahmoud and myself were invited to a Persian dinner to the house of Sardar Monsour at 42 avenue de Bourbonnais. The dinner was very elaborate. Before eating, the Beloved told them the story of Baha-Ullah's exile to Acca and the hardship of the first years of Acca; how Abdul Hamid sent a cable to the governor of Acca to investigate the arrival of two Europeans and his wonderful cross-examination in the court room. During the lunch and afterward spoke about futile theology of Mohamadan religion and how a student must study 30 years before he becomes a Mulla. He told many funny stories illustrating these points. It was four o'clock when we left our hospitable Persian prince and his friends.

At five he called Madame Jackson with Doctor Mohamad Khan and then visited Miss Sanderson. He came to the hotel very tired.

I have to be very brief in these days because I am sick myself and feel no better.

Dear Harriet!

To go with the Beloved to the Orient has been my dream for the last two months. I have thought about it by day and dreamed about it by night; for I have fully realized that one hour in his holy Presence was greater in value than many years- may many ages. I had not told him about my secret longing, my holiest desire but this morning he made me the happiest man in this world by telling me that I will accompany him to Egypt. If I had only two wings, I would have soared toward the atmosphere of joy and beatitude! Just think of it! I have been already with him nearly fourteen months, daily watching his heavenly ministrations and now God in his Bounty is going to lengthen this period. "My greatest wish is never to be separated from the Beloved" I told him. And now I feel in my heart the stirring of new emotions as I think of the East and the wonderful privilege of being with the Master and meeting the friends of God! I am very happy and I want every friend of mine share in my happiness. If I had a thousand dollars I would have distributed them amongst the poor for this spiritual gift! My highest desire is to be at all times obedient to the Command of the Master and a willing instrument in his hand. My face is toward the East; my heart and all the Bahai love that it contains is in America. In serving Abdul Baha I am serving the believers in the United States. I am at all-time present to serve them and ready to sacrifice my life for them.

This morning someone came to the Master and asked for money. He told him: Never be a spendthrift. Do not be extravagant in thy expenses. An extravagant person comes always to a sad end and feels the pinch of want and misery. Ever expend less than your income. Do not borrow money for unnecessary things. Although my expenses are much and in different directions. I never expend without thought. If I give money to this or to that or to the children, the results of it will be known in the future. When I was at the age of youth- in Baghdad- I wore a Tarbush for five years till its reddish color became white and very old looking. My Persian "Gaba" I wore for 5 years, and I never thought that there were new clothes in this world. I never dreamed to borrow money and buy clothes with. I was very happy with what I had. At this time if I did not have the means to pay for this room I would have slept in a cell just as happily and if I could not get the cell I would have gone into the God's country and slept there peacefully never dreaming that there is such a thing as a room.

{{p3}}

Speaking about gluttony and over-eating the Beloved said: "One must eat in moderation. Man is not created for food. He must not indulge in eating too much. Over-eating is the cause of many diseases. Rise from the Table always before you are satisfied. One must have been retrograded to the lowest point as to be perfectly satisfied with eating, drinking and sleeping. The enjoyment of man comes through the unfoldment of his intellect, intelligence, the virtues of the world of humanity and the divine characteristics. Man has two aspects; a spiritual and an animal aspect. His animal side is sustained through food and drink like unto other beasts but his spiritual life is fed by the ideal perfections, faith, assurance, the Knowledge of God and the Love of God. More attention must be given to the latter than the former.

{{p4}}

I was sent to the Custom House after a box of Persian tea which has been sent from Alexandria for the Master. Having attended to this work I returned about noon when I found Mon. Dreyfus translating in the Salon. There were a number of seekers present. After this the Master took a walk and we had our lunch. Mirza Mahmoud and myself went to hotel Continental where we were invited to hear the Indian Concert. There were more than 200 people, amongst them many Bahais. Hindu music is so different from Western ideas of music that one cannot compare them at all, however we enjoyed a pleasant afternoon and returned about half past five.

{{p5}}

Last night we received a telegram from Consul Schwarz that he and his wife will be here tomorrow morning. When they arrived they went to Baltimore Hotel and got their rooms. While I was absent they came here and spoke with the Master in English.

He told them to return at six o'clock. Of course I was very happy to see them.

They are such excellent Bahais. They presented to the Master the love and devotion of the German friend. He told them: I am most pleased to meet you again in Paris. My heart hears testimony to the fact that the Stuttgart Bahais are most sincere. The days of Stuttgart and your hospitality shall never be forgotten. In reality the believers are united and agreed. The Cause shall progress greatly. Your children are always remembered by me. You have excellent daughter. She is attracted and enkindled. She will become a great teacher in this Cause.

Some souls are withered and do not become interested nor are they set a glow; while others receive the fire of the Love of God immediately. During the few days of our stay in Stuttgart your daughter made marvelous spiritual progress. Other matters were discussed and they left the Presence most inspired.

Mr. Lee came in and the Master praised in the warmest and most eloquent manner Miss Hodgson who has really served the Cause most faithfully.

{{p6}}

Tonight the meeting in Mon. and Madame Dreyfus was very heavenly. The Master in his address introduced in the most sympathetic manner Consul and Madame Schwarz and laid great stress in the unifying power of Baha-Ullah. Before the Master the Consul spoke very nicely in French about the Cause in Stuttgart. The Master took his dinner in Mon. Dreyfus. Everybody in the meeting was happy.

Address of Abdul Baha on Friday evening May 30, 1913

At the house of Mr. and Madame Dreyfus. Paris.

Translated from Persian notes by M. Ahmad Sahrat

This is a blessed night because Consul Schwarz and his respectful wife have come from Germany with the greatest of longing so that they may associate with you. Consider how great is the power of Baha-Ullah! It is unparalleled and unique in the history of the world. There noble souls have come from Stuttgart, some of those who are present are from America, France and England are well represented in this meeting and we come from far of Persia. Yet the invisible power of the Blessed Perfection has established amongst us a harmony and concord which are eternal. It is impossible to bring about this ideal condition through human agency. The Divine Potency and Dominion are alone enabled to unite these hearts. The powers of humankind establish between the people a kind of communication which is limited in its influence, but the pure love which is cordial, heartfelt and free from all the graces of self and desire, measureless and changeless, is created by the power of God. Today when I looked in the faces of Consul Schwarz and his revered wife, it was as though I met my own dear son and beloved daughter. My joy and happiness was inexpressible. This relation is made possible through the spiritual and Divine Power; other relations such as the family which unites the various members of a family; or patriotic sentiment which brings together the individuals of a nation or racial idea which cements together the social units of a tribe or community; all such relations are limited in their spheres of activity. The love which welds together the members of various nations; divergent races and different religions, and causes them to associate with each other with love and family, that love is divine and celestial in origin; because such a love is spiritual and heavenly, which casts all the various communities and tribes in one universal world of fraternity making organs of one great temple, suffering them to become the members of one family and the inhabitants of one country and uniting them with such an irresistible force that will become indissoluble throughout all eternity. As own union and communication are made possible through this divine power, therefore no power on earth is able to break them. Consequently let us all thank his holiness Baha-Ullah who has brought all of us together, creating amongst us such affinity and cooperation; under the all-protecting shadow of his word, making us all the limits of one body protecting and guarding us from all evil.

He has quickened spirit. He has assisted all with heavenly confirmation and has pitched such a tent under which all nations and people will gather.

He commands us to unfurl the banner of the oneness of the World of Humanity and become the means of the closer relationship between the East and the West, and practicing the doctrine of human solidarity and brotherhood; thus the lights of the Kingdom may illumine the hearts of the inhabitants of the Orient and the Occident.

This is a blessed night because the spirit of reality is waving, the rays of the Suns of Truth enlighten the souls and the minds, the fragrant breezes of Providence are marling, the cloud of Mercy pours down the rain and the breath of the Holy Spirit stirs the heart. The confirmations of the Kingdom of Abha are conducive to the appearance of these spiritual lights, thus distributing amongst us the eternal bestowals and sending to us these revered souls from Germany as heavenly presents.

Dear Harriet!

I am thinking of Mt. Carmel and Acca; of Reziwan Garden and the Blessed Tomb of Baha-Ullah; of many holy men and places that it shall be my privilege to meet and to see. The Orient with all its iridescent beauty; the clearness of its sky; the dazzling brilliancy of its stars; the stillness of its atmosphere; the radiance of its spirituality; the transparency of its ideals- will be unfolded before my wondering eyes like a magic panorama. How I long to steep myself in that lustrous sea of idealism! My true Oriental disposition that was hidden for many years, owing to the active, energetic life of America shall leap forth into being, assisting me to fully enjoy and assimilate all the things that are charmingly Oriental. I have been a wanderer for many years, travelling through strange lands, always finding good staunch friends. This has been made possible through the Favors and Bounty of Baha-Ullah; otherwise what am I and who am I to win even one single friend! I believe that if I thank God all my life, it will not be sufficient. I am not worthy at all but I hope I will become enabled in the future to render great many services to the Cause. I pray daily for greater illumination and spirituality for all the believers of God and for myself. May all of us become the spreaders of joy and not sorrow.

This morning the Beloved called me very early into his room and for two hours, he spoke on certain subjects pertaining to the future of the Cause. He was in great earnestness and now and then his voice was raised to a very high pitch. When deep feelings, owing to certain outside events encircle his heart, he is divinely irresistible. On these occasions- which are observed rarely by anyone- he is under the entire control of heavenly emotions. Every word he utters is like into a flame, descending from the sky; his two eyes become like unto two burning torches and his Countenance, at every second, while speaking manifest the infinite range of the human and divine susceptibilities!

{{p3}}

He told me to go and call on Consul and Madame Schwarz and take for them on his part a bouquet of roses. I did so and you can easily realize how happy and delighted were they. On my return he was walking in the salon. He said: Consul and Madame Schwarz are very sincere Bahais. I love them very much. They are holy souls. This kind of love is good because it is for the sake of God.

{{p4}}

Later on Mon. Boutaric, a Bahai from Toulouse came in to see the Master. He was greeted with warm cordiality. He gave the details of the progress of the Cause in that city and the interest of the public. The Master told him: When you return, strive in the promotion of the Cause in your midst. Illumine thou the souls. Establish in that city the Center of the lights of God. The Confirmations of God shall descend upon thee.

{{p5}}

Consul and Madame Schwarz with several other believers came in. In introducing these two blessed souls to those who were present the Master beautifully said: These are the hundred petalled roses from the garden of Stuttgart. I hope that all of you will become the sweet fragrant roses of the Paradise of Abha which are never withered. He spoke them in details about the attraction and enthusiasm of the German Bahais.

{{p6}}

At this juncture the brother of the Khedive of Egypt with two other important personages came in and the Master took them into his own room and hold a very long conversation with them. The Master met His Royal Highness the Khedive's brother while travelling in America.

{{p7}}

In the afternoon he called on Consul and Madame Schwarz in Baltimore and for half an hour he talked with them and returned to our hotel. There were a few friends present. One of them said: The world of creation is like unto music. Man is the Sound; woman is the Silence; for this reason I do not sympathize with the violent actions of the alarmist suffragettes. Woman decreases her spiritual qualities by entering into the professional life. The Master longingly remarked: You better not express such ideas before a Suffragette meeting. They will shoot you down from the platform. The time when the woman wanted to be "silence" is passed. I am going to advise the head Suffragette in London that you have a foe to your Cause in the person of. She said for this very strong belief she was shy at speaking in the public meetings, although Abdul Baha has often encouraged her to do so. The Master said: In the Kingdom of God everybody must be "Sound". There is no "Silence". There is no distinction of gender. Man and woman are co-workers and co-partners in the promulgation of the heavenly message.

{{p8}}

Accompanied by myself the Master drove for nearly two hours, calling on different people and it so strongly happened that no one of them was at home. The last call was on Mrs. Lilianthal and Mrs. Beede in International hotel. He wanted for than half an hour but they did not came, having taken a car ride to Versailles. Finally we returned home. Mon. and Madame Richard came to see him and they had a long conversation on spiritual topics. He is teaching them so that when he leaves Paris they may be assisted in the spread of the principles amongst the French people.

Martha-Pension Family-Hotel 97, rue Lauriston Paris. June 1st 1913

Dear Harriet!

Another month is opened and the Beloved is in Paris, teaching and administering to those who are spiritually needy. We are all has King under the sunshine of his universal Spirit. People love him and flock around him. His holy, pure heart knows no distinction of race and nationality. In his estimation they are one. He has the miraculous power of gathering around himself the most divergent elements of society wherever he goes. In future Paris will be proud because the Sun of Reality shone forth from its horizon for such a long time. The Shepherd has been in their midst and his voice has been raised.

{{p2}}

Today we had three new comers from the East. Mirza Jalal who has just returned from Haifa; Mirza Ali Akbar Nah Kjevony from Russia, via Constantinople and Acca, our own Mirza Ali Akbar who was with us in America and Hashmatullah Saheb from Agra, India. We were most pleased to receive these three friends from three divergent parts of the East, showing the unifying power of Baha-Ullah. When Hashmatullah who is a tall Indian young man and who is going to England to complete his studies was presented to the Master, he inquired sympathetically about the believers of Bombay, Raugoon and Calentta mentioning many names. He spoke about natural and divine philosophy but in these days Europe is why studying natural philosophy to the exclusion of the other.

{{p3}}

The name of Mirza Mohamad Reza Shirazi was mentioned, who recently has made an extensive trip throughout India, spreading the message and preparing the way for the coming of Abdul Baha. "Yes" the Beloved said, "I read about it in an English newspaper when I was in London. Consider what a glorious effect has the power of teaching the Cause! I intend to make a voyage to India. I like very much to do so if divine destiny agrees with my plan."

{{p4}}

Mirza Jalal come in and gave them news of Haifa and Egypt. The most effective news was that nearly 50 pilgrims from all parts of the Orient are anxiously waiting the arrival of the Beloved. Some of them have been waiting for more than 5 months. The news of Acca cheered his heart. Acca is the center of this Cause and when good news is received from that center, the rest will be alright.

{{p5}}

Mirza Ali Akbar with happy face went to see the Beloved. He had been through many cities since his departure from America giving the good news of the promotion of the Cause in the United States. He has covered more than 20,000 miles. Leaving America he visited Paris and the friends then he went to Vienna and met some prominent Persians. From Vienna he went to Odessa, Batum, Tiflis, Ganjeh, Bakon, Gersnavonsky, Eshkabad, Marve, Tajan, Gahgahe, Samarkand; then he returned to Eshkabad and by way of Bakon and Teflis went to Irevan, Nahkjivan, JOlfa, Morand and finally Gabriz.

In each one of these cities large meetings were organized where he addressed friends and strangers. Now he returns to the Master laden with spiritual victories but the same humble, quiet, forceful, calm man. When the Beloved heard the names of all the cities wherein he had spoken with the friends he made a sign of pleasure and said: When our enemies exiled us from Teheran, they were dancing with joy because they thought this Cause will come to an end. From Teheran to Baghdad there were only one or two Bahais. The rulers of Persia gleefully exclaimed that he had uprooted the tree of this Cause. Now consider how in all these places there are so many Bahais. A French woman was present and asked questions about the return of Christ and the expectation of the Theosophists. The Master gave her comprehensive answers and she was made most happy.

{{p6}}

At three o'clock we got an automobile and the Master followed by me called on the brother of Khedive in the hotel Imperial in Rue Christopher Colombe. The Beloved read to him the Arabic Text of his address in Oxford and spoke upon other interesting subjects.

{{p7}}

From there he called on the Turkish Minister to Spain who is at present sojourning in Paris. He knew his father the first time Baha-Ullah was taken to Constantinople. Tea was served and the Master spoke on Turkish political poetry and the events which are transpiring now. From here which was 15 Rue de la Nople we drove to Mon. and Madame Dreyfus. They were not in but the Beloved rested for a few minutes and returned to the hotel. here one of the celebrated Persian Editors was waiting and the Master received him with due courtesy and took him to his room to speak with him.

{{p8}}

Afterward Consul and Madame Schwarz came in. They asked many questions about the meetings and how they should be conducted. He gave them satisfying answers and they left his Blessed Presence with joy and fragrance. As he sent me out to call on S.M., I returned late and had the privilege of eating with him. Mirza Jalal and Mirza Ali Akbar were in his Presence giving further news about their trips.

Our departure for Egypt will be surely within the next two weeks.

Martha-Pension Family-Hotel 97, rue Lauriston Paris. June 2nd 1913

{{p1}}

Dear Harriet!

The news that there are 50 pilgrims in Haifa who have arrived from different parts of the Orient has made a deep impression and the Master is speaking to leave Paris soon. Today he cabled to Ahmad Yazdi in Port said not to forward any more letters, thus showing his determination for an early departure. Just think of the patience of those Oriental Bahais who have been waiting and waiting, some of them for six months, daily looking toward the sea for the arrival of the King of their hearts! We cannot but admire their heavenly endurance!

{{p2}}

This morning as we came down to go to the dining room for breakfast the Master was walking from one end of the salon to the other and Mirza Ali Akbar was relating to him the different anecdotes of his travels. Then he went out to take a walk and on his return S.Z. one of the most prominent nobles of Persia with three other Persians came to pay him a visit. For two hours he spoke on the Cause; on his historical address in San Francisco Synagogue and on the life and teachings of Baha-Ullah. Toward the end he told them the story of an assassin who had killed 75 Bahais and while the Blessed Perfection was in Baghdad he came there and took refuge at the holy Threshold; because he was haunted by his enemies. Baha-Ullah protected him and he would go everywhere with perfect security, declaring that he was the freedman of Baha-Ullah.

{{p3}}

After his lunch in his room he slept for a little while and at half past two he came down stair and spoke with a number of Persians who were gathered together talking about the Persian revolution. At three o'clock Zelle-ul-Sultan, the son of Naserddin Shah and for many years the governor-general of Esphadan came to see the Beloved. He was conducted to his room and there they were together for about an hour. Afterward he told me some of the things they talked about.

{{p4}}

At five o'clock he took with him in an automobile. Mohasser-ul-Molk, the brother of Sardar Monsour, Hashmatullah Saheb, Mirza Ali Akbar and myself to go to the meeting of Mr. and Mrs. Scott. The rest came by subway. There were quite a large number of friends present and after Madame Richard's interesting talk the Beloved gave a short farewell address toward the end of which with ringing voice and eloquent words he dwelt on the Center of the Covenant.

{{p5}}

The automobile of Madame Dreyfus we drove to the home of the mother of Mon. Dreyfus. The master entered her room and was very loving and kind to her. She is in bed and very weak physically. She loves the Master. Whenever his name is mentioned, her eyes are filled with tears. He read over her a short, beautiful prayer and most touchingly kissed her forehead.

{{p6}}

Then we quickly drove to Mon. Dreyfus where he rested for a few minutes, drunk a cup of coffee and was driven again to Madame Jackson's home. We waited for a few minutes before she was ready to receive us. She was sitting on a chair. Her sister, her niece and another woman nurse her and attend to all her physical needs. The Master spoke with her very beautifully about the glories of the other life and how he hoped that they will meet each other there; in that world of light wherein there will be no separation. Her eyes were filled with tears. The Master arose from his seat and kissed her head once, twice and thrice. It was the most heavenly scene that I had ever seen. He was the embodiment of gentleness, compassion and spiritual sympathy. "I will always remember you and will pray for you” was the parting word as he left her room probably never to be seen again.

We drove to Hotel International where we were the guests of Mrs. Lilianthal for dinner. Consul and Madame Schwarz, Mon. and Madame Dreyfus, Mirza Jalal and Mirza Ali Akbar, Mirza Mahmoud and Sayad Assadullah were amongst the invited guests. At a quarter of nine everybody was sitting around the beautifully decorated table; the Master at the head. Conversation was carried alongb quietly amongst us, now and then then Master adding a few divine word. After the dinner we came into the reception where coffee was served and for nearly an hour reincarnation was the topic of discussion. Then the master thanked most beautifully Mrs. Lilianthal for her reception and we walked back to the hotel.

Dear Harriet!

Glory be unto the Lord who hath illumined the world of ideals with the lights of Baha-Ullah! Praise be unto the Maker of the heavens and earth who hath opened the doors of the Kingdom of Might! Thanksgiving be unto God who hath ushered in the age of radiance! Majesty be unto the King of Kings who has appeared riding on the white clouds of power and potency! Glorification be unto Abdul Baha who has propagated the heavenly Teachings in all parts of the world! Commendation be unto the Holy-Spirit who hath inspired the hearts of the faithful ones to arise in his Service!

{{p2}}

This morning an intelligent member of the order of the Star of the East by appointment came to see the Beloved and she talked really with such understanding and clear conception that I was surprised. The Beloved then spoke on the conditions of the second coming of Christ and how they were all fulfilled in the Personality of Baha-Ullah! She listened most attentively to all his explanations and she left his Presence inspired with anew courage and a new hope.

{{p3}}

Madame D’Astre came telling the Master about her approaching journey as a nurse to Constantinople; Consul and Madame Schwarz, Mon. and Madame Dreyfus and many others, each one receiving the great blessing of his divine words. At two o’clock the Beloved accompanied by Mirza Jalal went to call on his daughter and returned about four.

{{p4}}

At five Sardar Monsour with his brother called on the Master and with him we drove to Imperial Hotel to call on the brother of Khadine. The Beloved introduced the three representative men of Persia and Egypt to each other, thus establishing a link of ideal communication between them. Then they started to talk on the closer union of the East and of the West, the better relations between the various nations and religions of the Orient and the removal of misunderstanding from amongst them. The Beloved spoke at this important meeting in very eloquent Turkish, reciting stories of ancient time illustrating the valor, the civilization and the courage of those old nations under all emergencies.

{{p5}}

Returning to the hotel and after an hour of rest Consul and Madame Schwarz came to say goodbye as they were going to leave tonight at 9 o'clock for Stuttgart. They had brought a box of chocolate for the Beloved and he accepted it blessed it and gave it back to them to carry with them and on his behalf give one to each of the Bahais and two to each one of their children. He showered upon them his wonderful blessing and on their departure he embraced Consul Schwarz and kissed him many times. They are certainly the elect in the Kingdom of Abha.

In speaking to these two divine souls the Master gave a detailed description of Mary Magdalene's firmness and steadfastness in the Cause of Christ and how she alone was instrumental of making the shaking feet of the Apostles firm. Then he said: "Therefore I love her very much."

Consul and Madame Schwarz expressed regret at their early departure and their inability to stay longer. The Beloved said: You are with me and you are in my heart. You are not going away. You are in my presence. After a moment of silence he raised his divine voice and addressing them he said: Convey my wonderful Abha greeting to each and all the believers of God and say: His Holiness Christ saw that people shall come from all parts of the world, from remote countries and enter into the Kingdom shall go out. Now how many inhabitants of Persia are deprived of the Graces of His Holiness Baha-Ullah and you who are from the remote places of the earth have entered in the Kingdom of the Blessed Perfection. Therefore you must render thanksgiving unto the Lord of Mankind that ye are in the utmost state of joy and happiness and that God through his own mercy hath chosen you and granted you entrance into his divine Kingdom. The value of this Bestowal is not known at present; it will become appreciated in the future. The spiritual station of the Apostles who entered in the Kingdom of Christ was not known in this own days. When Mary Magdalene embraced the Cause of Christ no one gave any importance to her, no one ever mentioned her name. Outwardly not the least importance was attached to them; but it became known afterwards and the great privilege of entrance into the Kingdom of Christ was appreciated. Similarly because you have entered in the Kingdom of Baha-Ullah in this day, your station in not understood in the future. When the seeds are hidden beneath the soil there is nothing to attract the attention of the passersby; but when these seeds grow into well-laden shepherd and when many has vests are gathered, then it will become manifest. I hope to receive always good news from you; such glad news that may impart joy to the hearts of the friends in the Orient; so that they may speak about your good services in their assemblages. May you be drawn nearer unto God day unto day! May you become more illumined day unto day! May your number increase day unto day! May your love and affection be argued day unto day! The attainment to this Supreme and ultimate station depends upon firmness in the Covenant of God in this day! Therefore I exhort you to be steadfast in the divine Covenant. You are always in my mind. Your attraction, enkindlement and sincerity in the Cause are never to be forgotten. Your faces are in my heart. I will remember you always and ever pray at the Threshold of Baha-Ullah for your assistance and Confirmation.

Mon. and Madame Dreyfus were present at this meeting and as the Master spoke about Mary Magdalene they told him about a play on the stage in the theatre Chatelet about her life and requested him to go and see it. The Beloved accepted their invitation and at a quarter of nine they came with automobile and took him away to the theatre. It was about midnight when he returned and I have no doubt he has enjoyed it. I will in time ask about his impressions.

{{p1}}

Dear Harriet!

Mr. Horace Holly's book on the Bahai Movement from many standpoints is significant. He writes on the social, economic and philosophic aspects of the Cause and shows clearly the sublime beauty and simplicity of these teachings. He brought the first proof for a few hours and I glanced over the various chapters. The publisher will have it ready for circulation within the next few weeks and I believe every Bahai must avail himself of the opportunity of acquiring one copy. It is a book that needs study.

{{p2}}

The art of writing is 20 wonderful; the genius of expressing one's thoughts clearly and unequivocally get more wonderful. The more we have able writers and thinkers in the Bahai Cause the richer we shall be. To everyone a gift is given and those who are fortunately endowed with the gift of writing they must develop it. When God in His bounty gives us the Capital we must use it in the proper channels and invest it with sagacity and wisdom; otherwise it will be taken away from us. Writing preserves for future generations the soul, the longing, the mind of the writer and thus the future and the past are linked together by an invisible tie.

{{p3}}

On the other hand a man who expresses lofty ideals on the moral aspect of humanity, must first translate those ideals in his daily life- then he will become able to influence the lives of others. The message and the messenger must become one and flow into each other. This is the difference between the prophets and the philosophers. The prophets lives his message every hour of the day and night; to the philosopher, his ideals are like unto suite of clothes which he may put on or take off. Whenever the world needs a dynamic example of life and ideals, God sends a prophet; thus the old message is lived again, becomes vocal and finds a living expression. In this sense Abdul Baha is today an "Ambassador to Humanity"; the Ambassador of a burning message of love and friendship. When one reads his message on paper- as it is already separated from the messenger- one may not be moved by it but when one listens to his words falling from his holy lips one realizes that the message and the messenger have become one and that at all but deeds. One cannot write or say enough of the wondrous influence of his spiritual life, his deep-rooted rectitude and his divine, beatific ideals. Singly and alone he has been able to conquer the world. Without an army without worldly influence, wealth and position, he rules over the realms of hearts and minds. For forty years he withstood the hardships and vicissitudes of prison life and finally he defeated with the force of love all his enemies. The banners of two despotic Kings were brought down and the banner of Abdul Baha was unfurled over distant countries! This is through the irresistible power of God! Before this great, unparalleled victory, all the victories of the world dwindle into insignificance! The traces of this victory shall cover the face of the earth and regenerate the world of humanity and usher in the age of Peace and Love.

{{p4}}

This morning a few letters from America were read to the Master but he did not have time to answer them. He was glad to hear the news however, notwithstanding his many engagements, he has found time to write many Tablets with his own hands which means so much to those who receive them. He sent me out to call on various persons presenting his greeting and salutation. Have he thinks of everyone, hath great and small! About eleven o'clock he came down and spoke at length on divine happiness which is ever the same and unchangeable. He exhorted the friends to gain entrance into the gardens of heavenly beatitude and call the flowers of ideal significance. He hoped that they will overlook the world and its chameleon conditions and will ever gaze toward the heavens of spiritual joy. In short his heart to heart talk made a deep impression and we carried with ourselves a higher realization of his exalted power.

With Mirza Jalal he went out and payed a long call on Rachid Pasha who has moved from his old apartment to a new quarter. On his return he took his simple lunch in his own room and at 3 o'clock I found myself sitting beside him in automobile driving toward the Imperial Hotel to call again on the brother of Khedine. Here the Master met a Syrian naturalist and had a lively discussion with him on divine and natural philosophy. The naturalist become very much interested but after half an hour in company with the brother of Khedine, the Master called on Sadar Monsour by appointment. Tea was served and for two hours happy and intimate conversation continued. The apart, of Sadar Monsour is beautifully furnished with Oriental draperies and Persian rugs and these interesting objects were shown to the brother of Khedine before we left. Sadar Monsour's personal automobile was waiting for us down stair and after the exchange of true Oriental courtesies we were again driven to our hotel. He rested for half an hour and then he went out followed by me to call on Mon. and Madame Dreyfus. They were not in and we returned.

On our way he bought some cherries but before reaching the hotel he had distributed them amongst the children in the street. The children know him by this time and every time they see him they gather around him. He said: These are my friends. Their parents may not understand the love that I entertain for them. They may ask of themselves, why this Eastern man loves so much our children, while in reality there exists between us no racial or family relations! And he gave the last handful of cherries to a little girl and kissed her on both cheeks.

In the evening Mon. and Madame Richard came for another interview and Doctor Mohamad Khan acted as interpreter.

Dear Harriet!

The greatest gift of religion is the bestowal of internal peace and the attainment of spirit to a calm, undisturbed equilibrium. Neither philosophy nor science offers to a world shaken with the contrary minds of unbelief and agnosticism such a balm of conscious peace. The present day religions are so hoodwinked by blind dogmas and ecclesiasticism that they have forgotten the old, true Teachings and are clinging to the ropes of sand. Their lanterns being extinct, they cannot show the royal Pathway to the wonderers in the wilderness of doubt and hesitation. Nor the various Societies or organizations which have incorporated in their platforms lofty ideals and humanitarian principles are able to establish the Kingdom of eternal peace in the empire of our hearts. All the present day institutions make the confusion worse confounded and to the clash and noise of human world.

The religion of Baha-Ullah is the only living religion to read just human tendencies and to grant man the desired praise and serenity. This regeneration is brought about, not because, this religion contains a set of divine principles but because it is energized by a dynamic personality such as that of Abdul Baha. He alone- as the Perfect Man- is able to confer upon the person that desired internal Peace which is capable to make him calm, equip-praises and spiritual. Having reached to that high station wherein no event disturb the balance of our consciousness, we have acquired the greatest Favor of God.

{{p3}}

The pleasures of the world and their alluring tinsels distract the mind and dissipate our God-like faculties. Only by turning our faces toward the Kingdom of Abha, wherein, Abdul Baha eternally dwells, do we find that peace which passeth all understanding. The establishment of an external peace amongst nations will be only a faint symbol of the Peace to be established in the hearts of men. Today the hearts are too easily swayed by the conflicting emotions, various interests and contradictory reports; lacking that heavenly serenity, that ineffable calmness, that sweet content which alone descend from heaven. The brood effluence of light which radiates from the Spiritual Personality of the Beloved must illumine every heart and banish away the habgoblins of despair and hopelessness. The great awakening sooner or later must come in the life of each individual; otherwise he has lived a most prosaic life, contenting himself with the shell instead of the kernel.

{{p4}}

The sea of Light beckons us to go onward, to rush forward and be immersed in it. In that sea we will not be drowned but light footed, we will walk over its marmoreal surface or ride over the high crest of its tumultous waves or swim dexterously from shore to shore or dive to its calm depth, wherein, we will behold the wonders of God's creation. Once immersed in that sea all the human qualities are dropped away; the fallen will rise to the heaven of glory; the lame will walk, the dumb will speak and the satanic attributes transfigured into angelic characteristics. Then one finds that internal Peace, the lustrous hues of which shall add charm and attraction to his life and added beauty and sublimity to his nature.

Today I was busy all morning translating an excellent report by Mr. Jos. H. Hannen on the activities and festivities of the New York Convention. The Master called me early to dictate Tablets but as I had started to translate the first report at hand- that of Mr. Hannen- he was so pleased with it that he told me to go back and finish translating it as he desired to show it to some very prominent Persians. It was a report of twelve typewritten pages and it took me all morning to translate. Immediately Mirza Mahmoud was put to work to write two copies- one for Sardar Zafar and another for Sardar Monsour. Copies will also be made to be forwarded to Oriental Assemblies.

In the afternoon the Master called on important Turkish and Persian personages to bid them farewell; and now and then he was in the hotel speaking with new callers. He asked me to write the address of those whom he desired to see on pieces of paper. He would then call a taxi, show the address to the driver and enter in.

{{p6}}

In the evening the Master, Mirza Mahmoud, Sayad Assadullah, Mirza Jalal, Mirza Ali Akbar, Hashmatullah, Doctor Mahmoud Khan and myself were invited to a Persian supper in the house of Mon. and Madame Dreyfus. The Beloved enjoyed the supper very much and it was about half past ten when we walked back to the hotel behind the King of Kings. Tonight I dreamed I am in Port Said and Haiffa, walking on the mountain of the Lord.

{{p1}}

Dear Harriet!

So far as I know nextweek the Beloved shall said Eastwood from Marseilles. After nearly 6 months sojourn in Europe and after the diffusion of the lights of the Kingdom of Abha , the sun of God's Covenant shall again shine from the Eastern horizon. It will be the work of future historians and thinkers to marshal the most important facts of Abdul Psaha's American and European tour and focus them before the gaze of generations yet unborn. For the present we are too near the heavenly luminary and we cannot portray the right properties of light and shade. There must needs be a power of reflection historic mind and the concentrated force of poetic imagination and sublime insight into the spiritual value of every event connected with the Western ... Master's in order to describe and give to its exact significance in the history of the Bahai world. But today we have have no time for such interpretations of the his deeds and words. We have hardly time to record them; how much more to weigh them with our puny intelligence. This is the season of seed-sowing and any other work will have limited results. We must arise with the utmost sincerity and devotion to raise the Call of the Kingdom and unfurl the Banner of the Oneness of the world of humanity. This is the most important affair. The Master has practically finished his work in the West. It is now the time for the friends of God to walk in his path, to spread his Teachings and to become imbued with his attributes.

It is of course the greatest joy and privilege of my life to accompany him where ever he goes! In this world there is no greater honor than this! Six months ago and I could not realize this; three months ago I could see it very dimly and now although i cannot see it very clearly, because it is too gloriously dazzling - yet I can see it better than dimly. I can tell you without exaggeration that if they had made me to choose between the wealth of an American multi-millionaires and the servitude of Abdul Baha, I would have chosen eagerly and happily the latter. Thralthom at his Threshold is glory; death in his path is life. No one on the face of the earth is worthy to stand one moment in his holy Presence even the essence of sanctity is ashamed to show an a appearance in his Court, because the sanctity of Abdul Baha does not belong to this earth, it is heavenly. therefore, were it not for his pure bounty and favor, his ineffable sweetness and patient fault-covering, we could not stand the majesty of his station and the grandeur of his love. His Mercy like unto the sun shines upon the just and the unjust alike. The fruits of the tree of his existence are shared by all the children of men. His luminous ideas like unto the searchlight pierce through the impenetrable darkness.

From the fountain of his heart, the river of life flows on and on. His bestowals are not suspended and his Graces are continuous. His love and kindness are genuine, The flowers of the garden of his mind are never fading. The simplicity of his conceptions is miraculous and the verdant meadow of his being is starred with delicate primroses and odorous violets.

This morning the Beloved was happy and well and as he came down he as he came down he asked me to call on his half on some people which I did with great pleasure. On my return a few Americans, Parisians and Turkish eager to hear him were sitting in the room. Each person was asking question and the Master was answering them. He spoke about the wonderful power of faith and how it transforms man from the lower to the highest station of life. Faith changes the crown of thorns into the diadem of Jewels. Today all the crowned heads the world are hundred before that crown of thorn.

{{p4}}

One of the present ladies had two in the school and asked the Master to pray for their success. Mrs. More asked several questions about the evolution of matter and the spirit and satisfying answers were given. Their Ahmad Pasha came and invited the Master to his house for tonight where several lately arrived Pashas are also invited to meet him. He accepted it and asked the Persian friends to attend the meeting in Mow Dreyfus apartment which they did except myself; for I did not feel well now have I the last few weeks.

{{p1}}

Dear Harriet!

How glorious it would be if we could truly appreciate the heavenly Bounties with which we are surrounded! Our divine Maker in his love and affection has granted to us every means of spiritual enjoyment. Day unto day his favors are becoming more manifold! He bids us to take a goodly portion from these celestial Bestowals and invites us graciously to enter in the Congregation of the elect. He exhorts us to purify our cars so that we may hear the ethereal music of the angels and He reminds us to cleanse our hearts in order that He may come and abide therein forever. He desires that the Bahai world may live so unitedly and happily together so as to have the appreciation of one family! Today {{p2}} I received a beautiful letter from Blanfield in London in whose apartment the Master stayed during his sojourn there. I would like to quote herein just one paragraph showing her deep sincere appreciation:-"Was even such a glorious time for one family, since the time of Christ! it seemed historical, poetic, dramatic, divine! A History such as is written in the History Book of Creation or rather in the annals of heaven...I suppose it would take thousands of years to realize how near we have been to someone so Divine as He. There are many today who play a part in this Drama, and we too one day may hope to. We shall never forget our Friend, we shall remember Him all our lives and even afterwards: such must be the feeling and the emotion of every Bahai, because once we drink from the spring of life and quaff the chalice of divine Bounty we are eternally satisfied and always ready to sacrifice our lives for him.

This morning the Beloved called me into his Presence and asked dear Sayad Assadullah to bring tea. Mirza Jalal was also present. Speaking about Khosro his cook and attendant who was going with him to America but was detained in Naples and sent back he said:-Khosro is in reality very sincere. On our first trip in Europe he served us very faithfully. He served most willingly all the Persians friends. He clothes and shined their shoes. He would laughingly say, when I return to Palestine people will come and ask me you have been in Paris. What did you see? How is Paris like I would say, Paris is like a Kitchen, a small, narrow Kitchen. This, because he was most of the time in the Kitchen and did not have any opportunity to go out sightseeing. However, he was loved by everyone. I was sorry to lose him in Naples. Muza Jalal told several stories about Khosro's inventive genius and how he is extremely clever in handling every kind of instrument.

{{p4}}

The contents of a few letters received from Newyork, Los Angeles and San Francisco were presented to the Master. Another cabb was received from Haiffa telling us about the 50 pilgrims and what should they do. An answer was sent that assuredly within two weeks we will be in Port Said.

{{p5}}

A number of the believers came in amongst there Mr Scott. The Master told him: In this ephemeral world there is no greater joy for me than the meeting of the friends of God. Whenever I see them involuntarily, I am made happy. I love to see you very after. I shall never forget you; because your heart is the expression of your face. It is very pure, very clear and transparent. I hope someday you will cause to the Holy Land and there we will meet each other. I trust that in Paris you may because well-known in Bahai life and Character, to such an extent that every one may become astonished!

{{p6}}

With another Bahai he spoke about Joanne of Arc and her dauntless courage;- "The voices that she did hear from childhood were not outward, physical voices. They were spiritual revelations in her heart. It is very strange that the Popes in the beginning anathematized and excommunicated her from the church, but now they have canonized and made her a saint. At first, they said, that she was deprived from the Fairies of God and are denied lived in the center of her; now they say, she intercedes before the Throne of the Almighty for their sins! Under any circumstance, the Popes change if opinion shows conclusively the fallibility of their judgment.

{{p7}}

He came down and the question of teaching and spreading the Cause of God was discussed He said;- "Today, it is evident that the promotion of the word of God depends upon teaching and awakening the souls. For the execution of this great deed Baha-Allah has given us a heavenly Power. It is with this Power that the Bahais are attracting the people of all races and nations to the Kingdom of Abba! They have no other instrument except this. For the last ninety years the Western Missionaries have gone to Orumieh. They have built schools, hospitals and other charitable institutions in order to convert people to our so-called Christianity but during all this time they have not been able to attract one soul. This is because they have the machine but not the spirit. In Tiberias the Missionaries have built a modern hospital and clinics. The doctor has been serving there for 32 years. Atleast every year one thousand Jews enter the hospital and go out healed, but now of them became Christian. The doctor used to tell me that he was at his wits end in thinking out the {{p8}} reason of the success of the Bahais in the propagation of their teachings. Without any means at the disposal they succeed to make these Jews Bahais but with all these hospitals and schools and charity we don't seem to succeed. Why is this? I told him:-Think for our moment over this sigulor fact. The Jews who became Christians after the Apostolic age were not attracted to the Christian doctrine by hospital and schools because they had more of these. On the contrary, they were beaten, persecuted and killed. Not withstanding these things they accepted Christ. Why was this? Because these early teachers possessed the "heavenly power". With that power they were enabled to carry the gospel into district lands. Now in this day the Bahais are teaching the people with the same divine Power. They are baptized with the power of the Holy Spirit have forgotten ego and are soaring toward the Kingdom Sanctity. The most effecient capital of the Bahai teacher is the divine power. Through that alone he can conquer the cities of the hearts.

{{p9}}

Speaking with another person he said:- Our aim is these universal civilization of mankind. We desire to see all nations walking amicably in the high road of progress. The pathway is very broad and they will not crossed out each other this globe is our native land. How regrettable it is that today all the nations strive to advance their over especial interest to the exclusion of the neighbors, while our watchword is "the perfection of all humanity along all the degrees of civilization without limitation or restriction!

In the afternoon the Master with Mirza Ali Akbar, Doctor Mohammad Khan and myself drove through the beautiful Boiserie Balagne. We came down near a wonderful pasture of navigated flowers. He walked around and admired the artistic arrangements of the beds of so many flowers and of such rich, lustrous colors; then we drove to the Cascade and walked under it. It was a great sight! Then he walked toward the Cascade Pavillion and entered it. Here we drank tea in his presence. There was a bridal party and that interested the Beloved very much. After that we drove back to the hotel. The {{p11}} Master was invited tonight for dinner by Sardar Mausour. He look with himself Mirza Jalal, Mirza Ali Akbar and Sayad Assadullah. I witnessed his manifold forever displayed under all circumstances.

Dear Harriet!

The fresh and unfailing enthusiasm of Abdul Baha is a miracle of not only this age but of all the past and for all the future ages. Singly and alone he stands in a world run amuck with pessimism and hopelessness as a supreme example of happy inspiration, uplift and optimism to all mankind. The intense fanaticisms of the Eastern religionists against him, the early deprivation and reicissitudes, the subsequent persecutions and sufferings, the confiscation of all his estate an exile over many lands and seas, the close incarceration and confinement in the penal colony of Acca. The dramatic and tragic events of forty years imprisonment all these sorrowful happenings capable to break the straight will under their weights have passed over him, leaving behind no mark of bitterness against his fellow men. Today he is a source of joy and exultation to thousand upon thousand in all parts of the world. The more I think over this one fact of the life of the Beloved, the greater becomes my devotion and adoration for him. When I review before my mental eyes all the harrowing details of his epic life and when I see him daily brimming over with fiery enthusiasm, attraction and enkindlement, miracle is this! It is greater than all the miracles attributed to past prophets. The flowers of the garden of his heart are ever blooming, scattering Fragrance to all parts. The tress of his orchard are yielding luscious fruits and all mankind are eating thereof.

This morning we had the pleasure to welcome four believers from London; two Persians, two Londoners. Mirza Ali Akbar Rafsanjani and Mirza Lotfollah Ha Kim arrived very early, because they have been traveling all night but Mrs. Benjamin and Mrs. Heriot came later. The Master inquired from both about the London friends and they gave a glowing description of the many meetings which are held in different parts of the city. Praise be to God," the Beloved said, that the Light of Guidance hath shone forth, the Morn of Generosity hath appeared the Providence of God is all enriching; your eyes are being opened, your hearts are united together, your spirits are familiar with each other and you have beheld the rise of the Sun of Eternity. Although the eyes are very far from the sun, notwithstanding this, they can see its majesty and its glory. Therefore capacity is necessary; the spiritual nearness does not depend upon shape and time. I hope that we will be together in the divine world; in that holy and radiant world which is sanctified from all environments. We were together in the mineral, vegetable animal but the human kingdom is narrow and dock. I twist that we will meet each other in that realm which is infinite and which is luminous.

With another person he spoke about the Love of God, for when we possess that wonderful Bounty, we possess everything else Little by little his room was filled with the believers who have come to bid him farewell. He asked of one whether he loves Paris. The answer came in the affirmative. Then he said: "I love the believers in Paris, not the walls and the houses. The walls do not protect one from his ego. One must become the embodiment of divine love. This is the greatest fortress. Praise be to God that our relation is purely spiritual. Consider how the Love of God has united us together. We are associating with each other in the utmost of unity and love.

Outwardly I am leaving Paris but my spirit will be always with you. After me, you organize meetings speak in the gatherings, be always full of joy and beatitude so that day unto day you may become more spiritual, more radiant, more heavenly. Your duty is to serve the world of humanity through every channel, through every means. This is my hope for you.

He came down and gave another wonderful talk about taking care of the orphans and those who are in utter need.

He went out to take a walk and on his return he ate in his own soon and rested for a while. At 4'oclock Moneer Pasha came and had a long talk with the Master about the objects of the Baha'i movement.

{{p5}}

Mrs. Benjamin and Mrs. Heriot came in; because they were going to leave tonight for London, the Master invited them again to come and drink tea with him. They asked many questions about their weekly meeting and toward the last the Beloved told them to carry his greeting and love for the London Baha'is and tell them: Praise be to God that the lights of Bahaullah have environed you. I am most pleased with you, because you have arisen faithfully to diffuse the Glad tidings of the Kingdom of God. You will become greatly assisted and you shall with the aid of Bahaullah, hoist the banner of goodwill amongst all the nations of the world. You are very beloved to me. I always remember you. I hear testimony that you are sincere and that your faces are turned toward the Kingdom of Abha Arise with ye with the greatest effort to serve the Cause, to create love in the hearts and to promulgate the word of God. Praise be to God that ye are the active members of the Cause. Increase your activity in the path of greed. Through great joy, you must soon toward the heaven of reality. All the prophets and sanctified souls have yearned for this day and you have attained to it without any labor on your part. Therefore appreciate it.

{{p6}}

Two Persians came in to see him. They had also just arrived from London. He spoke to them in detail about his American tour and related the contents of some of his addresses in San Francisco. They were of course never seen him before. It was very late when he ascended the stairs and entered his room. Sayod Asssaullah had his simple suffer ready.

###June 9, 1913

Dear Harriet!

Four more presentations and the “heavenly drama” in the west will be closed, the curtain shall come down and the spiritual artist shall retire! The whole Western world has acclaimed him as the supreme and unique figure of this age and all other ages. He came to the West with the Sun of Reality in his mind and the garden of the Holy Spirit in his heart. These lights, he spread broadcast and these sweet fragrances he diffused all around. He blew in the trumpet and a {{p2}} resurrection was set up, the dead arose from their tombs, the ears were unstopped, the deaf became hearing, the dumb found eloquence, the halting and the lame walked like unto gazelles, the blind received sight; the cold winter of unbelief changed into the balmy springtime of faith; the sea of divine generosity set in motion; the depressed ones received a goodly portion; the poor became rich, the despondent hopeful; the pearls of wisdom and knowledge were distributed. The doors of the Kingdom of Abha were flung wide; the gates of the paradise of the Lord of Hosts were opened and mankind entered therein to listen to the heavenly nightingale, singing the mystic anthems of brotherhood and universal Peace {{p3}} more than ever.”

About 4 o'clock he called again on Rouha Khanom. On his return there were present our Jewish friends. He spoke with them about the coming of the Lord of lords in this latter day. He also encouraged them to speak about the extreme hospitality of the Oriental Baha'is to those Western Baha'is who were present at this interview. Then he went out to call on our many Turkish Pashas who have gathered just at this time in Paris. This last month the Beloved met many of the most prominent {{p4}} life of future generations. I do not know whether I shall succeed in this service, but be confident that I will do my best. There, in the heart of the East, the life is much sweeter the view of existence flows with gently rhythms and with a majestic calmness and limpid tranquility; here in the West life is a turbulent, waving sea, always tumultuous. The mountainous waves of intellectual activities and giant like industrial undertakings dash furiously against the enchantments of human lives, washing away the destruction brought. How many ships are wrecked on this active, surging sea and how many lives are totally lost! I shall try to depict to you the calm and contemplative East, the nobleness and gentleness of that tranquil river of life.

This morning the Beloved sent me to call on three important Persians to deliver his messages of love and to show them the translation of the Report of the Mashrekol Azkar Convention in New York as written by Mr. Jos. H. Hannen. They were all very interested and thought the feasts must have been very wonderful and the Bahai Cause taking greater hold of the people. On my return Mon. and Madame Dreyfus and a number of other friends were present. They handed me a letter which happened to be from your sister, Mrs. Inglis. The Master asked me from whom have I received the letter? I said it was from Mrs. Inglis, {{p6}} Mrs. Magee's daughter. There he said to all those who were present: I love all the members of the family of Mrs. Magee. It is a very blessed family. Whosoever enters in their apartment, returns very happy and rejoiced. Mrs. Inglis is one of the Baha'i women in America that I love and admire very much. She is my real daughter. She is the embodiment of the nobility and gentleness, very attracted and enkindled. Her husband is an excellent man, with real determination and firm resolution. I was very pleased to meet him. He is a true man. Mrs. Magee has another daughter. She writes to us after the news of the Cause. She informs us of what is going on in America. She also spreads our news amongst the different assemblies.

She is a very active, very pure girl. She loves the Cause very much. Once I was in meeting, Mrs. Ingles was asked to play Audrey. She did so, but with the greatest dignity and refinement. Everybody applauded her. Then he looked toward me; but he said with a twinkle in his Eyes Mirza Ahmad applauded her the most. He laughed everybody laughed.

Persian came with his wife and the Beloved talked with them a great deal, relating stories which I had never heard before. A cable was dispatched to American to forward all letters directly, Port Said.

After the general meetings down {{p8}} stairs, he went out to call on Ahmad Ezzat Pasha. At four o'clock he took a carriage all by himself and went out to pay his last visit on Moneer Pasha and his wife.

On his return he called on Miss Sanderson, met her mother, spoke to both of them very beautifully giving their heavenly consolation. He walked for hours through different avenues and with Mirza Jalal I followed him.

It was about half past nine we reached the hotel and at 10 o'clock Mon. and Madame Richard come in and had another long interviews with the Beloved.

I do nothing but talking about early departure from Paris. I want to fly away.

###June 10th 1913

Dear Harriet!

At last we shall leave after morrow for Egypt - the land of Mystery. We are full of joy and happiness, because the glorious Sun of the Covenant shall again arise from the Eastern horizon and illumine the hearts of those believers who have been deprived of the refulgent lights for a long time. There must be a great wisdom in his long stay in Europe - the cradle of militarism and wars. There is no doubt that his long presence will at last create a salutary effect. We hope very much that these contending nations will learn from him the sweet lesson of Peace and Salvation.

{{p2}}

This morning he called Mirza Ali Akbar and Mira Latfallah of London to his Presence and giving them the necessary instructions, commanded them to leave today for Stuttgart; stay there a week, associate with the friends and then return to London. About 11 o'clock I went with them to Gare de l'Est, bought their tickets and started them on their way; sending a telegram to Mr. Heirigel to meet at the station.

{{p3}}

The other Mirza Ali Akbar was sent by the Beloved to Cook's office to buy our tickets. Before eleven o'clock Persian and Americans, Turks and Parisians called to say bon voyage and with each Abdul Baha spoke affectionally and tenderly. Many of them cried because "we have learned to love you now than ever."

{{p4}}

About 4 o'clock he called again on Rouha Khanom. On his return there were present our Jewish friends. He spoke with them about the coming of the Lord of Lords in this latter day. He also encouraged them to speak about the extreme hospitality of the Oriental Baha'is to those Western Baha'is who were present at this interview. Then he went out to call on our many Turkish Pashas who have gathered just at this time in Paris. This last month the Beloved met many of the most prominent men in both Turkish and Persian governments. The effect of which will be very great for the Cause. In the evening Mon and Madame Bernard visited the Master and he spoke to them in length on the life of St. Peter.

It was altogether a busy day for the Beloved. Our may write pages and say hardly anything.

###June 11th 1913

Dear Harriet

This morning the mail brought a letter from Mrs. Ida Am Benjamin of San Francisco, now of London. It contained the sweet message of Hope, Love, Light and Unity. These are the inner symbols of the Baha'i life, the perfection of which we find in the holy temple of Abdul Baha. As these four attributes and as they carry a general message to all the friends on the eve of our departure for the Easter lands, I will quote them herein for the benefit of all:

Hope

You came to me in my early youth
In those dear old days gone by
When life was a joyous happy song,
And all was bright for you and I.<<

Love

You came to me in later years.
To soothe my griefs and woes,
You came to wipe away my tears,
And exterminate all my foes.<<

Light

You came as I am growing old.
A treasure within your hand,
One that I prize far more than gold,
Send to me by God's Command.<<

Unity

And now the Master's voice heard,
Bidding all join with hand and heart,
Hope, Love, Light, each sacred word,
Must tho' united play its part.
Transmuted to a higher plane,
These blessings shall become
As Jacob's Ladder we ascend
And all shall be as one.<<

{{p2}}

Today many believers came to see the Beloved. They were all sad because he is leaving Paris. To a number of them he said: With a pure heart and steadfast mind arise to spread the message of the Kingdom and speak with every one according to his capacity. Explain the divine subjects from the standpoint of the people. If the heart is pure and capacity exists, there is no doubt that the spiritual susceptibilities will play a tremendous influence.

{{p3}}

To another group he said: It is my hope that my heart be ever united with yours and the same spiritual susceptibilities that exist in my heart may be reflected in your hearts. May there be a great highway between my heart and your hearts! I have grown to love you very much and this love will be eternal. You are the new plant planted in the Paradise of Abha. You must be ever stirred by the Breeze of Providence, be watered by the rain of the divine guidance and be trained by the rays of the Sun of Reality. Turn always your faces toward the Kingdom of Abha. Be filled with Bahauallah.

{{p4}}

A Baha'i asked that she has read in some of the Holy writing that there were four degrees or pillars for the progress of the soul. What are these four degrees? The Master said: Bahauallah says! When the soul has travelled through many valleys it reaches to the city of Love. That city countries four pillars and whenever I find a hearing ear. I shall explain what these four pillar are. During the life of Bahauallah no one asked the explanation of this matter but now you ask and I will elucidate it for you. The first station is the station of Divinity; the Second is the station of Prophethood or manifestation; the third is the station of Sanctification and the fourth is the station of Servitude."

She said: "We must work real hard to read to the station of Servitude". It is evident, he said, the station of Servitude is very great.

"It is the brilliant crown of everlasting glory" she answered promptly and every one was pleased with her aptitude and inspiration.

{{p6}}

To another group he said: I have been in your midst for a few months. Only God knows how much I have grown to love you. Your love beats in my heart like the artery of life. During every stay, I have explained o you the divine Ideals. I have ignited in the chamber of your hearts the light of the Love of God. Strive day and night that its lustre and brightness may increase, so that the Light of God may all the regions the Kingdom of God may be established and the glory of Abha be revealed. Do not rest for one moment. Make ye a noble effort so that you may guide the souls; confer life upon these dead ones; make mindful those who are heedless, awaken those who are sleep, enkindle the extinct men and women with the consuming Fire of the Love of God and exhilarate the souls with the goblets of the wine of knowledge. I leave you here and I go to Egypt but I expect to revive good news from you that your meetings are glowing with the light of Faith and assurance.

Several other groups found a way to his Presence and with each he spoke sweetly and generously. Beside this bath in the morning and in the afternoon he found time to call on impotent princes and high personage from the East. In the evening his room was full with various nationality a very cosmopolitan gathering. Persian nobilities rubbed shoulders with Turkish Pashas and Simple Jewish Baha'is shook hand with the educated ladies of America.

His graceful power and divine courtesy hovered over all these people. The barriers castes were broken in his Presence and at least for those few heavenly moments they looked into each others faces with the shining light of brotherhood.

Thus our last day in Paris was spent with joy and fragrance, hoping and praying for the day when all mankind will be united with the high ideals of the Baha'i life. I close finish this with the words of the Beloved on hope.

I desire for you the station of Hope. Be ye ever hopeful in the Favors of god! Have ye no fear! Hope is the Cause of life.

Love to all

Ahmad

###Room No. 26. June 12th 1913

Dear Harriet!

We were up this morning with the sole idea of departure ringing in our ears. My heart was singing the glad song, because I was going in the service of the King of Kings. How different would I have felt if I was going to the Orient all alone. There would not have been this enthusiasm, this wonder and this all absorbing interest! I think I can never thank enough the Beloved throughout all the worlds for his heavenly Bounties! I have done less than nothing!

Before five, I was up, putting my last things in the satchel and about six some of the Persian friends and Mon. and Madame Dreyfus came in. We were all in his room drinking the last cup of tea in Paris in his Presence. He was likewise busy with the handbags of his papers and before long they were also ready. About 7:30 the hotel account was duly attended to and the large Omnibus arrived to take us to Le Gare de Lyons. At eight we were all in the Omnibus except the Master who was going with Mon and Madame Dreyfus in their auto. We arrived at the station at about 5 and found the Master in the centre of a large group of believers who had come to say goodbye. Soon the number increased and there were nearly 50 friends. The Master shook hands, had word or two for each and then went to his compartment and invited a number of the believers to go in and Speak with him. He sent some very nice roses for Mrs. Sanderson and Madame Jackson. It was so touching that in the midst of all the hurry of the journey he should remember them and send them lovely message of {{p2}} consolation. By certain arrangement it was so decided that I should go with the Master on the train leaving 9:15 and the rest of our party may come with the train of 11:40; so I had a room just next to him. At the appointed time the train pulled out of the station and the last scene was the anxious upturned faces looking toward the Beloved and the waving hands and {{p3}} handkerchiefs. He was delighted with the beautiful country of green mountains and valleys, constantly changing and shifting, bringing before his vision most charming panoramas of nature. He said laughingly at present you and I are into his train. We will see what is going to happen. There he engaged himself in reading some Oriental letters and Arabic newspapers at twelve I served him with the lunch which was prepared by Sayad Assadallah and he asked me to eat with him, About 3 I prepared tea and for my services he gave me a bunch of grapes. He got acquainted with a young French and in my absence he carried long with him an interesting conversation inviting him to come to Haifa. He found also another friend who spoke Turkish and with him of course he was more at home.

We entered Marseilles at 10:45 pm and was taken to Gare Saintcharles hotel which is joined to the station. At first we engaged two rooms but when we went up the Master observed that each room contained two large beds. As his room no. 26 was quite large, he insisted that I should give up mine and sleep in the same room with him. Goodness! I was scared to death! To sleep in the same room, under the selfsame roof with the Beloved had never, never entered my mind! What? Is this real? I struggled in vain to bring up some pretends and excuses. He would have none of them. At last, before his repeated command, I found myself like a somnambulist bringing next things into his holy room. I was trembling with fear. Then I waited till he went to bed and afterward, slowly I crept into mine.

{{p5}}

Long my eyes were open and my mind busy thinking over this great privilege sleeping in the same room with the Beloved of the world! I could not believe in my own sense. In that hour, my American friends were remembered and slowly, slowly, I came out of my bed and crawled toward his. I prayed from the very depth of my heart for their assistance and confirmation. I prayed as I have never prayed before! I wept and kissed the hem of his garment! In that dark night there was no one else except God and my soul, yet I thought a throng of pure angels were hovering over my head.

When I finished my prayer I returned again to my bed and fell into sleep. A me thought I heard a sweet voice, whose every note was perfect words of a poem which I was reading today as the train flew across plain and meadow trooped along in my memory, refreshing my sleep. These I will now shone them with you because they are dream ideals ere I leave Europe for the East. Met trampled in my dream I was addressing a vast concourse of humanity.

”There is a Height higher than mortal thought;
There is a Love deeper than mortal love;
There is a Life which, taking not its hues
From Earth on earthly things, grows white and pure
And higher than the pithy cares of men,
And is a blessed life and glorified.
O, fair young souls I strain upward, upward still,
Even to the heavenly source of Purity!
Brave hearts! hear on and suffer! Strike for night!
Strong arms! hew done wrong! The world had need
O all of you - the sensual, wrongful world!
Hath need of you, and of thee too, fair Love.
Oh, Lovers, cling together! The old world is full of Hate. Sweeten it, draw in one
Two separate chords of Life; and from the bond
Of twin souls last in Harmony create a fair angel dwelling with you
Lord, the Lord of all!
Waft yourselves, yearning souls, upon the stars;
Sow yourselves on the wandering winds of space;
Watch patient all your days, if your Eyes take Some dim, warm ray of knowledge . The dull world hath need of you the purbblind, slothful world!
Live on, brave lives, chained to the narrow round
Of Duty; live, expand yourselves and make
The Orb of Being wheel on steadfastly Upon its path the Lord of Life alone knows to what Goal of Good; Work on!
Live on!”<<

PORT SA'ÍD, EGYPT

JULY 1, 1913

1. To Look Back and survey the Activities of the Month

I believe it {{p1}} would be a good practice if, on the first of every month, we would survey the collective activities of the days just past, to see whether we have accomplished anything either beneficial or harmful to our fellow men; if we find the former, we should make these actions stepping-stones for greater things; if the latter, we should try to turn into the right pathway. For those who have just accepted the Bahá'í Revelation there is nothing more useful than retrospection. In this day the Highway of the Lord of Mankind is plain. Many of the past obstacles are removed, and the hollow places and marshy grounds are filled.

If we start walking in His path we shall surely reach our destination, behold the Countenance of the Beloved, receive His benediction and ever afterward commune with the Holy Ones.

2. The Bahá'í Path and Its Pilgrims

The Bahá'í path is one which leads us to the Kingdom of Eternity. {{p2}} God has illumined it with the Light of His face. Hundreds and thousands are joining those who have begun their pilgrimage upon the Highway of Abhá. As they go along they raise their clarion voices in thankfulness and praise. They sing the songs of Peace and Spiritual brotherhood. They know that theirs is the victory of attainment. What a happy band of pilgrims they are! Their faith is superhuman, their energy extraordinary, their faces illumined, their feet untiring, their conviction contagious, their love unselfish, their hope transcendent, their sincerity unquestioned, their integrity unimpeachable and their devotion to the Cause attested! My friends! let us join this holy band of pilgrims!

Last night 'Abdu'l-Bahá told me to come to him in the morning with a number of petitions just received; so I was there quite early. While He was dictating Tablets he carried on different lines of conversations with a stream of callers and pilgrims. Tablets were revealed for a large number of friends in Europe and America, and a wonderful article for the "Theosophy" of Scotland in Edinburgh, the Editor of which is Mr. Graham Pole.

3. Tablet of 'Abdu'l-Bahá to the "Theosophy" in Scotland

in Regard to Divine Civilization and Man's Illumination

TO THE SECRETARY OF THE THEOSOPHICAL SOCIETY AND THE EDITOR OF SCOTLAND THEOSOPHY, EDINBURGH, SCOTLAND.

"He is God!

O Thou BELOVED AND RESPECTED FRIEND: —

"Your letter written to Áqá Mírzá Aḥmad was received. I likewise read it. Its contents imparted happiness, for it was an indication of the magnanimity of your effort and of your philanthropic intention. {{p3}} The Articles which you have published in the Theosophical magazine bear testimony to your lofty aim.

"A wise and sagacious writer pens such articles — the results of which are eternal, and its benefits universal; thus the world of humanity may advance toward the kingdom of Mercifulness and divine susceptibilities may shine and gleam like unto radiant lamps from the reality of man.

"Today humanity is in need of heavenly teachings, which are the spirit of this age and the light of this cycle. Material, physical civilization has made extraordinary progress, but Divine Civilization is totally forgotten. In truth, Divine Civilization is like unto the light, whereas material civilization is similar to the glass. The glass without the light will be dark.

“Therefore, great effort must be made so that the heavenly lamp may become ignited, the world of morality illumined and the inexhaustible virtues which are the decorations of the reality of mankind revealed as glowing stars.

“The world of nature is the arena of the animal kingdom. Look thou upon any one of the animals and thou will realize that the virtues of the world of nature are fully manifest in it with the utmost perfection — to an extent that it would be impossible for man to attain. Consider thou a sweet singing bird, beautiful and harmonious, that builds its nest on the topmost branch of a tree growing on the slope of a mountain! In reality this nest is preferable to the palace of the king. The weather is of the utmost delicacy, the panorama indeed entrancing, the water most salubrious, the mountains green and verdant, and the harvest in the valley and on the plain is the wealth of the bird! It has no trouble, no hardship, no thought, no scheme, no sorrow, no grief, no remorse and no regret. {{p4}} Day and night this bird lives with the utmost joy and happiness in its own royal nest! It becomes evident that the virtues of the world of nature are most complete in the animal kingdom.

“But look at the condition of the poor man! Now he is exiled, again he is sick, then helpless or perhaps a prisoner, now he is afflicted with poverty and penury, and then thrown amid dangers. Day and night he is striving, so that he may gain his livelihood through toil and turmoil. With your own reason compare the difference between the life of man and that of the animal! These things demonstrate that the virtues of the world of nature are more apparent in the animal kingdom.

“On the other hand, although man does not seem to enjoy a complete share or inexhaustible portion of these natural bounties, he is, in the Divine World, the center of infinite Bestowals, the lamp of the light of Reality, the shining mirror of the Beauty of God, the manifestor of human perfection, the dawning place of celestial rays and the possessor of the “holy power” which penetrates into and surrounds the essence of all phenomena.

“Man discovers the reality of things, and governing the world of nature, brings its secrets out of the world of the invisible into the realm of existence. Now, like a bird, he soars through the air and again he swims on the surface of the ocean; he travels hither and thither, then dives under the sea with great power. Thus he causes the revelation of all the laws of nature out of the unseen into the seen realm.

“For this reason, he is endowed with a higher power to make use of this knowledge to benefit the world and stimulate its progress. This “power” is reserved for man, and by it he is distinguished from the animal.

“Inasmuch as man is endowed with such a power, he must become the manifestation of divine civilization, the dawning-place of the light of reality, the founder of heavenly perfections, the spreader of spiritual teachings and the servant of the world of morality. {{p5}} He must rejoice the spirits through the Divine Glad-tidings, free them from discouragement and grant them the hope of Everlasting life.

“This is the excellence and glory of the human world! This is the Everlasting Prosperity.

(Signed) ‘ABDU’L-BAHÁ ‘ABBÁS.

4. Article in the “Egyptian Gazette” about Bahá’í

Pilgrims

An article published in the Egyptian Gazette, dated Friday, June 27th, on page three, entitled: —

“‘ABDU’L-BAHÁ IN EGYPT. WONDERFUL SCENES IN PORT SA’ÍD. EASTERN BAHÁ’ÍS ASSEMBLED IN FORCE.”

The description of the Persian believers “who are curiously dressed in great lamb-skin hats and long divided skirts with enormous pleats” was specially graphic. Here is a quotation giving another sidelight of the manner in which these “Converts” lived: —

“At Port Sa’íd the pilgrims have erected a huge tent on the roof of a native hotel and there they gather and sing with touching devotion.”

5. Home of Bahá’u’lláh and Its Keeper

Mírzá Núru’lláh Vakíl is an old believer from Baghdád. He has been in Haifa and Alexandria for ten months awaiting the arrival of the Beloved. He is a patient, true Bahá’í, ever ready to fulfill the desire of the Lord. He is the keeper of the House in which Bahá’u’lláh and his family lived for eleven years. {{p6}} This house, owing to lack of attention, has fallen into ruin, and for the present there are no means at hand to either rebuild or to repair it. In speaking with him upon this matter he said that with a sum of 500 pounds sterling the house could be suitably repaired. The above answer was given through my own solicitation; but I believe it would cost at least 1,000 pounds sterling to reconstruct the house upon its old plan without any architectural innovation, thus keeping the original form of the time of Bahá’u’lláh. ‘Abdu’l-Bahá spoke to Mírzá Núru’lláh and to a number of Bahá’ís from Baghdád. He made it plain that he has great love for the believers of Baghdád, and that they are ever in his heart. Let them not be sad owing to the present ruin of the house. The time for its building will come very soon. It may have to be destroyed and rebuilt but its first form must not undergo any change. Let them rest assured that it will be constructed most solidly. This is a Blessed House; do they not realize it was the home of Bahá’u’lláh? All that quarter in which the House is situated will be destroyed and then transformed into wonderful Parks and gardens. It will become most heavenly. The Holy Sepulcher of Christ was for three hundred years a place for dumping all kinds of rubbish, then St. Helena came, cleared the ground and built over it a most wonderful church. However, these times are different, and the Places wherein the Blessed Perfection has lived will be fully preserved.

Today two pilgrims arrived, Mírzá Faḍl'u'lláh, the son of the oldest brother of Bahá'u'lláh from Persia, and a young Bahá'í from Damascus.

Upon hearing of the arrival of the son of his uncle, 'Abdu'l-Bahá called him into his presence and showered much love upon him. I was not there to witness the scene and to hear his words. But 'Alí-Akbar told me that the Master spoke about his childhood days. {{p7}} Things that I should like to have heard.

6. 'Abdu'l-Bahá's Talk to the Pilgrims on the Evidences of the Cause

In the afternoon we were all invited to the Master's house for tea. We waited a few moments downstairs, and as soon as we heard his footsteps everybody arose. He sat on a chair in front of the window and spoke feelingly.

He stated that the majority of the inhabitants of Persia are yet asleep, although God has demonstrated His Cause to them in so many ways.... If this Cause had appeared in Europe or America, those regions would by this time have become illumined and countless souls awakened. So many were martyred in Persia, so much blood has been spilt! If one of these events had transpired in another country, the effect would have been marvelous! Nevertheless there were many people in Persia who became illumined and celestial, and cried out in order to awaken their fellow men!... An infinite number of these believers of God have been examples of severance, incarnations of devotion, and flaming candles; they have embodied in the world of humanity the Teachings of God, and have become demonstrations, showing how man could be pure, sanctified, attracted, enkindled and honest! The evidences of God they wrote with their own blood upon the earth.

Then he went out to take a walk, telling us to follow him. As the "Greatest Holy Leaf" ('Abdu'l-Bahá's sister) will arrive from Haifa to be with the Master, and as the present house is small and rather unfurnished, another apartment consisting of four rooms and a kitchen is rented for us. "Us" means Mírzá Maḥmúd, Siyyid Asadu'lláh, Mírzá Munír and Aḥmad Sohrab. {{p8}} The Master therefore walked to this apartment to see if it was ready. On the way he told us two stories of his childhood, one about the Muḥammadan clergy and the "big paradise," another about a bare-headed Mullá before a large crowd of people, the sudden shower of hail upon his head and his precipitated flight.

7. Experiences of a Pilgrim and How He was Robbed

on the Way

Coming out of the apartment 'Abdu'l-Bahá ordered a carriage and with Mírzá Faḍl'u'lláh they were driven away. We returned to the hotel and had an interesting conversation with a young Bahá'í from Damascus. Having been in Ṭihrán during the Parliamentary period, he gave us a thrilling account of the victory of the Nationalist Cause, and of his journey from Ṭihrán toward Shíráz, and how a large Caravan which included himself was attacked and robbed. He and his friend had to walk six days through mountains and uninhabited places, bedraggled and with large blisters on the soles of their feet before they reached their destination. Although he had suffered much, yet he was very cheerful and happy because today he was privileged to look upon the face of 'Abdu'l-Bahá — the lover of humanity.

PORT SA'ÍD, EGYPT, JULY 2, 1913.

1. Talk of 'Abdu'l-Bahá on spiritual Cultivation and

Teaching

Toward the end of a wonderful talk given this afternoon to the Persian Pilgrims, 'Abdu'l-Bahá stated that it was not his duty to command particular persons to teach the Cause. Whosoever arises to spread the Word and to perform this service, will behold the Doors of Confirmation open wide before his face. This is the time for teaching and therefore results will be achieved. In every season a particular service will be productive. If, during the seed-sowing time we want to gather the harvest we shall be unsuccessful, if at the period of irrigation we desire to do something else, failure will be the result. Now this is the divine season of seed-sowing. Every Bahá'í must become a heavenly Cultivator, or at the appointed hour the prayers of all the past and future ages, will yield no fruit. In his long trip throughout Europe and America 'Abdu'l-Bahá's primal object was to show the friends of God by deeds that now is the hour for teaching the Cause. Although 'Akká and Haifa are the headquarters of this movement and he had many reasons to stay there, and from that center administer the affairs of the Cause, yet, he left everything and traveled throughout the earth to herald the coming of the Kingdom of Abhá. Any person desiring to be surrounded by the Confirmations of the Blessed Perfection, must arise and teach the Cause. This is the path.

2. Departure of the Pilgrims, and Remarks of 'Abdu'l-Bahá #### on Music

Seven more pilgrims left for Haifa and Alexandria. Except one Zoroastrian who will depart for Bombay on the 5th, no one is left of the large number of pilgrims. {{p10}} Today two fine young Bahá'í students arrived from Beirut. They are the advance guard of the rest of the students who will be here soon. These two are very polite and speak English fluently. One of them is the son of Muḥammad Taqí Iṣfahání of Cairo his name is 'Abdu'l-Ḥusayn. He has a fine voice and chants the Bahá'í Communes most effectively. He chanted tonight for the Beloved who was very pleased with him.

‘Abdu’l-Bahá wishes the believers to cultivate their voices so that they may sing the Bahá'í songs and chant with effect the Prayers of the Blessed Perfection; for Prayer is the food of the spirit.

3. Quiet Association with ‘Abdu’l-Bahá

In the evening, at the end of a long walk, the Master came to our hotel. He walked down the veranda where I was sitting alone, opened the door and entered one of the rooms. Little by little the friends gathered around him. Down in the street a motley crowd of Arabs were passing along; above our heads, the stars shone with utmost brilliancy, while at our left the Mediterranean lay smiling. We were all very happy in the Presence of the Master of Illumination. In the darkness his face irradiated like an orb of light, and his tongue uttered such words of guidance and truth as the “Man of Sorrows” spoke 1900 years ago on Mount Olivet.

4. Progress of the Bahá'í Cause in Germany and

Letters from That Country

In the morning we drank tea in ‘Abdu’l-Bahá’s presence. He sent for us very early. It seemed that he had slept last night in Aḥmad Yazdí’s apartment, so we all went there. {{p11}} After our arrival he spoke about the progress of the Cause in Germany. He had some letters from Mírzá ‘Alí-Akbar and Mírzá Luṭfu’lláh Ḥakím giving the description of the meetings in Stuttgart during their one week’s stay there. He read the former aloud, and gave me the latter to read to the friends.

There were also letters from the German friends and these he gave me to translate and send to the Star of the West, for publication, which was done on the same day. Then he spoke very enthusiastically about the German believers, their firmness, and their devotion. For more than one hour he talked about Bahá’u’lláh and about the enemies of the Cause, who had at every turn tried to stop its influence, but who had all failed. And he also related several historical incidents of the early days of Baghdád.

5. Appearance of Truth

In concluding his remarks he told us that along with the appearance of Truth, the point of opposition raises its head. The former gains signal victory, the other goes into crushing defeat; the first upraises the standard of guidance, the other unfurls the banner of error; one is divine revelation, another is satanic suggestion; the first leads us into the paradise of Peace, the second hurls us headlong into the hell of war.

PORT SA'ÍD, EGYPT, JULY 3, 1913.

1. The Bahá'í Cause Is in Need of Earnest Workers

Who Will Defy All Opposition

We are living in the days in which the Spirit of the Lord is manifest, and the rays of the Sun of Reality evident. The divine Jerusalem has descended from heaven and the Glorious Glad-tidings are proclaimed. We must fashion our lives according to the heavenly teachings, live in a state of internal contentment, peruse the Holy Writings and practice that which will be conducive to our own and to the world's prosperity. The Bahá'í Cause is much in need of real, earnest workers — workers who will defy all opposition, meeting their antagonists with smiling faces and standing as firm rocks before the blowing of the winds of tests and of the storms of trials. How many old trees are uprooted by one wind and how many ships have been wrecked by one storm! There are many lands athirst for the water of life, let the friends of God irrigate them with vernal showers from the Kingdom of Abhá. There are many persons hungry for the heavenly bread, we must invite them to the Banquet of the Lord. The lethargic must become active, the sleepy awakened; the deprived must receive a share of the inexhaustible Favors, and the sweet music of the Supreme Concourse must be heard. We should be up and doing some kind of service no matter how slight it is. Praise be to God that the orb of the Center of Covenant is shining and that His Mercy is all-encompassing. He is teaching and gently and lovingly guiding us in the Right Path. We all desire to serve him in some way and win his good pleasure by sincerely walking in his footsteps; {{p13}} we hope to become the signs of his compassion and the humble followers of his eternal law!

2. Life in Port Sa'id, and Fleas But No Mosquitoes

All this morning and part of the afternoon we were left to ourselves. The Master was busy in other directions and could not call us to his presence. Meanwhile we found time to pack our trunks and move from the hotel into our new apartment. It is unfurnished but as we do not know how long we will stay in Port Sa'id, it is not necessary to purchase many things. I have one large black kitchen table on which I do my writing, a chair and a bed. The apartment is airy and has a wonderful side view of the Mediterranean. It is in the Arab quarter and rented for nine dollars a month. Port Sa'id is famous for its fleas. They bother us to death all night. Those who have mosquito nets escape the attacks of the fleas and sleep comfortably, but I happen not to have any and have to carry on an offensive and defensive war with the swarming army. Several years ago when I lived here, there were many mosquitoes — not as bad as New Jersey ones — but quite ferocious. However, the Egyptian Government organized a Sanitary Commission who undertook the filling of the marshy grounds and thus exterminated the breeding of mosquitoes. During the spring and summer there is not a drop of rain. All that we see is an occasional patch of cloud aimlessly rambling in the sky. Our apartment being very near the Mediterranean, we enjoy a fresh, vitalizing breeze all the time, especially in the evenings. {{p14}} Many people sleep on the roofs which are flat and paved like the floor of a room.

3. Ḥusayn Rūḥí and His Bahá'í School in Cairo

About 5 o'clock Khusraw, 'Abdu'l-Bahá's attendant, brought the good news that we were called by the Master to the new house. The believers with others just arrived from Cairo, were already assembled when we entered. Ḥusayn Rūḥí who years ago was in America with Khurasání, was present with his three sons. He is a short man and knows English and Arabic very well. He keeps a private school in Egypt, the pupils numbering about a hundred and sixty children; the majority being orphans. The school is named "Abbás" and the master's photograph is hung in a prominent place in every classroom. Ḥusayn Rūḥí is an active young man, and I believe that he is doing much good.

4. Palace of Bahá'u'lláh in Núr, Persia

The Master had asked Mírzá Faḍl'u'lláh — the son of his great uncle — to draw the design of the house of Bahá'u'lláh in Núr. Therefore, he, with the assistance of Mírzá 'Alí-Akbar, was busy all day making this plan which was completed this afternoon. It must have been a palatial residence according to the architectural conception of the East. The Master, holding the various papers in his hands, described the different parts of the house as though he had left it yesterday. Then with his matchless power, he contrasted this palace of luxury and worldly comfort with the barren and ruined barrack of 'Akká.

5. Talk of 'Abdu'l-Bahá on His and Bahá'u'lláh's

Imprisonment in the Prison of 'Akká, and on Real Happiness

'Abdu'l-Bahá spoke on happiness, saying that the soul of man must be happy, no matter where he is. {{p15}} He must attain to that condition of inward beatitude and peace, where outward circumstances can not alter his spiritual calm and joyousness. No one can imagine a worse place than the barracks of 'Akká. The climate was bad, the water no better, the surroundings filthy and dirty, and the deportment of the officials unbearable, while he and his family were looked upon as enemies of religion and destroyers of morals. The Government had given orders that no one should address them during their stay in 'Akká and that they should not be allowed to converse with each other.

Upon their arrival, the officials found that there were not enough rooms in the barracks to imprison them separately, so all were put into two bare rooms. The court had a most gloomy aspect. It contained three or four fig trees, in the branches of which several ominous owls screeched all night. Everyone became ill and there were neither provisions nor medicines.

At the entrance to the barrack there was an undertaker's room. It was a horrible looking place, yet 'Abdu'l-Bahá lived there for two years with the utmost happiness. Up to that period he had had no opportunity to read the Qur'án from cover to cover, but here he found ample time and used to study this Holy Book with fervor and enthusiasm, going over the incidents and events of the lives of former prophets and finding how parallel they were with the events of these latter days. Thus he was consoled and encouraged. He would read, for instance, the following verse:

“How thoughtless are the people! Whenever a prophet is sent unto them they either ridicule him or persecute him.”

And then he read this verse:

“Verily our host is victorious over them.”

He was very happy, because he was a free man. {{p16}} Shut off in that room his spirit traveled throughout the immensity of space. At night he went up on the roof and communed with the countless brilliant stars. What a divine feast! What a heavenly procession! What spiritual freedom! What beatific bliss! What celestial Sovereignty!

6. Remarks on War Waged between Greece and

Bulgaria

Then he spoke in detail about the present war between Greece and Bulgaria, and the utter folly of shedding the blood of innocent people. There is no benefit in this human butchery, this spoilation, this destruction! Mankind must learn the lesson of Peace; they must be instructed in the school of love. What is this insanity? What is this fratricide? What is this ruthlessness? Away with the nightmare of war! Banish the thought of strife and sedition! Are we not brothers? Are we not the sheep of one shepherd? How long shall this blindness continue; how long this military lunacy? Then he spoke about the restlessness of kings and rulers and gave us the instance of one Muḥammadan Caliph who, although he had many countries under his dominion, yet could not be happy.

Divine happiness, he said, is obtained through servitude at the Threshold of God, through evanescence, detachment, sincerity and severance from all else save Him.

7. Story about Bahá'u'lláh's Shepherd

Before he left us he recalled to his mind the name of the head-shepherd of Bahá'u'lláh and related many stories about him. {{p17}} He asked Mírzá Faḍl'u'lláh whether he were still alive and received the answer: “He is dead, but his daughter is living.”

One day this head-shepherd came to the Blessed Perfection and said: “My Lord! I have one piece of advice to give unto you.”

“What is it?” Bahá'u'lláh asked.

“Never trust the ‘Ulamás.”

Bahá’u’lláh loved this man because of his simplicity and faithfulness. We were then given permission to retire.

8. A Joke with Ḥusayn Rúhí

‘Abdu’l-Bahá asked Ḥusayn Rúhí how many pupils he had in his school. “One hundred and sixty.” ‘Abdu’l-Bahá said laughingly that Ḥusayn Rúhí was rich and that his hands were certainly full! He himself did not have one pupil. Could Ḥusayn Rúhí find some students for ‘Abdu’l-Bahá?

1. Story of Ḥájí ‘Abdu’lláh and His Conversation

with ‘Abdu’l-Bahá

Ḥájí ‘Abdu’lláh is a Bahá’í of eighty years of age. He has lived fifty years in Egypt and has ever been a devoted Bahá’í; and a sincere believer. He is dressed in Eastern robes and has a long gray beard. {{p18}} Although advanced in age, he is vigorous and in good health. He has seen Egypt become most prosperous through the opening of the Suez Canal. He lives in one of the small towns in the interior of the country and having heard about the arrival of the Master has come to see him. Today he received permission to return to his work. He had a conversation with ‘Abdu’l-Bahá.

‘Abdu’l-Bahá asked him how old he was.

He said he was over eighty years old.

Well! He had lived a good long life and now he looked younger than ‘Abdu’l-Bahá!

It was through the Favor of Bahá’u’lláh, voiced the old veteran.

It was true! ‘Abdu’l-Bahá told him, and wished to know whether he desired to live much longer.

Ḥájí ‘Abdu’lláh gave an affirmative answer.

‘Abdu’l-Bahá was surprised.

What? Was this life so sweet to the old man’s taste for him to long for an extension of it? Why was this? As to ‘Abdu’l-Bahá he was ready to leave this ephemeral world. It contained no attraction for him. ‘Abdu’l-Bahá likened himself to a man who has heard that he must travel twenty days before reaching his destination. Having traveled already fifteen days, he is eager to hasten his trip and arrive at his goal. He is anticipating the eternal union with the Beloved at the end of his journey; therefore he is impatient!

The old man was deeply moved and spoke in a tremulous voice. He did not want to live for himself. Looking back at the map of his life, he saw many barren years stretching before his eyes, for he had not been confirmed in the service of the Cause. Therefore he desired to do something. He was hoping against hope that he might yet be enabled to render a great service to the Cause. {{p19}} He knew that he was very old, but his hope was young, and his eyes were filled with tears.

2. ‘Abdu’l-Bahá Dictates Tablets for Many Bahá’ís.

This morning the Master received in private many of the Egyptian friends who had just arrived to meet him for one day. Meanwhile he found time to dictate Tablets to many of the friends in America and England and an important one to the International Congress of Free Christians, and other Religious Liberals, holding its Congress in Paris from July 16th to 22nd. Let me share with you the contents of the last.

3. Tablet to the International Congress of Free

Christians

TO THE SECRETARY OF THE SIXTH INTERNATIONAL CONGRESS OF FREE AND PROGRESSIVE CHRISTIANS, AND OTHER RELIGIOUS LIB-ERALS, HELD IN PARIS, FRANCE, JULY, 1913.

“He is God

BELOVED AND RESPECTED FRIEND: —

“Your letter was received. Its contents became conducive to happiness of conscience, for it indicated that a group of the well-wishers of the world of humanity have displayed an effort to bring about a Congress of Religions, so that this may become the means of establishing affiliation among those religions, in order that the reality and the foundation of the Divine Religion be disclosed, and the causes of misunderstandings be removed. {{p20}} This is indeed an exalted intention; it is a service to the world of humanity and is conducive to the unveiling of merciful susceptibilities.

“I hope that that Congress may be confirmed in affiliating the hearts of the people of the world, and be the means of the creation of peace between religions, so that the darkness of estrangement may be dispelled from amongst mankind and the followers of all religions may be ushered into the world of Unity — that is, accept the principles of the Oneness of the word of humanity.

“It has been my greatest longing to be present at that International Gathering, but now I live in Egypt, my physical constitution is weakened, and other infirmities of age prevent me from attending the Congress. Therefore, begging your pardon for this shortcoming, I write a few lines on this subject: —

“It is well known and evident to the wise men of humanity — the wooers of Truth — that the aim of the appearance of the Holy Divine Manifestations, the revelation of the Book and the establishment of the Spiritual Religion, has been no other than to create affinity amongst the children of men, and to found the law of Love between the individuals of the world of humanity. Religion is the basis of spiritual Unity; it is the oneness of thoughts; the oneness of susceptibilities; the oneness of morality; and the necessary connection between all the people of the world — so that minds and souls may grow and develop through divine Education, in order that they may investigate reality, ascend to the lofty heights of human perfection and found on this terrestrial globe a Divine Civilization.

“In the world of existence there are two kinds of Civilizations: a natural and material civilization which serves the physical world; and a divine and heavenly civilization which renders service to the world of morality. The founders of natural civilization are the scientists and philosophers of the earth. {{p21}} The establishers of divine civilization are the celestial Manifestations of God. Religion is the basis of Divine Civilization. Natural civilization is like unto the body. Divine Civilization is like unto the spirit. A Body without spirit is dead, although it may be in the utmost beauty and comeliness. In short, by religion we mean those necessary bonds which unify the world of humanity. This has ever been the bestowal of God. This is the object of Divine teaching and law. This is the light of everlasting life. But alas, a thousand times alas! for this solid foundation is abandoned and forgotten; the leaders of religion have fabricated a set of blind dogmas and rituals which are at complete variance with the foundation of divine religion. As these dogmas differ from each other, they cause differences; differences breed strife, and strife ends in war and bloodshed; the blood of innocent people is spilled, their possessions are ransacked and pillaged and their children become captives and orphans. Thus religion, which was designed to become the cause of friendship, has become the cause of enmity. Religion, which was meant to be sweet honey, is changed into bitter poison. Religion, whose function was to be the illumination of the world of humanity, has become the factory of obscurantism and gloom. Religion which was meant to confer everlasting life, has become the fiendish instrument of death. Consequently, as long as these blind dogmas are in human hands, and these nets of dissimulation and hypocrisy in their fingers, religion will be but a harmful agency in the world of humanity. Hence these superannuated and tattered dogmas which are current among present day religions must be totally abolished, and, thus, freed from past traditions, mankind will be able to investigate the real objects of divine religion; {{p22}} for inasmuch as the foundation of the religion of God is One, and that One is absolute reality, and reality is indivisible and not amenable to multiplicity, therefore complete unity and amity between all religions shall be instituted and the true religion of God shall become unveiled with the utmost beauty and sublimity in the assemblage of the world of humanity.

“Thence, it is the duty of this honorable Congress to rend asunder these veils of imitations, to remove these non-essentials and to disperse these dark clouds that the Sun of Truth may dawn from the Everlasting Horizon with the utmost brilliancy.

“Praise be to God, that this century is the century of success! This Cycle is the Cycle of Reality! Minds have developed, thoughts have taken a wider range of vision; intellects have become keen; emotions are sensitized; inventions have transformed the face of the earth and this age has acquired a glorious capacity for the majestic revelation of the oneness of the world of humanity.

“Should this honorable Congress display an extraordinary effort in the promotion of altruistic aims, and remove these dogmas which are in the hands of the religionists — such dogmas as are in opposition to the Divine Ideals — this world will become another world, the physical earth will be changed into the universe of the Kingdom, the world of humanity will become an arena for the revealing of the mysteries of Truth; the rays of the Sun of the Divine Firmament will shine upon it; East and West will become illumined; North and South will embrace each other like unto two beloved ones; {{p23}} the followers of all the religions will become investigators and champions of Reality, new eternal Institutes will be founded in the human world and the Palace of the oneness of the realm of humanity raised higher and higher, day by day.

“These are the hopes of this Wanderer. I beg of God confirmation and assistance for you, — so that you may be inspired with such a spiritual vision: the appearance of which is looked upon as impossible and unrealizable from the very foundation of the world; but which in this glorious Cycle will become manifest in the utmost beauty and perfection.

“Upon you be greeting and praise.

Although at this time the Master was not feeling well he continued to dictate Tablets and when he was thus occupied, he entered into a spiritual state, and his bodily weariness completely disappeared, and for the time his health was absolutely restored.

For the last few days he has been complaining about the weather and he may shortly leave for Ismailia, which is the summer resort of Egypt. The Port Sa’id weather at this season is most humid. I don’t think he will keep all of us with him, but he may take one or two; probably Mírzá Munír. In the afternoon, while the believers were sitting in his presence, he dictated many Tablets and they listened most carefully. To them, this is more significant than a talk, because they consider it the greatest privilege of their lives to be present while the holy Tablets are revealed. After an hour or so he said it was enough, and for nearly thirty minutes he related many stories about the futility of studying Muḥammadan theology which is nothing more than traditions and prejudiced dogmas.

4. Poem by Mr. Chase Read to ‘Abdu’l-Bahá

The poem of Mr. Chase written on August 9, 1912, San Francisco, California, was read to the Master and he gave his permission to publish it in the Star of the West. {{p24}} It was composed just before his death, begging the Beloved to go to California. The first line of it is: —

“O Thou David of the Promised Kingdom of God.”

5. Story about Abraham’s Hospitality

Another interesting story about Abraham was sent from Francisco by Miss Bijou Straun who is preparing a book of the Master’s addresses for publication. She desires to include this story as a footnote. It was read to the Master. He gave the source whence the story came. First I will copy here the story as reported in M. K. Schermerhorn’s book, and then I will give the version as the Beloved told it:

“Abraham would scarce break His Fast for one week, lest some hungry traveler should pass who might need his store. Ever he looked out upon the desert, and one day he beheld an aged man, with hair white as snow, tottering toward his door. ‘Guest of mine eyes!’ exclaimed Abraham, ‘enter thou with welcome, and be pleased to share my bread and salt!’ The stranger complied and the place of honor was given to him. When the family gathered round the board, each one of them said: ‘In the name of God!’ — but the aged guest uttered no word. Abraham said: ‘Good man! when thou eatest food, is it not right to repeat the name of God?’ {{p25}} The stranger replied, ‘My custom is that of the Fire Worshipers!’ Then Abraham arose in wrath, and drove the aged man from his house, but even as he did so, a swift-winged Spirit stood before the patriarch and said: — ‘Abraham, for a hundred years hath the divine bounty flowed out to this man in sunshine and rain, in bread and life. Is it fit for thee to withhold thy hand from him, because his worship is not thine?’”

According to ‘Abdu’l-Bahá, this story is recorded in the Mathnaví. It is related that an aged and decrepit man visited His Holiness Abraham, and was received with the utmost hospitality and courtesy. When dinner was served, His Holiness Abraham uttered the name of God and then began to eat. His guest, on the other hand, pronounced the name of an idol and also began to eat. His Holiness was grieved, and arose in wrath rebuking his guest most severely; but even as he did so, God’s revelation descended upon him: —

“O Abraham! For a hundred years this man has been an idol worshiper and I have been patient with him; I have nurtured him; I have protected him; I have taken care of him; I have trained him; I have showed him with many bounties and have been kind and loving to him; but thou wert not able to endure his society even for one night!”

His Holiness Abraham was deeply touched by this address and begged his aged guest to pardon him.

When we left the Master's presence he kept Mírzá Faql'u'lláh and later on, as they were walking together in the avenue, the Editor of "Peesah Akbar," an important Indian newspaper, met him. This journalist happens to know a great deal about the Cause through the American press notices which were sent to him by Mírzá Maḥmúd who met him while traveling and teaching in India. {{p26}} He has already written several articles about the Cause in his own journal.

1. World Conflict and Its Remedy

Whether we live in the East or in the West, the invisible Power of God is unifying our scattered forces, and training us for the service of His Kingdom — the Kingdom of Universal Love and interracial Amity. Today, more than at any other time, the world of humanity is in need of this Power. The keen competition which is carried on by the captains of industry and finance, the rumbling discontent and social unrest of the laboring class, the bigotry and fanaticism of some of the religions, the heat and bitterness with which fanatic controversies are upheld between the sectarians, the spirit of superiority with which some nations look upon others, the lust of conquest, and the desire for the extension of territory, the social and political rivalries between nations and governments and the hatred and enmity existing between antagonistic races — all these forces clashing against each other, apparently aggravate the situation and make confusion more confounded. But the Power of the spiritual conscience has come to stay, bringing healing under its wide-outstretched wings. {{p27}} 'Abdu'l-Bahá believes that this power alone is the solvent for all these puzzling problems. Here and there may be found some medicine to give temporary relief, but the lasting and permanent cure is the spiritual Power of Love which unites all people and sets at naught their seeming differences. This Power alone transforms hearts, inspires spirits, uplifts minds, reveals the secrets of Truth and unfurls the Banner of divine brotherhood.

2. The departure of a Zoroastrian Bahá'í for Bombay, and 'Abdu'l-Bahá's Tablet about His Western Trip.

Our last pilgrim, the Zoroastrian from Bombay — Mehreban — has left today for his home. He was an old man with a bushy round, gray beard. He spoke very little, but his eyes were fresh springs of love and gentleness. The Master has been especially kind to him and often praised his race for their uprightness and charity. He called him, this morning, to his presence, and after a few words of farewell, gave him a short Tablet written with his own hand, the translation of which is as follows:

“O thou Mehreban! Praise be to God that through the Protection and Favor of the Omnipotent God thou didst reach the Illumined spot, have kissed the Threshold of the Kind Friend, and have become confirmed and assisted in that which is the highest desire of the angels of the Universe of heaven. Now thou hast for several days been my associate and my companion, therefore return to India and convey the greeting of this Friend to each and all the believers and say: —

“‘This indigent one does not enjoy one moment of peace. In the evening he is restless, by day he is full of acclamation. He undertook the long trip to Europe and America and cried out over the mountains and on the plains. Now the time has come when the friends may raise their mighty voices and fill the world with the melody of the Kingdom of Abhá. {{p28}} They must show an effort, render some kind of service, create a whirlwind of ecstasy and appear with manifest signs and power, so that ‘Abdu’l-Bahá may obtain peace of mind and of spirit....’”

3. ‘Abdu’l-Bahá’s Interview with, the Indian Editor

This morning the Beloved sent for Mírzá Munír and dictated several Tablets to the Persian believers, many of them having long or brief accounts of his western journey. Later in the day, Mírzá Maḥmúd called on Moulavi Mahboud Alam, the Indian Editor, and together they visited the Master. As he was a Moslem, the discussion dealt purely with the Muḥammadan world and made an exposition of the means through which the different sects might be brought closer together. The journalist was much impressed by the talk of the Beloved and took notes so that he might write a few articles on the Cause.

About six o’clock we gathered in front of the hotel to bid farewell to our Zoroastrian brother. Then we accompanied him to the pier and while he was leaving in the little boat to be conveyed to the steamer, I looked up, and there in the heavens, beheld the most luminous crescent that I had ever seen! It was small, semi-circular, silvery, and so delicate! For a long time I looked at it, and the hunger of my eyes could not be satisfied. It was the silvery bow of the angels of God, the arrows of which are meteors of Truth to disperse the hosts of ignorance and intolerance. Returning to the hotel, we sat around the table and looked into one another’s faces. For the first time we were only five, and not only did we miss our many pilgrims, but also the beloved friends beyond the seas in Europe and America!

1. The Bahá’í Heart Is a Cool Fountain

The heart of a Bahá’í is a cool spring from which eternally gushes forth the pure water of divine knowledge and heavenly wisdom. {{p29}} This water irrigates the soil of humanity which is parched through the heat of dogmas and the fire of superstitions. Immediately after the distribution of this water, the flowers and anemones of love and affection become manifest and the nostrils of those who are remote and near are perfumed. Barren ground is changed into a luxuriant garden, sterile soil is made productive, bare trees are clad with verdant garments, the silent nightingales break forth into songs of gladness, the frost of the winter is transformed into winsome spring, and the stillness of death is changed into the buoyancy of life!

The Bahá'í heart is a garden. Its gardner is 'Abdu'l-Bahá. With his tender hands he plants roses and violets, carnations and tulips, chrysanthemums and lilies of the valley. The beauty of these ideal flowers is in their imperishableness and in the sweetness of their fragrance. Day and night he sows the seeds from his never-ending store. To him, the ground of every human heart is susceptible to Divine Cultivation. That is why he has so many gardens. He is the most successful spiritual gardener that the world has ever seen! He knows the composition of the soil and the chemical ingredients of every part, and he applies his indisputable knowledge with real success. {{p30}} Give to him the most barren, sterile patch of ground, and before long it is a mass of flowers and an orchard of fruitful trees.

2. Another Interview with the Indian Editor, and

'Abdu'l-Bahá's Talk on Education

This morning the Beloved had a most interesting interview with the Editor of "Peeseh Akbar." The Editor propounded many questions concerning the return of the old glory of Islám, the education of the Eastern women, the matter of the veil for women, etc., to each one of which the Master gave detailed answer. The Editor was carried away with enthusiasm, because he found all his difficulties removed with such simple, yet eloquent expressions. He wrote down all the Master told him. He understands Persian quite well and is a progressive and intelligent journalist. He has been out of India for nearly seven months and expects to go to Tunis, Europe and New York before returning to his native land. The Master has given him an introduction to the Persian Charge d'Affaires in Washington, D. C., so that he may be shown all due respect and proper hospitality.

Toward the end of his talk to him, 'Abdu'l-Bahá stated that we must ever think of the education of the public and try our utmost to improve the conditions of the submerged classes and to lay a solid foundation for the erection of the Temple of human happiness. For the realization of this hope, divine Education is essential, and the inculcation of the idea of the oneness of the world of humanity is necessary. We must deal with all with loving kindness and be the real well-wishers of mankind. They are the sheep of God and God is the Universal Shepherd. He is compassionate to every member of His flock. He trains all, He feeds all. He protects all. We must free them from the old prejudices. We must confer upon them a new life, which is cordial love, good-fellowship, amity and unity, amongst the children of men. Our behavior and conduct must be an example to them. {{p31}} We must abandon all forms of prejudice, religious, racial, sectarian, and national. The object of all the religions has been the moral progress of the race. Only by walking in this path can the illumination of the world be assured, and the prosperity of mankind obtained.

3. The Bahá'í Cause in Paris and Tablets for the friends

‘Abdu’l-Bahá dictated several beautiful Tablets for Miss Sanderson, Mons. et Madame Richard, Mons. et Madame Bernard and Mr. and Mrs. Scott of Paris. He expressed hope for the future illumination of Paris and exhorted these friends to continue the spreading of the message.

PORT SA‘ÍD, EGYPT, JULY 7, 1913.

1. Importance of Correspondence between the friends

Often a letter from a far-off friend gives one good cheer and encouragement. This is part of that invisible chain which unites all mankind; more especially is this the case with those who are working for a common Cause. Thousands of miles, oceans and lands may divide them, but when the word comes, the hearts are united, space and time annihilated and they live as though in one room, talking and conversing together and creating an atmosphere of uplift. {{p32}} This in itself is a sufficient reason why the Bahá'ís from various countries and out-of-the-way places should correspond one with the other and keep themselves informed, not only of the progress of the Cause, which, is of course, the most important thing, but of other current events which would be of interest.

2. ‘Abdu’l-Bahá’s Talk on the Enemies of the Cause

This morning I was summoned to ‘Abdu’l-Bahá’s presence. Mírzá Faql’u’lláh was there. Packages of letters were all around the Master. He was writing, and now and then he raised his head and spoke, evidently following the thread of a long conversation. When I arrived he was saying that the Cause has many enemies! The Bahá'ís must be very happy. The priests and the ‘Ulamás, the Rabbis and the Mobeds are attacking the Cause right and left, but their attacks make it stronger and more powerful. We are invulnerable. We know no defeat. We are fighters to the very last. There are no deserters in the Grand Army of Abhá! They are all good fighters! One of the missionaries in Beirut in his sermon cried out in wrath and hopeless anger: — “We always thought that the Bahá'ís would be a good, wholesome influence for civilizing Islám alone, now they have started to civilize us and are trying to teach us by demonstrating a plan of propaganda, the like of which has never been seen since the time of Christ and His Apostles!” Ah, me! We have many enemies, bitter, dangerous and revengeful! But we defeat them through the Power of Love! This is our only weapon. The Ocean of the Cause is limitless, shoreless, depthless. One wave and all these foams will be scattered to the four corners of the sea. ‘Abdu’l-Bahá did not look at the present disturbed conditions of the ocean. His heart was assured and confident as to the future of the Cause. No person, no matter how powerful, can shake the foundation of the Bahá’í Faith. It rests upon the Eternal Rock of Ages. After the departure of His Holiness Christ, there were only eleven disciples. {{p33}} These were of the humble class, deprived of any social distinction and yet their faith was often shaken, but behold the result of their work! Now after the departure of the Blessed Perfection there were more than one million Bahá’ís scattered all over the earth, each one faithful, sincere and self-sacrificing. Praise be to God, that singly and alone, without any helper or assistant, we are attacking the trained army of darkness and have come out of the field victorious!

Such is the sublime faith of ‘Abdu’l-Bahá that must animate and quicken all the Bahá’ís throughout the world.

3. Arrival of Hájí Níáz, the Old Patriarch

In the afternoon we were called again. Hájí Níáz had just arrived from Cairo. He has been many times in the presence of Bahá’u’lláh. He is a venerable Bahá’í, about eighty years old, and has lived in Egypt for the last thirty-five years. He is tall, has a long white beard and wears a turban like the Master. He has a gentle personality, and all the American Bahá’ís who have passed through Cairo, have made it a point to see Hájí Níáz. The Master loves him very much, and welcomed him with open arms. He talked with him about the believers in Cairo. Then the Master dictated several Tablets, including a long one on “Universal Peace” for the Christian Commonwealth. {{p34}} From this time on the Beloved may write more Articles for the Western press to be read by many thousands of people who cannot be reached otherwise.

4. Tablet to the Editor of “The Christian Commonwealth”

on Universal Peace

O THOU ESTEEMED KIND FRIENDS: —

“After journeying throughout the United States of America and the great capitals of Europe, I have returned to the East. I am most pleased and well satisfied with the result of this journey — because I met noble people and associated with worthy souls, who are the cause of honor and glory to the world of humanity. They are learned and wise, well informed about the realities of events, well-wishers of the human world, especially they are advocates of Universal Peace.

“In these days, the world of humanity is afflicted with a chronic disease. It is one of bloodshed, of the destruction of the divine edifice, of the demolition of cities and villages, of the slaughter of the noble youths of the world of humanity making children become orphans and women homeless. What calamity is greater than this? What crime is more heinous than this, what disease more dangerous, what folly more direful?

“Consider that in former days there were only religious wars, but now there are racial and political wars, fought at staggering expense and sacrifice. A thousand times alas for this ignorance, for this bloodthirstiness and ferocity!

“I am pleased and grateful to the Societies which are organized in the west for the promotion of universal peace, with whose presidents, officers and members, I have frequently conversed. I hope that the sphere of their activities may from day to day, become enlarged, so that the lights of higher ideals may illumine all regions, the oneness of the world of humanity be proclaimed in the East and in the West, and men attain composure and well-being. {{p35}} These revered souls who are the servants and the promoters of the cause of universal peace shall ere long shine like brilliant stars upon the horizon of mankind, flooding all regions with their glorious lights. In the past century freedom was proclaimed and the foundations of liberty were laid in all the western countries. Praise be to God that the sun of justice has shone forth and the darkness of despotism and tyranny has disappeared.

“Now in this radiant century in which the world of humanity is being matured, it is assured that the flag of universal Peace shall become unfurled, waving over all the regions of the globe. This is the most great principle of Bahá’u’lláh, for the promotion of which all the Bahá’ís are ready to sacrifice their possessions and their lives.

“Notwithstanding my bodily weakness and infirmity, I have traveled East and West for the last three years. In many temples I have cried out, and before many audiences raised my voice for the enlistment of their sympathy. I have declared the evils of war and explained the benefits of Universal Peace. I have elucidated the causes which lead to the honor and glory of the world of humanity and told of the ferocity and bloodthirstiness of the animal kingdom; I showed the defects of the world of nature and made an exposition of the means whereby the illumination of the world of humanity can fully be realized. I unfolded and disclosed the foundations of divine religion and proclaimed the teachings of His Holiness Bahá’u’lláh. I demonstrated the existence of God by irrefutable, rational proofs, and proved the reality of all the prophets of God. I gave utterance to my inmost conviction that the verity of the religion of God is the cause of the life of the world of humanity; {{p36}} it is divine civilization and pure enlightenment.

“In giving the explanation of these principles, my object has been no other than the desire to promote Universal Peace. Praise be to God, I have found hearing ears, observed seeing eyes, and discovered informed hearts. Therefore I am well pleased with this journey.

“But on the other hand the well-wishers of the world of humanity and the advocates of Universal Peace must make an extraordinary forward step, organize important international congresses and invite as delegates progressive and influential souls from all parts of the world; — so that through their wise counsels and deliberations this ideal of Universal Peace may leap out of the world of words into the arena of actual and practical demonstration. This question is of paramount importance and will not be easily realized, but we must take hold of every means until the desired result is obtained.

“Fifty years ago, whosoever talked about Universal Peace was not only ridiculed, but called visionary and utopian. Now, praise be to God! it has assumed such importance that every one acknowledges that this question of Universal Peace is the light and spirit of the age.

“I hope the noble leaders of the world of humanity who are the divine bestowals among the people, and the means of pacification among the nations, will arise with the utmost effort and with whole-hearted resolution extinguish this world-raging conflagration, especially now that the blood of innocent people and the cries of orphans are reaching to the very gate of heaven, while the harrowing sorrow of mothers penetrates souls with the irresistible force of human tragedy. {{p37}} Thus through the endeavors of these guardians of the rights of mankind, the world of creation may enjoy the repose of conciliation, the banner of Universal Peace be unfurled, the tabernacle of the oneness of the world of humanity be pitched, all mankind be gathered under its protecting shade and the shining star of eternal felicity and happiness of the world of humanity will dawn with the utmost brilliancy from the horizon of international comity, while the luminous arks of spiritual brotherhood of all races and tongues will illumine the united gathering of mankind with the ineffable lights of God throughout countless ages and cycles.

(Signed) ‘ABDU’L-BAHÁ ‘ABBÁS.

PORT SA’ÍD, EGYPT, JULY 8, 1913.

1. What is the Function of Real Religion?

Pure religion, free from dogmas, contributes to the happiness and progress of a people, suffering them to attain to the highest summit of democracy and brotherhood. Religion, hampered by the chains of fossilized traditions will keep mankind within limits of intolerance and prejudice. Religion must be as pure as the breeze of the early morn, as bright as the stars of heaven, as fragrant as the sweet flowers of spring, as clear as the limpid and cooling water of the fountain, as verdant as the delectable paradise, and as universal as the rays and the heat of the sun.

Therefore, when religion does not perform these functions, it is not fulfilling its mission. In this connection ‘Abdu’l-Bahá, in a Tablet just revealed to the Sixth International Congress of Free and Progressive Christians and other Religious Liberals to be held in Paris, July 16-22, 1913, says:

“Thus religion, which was destined to become the cause of friendship, has become the cause of enmity. Religion, which was meant to be sweet honey, is changed into bitter poison. Religion, whose function was to be the illumination of the world of humanity has become the factor of obscurantism and gloom. {{p38}} Religion, which was to confer Everlasting Life has become the instrument of death.”

The duty of every one of us is, therefore, to spread the principles of Pure religion, in accordance with the needs of this age.

2. ‘Abdu’l-Bahá’s Perennial Cordiality and Courtesy

When one enters the presence of the Beloved, even if it is for the thousandth time, one feels quickened by the spirit of reverence, humility, and evanescence. When this morning I found myself, standing before him and heard his rich vibrant voice greeting me: “You are welcome! You are welcome!” I felt as though this was my first visit to him. He always receives every one, even his servants, with heavenly cordiality, a sweet smile, divine courtesy, and inimitable friendship, making them feel as though they were his own sons and daughters.

3. The Joy of Serving ‘Abdu’l-Bahá

With his discourse, his remarks, and his teachings, he uplifts one’s heart and makes one long to sacrifice everything in his path. Really to be with him for one hour is more glorious than a long association with all great men of the world; and to render service to him is better than serving kings. To win his good pleasure is a source of eternal joy; to upraise the flag of his truth is more wonderful than all the wealth of this earth! {{p39}} May we all remain faithful to him and live and act in such a manner as to win his approval! If we continue to be firm in the Cause and pray every morn and eve for this pearl of great price our brows will be crowned with the diadem of God’s Bestowals! The Cause of humanity must become a glowing fire in our hearts and not a flickering flame in our minds. It must become a flowing fountain, ever gushing forth from the innermost part of our beings! No obstacle must seem to us insurmountable and no difficulty discouraging. We must face all the problems, try to solve them and encourage others through deeds and sympathy! What if the whole world be against us! We may be in the minority — the Christ and His Apostles were in the minority 1900 years ago — but whenever God is on the side of the minority it will become the majority.

4. There Is a Power in This Cause

After dictating several wonderful Tablets ‘Abdu’l-Bahá laid stress upon the fact of the great power existing in this Cause, a mysterious power, far, far, beyond the ken of men and angels. That invisible power is the source of all these outward activities. It moves hearts. It rends mountains. It administers the complicated affairs of the Cause. It inspires the friends. It dashes into a thousand pieces all the forces of opposition. It creates new spiritual worlds. This is a mystery of the Kingdom of Abhá.

The Tablets were for Mrs. Harriet C. Cline, and Mrs. Mabel Rice-Wray of Los Angeles, Calif.; Miss Harriet Magee of New York, Mrs. Dixon of Washington, D. C., Miss Dorothy Hodgson of Paris and Miss General Jack of London.

5. Ḥájí Níáz and the Story of the King and Ayaz

Leaving the Beloved to his divine contemplation, I went to the hotel and there had a talk with Ḥájí Níáz. {{p40}} I knew him before my trip to America several years ago. Through him I had received my first Tablet from the Master and because of this I love him very much. In fact everybody loves him. He is a veteran in the Cause. He related in his rich language, the story of a king and his ministers and courtiers.

Once upon a time the king went out to hunt with the members of his Cabinet, the Diplomatic Corps, the officials of the Court and a large number of important personages, especially invited for this occasion. As the king intended to stay in the country, he ordered the Master of Ceremonies to take the Imperial Tent which was a wonderful work of art. On important occasions he had in past seasons caused the inner walls and ceiling of this royal tent to be decorated with hundreds of precious jewels. This year also he asked the Minister of Finance to take with him the casket of jewels. After many days of preparation, the Imperial Caravan, which was more than a mile long, set forth. The King headed the procession. After him came the Cabinet Ministers, the Diplomatic Corps, the courtiers and the guests. They had to travel six days before they could reach the hunting ground. After four days it so happened that the horse carrying the box of jewels lagged at the end of the Caravan. Three hours march, and the king looked around, when to his apparent surprise, he found no one with him except Ayaz, and observed the Caravan more than a half mile away, surrounded with dust and great confusion.

“What is this?” {{p41}} asked the king.

“Half an hour ago,” Ayaz humbly and serenely answered, “The casket of jewels fell from the back of the horse, and all of the precious stones were scattered on the ground, and in the wild scramble that followed, everyone forgot his duty, and tried to seize the jewels.”

The king did not move or speak to show that an extraordinary event had happened.

But after a few moments of reflection, he said “Ayaz!”

“Yes, my Lord.”

“Why didst thou not join them to get a portion of the spoil? Are they not precious jewels?”

“Yes, my Lord. These jewels are good for them, but I preferred to remain with thee. Thou art the greatest Jewel of my life!”

PORT SA‘ÍD, EGYPT, JULY 9, 1913.

1. Our Life in Port Sa‘íd

My room has two doors which open on to the veranda and at night there is always a cool breeze from the Mediterranean which is not more than a thousand feet away. At midnight I get up and go out and listen to the music of the waves, played for the bright stars. To-night, the moon is shining. The voices of the Arabs chanting their Qur‘án come to my ears. It is a weird, monotonous sound, but very soothing. {{p42}} My table is covered with papers and letters; Mírzá Maḥmúd, a few steps further, is writing and copying Tablets. My light consists of a dear little lamp. I am indeed happy.

2. The Death of a Bahá‘í Child and the Ceremony of

Her Burial

We have just returned from a memorial meeting, held on account of the death of Mírzá Jalál Afshár’s little daughter, he is one of the Port Sa‘íd Bahá‘ís. We were invited at 5 P. M. to go to the funeral. Mírzá Maḥmúd chanted one of the prayers of Bahá‘u’lláh then the little body was washed, wrapped in silk, and as there was no ring for her finger, the prayer was written on a piece of paper and put in the palm of her hand. The second ceremony, the Muḥammadan, consisted of the coming of the Mullá, and the chanting of prayers and then they carried her body by hand to the near-by Mosque. All those who entered the Mosque left their shoes at the door. The body was laid on the floor, the tall Mullá before it. We stood behind the Mullá. He began then to read the prayer for the dead with the rapidity of lightning, and from time to time raised his two hands to his face and ears, which exercise was copied by us automatically, according to custom. All this, however, did not take more than five minutes. Several carriages were ready at the door of the Mosque, and as soon as we came out, Mírzá Jalál, his brother, the Mullá, carrying with both hands the body of the child, and another relative got into one carriage, and we followed in the others. We were driven posthaste toward the cemetery, situated in the west of the city. The Mediterranean was on our right and always very near. On the way we observed many little hills of soft silk-like sand, formed by the winds. Often one observed the extremely soft sand trickling down from the upper part of the little hills exactly like the flowing of a tiny rivulet. {{p43}} It was a strange sight, and reminded one of the passing of our own lives.

3. The Christian and Muḥammadan Cemeteries

First we drove by the Christian Cemetery, surrounded by a wall. We saw the cross in all forms — large and small — defying the crescent of the Muḥammadan burying-place. I had to stand up in the carriage to see the Christian Cemetery. It was not as beautiful and flowery as the Cemeteries of America — because it is most difficult, in this land of sand, to raise trees and flowers — but it was fairly clean and one could see patches of green and there were flowers here and there. Finally, we reached the Muḥammadan cemetery! It was very unclean. Shrieking Arab men and women were in evidence. The tombstones are made of wooden boxes, and I believe a spark of fire would burn the whole place. The dead girl was interred beside her grandfather, buried here a few years ago. The poor father was weeping and quite inconsolable. Ḥájí Níáz, being the oldest man, tried to comfort him.

4. Visiting Taqí Manshádí's Tomb in the Cemetery

Probably many of the American friends remember the faithful Taqí Manshádí through whom the East and the West carried on a large and voluminous correspondence with 'Abdu'l-Bahá. He died a few years ago and his body is buried in this cemetery. I met him during my first visit to 'Akká, and from that time till the day of his death corresponded with him. I expressed a desire to visit his tomb. Yúsuf directed us to it, and we offered a prayer. {{p44}} Unless one knows the place, it is not possible to find it, for there is no tombstone, a piece of wood without an inscription is its only mark. Ḥájí Níáz knew Taqí Manshádí well. The brief outline of his life is as follows:

5. Outline of Taqí Manshádí's Life and His Services to

the Bahá'í Cause

He was from Manshád, a little village near Yazd. In his early youth he had accepted the revelation, but had found the people of his own village extremely fanatical and dogmatic, and as the rabble threatened to kill him, finally left the place and moved to the city of Kirmán. There he began to teach the Cause but when the 'Ulamás received news of his presence, they sent word to him that he must leave the city immediately or they would take the law into their own hands. So with much difficulty and privation he came at last to the city of Shíráz. After some time, with the object of visiting Bahá'u'lláh, he made a pilgrimage to Mecca, and thus acquired the much-respected title of "Ḥájí." From Mecca he went to Alexandria. It was before the Arabi Revolution. Here, with a number of other Persians, he engaged in business, but not being constitutionally fitted for that kind of work, and having always the hope of serving the Cause, and of beholding the Face of the Blessed Perfection, he one day left everything and went to 'Akká. After attaining the supreme desire of his heart, he made 'Akká his final home and there tried to seek congenial occupation. Little by little, his eagerness to serve the Cause, and his longing to devote his whole time to the Movement, was demonstrated, and Bahá'u'lláh from time to time gave him a packet of Tablets to mail to different parts of the Orient. When the believers from all over the world observed that they received their Tablets through him, they began directing their petitions in his care so that he might give them personally to Bahá'u'lláh and intercede for them. Thus, without any ceremonies or formalities, Taqí Manshádí became the most well-known and talked of Bahá'í. Every one was eager to receive his letters. {{p45}} It has often been stated by those believers who are familiar with both Persian and English writings, that Taqí Manshádí and Mr. Chas. Mason Remey were brothers in calligraphy, only Taqí Manshádí was an older brother.

6. Manshádí's Epistolary Style and His Peculiarities

Manshádí's letters are well preserved by all the Persians. Hájí Níáz tells me that he has 500 of them. I may have two hundred or more. These letters are masterpieces of news writing. He had a sense for bare facts and news and he knew that no one expected philosophy from him or the literary style of Oriental compliments. He had done away with all this form. It was really a radical departure from the established rule and many young people, seeing the wisdom of his course, followed his epistolary innovations. The letters generally opened with a few sentences about the Master's health and his family. This to the Bahá'í world, was considered the most important part. Then the record of the arrival and departure of the pilgrims, their names, the events in 'Akká, a general outline of the progress of the Cause in other parts of the world, etc. They were indeed "newsy letters." After the ascension of Bahá'u'lláh the activities of the Cause increased a hundredfold, the number of the believers became considerably larger, the movement spread in America and Europe and the matter of correspondence with all these heterogeneous elements became of the utmost importance. The Master looked about for an efficient experienced man. {{p46}} who could hold in his hand the helm of the ship of correspondence, and who with a cool head and infinite patience, could direct it through the tempestuous seas of difficulties. In the whole Bahá'í world, there was no one more fitting than Taqí Manshádí, and he was selected for the position. For many years he worked untiringly, unceasingly, ever receiving assistance from the Supreme Concourse. In his early days at 'Akká and Haifa, his room became a general meeting-place for all the Bahá'ís. "I will see you tonight at Manshádí's home at such and such an hour," was an oft quoted expression. The door was open to everyone. All pilgrims were welcome. He was always the first to go to the steamer to greet the newcomers or say farewell to those who were returning, laden with the spiritual gifts from the Presence of Bahá'u'lláh. Hájí Níáz says: —

"Taqí Manshádí was well known amongst all the Bahá'ís for his fidelity, simplicity, loving disposition, truthfulness, sincerity and above all, for his ability to serve everyone with gentleness, courtesy, and marvelous patience. His room was furnished with simplicity. He always sat on the floor, surrounded with a pile of letters. He was often literally buried in them. He smoked a 'water-pipe' all the time, and an over-indulgence in this, finally caused his death.”

When Sultán ‘Abdu’l-Ḥamíd sent several commissioners to ‘Akká and conditions became intolerable, the “Beloved” sent Taqí Manshádí to Port Sa‘íd — so that from this place he might carry on his work, it was in this town that he passed away at the age of sixty, serene and happy. The Master was much grieved when he heard the news, and after a while appointed Siyyid Asadu’lláh in his place, this position he has filled with credit to the Cause and to himself. I hear however, that Siyyid Asadu’lláh is going to leave for Russia tomorrow to teach the Cause. {{p47}} After the wonderful trip through America and Europe he will no doubt be confirmed in attracting many souls to the Kingdom of Abhá! The Master, before long, will appoint another person to carry on his work.

7. How to Conduct Bahá’í Meetings, and the ### Importance of Public Speaking

This morning, I called on the Beloved. He had received packages of letters, some from America. There is one point which has been brought to his attention of late. It is this: — In certain Assemblies in America a number of the believers desire to exclude all public speaking and to confine themselves to the reading of Tablets, etc. This is positively not in accordance with the Bahá’í Plan of teaching, nor with the instructions of ‘Abdu’l-Bahá. To read Tablets, and the Holy Writings is only half of the aspect of the question; the other aspect is the delivery of eloquent addresses and fluent talks elucidating the spirit of the Cause. The Master’s wish is always to encourage the believers to speak at the meetings. This I know is his will. When today the subject was again presented to him in a letter from America, he told me that he had written in many Tablets that the friends must speak at the meetings. We must encourage public-speaking, especially in those who have this talent. The Cause must be spread through eloquent, sincere addresses. We must unloose the tongue, spread the Fragrances of God and diffuse the words of God. We must present to the public the proofs and evidences of this Cause with a language of fire — so that souls may be exhilarated, and minds become full of tumult and of acclamation. With words of Love and illumination we must set the hearts aglow with this Fire of Divine Truth, and enkindle the spirits with this Power of the Kingdom. We must explain the Teachings orally, so that the consciousness of men may be stirred; then invisible inspirations will descend. {{p48}} Bounties from the Holy Spirit will be revealed, rays from the Sun of Reality will shine forth, Breezes from the Paradise of Abhá will waft abroad and the Glad-tidings of the Kingdom spread throughout the world.

8. Tablet by ‘Abdu’l-Bahá Regarding the Delivery of ### Eloquent Speeches

Then he revealed a Tablet on this subject and may issue others before long: —

“Thou hast written concerning the spiritual meeting. The spiritual meeting must be in the utmost state of ecstasy and tumult. Prayers may be recited, Tablets and verses read, eloquent speeches delivered and divine proofs explained. Then the audience may be encouraged and incited to enter the Kingdom of God, news received from different countries may be imparted and at the end they may repeat collectively a supplication.”

PORT SA‘ÍD, EGYPT, JULY 10, 1913.

1. Siyyid Asadu’lláh Departs for Russia to Spread the #### Message

Our traveling companion, and fellow-worker, Siyyid Asadu’lláh Qumí, who has been with Bahá’u’lláh and the Master for many years and traveled with the latter throughout America and Europe, left today for the Caucasus to teach the Cause. {{p49}} We will miss him. He has been like a father to us during our wanderings and although Mírzá Maḥmúd wrote the official report of the trip of the Beloved, yet Siyyid Asadu’lláh corresponded with the friends in small assemblies all over the East. They could not receive any direct news, were he not traveling with us. Now, detached from all else save God, alone, at the age of seventy-six, he faces the world. Carrying in his hand the Ideal Banner of the Cause, he leaves port Said with a firm confidence and trust in ‘Abdu’l-Bahá.

After the ascension of Bahá’u’lláh he made a trip through Persia, taught many souls, and was bitterly persecuted for his glorious faith. Last night and this morning he went to ‘Abdu’l-Bahá and no doubt received his orders and heavenly benediction. Today at one o’clock we were all gathered at the station, to bid him farewell. He goes first to Alexandria to meet Mírzá Abu’l-Faḍl and then taking a ship, will sail for Constantinople.

2. Siyyid Asadu’lláh’s Talk with ‘Abdu’l-Bahá and His #### Glowing Resolution

I confess that nothing has so deeply stirred me in my whole Bahá’í career as the heavenly resolution of this old man to go alone into the world and teach the Cause! He himself went to the Master and begged for his permission. He said: “I have heard thy glorious proclamation from pulpits and platforms. I have seen wondrous scenes of the Majesty of Our Lord. I have hearkened to the divine words falling from thy blessed lips. My Lord! My cup is full to overflowing. I am an old man. I question if I can accomplish anything in thy cause, but I supplicate thee to let me try. I can contain myself no longer. I do not wish to flicker out on the couch of rest, but long to end on the battlefield. {{p50}} I would love to die as a soldier, fighting the good fight to the very last moment, and not as a pensioner.”

And so he went! With such a superhuman example of deeds and self-sacrifices does anybody wonder why the Bahá'í Cause has such stupendous power? All the friends in America and Europe who have met our dear brother Siyyid Asadu'lláh love him, and I know that from the depth of their hearts they will pray that the Lord may keep him and protect him many years yet for the service of His Cause, and as a witness to His Power.

3. Farewell to Siyyid Asadu'lláh

My beloved Siyyid Asadu'lláh farewell! You have been a loving companion and a faithful attendant to our Beloved! Your cheerful face and disposition shall never be forgotten! Your memory will shine in our inmost hearts as a radiant star! Your faith will be a glorious example for all the younger generations. During the years of your life you have served your God to the best of your ability! You have suffered and accepted much persecution in the Path of Bahá! And now, although a veteran of many wars, you are again enlisted in the ranks of active work and are entering on a new campaign! Farewell!

4. 'Abdu'l-Bahá's Expectation to Go to Ismailia

For a few minutes we were privileged to see the Master in the morning. He said that the weather in Port Sa'íd had not agreed with him, and that he expected to leave tomorrow for Ismailia, a town about one hour and fifteen minutes from this city. He is going there for two or three days and if all goes well, he will send for us. Aḥmad Yazdí and Khusraw will accompany him.

5. Poems of Mr. Moxey Read to 'Abdu'l-Bahá

In the afternoon Mírzá 'Abdu'l-Qásim Iṣfahání and Mírzá Maḥmúd, two merchant Bahá'ís from Cairo arrived with their wives to see the Master. {{p51}} They accompanied me into his holy presence. He was dressed in spotless white and looked very beautiful. A large envelope containing the poems of Mr. Frank K. Moxey of 575 Riverside Drive, New York City, had just been received. The Master gave them to me to read. After looking over the title of each, I told him about them. He then asked me to translate the poem on the Báb, which I did immediately. He was most pleased and praised it very highly. The poem is very eloquent and shows true inspiration. It is hoped that he will continue to write upon such soul-stirring ideals. A Bahá'í poet is needed in America There are many in Persia.

6. 'Abdu'l-Bahá Speaks about the "Star of the West"

Then the Master took from the table the "Star of the West," No. 5, and showed all those who were present the photograph of the Mashriqu'l-Adhkár Convention in New York City. He was very happy, saying: "Look at this photograph and wonder at the penetrating influence of the Bahá'í Cause."

He expressed the hope that the “Star of the West” would, little by little, widen its field and become a power for good in the Cause and in humanitarian activities. Its Persian section is eagerly read by all the Bahá’ís.

7. Talk on His Tour to America

Then, referring to his arduous tour through the United States, he mentioned that the confirmation and assistance of the Blessed Perfection were his companions; otherwise his body could never have stood all the difficulties of the voyage. {{p52}} He did not feel well, yet he worked. He traveled. He went there. He came here. He did not give any importance to his body. The wisdom of this was that the believers might see with their own eyes that he was rising above hardships, vicissitudes, sickness and troubles so that the Cause might prosper. Except for the diffusion of the Fragrances of God, he desired nothing. Except for service at the Threshold of Abhá, he cared for nothing. His hope was to teach the Cause, to proclaim the Glad-tidings of the appearance of the Kingdom of Abhá, and to advance the Cause of International peace and human brotherhood.

1. ‘Abdu’l-Bahá’s Departure for Ismailia

Knowing that the beloved departs today for the city of Ismailia, we called on him about 6:30 A. M. The train leaves at eight, so we had ample time to have our last meeting. There were several pilgrims, who had just arrived, and to them he expressed his regrets. He will stay there two or three days. If the weather agrees with him, he will rent a house and send for us. {{p53}} If not, he will return, and go either to Alexandria or Ramleh.

2. He Praises the American Bahá’ís

He spoke about the innumerable meetings he had attended in America, and how he found in the believers a true spiritual sense, and a divine and heavenly attraction which made them strive upward; how the paeans of their glad praises were raised to the supreme Concourse; how they were making great efforts to bring into being the spiritual consciousness of mankind; how they were servants of the oneness of the world of humanity, the promoters of universal Peace and the standard-bearers of the spiritual brotherhood of man.

3. He Tells the Persians about Fred Mortenson Who

Traveled from Minneapolis to Green Acre in Order to See Him

Then he told the Persian friends about Fred Mortenson, a young Bahá’í from Minneapolis, who had been so anxious to meet the Master that he risked his life by concealing himself under the train till he reached Green Acre, Maine.

Praising the courage of this fine clean fellow ‘Abdu’l-Bahá said that when he passed through Minneapolis he had again met him and his wife. {{p54}} Such events could not happen by the effort of any human being, but they are the confirmations of the Holy Spirit and the marvelous signs of this Dispensation!

About 7:45 the carriage was ready, the two small satchels of the Beloved were brought down, and after saying farewell to each one of us, he was taken to the station, Aḥmad Yazdí and Khusraw accompanying him.

4. The Absence of ‘Abdu’l-Bahá Is Noticed Everywhere

We returned home saddened because we could not go with the master, but were consoled by looking forward to our reunion, which would not be long.

A young Persian Bahá’í, by the name of Áqá Jamál, arrived yesterday from Haifa, and he will cook for us in our own apartment as long as we are here. He is a tall, quiet man, very willing to serve and to please everybody.

Mírzá ‘Alí-Akbar, Ḥájí Níáz and Mírzá Faḍl’u’lláh live in the hotel, but for their board and tea they come to us. Ḥájí Níáz is a good conversationalist and knows many anecdotes and stories. While I was writing in my room, they had gathered around him on the veranda and he spoke to them about many things of interest.

At noon we received a telephone message from Aḥmad Yazdí assuring us of the master’s safe arrival and that he is stopping at the Hotel Vaseteef. He is pleased with the place and is well.

In the afternoon we were again gathered on the veranda, drinking tea and talking about the Cause; Ḥájí Níáz described his meetings with Prof. E. G. Browne of Cambridge University, when he was in Egypt, when the latter was invited to the house of Khurasání, where all day one of the Bahá’í teachers discussed with him aspects of the Cause referring to rational and scriptural proofs.

Let me translate for you a few extracts from recent Tablets: —

5. Tablet on ‘Abdu’l-Bahá’s Trip in America

“Less than a year, ‘Abdu’l-Bahá raised the cry of ‘Ya Bahá’u’l-Abhá’ from his heart and soul as he crossed the mountains and deserts of that continent! {{p55}} In churches and meetings he imparted the Glad-tidings of the appearance of the Kingdom of God. With a resonant voice he announced the dawn of the Sun of Reality and explained divine proofs and evidences. With a heart and spirit overflowing with the Love of God he raised the New Wonderful Melody. Undoubtedly it will have great effect. Consider that the soul-imparting Melody of His Holiness Christ, (may my life be a sacrifice to him!) became effective and world-conquering after three hundred years, but in a short space of time the Song of the Kingdom of Abhá has quickened the East and the West!

The future of the Cause in Stuttgart:

“I hope that the Ensigns of Divine Verses may be upraised in Stuttgart; the Fire of the Love of God be so enkindled as to set all those parts aglow, and that each one of those blessed souls may become as a bright candle, shedding the light of guidance in every direction.”

6. The Power of the Bahá'í Cause

“The Glad-tidings of the Kingdom of Abhá can overcome hard stones and resuscitate dried bones. Like unto the downpouring of the vernal shower, they cause the growth of roses and hyacinths, jasmine and jonquils to come forth out of black soil! Likewise if the inhabitants of a city are submerged in the sea of materialism, it may take some time to awaken them, yet the Melody of the Kingdom of Abhá shall finally quicken them; the cup of the Love of God will become full to overflowing, imparting a wonderful exhilaration to allay the thirst of the thirsty ones.”

1. Telephone Message from Ismailia about ‘Abdu’l-Bahá

Today at noon we received a telephone message from Ismailia giving us news of the master's improved health and wishing us to give his greeting to each one of the friends. Two Bahá'ís arrived from Cairo, not knowing that the Master was not here. We entertained them to the best of our ability with stories of the spiritual Conquest of the Beloved in the West. As one of them had only two days leave from his work, we got the Master's consent by telephone, that he might be permitted to see him in Ismailia.

Everybody was here as usual talking about the Cause; Ḥájí Níáz told us about some incidents in the life of Bahá'u'lláh. Toward evening we walked to the quay where the Casino Palace Hotel, the small municipal garden and DeLessep's statue are situated. We observed great preparations for festivities and upon inquiry were told that the French were celebrating their Independence Day, 14th of the month.

As there is a strong element of French in the Canal Company, they seem desirous to impress the Egyptians with their patriotism, and they are making very elaborate preparations. {{p57}} In Cairo they celebrate this Feast on a much larger scale.

2. Mírzá Maḥmúd Prepares Three Volumes on the Tour

of ‘Abdu’l-Bahá Throughout Europe and America

The last few days Mírzá Maḥmúd is preparing ‘Abdu’l-Bahá's addresses from the time he sailed from Alexandria to America. These addresses will form the first volume; the second will be his diary in Persian of the journey, and the third the translation of the articles which appeared in the principal papers and magazines of America and Europe. Once these books are published and circulated in the Orient, they will have great effect in furthering the Cause of the Kingdom of Abhá!

3. Translation of a Tablet to the Believers in Kirmán,

Persia

The following is a Tablet to the believers of Kirmán, Persia:

“O ye kind friends! A letter was received from Kirmán giving you utmost praise and saying, the friends of God are like unto flames of fire and radiant lamps of the Kingdom; they are as fire-temples of spirituality and brilliant stars of heaven. This letter has become the cause of happiness to my heart, for praise be to God, the Fire of the Love of God is set aglow in Kirmán, the veils which have covered their eyes are burned away; the believers are attracted and stirred into gladness, and the friends are in a state of supplication and invocation. Therefore, I prayed and implored at the Divine Threshold and wished for the beloved ones a cup overflowing with the Grace of God, so that, in Kirmán, the day of resurrection may be set up, the hearts become exhilarated, the city moved by the resounding voice, and the world stirred with the power of the Holy Spirit!

“Praise be to God! {{p58}} The Eastern horizon is luminous and the nostrils of the people of the West are perfumed. The splendor of the luminary of the East has cast a reflection upon the West which has illumined it. The Voice of the Almighty is raised in these regions and the Pure Religion of God is being promoted. Ere long it shall yield important results and the ensign of ‘Ya Bahá El Abhá’ shall be lifted so high as to wave over all the continents.”

4. How to Deliver Bahá’í Public Addresses

“The basis of this divine call (teaching and delivering addresses) must be the oneness of the world of humanity; so that religious fanaticism, sectarian bias, racial prejudice and political rivalry may be removed, so that all mankind may enter under the uni-colored tent of the oneness of the world of humanity, and hearts may affiliate with each other, souls be attracted and East and West embrace each other. This must be the basis of your addresses in public meetings.”

5. How Great Movements Have Advanced

“All great movements have advanced through altruism, selflessness, and self-sacrifice and not merely through an interchange of public opinions. It is my hope that all may arise with the greatest power to serve this most important Cause (Universal Peace) and become the means of the welfare of the world of humanity.”

6. About ‘Abdu’l-Bahá’s American Tour to a Persian

Bahá’í

“It is nearly two years and a half since I have been a wanderer over mountains and deserts and a traveler over seas and lands. {{p59}} The journey was extended to many climes.... The penetrative power of the Holy Cause has stirred the columns of the world. In many cities of America the Divine Call was raised. Likewise in the countries of Europe. In numerous churches, clubs, groups and Universities of America the Glad-tidings of the Kingdom of Abhá were explained precisely with resonant voice, and no one arose to make opposition. They listened most attentively and afterwards expressed their pleasure. Ere long this Call shall yield glorious results and will fill the world with its fruits.”

PORT SA‘ÍD, EGYPT, JULY 13, 1913.

One of the believers, Mírzá Abú’l-Qásim Işfahání coming from Cairo a few days ago brought with him a package belonging to Siyyid Asadu’lláh. This package among other things contained three precious volumes of Tablets from the pen of ‘Abdu’l-Bahá. They are copies of very old letters, some of them addressed to the believers in America. Herein I will translate a few. The following may have been revealed to one of the American Assemblies and probably is sixteen years old: —

1. Tablet of ‘Abdu’l-Bahá on Progress

“He is El Abhá!

O YE FRIENDS OF THE BLESSED PERFECTION!

“This century is the century of attraction. This Cycle is the Cycle of His Highness the Lord of Lords. {{p60}} The East and West are in commotion and acclamation and the North and South in ecstasy and tumult. The world is progressing with marvelous acceleration and the realm of existence is growing and developing with an eternal velocity and at geometric ratio. Mankind, like unto a suckling babe is being trained in the Arms of Providence, and humanity like unto a newly planted tree in the ground of the world, is waxing in stature and size, becoming more beautiful and lovely through the downpour of the rain of Grace. The greater the exertion, the more the descent of the divine Bestowal. The more we ascend heavenward, the greater will be the realization of universal progress from all directions.

“Therefore, O ye friends of the Ancient Beauty and ye beloved ones of the Most Great Name! Make an effort, so that in all the grades of Human existence, whether spiritual or material, ye may make extraordinary advancement. The Mercy and Favor of His Highness, the One is with us!

(Signed) ‘ABDU’L-BAHÁ ‘ABBÁS.

Here is another Tablet which was revealed probably thirteen years ago to (Mrs. Helen G. Goodall), a believer in San Francisco, California, the contents of which shows how the Master's prayers are fulfilled in her behalf: —

2. A Tablet by 'Abdu'l-Bahá on Personal Illumination

and Guiding Others to the Truth

“O thou spiritual pearl and leaf stirred by the wafting of the Breeze of God! Verily with a heart overflowing with love and affection I perused thy letter which was an eloquent expression of thy praise for the love of God, of thy firmness in the Covenant of God, {{p61}} thy gladness through the Fragrances of God and thy great exertion in the guidance of the servants of God!

“Verily I supplicate God to confirm thee with the Breaths of the Holy Spirit, to dilate thy breast with the Zephyrs wafting from the direction of the Paradise of Abhá and to suffer thee to become a light from which radiates the rays of supplication, invocation and prayers toward the Kingdom of God: — so that thou mayest become a Cause of the awakening, mindfulness and quickening of the servants and maid servants of God, and a means of giving them of the wine of knowledge and of summoning them to the Kingdom of the Merciful with evidences and proofs...”

I will close this day by the translation of another wonderful Tablet: —

3. The Day of the Glorious Bounties of the Invisible

Kingdom of Abhá

“He is El Abhá!

O YE REAL FRIENDS!

“This day is the day of the Glorious Bounties of the Invisible Kingdom of Abhá and of the tumultuous waving of the seas of the Inexhaustible Bestowals of the Supreme Countenance. The rays of his effulgences have dawned from all directions and the breezes of His generosity and compassion are wafting from all parts. The doors of His kingdom are flung wide and the verses of His Omnipotence are spread abroad. His ancient Grace like a mighty torrent is flowing with great impetuosity, and His manifest light is apparent from the horizon of Certainty like unto a shining moon.

“But these servants must appreciate the value of this Eminent Grace and consider this sublime generosity as the most great Bounty; — so that we may become its signs and be illumined with its rays. {{p62}} When vernal showers descend upon good and pure soil, flowers will grow therein and the black earth will become a delectable Paradise.”

4. Mrs. Stannard May Go to India and Teach the

Bahá'í Cause

Mrs. J. Stannard, an English Bahá'í, is back in Port Sa'id and may stay with us for several days. I had a most pleasant conversation with her about the progress of the Cause in Germany and England. The Master may send her to India. She is a very active and energetic worker and no doubt will be able to spread the Bahá'í movement very effectively.

PORT SA'ÍD, EGYPT, JULY 14, 1913.

1. The French Day of Independence in Port Sa'id

The European part of Port Sa'id is decorated with thousands of Japanese lanterns, the French flag is seen everywhere, and everybody seems to enter into the spirit of celebration on this National Feast of the Republic of France. After sunset the principal avenues, the French Consulate, the Banks, firms and buildings are lighted up by electricity. The street in which the Eastern Exchange, Continental and Casino Palace Hotels are built, is a riot of music promenaders, Arabs, Greeks, Italians, English, German, and French. {p63} Everybody is out to have a good time and to see the sights. The avenue from one end to the other is wired, and a roof is constructed of Japanese lanterns. The trees also bear such luminous fruits. During the day there have been many public functions and receptions in the Consulate, in the government house and in the Canal Company headquarters. Last night there was a grand Ball in the Casino Palace Hotel. About eight o'clock we left home, our destination being the Municipal Park. The Casino Palace Hotel is so built that it fronts the Mediterranean and on the other side faces the Park. The hotel was illumined from top to bottom with electric festoons and it was indeed a glorious sight to thousands of Arabs, men, women and children — who had come to see what wonders these — “strangers” have wrought! The weather was cool, a brisk breeze was wafting from the sea. The heaven was clear and the soft silver rays of the Queen of night streamed down upon a merry-making population. The searchlight, built upon a high pillar to guide ships into the harbor, revolved round and round, sending its powerful rays into the remote distances of the sea. At nine o'clock a cannon boomed forth, and the display of fireworks was started. More than twenty coal barges were tied together at the wharf. People crowded near the harbor. The fireworks were on these barges and hundreds of rockets ascended to the skies displaying many colors. Some strange, fantastic contrivances, were displayed on the water, which ran hither and thither like lizards. For one hour and a half the display of pyrotechnics continued, showing all the original devices and magical works that a French mind can invent.

As soon as the fireworks started, three ships illuminated from top to bottom, came into view from the other side of the port. These were followed by more than one hundred boats in an orderly line, all brilliantly lighted with electricity. {{p64}} It was really a very imposing naval procession, fairy-like, picturesque and beautiful. Beside these boats there were several hundred others belonging to the merry-makers, afloat on the calm sea. Now and then the air brought to our ears the sweet notes of a mandolin or guitar.... It was half past eleven when we returned home!

2. ‘Abdu’l-Bahá’s Life in Ismailia

This morning Aḥmad Yazdí returned from Ismailia and brought good news of the Beloved. The first two days he had not felt well, but now he is resting better. While there he had met an old friend of his, a famous doctor who had prescribed a regime of rest and diet to be followed strictly. The Master has decided to remain a week; if the weather agrees with him he will send for all of us, if not, he will return and then may go to Ramleh. He has sent for Mírzá Faḍl’u’lláh to go to him as soon as possible. So he left at seven P. M., and will be in Ismailia at 8:15 P. M.

Today I will translate another Tablet to an American Bahá’í:

3. What Constitutes Everlasting Fame

O THOU WHO ARE ATTRACTED BY THE LIGHTS SHINING FROM THE KINGDOM OF GOD!

“Verily I have read thy eloquent letter and wonderful epistle expressing thy excessive joy through the divine Glad-tidings, and reflecting the susceptibilities of thy conscious and spiritual emotions through the Bestowals of His Majesty the Lord of mankind. Blessed art thou for this Bounty! Gladness be unto thee for this Gift! Rejoicing be thine for this confirmation. {{p65}} Happiness be unto thee for this assistance. Ere long thou shalt behold with eyes of beatitude the signs of success and prosperity because of thy firmness in the Love of God, thy steadfastness in the Covenant of God, thy superlative attraction to God, thy unwavering perseverance in the diffusion of the Fragrance of God and thy source of joyousness through the Glad-tidings of God!

“Know thou, verily I say unto thee that the condition of this mortal world, even if it is the kingship of the whole expanse of the Globe, is ephemeral. It is an illusion. It ends in nothing, neither does it contain any results nor in the estimation of God is it equal to the wing of a mosquito. Where are the kings and the queens? Where are the palaces and the empresses? Where are the imperial thrones and jeweled crowns? Where are the mighty rulers of Persia, Greece and Rome? Verily their palaces are in ruin and desolation, their thrones destroyed, and their crowns cast in the dust. But any one of the maid-servants of God who has arisen in the diffusion of the Fragrances of God, serving the Kingdom of God, summoning the people to the Word of God, eternally her signs shall be widely spread and handed down through centuries and cycles; her dawn shall ever be luminous; her star always shining; her flag continually flying; her station divinely glorified; her crown scintillating; her message living; her fame immortal; her voice resonant; her spirit in the apex of the Kingdom; and her effulgence in the horizon of the Realm of Might I beg of God to make thee one of these maid-servants.”

PORT SA‘ÍD, EGYPT, JULY 15, 1913.

In the Persian notes of our brother Mírzá Maḥmúd I find a glorious message to the Unitarians of America which I am sure was not translated at the time: It is the second day after the Beloved’s departure from Alexandria, March 26 or 27th, 1912. An American woman expresses her interest in the Cause, saying that she is a Unitarian and requesting the Master to send a message to them in the United States. Then ‘Abdu’l-Bahá utters the following words: —

1. The Message of ‘Abdu’l-Bahá to the Unitarians

“Convey to the Unitarians my loving greetings and say; The most exalted aim in this world is the promotion of the Love of God and the establishment of good fellowship and unity between the people. This is the signal distinction between man and beast. When thou reachest America, announce to the Unitarians: —

Glad-tidings! Glad-tidings! The Sun of Universal Love hath dawned;

Glad-tidings! Glad-tidings! The Banquet of friendship and divine association is spread.

Glad-tidings! Glad-tidings! The Banner of the Kingdom of God is unfurled!

Glad-tidings! Glad-tidings! The heavenly Spring hath appeared.

Glad-tidings! Glad-tidings! The Cloud of spiritual Grace is pouring down!

Glad-tidings! Glad-tidings! The trees of the orchard of humanity are verdant and abloom.

Glad-tidings! Glad-tidings! The Herald of the Kingdom hath become manifest.

Glad-tidings! Glad-tidings! The prophecies of the holy Books have been fulfilled.

Glad-tidings! Glad-tidings! The age of human brotherhood is dawning upon mankind!

Glad-tidings! Glad-tidings! The Century of light and Universal Peace hath come!”

As I read these vital words it seemed to me that they were a most significant prelude to the enthusiastic reception given to him by the Unitarians of America at their Convention in Boston, in the Tremont Temple.

Another beautiful talk that I may be permitted to translate here from the Persian notes is the Beloved’s words to Bishop Birch of New York, who came to call on him at the Hotel Ansonia on the sixth day of his arrival After a preliminary conversation he said:

2. ‘Abdu’l-Bahá’s Conversation with Bishop Birch of

New York City

“Praise be to God that stupendous material developments are obtained in this country; but material civilization alone does not safeguard the progress of a nation; because through material civilization, dynamite, Krupp guns, projectiles and Mauser’s rifles are invented: thus the infernal instruments of human fratricide are multiplied and constantly perfected. Therefore, natural civilization fosters both good and evil. All this warfare, and bloodshed, and all this feverish multiplication of military armaments are the results of material civilization. When material civilization joins hands with spiritual civilization, then it will be perfect. {{p68}} In former times a wooden box may have protected your objects from the thief, but now safes with their complicated keys and signs do not daunt the robbers. Consequently just as ‘good’ is advanced through material civilization, ‘evil’ has taken the same pace. Earthly civilization must become the handmaid of heavenly civilization. Natural civilization is like unto the body of man. If the body is animated by the spirit, it is alive, otherwise it is a corpse which in time will become decomposed.”

The Bishop expressed his pleasure and delight at hearing the above words of truth. The Master replied:

3. Some Churches are Free from Prejudices

“I am likewise very grateful to you. Praise be to God that your churches are free from prejudice. They are not so creed-bound as to be unable to breathe. Many Christian Churches in Europe are as yet extremely dogmatic, but I have already spoken in churches belonging to your denomination. The congregations consisted of most delightful and intelligent people. This is a great distinction. I love you with all my heart and soul. My chief aim is to remove the present misunderstanding between the nations of the East and the West: — so that we may express love toward each other and promote the essentials of heavenly civilization. I hope that such a confirmation may be vouchsafed, so that we may become united.”

The Bishop said —

“Up to this time no one has come from the East to the West with such power, such lucid teachings and such exalted aims. Therefore I am very grateful to you and most pleased to have met you.”

The third contribution for today is going to be a part of a touching Tablet revealed by the Beloved to a friend in ‘Akká, on the fourth of this month. {{p69}} He says in part:

4. ‘Abdu’l-Bahá Expresses Desire to Visit the Shrine

of His Father in ‘Akká

“Truly I say, the extreme desire of my heart and soul is to be present at the Court of Bahá’u’lláh, so that I may perfume my face and my locks with the dust of the Holy Threshold. It is now three years since ‘Abdu’l-Bahá has been deprived of this Favor and has remained too far to become the recipient of the dawning lights of that brilliant spot. Day and night he has suffered from regret and deprivation. It is hoped from His Highness the Desired One, that this weak body which through the effect of the long journey has come to the verge of complete disintegration, may before the cessation of breath, become so assisted as to throw itself upon the Dust of the Holy Threshold. May this servant attain to a new life, illumine his eyes, and transform his heart and spirit into a rose garden and meadow, start on his journey to reach the Abode of the Friend and haste from this to another world.”

5. ‘Abdu’l-Bahá Praises the Faith of German Bahá’ís

In a Tablet revealed on the same date to Mírzá ‘Alí Akbar he says about Germany: —

“In short, Germany shall become illuminated; because its inhabitants are religious and not submerged in the sea of materialism. Those souls who travel along the path of nature are like unto dead people; the breath of life does not play upon them to any effect. Praise be to God that you have become assisted in service and that you have ignited the candle of guidance before the eyes of all. It is hoped that most weighty results may become apparent. {{p70}} The German believers are in a state of real enkindlement; firm and steadfast in the Cause of God; therefore their influence will be very great.”

Today a letter was received from Mírzá Munír who is in Ismailia, giving the news of the well-being of the Master, and saying that he will soon send for us; he is looking for a house large enough to accommodate all. In the morning we called on Aḥmad Yazdí at his store; in the afternoon Madame Stannard came to see us and we talked a great deal about the probability of the Beloved’s trip to India. She has lived in that country for a long time, and is thoroughly familiar with the situation.

Today several letters arrived from America imparting cheer and happiness. Through the golden chain of correspondence hearts are united even if seas and lands separate them.

PORT SA'ÍD, EGYPT, JULY 16, 1913.

1. The Scope of 'Abdu'l-Bahá's Talks in California

Now that we are temporarily separated from the Beloved, we occupy our time with the past, working upon the notes of his American tour. I am copying all the Master's public and private talks given in California, so that when I am with him, he may correct them for future publication. The Master's talks in California reached the high water mark of his trip, showing the wonderful versatility of his divine mind. {{p71}} During those days, a flood of teachings was poured from his tongue, irrigating the soil of hearts.

2. The Program of a Day's Activity in Port Sa'íd

Mírzá Maḥmúd is busy writing the diary of 'Abdu'l-Bahá's tour in America. Mírzá 'Alí-Akbar copies the Tablets and addresses of the Beloved. He is eager to have these heavenly words to read in the Bahá'í meetings which he will attend on his way to Persia. For the present our group consists of only these three persons. We live very quietly. Seldom anything or anybody disturbs 'the peacefulness of our abode. I get up at five o'clock and after reading a few prayers, go out on the veranda and look at the Mediterranean, sometimes perfectly calm, and again rough. Then I work for an hour or two, till my friends are awake. Mírzá Jamál, our Bahá'í cook, has by this time prepared our breakfast, which consists of tea, bread and cheese. Then we work again till noon, and now and then one of us may go upon some errand or to visit Aḥmad Yazdí's store to receive the news. For lunch, often we have bread, cheese, cantaloupe or watermelon, and if not these, "abgousht" or "Persian stew." Our friends take a nap. I work. At four we have tea. At six we take a walk and call on Madame Stannard at the Eastern Exchange Hotel. Generally we are back by eight. Between nine and ten we have our supper, sometimes rice or meat. Then we sit on the veranda for about an hour, speaking about the Cause, and enjoying the moonlit night, then we return to our room to work until eleven or twelve o'clock, after which we retire. This is the program of our life for the present. {{p72}} A great contrast to our strenuous activities in the West.

3. Permission Comes to Visit 'Abdu'l-Bahá in Ismailia

This morning Mírzá Faḍl'u'lláh returned from Ismailia with a package of Tablets from the Beloved for me to translate. On the envelope the Master writes with his own hand:

"Translate these Tablets immediately. We hope soon to rent a house. As soon as it is prepared, we will send for you."

This message danced before my eyes and I started on my translations. Our happiness was complete when Mírzá 'Alí-Akbar brought us permission to leave for Ismailia tomorrow, to spend the day. The anticipation of meeting the Master gave us a new vigor and all day and night we walked on a cloud of joy and happiness.... Mírzá Faḡl'u'lláh has received permission to leave tomorrow for Persia.

The following is the translation of a Tablet revealed for the Persian believers on July 4th, which may be of interest: —

4. What Is Real Friendship

O YE FRIENDS OF ‘ABDU’L-BAHÁ! Material friendship is not permanent; for every kind of love which is not purely for the sake of God is ended in hatred. Amity which is not for the sake of the Lord, changeth into enmity. But the divine friends are the faithful ones. They are the consolation of the heart and the peace of my spirit. They are spirit embodied, love personified, sincerity incarnated, loyal friends and staunch lovers. {{p73}} Therefore they are the cause of the happiness of the heart and the soul.

5. Prayer for the Friends

“During this long journey, whenever the memory of the friends crossed my mind, hardships were forgotten, inconceivable joys were realized and vicissitudes and Inconveniences changed into composure and tranquillity Then I supplicated toward the Kingdom of Glory, saying:

“‘O thou kind Beloved! Be thou the associate of the hearts and the souls of the friends; send them at every moment dew from the sea of thy bestowals; exhilarate them every second with new wine and cause them to become intoxicated with thy cup; so that they may take the divine goblet in their hands, give the choice wine to the seekers and confer the exhilaration of the wine of ‘Am I not your Lord?’ upon the wooers!”

6. For Me to Be Silent, For You to Be Singing

“In short, during this trip you were all with me and were visible before my sight. In my wanderings, the Melody of this divine bird reached the apex of heaven, and the cry of “Ya Bahá’u’l-Abhá” was heard by the people of the world. Now it is the turn of the believers of God. I will be silent and they must sing with acclamation and joy: — so that they may awaken the heedless ones.

PORT SA‘ÍD, EGYPT, JULY 17, 1913.

To begin this day with thanksgiving on my lips and in my heart, I will translate a Tablet revealed by the Master many years ago to the Persian believers. It is from one of the books of Siyyid Asadu’lláh.

1. A Prayer of Illumination

“I praise Thee, O Thou Remover of Sorrows, Overlooker of faults, Rejoicer of hearts and Illuminator of faces! Verily to the beloved ones at the door of Thy oneness, the worthiest amongst Thy people, the noble ones amongst Thy creatures and the righteous ones in the congregation of Thy servants, are evidences of the manifestation of Thy singleness. Verily Thou hast chosen Thy believers for the sake of Thy Love, elected them for Thy Knowledge, appointed them as the custodians of Thy Mysteries and exalted them above all Thy other servants, under all circumstances, and conditions.

“O Lord! O Lord! Illumine their eyes with the beholding of Thy Lights, refine their consciences with the appearance of Thy Mysteries and enlighten their hearts with the traces of Thy Names! Suffer them to become the signs of Thy Unity, and the Banners of Thy singleness, the stars of Thy Graces and the candles of Thy Assemblages; so that they may arise to serve Thee and be steadfast in Thy worship. Verily Thou art the Merciful, the Giver, the Mighty and the Generous.

2. The Dawn of the Sun of Reality

“O ye kind friends of ‘Abdu’l-Bahá! It is night. The impenetrable darkness hath covered all regions, but the hearts of the yearning ones are illumined and enlightened by the rays of the Bestowal of the Clement. {p75} The effulgence of the Morn of guidance is manifest and clear and the brilliant rays of the Sun of Reality are diffused throughout all Continents. The verses of the divine Majesty of the Most Great Name are read by all the people in all tongues; and through explanations, the evidences and proofs of the Blessed Perfection are demonstrated. The Melody of Holiness ascends to the etherial sphere and the songs of Unity descend from the Kingdom of Singleness. The Breezes of the most eminent Guidance confer life, and the sweet Fragrances of the Paradise of Abhá perfume this world and the world beyond.

3. People Are Heedless

“Notwithstanding this effulgence and this diffusion of the Fragrance of the Rose garden of the Covenant, innumerable souls are yet afflicted with the sleep of negligence. Their eyes are veiled and their nostrils do not inhale its fragrant perfume. What negligence, what inadvertence, what ignorance and what heedlessness is this! Verily this is the condition of the deprived ones in this Most Great Dispensation!

4. The Duty of the Followers of Truth

“But as regards you, turn your faces toward the Kingdom of Abhá and join your voices in anthems of thanksgiving and glorification! {p76} — that, praise be to God, the Sun of Unity hath so illumined the hearts of the righteous ones as to cause them to become the envy of the dawning-places of light and this is only through His all-comprehending Mercy and special Favor! Its source is:

— ‘He chooseth for His Grace whomsoever he willeth,’ and its mainspring is:
— ‘This is through the Bounty of your Lord, He bestoweth on whomsoever He desireth.

“Therefore, appreciate the value of the Most Great Bestowal of this ineffable Grace, and of this manifest Favor and Bounty which has been given to all the inhabitants of the world; so that by this appreciation and thankfulness the Mercy of the Peerless Lord may be increased, the Ancient Grace be revealed in the hearts and souls and spiritual outpouring be vouchsafed.

“Upon ye be greeting and praise!

5. Our Journey to Ismailia

As we were leaving this morning for Ismailia we arose early. The train left at eight o’clock. In our company there were several other Bahá’ís with their families who planned to stop over at Ismailia to meet the Master and then continue upon their journey to Cairo. All along the road the mighty Canal joining the two seas was visible, and now and then great ships passed before our eyes. On the other side was the barren desert with its lack of vegetation. We also passed by a great salt lake, the whiteness of which dazzled us in the light of the sun. The train stopped at many stations, allowing passengers to get on or off as the case might be. By ten o’clock we reached Ismailia. It has a small, up-to-date station. As it is practically inhabited only by Europeans, it is one of the cleanest spots in Egypt. It has, of course, an Arab quarter, but in comparison with other Arab quarters I have seen this one is quite clean. {{p77}} Ismailia is a new town.

6. Visit to ‘Abdu’l-Bahá in the Hotel Room

As soon as we reached the station we hurried to the hotel of J. Bosta. The first persons we met were Mírzá Munír and Khusraw, who have been fortunate enough to be with the Master. One of them conducted us to room 13 where the Beloved was living. When we entered we found ‘Abdu’l-Bahá in bed in a weakened condition. He welcomed us and inquired about our health. One of us had brought a package of letters and after a few minutes it was delivered to him. For a while he read them. There was one from an American believer (Miss A. Boylan) announcing the sad news of the death of her mother; another from India welcoming him to Egypt and inviting him to visit the former country. There were many more letters and cablegrams which for the present were left unread.

7. Formation of Habits

He raised himself and sat up in bed. He complained of the hardness of the cushions, saying, that when he was in Paris one of the believers had brought him a soft cushion and had urged him to put it under his head. He had become accustomed to it, and as there was none in the present hotel his neck consequently suffered pain all night. He said it was very bad to become the slave of habit, and that when he was young he often had a brick or a piece of rock to rest upon and slept soundly.

Ḥájí Níáz said he had a soft pillow with him and begged to be allowed to go out and bring it. ‘Abdu’l-Bahá would not have it, because he wished to get accustomed again to his old habits. {{p78}} One must never habituate himself to anything the absence of which may affect one’s comfort.

8. Bahá’u’lláh’s Life in the Persian Barrack of ‘Akká

Then he related the story of Bahá’u’lláh’s cruel incarceration in the barracks of ‘Akká, substantially as follows:

When two years had passed, a regiment of soldiers was assigned to ‘Akká. Of course there was only one place for them to live and that was the barracks. Therefore they had no alternative other than to turn out the Bahá’í prisoners. At the time there was an inn in ‘Akká which was inhabited by different people. In after years this inn became an hospice for the pilgrims. ‘Abdu’l-Bahá went to the innkeeper, stating, that inasmuch as the Bahá’ís were numerous and included several families, he desired to rent the inn and if it were possible for the present inmates to lodge themselves elsewhere.

The innkeeper agreed to accept this offer, but when after a few days he came back to draw up the papers and to sign the document, the Master observed that one of the rooms was still inhabited.

“Who is here?” he asked.

“It is the German Consul,” the innkeeper replied.

“He must leave the premises, otherwise I will not rent the place. It is impossible for an outsider to live here.”

The innkeeper looked at him with ridicule and contempt.

“Ha, ha!” he laughed. “And they say you are a prisoner! You talk to me as though you are my lord and master. What do you think, Mr. Prisoner! Do you expect to get an exclusive palace in this prison town? Not much, not much. This man is the German Consul. {{p79}} I cannot drive him out.” To which ‘Abdu’l-Bahá replied:

“There are many palaces in the outside world! If a prisoner can find a palace in a prison town, he has indeed accomplished something.”

9. ‘Abdu’l-Bahá’s Room in Prison

Finally the German Consul left of his own accord, only requesting the use of the room for two hours a day so that he might attend to his official duties, to which proposition ‘Abdu’l-Bahá consented cheerfully. Then the Bahá’ís began to repair the rooms, but one of them had to be left untouched because their funds were exhausted. The rooms were then assigned to the various families and friends, and ‘Abdu’l-Bahá chose the unrepaired one for himself. This room was so damp that grass had grown on the walls and there were several cracks in the ceiling which gave free admittance to the rain. The floor consisted of humid earth, and was a breeding place for fleas.

10. The Fleas of ‘Akká

‘Abdu’l-Bahá had a mat and a long Persian fur coat. The latter was his garment by day and his blanket by night. When he covered himself with it, an army of fleas, hiding in the ambush of fur, attacked him and did their best to defeat him, but he outwitted them by turning the coat and by using its other side. Then for an hour he slept, until the wily, indomitable fleas would find their way again to the inner side. Every night he had recourse to this maneuvering eight or ten times, yet notwithstanding this, he was by far happier and more joyful then than at this time, sleeping on a fine bed in the hotel.

11. ‘Abdu’l-Bahá Leaves for Alexandria

Then to our surprise he informed us that he would leave today for Ramleh, and stay there for one week. If the weather agreed with him, he would send for us; if not, he would return to Port Sa’íd and together we would all go to Haifa. {{p80}} Therefore at 2:30 P. M., accompanied by Mírzá Munír and Khusraw, he left for Alexandria and Ramleh. The station master was a European, and when the Beloved reached the station a few minutes before time, he was conducted by him to his private office to rest. When the train arrived, this station master followed him very politely to the first class compartment. This sign of distinction was great enough in the eyes of the natives and officials of the railroad to excite their wonder and curiosity. Then as the train pulled out from the station we were once more separated from the Master. Our train leaves for Port Sa’íd at half-past nine, and therefore we have several hours on our hands.

12. Ismailia Is a Clean City

In order to pass the time profitably we took in the sights. There is a beautiful large park, lovely buildings, clean avenues and many electric lights. I was quite surprised at the size of the park with its big pine trees and flowers. We saw also the native quarter. The goats, the hens, the donkeys and the other animals live in the same room with the Arabs, making a peaceful family.

When we set our feet in the Port Sa’íd station, familiar faces greeted us. Aḥmad Yazdí, Ibrahim Effendi and Áqá Jamál. They were, of course, surprised to hear that the Master had left Ismailia, but they said quietly: “He doeth whatsoever he willeth.”

1. ‘Abdu’l-Bahá’s Bust, Made in Vienna, Is Sent to Port

Sa’íd

I have no news to write. We did not hear anything from Ramleh. It was a hot day so we stayed at home and worked until 7 o’clock P. M. Then we paid a call on Madame Stannard and returned by way of Ahmad Yazdí’s store. He had received the Master’s little bust from Stuttgart. Mr. Herrigel has sent one to Mírzá Maḥmúd and one to me. At present, mine is on my writing table and is a reminder of his wondrous personality and heavenly Love. “His spiritual face” is printed on the Tablets of our hearts. We think of him and work for him, for his spiritual face” is the Love of God, is the Knowledge of God, is the Breath of the Holy Spirit, is the Divine Inspiration and love for all mankind.

2. A Prayer for the Success of the Bahá’ís

The following is a prayer revealed from the tongue of the Beloved many years ago: —

“He is Glory, the Most Glorious!

“O God! O God! Behold Thou these radiant faces made joyous through the Fragrances of the flowers of Thy Kingdom, El Abhá, and illumined with the lights of Thy Supreme Concourse. Verily Thou seest that the temples of the believers are stirred by the fresh breezes of the Morning of Eternity and that the hearts of the pure ones are attracted by the signs of the Sacred Mysteries!

“O Lord! Fill for them the cups of joy; enlighten their faces by the rays emanating from the lamp of divine prosperity; {{p82}} cause them to hear the sweet songs of the birds of Holiness in the rose garden of Spiritual success; gladden them by allowing them to listen to the melodies of the Doves of light in the delectable heavenly fields, and suffer them to enter into the Paradise of Abhá, Thy Celestial Garden.

“O My Lord! O My Lord! Intoxicate them with the Wine of Knowledge, sweeten their taste with the delicacies of prayer in the early morn and eve; gather them together into one congregation; confer upon them a shelter; protect them in the cause of Thy Covenant and Testament; shield them from doubts and from the evil suggestions of the waverers; make them Mines of Knowledge, of Wisdom and of Assurance, cause their feet to be firm and steady in the Straight Path, and grant unto them prosperity in whatever country they call the people to Thy Name! Verily, Thou art the Lord of the Cause and Thou art Powerful to do whatsoever Thou desirest!

(Signed) ‘ABDU’L-BAHÁ ‘ABBÁS.

Here is another prayer. It may have been revealed for the American believers.

3. Prayer for Illumination

“He is El Abhá!

“O Thou Incomparable God! Make Thou these hearts intimate with Thy Mystery; suffer them to be detached from the known and from the unknown; cause them to drink from the overflowing cup of the morn of Unity and intoxicate them with the wine of ‘Am I not your Lord?’

“O Lord! These servants are captivated by Thee. These longing ones are attracted and enthralled by Thy Beauty. {{p83}} They are wanderers about Thy abode; lovers of Thy Countenance, and the flocks of gazelles of Thy meadow.

“O Lord! We are stumbling in the desert of remoteness and are scattered in the valley of deprivation! Send Thou to us the Messenger of Providence and the Angel of Guidance: — so that the Fragrance of Thy Garden may reach unto our nostrils, the refulgent light of Thy Countenance illumine the ‘house of sorrows’ of these grief-stricken people; the darkness of night be changed into the sunlight of day and the thorny place of regret transformed into the garden of hope. Verily Thou art the Mighty, the Seer and the Hearer!

“O ye believers of God! Rejoice in the Most Eminent Bounty of your Lord! Be happy; for the Favors of the Glad-tidings of the King of the Kingdom are unlimited. Be ye prepared for the downpouring of the Cloud of Mercy. Upon you be the Bestowals of your Lord, the Ancient! Dilate your breasts, increase your fervor, exalt your ambition, add to your yearning, and be rejoiced in heart, for God hath chosen you from amongst His creatures, for the sake of His Love. Verily He is Merciful and Clement to you.

(Signed) ‘ABDU’L-BAHÁ ‘ABBÁS.

I bring this day to a close by translating another Tablet revealed to an American Bahá’í several years ago: —

4. The Covenant Is a Lamp

“O thou spiritual leaf, which is verdant and fresh through the downpourings of the Kingdom of God!

“Verily I pray at the Threshold of God, the Mighty the Powerful, that He may illumine thy heart with the light emanating from the height of the kingdom, cause thy tongue to speak the praise of the Living, Self-subsistent, Eternal Lord, and suffer thee to become a light shining with the rays of Knowledge, so that thou mayst enlighten those vast cities and great states.

“Verily, Verily, I say unto thee, the Covenant of God and His Testament is a lamp with world-illuminating rays which from the Supreme Concourse enlightens the horizons of the earth and heaven. {{p84}} Whosoever stations himself before this divine light, will be illumined with Manifest Glory, his speech will become effective in the hearts and spirits, and God will reinforce him with a power which will penetrate through the realities of all things. Upon thee be Bahá!

PORT SA‘ÍD, EGYPT, JULY 19, 1913.

1. Arrival of ‘Abdu’l-Bahá in Ramleh

This morning we received a short note from Mírzá Munír telling us about the safe arrival of the Master in Ramleh where he has taken rooms in the Hotel Victoria. Unfortunately owing to the fatigue of the journey and to the recurrence of fever, he had not been sleeping well at night. On the way they had met Siyyid Jalál who was also going to Ismailia to meet the Beloved.

Toward evening I called on Mrs. Stannard. She read me a letter, just received from Miss Hiscock of New York, who has been living in Ramleh for two or three years. {{p85}} She spoke of her happiness on hearing of the arrival of the Master. Mírzá Abu’l-Faḍl has already called on him and she and other friends intend to avail themselves of the first opportunity to do the same.

The Master has sent one of the Bahá’ís, Siyyid Yahyá, to Haifa to accompany his daughter, Rúḥá Khánum, back to Alexandria.... A house will be rented in Ramleh, and in a few days we will be on our way to join the Spiritual Caravan.

2. The Presence of ‘Abdu’l-Bahá Holds the People

Together

When the Master leaves a place all the different elements which have been holding together are seemingly scattered; the collected individualities regain their entities each person follows his own inclination; one feels that something is lacking, for the touchstone of life has gone the great social leveler has disappeared. The “I” and the “MY” stalk abroad. Futile conversation and bickering, sneak around the corner and if encouraged, step boldly in to the courtyard and to the private chamber. We must ever gaze toward the sun of Universal Fellowship, otherwise we will dissipate our forces.

This morning I was reading the diary of the Master’s voyage on the steamer Cedric from Alexandria to New York. Omitting the usual details and descriptions of the trip, I have chosen a few selections from his talks with different travelers which have a general bearing upon his expected arrival in America.

3. Brahma, Krishna and Buddha Taught the Oneness

of God

It is the third day of the trip. An American, after hearing the Master's teachings on reincarnation, goes to his cabin and carries to him an idol worshiped in China and Japan. {{p86}} The Master holds it in his hand and remarks: —

What vast difference exists between the souls of mankind! One retrogrades to such a low level as to worship statues and stone idols: forms which are devoid of spirit and reason, while God hath conferred upon him reason and adorned his shoulders with the mantle of spiritual attributes! Another soars to such a high summit of perfection and perspicacity as to become the Sign of God and the Instructor of humanity. Brahma, Krishna and Buddha never advocated polytheism. They were eminent teachers of monotheism as were all the other prophets of God; but succeeding generations misconstrued their words and in order to further their own selfish interests fabricated these false doctrines.

4. The Law of Change is Universal

On the sixth day he spoke to a group of passengers as follows: —

“All created phenomena are subject to the law of change and transmutation. Youth is followed by old age; a tender plant grows into an aged tree; dynasties are born, wax strong, reach to the zenith of glory and then totter to the ground. Likewise every one of the world religions has been a cause of progress and advancement in its own time, but now they have become as very old trees, and do not yield any more luscious fruits. Some people persist in the unscientific belief that these very old trees will again become young and push forth leaves, blossoms and fruits. This is impossible. {{p87}} This age needs a young sapling with universal growing capacity. Are you informed of such a plant?

5. In the Bahá'í Cause No One Holds Religious Offices,

Titles and Ceremonies

On the eighth day, he speaks to the Persians: —

The Blessed Perfection has torn up the root of the tree of superstition and religious offices. In the past the the ignorance and the retrogression of nations. In this Cause there is no religious title, no ceremony of ordination. One is not respected simply because one wears a peculiar dress or has been given a religious title or has inherited one from Patriarchs of the Church. No! These are not marks of distinction.

6. Who Are the Sanctified Souls?

“On the other hand, there are holy souls, the signs of whose divine sanctity and spirituality become apparent in the hearts of others. People are unconsciously attracted to them through their pure morality, their justice and loving kindness. Everyone is drawn to them on account of their praiseworthy attributes and pleasing qualities and all faces are illumined by the light of their virtue and integrity. In this Movement there is no title to be given to anyone, and no position to be inherited. ‘The hands of the Cause’ are the hands of Truth. Therefore whosoever is the promoter and the servant of the Word of God, is the hand of Truth. By ‘the hands of God’ certain definite spiritual meanings are conveyed. It is not only a verbal expression. The more a man is humble in the Cause of God, the more he is confirmed; and the more he is evanescent, the more he is favored.”

PORT SA‘ÍD, EGYPT, JULY 20, 1913.

1. Who is ‘Abdu’l-Bahá?

The heart of ‘Abdu’l-Bahá is the fountain of life out of which flows the Water of Truth. Are you thirsty? His Universal Teaching is divine Food descending from the exalted heaven of the Will of God. Are you hungry? His utterances are the roses and anemones of the garden of Abhá. Do you love flowers? His words are the brilliant stars of the firmament of spiritual Glory. Are not the stars beautiful? His presence inspires confidence, manhood, loyalty and uprightness. Should you not characterize yourselves with these attributes? His Ideals are fresh breezes heralding the approaching dawn of the springtime of human regeneration. Are you stirred into gladsome life? His message is the sweet melody of the Kingdom of Abhá. Do you listen to the soul-enrapturing strains? His pathway is the pathway, leading the traveler to the ultimate reality. Are you ready to walk in it?

2. A Catholic Procession in the Streets of Port Sa‘íd

Today the French inhabitants had a gorgeous religious procession which started from their church. All the streets through which it passed were adorned with flags, bunting and Japanese lanterns. The priests were dressed in their pompous surplices of red, gold and silver. There were long lines of young girls dressed as angels, also a company of choir boys. {{p89}} The procession was brought to an end by a large statue of the Virgin Mary, holding the child, Jesus, in her arms. Of course thousands of Arabs left their work to gaze at this very spectacular sight of what they called “idol worship,” and not understanding the sacredness of these symbols, they poked fun and laughed in their sleeves. How sad is the ignorance of humanity!

I will continue to translate a few more sayings of the Beloved when on the steamer Cedric.

3. First Journey of the Persians to America

Ninth day: — “Formerly it was most difficult to cross the Atlantic and up to this time few travelers with our aims and intentions have gone from Persia to America. There are some who have visited the United States, but it has been either for personal affairs or for the transaction of business. One can therefore say, that this is the first disinterested journey of a group of Persians to America. Our great hope is in the divine Confirmations through which all doors will be opened to us. Today the nations of the world can be conquered by divine Power, and this divine Power revolves around the servants of the Blessed Perfection. All personal interests must disappear beside this wondrous Aim.”

Eleventh day. — “I go to America on account of the invitations of the American Peace Societies and the urgent appeals of my friends, because the objects of this Cause are universal Peace, the oneness of the world of humanity and perfect equality between all mankind. As this century is the century of light and the cycle of the revelation of Mysteries, undoubtedly these glorious aims will be fully established, and the influence of this great Cause will encircle the East and the West.”

4. Material and Spiritual Food

Twelfth day: — At the table the Master speaks about simple diet: how much better it is for one’s constitution to eat one or two courses. {{p90}} One of the American Bahá’ís asks Him if he will not prescribe a simple recipe of dieting for the believers upon His arrival in America. He laughs heartily and says: —

“We do not interfere with their material food, but we will give them a simple recipe of spiritual food. This is our work.”

5. Steam a Marvelous Energy

Sixteenth day: — “We will be only one more day on the steamer. In reality steam is a marvelous energy. Were it not for this power, how could we cross the Atlantic Ocean? What a wonderful means of transportation God has prepared for us and how the Blessed Perfection has confirmed us! Otherwise what relation between America and Persia!”

6. ‘Abdu’l-Bahá’s Welcome to New York

Seventeenth day: — Great skyscrapers are visible in the distance. The Goddess of Liberty holds aloft her lamp. The Master walks up on the deck watching with great interest the shifting scenes; hundreds of Bahá’ís are impatiently waiting on the pier. He talks with the Persians: —

“When we embarked on the steamer in Alexandria no one dreamed that we should reach America in such safety, and cross the Atlantic with such ease.”

Now the steamer docks in its berth; the Bahá’ís on the pier wave their handkerchiefs and hats; The Desire of their hearts is not seen from the dock; {{p91}} he is in his cabin surrounded by a number of newspapermen. Patiently ‘Abdu’l-Bahá gives interviews to each, answering ever question and satisfying all. Here I will translate one of the many beautiful interviews. It is the shortest.

7. Interview with the newspapermen on the Steamer Deck

“What are your aims?” the reporter asks.

“Our aims,” he answers, “are Universal Peace and the Oneness of the world of humanity. Last year I visited London and Paris. This year I have come to America to meet the lovers of Peace, perchance we may find a basis or cooperation. It is my hope that the American Peace Societies may consolidate their forces, and thus, shoulder to shoulder, may render an effective service to humankind.

“How will Universal Peace be established?”

“By educating the public with the sentiments of Peace. Today the full realization of Universal Peace is a panacea for every social disease.”

“What are these diseases?”

“One of the diseases is the poverty of the middle classes through the unbearable burden of war taxation. This craze for militarism has reached its height and shall soon recede. The income of the farmer and of others is taken by the power of a military government and foolishly expended upon useless implements of destruction. The prospect becomes gloomier every year because the war budget of every nation is being increased without any regard to the feverish signs of social unrest and industrial upheaval. The people are seething with ideas of insurrection and agitation. Their burden has become too heavy and their patience is exhausted. They groan under this load, and grope in the darkness, seeking the light of Peace. Their pitiful cries ascend to the throne of the Almighty. {{p92}} Lo, lo! He has listened to them; He has answered their prayers. The dawn of Peace has appeared, the lights of brotherhood are breaking through the foul clouds of human prejudices. Lovers of Peace. Rejoice! rejoice! O ye who are heavy laden, be happy, be happy! Weep no more, for your burden will be taken away from you.

“This military and naval expenditure is a great disease. Look at the result of the war between Italy and Turkey! How dreadful! There exists a reign of Terror. Fathers weep for their sons; sons weep for their fathers. How many peaceful villages are laid waste! How the wealth of the nations is exhausted! The remedy for this disease is through Universal Peace. This will insure public security! Today that which is the cause of dispersion is war. If the nations enter into a faithful agreement to at once lay armaments aside, they shall secure for themselves and their posterity eternal welfare; they shall become freed from every difficulty and from international confusion. This end must be attained through the development of minds and hearts and by inculcation of peaceful ideals in all the institutions of modern civilization.”

PORT SA'ÍD, EGYPT, JULY 21, 1913.

1. There Is No Diary of Bahá'u'lláh's and 'Abdu'l-Bahá's

Words during the Long Years of Incarceration

Aside from the impression that the Beloved will stay in Ramleh and not go to Haifa, there is no news. {{p93}} We are anxiously waiting to receive the word for our departure. Not only do I miss the glory of his presence, but so much of his wonderful words of light and guidance are lost because there is no one to report them. The art of diary writing is comparatively unknown in the East. The believers have not been accustomed to it. For example, throughout the life of Bahá'u'lláh and during that of 'Abdu'l-Bahá until the present no one dreamed of reporting their sayings. I have not yet seen a book or pamphlet, biographic in tone and diary-like in construction. The recent Persian pilgrims, learning this from the West would whenever they were summoned to the presence of the Beloved, beg either Mírzá Maḥmúd or myself to go with them and report the Master's words. We were really stenographers, and our services were much in demand. Had the Master lived in America for the last forty years, there would besides his Tablets have been volumes of memoirs and diaries written by those who were fortunate enough to be near him.

While we are waiting patiently to receive his command, we are not idle. The calmness and sweetness of the Peace which passeth all understanding wafts over our minds and hearts, and in this temporary separation we have experienced that deeper spiritual union which will more and more be realized as time goes on.

2. Teaching the Cause Is the Most Important of All

Services

Just as the Master has sacrificed everything in his life in order to spread the Fragrances of the Paradise of Abhá, just as the Spirit of Bahá'u'lláh is his guardian and protector, so likewise must we forget all other thoughts and occupy ourselves with those matters which pertain to the exaltation of the word of God among mankind, and be confident that the Blessed Perfection, under all circumstances, will sustain and reinforce us. {{p94}} At the present time the promulgation of the Teachings is of paramount importance because the Power of the Supreme Concourse is behind it.

In a Tablet revealed by the Beloved many years ago, to the Persian friends, He says: —

“O ye believers of God! Supplicate and entreat at the Threshold of the Almighty that He may confirm you in the diffusion of the Fragrances of Holiness which are wafting from the direction of the Garden of God. Blow ye over all creation like the Breezes of the early morn and impart ye a freshness and verdancy through the Power of Truth upon the flowers, the sweet hyacinths and the roses of the garden of existence. This is the quintessence of the meeting and the superlative degree of success and prosperity, for it causes the attainment of man unto the kingdom of Abhá, attracts him to the Sacred Court of His Highness the Almighty and suffers him to reach the Sublime Presence of the Powerful, the Omnipotent Lord.”

The translation of another dynamic Tablet to the Persian believers, revealed likewise many years ago, may be of interest: —

3. It Is the Day of Action and Happiness

“O ye merciful friends of ‘Abdu’l-Bahá! Although it is night, yet it is the morn of the dawn of the divine Kingdom. Lights are shining and faces are radiant. The Ancient Bestowal of the Beauty of Abhá is the Companion of every pure heart and the Effulgence of the Manifestation of the Mount of Sinai is the associate of every firm and steadfast one. {{p95}} The soul-entrancing Melody of the Blessed Perfection is heard from the Invisible World by every upright and righteous person, and His Glad-tidings and gospels of joy bestow undeniable Favor. The Fame of His greatness hath filled all regions and the songs of the birds of the meadow of His Reality confer spirit upon all the inhabitants of the globe.

“Consequently, we must send forth a joy-cry and through the Power of God infuse a mighty thrill of spiritual emotion through the pillars of this mortal world. Eternal Life must be revealed in this mundane existence; heavenly Grace must become apparent and the Everlasting Bounty of the Paradise of Abhá must adorn this earth. How long this silence! How long this speechlessness! How long this lukewarmness! The flaming torch of the burning Fire of God is set aglow on the apex of the world and the lighted candle of guidance is a witness in the gatherings. If we are not enkindled with the heat of this divine flame, with what heart-burning fire will we then be lighted! If we are not intoxicated with this Wine of God, what kind of wine, then, will exhilarate us! If in the Assemblage of Transfiguration we do not forget ourselves, becoming joyous and enraptured then in what gathering will we make tumult and acclamation. O ye divine friends! The Call is the Call of the Beauty of Abhá, streaming down from the Invisible Kingdom! The Melody is the Melody of the Supreme Concourse, be ye happy, be ye joyous, be ye exultant, be ye glad!

“Upon ye be greetings and praises.

(Signed) ‘ABDU’L-BAHÁ ‘ABBÁS.

PORT SA‘ÍD, EGYPT, JULY 22, 1913.

1. The Spiritual Lesson Drawn from the Material

Progress of Port Sa‘íd and the Suez Canal

The material progress of Port Sa'íd is a great lesson for all the Bahá'ís. {{p96}} Forty years ago there were only a handful of dingy hovels with half-naked Arabs. There was no trade, there were no houses, and no communication existed with the outside world. Almost all the area on which the present up-to-date city with its 60,000 busy inhabitants is built, is land reclaimed from the sea. When the Suez Canal joined the two mighty oceans together, Port Sa'íd became an international port, and from that date the magical progress of the city continued uninterruptedly. Just as God inspired the heart and mind of DeLesseps with this most wonderful thought of joining the two seas, in like manner, Our Beloved, as a spiritual Engineer, is appointed by Bahá'u'lláh to unite the East and the West. The concerted efforts of thousands of laborers made possible the realization of the Suez Canal, and thus the greatest engineering feat up to that time was accomplished. Similarly the united zeal and endeavor of all the Bahá'ís are needed to join together the mighty seas of humanity. This is not child's play. This is a stupendous undertaking. Could the laborers complete the Canal if they sat around and criticized one another? Let us be faithful in our enterprise, and work to the end; let no harsh words discourage us, let us leave behind fruitless discussions, and engage in that whereby the Word of God may be promoted and the Fragrances of the Cause diffused. Thus we may bring happiness to the heart of 'Abdu'l-Bahá. {{p97}} Let us look forward, and not backward; heavenward and not earthward. Bahá'u'lláh will assist us. The Canal will be completed and there Will be witnessed the Confluence of the seas. Then the two mighty oceans of the human families — East and West — which are being stirred at the present time by the contrary winds of conflicting prejudices, shall be joined together. There will be millions of laborers in the future; but we must hold the breach honorably until they arrive! God does not need our services, but we are in need of His continued Graces. He is the most Potent! He can wait. A thousand years in His sight, is as one day. If, through our negligence and inadvertence, we retard His work, we are the losers. He will raise other generations to fulfill His command. He will inspire other hearts to proclaim His words. He will illumine other minds to grasp His ultimate plan. He will reinforce other armies to achieve His triumph. He will instruct other nations to magnify His name. We must not let this matchless opportunity escape us! The tool is his who can handle it.

About six o'clock we left our apartment in search of news. The headquarters of news is Aḥmad Yazdí's store, so thither our feet directed us. There to our surprise and delight we found Ḥájí Siyyid Javád and Rúḥí Effendi, just arrived from Haifa at the bidding of the Master. The former is an old Bahá'í of the time of Bahá'u'lláh and has an interesting history as a background; the latter is the grandson of the Master. He is about 13 years old, the son of Mírzá Musin.

1. Possible Departure for Ramleh Makes Us Happy

I feel that the Beloved will call us to him before the end of this month. I have heard that two houses are rented, one for himself and his family; the other for the secretaries, etc. The houses are near each other. This has indeed lifted our spirits, and has made us decidedly cheerful; now we sing as we work. Mírzá ‘Alí Akbar whistles Russian songs; Mírzá Maḥmúd chants Persian poems, and my choice, strange to say, falls to American music. We do not refer to this great change — but as we look at each other, the joy in our eyes speaks volumes. After all, environment plays a large part in shaping our thoughts and aspirations. However, the Master is teaching us to live above environment, and not to let our minds be colored by the changing film of events.

This morning Ḥájí Siyyid Javád and Rúhí Effendi came to call, and we welcomed them with Bahá’í cordiality. Ḥájí Javád gave me a short account of his trips to ‘Akká to see Bahá’u’lláh during the early days of His imprisonment. Javád is an old gentleman, he is tall, with a short white beard, and has a fund of reminiscences of the days of the Blessed Perfection. {{p98}}

2. Arrival of Mrs. Getsinger

After five o’clock we sauntered out toward Aḥmad Yazdí’s store, and it was with genuine satisfaction that we met Mrs. Getsinger, who had landed two hours before. She was well and happy, and overflowing with the joyful anticipation of meeting the Master. {{p99}} Strange enough a telegram was received from the Master within an hour, giving her permission to leave the next morning for Ramleh.

3. Translation of an Interview between ‘Abdu’l-Bahá

and the Reporter of the “San Francisco Examiner”

I would now like to translate from my Persian notes a most interesting interview between a correspondent of the Examiner and the Master in San Francisco. The date is October 3rd, 1912. The hour is about eight P.M. This fine interview appeared the next day in a most crude form, almost unrecognizable: —

Correspondent: “Are you pleased with the United States?”

‘Abdu’l-Bahá: “The Continent of America is most progressive. The means of instruction are prepared; the educational institutions are thoroughly equipped and the pupils are being systematically trained and educated. Its wealth is on an upward tendency. Its government is democratic. Its advancement unceasing. Its nation hospitable. Its people loyal, energetic and noble. Its inhabitants free and lovers of liberty. Its men civilized and its women cultured, refined and idealistic. On the other hand, all these advantages are on the objective plane and I observe that the majority of the people are submerged in a sea of materialism and agnosticism. Its material civilization is well nigh perfect, but it is in need of the civilization of heaven divine civilization.”

Correspondent: “What do you mean by divine civilization?”

‘Abdu’l-Bahá: “Divine Civilization is the light. Material civilization is the lamp. Material civilization is the body; In itself it is not sufficient, and humanity, from every point of view, stands in need of divine civilization. Natural civilization produces material welfare and prosperity; divine civilization develops man’s ideal virtues. Natural civilization serves the physical world; Divine Civilization serves the world of morality. {{p100}} Divine Civilization is a symposium of the perfections of the world of humanity. Divine Civilization is the improvement of the ethical life of a nation. Divine Civilization is the discovery of the Reality of phenomena. Divine Civilization is spiritual philosophy. Divine Civilization is Knowledge of God with rational and intellectual evidences. Divine Civilization is Eternal Life. Divine Civilization is the immortality of the soul. Divine Civilization is the breath of the Holy Spirit. Divine Civilization is heavenly wisdom. Divine Civilization is the Reality of the Teachings of all the ancient prophets. Divine Civilization is Universal Peace and the Oneness of the world of humanity. The Holy Manifestations of God have been the founders of Divine Civilization, the first teachers of mankind and the spreaders of the fragrances of holiness and sanctity amongst the children of men.”

Correspondent: “Are you satisfied with the American people?”

‘Abdu’l-Bahá: “The Americans are a kind, and affectionate people. All nations are welcomed in their midst. They give to every one the right of living and allow each to seek happiness in his own way. Here no one feels a foreigner. I am most pleased with them.”

Correspondent: “I have heard that you advocate the complete equality of men and women. This radical teaching coming from an Oriental thinker, is of great interest and supreme significance. Just at this juncture the Californian women are clamoring for the right to vote for all the National and State officials, and your opinion on this important question would be greatly appreciated by the people.”

‘Abdu’l-Bahá: “The question of equality between men and women has made greater advancement in America than anywhere else, and day by day it is assuming more importance and coming nearer to its full realization. However, so long as complete equality does not exist between men and women, the world of humanity will not make extraordinary progress. {{p101}} The woman is an essential column, while the man is also an essential column. If we aim to have a lasting building, the foundations of both columns must be laid very deep. Women are the first teachers of the children. They instruct them and inculcate morality in their minds and hearts. Later these children attend schools and universities for higher education and specialization. Now if the teacher or instructor is deficient, how can the scholar be properly trained? Therefore, it is proven that the culture and development of men will be intensified and will attain perfect fruition when women have equal opportunities with them. Consequently, the women must enjoy all the learning they are able to assimilate, so that they may reach to the level of men. The same privileges and opportunities must be conferred upon both; so that, just as they share life and its responsibilities, they may also share the same virtues of the world of humanity. Undoubtedly partnership in education and culture presupposes equality in rights. The world of humanity has two wings, one the male, the other the female. Both wings have to become strong so that mankind may soar to the empyrean of its destined perfection; for if one wing is left weak, the upward flight must from necessity be slow. God has created both human. They enjoy in common all the faculties No one is endowed with special privileges. How can we make a distinction which is unknown in the sight of God? We must follow the policy of God. Moreover, there are male and female in the vegetable kingdom. They are on equal footing. {{p102}} Inherently they enjoy suffrage and there is no distinction between them. Likewise in the animal kingdom, the right of suffrage and equality is enjoyed without any feeling of superiority or privilege. Therefore it is admitted that there is no distinction of gender in the vegetable and animal kingdoms, although they are deprived of reasonableness and have not the distinguishing faculties. But we, who are confirmed with the bestowal of reason, and who enjoy all the characteristics which distinguish man from the animal, how can we act in this manner, and build these false barriers? Many women have appeared who have won for themselves fame and name by the versatility of their thoughts. Amongst the Bahá'í women a number have shown remarkable talent for literature, science and art, and have rendered distinct services in all the departments of life."

"In history many capable women have displayed special genius for government and political administration, like Semiramis; Zenobia, Queen of Palmyra, and Queen Victoria of England. In the religious world the Israelites wandered for forty years in the wilderness and could not conquer the Holy Land. Finally a woman achieved this signal victory. In the dispensation of Christ, the apostles became confused; even Peter denied Him thrice, but Mary of Magdala became the cause of their firmness and steadfastness. In the religion of Bahá'u'lláh, Qurratu'l-Ayn, and many other Persian women, demonstrated their knowledge and wisdom to such an extent that even the men were astonished and listened with deference to their advice and counsel."

Correspondent: "What is your object in coming to America?"

'Abdu'l-Bahá: "I have come to America to promote the ideal of Universal Peace and the solidarity of the human race. {{p103}} I have not come for pleasure, or as a tourist."

Correspondent: "What do you think about woman's fashions?"

'Abdu'l-Bahá: "We do not look upon the dresses of women, whether they are of the latest mode. We are not the judge of fashion. We consider rather the wearer of the dress. If she is chaste, if she is pure, if she is cultured, if she is characterized with heavenly morality and if she is favored at the Threshold of God, she is honored and respected by us, no matter what manner of dress she wears. We have nothing to do with the ever-changing world of mode and picture hats”

Correspondent: “What is the greatest thing you have seen in America?”

‘Abdu’l-Bahá: “The greatest thing I have seen in America is its Freedom. In reality this is a free nation and a democratic government.”

Correspondent: “What is your opinion about Turkey and the Balkan war?”

‘Abdu’l-Bahá: “We have nothing to do with war. We are advocates of Peace. Speak to us about the conditions of Peace. Go to the diplomatists and militarists and ask their opinions about this war. But as regards Peace: In the world of humanity there is no more important affair, no weightier cause. It is conducive to the well-being of the world of creation; the means of the prosperity of nations, the reason of eternal friendship between peoples, the cause of solidarity between the East and the West, the promoter of real freedom and the most eminent Favor of His Highness the Almighty. {{p104}} We must all strive to upraise the Flag of International Peace, the Oneness of the world of humanity, and the spiritual brotherhood of mankind.”

The correspondent tried to ask a few more questions but ‘Abdu’l-Bahá interrupted him by this final statement, while putting his hand on his shoulder and kissing his face: —

“Consider how much I love thee and to what extent I respect Mr. Hearst that, notwithstanding the fatigue coming over me as the result of a very busy day, I have answered all thy questions.”

Thus the young man left the presence of ‘Abdu’l-Bahá with a sense of awe and respect that one feels only when one is saturated with the holy atmosphere which is created wherever he is — the Center of Spirituality and heavenliness.

PORT SA‘ÍD. EGYPT, JULY 24, 1913.

1. Our Departure for Ramleh

The Port Sa‘íd believers have gone to the station to say good-by to Hájí Siyyid Javád, Rúhí Effendi and Mrs. Getsinger who are leaving today for Ramleh to be honored with the blessing of the Beloved’s presence. I am with them too. The train leaves at eight A.M. They are very happy. The train pulls out of the station, and we return home in the heat of the sun to spend another day in quiet work and uninterrupted solitude. I sit at my table, Mírzá Maḥmúd at his and Mírzá ‘Alí-Akbar in his room is copying the addresses of ‘Abdu’l-Bahá, when the door opens and Áqá ‘Azíz enters. He looks at me and smiles. Like a flash of lightning his thought is transferred to me. I get up from my seat:

“Have you any news for us from the Master?” I ask.

“Yes,” he quietly answers. {{p105}} “Aḥmad Yazdí has just now received a telegram giving you permission to leave for Ramleh.”

We are very happy. We must leave by the one o'clock train. In half an hour all our baggage is prepared. What spiritual ecstasy! What divine beatitude! We go to Aḥmad Yazdí's store to thank him personally for this good news. Returning home we finish our work and at a quarter after twelve start for the station. There, to our surprise, we find Aḥmad Yazdí who has come to say good-by to us.

2. Thinking over Meeting ‘Abdu’l-Bahá

Finally everything is ready; the first and second bell rings, and the train starts. In our hearts the birds of joy sing; behind us the pleasant memories of more than a month, all about the sandy, quiet desert — the garden of Alláh; ahead of us union — with whom? — With the Beloved of our hearts. As I sat in our compartment contemplating the love of the Master, my eyes were filled with tears of joy and I realized more than ever — and no doubt thousands have had this same experience — that ‘Abdu’l-Bahá is our Beloved, our Hope, our Desire, the sum-total of all our longings. If one has ‘Abdu’l-Bahá for his Beloved, his happiness is not dimmed; his peace is not broken; his faith can move mountains and all his aspirations are fulfilled! O Joy of Joy! O Heavenly Light! O Love Divine! Art Thou not the most beautiful, the most satisfying, the most ennobling, the most rapturous! Would I not gladly dedicate my whole life to treasure Thee in the secret chamber of my heart? Thou art the Poet of transmutation. Thou art the Philosopher's stone. Thou art the remedy for all sorrows! O Love! O God! {{p106}} O Unchanging Lord! sustain us, feed us with thy ambrosial food; suffer us to drink from thy diamond cup of pure affection. We feel throughout our whole body the spiritual thrills of thy compassion and mercy.

3. Scenes Along the Railroad

By this time we reach Ismailia, the small clean town, blessed by the presence of our Beloved. After a few minutes, the train starts again. The country is fresh and green from the unfailing blessing of the Nile; the palm trees are laden with bunches of green dates, the cotton belt is extensive and the reports are that this year's crop is excellent. As the train passes on we see hundreds of men and women working in the fields, camels are grazing, and there are many cows and sheep. Rice also is cultivated in this part of the country. At 4.30 P.M. we reach Benha where we have to change trains, and after thirty minutes we are again on our way. It is 7.30 when we enter the station of Sidi Gaber, and here Ḥájí Khurasání and Mírzá Munír are present to welcome and guide us to our new quarters. On the way our train had crossed the noble Nile. It is spanned by a most excellent iron bridge. Toward sunset, the men and women farmers —

Fellaheen — showing their religious spirit, leave their work and perform their ablutions and prayers wherever they happen to be. It is a most divine picture to see these simple people praying to their Maker under the open sky. Another lovely scene which is truly Biblical, is the procession of women with jars on their heads, leaving their curious mud-built villages to fill them at the spring.

4. ‘Abdu’l-Bahá Calls on Us

Ramleh is a modern Egyptian town with all the conveniences of western civilization. {{p107}} It is a summer resort for the most important European officials in the service of the Egyptian Government, and also for the native Páshás. There are lovely parks, all kinds of hotels and splendid houses. We have a nice furnished apartment about two hundred yards from the residence of the Beloved. At eight o’clock he came to welcome us and our joy at again looking upon his benign face, knew no bounds.

He had just returned from calling upon Mírzá Abu’l-Faḍl. He inquired about our health, and after a few more questions, left us, but the happiness of those minutes will remain in our hearts. During the last days while the Beloved was living in the Victoria Hotel, many English officials, native Páshás, and Arab Shaykhs have called upon him, and on many occasions more than twenty of these important men would gather in the salon to listen to his talks. None of these are preserved. There is a weekly meeting at the house of Hájí Khurasání and the Master attended it. At present Túbá Khánum, the Master’s daughter, with her son Rúhí and Mrs. Getsinger, are staying in the house of the Beloved.

I will end this letter by the translation of two quotations from Tablets: —

5. Real Love Attracts Divine Confirmations

“If thou desirest to be confirmed in the service of the Kingdom of God, live in accord with the Teachings of Bahá’u’lláh, and that is: real love for the world of humanity, and the utmost of kindness for the believers of God. {{p108}} This real love, like unto magnetic power, attracts divine Confirmations.”

6. Teach the Cause Through Deeds

“If a soul calls the people to the Kingdom of God according to the Principles of Bahá’u’lláh, there will be many listeners. First, one may teach by deeds, then speak the word. First, one must become thirsty, then the salubrious water may be offered. No matter how delicious the water is, one who is not thirsty will not enjoy it. Therefore, make ye an effort, so that the people may become thirsty; then enable them to quaff from this divine Chalice.”

RAMLEH, EGYPT, JULY 25, 1913.

1. A Call in Mírzá Abu'l-Faḍl

This morning the Beloved visited our apartment and sat on the Veranda. He is trying to find a house in Ramleh for Mírzá Abu'l-Faḍl, so that he may be near us. After a few moments he went out with Ḥájí Muḥammad to look for one. We learned later that a house has been found almost adjacent so that we shall have the privilege of seeing Mírzá Abu'l-Faḍl quite often.

In the afternoon Ḥájí Khurasání came and expressed a wish to call on Mírzá Abu'l-Faḍl. Mírzá 'Alí-Akbar and myself begged him to take us, too. It is about one hour's ride to reach the place, and then one must walk several blocks. We knocked at the door. After a minute it was opened and Mírzá Abu'l-Faḍl welcomed us. He looked much older than when I used to serve him in America. {{p109}} He still has the same desire to be left alone. He loves to wait on his guests personally. After greeting us, he inquired about many of the believers in America. I was glad to convey to him their messages of love and respect and to tell him how he is remembered and honored by all the friends. He recalled his pleasant summers spent in Green Acre, and wished that place a great future. He asked about the health of Miss Farmer. He inquired about the publication of his recent book, the "Brilliant Proof" and requested that a copy be forwarded to the Rev. Easton. He deplored his inability to travel caused by his physical weakness.

"If I were strong enough I would never stay in one place more than a month. I would travel constantly have advised the Bahá'í teachers, that this is the best way to spread this universal message. They must fly from one bush to another, and sing the songs of the Kingdom — the Kingdom of Abhá."

Then he served us with tea prepared by his own hands and Mírzá 'Alí-Akbar related some of the incidents during the trip of the Beloved in America.

2. Alexandria is a Progressive City

We were on our way home when we met Áqá Muḥammad Báqir. The Master has appointed him to attend to the occasional needs of Mírzá Abu'l-Faḍl. He lives near him. He told us that 'Abdu'l-Bahá sent him to accompany Mírzá Abu'l-Faḍl to Ramleh.

Alexandria to all intents and purposes is like a progressive American city. Its tall buildings, its large department stores, its clean avenues, its double-decked electric cars, its delightful parks, its electrically lighted boulevards and streets, its fine promenades around the seaport, are all signs of a wonderful prosperous spirit. {{p110}} As I passed along the streets it seemed as though I was walking on an avenue in New York, and I wondered at the magical transformations which had taken place since this city was burned to the ground during the Arabi revolution thirty-one years ago. The inhabitants of all nations, Greeks, Italians,

French, Jews, English, Arabs, Persians, live here and associate with one another in perfect harmony.

3. ‘Abdu’l-Bahá Talks with the Persian followers

When we reached home it was nine o’clock and the Master was sitting on the veranda with a number of believers. I learned to my regret that I had missed a large gathering of friends.

“What did he speak of?” I asked. The answer was given; about America, his addresses in churches and temples, the unity of mankind and the beauty and holiness of the spiritual life.

4. Abu’l-Faḍl a Great Bahá’í Teacher

Mírzá Abu’l-Faḍl was there and the Master asked him to inspect the house which he is going to rent for him. When he returned he said that he was very satisfied with the place and in a few days we will have him with us. I shall ever be indebted to Mírzá Abu’l-Faḍl who bestowed so much kindness upon me during my first years in America. He is today the greatest teacher in the Bahá’í world, and through his writings he is beloved by friends and respected by foes. May he live many years longer! How the Master loves him, considers his comfort and tries to prepare all means of happiness for him.

In talking with Mírzá Abu’l-Faḍl ‘Abdu’l-Bahá said when he will come to Ramleh he would be his physician, and take good care of him. {{p111}} Abu’l-Faḍl is coming and like a wise mentor he will guide and instruct us as long as we are in Ramleh.

RAMLEH, EGYPT, JULY 26, 1913.

Before chronicling the daily events I would like to share with you the wonderful contents of a very great Tablet revealed for the believers of God in Azarbayejan.

1. The Fragrances of God and Their Marvelous Results

O YE SPIRITUAL FRIENDS OF ‘ABDU’L-BAHÁ!

“The faithful envoy has arrived and in the spiritual world has conveyed the message to the believers of God This blessed happy messenger is no other than the Fragrance of attraction and the soul-refreshing breeze of the Love of God. These stir hearts into cheerfulness and make the spirits the treasures of joy and gladness. The effulgence of Divine Unity has cast such splendor over the hearts and spirits and created such tremendous effect as to establish a bond of spiritual communication between each and all, making them throb as one heart and beat as one pulse. {{p112}} Therefore one observes that spiritual reflections and merciful impressions are printed in the utmost beauty and art, upon the Tablets of the hearts and that their delicate forms are transparent and graceful I pray God that, day by day, this spiritual communication may become reinforced and cause more and more the appearance of this Divine Unity in the world of humanity; so that all mankind like unto disciplined soldiers, may abide under the shade of the Word of God and under the Flag of the Covenant, striving with all their hearts and souls, that universal conciliation, cordial love and spiritual communication may be firmly established among the hearts of the inhabitants of the world; and that all the children of men through the radiant, new Bestowal, may consort and associate with each other in one loving meeting; that strife and war may vanish from the face of the earth; that the love of the Beauty of the Most Glorious may encompass every atom of Creation; that enmity be changed into amity; differences transformed into good-fellowship; the foundation of animosity destroyed; the basis of hatred demolished; the illumination of Union cause the disappearance of the darkness of limitation and the transcendent light of the Merciful suffer the hearts of humanity to become the mines of the refulgent Love of God.””

2. Now Is the Time of the Union of All Nations and Religions

“O ye friends of God!

“Now is the time when you must affiliate with all nations with joy and the utmost kindness — thus may you become the manifestors of the Mercy of His Highness the One. Become ye the spirit of the world and the quintessence of life in the temple of mankind. In this wonderful century in which the Ancient Beauty — the Most Great Name — has dawned from the horizon of the world with infinite Bestowals. {{p113}} the Word of God hath created such dominion and potency over the realities of mankind that the effect and influence of human conditions and environments are neutralized. With a penetrative power He hath gathered all into the Court of Union and addresses them as follows: —

“‘Now is the time when the believers of God must unfurl the Banner of Unity, singing the songs of friendship in the Assemblages of the world and inviting all to the universality and all-inclusiveness of the Grace of God — so that the canopy of Holiness may be pitched on the apex of creation and the nations brought under the shade of the Word of Unity. This bounty shall become unveiled in the Center of the world when the believers of God will live in accord with the Teaching of the Merciful One and occupy their time in the diffusion of the sweet Fragrances of Universal Love.’

3. In the Bahá’í Revelation There is No Limitation

“In every dispensation the Command of friendship and the law of Love have been revealed, but it has been circumscribed within the circle of believing friends and not with those outside of it. Praise be to God that in this wonderful cycle the laws of God are not confined by any limitations; neither must they be exercised toward a special community to the exclusion of another. He hath commanded the friends to show love, friendship, amity and kindness to all the people of the world.

4. Become Ye As Kind Fathers to the Children of Humanity

“Now the believers of God must live in accord with these divine Teachings. They must become kind fathers to the children of humanity; affectionate brothers to the youths of mankind and soul-sacrificing children toward those who are laden with age. {{p114}} The aim is this: You must be in the utmost state of joy and fragrance and show love and kindness to all, even to your enemies. Meet persecution and adversity with trust. Whenever animosity appears, deal with it with forbearance: make your breasts targets for the arrows and spears of opposition. Brave the ridicule, the blame and the rebuke with perfect love: so that all nations may observe the Power of the Most Great Name, and all people acknowledge the Potency of the Blessed Perfection — showing how He hath destroyed the foundations of strangeness, hath guided the inhabitants of the world to unity and love, hath illuminated the realm of man and transformed this terrestrial globe into a delectable Paradise. These people are like unto children, negligent and mindless. One must train them with the utmost love and carry them with infinite tenderness in the arms of Grace so that they may taste the love of the Merciful One, become illumined like unto candles and dissipate the darkness of this world. Thus they may behold clearly and manifestly the glorious crown and brilliant diadem with which the Most Great Name — The Blessed Perfection — may my life be a sacrifice to Him — hath adorned the heads of His Believers; what graces He hath poured upon the hearts of His friends; what love He hath brought into the world of humanity and what friendship He hath caused to appear among the children of men?

“O Lord! O Lord! Confirm Thy righteous servants in the practice of love and friendship to all mankind and assist them in the diffusion of the Light of Guidance which is descending from Thy Supreme Concourse upon all the inhabitants of the world. {{p115}} Verily Thou art Powerful, Mighty, Omnipotent, Generous! And, verily, Thou art the Merciful, the Clement, the Compassionate and the Bestower!

5. ‘Abdu’l-Bahá Ready for the Last Call

This morning the Beloved called me to his presence He spoke of the weather and of the state of his health saying that he had not been feeling well, in Ramleh, but that for the present he would not move to any other place, no matter what might happen. He said, he has finished his work. He has nothing else to do. He is now ready for the last call! How he longs to quaff from that cup! How sweet will be its taste! How delightful will be that hour!

He was surrounded by letters and papers. He handed me a package just received from America to be translated and made ready for his answers. He told me to come back in the afternoon. Before leaving he wished me to go into the reception room and visit Mrs. Getsinger, which I did with great pleasure. We had an interesting conversation about the Movement in the United States and I read to her the above Tablet and together we hoped that the believers of the Merciful would be inspired to carry out its contents.

6. Letters and News from America

At four o'clock I returned. As I passed along the street in front of the house, I looked up and lo — I saw the Master sitting on the balcony dressed in his beautiful white robe. He saw me and bade me come up. When I entered the room he welcomed me with genuine hilarity. He felt better this afternoon, and asked me to read him the letters. He told me to sit down near the open window, so that I might get the cool breeze, while he walked back and forth. Did you ever think of the great attention which he pays to all his servants? We began to work. {{p116}} Because Mr. Joseph H. Hannen of Washington D.C., was an active worker in the field and a special friend of mine, I often read his reports first — so this time I asked: —

“May I read Mr. Hannen’s report?”

The Master laughed heartily and said, that if Mr. Hannen was my dear friend, he was at least his son.

He was amused when I read how a clergyman was brought into the Cause by hearing a lecture against it.

7. Eloquent Speeches Must Be Delivered at Public

Gatherings

As regards speaking at meetings he emphasized the fact that he has written many times on this subject. He sent a Tablet only a few days ago, which was meant for all the believers. He wished me to send a copy of it to Mr. Hannen and to write him that at the meetings and gatherings eloquent addresses and inspiring speeches must be delivered, explaining the principles of the Blessed Perfection, and setting the hearts aglow with the Fire of the Love of God.

8. Persian American Educational Society

He also was pleased to hear that $250.00 had been sent to Dr. Moody in Tīhrán, Persia, and expressed the hope that the activities of the Persian American Educational Society may increase yearly, and may be enabled to wipe out its debt. He often speaks about this Society, its large, disinterested platform and the fame which it has acquired in such a short space of time.

9. Many Tablets Dictated for Believers

He revealed a Tablet for Mrs. Hannen about the Bahá'í Sunday school and to many other believers in different parts of the world. {{p117}} While he was dictating these Tablets he was carrying on a long conversation with an Arab Shaykh. When he had finished he came out, followed by all of us. He took a long walk and about eight o'clock returned to our apartment and stayed for nearly an hour speaking at times and then lapsing into silence.

10. Pray with an Attracted Heart

Here I end with the following quotation from a recent Tablet: —

“Thou has written asking what thou shouldst do and what prayer thou shouldst offer in order to become informed of the Mysteries of God. Pray thou with an attracted heart and supplicate with a spirit stirred by the Glad-tidings of God. Then the doors of the Kingdom of Mysteries shall be opened before thy face and thou shalt comprehend the realities of all things.”

RAMLEH, EGYPT, JULY 27, 1913.

1. The Effect of Association with ‘Abdu’l-Bahá

We are bathed in the sea of ‘Abdu’l-Bahá’s love; are flying in the atmosphere of his beauty; drinking the wine of his Grandeur; eating the food of his humility; listening to the thrilling music of his divine voice; resting under the ever-spreading tree of his teachings, and watching the light and shade of his countenance. He inspires our hearts with wondrous thoughts of social service and mutual helpfulness. {{p118}} He reveals to our souls the secrets of forgiveness and loving kindness. He teaches us patience and long suffering. If hearts are not stony, these lessons will, in the long run, bear fruit; and I believe they will affect even the most adamant. For behind every heart of stone, there is a warm one of flesh and blood and under many a tattered coat, may live a noble prince. His presence teaches us how insignificant are our endeavors, how narrow our thoughts, how futile our works in comparison with his grand accomplishments, his sweeping, universal conception of mankind, his increasing activities in all directions, and his attention to all details. If we could walk in his footsteps, emulate him in all our lives, serve our fellowmen as he serves them, spread the Glad-tidings of the Kingdom as he spreads them, then we shall have won his good pleasure.

2. ‘Abdu’l-Bahá Dictates Tablets for the Persians

This morning ‘Abdu’l-Bahá called Mírzá ‘Alí-Akbar to his Presence. He felt radiant and most happy. Mírzá ‘Alí-Akbar, finding him in some light-giving mood, relates a few funny stories which make him laugh more. Afterwards he sends for Mírzá Munír, and dictates to him many Tablets for the Oriental believers, some of which I translate herein because they contain paragraphs concerning his trip to America. From now on there will be a flood of Tablets flowing from his tongue. For more than three years the Eastern believers have been deprived of the traces of his pen. Now it is time to compensate them.

Toward noon he passed by the door of our house, followed by an Arab. We thought that he was coming in and so we prepared to receive him, but he passed on, making the sign of salutation. {{p119}} He was evidently going to fulfill an engagement.

3. Tickets for Charity Bazaar

Later he returned with a letter in his hand and distributed among us several tickets for a charity entertainment, which was to be held in the San Stefano Hotel. A Páshá, who is a patron of the hotel had sent these tickets to him. The fete was for a worthy cause — the erection of a school, called Orwat-Ul-Woska.

4. Importance of Cleanliness in All Things

After the distribution of these tickets he spoke very emphatically about cleanliness, especially in cooking. He wished our Persian Bahá'í cook to wear a spotless white apron, to wash his hands often with soap, to keep his kitchen as clean as a pearl and to be as tidy and neat in his cooking as the best French chef.

Concluding his remarks he smilingly stated that if he did not see these changes in the cook, he would use the big stick, because some educators believe that one whipping will do more good than a hundred words of advice.

He recalled with much satisfaction a cook who had kept a restaurant in Beirut many years ago, and who was the embodiment of cleanliness. This cook did not touch the meat with his hands, but cut it with a special instrument and cooked it with great taste and delicacy. 'Abdu'l-Bahá stayed in Beirut for a long time and he went often to his kitchen to watch him at his work. {{p120}} As long as the Master lived in that city he remained his customer.

5. Description of a Charity Bazaar in Alexandria

When he left we hurried along to the fete in the San Stefano Casino. It was a palatial hotel, most splendidly built. Hundreds of carriages and automobiles were waiting in rows. As we entered we saw a large crowd of people, nearly five thousand, dispersed all over the grounds. Several bands of music were playing at different places. Many other amusements attracted the attention of the people. The wonderful sea with its ebb and flow was shimmering under the sunshine. The crowd was orderly and jovial. Except for the Tarboushes on the heads of the young men, and the thin white veils which covered the lower halves of the faces of women, letting their black eyes and eyelids shine forth, I could not see much difference between this and any American charity affair. By seven o'clock it was almost impossible to move, so dense was the throng. At night there were many moving pictures, and an excellent display of fireworks which evoked general applause. Later, the Master called at the house of Hájí Khurasání, and finding there a number of Arabs, he gave them a talk which was taken down by one of those present. After this meeting he returned to the house, and entertained us with stories which evoked much laughter. He was well and happy today.

RAMLEH, EGYPT, JULY 28, 1913.

The following are a few quotations {{p121}} from Tablets revealed yesterday for the Persian believers: —

1. First One Must Teach Himself, Then Others

“After my return from America and Europe, owing to the difficulties of the long voyage and to the innumerable inconveniences of the journey, a physical reaction set in and I became indisposed. Now, through the Favor and Bounty of the Blessed Perfection, I am feeling better; therefore, I am engaged in writing this letter, so that thou mayst realize that the friends of God are never forgotten under any circumstances.... Now is the time when the believers of God may imitate the conduct and manner of ‘Abdu’l-Bahá. Day and night they must engage in teaching the Cause of God but they must be in the same spiritual state which ‘Abdu’l-Bahá manifested while traveling in America. When the teacher delivers an address, his words must first of all have a supreme and powerful effect over himself so that everyone may be in turn affected. His utterances must be like unto flames of fire, burning away the veils of dogmas, passion and desire. Moreover he must be in the utmost state of humility and evanescence — so that others may become mindful. He must have attained to the station of renunciation and annihilation. Then and not until then, will he teach the people with the Melody of the Supreme Concourse.”

2. Heraldng the Kingdom of God in the Cities of Europe and America

“Praise be to God that, through the Bestowal and Grace of the Beauty of Abhá, (from the Continent of Europe) (I have returned to the Continent of Africa.) I have tarried in Egypt for a few days because I was weakened by the fatigue of traveling through the Cities of Europe; by the variable climates of the American mountains and prairies and by the length and hardships of the voyage. {{p122}} While in Europe one day we were in London and another in Edinburgh; now in Paris and anon in Stuttgart; once in Budapest and again in Vienna. We were almost every hour in another place, delivering lengthy speeches and addresses, and notwithstanding the indisposition of the body, day and night I cried and raised my voice in large meetings and important churches.... As there were many obstacles, the door of correspondence was closed; but the faces of the illumined friends were manifest at every hour in the Court of Consciousness, and at all times they were present in my memory. As I have now found a little leisure. I address you this letter so that I may occupy myself with the servitude of the believers of God, and become the means of the happiness of the hearts. This is the utmost desire of ‘Abdu’l-Bahá.”

3. While Encircled by the Whirlwind of Calumnies,

Blossom Ye Like a Rose

“During this long trip great capacity was created in every clime for listening to the Word of God; even in the vast countries of the Orient the fame of the Cause of God is spreading more and more. Therefore, the friends of God must take as example my behavior and demeanor. They must not rest one moment. They must not seek quietude for one second. At all times they must emanate joy and gladness. They must be occupied in teaching the Cause of God. No event must sadden their hearts. No catastrophe must break their spirit. {{p123}} With divine happiness they must withstand every impending disaster. During the time of peace, security, comfort and the absence of grief, even the monkey will be a jovial fellow. He will be happy, joyful, grateful, patient and overflowing with gladness. But the sincere servant of Bahá’u’lláh, who is firm in the Covenant and steadfast in the Testament, while surrounded by the most great sea of tests; threatened by surging, rocking waves of persecution, encircled by whirlwinds of calumnies and backbitings — will blossom like unto a rose and break into joyous songs and sweet melodies like unto the nightingale.”

4. ‘Abdu’l-Bahá Sacrificing His Life in the Path of Bahá

“Your letter was received; but ‘Abdu’l-Bahá, owing to the infirmity of the body; the difficulty of voyaging over seas and lands, the lack of rest, the striving and exerting day and night; the delivering of long addresses in different cities; and of answering the varied, and intricate questions of the people; — has not been able to answer it. His life, his identity, his heart and his body are gladly sacrificed in the Path of Bahá! This is the Bestowal of the Almighty! This is the Inestimable Favor of God! This is the Favor of the Blessed Perfection! These are the Graces of His Highness the One!”

5. ‘Abdu’l-Bahá Tells of His Early Life

It was about six o’clock in the morning when the door of the house was opened and the Beloved came in. I had Just finished dressing and was about to take my place at my table to translate a few Tablets. The rest were asleep, but they jumped out of bed and were dressed in a few minutes. He was surprised that they were yet asleep and told us he had already read many letters, written several Tablets and attended to various other things before leaving the house. {{p124}} Up to the time he was 32 years old he never slept in bed, preferring always a piece of mat and using for a pillow one or two books. He went to sleep without changing his clothes, fearing that it would take him some time to dress in the morning. But now he cannot do these things. When he lived in ‘Akká he generally kept ten secretaries busy; often dictating important letters to three of them at the same time.

6. ‘Abdu’l-Bahá Tells the Arabs about His Western Trip

Then he started to correct one of his addresses delivered in San Francisco, and made some remarks about the speeches before the open Forum and the Japanese Independent Church. Just as he came suddenly, he left suddenly, and there were many pledges that henceforward everybody will be up before six A.M.

He again came in the afternoon, stayed a long time, and told us stories about three men who were great cowards, but who became courageous and intrepid after accepting the Bahá’í revelation. How graphic, how simple, how matchless he is in his description of such events. Then he called on an important native Páshá and after nine o’clock, returned to our house bringing an Arab with him. After offering him coffee, he described the meetings in the Bowery Mission in New York, and spoke of the Salvation Army in London and of other incidents of the wonderful Western trip. When he left the room, we felt the sweet fragrance of the presence of God.

RAMLEH, EGYPT, JULY 29, 1913.

1. Glad-Tidings of the Kingdom of Abhá from

Minneapolis

This morning the Beloved sent for me and within a few minutes I was standing in his holy presence. He dictated several cablegrams, and spoke a few minutes on various topics. Then I went to Alexandria to despatch the cables and attend to other errands. As he handed me one of the corrected addresses of California, he said these talks must be translated into Arabic. Let it be done at once.

A package of newspapers was received from Minneapolis in which the Glad-tidings of the Kingdom of Abhá were printed. These Glad-tidings had been sent to the Master for correction while we were in Paris. I would like to quote them because the Master was pleased with my Persian translations of them.

“Glad-tidings of the Kingdom of Abhá!

“We announce to you Glad-tidings of great Joy! Similar words were spoken almost two thousand years ago. Reflect and be not of the heedless. This is the Great Day of God. This is the Day of Universal Peace of Universal Brotherhood, of a Universal language and of the Union of All Religions. This is the Day wherein the Prophecies of the Holy Books of every tongue have been, or are being, fulfilled. This is the Cycle of Bahá’u’lláh!

“We announce to you His Holiness, the Báb, the Precursor of ‘He whom God shall manifest.’

“We announce to you Bahá’u’lláh, ‘He whom God shall manifest.’ The one who has broken the Seals of both the Creational and Collective books.

“We announce to you ‘Abdu’l-Bahá, the Center of the Covenant, the Interpreter of the Holy Books of all peoples and of the Bahá’í Teachings, and the door through which mankind can enter the Kingdom of God in this Day and Dispensation.”

For dinner the Beloved ate a special dish prepared by one of the Páshás and left at his house. {{p126}} In turn he sent part of it to us. It was one of those rare delicacies of Arabia, a kind of meat cake with vegetables and pinenuts.

2. Modern Hospital in Alexandria

I forgot to write that yesterday we called on Siyyid Jalál, the son of a celebrated Bahá’í poet and teacher, living in Tíhrán. He is in the German hospital. A few days ago he was operated on but now he feels much better. The hospital is a model of elegance and cleanliness. All the floors and walls are built of marble. Really I am amazed at every turn, at the practical signs of progress in Egypt. It is nothing short of miraculous! Walking through the avenues and the European business districts of Alexandria one thinks that one is living in Europe or America.

3. ‘Abdu’l-Bahá Takes the French Bahá’í Doctor

for a Drive

In the afternoon I called on the Beloved and in his presence found DeBons, a French Bahá’í dentist practicing in Cairo — now on his way to Switzerland to meet his wife. ‘Abdu’l-Bahá is going to take him for a drive through Nozha Park, which is the National Park of Alexandria. I have heard much praise of it, but have not yet been there. They say it rivals any park in Europe or America. For nearly two hours ‘Abdu’l-Bahá entertained the doctor driving through the park and speaking to him about his spiritual experiences in America. {{p127}} When he returned, he was as fresh as when I saw him in the morning. For the last three or four days his health has been improving and for this great blessing we proffer thanksgiving and praise to the Lord. He walks among us as a divine witness to all men. Every day spent in the neighborhood of his light is equal to an age, the significance and beauty of which cannot be grasped by the mentality of man.

RAMLEH, EGYPT, JULY 30, 1913.

1. The Cause of Bahá'u'lláh Is the Mainspring of Love and Peace

The Cause of Bahá'u'lláh is the Cause of life. Life is the mainspring of material and spiritual activities. One of the active principles is Love, the other is Peace. The life of a Bahá'í is not rounded and developed without the full manifestation of these two active principles. They must become the dominant influence of his whole existence. He must "love" the world and be at "peace" with humanity; so that these two harmonious notes may blend together and assist him to ascend to the highest summit of true greatness and innate spiritual perception. The prophets of God have come to inculcate in the life of every individual these two principles; especially Bahá'u'lláh. "He hath held aloft the banner of love and peace. Whosoever is imbued with the realities of these two principles, has life. {{p128}} Love and Peace are the causes which hold together all the different elements of the mineral, vegetable and animal kingdoms. Were it not for the presence of these two divine forces constantly exercising their benign influence, the whole scheme of creation would have been smashed to pieces long ago. The power of gravitation or attraction is no other than one of the signs of these heavenly energies. Whenever the secret power of these two spiritual verities is fully revealed in the world of humanity, impelling mankind to grow greater and greater in its capacity, then the glorious zenith of divine civilization will become visible. It is our duty to cause these two principles more and more to be revealed, among ourselves, toward one another, and among the people of the world. What a lofty privilege! What a divine Bestowal! What a wonderful responsibility! What a radiant glory! What ecstatic joy! What pure happiness!"

2. 'Abdu'l-Bahá Tells about His Health and Work

This morning 'Abdu'l-Bahá sent for me. Joyfully I hastened to his holy house to receive the rays of his love and benediction. He dictated cablegrams to various parts of the world and spoke about the amount of work to be accomplished. He stated that no one can imagine how many different issues must be met, and how many conflicting interests harmonized! He was now advanced in age. The physical reaction of his long journey has had a terrible effect upon his weakened constitution, and he cannot work as vigorously as he used to in his youth. When he reads a letter his eyes grow weary; when he dictates a few Tablets, his mind gets tired, when he walks a few thousand feet he becomes exhausted.

How heart-breaking and joy-imparting is his condition in these days. {{p129}} The barometer of his health never stands on one mark for two days. Like the ebb and flow of the sea, is the condition of his health. We watch him with great solicitude, but are unable to do anything to alleviate his pain or to increase his health. One day he told us that the doctor enjoins upon him the dictum, Do not work, Do not speak, Do not write, but God commands him to work, speak and write. Now whose commands should he obey?

3. Oriental Bahá'ís Anxious to Receive the News

A few minutes later I was out in the open, sad at heart because I had seen 'Abdu'l-Bahá so heavy-laden with the burden of the world and there is not a single soul to lighten it. While Siyyid Asadu'lláh was here he carried on a large and profitable correspondence with all parts of the Orient, thus informing the friends of the passing events. They did not receive any Tablets, but his correspondence kept them in touch with the Center and was of course, a great consolation. But now he is gone to be a soldier in the field and up to this date no one has been appointed to fill his place; thus the believers in the Orient are concerned and anxious. Mírzá Maḥmúd, upon his arrival on Port Sa'íd, discontinued writing weekly letters and is now, day and night, busy compiling his notes. I also am occupied with my own duties. Mírzá Munír takes the dictation of Tablets for the Oriental Bahá'ís which are being revealed almost every day.

4. Mírzá Abu'l-Faḍl and His Position in the Bahá'í Cause

When I returned, the Master was in the house, Mírzá Abu'l-Faḍl also being present. He recited in detail a resume of his addresses in the Jewish synagogues of America. {{p130}} The respect and utter humility of Mírzá Abu'l-Faḍl in the presence of the Beloved is most touching. He hardly raises his voice when he addresses him. Those who have seen and heard Mírzá Abu'l-Faḍl, know the extent of his knowledge, the wide range of his learning, and the brilliancy of his services to the Cause of God. Men like him are rarest jewels and therefore they are loved and honored by the Master. He has suffered imprisonment for two years for the sake of his faith and has undergone much persecution.

5. Muḥammadan Mullás and Their Hair-splitting

Metaphysical Discussions

In the afternoon the Master came in again and immediately two Muḥammadan Mullás called on him. These Arabs love hair-splitting religious controversies; and therefore one of them tried to start the ball rolling. The Master, with a wonderfully divine attitude, silenced him and gently rebuked him for the utter uselessness of theological discussions which are not productive of any result. They were advised to investigate the Truth, free from any prejudice. Then he spoke about his lecture in Oxford University, his meeting with Mr. Alexander G. Bell, the inventor of the telephone, in Washington, and ended by telling them that his field of activity was in Europe and America. He had come here to rest for a few months.

The Mullás were utterly defeated, begged humbly for his forgiveness of their apparent negligence, and expressed their conviction that they were highly profited by the meeting and hoped that they would never forget the lesson they had learned today.

RAMLEH, EGYPT, JULY 31, 1913,

1. The Progress of the Bahá'í Cause in the Orient

The progress of the Bahá'í Cause is evident. The signs of awakening are apparent. The beauty of the spiritual life is manifest. The traces of the Sun of Reality are spreading. The mysteries of the Words of God are revealed. The clouds of superstitions are dispelled. The horizon of divine religion is clear. The rose-garden of hearts is adorned. The nightingales of significances are warbling. The flowers of faith are perfuming the nostrils. The Breezes of the Holy Spirit are vivifying the dead. The fountains of eternal life are flowing. The vineyard of the Lord is verdant. The servants are faithful, The gardeners are honest and sincere.

From all all parts of the Orient the news of the forward march of the Bahá'í Cause is being received. Men and women are advancing toward the Kingdom of El Abhá! On their lips are new hymns of praises! In their hearts tumultuous voices of glorification. In their ears are the sweet, ravishing melodies of the birds of paradise. The teachers of the Cause are inspired with a new zeal. Their hearts are fired with the unprecedented example of 'Abdu'l-Bahá. Difficulties! There are none. {{p132}} From every corner of the Orient the still small voice grows into volume and force, becoming irresistible in its might, removing every obstacle from its path, and attacking the rank and file of the forces of darkness, putting them into complete rout.

Through the gloomy night of ignorance and fanaticism, the light-bearers of Reality, with torches in their hands are running through the length and breadth of the East, illumining hearts with the effulgence of the Kingdom. Lo! do you hear the songs of the Eastern teachers which are being co-ordinated into one mighty voice: —

Let us follow the example of 'Abdu'l-Bahá! He has paved for us the highroad of teaching! Let us follow him! Let us emulate him! We shall seek no rest, wish for no comfort! We are his soldiers and he is our commander! We must increase the power of our activity! We must travel! We must forget everything else save the promotion of the Cause!

Thus a new spirit is aroused all over the East, impelling the teachers to go forward, to rush onward, to follow 'Abdu'l-Bahá!

2. 'Abdu'l-Bahá Tells about Rashíd Páshá and His

System of Extortion

The Beloved called this morning. He was in a happy mood. Mírzá Abu'l-Faḍl was there; so the main part of the talk was directed to him. First 'Abdu'l-Bahá spoke of the two Mullás who visited him yesterday, saying that these Arab shaykhs do not understand what fair discussion means. They love a good fighty argument better than their lives. They do not mean to investigate a given subject, examine its minor and major points and obtain the conclusion. They love to go on, pro and con, ad infinitum.

Then he spoke about Rashíd Páshá, a former Governor of Syria who had called upon him many times in Paris. He said, in part, that this man, according to popular tradition, must have been bad even before Adam and Eve. {{p133}} He extorted money with the flimsiest excuses from the peaceful citizens of Syria. For example, he would send for a wealthy merchant or manufacturer to come to Beirut on urgent business. Then on his arrival he would tell him, "I have received bad reports concerning your character and dealings. You must stay here till I send a committee to investigate these reports and then I will set you free." The man, finding himself helpless in the face of such accusations, stayed one, two, three, four weeks. Meanwhile, there was no one at the head of his business, and alarming reports come to him. Finally he felt constrained to give a few hundred pounds to the governor so that he might get away. Rashíd Páshá was also a favorite spy of the Sultán of Turkey. He would forward the most dreadful reports about the law-abiding citizens, thus filling his pockets with bribery and extortion.

3. The Episode of Rashíd Páshá and Madame Jackson

about 'Abdu'l-Bahá's Freedom

It so happened that at one time the secretary of the Turkish Embassy in Paris met Madame Jackson at a reception. Madame Jackson told him about 'Abdu'l-Bahá's incarceration in the town of 'Akká, and of the cruelty and injustice of the Turkish authorities. This secretary, being a relative of Rashíd Páshá, answered Madame Jackson, saying, that there must needs be at least 3000 pounds sterling to bring about 'Abdu'l-Bahá's freedom. Madame Jackson agreed to pay this sum if he succeeded in achieving his liberty. Immediately he reported to Rashíd Páshá that there lived a woman in Paris who was willing to pay a large sum if 'Abdu'l-Bahá could be set free. The governor, who loved money better than his life, cabled back to Paris, "Very well, it will be done."

Meanwhile 'Abdu'l-Bahá heard about the episode in this way: {{p134}} One day, the Mutaşarrif of 'Akká, who was the husband of the sister of Aḥmad 'Izzat Páshá, came running to him, saying, "God be praised! All the means are prepared!" "How?" 'Abdu'l-Bahá asked. "What has happened?" "Oh! do you not know?" he said. "Soon you will be free. You will go out of this prison. You will travel wherever you wish." Then he told the rest of the story. As soon as he left 'Abdu'l-Bahá's abode, the latter sent a cable to Madame Jackson. "Beware! Beware! lest you pay one cent for my freedom. In prison I am feeling happy!" When the governor heard about 'Abdu'l-Bahá's instructions to Madame Jackson, he was, of course, furious. He had thought it would be so easy to get this sum of money. So he changed his tactics, and 'Abdu'l-Bahá one day received a letter from his secretary saying that the governor was very anxious to see him enjoying the air of freedom. ‘Abdu’l-Bahá did not answer. After a week, he received another letter from the same secretary announcing that the governor had instructed him to draw up a petition to his Imperial Majesty, begging for ‘Abdu’l-Bahá’s liberty. Again ‘Abdu’l-Bahá did not answer. Then he wrote that the petition was ready to be mailed. No answer. Again: the governor is going to sign the papers and mail them tomorrow. No answer. Then ‘Abdu’l-Bahá received his last letter, saying that the governor had read the petition and had written over the envelope, ‘Not to be sent.’ No answer. When the governor realized that he had failed in everything, he sent his own son to ‘Akká to see ‘Abdu’l-Bahá personally, thinking that perchance he might succeed. The son was, of course, lavishly entertained by Mutaṣarrif. ‘Abdu’l-Bahá was invited to meet him. After dinner the son brought up the subject from various points of view. ‘Abdu’l-Bahá took the attitude that he knew nothing about the matter. {{p135}} After dinner he followed ‘Abdu’l-Bahá to his house and spoke a great deal, but to no effect. “I am sorry to see you in prison,” he would say. “Here I am happy,” ‘Abdu’l-Bahá answered. When in the morning he was leaving, disappointed, he made another effort by saying, “I hope, my Effendi, that I shall see you next time in Haifa.” ‘Abdu’l-Bahá waved the matter aside. When the governor heard the unsuccessful report of his son, he was crestfallen and angry. At that time he was so powerful that all the inhabitants of Syria trembled through fear of him. His reports to the Sulṭán were laws. One word from him would bring down the ire of his Majesty on anybody’s head, no matter how important and influential they were.

When ‘Abdu’l-Bahá realized that they were again at their old tactics, trying to make him say the word “yes” to their extortionate demands, he one day called Mutaṣarrif to his house and told him defiantly: “Do not make any more intrigues; you shall fail in all your secret machinations. There is a destined period for my imprisonment. Before the coming of that time, even the kings of the earth cannot take me out of this prison, but when the appointed moment arrives, all the emperors of the world cannot hold me a prisoner in ‘Akká. I shall then go out. Rest thou assured of this.”

When the Mutaṣarrif heard this emphatic statement, he wrote a letter to the governor, advising him not to make any further move “because ‘Abbás Effendi knows the Talisman of Imám ‘Alí. He has learned from the position of the heavenly Constellations the time of his freedom and no one can hasten it. {{p136}} It is better for us to give up this idea.”

4. The Infinite Patience of ‘Abdu’l-Bahá in Answering

the Tribunal Questions Put to Him

At noon Mírzá Munír brought me a letter to translate into Persian. When this was finished I called at the Master’s house to deliver it. I knocked at the door three or four times before Khusraw answered. As I waited outside I heard the voice of the Master, dictating Tablets to Mírzá Munír. I was then announced and ushered into the room. The Master welcomed me. He was sitting near the balcony; in front of him was a chair piled high with letters from the East and West. His dress and turban were of snowy white matching his beautiful locks and beard. Across the street there was a tall green acacia tree which attracted his attention. Now and then his eyes closed and again opened revealing infinite pity and love hidden in his eyes. Mírzá Munír was sitting writing down the heavenly words which flowed like a fountain from the tongue of the Beloved. As I watched him, I was struck by the divine beauty of his countenance, soft, tender and most adorable.

The many difficult problems of the Bahá'í world are solved by him. Now he writes to Persia on how to hold an election, then to far-off America on how to rent a hall. One Bahá'í desires to know whether she should cook food for her child; another person asks how to proceed to buy a piece of land. There are some misunderstandings in this assembly to be removed; the feelings of some person are ruffled, and must be smoothed down. One man's mother or father is dead, he requests a Tablet of visitation, another desires to have a wife. To one a child is born, she begs for a Bahá'í name; another has taught several souls, he asks for Bahá'í rings for them. This man has had business reverses, he must be encouraged, another has fallen from a ladder, he implores for a speedy recovery. {{p137}} One has quarreled with his wife, and he wants advice on how to be reconciled; another supplicates for blessings upon his marriage. The Master goes over these one by one with infinite patience and with his words of advice, creates order out of chaos. The sorrows of the world troop along in review before him, and as they pass, lo, the transformation happens! The sorrowful becomes joyful, the ill-tempered good-natured, the lazy active, the sleepy one awakened. With magical words he transmutes iron into gold and darkness into light. At last he rises from his seat and for a while walks to and fro, still dictating Tablets to the philosopher and to the simple; soaring toward the empyrean of spirituality, giving us a vision of sanctity, and of the roses of Paradise, and for a while we roam, guided by him, in those delectable gardens of Abhá, intoxicated with the fragrance of God; and then we find ourselves in the streets, walking home upborn on the wings of light.

RAMLEH, EGYPT, AUGUST 1, 1913.

1. What Can We Do to Spread the Bahá'í Cause?

What can we do to become more fitting instruments, and purer channels, devoted whole-heartedly to the furtherance of the Bahá'í Cause? Is it through the organization of various committees? {{p138}} The discussion of various plans? The reading of Tablets and Words? The delivery of public addresses? The expounding of the Holy Utterances? The holding of Friday or Sunday meetings? The announcement of the Message? The publication and circulation of literature? It may be through any, or all of these, in fact each one of the above methods is important in its own place. But from a larger outlook, it is through the attraction of the heart, the purity of conscience, the spirituality of ideals, the concentration of selfishness, the leaping forth of the fire of the Love of God and the entire renunciation of self.

For the last few days many Tablets have been revealed for the Persian believers, and therefore it is very fitting to translate a few extracts: —

2. The Difficulties of the Western Journey Have Left

Their Impressions on ‘Abdu’l-Bahá

“The long journey over sea and land, the innumerable difficulties in the morn and at eve, the lack of rest and sleep, the delivery of detailed addresses in public congregations, the meetings with visitors from sunrise to midnight in America, the answering of countless questions and the withstanding of the hardships of the trip, have made their impression on this earthly constitution, and the result is a great weakness.... It is now a few days since I arrived in Ramleh, and feeling somewhat better, I am engaged in writing to you.

“Convey infinite longing and love on behalf of ‘Abdu’l-Bahá to all the believers of God. Day and night I am remembering the friends, kneeling before the Threshold and begging for them the confirmations of the Kingdom of Abhá. {{p139}} I hope that from now on the broken chain of correspondence will be taken up and that through the protection and preservation of the Blessed Beauty the pen will be set in motion.”

3. Now the Importance of the Station of the Believers

Is Unknown

“The Glances of Divine Providence are always vouchsafed, the infinite Bestowals are continually descending. There are clear evidences that in the service of the Cause of God you are confirmed. Know ye the value of this most great Favor and render ye thanksgiving unto the Threshold of God by day and by night; because you have adorned your heads with such Glorious Crowns and have illumined such a light-giving candle in the assemblage of the world! Now the greatness of this station is hidden and invisible, but ere long it will become evident and manifest.”

4. Service of the Believers of God

“Thank God that thou are assisted in serving the believers of God. Thou art the enkindled brasier of the Fire of Love and a lamp of the utmost purity through which the Light of God’s attraction shines forth. Appreciate the value of this Divine Favor. Be self sacrificing, and give exhilaration and rejoicing to the friends of God and engage in adoration and thanksgiving to the Most Glorious Lord with infinite gladness and happiness.

Today the Beloved came to see us in the morning. He sat on the veranda and asked Mírzá Munír to bring the Tablets which he dictated yesterday to be corrected by him. For half an hour he read them over and made a few corrections here and there. {{p140}} Then he dictated a Tablet to Maharajah of Couch Bahar of India. He also dispatched eight cables to the various cities of Persia giving the believers the good news of his health. Then went out to call on Mírzá ‘Abdu’l-Faql.

5. A Bahá’í Meeting in Alexandria

For the first time since my arrival in Ramleh I went to a Bahá’í meeting in the house of Khurasání. There were many Persian and Arabian Bahá’ís present. After our entrance, according to the Eastern custom, rose-water was given us with which to anoint our faces. Then tea was served and conversation started. I told them something about our American trip in which they were greatly interested. We spoke of certain people who rise to a great station in the Cause, then suddenly fall and are forgotten. One of the old believers illustrated this subject as follows: —

“If a person scales only a few steps of the ladder and falls, he can arise, shake off the dust, heal his bruises and scale the ladder again. But if he falls from the highest step, it will be most difficult for him to arise.”

Then an old man began to chant a prayer of Bahá’u’lláh when some one brought in the news that the Master was arriving. Immediately the man stopped his chanting, all voices were hushed, and everybody was on his feet, awaiting the coming of ‘Abdu’l-Bahá. As he entered all heads bowed down and he walked toward the upper part of the room and seated himself on the divan. He spoke in Arabic, for the sake of the Arabian Bahá’ís The subject was the Pyramids and their antiquity. When he left the room he called me to go with him and I was very happy. He spoke to me with much gentleness and kindness. {{p141}} He is at all times thinking of the welfare and comfort of his servants.

6. Bahá’í Detachment and Independence

While he walked along the street he was commenting on the fact that he desired every Bahá’í to be severed and detached. If he passes between two mountains of gold, he must not look to either side. Those souls who have entered under the shade of the Blessed Perfection must display such independence as to astonish the people of the world. If men come to them with money and supplicate them to accept it, they should reject it.

7. Arrival of Members of ‘Abdu’l-Bahá’s Family

On the way Mírzá ‘Alí-Akbar brought the news that the Greatest Holy Leaf, ‘Abdu’l-Bahá’s sister, his daughter, Shoghi Effendi, and five or six others had arrived from Haifa. The Beloved came to see us, sat for one hour, drank a cup of coffee, and then left us to return to his house to see the newcomers.

In the evening Shoghi Effendi brought me a few letters from America sent by Ahmad Yazdí, and the new book by Mr. Horace Holley "The Modern Social Religion," which is just out.

1. "The Greatest Holy Leaf" — the Daughter of

Bahá'u'lláh

Today the Beloved did not come to see us in the morning because he was entertaining "the Greatest Holy Leaf" and the rest of the friends who had Come with her. {{p142}} In the Bahá'í Cause she is a unique woman. She has devoted all her life to the service of humanity. She is a glorious star set upon the crown of womanhood, and a light-giving personality. Everybody takes her advice because she is a loving mother and sister to every Bahá'í. Her noble life is a glorious epic of self-sacrifice, generosity, and kindness. She radiates joy and ecstasy and is the worthiest representative of her kind. All those who have come within the radius of her calm, spiritual influence and have spoken even a few words with her, bear testimony to the fact that she is a heavenly soul — wonderfully spiritual, highly cultivated and attuned with the ethereal music of the celestial spheres. Well may all womankind be proud of her sweet life, spent in the path of God, consecrated to the Love of God and dedicated to the service of the Almighty!

Two pilgrims have just arrived from Persia. One is from Yazd, the other from Khurasán, a relative of Bábu'l-Báb, Mullá Husayn Bushrú'í — the first believer in the Báb.

2. 'Abdu'l-Bahá Talks with Two Pilgrims

I was going to take a walk when I saw the Master, dressed in his pure white garment, slowly coming toward me. I stood aside in a reverent attitude until he arrived, then I followed him. He felt very tired because he had read and written a great deal during the day.

He wished that he could get away, and be alone for several weeks and do nothing but rest, but he wondered whether he would be happy! He entered the house and our dear pilgrims wanted to kneel before him and kiss his hands, but he prevented them from doing so. {{p143}} He inquired from each how the Cause was progressing in their respective cities. The one from Yazd answered that the Cause was spreading very rapidly in that part of the world, the teachers were very zealous and active, the meetings very radiant and that every day from ten to fifteen people were instructed in various gatherings. The Master praised their zeal and courage and expressed the hope that they would increase their enthusiasm and their power of teaching.

3. This Is the Day of Teaching

In talking with these pilgrims the Master emphasized that this is the day of teaching. This is the day of service. This is the day of the illumination of the world of humanity. Nothing else will give permanent result. This is their work.

Then he left us, but our hearts were full with his love, a love which never grows dim, but is light upon light.

4. Mr. Atwood, an Englishman

I went out, walking toward the Hotel Plaisance where Miss Hiscock and Mr. Atwood live. I had a most interesting talk with the latter. He is very cultured and learned and the Master thinks highly of him. He writes articles for Magazines, is well-informed on many subjects and has lived in Ramleh with his wife and two children for nearly four years. {{p144}} From now on I hope to see him as often as I can for I have great admiration for him. He is a man of intelligence and sound mind.

I will end my letter today with the translations of a few extracts from the Tablets.

5. Filial Piety

TO A FATHER WHOSE SON IS A TEACHER IN THE CAUSE.

“Every son who does not become a cause of glory for his parents is a manifest loss. How many children turn out to be fruitless and unfaithful! Therefore render thanksgiving unto the Lord that thou hast such a kind and skillful son. He is a servant of the Cause and very efficient. He is favored at the Threshold of the Most Glorious King. His heart and soul are vivified through the Breaths of the Merciful. His eyes are turned toward the horizon of His Highness, the Unconstrained. His tongue is fluent with the divine proofs and evidences, and his nostrils perfumed with the sweet Fragrances of the Clement One.”

6. The Future of Persia

“The region of Núr is the birthplace of the Speaker on the Mount. Consider to what grandeur, importance and splendor it shall attain throughout future ages and cycles. It shall become the abode of the Paradise of the Kingdom; the forest for the lions of the Forgiving Lord, the Holy Ground for the people of all nations and the abode of the angels of the Most High, for the Fire of Sinai flamed forth from this region and the Most Great Luminary dawned from this horizon. But a thousand times alas, that the inhabitants of that country are still heedless and unaware. {{p145}} Ere long they shall become awakened and mindful, and they will glorify and magnify the Lord for these privileges.”

7. What ‘Abdu’l-Bahá Saw and Ddd on His Western Tour

O YE ILLUMINED FRIENDS OF ‘ABDU’L-BAHÁ:

“It is well-nigh three years since, like unto the wind I have been crossing vast deserts and like unto the nestless and shelterless bird, I have day and night been singing over mountains and shores. Now, in the middle of the ocean, I watched the crest of the furious tempest and while traveling I beheld the vastness and the immensity of the wilderness. One moment of rest I enjoyed not; one second of peace I sought not. Throughout many cities of the Occident I delivered the Glad-tidings of the appearance of the Sun of the Orient, in many churches I raised the cry of Ya Bahá’u’l-Abhá, and before innumerable audiences, with resonant voice gave the Gospel of the Kingdom.

“Praise be to God that the rays of the Sun of Reality are shining upon the East and the West, changing dark nights into luminous days. From every direction the cry of ‘Ya Bahá’u’l-Abhá’ is being heard and from every side the voice of ‘Oh my Lord the Supreme!’ has reached to the zenith of heaven....

“In short, after great difficulties, from the West I have returned to the East. I shall tarry in Egypt for a while so that I may gain physical strength and energy; perchance, God willing, I may render a service to the Threshold of God, and at the Court of the Beauty of Abhá, may be confirmed in Thralldom. {{p146}} If the believers of God loosen the tongue of teaching, in a short time, undoubtedly this world will become another world, the rays of the Most Great Luminary shall shine and its darkness be transformed into the illumination of the East and the West.”

1. Spiritual Sustenance Distribute in the Morning

His Holiness the Báb has said that every day before sunrise the spiritual sustenance of mankind is provided and distributed. Similarly, how appropriate it is to adore the beginning of every letter with the name of the Lord of mankind and with quotations from the Tablets revealed from the tongue of the Beloved! He thus writes to a Persian believer:

2. Spiritual Receptivity

“The Cloud of Providence hath poured down the rain of guidance upon the East and the West; the rays of the Sun of Reality has shone forth upon all the inhabitants of the world, but out of the brackish ground nothing will grow except thorns and thistles and the effulgences of the Orb of Truth do not penetrate through the black stone. Therefore, thank God that thy pure heart was the clear mirror reflecting the radiant rays of divine guidance, and that thy mind was fertile soil, because, through the downpour of the rain of Grace there have appeared the flowers, anemones of wisdom. Thank God for this Eminent Bounty, for verily thou art of those who have attained.”

3. ‘Abdu’l-Bahá Sang a New song in Every Garden

“Thy letter was received. {{p147}} Thou hast lamented and complained because it is some time since thou hast received any letter from ‘Abdu’l-Bahá. For forty years ‘Abdu’l-Bahá was kept in prison, but his infinite longing was to spread with a resonant voice the word of God throughout all countries and to unloosen his tongue in the exposition of Truth and in teaching the Cause. No sooner was he freed from prison, than he hastened to every clime and country. On every mountain he raised a cry of ‘He is God’ and in every city he spoke with public-spirited men. In every garden he sang a new melody, and like unto the bird of the morning raised the note of Ya Bahá El Abhá. In every meeting he elucidated the teachings of this divine Cause and while traveling through the Western countries he summoned all to the Kingdom of God. Under such circumstances, there was no time to write, and therefore correspondence was neglected.”

4. The Muḥammadan Month of Fasting

This is the first of the month of Ramaḍán — the month of Muḥammadan fasting. The Beloved made this announcement this morning as he entered the house. He sat down on the veranda and spoke on the subject of fasting. The Muḥammadans are very strict about it. One must eat, drink and smoke nothing from sunrise until sunset. As the eastern calendar is lunar, the month of fasting falls in different seasons; as a result of this arrangement it is in August this year — a month extremely hot with days exceptionally long. The laborers and farmers suffer very much from thirst during the day, but they do not break the laws of their religion. If by mere chance a Muḥammadan is seen eating in the street, he is punished by the Shaykh. {{p148}} In the evening all good Muḥammadans go to the Mosque to pray, and strictly obey all the ceremonials connected with this holy month. Every person — whether he understands it or not — should read the Qur’án, at least once, from cover to cover. This act is most meritorious.

The Master told Mírzá ‘Alí-Akbar to go to Alexandria and bring our two new pilgrims back to live with us. They had taken rooms in a native hotel somewhere down town. By three o’clock they were here full of joy and delight because they were going to be near the Beloved and see him every day.

5. What Is the Real Object of the Fast?

In the afternoon the Master came and as there were present several Arabian believers, he talked in Arabic on physical and spiritual fasting. Real fasting is to abstain from carnal desires and the promptings of ego. Fasting means to purify the heart from every stain of egotism, replacing material tendencies with spiritual susceptibilities, refining the moral fibre, intensifying the Fire of the Love of God, cleansing the self from the dross of haughtiness, teaching humility and dispelling the darkness of ignorance.

After the Beloved left, the audience scattered, and went out for a brief stroll. In a few minutes I found myself in the Hotel Plaisance talking with Mr. Atwood, Miss Hiscock and a very charming Turkish lady. {{p149}} She spoke French and English quite well besides three or four other languages.

I will conclude today by quoting the translation of another Tablet.

6. ‘Abdu’l-Bahá Writes to an Indian Prince

“THROUGH REV. PROMOTHO LOLL SEN “TO HIS HIGHNESS PRINCE MAHARAJ COUCH BAHÁ, “(Upon him be greeting and praise)

“He is God!

“O HAPPY STARRED AND NOBLE PRINCE:

“The gift you have forwarded was very acceptable because it was from your Highness: this exiled one over mountain and plain, this wanderer over land and sea took that cup as a symbol, signifying: ‘I am thirsty for the Water of Reality and longing for intoxication with the Wine of Knowledge.’

“Therefore I upraised the hand of supplication toward the Kingdom of the Incomparable One, praying: — O Thou Almighty, Deign to fill this Divine Cup with the Wine of Thy Love and let this golden goblet overflow with the nectar of Thy Grace; {{p150}} so that friends and strangers may become exhilarated with the wine of ‘Am I not your lord?’ and shareless ones become the adorers of the Ideal Wine.

“In short I offered the utmost prayer and supplication at the Threshold of the Possessor of Glory that your kind father the leader of the Worthies, the Glorious Amir, may be submerged in the Ocean of divine Grace, become intoxicated with the Wine of Celestial Bestowal and Favor, obtain the Peace of the spirit in the Rose-garden of the Merciful in the midst of the Paradise of Knowledge, and attain to the station of Transfiguration in the Delectable Heaven of God.

“May the almighty confer the happiness of both worlds upon thee, O happy starred Prince, grant eternal joy and felicity never-ending, suffer thee to become the manifestation of confirmation and to inspire thee under all circumstances with a new spirit!

“This is the prayer of this wanderer in behalf of that leader of freedman.

“Upon thee be greeting and praise!

(Signed) “‘ABDU’L-BAHÁ ‘ABBÁS”

1. The Blessings of the Universal Mind

Praise be to God that the world has heard the message of Reality, listened to the clarion call of Wisdom, quaffed the Water of Eternal Life, hastened toward the arena of Knowledge, embraced the Beloved of Truth, has been quickened by the breaths of the Holy Spirit, stirred by the Glad-Tidings of the Lord of Hosts and rejoiced by the wonderful words of God! May the hearts become as fountains from which the limpid water of divine spirit ever flow! May the minds become as the rose-gardens wherein the flowers of idealism grow and develop! May the spirits become as mines out of which nuggets of love and jewels of friendship are produced! This is the world's heavenly heritage. The inner world, like a beautiful meadow, is carpeted with hyacinths of affection, violets of harmony, anemones of immortal ideals, and lilies of spiritual susceptibilities. {{p151}} No one should hide these tender flowers under a glass. Let the light shine. Sing like unto a nightingale. Gird up the loin of endeavor. Soar heavenward. Step into the arena of activity. diffuse the radiancy of the celestial light. Leap forward. Raise the ringing watchword of Peace and Brotherhood. Do not tarry. Travel on and on in the mystic realms of Guidance. Your helper is God. Your inspirer is the Holy Spirit. Your co-workers are the angels of the Supreme Concourse. Ye have received the Truth, and the Truth hath made you free. What greater blessing is there than this? This is Eternal Glory and everlasting Life.

In order to teach the Cause of Peace, every person must become a clear channel for the expression of God and the manifestation of the attributes of God. We are all His servants, and before His throne we stand with the utmost humility. We must increase our effort, strive in the pathway of righteousness, illumine the world of humanity with the rays of brotherhood and interracial feeling and upraise the standard of the solidarity of mankind. This is the world's work! This is the task set for man! With the assistance of God and the cooperation of all public-spirited leaders we will not fail.

2. ‘Abdu’l-Bahá and the Family Prayer in the Morning

Hardly were we out of our beds when Khusraw rang the bell. Hájí Siyyid Javád and myself were summoned by the Beloved. When we arrived at the door of his apartment, Khusraw made a sign to wait. The door was shut and we could see nothing. In a moment I heard a sweet voice of a woman. Oh! She was chanting a prayer and I was all attention. I knew what it was. Like a flash it dawned upon me. {{p152}} It was the family morning prayer offered at the Threshold of Bahá'u'lláh and presided over by the Center of His Covenant. As I waited there I pictured in my mind a spiritual society, when every home would be a temple of God like unto the home of the Beloved. From these hearths every morning chants of thanksgiving and praise would be sent up to heaven from the lips of those whose hearts were stirred by the spiritual Fragrance, whose spirits were treasuries of the mysteries of God and whose consciences reflect the longing and aspirations of the angels!

The chant continued soaring higher and higher, carrying me away to a glorious world! I thought I was listening to the delectable voices of the Seraphim and Cherubim. Then it ended in a hush of silence, leaving behind the delicate hues and perfumes of the world of God and filling the void with a rare atmosphere of spirituality!

3. ‘Abdu’l-Bahá and Shoghi Effendi

Now the door opened and we were bidden to the Master’s writing room. As we sat there we heard Shoghi Effendi chanting with pathos and sweetness. As he ended the prayer suddenly I heard the voice of the Master. I was on my feet. What marvelous depth of feeling! It causes the stones to dance with joy! He was teaching Shoghi Effendi how to chant and how to control his voice under various expressions.

What a heavenly Feast I have had this morning! Manna from on high! What a great privilege to have even a mental glimpse of this Holy Shrine of the Lord of Mankind where every morning, prayers are proffered for the general welfare of all the human race; {{p153}} such prayers as will effect the very foundations of the social consciousness of every man and woman in this world.

Then the Master entered our room and said that, inasmuch as it was the month of Ramaḍán, he couldn’t serve us tea. He had prepared many envelopes containing Tablets to be mailed and he asked Ḥájí Siyyid Javád to take them to Port Sa’íd and there to be registered.

4. The Persians Delighted with the Pictures in

American Magazines

While I was in ‘Abdu’l-Bahá’s presence the mail man brought several letters from America and four big packages of the Magazines, “Travel,” kindly sent by Mr. Roy C. Wilhelm. These magazines delighted many. Already several copies are with Shoghi Effendi, some of them are with Mr. Atwood. Everybody is interested in the pictures. I would appreciate it if the friends could send every month some of the current magazines and papers. They would delight the hearts of many friends, especially the illustrated ones.

5. Universal Homage Paid to ‘Abdu’l-Bahá

In the afternoon I called on the Master. He was sitting on the balcony. He asked me about the news from America. I read him the letters just received from Miss Thompson, Mrs. Ralston, Miss H. Magee, Mrs. Fraser, and others.

After half an hour’s talk about the Cause in America he left the house and I accompanied him. He is shown marked respect by everyone as he walks in the streets. The policeman standing at the corner salutes him, the man sitting on the ground gets up as though compelled to do so by a superior force. {{p154}} He walked toward our house and surprised everyone by his sudden appearance. For nearly an hour he sat on the veranda watching the slow stream of life passing by. Now and then he spoke in monosyllables and then he took his customary walk.

6. Life during the Month of Muḥammadan Fast

During the days of Ramaḍán life is very interesting just before and after sunset. Before sunset, because everybody is exhausted with hunger and thirst; then restaurants are filled by the people awaiting anxiously the setting of the sun, and the streets present a hustling, motley crowd; after sunset, because once they have satisfied their appetites they go out to the cafes, amusement places and theaters.

7. How Eager Are the Bahá'ís of Persia for Martyrdom

Mírzá Abu'l-Faḍl came in the evening, and told us a few incidents out of the rich treasury of his life. When he was imprisoned in Tīhrán with 18 others, there was an old man among them by the name of Mírzá Muḥammad Riḍá. He was well known for three rare qualities: firmness, fearlessness and truthfulness. He defied the prison authorities by his courage; awed the enemies by his firmness and set at naught the intrigues of the foes through his truthfulness.

“Whenever,” Mírzá Abu'l-Faḍl said, “Ḥájíbu'd-Dawlih, one of the Ministers of the Court, came to the prison to investigate the condition of some one, Mírzá Muḥammad Riḍá would approach him and speak to him with great earnestness. Finally Ḥájíbu'd-Dawlih would turn to him with a despairing look saying, ‘Sir! This is impossible! I cannot do it. Why did you not ask the Prince Ná'ibu's-Sulṭáníh about this? He can do it. {{p155}} He has the authority.’ At last one day we asked him ‘What is this which you talk about with Ḥájíbu'd-Dawlih, whenever he comes to the prison, and why does he refuse you so emphatically?’ He said: ‘I ask and plead with him to sentence me to death. I tell him: I am an old man, I am of no good to the world. I want to bathe my body in blood for the sake of Bahá'u'lláh. Please, please, I beg you to do something for me. Is this too much of a favor that I ask of you? Are you not kind enough to fulfill this last wish of an old man? Praise be to God that you are an influential person. But he does not listen to me and answers me loudly in the manner you have all heard.’”

8. ‘Abdu'l-Bahá Confounds the Mullás in the Mosque

Mírzá Abu'l-Faḍl was giving us a graphic description of another prison scene, and he had just reached its climax when the door opened and the Master entered. Apparently he felt well and in a happy mood. He told us that last Friday he had gone to the Mosque of Sidi Jabar. There were many Mullás present. One of them was chanting verses of the Qur'án, while another was addressing the people. ‘Abdu’l-Bahá could hear neither, so he addressed the one who was speaking, “What art thou doing? Hast thou not heard the saying of Muḥammad, that when the Qur’án is read everyone must listen?” The man turned red and was ashamed and all the other Mullás looked at each other wonderingly.

9. Story of Mullá Sádiq, the Fanatical Shaykh

Then he related another story: During the early years of his arrival in ‘Akká, he was one night invited to a feast, where, for the edification of the guests, the Qur’án was being chanted by a very good singer. {{p156}} The Muḥammadans having forgotten their reverence for Holy things, and overlooking the injunction of Muḥammad, smoked and talked on such occasions, and when ‘Abdu’l-Bahá arrived, there was a hubbub of confusion, people chatting, smoking and drinking coffee and tea; while in a corner of the room two singers chanted the Qur’án with great feeling. ‘Abdu’l-Bahá looked about and saw beside him a very fanatical shaykh, Mullá Sádiq. ‘Abdu’l-Bahá asked him whether this was fitting and if, according to the text of the Qur’án these people should not listen quietly. He answered: “Yes.” “Then enjoin the law of God upon them,” ‘Abdu’l-Bahá told him. Mullá Sádiq arose from his seat: “Be silent,” he hurled at them with tremendous fury, and struck at their water-pipes, glasses and cups, breaking them all in his religious zeal. He then harangued them for their lack of religious spirit, their forgetfulness of the Laws of God, and their awful disobedience. The people were astonished and thought that he had become a lunatic; but from that time on, at all the feasts, nothing was served and everybody listened reverently while the Qur’án was chanted.

Although Mullá Sádiq considered the Bahá’ís infidels, yet he used to come every night to ‘Abdu’l-Bahá’s house; staying for supper and talking until midnight. He was so fanatical that if any person deviated one hair’s breadth from the prescribed formulas of the religion, he would consider him an atheist.

10. ‘Abdu’l-Bahá’s Love-pat

The Beloved continued talking and relating several amusing stories, which made us laugh. When he had finished he told us that his intention had been to entertain us. Then he arose to leave and as he passed me he looked at me with twinkling eyes — and raising his hand brought it down on my left cheek. {{p157}} It was a hard blow and everybody enjoyed it, especially myself. It has been some time since I had received a “love-pat” and I was thinking that I was somewhat neglected. A “love-pat” from the Master is worth all the kindnesses of all the people of the world.

RAMLEH, EGYPT, AUGUST 8, 1913.

1. ‘Abdu’l-Bahá Does Not Rest

Let me share with you another translation of the words of the Beloved revealed to the Persians: —

“It has been some time since ‘Abdu’l-Bahá has been deprived of correspondence, because he has been engaged in the delivery of public addresses. He has been speaking constantly. He has been crying out at every morn and shunning rest at every eve. On many a night and day he has been giving the Glad-Tidings of the appearance of the Kingdom of Mystery in the temples of both friends and strangers. This delay in correspondence comes from the lack of time and opportunity; otherwise you are always before his sight. {{p158}} It is hoped from the Favor of the Self-Subsistent Lord that your hearts may be flooded with a new effulgence — that is, that you may obtain a new joy and ecstasy and leap high like an inextinguishable flame — so that the light of your love may illumine all regions.”

2. The Significance of Spiritual Meetings

“The meetings that thou art holding in thy house are the means of strengthening the hearts of the spiritual ones, of guiding the seekers and of awakening the sleepy ones. These meetings are illumined with the splendor of divine Providence, and like unto the rose-garden of Wisdom they are adorned with the flowers of significances and Ideals. I hope that they will make progress.”

3. The World Is a Farm and the People are Farmers

“O thou who are attracted by the Fragrances of God! Every person is a farmer. One sows the seeds of Industry; another scatters the acorns of commerce, and a third farms politics. All various agricultural pursuits culminate in harvests, yet these do not enjoy the blessings of the eternal springtime, neither do they yield inexhaustible benefits. but as the friends of God are scattering seeds in the farms of reality, they will gain an increasing blessing and will collect throughout centuries and cycles thousands of harvests. Now praise be to God that thou art sowing seeds in the ground of Truth and art the farmer of His Highness the Peerless One.”

4. Spiritual Guidance

“Thank God that a light of guidance has shone in the court of thy heart and soul! Thirsty wert thou, thou didst attain to the fountain of eternal life. {{p159}} Sick wert thou, thou didst receive the Most Great Antidote of the Glorious Lord.”

5. Be Seekers of Truth

“Your letter was received. I supplicated and entreated at the Threshold of the Kingdom of Abhá to Confer upon you a new Grace and Bounty; so that those souls may ever walk in the straight Path, move in the Ancient Highway of the Lord and be seekers of Truth and speakers of Truth. This is the utmost hope of ‘Abdu’l-Bahá.”

6. Divine Confirmations

“O thou servant at the Threshold of the Blessed Perfection! Offer thou glorification unto the Lord because the radiant morn of the most great Guidance has appeared upon the dawning-places of the heart and spirit the musk-diffusing fragrance of the garden of realities has reached the nostrils; the divine Confirmations have rent the veils asunder; the sight and the insight have beheld the most glorious signs; the dove of the Love of God has returned to the meadow of the Covenant and the moth of attraction has circled around the divine Lamp.

7. Selfish People Are Tied with Iron Bands

Our home was illumined very early this morning by the presence of the Beloved. He walked in with confident strides. His face was beaming with joy. health. And the sun of his countenance irradiated happiness, so we in turn were made glad for our peaceful life depends upon his good health.

As he sat upon a chair he told us that he had slept soundly the last two nights, and today felt very well. I could see the effect on his animated face. It had not any of the former weariness. Then he spoke about fasting and of how it is necessary for the rich to think {{p160}} of the poor during the month of Ramaḍán. Those souls who prefer themselves to others are tied with selfish iron bands, while those who prefer others to themselves are the benefactors of the human race. Such was the conduct and the life of Bahá’u’lláh.

8. How ‘Abdu’l-Bahá Built a Bath for Bahá’u’lláh

The name of Bahá’u’lláh brought to his mind the following incident: —

In the military barracks of ‘Akká, there was a small primitive bath which the Blessed Perfection used occasionally. After their departure from this place ‘Abdu’l-Bahá rented a little house in the town. This house consisted of two stories, two rooms being on the lower floor and four on the upper, all of very modest proportions. Now the family was numerous, and ‘Abdu’l-Bahá wondered how all those souls could be accommodated in this small house. Finally thirteen of them agreed to occupy one room, and here they lived and slept and worked together. They kept this house for well-nigh twenty years. It so happened that, although it was small, it yet contained a primitive bath, and the Blessed Perfection could use it as often as he wished. At the end of twenty years, ‘Abdu’l-Bahá rented a much larger house, but it had no bath. He went to Bahá'u'lláh and asked permission to build one. The more he begged, the more definitely was he refused. 'Abdu'l-Bahá stated, that a bath could be built for only fifty pounds, but Bahá'u'lláh did not give his consent.

After a month had passed he went to an Arab friend and borrowed from him 250 pounds at two per cent. This money he took to a merchant who was in former times a grain-dealer, but who was now out of work. {{p161}} He told him something to this effect:

“We will enter into a partnership; the capital will be from me, the labor from you. With this fund you will deal in grain for four months. After paying off all the expenses of rent, etc., and receiving your monthly salary, we will divide the profit; one-third for you and two-thirds for me.”

This agreement was made and the merchant started the business. After four months they cleared their accounts. The debt was paid back with its two per cent interest; the merchant received his one-third profit; all the other expenses were defrayed, and 30 pounds left in the balance for 'Abdu'l-Bahá. With that sum he built a bath in the house of Bahá'u'lláh. This house is kept intact to the present day.

9. Spiritual Humility and the Story of the King and the Arab

Then the conversation turned upon another subject — how outward circumstances, such as wealth, honor, titles and even spiritual gifts made some people proud.

Concerning this the Master told a story:

It is said that at one time a king went traveling incognito. He put on a humble suit of clothes and started on his adventures. After a few days journey, during which he had lost his way in the scorching desert, he finally reached the tent of an Arab. The Arab, finding the man exhausted from heat and hunger, dragged him to the shade. When the king was revived, he asked the Arab what he had to eat and drink. “I have a goat-skin of wine and a little goat,” the Arab answered. “Very well, bring the wine and let the goat be cooked.” The wine was brought. When the king had drunk one cup, he looked at the Arab and said: “Do you know who I am?” {{p162}} “No.” “I am a soldier in the king’s army.” The Arab was glad to entertain a brave man.

He drank another cup. “Do you know who I am?” “Who are you?” “I am a Minister of the King’s Council Chamber.” “I am delighted to receive such a distinguished statesman.” A third cup was taken. “Do you know who I am?” “Well?” “I am the King himself.” The Arab could stand it no longer. He arose from his place and took away the goat-skin of wine. “Why do you do this?” the guest asked, astonished. “Because I believe that if you drink another cup, you will declare yourself to be the prophet of God, and a fifth one may raise you to the station of God himself; so it is better for you to cool down a little.”

10. ‘Abdu’l-Bahá’s Generosity

At five o’clock ‘Abdu’l-Bahá returned with Mírzá ‘Alí Akbar, and went out to call on Mírzá Abu’l-Faḍl. He came back after two hours and complained of fatigue, because he had been speaking with several Arabs who had made an appointment to see him. He said, that from morning until this very moment beggars of all nationalities and religions had knocked at his door, and that even now one was waiting outside and he gave me some money for him.

His munificence extends to all people. Freely he gives without distinction for race or color. Our duty in life is to follow his glorious example, in taking care of the poor in time of need, and in practicing charity and kindness. I do not see or hear what he does and says during the day, but I know that every minute is spent in the service of others.

How to make the world better, how to improve the conditions of mankind, how to raise the standard of moral consciousness and how to make the hearts more glad is his hourly preoccupation. {p163} Before leaving he told us that the duty of each believer is to be the servant of the other and to attend to his brother’s wants. He considered himself the servant of all the friends of God.

1. God’s Favors Measureless

This morning I was musing upon the events of the past two years, the extraordinary occurrences concerning the Cause, the historic tour of ‘Abdu’l-Bahá through the United States and Europe and the contrast of our present quiet stay in Ramleh. “What does the future hold for us?” I asked subconsciously. Bahá’u’lláh has caused the descent of divine blessings; he has spread before us a heavenly Table bearing many kinds of spiritual food, he has left amongst us his son, ‘Abdu’l-Bahá — to interpret his words and to spread his Universal Message and he has summoned into existence glorious souls all over the world to promulgate His principles. We must let the lamp of hope burn, we must free ourselves from regrets or pessimism. If we fall, we must immediately rise and push forward. The same God who has assisted others will come to our help.

2. Spiritual Relationship

‘Abdu’l-Bahá visited us this afternoon and we gathered about him like moths around a candle. Little by little the friends arrived. Then an American Bahá’í came with an Arabian believer — a tall young man. {p164} The Master spoke with them on the spiritual union of hearts, irrespective of color and nationality.

This spiritual union is one of the wonders of the age, than an oriental and occidental can meet on common ground. Although there exists between them no racial, no patriotic, no political relationship, yet they are able to enjoy a friendship as though they belong to the same race. This is a spiritual bond. Often two brothers reared in the same household are antagonistic, but on this divine plane others who have no material connections can in reality be more sympathetic than if they were blood relations. Happy are you that you have drunk from this spiritual fountain and have attained to the reality of existence.

Then he spoke about his western trip, mentioning the names of the various cities of America, and of how his time was spent in those places. Although often he had not felt well, he had been happy because he could teach the Cause and spread the Glad-Tidings.

3. A Walk through the Streets and the Radiance of the Star of Hope

At sunset he ordered tea and in the calm atmosphere of a lovely eastern evening, we felt his power more than ever. He is the King of our hearts and spirits and our love for him is increasing daily. He left very quietly, followed by the Arab believer. I felt a new ray of hope dawning upon the horizon of my soul. After dinner I wished to be alone so that I might contemplate the divine sweetness of the Beloved. Walking through the streets I looked up and millions of stars were shining in their accustomed glory. The night was beautiful. {p165} The Eastern sky was radiant. The stars were the shining lamps of God. At last I sat down on a broken wall and I looked about me. Thinking upon the past, I became confident for the future. God in his bounty has guided the ship of my destiny so far and he will continue to do the same. I returned with a light step. On my way back I met three other believers. They are sincere in their strivings and longing to be of more useful service. How confident they were! How simple! how spiritual! how glorious their faith! they inspired me with a greater faith. In the darkness there arose a light, full of radiance and beauty. I entered the house very happy. My heart was singing. The future was in the hands of God.

1. The Beauty and Charm of the Palaces of Ramleh

From my room I see the great clock of the New Victoria Hotel, wherein the Beloved stayed from time to time. The manager with much pride shows to the guests the various rooms occupied by the Master. He knows something about the Cause, and recognizes the great honor and blessing bestowed upon him and his hotel. When the Master was here the last time, he gave two large feasts just before his departure for America. There are a few other hotels and houses in which the Beloved has lived periodically. The homes of the Páshás are really wonderful specimens of the best Renaissance architecture. {{p166}} They very much resemble the houses and villas I have seen at Nice. Wonderful palaces, furnished with a taste truly magnificent, and are enclosed within gardens, the beauty and charm of which rival the fairy-lands of the artists and the poets. These “villas” are surrounded by walls from two to four yards high. The principal avenues are macadamized and clean and the narrow streets are also very much like the garden paths of Nice. As one walks through them the perfume of the flowers is inhaled, the branches of the trees overhanging the walls give a cool, inviting shade and the climbing vines add to the charming verdancy. A man passing through the streets and observing the houses, sees all the windows tightly shut. The stranger may think that they are not inhabited, but on inquiring about this custom of closing the windows, he is politely informed that as the owner is Muḥammadan, the blinds are drawn, so that no foreign eyes may gaze upon the dark beauties of the women.

2. The Egyptian Páshás are Proud of ‘Abdu’l-Bahá and

His Philosophy of Religion

Several of the houses of these Páshás are honored by the presence of the Master, for they admire him and appreciate his teachings of tolerance and broad-mindedness. It is very strange that although these men do not believe in the Cause, yet they boast before strangers about the existence of ‘Abdu’l-Bahá.

A very prominent Páshá, who was an admirer of ‘Abdu’l-Bahá, received from time to time some English periodicals with accounts of the Bahá’í movements, among them was the Christian Commonwealth which contained an article explaining the Cause.

After showing the article to a visiting Englishman, the Páshá said: —

“We have produced in the Orient a man such as ‘Abbás Effendi, who alone visited Europe and America, and who through the sheer force of his personality and the wonderful soundness and brilliancy of his philosophy, captivated the pulpits and platforms, revolutionized the current of western thoughts, opened before your faces vistas of glorious ideals, and drew to his audiences thousands of men and women who were deeply attracted to his humane and divine wisdom, while the Press of the West from one end to another had but one tongue by which to praise his many virtues and to elucidate his system of religion and philosophy. {{p167}} Yes, we are proud of him. We honor him because he comes from the heart of the Orient. He represents us, he utters our ideals and longings. You have never sent us a man who could travel in the Orient and deliver lectures as ‘Abbás Effendi has done in the West.”

Thus these people are spreading the principles in a most effective manner, because they are men of great influence, although not “believers” in the Bahá’í Movement.

3. A Call from ‘Abdu’l-Bahá and His Encouragement

This morning the Master did not come to our house but passed by, asking for Mírzá ‘Alí-Akbar. During the day he came in two or three times, but for only a few minutes. His health has improved much. He seems very busy, for he is out often, paying visits to this or that person.

In the morning I was told many interesting stories of how certain people had become Bahá’ís and the manner in which some of the believers taught. {{p168}} These stories are really worth recording, for they illustrate the peculiar disposition of a people who may be instructed by a line quoted at the right time, but refuse to listen to all kinds of logical arguments.

In the evening the Beloved came with a number of friends, tea was prepared according to his directions and served by himself. He stayed for half an hour, speaking now and then about the Cause and encouraging the Pilgrims to teach when they are back again among their associates and relatives.

1. A Practical Lesson in Cleanliness

Today I played the part of house-cleaner and cook. I spent most of my time in the kitchen cleaning the dishes, washing the utensils, scrubbing the floor and dusting the ceiling and the cupboard. It was an object lesson to our cook, who does not know the simple ways of cleanliness. When I left the kitchen all the Persians came in and admired the spotlessness of everything. The cook was most willing to learn, but there had been no one who would take a day off to demonstrate a method of tidiness to him

My parents did not teach me any of these things; in fact did not know them, was the way he explained this lack of knowledge.

Most of the simple, loving folks here have plenty of religion. They are honest, truthful, hospitable, but they lack the knowledge of hygiene and sanitation. {{p169}} Their children are allowed to remain dirty; in many cases they do not dress them well for fear of bringing them to notice and of possibly attracting the “Evil Eye.” Woe betide anyone if he praises or admires the beauty of the child of a Muḥammadan! What these people need is a practical knowledge and the inculcation of sanitary laws. Once they learn these, they will forget their superstitions; the outlook of their cramped lives will be expanded, the light of intelligence will shine, and the beauty of holiness appear. The most important thing for them is the supreme knowledge of cleanliness which is next to godliness. The Bahá’í Revelation is in inculcating this lesson, and they are learning as fast as opportunity is offered to them. Bahá'u'lláh has said that cleanliness is the perfume of paradise!

2. The Story of the Dervish and his Resignation

While I was busy with my house-cleaning, the Master was dictating Tablets for the Oriental believers. In the morning he came to see the pilgrims, but most of them were not yet up. However, within a few minutes they were in his presence. He asked the cook what he was going to prepare for us. The cook did not know and 'Abdu'l-Bahá demanded from one after the other what they liked, and finally the decision was made. Then the Master told us the story of a Dervish, as follows: When Bahá'u'lláh with his family were leaving Baghdád, a Dervish begged 'Abdu'l-Bahá's permission to join the party. He was told that the trip would be most difficult, but the Dervish was willing to accept all manner of hardships so he traveled with the party as far as Constantinople. Then when they left for Adrianople, he stayed behind but joined them later, for having become accustomed to associate with the Bahá'ís, he could not live without them. {{p170}} In Adrianople, he rented a room in an adjoining Mosque with another friend, and for some time they lived together peacefully. One day the Dervish came to Bahá'u'lláh, saying: "My friend attacked me this morning and gave me a sound beating, but I said nothing. I was in a state of utmost resignation. Then after half an hour he returned, kissed my hands and said: 'Verily, you have attained the stage of great merit, you are now a saint.'" Bahá'u'lláh, listening with interest to this story, said laughingly: "if he beats you another time and you demonstrate such resignation, he may believe that you have attained the station of Prophethood."

3. 'Abdu'l-Bahá Amid the Roses

In the afternoon, we met 'Abdu'l-Bahá in a garden walking among the lovely roses. He was talking on the mission of the Manifestation of God.

Before sunset we went to a Bahá'í meeting in the house of Khurasání. They expected 'Abdu'l-Bahá but he did not come, because he was very tired on account of the activities of the day. In the evening a number of Arabs called on him in his own house. One of them had composed an eloquent poem in his honor, and read it aloud. They stayed until twelve o'clock and went away impressed with his knowledge and wisdom.

4. 'Abdu'l-Bahá Raises the Call of the Kingdom.

In a Tablet revealed to the Persian believers he says:

"O YE FRIENDS OF 'ABDU'L-BAHÁ: — It is now three years that, like unto a nestles and shelterless bird, I have been wandering through mountains and plains and flying over the wilderness and Sahara. I rested not one moment, neither did I tarry long anywhere. Constantly was I moving and traveling. {{p171}} The cry of the Kingdom of Abhá was raised and the most great Glad-tidings penetrated throughout those vast and remote regions. The Flag of the Cause of God was unfurled over every hill and waved over every country. As I was occupied day and night, spreading the world-consuming call of the Cause, I failed to correspond with the friends of the heart and the soul, but as soon as I returned to the Orient, notwithstanding my indisposition, I immediately started to correspond. For the utmost desire of my heart and spirit is to remember the believers and to mention the names of the friends, especially those who have been at all times, the objects of tests and who are submerged in the sea of trials; notwithstanding this, with infinite firmness and steadfastness, you withstood the attack of the waves, underwent bravely violent storms, and guided the Ark to the shore of salvation. Therefore I am greatly pleased and most satisfied with the believers of Bushrúyyih, Kheir-ol-Gara and Fárán and all those of Khurasán. I hope that in the future their flame of enthusiasm, and the fire of their devotion may be enkindled more and more. Upon ye, and upon the maid-servants of the Merciful be Bahá'u'l-Abhá."

1. The Bounties of God

No matter where we go and what we do, the protecting hand of God overshadows us. {{p172}} We are tenderly and wistfully taken care of by Him who rules the world of Creation. In His mighty grasp He holds the scepter of Guidance and in His hand He carries the golden crown of the heavenly Glad-tidings. He illumines the hearts of the sincere ones with the light of Providence and summons all the nations to come under the Tent of His Mercy. He quickens the dead with the Breaths of the Holy Spirit and inspires hearts with divine Knowledge. He adorns the heavens with countless scintillating stars and commands the winds to blow from every direction. He causes the water to gush out of the adamant rock and irrigates the soil with the rain of Reality. He reveals unto man the mysteries of His Kingdom and spreads abroad the vision of Paradise! Glory be unto Him for this Manifest Bestowal. Thanks be unto Him for this Evident Grace! Praise be unto Him for this spiritual outpouring!

His true servants adore Him under all conditions and circumstances. They obey His will and follow His commandments. They lose the self and attain to the station of renunciation. The love of humanity flows through the stream of their lives. They become the spiritual springtimes which are followed by no autumns. They become the guardians of the rights of men. They are the angels of the Supreme Concourse, the fruitful trees of the Orchard of the Almighty and the singing nightingales of the meadow of Truth. It is the hope of every lover of humanity to become the center of these merciful qualities, to attract these praiseworthy attributes, to surround himself with these wonderful virtues and to reflect the rays of the sun of righteousness!

2. A Tablet for the Believers of Işfahán, Persia

A Tablet was revealed yesterday for the believers of Işfahán. {{p173}} Işfahán is my native home and I have a secret predilection for that place. The Tablet is through a Siyyid Asadu'lláh, a native of that city who is a fine young man amongst the present pilgrims. After having a most memorable visit of many days with the Blessed Master, he leaves tomorrow via Constantinople for his home. Here is the translation of the Tablets: —

O YE FRIENDS OF 'ABDU'L-BAHÁ! His Honor Siyyid Asadu'lláh arrived in Alexandria and a meeting was obtained. When he received permission for his departure he mentioned your names and asked for a Tablet. But 'Abdu'l-Bahá, like unto a bird who has been constantly flying for many days and nights is exhausted. He has not rested for one moment, and is in the utmost fatigue and weariness, to such an extent that he has not the endurance for writing even one word. Notwithstanding this, through the tremendous power of the Love of God and the rising of the waves of affection for the believers of God, I am thus engaged; so you may realize how this heart is attracted toward those blessed souls, and is the captive of the memory of the friends.

“In short, it has been some time since, like unto a Breeze wafting, I have been traveling in the regions of the West, but under all conditions and circumstances, I have remembered the friends of the East. At every moment, the spirit enjoyed a new exhilaration, and often I regretted the fact that I was far from the opportunity of association with those faithful believers. I did not choose any plane as my shelter. One night I was crossing a mountain, and spending the day on the plains and in the flowerbeds. At one time I was traveling in the midst of the great ocean and at another, landing on the shore of a continent. {{p174}} Day and night I raised my voice and cried out in the name of His Highness the Almighty! Now at last I have reached Alexandria and have looked in the faces of the Oriental believers. Praise be to God that I beheld such pilgrims who are in the utmost of supplication and adoration of God. I have also remembered you. It is hoped that the Sun of Reality may so shine upon the East that the West may become illumined with one of its effulgent rays and that the friends of Persia may be the means of the union of the hearts of the people of other countries and arise for the guidance of the inhabitants of the earth. Praise be to God that the confirmation of the Blessed Perfection descend incessantly like vernal showers and that merciful reinforcements are constantly bringing assistance. Therefore, O ye believers of God, avail yourselves of this opportunity, be ye engaged in the enlightenment of souls and think ye of the unlimited illumination of your hearts. Enlighten the East. Perfume the West and let nostrils inhale the Fragrances.

Upon ye be Bahá'u'l-Abhá.

3. Contrast between the Oriental and Occidental

Houses

This morning the Beloved paid us an early visit. He called each one by name and our hearts glowed with unchangeable love. He said to the pilgrims that it was the wonderful Love of God that gave him the impetus to write so many Tablets to the friends of Persia. Otherwise physically it would have been impossible. Then he said that he could not sleep last night, because he had been submerged in a sea of thought and reflection. He pointed out the contrast between the Oriental and Occidental houses by saying, that all the Oriental houses were enclosed within beautiful courts and gardens. {{p175}} If a person cannot sleep during the night, he can go out in the court, walk around quietly, commune with the stars, and pass the night in the open. But one cannot leave the Occidental houses except to go into the streets.

4. ‘Abdu’l-Bahá Gives Money to the Poor

In the afternoon he returned and asked for Mírzá Munír. While he was standing in front of the house, an Arab stopped and begged for money to feed his children, because he was a stranger in the city. I wondered whether he was telling the truth, but the Master gave him one Majídi, which is quite a sum in this part of the world. Then he went into the garden nearby. For more than one hour he sat silently, his eyes half-closed; only now and then opening them to look at the flowers, and thus he remained in the garden until sunset.

1. How ‘Abdu’l-Bahá Dictates Tablets to His Friends

in All Parts of the World

This morning I was called into the presence of the Beloved. He was very happy. He asked for the letters which have come from America and Europe. I returned home and brought a full-sized package. As soon as he started to dictate, and the words of wisdom like unto a sparkling stream flowed from his blessed mouth, he was a transfigured person. He sat immovable on the sofa, his eyes most of the time shut, but his heart a waving ocean of revelation. {{p176}} Now he revealed a Tablet to a believer in Constantinople, and again to a friend in Rangoon, India; Stuttgart and Switzerland, London and Paris, New York and Honolulu, Washington and Boston were represented. How wonderful and significant appears to me this golden net-work of spiritual correspondence, reaching to the different parts of the earth! This correspondence is not based upon any commercial or material scheme. It is the eternal plan of God, to diffuse the fragrance of the spiritual rose and scatter the rays of the Divine Sun! Every day an ideal Congress of religions and nations is held in the rather small room of the Beloved and he presides over the proceedings with a dignity and wisdom that is nothing short of miraculous. Some of the friends who became the recipients of the Tablets are as follows: Miss Beatrice Irwin, Miss Rhoda Nicols, Mrs. Isabel Fraser, Mr. Ch. Remey, Miss A. Boylin, Miss O. Schwartz, ‘Abbás Butt Ally, Mr. Ekstein, Madame d’Ange d’Astre, J. Miller, Dr. Skinner, J. Wieland, Miss Alma Knoblock, etc., etc. Toward the end, the Master was so moved that he got up from his seat and began to walk to and fro while continuing dictation. I tried to keep up with the rapidity of his uttered words. When I mentioned the name of one of the believers, his whole countenance changed, and he was very happy, saying that he loved him, because he was very sincere in the Cause. In the Tablet, addressed to this particular Bahá’í, he said:

“May His Holiness Bahá’u’lláh be thy Confirmer and Helper! May the Effulgence of the Sun of Reality be the light of thy path! May the sea of Divine Confirmation cast its waves over thee! May the cloud of Celestial Grace pour upon thee! May the Breeze of Providence be the cause of the fragrance of thy nostrils! May the treasury of the Kingdom be thy wealth! This is the prayer of ‘Abdu’l-Bahá in thy behalf.”

What a heavenly prayer! Then he revealed a Tablet, on the sinfulness of backbiting, evil-finding and gossip, which must be spread all over the Bahá’í world. {{p177}} Soaring again toward the spiritual realms of eloquence and pausing for a moment, he said, if these Tablets do not move and stir the hearts out of their sleep and do not spur them into activity, they are harder than stones; because in this condition of weakness, he was writing to them with such love and tenderness.

It was about 11:30 that I left his presence. In the afternoon he went to the rose-garden, and while sitting on the soft grass dictated many more Tablets to the Persian believers.

2. ‘Abdu’l-Bahá Speaks on Theosophy

In the evening he came to our house. He sat on the veranda. Many believers were gathered around him. He spoke on the doctrines of the Theosophists, of his interview with Mrs. A. Besant in London and with other prominent Theosophists in the West, about the story of the boy who is being educated in Oxford to become the manifestation of God, and a most instructive exposition of the principles of reincarnation which was greatly beneficial to all. Mírzá Abu’l-Faḍl said afterward:

“I have read many books on this subject, but have never seen anywhere, such clear and lucid explanations.”

RAMLEH, EGYPT, AUGUST 11, 1913.

1. The Spread of the Bahá'í Cause Similar to the Spreading of Early Christianity

Three of our pilgrims — one from Iṣfahán, another from Yazd and a third from 'Ishqabád, departed for their respective countries, carrying away the Glad-tidings of the Kingdom of Abhá. As they travel along, from country to country, before reaching their native lands, they will cheer many hearts, console many despondent spirits, teach many souls, and diffuse far and wide the fragrances of the Roses of Love and Affection. How exactly parallel is the promotion of this Movement to that of early Christianity! Whole-hearted, spiritual, zealous men and women, without the expectation of any salary, are spreading the Cause throughout all the countries of the world! Their only reward is the good-pleasure of the Lord of Mankind. They are affected neither by the praise nor the blame of the people! They work for the sake of God. They are always in good humor, ever teaching their fellowmen the ways of charity and freedom, amity and concord. 'Abdu'l-Bahá sent for the pilgrims early this morning, so that he might speak to them words of blessing and comfort. He praised the steadfastness of the Persian believers before the executioner's sword and under the severest trials; how they danced with joy when they were surrounded by persecution, and how they faced martyrdom with benign faith and smiling countenances!

2. 'Abdu'l-Bahá's Tablets Are the Never-fading Roses of the Kingdom of Abhá

Early in the morning I went down to the sea, and as I passed the house of the Beloved, I saw him walking in his room and talking to the Pilgrims who were about to leave. {{p179}} At four o'clock he sent for Mírzá Munír. In the rose-garden nearby many Tablets were dictated for the Eastern and Western Bahá'ís. These Tablets carry with themselves, not only the ideal fragrances of the paradise of Abhá, but the perfume of the flowers before his loving vision. They have a special charm and significance to me and as I translate or read them, the beautiful rose-garden with its luxuriant verdancy and fragrant flowers passes before my sight, and I look upon each one of these Tablets as a spiritual rose, never-fading, imperishable, sent as a divine gift to the friends of God. These roses of the Kingdom of Abhá are being scattered all over the earth, to perfume the nostrils of mankind, not only in these days, but throughout the coming generations. Just think of 'Abdu'l-Bahá, visualize him in your mind! He is walking among the flower-beds, pausing here to pick a rose, there a violet, inhaling them with the sweetness of his spirit and dictating words of knowledge and wisdom!

3. The Most Great Sin Is Backbiting

Herein I translate the important Tablet on backbiting. It is written to Doctor M. G. Skinner of Washington, D.C.

“He is God.

O THOU MY DOCTOR!

“Thy letter was received. Thou hast written regarding thy aims. How blessed are these aims! especially for the suppression of backbiting (gossip, fault-finding, etc). I hope that you may become confirmed therein; because the worst human quality and the most great sin is backbiting; {{p180}} most especially when it emanates from the tongues of the believers of God. If some means might be devised so that the doors of backbiting could be shut eternally and each one of the believers unsealed his tongue only for praise of the other, then the Teachings of His Holiness Bahá’u’lláh would be spread, hearts illuminated, spirits glorified and the human world attain to Everlasting Felicity.

“I hope that the believers of God will shun backbiting completely, (gossip-making and fault-finding) and each one praising the other cordially, and believing that backbiting is the cause of divine wrath; that if a person back-bites to the extent of one word he may become dishonored amongst all people: because the most hateful characteristic of man is fault-finding. One must expose the praiseworthy qualities of the souls and not their evil attributes. The friends must overlook each other’s shortcomings and speak only of their virtues — not of their faults.

“It is related that his Holiness Christ — may my life be a sacrifice to Him — one day accompanied by His Apostles, passed by the corpse of a dead animal. One of them remarked: ‘How putrid has become this animal!’ The other exclaimed: ‘How it is deformed!’ A third cried out: ‘What an odor! How cadaverous looking!’ But His Holiness Christ said: — ‘Look at its teeth! How white they are!’ Consider that He did not look at all for the defects of that animal, nay rather, He searched well until He found its beautiful white teeth. {{p181}} He observed the whiteness of the teeth only and entirely overlooked the deformity of its body, the dissolution of its organs and its evil odor!

“This should be the attribute of the children of the Kingdom!

“This should be the conduct and the manner of the real Bahá’ís!

“I hope that all the believers will attain to this lofty station.

Upon thee and upon them be Bahá’u’l-Abhá.

(Signed) ‘ABDU’L-BAHÁ ‘ABBÁS.

Toward evening the Beloved called at the apartment of Mírzá Abu’l-Faḍl and finding there a few young Arab students, spoke to them on general subjects. For the present Mírzá Abu’l-Faḍl is writing a book which when finished may be considered the chief work of his busy and eventful life.

RAMLEH, EGYPT, AUGUST 12, 1913.

1. The Bahá'ís Must Start a Forward Movement of

Teaching

This is the time when the believers must give attention to the spreading of the Teachings among those people who have not yet heard of this Cause. There should be a general forward movement in all the Bahá'í Assemblies. The supreme question of spreading the Lights of the Kingdom of Abhá must gain the upper hand. 'Abdu'l-Bahá desires to see the results of the work of the friends. We must recruit new soldiers for the Army of Abhá. The friends should avail themselves of this great opportunity. They should loosen the tongues of eloquence and invite all men to the heavenly Banquet. They should speak with fire and let the spirit of God inspire their hearts. 'Abdu'l-Bahá is crying: Teach, Speak, Spread the Message! Can we remain indifferent, speechless, and voiceless? No! a thousand times No! Why has God given us tongues? To speak about his Grace, to proclaim His Manifestation, to raise our voices in public meetings and gathering-places, to widen the circle of human thought and to teach His Principles.

Because 'Abdu'l-Bahá travelled throughout America and Europe, the zeal and enthusiasm of the Persian teachers have been increased a hundred times. We have seen him with our own eyes, heard his teachings with our own ears. The slogan of every Bahá'í must be: "Let us teach the people brotherhood and tolerance!"

2. Mrs. Getsinger and Her Forthcoming Trip to India

This morning the Beloved sent for me. He was feeling well. Mrs. Getsinger was called into the room and the plan of her journey to India discussed. Since her arrival she has been living with 'Abdu'l-Bahá's family which is presided over by the Greatest Holy Leaf! Then the Beloved dictated a few Tablets and cablegrams. In the afternoon he passed by the house, followed by Shoghi Effendi, and asked for Mírzá Munír. Many Tablets were revealed in the garden. No one is allowed to go there during these hours unless permitted by him. One of the Tablets is to Mr. Ekstein of Stuttgart. He is a fine Bahá'í and translated the words of the Master on many occasions during our trip to that city. The Tablet is as follows:

3. 'Abdu'l-Bahá Praises the German Bahá'ís in Tablet

"O THOU ILLUMINED MAN!

"The days that I spent with thee in Stuttgart I shall never forget, for at all times we associated with the Assistance of the Breaths of the Holy Spirit. {p183}

The power of Confirmation of His Holiness Bahá'u'lláh waved over those meetings, the lights of the kingdom shone forth from the horizon of Abhá, the invincible aids descended successively, the hearts were in the utmost joyousness, the spirits were exhilarated with the Divine Glad-tidings, and each one of the believers like unto a candle. On this account those days will never be forgotten

“Now it is my hope that after my departure; the Fire of the Love of God may flame forth with greater intensity, and that thou mayest sing a heavenly melody in every gathering.... I am most grateful and satisfied with the believers of Stuttgart. Truly I say that they are blessed souls. I will never forget them for one moment. The thought of them makes me very happy....”

1. The Story of the Man Who Made It Appear That He

Was a Bahá'í in 1830, while the Movement Began in 1844

This morning the Master came in to inquire about the health of his servants. We responded joyfully to his humorous questions about fasting, eating, etc. After walking a few minutes he sat down and corrected the Tablets which had been dictated during the last two days. {{p184}} Then, in connection with his remarks about those persons who profess to be Bahá'ís because they expect some material reward, he related the following story: —

“When the Bahá'ís were living in Baghdád there was a very prominent man who used often to come to see Bahá'u'lláh. He sat in His Presence with the greatest respect and listened attentively to his utterances. One day he tried to express his faith and belief in the Cause with all apparent sincerity and devotion. ‘Yes, my Lord!’ he concluded his talk, ‘I thoroughly believe in this Cause. In the year 1830, one of the great teachers of this Movement passed by our city. I met him and he talked with me for several days and his words convinced me of the validity of this revelation. From that time on I have been a believer.’” Then ‘Abdu'l-Bahá laughed, saying, that this man did not know that the movement was inaugurated only in 1844 and so, in order to convince Bahá'u'lláh of the genuineness of his belief, he had set the time of his acceptance 14 years before the declaration of the Báb!

2. The Story of the Fifteen Robbers of Baghdád

At another time there were fifteen robbers in Baghdád. They raided many houses during the nights. The government and police were unable to find their whereabouts. One night they robbed the stores of several Persian merchants and according to the law of capitulation, the Persian Consul did his best to catch them. This Consul was, however, very greedy and avaricious, and he thought more of his personal profit than of finding the robbers and of giving back to the merchants their stolen goods. One morning ‘Abdu'l-Bahá arose early and came out of the house. He saw in the court fifteen uncouth men waiting for him. {{p185}} Their spokesman told him that they were the band of robbers and that in order to escape the wrath of the Consul and his rapacity, they had come to take refuge under the shelter of Bahá'u'lláh and become Bahá'ís. 'Abdu'l-Bahá inquired about their whereabouts gave them a little advice, and sent them away. Then knowing that if the goods were taken by the Consul, they would never be returned to their owners, he sent one of the believers to the chief of the band, requiring him to return everything, which he did without any protest. The merchants in turn, received quietly all their stolen goods without the mediumship of the Consul. But when the Consul heard of 'Abdu'l-Bahá's part in this affair, he was very wroth, because the matter had been taken out of his jurisdiction. He had expected to fatten his pockets, and not succeeding in this he forever afterward tried to injure the Bahá'ís on every occasion.

Among these robbers there was one by the name of Haydar. As a punishment for his former raids, the government had cut off both his hands. He was, notwithstanding this handicap, the cleverest of them all. One morning, a Bahá'í came to 'Abdu'l-Bahá, saying that last night his money which was sewed in a special pocket of his vest had been stolen. He did not know how, and he wondered who had done the deed. 'Abdu'l-Bahá told him to go and bring his vest, and when it was before him, he observed that the pocket was not ripped with a knife, but chewed to pieces with teeth. He did not say anything, but sent for Haydar. When Haydar arrived, 'Abdu'l-Bahá told him: "Thou hast stolen the money of this poor man. Give it back to him." He tried to deny it, but 'Abdu'l-Bahá said: "Look at this vest! Thou hast chewed the pocket with thy teeth; it is not torn with a knife as any other man would have done were he in possession of his hands." No, he would not confess that he had stolen it. Then 'Abdu'l-Bahá ordered the bastinado to be brought in. {{p186}} After receiving a few lashes on the soles of his feet, he brought out of his pocket the small bundle of money and gave it to its owner. Then he was released.

3. 'Abdu'l-Bahá Talks about Helping the Poor and Needy

Before 'Abdu'l-Bahá's departure for America, the poor of all nationalities came to him, Persians and Turks, Arabs and Syrians, Greeks and Europeans, belonging to all religions and faiths. He gladly helped everyone without any distinction for race or color; but this year he could not give to the same extent, because the expenses of his travels in America and Europe had totaled a great sum. Even now he was under a heavy debt. However, although these difficulties existed, he would not send one man away without satisfying him and relieving his immediate needs. The worst condition in life is, when one is in urgent want of the means of livelihood. It is indeed very sad when a person begs for assistance to be unable to lighten his burden, or to contribute anything toward his relief.

4. The Story of the Muḥammadan Mullá and the Questioner

Then, changing the mode of his expression, he said:

“One day a layman went to a Mullá and asked several questions. The Mullá did not answer him. The man then said: “Have you not read in the Qur’án ‘You must not turn away a questioner?’” The Mullá in turn rejoined: — “Hast thou not also read the injunction in the same holy book, ‘Give thou not thy possessions to the fools.’ {{p187}} Now, my possessions are the ideals of knowledge and of Truth. I must protect them from intruders.”

Then he interpreted a dream of Mírzá ‘Alí-Akbar and left our precincts to attend to the many works of charity which call for his personal attention.

5. Arrival of a New Pilgrim

A new pilgrim arrived today from Beirut. He is an old Bahá’í and has a most interesting history. He has a limited education, but out of the clearness of his heart and the beauty of his faith, he interprets the verses of the Qur’án and can carry on most instructive discussions on spiritual subjects. The Master has expressed a wish that he should interpret in his presence, one Qur’anic verse every day.

6. With ‘Abdu’l-Bahá in the Rose-garden

When I returned from Alexandria in the afternoon I was told that the Master had asked for me. I went immediately to the garden. Seeing me standing near the door, he permitted me to enter and to take a seat. He was walking in the avenue fronting a most charming rose-garden, and dictating Tablets to Mírzá Munír. Shoghi Effendi was there also. For nearly three hours, the limpid stream of revelation flowed to irrigate the parched ground of hearts in distant climes! Just as the sun was sinking behind the western horizon, he revealed a most touching prayer. His voice was like the music of the spheres, now chanting in a clear rich voice, now in a low, sweet undertone. The effect made us forgetful of everything. The dusk of the evening, the murmur of the breeze through the roses and trees, the unbroken calmness of the atmosphere, the spiritual beauty of the presence of the Master, and then as we looked up, the twinkling stars all combined to weave around our hearts a garland of spiritual enchantment! {{p188}} We were in reality worshiping the glorious King of Kings in the holiest moment of our lives! The prayer was a supplication to the throne of the Almighty for the purification of souls and the spiritualization of hearts, — in order that men might sing the praises of their Lord, and cause the ringing cries of “Ya Bahá’u’l-Abhá” to ascend from their meeting places to the Supreme Concourse.

As we left the garden, I carried with me that wonderful prayer of the Beloved! On the wings of Light it had ascended to the throne of the Almighty and had been accepted by the Ruler of Mankind.

1. Bahá'í Schools in Káshán and Ṭíhrán and Their ### Examinations

Yesterday afternoon the Master read to us a letter received from Káshán, giving the details of the examinations of the children of the Bahá'í school in that city. He said that there were more than 700 persons present on Commencement Day and that all the pupils examined came out with flying colors. The school has become a credit to the Bahá'í community and every one speaks about it. Another letter from Ṭíhrán was given us by the Master to read. It contained a graphic description of the examinations at the school of Tarbíyát. {{p189}} Thirty students together with the President of the school and the teachers presented themselves before the Board of Examiners, appointed by the government in the College of Darel-Fonoun. Twenty-one out of the thirty pupils received their diplomas. This shows the earnestness of these students of Tarbíyát and their thorough education. After this examination which lasted several days, the Faculty of the school gave a public reception, to which more than 2000 persons were invited. The school of Tarbíyát is well known throughout Persia as a Bahá'í institution. It ranks high for its educational standard, and its Branch for the girls is headed by Miss Lillian Kappes. Notwithstanding many stumbling blocks in its path, it has been slowly, but surely forging ahead. Its progress and steady advancement is very dear and near to the heart of 'Abdu'l-Bahá. He hopes that it may become a wonderful influence for culture and refinement throughout Persia; and those friends in America who are assisting it are helping the Cause in an unqualified manner. Not only the American friends have realized the importance of this fact, but also the Indian Bahá'ís in their far-off country.

2. The Orient-Occident Unity

In a Tablet revealed two or three days ago to the believers of Rangoon 'Abdu'l-Bahá says:

“Whatever contribution you may send to the school of Tarbíyát is in the estimation of 'Abdu'l-Bahá, most acceptable. In this we observe the aim of God working for the advancement of public education in Persia. The Western friends have rendered a worthy service to the Tarbíyát School through the instrumentality of the Orient-Occident Unity in Washington. It is hoped that this channel of philanthropy will be continually widened, its various interests solidified, its annual scholarships kept up and increased in number, and its wholesome, disinterested influence expanded. {{p190}} Inasmuch as it is a universal undertaking, and every universal undertaking is divine in origin, its activities will continue. God has confirmed this work in many ways and will confirm those who are serving it.”

3. Talk of ‘Abdu’l-Bahá to the Writer

This morning the Beloved sent Bashír for me. When I stood in his presence, he spoke with great tenderness. In his face there was the serenity of the Kingdom, the newness of the spring and the freshness of roses. Through his tongue the angels of love and affection uttered words of truth and beauty. I could almost hear the aeolian harps playing infinite chords of sound and color. My spirit was transported into the seventh heaven of ecstasy!

He told me that he had allowed me to stay near him, so that he might educate me according to his own standards. As soon as he observed that I had attained to that standard, he would send me away. Daily I must prepare myself for the services of the Cause. I must live in such a manner that wherever I go, I may attract from the Kingdom of Abhá the divine Confirmations of the Blessed Perfection. Like unto the nightingale I must sing; like unto the bird I must soar; like unto the tree I must bear fruit; like unto the breeze I must waft over mountains and deserts, and similar unto the artist I must paint. Sanctified and holy I must occupy my time with the diffusion of the Lights of the Kingdom, and strive in the enkindlement of hearts and the regeneration of souls. I must be the servant of the Blessed Beauty and create a great reverberation in the spheres of thought and ideals. I must protect my eyes in order to behold His beauty, and my ears, so as to hear His music. {{p191}} ‘Abdu’l-Bahá’s wish for me is that I may be trained in accordance with the nature of his great teachings, and try to walk in the footsteps of his mission. Then when he sends me away, he may ever receive, glad news from me, so that he may declare that his son is the spreader of the Cause of His Holiness Bahá’u’lláh, the conqueror of the cities of the hearts, the torch-bearer in the highway of guidance, and a radiant star in the heaven of the Supreme Concourse. There is much work to be done. Gird up the loins of endeavor. Be on the alert. Be wakeful and pray. In a short while he shall send me away. The time is coming soon. Now daily he is watching me, just as the gardener watches the growth of the plant with solicitude and care. Like unto the magnet I must draw the Confirmations of the Kingdom of Abhá unto myself and be connected with the most Great Sea. I must not rest one moment. I must seek no comfort; yea, yea I must walk in his footsteps. He declared by the Blessed Beauty that there was no other ideal in his mind except the ideal of servitude at the Threshold of Bahá’u’lláh. I must live eternally in this condition. All other conditions are non-existent when compared with this supreme state — the guidance of God. I must spread this ideal among the people. Bahá’u’lláh alone is my faithful helper and supporter. The time for my service has come I must be confident and rest assured that the Blessed Perfection is with me....

These utterances of ‘Abdu’l-Bahá flashed through my mind and heart like so many rays of light. I was dazzled. >From the height of authority and inspiration he was speaking. I was moved to tears and my whole body was shaken to the core; then the Beloved, seeing my condition, changed his tone and spoke of other things. He dictated several Tablets for the believers of Persia. Then I left his presence. {{p192}} I walked as a man in a dream.

4. ‘Abdu’l-Bahá Praises Mrs. Goodall and Mrs. Getsinger

In the afternoon he passed by the house. He called me to go with him. In reply to a cablegram to Mrs. Goodall, he had received an answer which had made him very happy. He said that she was his beloved, heavenly daughter, that she was the daughter of Bahá’u’lláh, ever serving the Cause with a rare faithfulness and magnanimity. He also spoke very lovingly about Mrs. Getsinger.

He said that if Mrs. Getsinger conducts herself according to his instructions she shall move India and teach many souls. Her words are endowed with Spiritual efficacy. Severed from all else save God she must go to India, relying upon Bahá’u’lláh for Confirmation.

I gave the Master a list of the names of the Bahá’í Assemblies of America and Europe requesting him to reveal a Tablet for each assembly.

At the gate of the garden, two poor Persians were standing. He told me to bring them in, and finding that he did not have money, he borrowed two English pounds from a believer, and gave one to each.

5. Difference between ‘Abdu’l-Bahá and Others

In reference to a certain individual, he said, that the difference between himself and many men is that he wishes the welfare of the people for their own sakes, and without any ulterior motive. He desires that every one of the friends may shine like unto the sun. Others may love you, but it may be for some purpose. They may love you because they expect some day or some time, to receive a reward from you; but ‘Abdu’l-Bahá expects no reward. {{p193}} There are some people who are submerged in mud, yet they believe that they are world-illuminating suns. He wishes to free them from this water and clay, clear their wings from these impediments, but they cry out: “No, No, we are suns and stars; we are not in need of thy education,” Notwithstanding this, he must open the way for their freedom.

6. ‘Abdu’l-Bahá and Three Roses

Then he walked toward the end of the garden, and spoke with the gardener. The latter picked three roses, one white, one pink and one red, and offered them to the Master, a beautiful symbol to those who know the meaning and significance of each color. With these roses in his hand, he faced the setting sun, — the horizon was suffused with purple and crimson. For a long time he looked toward the West, as though expecting to see the sun rise from that direction. He was in deep thought. Without a word he left the garden and we followed him.

1. How Are You Today?

How are you today? Are you happy? Are you glad because you are living in this unparalleled cycle of the Lord? Are you facing the world and its puzzling problems this morning with courage and enthusiasm? Are you going to make another heart happy beside your own? Will you open wide the window of your soul? {{p194}} Is the meadow of your life verdant? Will you continue to be hopeful and optimistic? Will you dedicate yourself anew to the service of your fellow men? Are you feeling the whirl and stir of the new dawn? What will you do next to benefit mankind? What kind of thoughts and ideals will you hold in the secret chambers of your minds? Will they be exalted and lofty? Will they be humanitarian and disinterested? Let us on this day make a new resolution. Let us stand up and with a radiant faith proclaim the Cause of God.

2. Talk on Religion and Atheism by an Illiterate Bahá'í

This morning our new pilgrim — Hájí Muḥammad from Beirut — carried on a long discussion with me.

“Religion and atheism; faith and agnosticism are like two streams which have been flowing from unknown sources since the genesis of mankind. The former is sweet and the latter is bitter. When the stream of religion becomes active, the stream of atheism is dried up; therefore the fresh stream of faith must ever be strong and aromatic, in order to consume the bitter stream of unfaith which is tasteless. In this day Bahá'u'lláh from the inaccessible heights of the mountains of revelation has sent down upon the valley of humanity fresh and sweeping torrents of Faith to swell the volume of the stream of religion, and to irrigate the network of the brooks of materialism. Each Bahá'í is a new torrent and must roar with the power of reality. This stream of truth is greater than an ocean. It clears the path from all thorns and thistles and leaves behind it culture and civilization.”

To hear from the tongue of a simple man such a dissertation was an extraordinary thing.

3. ‘Abdu’l-Bahá Sends His Secretaries to Nouzha Park

At 3 o'clock Bashír told Mírzá Maḥmúd and me that according to the wish of ‘Abdu’l-Bahá, Shoghi Effendi would take us, this afternoon, to the famous Park of Alexandria. {{p195}} I welcomed this invitation, because I had been looking forward to the day when I could see this public garden. We took the electric car for Alexandria then another one through the city. The park has a fine gate, and as one enters, one finds shady, inviting avenues on every side. There are many animals, and a part of our time was spent in watching them. The flower-beds are laid out very artistically, there is a lake and many small reservoirs of water in which gold fish disport themselves with great abandon. Tall palm trees, at the top of which many clusters of green dates are hanging, lend a charming effect. It was about sunset when we left the Park, having thoroughly enjoyed the scenic beauty and large green vistas. We walked back half the way, and then took the car.

4. Attending a Bahá'í Meeting with New Pilgrims

When we returned, the Master was talking to the friends. He told us to go with the rest of the believers to the weekly meeting in Hájí Khurasání's house. There we saw three other pilgrims from Cairo, Mírzá Abú'l-Qásim, El Yahou and Mírzá Javád. {{p196}} Later on three other Arab believers arrived to meet the Master, and so the gathering was enlivened by the presence of these newcomers. Tea was served, prayers were chanted, and different ones spoke.

5. 'Abdu'l-Bahá and the Khedive of Egypt

During our absence in the afternoon, Osman Páshá, one of the Ministers of the Khedive, called on the Master conveying the loving greetings of the Ruler of Egypt and his longing to meet him. The date was then fixed for the afternoon of August 17th. His Highness the Khedive is now staying in Alexandria. His summer resort is near Ramleh. He lives in one of his palaces fronting the sea called Raas-ottin. The Khedive is friendly to the Bahá'í Movement and has special regard for the Master. It may be that history will record that he is one of the few Oriental Rulers who has received 'Abdu'l-Bahá with due honor.

6. A Sweet Tablet to the Little Darling Mona

While we were walking through the Garden of Nouzha, the Beloved was dictating beautiful Tablets to Mírzá Munír in another garden in Ramleh. One of these Tablets is to the little daughter of Mrs. Theodora de Bons whose husband is a dentist in Cairo. Now all three are on a vacation in Switzerland. Her name is Mona; so in this delightful manner the Master begins the Tablet:

O THOU MY DARLING LITTLE MONA! Thy tiny eloquent letter was received and thy sweet dear thoughts became known to me. {{p197}} Rest thou assured that I shall behold thy charming, lovely face, and from thy dainty mouth shall hear a wonderful melody and song in glorification, thanksgiving and praise of the Almighty!

“Upon thee be Bahá'u'l-Abhá.

(Signed) 'ABDU'L-BAHÁ 'ABBÁS.

RAMLEH, EGYPT, AUGUST 16, 1923.

1. ‘Abdu’l-Bahá Writes to a Hindu Bahá’í

May I be permitted to start the day’s record with a Tablet revealed to an Indian Bahá’í in Rangoon, who has translated into the Hindustani language the holy books of Íqán, Seven Valleys and Hidden Words? His name is ‘Abbás Ally Butt Cashmirce. Mr. Joseph Hannen, of Washington, D. C., had forwarded a copy of a letter written by him to the Master and the following is an answer to it: —

“He is God!

O THOU ‘ABBÁS OF ‘ABDU’L-BAHÁ!

O THOU NAMESAKE OF ‘ABDU’L-BAHÁ!

“The letter that thou didst write to Mr. Joseph Hannen was forwarded by that beloved person to me. Couldst thou realize what an ecstatic condition was obtained through the reading of thy letter, unquestionably thou wouldst become enkindled like unto a candle. Like unto the moth thou wouldst burn thy wings and even as the nightingale thou wouldst break forth into songs of thanksgiving and glorification.

“I love thee, and my heart and soul obtain the utmost joy and fragrance when I remember thee. {{p198}} I hope that thou wilt become assisted in rendering mighty service

“It is my desire that thou wilt become confirmed and aided in the diffusion of the Fragrance of God and in the spreading of the Tablets and Holy words.

“Convey to all the friends the wonderful, Abhá greetings”

“Upon Thee be Bahá’u’l-Abhá!

(Signed) ‘ABDU’L-BAHÁ ‘ABBÁS.”

2. El Yahou Arrives from Cairo

One of the pilgrims — El Yahou, an old man — had brought with him from Cairo a bouquet of fragrant white flowers and six white fezes for the Master. He stayed with us last night and kept our party in a good humor until very late. In the morning he wanted the flowers and fezes to be taken to the Master, which I did with great pleasure. I knocked at the door, and the beloved opened it. He took the bundle out of my hand and told me that he would send for him in a few minutes.

3. ‘Abdu’l-Bahá Dictates Tablets in the Garden

In the afternoon after four o’clock the Beloved could be seen in the garden of roses, preparing spiritual bouquets to be forwarded to the Believers of the East and the West. May these heavenly roses perfume the nostrils of all mankind! May they scatter their aroma to all parts of the globe! May they refine the atmosphere of materialism and unbelief! May they dispel the clouds of superstitions and doubts! May they adorn the chambers and halls of the spirits and souls!

4. Walks and Bahá'í Reminiscences

Every night after dinner Mírzá 'Alí-Akbar and I take a long walk as far as Sidi Jaber. {{p199}} Arriving there, we sit in front of a Turkish Cafe facing the broad avenue. round this cafe there are many palm trees. We watch the long streams of carriages and automobiles driving by from Ramleh to Alexandria, many of them carrying shrouded Turkish and Arab ladies of the social world going to theaters and places of amusement. Then we drink coffee, lemonade or sherbet, all for the sum of five cents. After half an hour's rest we walk back, talking now and then about America and the friends. These lovely walks in the moonlit Egyptian night are most attractive.

5. 'Abdu'l-Bahá Gives Persian Names to Two German

and Austrian Bahá'ís Traveling in Persia

A letter from Mashhad stated that two European believers have arrived in that city, a German and an Austrian. The Master in answer wrote: —

“Thou hast given the utmost praise to the two believers, German and Austrian. Go to Stuttgart and see with thine own eyes what is there! Those two blessed souls who are living in your midst are the samples of these other friends. Such persons have entered beneath the Tent of Providence in Germany, each one of whom sings like unto an ethereal Angel. Their hearts are attracted by the Love of God and their spirits rejoiced by the Glad-tidings of God! Exercise the utmost kindness and love toward these two holy souls who are with you Give the name of Ḥusayn to the German and Ḥasan to the Austrian. In these names there is a wisdom. {{p200}} You will become informed with their purport later.”

6. The Believers must Summon the People to the Kingdom

In another Tablet he says:

“All the believers of God and the maid-servants of the Merciful must summon the people to the Kingdom and be the cause of the guidance of the inhabitants of the world. They must live and conduct themselves in such a manner that in sanctity, prayerfulness and devotion they may become distinguished from the rest of mankind.”

7. Acquire Complete Concentration

To the two French Bahá'ís who bade us farewell in Marseilles, 'Abdu'l-Bahá writes: —

“Praise be to God that you have not forgotten the time of our meeting and that your hearts and souls are attracted to Bahá’u’lláh. I hope that you will obtain complete concentration of thought; so that you may have no idea and conception save Bahá’u’lláh. Then you shall make extraordinary progress, and the Confirmation of the Kingdom of God shall descend upon you. You shall develop a seeing eye and a heart overflowing with the Love of God. Your breaths shall have influence upon others and your tongues will become the interpreters of the holy Books. Therefore, strive as much as you can to attain to this station.”

RAMLEH, EGYPT, AUGUST 17, 1913.

1. ‘Abdu’l-Bahá and the Khedive of Egypt

This was an important date in the Bahá’í calendar because ‘Abdu’l-Bahá and the ruler of Egypt met each other for the second or third time. Beyond this bare announcement I have no other information. The Master may give us, later, an account of the meeting, and thus in our imagination we may construct a picture, or he may not divulge any of the details. None of the believers were with him. For the present it is enough to know that on this day, between three and six p.m., the sovereign of Egypt had the honor and privilege of talking with ‘Abdu’l-Bahá .

2. A Traveling Companion for Mrs. Getsinger in Her

Approaching Visit to India

I was given the utmost joy of standing in the presence of ‘Abdu’l-Bahá this morning. The more you receive his benediction, the greater becomes your hunger.

Mrs. Getsinger was called in and the question of a traveling companion was discussed. Different names were mentioned, but no one measured up to the requirements of the Beloved. Then the name of Mrs. Isabel Fraser was presented. “Yes, yes,” he exclaimed delightedly. “She is just the right person.” He loves her very much, and he always desires to assist her in serving the Cause. Why did we not think of her sooner? She will be able to render a great service in India. She has no other thought except the Love of Bahá’u’lláh. {{p202}} Then he dictated a cablegram to be sent to her without delay, the contents of which are as follows:

If possible leave immediately for Port Sa’íd. Wish send thee India for service. Cable Yazdí. ‘Abbás.”

3. Story of the French Ambassador and the Turkish

Minister of Foreign Affairs about Christ’s Resurrection

Between 6 and 7 the Beloved came to our house and stayed for more than an hour. He spoke of the enmity of the ignorant people in every age and cycle for the manifestations of God. This enmity comes through the accumulation of dogmas and traditions and from blindly following the religious leaders.

Some people, he told us, are like unto the spiders. The more you tear to pieces their cobwebs of imaginations and imitations, the greater will become their zeal to spin again. Once the French Ambassador at the Sublime Porte satirically asked Fu'ad Páshá, the Minister of Foreign Affairs: "How did Muḥammad ascend to heaven according to your trustworthy tradition?" Fu'ad Páshá, realizing the scoffing tone of the Ambassador, cheerfully volunteered the answer by saying: "With the same ladder that your Lord Christ ascended to heaven after his resurrection." His Excellency could not say anything. This able answer seemed to silence him, and put him "hors de combat."

Then 'Abdu'l-Bahá related several stories of the time of Bahá'u'lláh when he was in Baghdád. These stories entirely lose their beauty and charm if translated into English, because they are in accord only with the Oriental conception, and parts of them are masterful plays on words and their various shades of meanings, which can be enjoyed solely by the Persians. {{p203}} The Master knowing so well their nature, from time to time, supplies the demand and thus makes them more attracted to the Cause by his peerless witticisms. He had just come from his Interview with the Khedive, and as he was in such a delightful humor, I believe the meeting must have been very satisfactory.

I concluded the day with the translation of Tablets to the Persian believers:

4. The Principle upon Which 'Abdu'l-Bahá's Western

Trip Was Based

Consider how 'Abdu'l-Bahá forgot every material thought and mention and turned his face toward the countries and empires, cities and villages, mountains and deserts of the West. Day and night he was engaged in teaching the Cause and conveying the message The principle upon which his trip was based was this:

"O God, make all my ideals and thoughts One Ideal and One Thought, and suffer me to attain to an eternal unchangeable condition in Thy service!"

He sought no rest, neither did he breathe one breath of Comfort Notwithstanding the weakness of his constitution, the infirmity of his body and the nervous fever, every night, he was in a city and every day in a community. Although at times he was hardly able to speak, yet he delivered lengthy addresses. Working in this manner shall bear fruits.

5. America Cannot Be Compared to Europe

In another Tablet, he says:

"Praise be to God that this second journey is happily completed, and that from the West I have returned to the East. {{p204}} But this second voyage cannot be compared with the first European trip, because America cannot be compared with Europe. That country is another world; its inhabitants are another people; their capacities are receptivities of another type; therefore ‘Abdu’l-Bahá found a vast arena, and an unlimited expanse and opportunity. In all the conventions and conferences he raised the clamor of ‘Ya Bahá’u’l-Abhá,’ and caused the clarion of ‘O My Lord the Clement’ to reach the Supreme Apex. >From the infinite Bestowals of the Blessed Perfection I am anticipating the appearance of the results of this trip. I hope that this conduct of ‘Abdu’l-Bahá will become an example for the believers; so that all of them may convey the message accordingly; be wanderers over deserts and mountains; seeking no ease or composure and taking their lives and spirits on the palms of their hands, and sacrificing them to the Blessed Perfection.”

RAMLEH, EGYPT, AUGUST 18, 1913.

1. ‘Abdu’l-Bahá and His Attitude toward Humanity

The most significant Personality living in this age and generation is the Personality of ‘Abdu’l-Bahá. Few souls in the history of mankind have been so successful in combining the harmonizing influence of the East and the West. Day and night he wields the scepter of spiritual powers. His gentle, loving Presence is felt in the remote corners of the earth. His unerring judgment reads the secret longings of the hearts. His knowledge spiritualizes the lives of men. His love ennoble every being. His sublime consciousness embraces each race and nation of the earth. {{p205}} His universal conceptions enkindle the fire of brotherhood; his divine mind grasps the plan of creation and its ultimate fruition. In his dealings with the people he is merciful. In his treatment of the poor he is generous. In his association with men he is helpful. In his intercourse with society he is democratic. In his contact with his enemies he is forgiving. In his attitude toward mankind he is a father. He loves all; He showers his mercy upon all; He exercises kindness toward all. ‘Abdu’l-Bahá is the mystery of love but an open mystery. God in his wisdom is daily revealing the secret of this Love; so that we may learn more and more of its ineffable sweetness and thoughtful tenderness. His life is a living book of love in all its heights and depths; its ink has been the blood of the martyrs, its chapters the tragic lives of glorious souls; it is written with a pen made of precious stones on the pages of universal history. Who can measure the glorious possibilities of a life so complete as the life of ‘Abdu’l-Bahá! He stands in the center of immensity. He voices the mysteries of eternity; he upholds the heavens of justice; he paves the path of the kingdom of God; he ushers in the dawn of the new era; he breathes a new spirit into dead bodies; he begems the firmament of the Cause with the radiant stars of praiseworthy virtues; he breaks the seals of the heavenly books; he fires hearts with the Flame of the Love of God; he sings the songs of the coming age; he calls all the inhabitants of the globe to spiritual solidarity and he spreads far and wide the Fragrance of the rose-garden of Abhá!

2. ‘Abdu’l-Bahá and ‘Abdu’l-Hudá, a Favorite of the Sultán

This morning ‘Abdu’l-Bahá came to see us and stayed a long time. He spoke about a great Shaykh who lived in Constantinople and was a favorite of ‘Abdu’l-Ḥamíd. His name was ‘Abdu’l-Hudá. {{p206}} He tried his utmost to intrigue against the Master but failed to accomplish his purpose. After the declaration of the Constitution in Turkey the enemies of the Shaykh confiscated his property and reduced him to wretched poverty. This sudden change in fortune so deranged his mind that he died a year later. This man had thought that Sultán ‘Abdu’l-Ḥamíd desired to send for the Master to come to Constantinople to fill a high position in the government, so he worked hard to poison the mind of the Sultán against the Beloved. The Master sent him a message to the effect, that he could rest assured that ‘Abdu’l-Bahá would not come to Constantinople, even if he were sent for. He was a humble servant of God. What connection between him and royalty? He loved God and could worship Him better in the solitude of his prison than amid royal splendor; nay rather, the latter would separate him from the Threshold of the Almighty.

In the afternoon while passing by the door of the House he called for Mírzá Munír to go to the garden and take down the dictation of holy Tablets. In the evening a number of the newly arrived pilgrims received permission to see him.

1. The Coming of Isabel Fraser to Egypt

“Coming immediately, Fraser.” The words danced before my eyes as the Beloved handed me the cable. {{p207}} In my heart there was gladness, on my face a smile of contentment. I looked up into the Countenance of the Master, and saw that my elation was but a reflection of his own satisfaction. Such a Bahá’í is priceless. Well done good and faithful maid servant, you have made the heart of the Beloved very happy! You have won the ball of victory from the field of spiritual Glory! In the presence of the Master you have received a new baptism of fire and spirit. He will put in your hand the torch of guidance; on your lips the words of light; in your heart the symbol of life and he shall send you off with a new power, a new dedication, a new vision. May the Hand of God protect you throughout your voyage and bring you safely into the land of Egypt wherein the ideal Joseph lives! We are all gladness because you are coming and look forward to the day when we will again talk of holy and divine things as we were wont to do in London and Edinburgh, Bristol and Paris. You will be a welcome guest in the holy household. You shall have much to write for the Bahá’í world.

2. ‘Abdu’l-Bahá Attends to His Mail

I stayed only a few moments in the presence of the Master this morning. He had sent for me to give me the above news. I took to him a big package of Tablets with their translations for the friends in America, and Europe. He himself attends to the final dispatching of the rather voluminous mail to all parts of the world. For the last few days his health has been very good and his food, although simple, is regularly served. He takes long walks either at early morning or in the late afternoon, and at such times he is always alone. {{p208}} Outwardly he is walking, but in reality he is thinking and communing with our Maker.

3. Thou Must Be Firm and Unshakable in Thy Power

In the afternoon I had again the good fortune of being summoned into ‘Abdu’l-Bahá’s room. A cable has been received from Doctor Getsinger saying that he was willing to obey the call and to come. Mrs. Getsinger was sent for and in the course of conversation the Beloved told her that she must be firm and unshakable in her purpose and never, never let any outward circumstances worry her. He was sending her to India to bring about certain definite results. She must enter that country with a never-failing spirituality; a radiant faith, an eternal enthusiasm, an inextinguishable fire, and a solid conviction — in order that she might achieve those services which were required of her. Let not her heart be troubled. If she goes away with this unchanging condition of invariability of the inner state, she shall see the doors of confirmation open before her face, her life will be a crown of heavenly roses and she shall find herself in the highest station of triumph. She should strive day and night to attain to this exalted state! Let her look at ‘Abdu’l-Bahá! She does not know a thousandth part of the difficulties and seemingly insurmountable obstacles which daily arise before his eyes. He does not heed them. He is walking in his chosen highway. He knows his destination. Hundreds of storms and tempests may rage furiously about his head, hundreds of Titanics may sink to the bottom of the sea, mad waves may rise to the roofs of the heavens: all these will not change his purpose, will not disturb him in the least. He will not look either to the left or to the right. He is looking ahead. Far, far, away, piercing the impenetrable darkness of the night, past the howling winds, and the raging storms, he sees the glorious light beckoning to him. The balmy weather is coming, and the voyager shall land safely. {{p209}} Kurrat-ul-ayne had attained to this supreme state when they brought to her the terrible news of the martyrdom of the Bahá’ís. She did not waver; she also had chosen her path; she knew her goal. And when they imparted to her the news of her impending death, no one could see any trace of sorrow in her face; rather she was happier. Although she had never cared for dress, she wore on her supreme day her best white silk robe and most precious jewels and perfumed herself with the fragrant attar of rose. She hailed the chamber of death as a happy bride entering the nuptial bower of the bridegroom.

Then, turning his face to Mrs. Getsinger, he ended his talk by saying that she must attain to this lofty summit of unchanging Purpose. Like Kurrat-ul-ayne nothing must shake her firm faith.

4. ‘Abdu’l-Bahá and His Talk with Miss Hiscock

Miss Hiscock, who was with the Holy Family, was called in. The Master told her that he was well pleased with her. Her aim was to serve the Cause and the day was coming when he should command her to teach. She said:

“I have no other hope save this Cause and the love of ‘Abdu’l-Bahá.”

The Beloved answered that he knew, he knew.

Afterward he told me that Miss Hiscock’s heart was very pure. She was very sincere.

Late in the afternoon he called on Mírzá Abu’l-Faḍl and stayed with him for nearly one hour. He passed by our house but did not stay for tea. His spiritual figure saluting us remained with me all night as a heavenly picture of a divine being descended from on high.

1. Strange Customs in Different Countries Are Not

Tokens of the Inferiority of the People

Instead of giving you extracts from the daily talks of ‘Abdu’l-Bahá, often I am obliged to substitute them with extracts from Tablets, for only when I am called into his presence, or when he comes to see us am I able to give an account of what is passing. The rules of social intercourse are so different from those in America that we see ‘Abdu’l-Bahá much more seldom than when we were traveling with him. We know well that no nation can ever claim to be perfect, but that each one according to its capacity and environment, has, and is contributing something to the upbuilding of a universal civilization.

2. On Divine Guidance from a Tablet of ‘Abdu’l-Bahá

“O ye blessed souls! In the world of existence no bounty remains eternal and permanent and no gift continues to be immutable save the Bestowal of ‘Divine Guidance’! This is the everlasting Grace! Praise be to God that you have attained thereunto. Should you live thousands of years and unloose thousands of tongues in thanksgiving for this Grace, you would be unable to render adequate praise; for praise is limited but this Grace is unlimited. {{p211}} How many souls have longed to live in this Day, yet their hope was unrealized and how many thousands of people have undergone severe discipline, yet were deprived of the Day of the Promised One.

“Consider what a Bounty God has conferred upon you! Without undergoing any hardships you have reached the goal and without traversing vast Saharas you have drunk from the ocean of sweet waters. Without any suffering you have tasted of the fountain of guidance! This is the great Bestowal if man can appreciate its value: otherwise in the estimation of the ignorant, Guidance and error are practically the same. A person who is not thirsty is unaware of the delicacy of sweet waters, likewise the salty ground does not absorb the outpourings of the vernal showers and the withered tree is unresponsive to the call of the rain from the cloud of spring.

“Therefore thank ye God that you have received a goodly portion and have become the confidants of the mysteries of the Kingdom.”

3. Lack of Trustworthiness

In a Tablet he says:

“Untrustworthiness is a poisonous arrow which mortally wounds the heart, the soul and the spirit of ‘Abdu’l-Bahá.”

4. Persecutions in the Path of God

In a Tablet he says:

“Praise be to God that you are soaring in the Divine rose-garden, have found your way to the Kingdom of Mysteries and have become the recipients of the Favors of His Highness the Incomparable One! {{p212}} On the other hand you have endured the ridicule of the ill-wishers; you have suffered sorely and have tasted the poison of the tyrannical serpents, but as this was in the path of the Glorious Lord, the venom became honey and the pain health. Look at the outcome of such events. These ordeals result in Divine Gifts. This blame and derision will be followed by praise, glorification and adoration. Ere long it will become evident and manifest.”

5. Teaching the Cause

In a Tablet on Teaching the Cause of God, he says:

“Be thou in a state of utmost joy and fragrance and render thanks unto the Forgiving Lord, that praise be to God, thou art victorious and triumphant and art speaking for the Glorification of His Highness the King of Mankind and that in conveying the message thou art striving and putting forth praiseworthy efforts. Know thou of a certainty that the authoritative Firman is today revealed from the Kingdom of Abhá for those who teach the Cause. I hope that thou mayst become assisted in this and be a means for the guidance of innumerable people! This is the Divine Bestowal! This is the Eternal Honor! This is the Everlasting Life!”

6. Faithfulness at the Holy Threshold

He writes:

“I supplicate and entreat at the Threshold of the Blessed Perfection and beg for the Divine Friends infinite Bestowal and Grace: — so that they may become confirmed in loyalty at the sanctified Threshold. {{p213}} May they remember His Bounties and Favors sacrifice their lives in His path and freely resign their possessions in the Highway of the Merciful One.”

7. Arrival of a New Pilgrim

Today we welcomed another pilgrim from Tabriz His name is Ḥájí ‘Abbás. He is a Turkish poet and does not speak Persian very well. He is an old Bahá’í and has served the Cause for many years. He will stay for nine days. Generally all the pilgrims have permission to stay nine days after which they return to their native land.

We have heard from Haifa that Mrs. Stannard has arrived there from Port Sa’íd. In order to regain her health she may spend the rest of the summer. The Master was very anxious to know where and how she is, and the other day he sent her a loving message of inquiry through Miss Hiscock.

8. ‘Abdu’l-Bahá’s Photograph in Constantinople

Our new pilgrim told us that while he was walking through the streets of Constantinople he saw a photograph of the Master surrounded by a group of Western Bahá’ís, which was exhibited for sale in the window of a photographer. In the picture the believers held aloft the “Greatest Name” in their hands. Many people were buying copies. This is very significant, considering that in the same city lived the despot who imprisoned ‘Abdu’l-Bahá in the fortress of ‘Akká for more than forty years.

9. ‘Abdu’l-Bahá Talks on His Meeting and Conversation a Persian

General in Paris

In the afternoon ‘Abdu’l-Bahá walked in the garden and two of the friends who had just arrived from Cairo went there to see him. {{p214}} As I was returning from the Post Office I passed by and observed him talking with much animation. Immediately afterward I was called into his presence.

After supper while I was sitting in my room, writing, the door opened and ‘Abdu’l-Bahá came in I had neither my Tarboush nor coat on and I jumped up from my seat confusedly. He walked toward the veranda and asked:

“Is there any one here?”

It was a typical Oriental night, very quiet and enchanting In a little while the friends gathered around him. He asked questions about the believers of Cairo, and Mírzá Abú’l-Qásim of Shíráz answered them. In the course of his talk ‘Abdu’l-Bahá said that in this day the greatness of the Bahá’í Cause is acknowledged by all people, even by outsiders. A few months ago in Paris one of the Sardars of Persia came to call on him. He told ‘Abdu’l-Bahá the following story: When he was in London he was invited by one of the English Peers to a reception. There he met many members of the English Nobility with their wives and daughters. He was introduced to all and when they heard that he was a Persian, many came forward expressing the utmost delight in meeting a person who belonged to a race which had given ‘Abdu’l-Bahá to the world. They asked him “Do you know ‘Abdu’l-Bahá? Have you met him?” He noticed that the wife of his host instead of wearing precious stones on her fingers like the other women, wore a solitary simple ring. He was a little surprised. He approached her, saying: “What is this stone?” She answered: “This is agate. Do you not know it?” He rejoined: “Yes, but why do you wear it?” “Upon this stone,” she answered proudly, “is impressed the name of Bahá’u’lláh.” The Persian General was ignorant of the teachings of this Cause, and could not understand the significance of “Revelation.” {{p215}} He could not comprehend, how a man communicates with God. These subjects were beyond his mental capacity; neither should any one try to teach him these things, because he had made up his mind not to understand them. However, he knew, because he had witnessed it with his own eyes, that this Cause has become the means of the honor and glory of Persia throughout the civilized world. To this he would bear testimony to the end of his life!

The teachings of the Blessed Perfection are so humanitarian, ‘Abdu’l-Bahá continued, that even the enemy testifies that they are the spirit of this age. For example, Bahá’u’lláh says: “O ye people of the world! Ye are the fruits of one tree and the leaves of one branch! Consort with the followers of all religions with joy and fragrance.” Throughout many cities of America and Europe, in churches and meetings, he declared these Teachings with a loud voice and there was not a single soul to contradict them. Then he gave a detailed account of the meetings in Washington, New York and San Francisco and ended his talk by saying, that this Blessed Cause has such great power that it shall, ere long, vanquish all opposition. We must live and act in such manner as not to lower the station of the Cause, but rather try by day and by night to raise its banner higher. The Blessed Perfection has given us wares which are eagerly sought on the market place of the world.

1. The qualities of the members of the Spiritual Assembly.

This morning Shoghi Effendi came and told me that the Master was ready to receive me. {{p216}} Within a moment I was standing in his presence. He inquired about my health and asked how I was getting along with my fast. Yet eleven days remain to the month of Ramaḍán, after which the Muḥammadan world will hold a natural Fete. Then he called in Lua Getsinger and inquired concerning the Cause in America. A cablegram has been received from Chicago about the re-election of the House of Spirituality. He said that there was no need for re-election at present. He told us that in the election of the members of the House of Spirituality no political tactics should enter. They must be free from self, nor anxious to further their own personal ambitions. The existence of the Spiritual Assembly is for no other purpose than to discuss those means which call further the promotion of the Cause; otherwise its non-existence is better than its existence. The members must not be opinionated, but must devote their attention to the services of the people. The promotion of the principles of the Cause must be the uppermost idea in their minds. Nothing else will yield fruit. No secret canvassing will add to the luster of any person. The people must be free and untrammelled to choose whomsoever they want. As soon as political plans are introduced in the Cause, the spirit is killed. The apostles of Christ never devised any political schemes whereby to win the majority vote. They went out into the world and taught the gospel of light to all mankind. The result is that whenever we mention the names of John, or Peter or Matthew, a wonderful spirituality is obtained, hearts are inspired and souls rejoiced. These disciples were not politicians, they were the harbingers of the Glad-tidings of the Kingdom. They did not know anything about elections, votes, initiative and referendum. They were filled with Christ. They knew Him only. Similarly this Cause is pure Spirituality. It deals with the moral aspect of humankind. {{p217}} The hearts of the believers must be fountains of the Love of Bahá'u'lláh. Freeing themselves from all withering restrictions, they should occupy their time with the promulgation of the word. They must love each other and banish all phantasms of suspicion and doubt.

Then he left the room and for a few moments I had time to speak with Mrs. Getsinger. She is most happy in her spiritual nest, and is learning to chant many prayers of Bahá'u'lláh in the original.

In the afternoon for nearly two hours 'Abdu'l-Bahá dictated Tablets to Mírzá Munír in the garden, and when he passed by our house, he carried in his hand a bouquet of yellow roses.

In the evening some Arab friends called on him and he entertained them until midnight. When they left he was very tired, but well. How glad we are when he is in good health.

1 Story of the woodcutter and his wife. 2. Story of the sinner and the Mullá. 3. Story of Baktashi and his strange death amid the laughter of his friends. 4. 'Abdu'l-Bahá goes to the Mosque and gives money to the poor.

1. Story of the Woodcutter and His Wife

‘Abdu’l-Bahá told us three stories about Baktashis who belong to a religious sect in Turkey. I am inclined to report them as the Master has in each case been a direct factor in them.

When the Bahá’ís were staying in Adrianople there was a Baktashi who lived close by them. Professionally he was a wood-chopper, socially he was a wit. {{p218}} Once he became severely ill and was on the eve of departure from this world. Becoming acquainted with this fact, ‘Abdu’l-Bahá called on him. He was lying on a low, uncomfortable cot, and his old wife was sitting beside it with the marks of solicitude and care on her wrinkled face. Suddenly she started to speak, addressing her husband: “Thou art going to get well very soon. This sickness shall pass away and thou wilt be strong. Oh, my beloved! I am praying to Alláh for thy speedy recovery. May Alláh hear my prayers!” The sick man, as though pulling himself out of a heavy drowsiness, half-opened his eyes and said: — “What can I do even if I get well? I am tired of the world and want to leave it, my dear. Oh! I am so weary, so weary.” And he closed his eyes. The wife, with much agitation declared: “Oh no, no! May Alláh never bring that black day! My darling! Thou wilt gain back thy health. Together we will go into the garden and there eat all kinds of fruits. Hand in hand we will walk through the woods and listen to the songs of the birds. Yes, yes, I will nurse thee back to health, oh thou, the apple of my eye!” The sick man, without opening his eyes, and seemingly with much struggle, answered her back: — “Oh my wife, be silent! Nothing shall happen if I get well, only this: I have to chop ten or twenty or thirty more loads of wood. That’s all. Have I not cut enough already? Oh, let me die!” In this world we are all more or less wood-choppers. If we are attacked by illness and survive it, we have to work a little longer, chop a few more loads of wood, and the world will go on as before.

2. Story of the Sinner and the Mullá

There was another Baktashi who, in his younger days, was an officer in the Turkish government. {{p219}} This man became very sick, and the members of his family had summoned a Mullá to his bed. Then ‘Abdu’l-Bahá called on him and they asked the Mullá to pray that God might forgive his past sins before his death. After the performance of many ceremonials, the Mullá, in his most solemn voice, told the patient to repeat the formula: — “Oh, God! I have sinned much. Confer upon me thy forgiveness.” The sick man did not answer. The Mullá repeated the formula over and over, but to no effect. Finally the patient, getting tired with this repetition, turned his eyes to the Mullá and said with earnestness: — “Man! for many years I have sinned against God and his servants. I have ransacked houses, orphaned children, burned hearts and committed all kinds of iniquities. Is the government of God so childlike as to forgive all my past sins by the repetition of a mere formula? Is God’s system of dispensing justice so loose? Be gone, thou ignorant Mullá! Thou art telling me all these things to get ten Piasters as thy fee. Come, come, my friends, give him some money and let him depart quickly from my presence. He is a Satan and a tempter!" Then the Mullá left the room in haste, and when 'Abdu'l-Bahá was alone with him, the man fell on his knees, and from the depths of his heart, cried out: "Oh Lord! Oh Lord! I am a real sinner and thou art the just God! beg Thy Mercy! I have committed many sins. I have not done that which Thou hast commanded me and have practiced those things which Thou hast made unlawful. With humility and contrition I am standing in Thy Presence. Do with me whatsoever Thou wilt!" {{p220}} 'Abdu'l-Bahá was much affected by this outpouring of sincerity and departed, praying that his supplication might become acceptable at the Threshold of the Almighty.

3. Story of Baktashi and of His Strange Death amid the #### Laughter of His Friends

Facing the house of 'Abdu'l-Bahá in Adrianople there was a cafe. Here every day sat a retired officer of the Turkish Army belonging to the Baktashi's sect. The Baktashis are always on good terms with the Bahá'ís. They are a peaceful people. This retired soldier received a pension of 5 Piasters (25 cents) a day from the government. Every morning he would come and take a chair in front of the cafe, and order a cup of coffee. Then the people would gather around him and listen with delight and laughter to his stories until noon. At that hour he would call the waiter and give him five cents to buy him two loaves of bread, two rolls of roast-meat and a dish of salad. Then he would ask for a clean table and use his neat handkerchief as a tablecloth. Every day he invited one of the habitués of the cafe to lunch with him. "Come here, my friend!" he would say placing a chair on the other side of the table, and leaving before it a loaf of bread, with one of the roast-meats. "Come and be my guest today!" Then he would commence to eat. Every mouthful that was taken was followed by the short sentence "Oh God! I thank Thee! How delicious is this lunch!" — till it was finished. Then again he would start his conversation, always tempered with sharp wit and the joy of living. From time to time he would come to the Mosque of Sulţán Sulaymán where the Governor and the officers would gather about him to pass a pleasant hour. He would keep them roaring with laughter over his stories. One day, when 'Abdu'l-Bahá was also present, the Baktashi entered with a mat under his arm. Laughingly he saluted every one and said: — "Today I am going to start on a long journey; therefore, I beg you to forgive all my past shortcomings!" {{p221}} "Art thou going to Baghdád?" one asked. "Further! much further!" "Surely to China?" "Very much further." Then no doubt to Australia?" "Still further." All this time everybody laughed because they thought that he had a joke up his sleeve. "Please, please," he pleaded, "I beg you to forgive me. Say that you do!" In order to humor him, they said: "All right, we forgive thee!" Then he said: — "I am now happy. I will also forgive you, my good friends!" Then he walked toward the court of the Mosque; spread on the ground half of his mat, laid himself down and covered his body with the other half. The spectators, thinking that they had reached the climax of the joke, laughed uproariously. Five minutes passed — no movement; ten, fifteen minutes, half an hour, no sign of life. The time grew heavy and strained. They looked at each other, with wonder in their eyes. Then laughing and shrugging their shoulders, they left their places and gathered around the mat. One of them, on tip-toe, cautiously lifted one corner. Wonder of wonders! The Baktashi had breathed his last. Then these men carried him on their shoulders laughing and singing, took him to the undertaker laughing, washed his body laughing and buried him with roars and thunders of laughter. It was a most phenomenal event! This Baktashi used to call on ‘Abdu’l-Bahá. He had heard about Bahá’u’lláh and knew something concerning the Cause. The believers asked him several times to call on the Blessed perfection, but he always refused, saying: “How can I, the essence of sin, stand in the Presence of the Essence of Holiness! I am not worthy of this privilege. Whenever I find that I have deserved such an honor, I will go; but not now, not now!” {{p222}} Thus this good man lived and died in happiness.

4. ‘Abdu’l-Bahá Goes to the Mosque and Gives Money

to the Poor

It was about noon when the Master passed by our house and called for Mírzá ‘Alí-Akbar to follow him. When Mírzá ‘Alí-Akbar returned he told us that as there was a great festival at the Mosque of Sidi Jaber, the Master had been invited to be present. The Mosque was most beautifully decorated with flags and draperies. The Khedive was there. After the ceremonies, ‘Abdu’l-Bahá came out and all the poor, men, women and children gathered around him with their tattered garments and dusty appearances. He placed money in their hands, patting each on the shoulder and cheering everyone with his loving glances.

About four o’clock he went to the garden, but this time all alone.

Today I received letters from our American friends. I read them with much pleasure, and their contents will be presented to the Master at the first opportunity! May this link of spiritual correspondence bring the East and the West closer together!

RAMLEH, EGYPT, AUGUST 23, 1913.

1. The Bahá’ís Must Embody Their Teachings in Their Lives

The Bahá’í Movement has come into the world principally as a Cause of Love, Spirituality, Unification, Reformation, Reconciliation, Universal Peace, Idealism, International Language, Unity of Religions, General Education, Brotherhood and Celestial attributes which will contribute toward the Union of the Orient and the Occident. {{p223}} The inevitable conclusion is that those who call themselves Bahá'ís must embody these principles in their lives; so that mankind may discern with their own eyes the concrete, spiritual results of the Bahá'í teachings and arise to spread them more universally. We all desire to see our ideals realized in a human being. If we admire courage, we would like to see this quality in a hero. If we love Love, we consider it a high privilege to behold this attribute manifested in a person. In brief, we are hungering for results.

2. The Story of the Man Who Did Not Know the ### Window in His Own Room

The other day Mírzá Munír told us a story which will illustrate this point. There was a young man in Beirut who worked as a waiter in a restaurant. For some time he had lived in a small room on the top of a house. He worked all day and returned to his room at night. One day he met an old friend of his on the street, who had just arrived from his native town. “Where are you going to live?” he inquired.

“I am at this very moment looking for a hotel.”

“Oh, no! Don't go to a hotel. Come and be my guest.”

After some insistence the invitation was accepted.

“Here is the key to my room. Take it. The address is at such and such a place. Go there now and rest. I will come after work, about nine o'clock.”

The man took the key and found the place. {{p224}} As soon as he had unlocked the door, a stuffy odor struck him. He waited outside for a few minutes, and then with much difficulty, entered. He found the room dark and dirty and all the furniture covered with several layers of dust. As he was accustomed to cleanliness, he began to sweep the floor and to dust the objects. In carrying the furniture and boxes from one corner to the other, he uncovered the rusty shutters of a window, apparently untouched for a long time. He opened it with much effort and a flood of light poured into the room. Then, he sat down and waited for his friend till night came, then he went out and bought a candle. He lighted it and began to read a book. Nine o'clock, and his friend did not arrive; ten o'clock and there was no sign of him; at eleven o'clock he got up from his seat and went out to see what had become of him. He saw a man walking to and fro on the veranda.

“Who art thou?” he asked in the darkness.

“I am ... and it seems that I have lost my room.”

Realizing that this was his friend he told him that this was his own house. The friend walked in and looked about with evident astonishment:

“I have lived in this room for a long time,” he said, “and never knew that it had a window. I have never lighted a candle. I enter the room by night and feel my way to the bed. I take off my clothes and sleep. Before sunrise, I dress and go out. Thus I have never been here in the daytime. Now, when I came tonight, I looked at the room and saw an open window; so I thought that it surely was not mine, and for more than two hours I have been pacing outside wondering what I should do.”

Now God and His generosity has given us many things but we have to find them; he has revealed many precepts, but we have to live by them. If we close the shutters of our hearts, the light will not come in, the spiritual atmosphere will not become purified, dormant powers will not be awakened, divine susceptibilities will not be obtained; {{p225}} intellectual faculties will not become active; heavenly illumination will not be realized; Celestial Love will not be revealed; results will not be produced, and moral civilization will not raise its standard.

3. No Power On Earth Can Withstand the Cause

of God

‘Abdu’l-Bahá passed by our house before noon and called for Mírzá ‘Alí-Akbar. He sent him to Alexandria to attend to an errand and to personally call on an important personage. Then he spent the afternoon in the garden dictating Tablets for the Oriental Bahá’ís. About sunset he came to us. Many believers were here, and he spoke now in Arabic and again in Persian.

He told us that the stories of the prophets recorded in the Qur’án were not mere historical writings. They were warnings to future generations after Muḥammad; so that they might know how former people treated the Messengers of God. Although they opposed the Cause yet they were defeated in their purpose. Who can stand before the Will of the Almighty? Let me give you an example. His Holiness Christ, after his crucifixion, had only eleven disciples. One of these had betrayed him; another had denied him thrice, and the rest had deserted him. On the crucial night of his life, he was left all alone, friendless and helpless; yet in future years the combined forces of the Roman and Greek emperors and philosophers could not stamp out His Power. Like a mighty torrent everything was swept before it. Now after the departure of Bahá’u’lláh, at least five hundred thousand men and women believed in Him; thousands having already testified with their blood, and the rest, ready at any moment to give up their lives. {{p226}} If we reflect for one moment and compare the immediate results of the two Movements, we will logically conclude that no power on earth can stand in the path of the progress of the Bahá’í Cause which is the Cause of humanity.

Then he spoke of some of the incidents which had occurred during the stirring days of ‘Akká, when, the Investigating Committee at the instigation of his enemies had arrived to send him to Feyzan. The events of those years, 1906-7 if collected and written, would form one of the most dramatic chapters in the Master’s epic life. They illustrate more than anything else his divine courage, endurance, patience and spiritual control over great difficulties.

1. How Tablets to the American Friends Are Spread

All Over Persia

The other day I observed one of the pilgrims from a faraway town of Persia holding a book in his hand. He was reading it with great attention. Approaching him I looked at the top of the page. To my surprise I read the name of Mr. William Hoar of New York. {{p227}} It was a copy of a Tablet revealed for him by the Master on the eve of his departure from ‘Akká many years ago.

“Do you know whose Tablet you are reading?” I asked.

“Of course I do. It belongs to one of our American brothers,” he said with pride.

“How did you come to get a copy of it?” I asked.

“Oh! It is spread all over Persia,” he rejoined. “By the way,” he said, as though remembering something, “tell me about this Mr. Hoar. When I go away I would like to tell the story to my friends, because we used to read this Tablet at every meeting.”

“Very well. Then ask the others to gather together in the room and I will talk to you about him.” Having told them all I knew about Mr. Hoar, and of what a splendid and upright Bahá’í he was, I got a copy of the Tablet, and I will share its contents with you; the original is in eloquent Arabic.

2. An Eloquent Tablet to Mr. William Hoar

of New York

“TO MR. WILLIAM HOAR,

“(Upon him be Bahá’u’lláh)

“He is God!

“O THOU VISITOR TO THE BLESSED TABERNACLE!

“Verily the Messenger of Confirmation and the Commander of Assistance invited thee and brought thee safely to this radiant Holy Land. Verily thou hast crossed the seas and passed through the cities until thou didst reach to this Center of Lights, this Origin of divine Traces and this Dawning-place of the inspiration of thy Lord, the Mighty, the Master of Destiny! Verily, Verily, I say unto thee, this is a Bestowal through whose mention the Unitarians are rejoiced and for whose attainment the sincere ones are longing. {{p228}} This is a food for the spirit, a sustenance from heaven, a Grace through which the hearts are resuscitated and a favor by which the souls are re-vitalized. Render thou thanksgiving unto the Lord for His Generosity and Liberality. Appreciate thou its value and guard its preciousness.

“I declare by the True One, that if a faithful believer in God, while turning his face toward His Kingdom, the Supreme, arrives at this White Land — the Luminous Spot — and perfumes his nostrils through the Fragrance of Holiness, which is being diffused to all parts of the world, — the most dynamic Power shall aid him, the Glorious Giver shall reinforce him with His Love and Good-pleasure and confirm him in the accomplishment of a matter which shall have no parallel in the realm of existence and no similarity in the World of Visibility.

“But as to thee, gird up the loins of endeavor and return to that distant continent which is thy home and give the Glad-tidings of the Kingdom of God to the people, — the Kingdom whose doors are opened before the faces of all that who live upon the earth and in the heavens; a kingdom for the attainment of which the chosen ones from amongst the dwellers of the cities of the Almighty have longed, but have not attained. Verily the capability for the receiving of this uninterrupted Down-pouring, is a grace from the Graces of God and a most glorious gift; and verily the Generosity of Thy Lord is not limited.

“Declare thou unto the people: Verily at this time the Sun is shining, the orbs are gleaming, the stars are sparkling, the lamps are ignited, the fire of the Love of God is flaming high, the heavens are expanding, the seas are becoming tempestuous, the breezes are wafting, the Rain is pouring down; {{p229}} the earth is adorned, the Tabernacle of the Lord is lifted up, the rose gardens are embellished, the orchards are in luxuriant growth, the birds are singing, the flowers are blossoming, while Fragrance scatters and the zephyrs blow!

“How long, how long will ye remain asleep in your tombs, and rest upon the beds of negligence! Will ye not awaken from your slumbers, cleanse your ears, respond to the call of your Lord, the Omniscient and become the objects of the Favor of your God, the Clement; reading the verses of His Mercy and worshiping the Adored Countenance in this Manifest Day? Hasten ye, Hasten ye, O ye sincere ones! Hasten ye! Hasten ye, O ye attracted ones! Hasten ye, Hasten ye! O ye expectant ones! Hasten ye, Hasten ye, O ye longing ones! Ere long ye shall behold the Banners of Guidance waving from the summit of the highest mountains; the Knowledge of God encircling this terrestrial globe and the signs of the Bounties of your Lord manifesting in all directions as the appearance of the sun in midday. On that day the faithful ones shall break into songs of gladness, the people of Unity shall rejoice and the hearts which are filled with the Love of the Living, the Self-Subsistent will become dilated, the heedless ones will be in loss, the violators of the Covenant will regret and the rebellious ones be in degradation.

“O ye servants of God! Avail yourselves of the opportunity which is offered to you through these Favors, and do not ye forget that which was promised you in all the holy writings. This day is the day of attraction! This day is the day of enkindlement! This day is the day of soaring toward the ethereal atmosphere of the Merciful! This day is the day of the Call! This day is the day of Grace! This day is the day of the Most eminent Bestowal! This day is the day of the discovery of the most valuable treasure! {{p230}} Oh ye servants of God! Deprive not yourselves of the Ocean of Favor, and shut not your eyes to the vision of the signs of your Lord, the Omnipotent. Approach ye toward the Kingdom of Abhá, the Supreme Heaven, the Loftiest station with radiant faces, with hearts overflowing with the mention of God and breasts dilated by the verses of God: — so that you may attain to that which was longed for by the righteous ones — the station coveted by the saints and prayed for by the holy souls. Verily this is that which causes astonishment to the people of intelligence.

“Convey my greetings and praise to all the believers of God in that vast and spacious continent and say unto them from the tongues of ‘Abdu’l-Bahá: — ‘O ye believers of God! It is incumbent upon you to work mightily (in the Cause), and to strive nobly to declare the Bounties of God; be ye engaged in the Commemoration of the name of God; be ye severed from all else save God; take a firm hold of the rope of virtue, shun obedience to the dictates of self and passion; practice kindness toward all the people of the world; serve the Cause of Universal Peace and show ye love to all the nations of the earth.’

“Upon ye be greetings and praise!

(Signed) ‘ABDU’L-BAHÁ ‘ABBÁS.”

3. The Minute Questions Asked of ‘Abdu’l-Bahá

I did not see the Master this morning. Having received large packages of letters from the various countries of the East, he was busy reading them. Like simple children they come to him for advice to solve their problems.

4. ‘Abdu’l-Bahá Jokes and Beats His Secretary

At four o’clock I found myself at the door of the Master’s house. He was coming down with firm strides. The carriage was waiting. {{p231}} He had promised to take Mr. Atwood for a drive, and this was the day of fulfillment. In my hand I had a package of letters to be read to him. Looking at the rather thick package, he laughed and taking it out of my hand, showed it to the upper windows (apparently some of the members of the holy family were looking down) saying:

“Look what an amount of work Mírzá Aḥmad has brought for me. Does he not deserve a sound beating?” and with the umbrella’s handle he gently struck me twice on my back. Then he entered the carriage, after him Shoghi Effendi and next myself. Before reaching the Hotel Plaisance to call for Mr. Atwood, he talked with much humor, laughing all the time.

5. ‘Abdu’l-Bahá Says That If People Wish to Sneeze

They Ask Him about It

On the way he told us that matters had reached such a point that if the friends wanted to cough or sneeze they wrote to him to do it for them. He has repeatedly written that any realizable plan which has for its aim the spread of the Cause is acceptable. Each one wishes ‘Abdu’l-Bahá to free him from his perplexities and to lighten his work; but no one yet has asked to come and be of service to him; and help to lighten his load.

6. A Talk by ‘Abdu’l-Bahá on Creation

Finally we reached the hotel, picked up Mr. Atwood and started again. Mr. Atwood has written two articles on the Bahá’í Cause. The first has appeared in the Christian Commonwealth, the second will be published in another English paper. {{p232}} On the way he asked two questions, one on creation and its apparent incongruities and anomalies; the other on free will and determination. ‘Abdu’l-Bahá answered as follows: If we look upon creation from a remote outlook, we see symmetry and harmony; the apparent differences and anomalies blending into one harmonious whole; but if we study the world of genesis from a partial standpoint, these freaks of nature come to our notice at every turn. All parts, kinds and species of the creational life are interrelated. There is an invisible chain binding all into one mass of homogeneity. Those anomalies of creation which we call freaks are not freaks at all; but are made by a definite wisdom. As soon as we learn the purpose of their creation, they are no longer freaks, but parts of a whole. For example, we know the wisdom of the existence of the eyes, the ears, the teeth, the hands and the feet, but we may wonder why a single hair is grown on the top of somebody’s nose. This also has a purpose were we to become cognizant of it. The law of composition and decomposition, amalgamation and dissolution, construction and destruction, protection and danger are two basic principles of creation. An organism — whether living or inanimate — must be decomposed at a stated time; so that through its scattered atoms, elements of other organisms may be composed and created. Creation therefore, is based upon the activities of these two fundamental laws. On the other hand, there is the law of the eater and of the eaten. The higher forms of life feed upon the lower species of genesis. The grass takes its nourishment from the soil, and every day grows taller and taller like unto this (extending his hand toward the tall grass waving in the field). The animal in turn (showing a cow grazing in the field) eats the grass and is sustained by it. After a while man appears, kills the cow and eats it. Thus we observe that the various kingdoms of Life feed upon each other; but they have no conscious knowledge of the other’s existence. {{p233}} Hence the inferior degree is entirely out of touch with the superior degree, but the upper can look down upon the lower and help it. Therefore, while we are living in this world, we are not informed of the existence of the Spiritual world, but the dwellers of the spiritual world know about us and can assist and help us.

7. Explanation of Free Will

As regards free will. There are two distinct kinds of affairs, the first dominated by man, the second which is beyond his control; the first voluntary, the second involuntary. I am a free man so far as walking is concerned, but I am not free to soar in the air, unless I build an aeroplane.

8. ‘Abdu’l-Bahá Talks to Shaykhs and Young Egyptians

of His Trip to the West

While the carriage was rolling on past fields of cotton, palm groves, and primitive hamlets, the Master continued speaking on the above two subjects. We returned about 7 o’clock. Mr. Atwood enjoyed the ride and thanked him for it. At 8:30 ‘Abdu’l-Bahá came to our house. There were some Arab Shaykhs waiting. After indulging in some poetry and philosophic jargons to which the Master listened patiently, one of them ended by the announcement that his wife and children were sick and he had no money. The Master gave him five Majídís (5 dollars) and he left the house happy. Afterwards six young Egyptian nobles arrived. {{p234}} For more than two hours ‘Abdu’l-Bahá spoke to them about the virtues of the English and American people, of their scientific achievement, and of his travels throughout those distant countries, so full of wonders. Then he gave a resume of his lecture in the Jewish Synagogues of America. He was very lively in his descriptions and laughed throughout this interesting talk. The young Egyptians were all attention.

Today the Master was very happy and well. And his words created joy and spread sunshine. When he laughed the waves of his mirth rippled over the sea of our lives; creating wider and wider circles of the joy of living.

1. International Bahá’í Correspondence Conducive to

Unity

Most important of all is the establishment of a line of correspondence between the East and the West. Not that it may go on for a year or two only, but that it may continue without interruption. The success of every affair depends upon one’s firmness in following it up. Of no less importance is correspondence between the various Bahá’í Assemblies; for each assembly thus becomes informed of the status of the other, and gives its moral support. It would be well to designate certain active centers in America — Chicago, Washington, New York, San Francisco, Boston, etc., — to correspond regularly with European and Oriental Assemblies and in turn disseminate the news they receive to smaller centers; {{p235}} that the future Bahá’í conventions may give one or more sessions to the consideration of this important subject; that the secretaries may report on what they have done during the year and how many letters they have written and received.

As a confirmation to the foregoing statement, I translate the following Tablet, and am sure, that after reading it, the Bahá’ís will do their utmost to carry out its contents: —

“The correspondence of the believers of God with all parts of America and from America to all directions is very acceptable and seasonable. It will be the means of drawing hearts together. Display the utmost effort in this matter. The friends of God must be like bouquets of roses, disseminating their sweet fragrances one to another. They should assist each other: — so that, through the powers of the Kingdom, cooperation and reciprocity may be obtained. Correspondence and communication are the two greatest means for solidarity.

“It is said that correspondence is equal to half-meeting.

“Forward a copy of this Tablet to all parts, — so that the friends of God in every city may correspond in a representative way, with other cities; especially with America. This will be the cause of enkindlement and the means of attraction. The souls will become exhilarated, the spirits gladdened, the hearts stirred into cheerfulness, and the breasts dilated.”

2. The Weather in Ramleh

The days and nights of Ramleh are without rain. In the shade it is always cool. The sky is as blue as the bluest turquoise. At night the heavens are illumined with radiant stars. {{p236}} During the winter there is no snow, and the weather is balmy.

3. Receipt of Bahá'í Reports from America

Today, at about half past three, ‘Abdu’l-Bahá, passing by the house, called out my name, and in a second, I was following after him. He told me to bring the letters with me. I was glad for this. Reaching the gate of the garden, I knocked at the door, and the gardener opened it. The Master entered, took off his black coat and yellow “Abá,” and placed them on the branch of a fig tree. He was now all in white. For a few minutes he walked along the avenues and I could see his wonderful stature through the branches stirred by the wafting of the breeze.

He told me that when the weather was good his constitution responded to it and that he felt like a different person.

Then he started to dictate Tablets.

The third monthly report of Mr. Joseph H. Hannen, from Washington, D.C., was read. As he listened, his face brightened, and recalling different names mentioned in the letter, he exclaimed “Bravo Mrs. Belmont,” “Bravo So and So.” He directed me to send copies of this report to Cairo and Tíhrán; — so that they might spread it to other Bahá'í Centers, and to keep the original for him. In the evening he told the believers that a good report had been received from Washington which made him very happy. They should read it.

4. The Story of Fu'ad Páshá, the Grand Vizír of

Turkey

After two hours of dictation he left the garden to see a house which he desired to rent for the coming pilgrims from India and Persia. On the way we met the son of the former Consul of Damascus, Háshim Khán, with the Secretary of the Consulate of Alexandria. {{p237}} They had come to pay their respects to 'Abdu'l-Bahá. After seeing the house, the Master took his guests to the apartment of Mírzá Abu'l-Faḍl, and there, on the veranda, he conversed with them. As the son of the Consul — a pleasant, polite young man — had just arrived from Constantinople, the conversation naturally turned in the direction of the late war and its dreadful consequences.

'Abdu'l-Bahá said that the thoughts of the statesmen of the East are atrophied, and their hearts devoid of desire for the progress of the nation. Their ideas are petty, not sublime; selfish, not disinterested; local, not general. They think more of the advancement of their own interests, than of those of the country. They are not far-seeing patriots, but inexperienced tyros. They sell the resources of their country, if they think that by so doing they can fill their own pockets. Except in two instances, the Muḥammadan countries of the East have not produced any real statesmen for the last 200 years. When he was in Constantinople he heard on every side the praise of Fu'ad Páshá, the then Grand Vizír. At that time 'Abdu'l-Bahá was about seventeen or eighteen years old. One day he was in the house of Kamál Páshá, the former Ambassador of Turkey to Persia. The latter spoke Persian fluently, and as 'Abdu'l-Bahá had known him when he was an official in Tíhrán, he called on him during his short stay in Constantinople, and 'Abdu'l-Bahá returned the visit. While they were engaged in conversation, Fu'ad Páshá was announced. 'Abdu'l-Bahá thought to himself: "Now I shall have the opportunity of meeting this celebrated statesman, and of hearing words of political wisdom from his lips." As soon as Fu'ad Páshá entered, his first word was addressed to Kamál Páshá. "I could not sleep last night." {{p238}} A statesman who can not sleep all night must of necessity be thinking out the vast plan of some administrative reform, or public or civic welfare. "I did not enjoy one wink of slumber till this morning: the result being the composition of two blank verses," he said. "Do you want me to read them to you?" 'Abdu'l-Bahá was astonished at this state of affairs, that the Grand Minister of an Empire does not sleep all night for the writing of two blank verses. The lines were some poetical exaggeration about the beauty and tresses of his Beloved. When he left the room 'Abdu'l-Bahá asked Kamál Páshá: "Why did you praise so volubly those vapid verses?" He said: — "Why, we can't do otherwise."

5. Gaem-magam — the Persian Statesman

Then 'Abdu'l-Bahá told us another story about this man. He had ordered the killing of several hundred persons, exiled two or three thousand innocent men, and paid a large indemnity of eight millions to one of the European powers, to satisfy their demands based upon certain occurrences which had transpired in Syria. But in Persia, during the Ministry of the Great Gaem-magam, the Legation of one of the Foreign Nations was burned down and seventy-two people were killed by the populace, yet that far-sighted and astute Persian Minister so dexterously satisfied that foreign Power without paying an indemnity or killing or banishing anyone, that this one act alone became the greatest political feat of that Persian statesman, Gaem-magam.

6. The Story of the Sick Soldier and the Watchman

While ‘Abdu’l-Bahá was in Adrianople, Khurshíd Páshá, the Valí, one day asked him about the future of the Turkish Empire.

“Do you want me to give you my frank opinion?” ‘Abdu’l-Bahá said.

“Yes, of course,” he answered.

“Then, let me illustrate your position by a story. {{p239}} During the war against a foreign nation, one of the soldiers was stricken with a severe sickness. The military doctor, observing his case, recommended him to the watchman, saying: “This man must not sleep tonight. It is the crisis of his illness, but tomorrow morning he will feel much better. Nurse him very carefully and watch over him.” The doctor left, and about sunset the watchman came around to look after the sick man. After an hour or two he saw that he was getting worse, and was moaning and lamenting loudly. In order to alleviate his pain, the watchman gave him an opium pill, as a result of which he slept soundly all night. In the morning, the doctor called and saw that the condition of the patient was worse than the day before. Not being able to understand this relapse, he sent for the watchman. “What did you do for him last night?” “Oh, he was in such a frantic condition that I gave him a pill of opium, after which he slept soundly.” “Did you not think that I, who am a doctor, knew this remedy just as well as you, but I did not give it to him because I knew that it would make him worse?” “What do I care? I wanted to sleep and this patient disturbed me. I gave him an opium pill, and it served its purpose. To-night there will be another watchman. If the patient is getting worse, it does not trouble me in the least.”

“Now”, ‘Abdu’l-Bahá told the Governor, “it is your watch-time. You are not doing anything to improve the condition of the sick country. You are putting it to sleep by giving it narcotics, and when you leave your position, what do you care whether the patient will live or die? You have had your night’s sleep. {{p240}} Instead of watching the patient solicitously, and pulling him through, you prefer your own rest and comfort.

1. The Bahá'ís Must Raise a New Voice

Last night Ḥájí Muḥammad, the brother of Aḥmad Yazdí, arrived from Port Sa'íd, and brought us our mail. I had a few letters from America, the contents of which gave much pleasure to 'Abdu'l-Bahá. The breeze of good news must ever waft from the direction of the West to gladden the heart of the Center of the Covenant. May the believers of God, during the coming years plant new seeds in the gardens of hearts, educate new souls in the divine school, adorn with new stars the heaven of Reality, upraise new banners in the army of the Kingdom, cultivate new flowers in the Paradise of Abhá, issue a new voice through the pillars of the earth, herald the new message with a new enthusiasm, break through the rank and file of indifference with a new impetuosity, invite new guests to sit around the heavenly table, ask new thirsty ones to drink from the spring of life, create a new motion in the spiritual spheres, throw a new stir in the world of ideals, and pave new highways leading to the Supreme Concourse.

In the morning I went to Alexandria, and having dispatched some letters and attended to duties entrusted to me by the Master, returned. {{p241}} All day our house was an interesting center for the coming and going of the believers and pilgrims. Ḥájí 'Abbás, received permission to return to his home via Constantinople and Russia.

2. The Article of Arthur Brisbane on Science, Translated and Published in Arabic Daily and Discussed by Students

In the afternoon I called at the apartment of Mírzá Abu'l-Faḍl. There were several young Arab Bahá'ís present, and to my pleasant surprise, the subject of discussion was an article by Arthur Brisbane, feature writer of Mr. Hearst's papers in the United States. The article dealt with the wonders of science and the discoveries of this age. It was translated into Arabic by an Egyptian daily and published in the current issue. Mírzá Abu'l-Faḍl could not agree with certain statements made by Arthur Brisbane. After much discussion pro and con, he directed Ḥusayn Rúhí to write an answer and to forward it to the Editor of the paper. {{p242}} As I sat there, I thought how small the world was! What would Arthur Brisbane say or think did he know that his article, written thousands of miles away, in a new world, surrounded by a complex civilization, was being discussed and criticized by a number of Arabian students, supervised by a Persian philosopher, in a summer resort of Ancient Egypt. Truly the world is becoming one!

I may conclude with extracts from some Tablets which I have gathered out of the manuscript book of one of the pilgrims. They reflect the Bahá'í qualities and spirit.

3. This World Is Dark, It Must Be Changed into a

Universe of Light

“O ye friends of God and assistants of ‘Abdu’l-Bahá!

“What can I write, and what can I say? That which is in the heart can be neither translated into words nor written on paper, and that which can be moulded into phrases cannot express the susceptibilities of the heart and conscience; therefore, I address you, O ye real friends: — Turn the mirrors of your hearts toward mine. Unquestionably the mysteries of this heart shall become reflected upon yours, and the emotions of this longing one will become evident and manifest in all regions.

“The world is black; the Divine Bestowal is Radiant. This blackness must be changed into light, and this narrow, dark sphere be transformed into a vast, illimitable universe of illumination. The body of the world is a dead corpse, it must be resuscitated; it is withered. it must be made fresh and blooming; it is extinct, it must be enkindled; it is the arena for the expression of animosity, it must be made the dawning-place of love and good fellowship; it is the origin of the emanation of contention, we must make it the axis around which revolves unity; it is the exposition for the baser qualities which lead to eternal disgrace, we must make it the rising-point for the refulgent rays of the Everlasting Glory. The stranger must be instructed in the lesson of neighborliness; the heedless ones be made aware; the enemies must be loved and the hateful ones be shown kindness. We must become flaming torches and burning Fires of God. We must move the world, and illuminate the dark globe. {{p243}} All this depends upon the effort of the friends and the sacrifice of the beloved ones.”

4. Attraction Is Not Realized Save through Teaching

the Cause of God

“O thou servant of the Almighty! Beg of God that in this world which is groaning with pains and troubles, thou mayst aspire to a breath of rest and that in this sorrow-begirdled globe, thou mayst obtain happiness. This Bestowal will not become unveiled and this Grace will not adorn the Assemblage of the heart except through severance from all else save God and by complete concentration upon the kingdom of Abhá. This severance and attention will not be obtained save by attraction to the Fragrances of God, and by enkindlement with the Fire of the Love of God. This attraction and enkindlement will not be realized except through teaching the Cause of God and by firmness and steadfastness in the Covenant and Testament of God. Upon thee be Abhá, and upon every one who is severed, attentive, attracted and enkindled; conveying the message while he is firm and steadfast....”

5. Confer upon Every One Spiritual Joy

“O thou who art exhilarated with the Cup of the True One:

“Thou hast the desire to render a great service at the Threshold of the Almighty. Happy art thou that thou art confirmed with this bounteous aim. Today, ecstasy and yearning at the Threshold of God, enkindlement with the Fire of the Love of God, attraction with the Fragrance of God and the Song and melody of the Supreme Concourse, are true service. Be thou an ignited torch and cast upon all people the reflection of its rays Enkindle the Fire of Love and burn away all veils Confer upon every one spiritual joy and gladness and manifest a merciful nature and disposition. {{p244}} Deliver men from prison and lead them to the Court of Guidance.”

6. A Poetic Tablet, Like a Bouquet of Fragrant

Flowers

“O ye who are intoxicated with the Wine of God!

“The Breeze of the Merciful is wafting from the rose-garden of Eternity, the luminous Morn hath dawned from the horizon of significances; the clarion Call reaches to the ears from the Kingdom of Abhá; the melody of the wisdom of the nightingale of the meadow of sanctity is raised; the Paradise of unity and the orchard of Abstraction are opened and luxuriant; the roses of idealism, and the flowers of the merciful verities are laughing and blooming; the hyacinths and anemones are fresh and full of fragrance; the trees of the divine Garden are fruitful, their roots firm in the ground; the rivers of life are flowing; the fountain of unending Grace is gushing forth, leaping playfully on and on; the liberty-loving Cypress has raised its branches toward the sky; the longing dove is cooing; the real Leila with a rosy-cheeked Countenance is manifest; the Manjun of Consciousness with burning heart is evident.”

RAMLEH, EGYPT, AUGUST 27, 1913.

1. This Is the Seed-sowing Time

Teaching the word of God — spreading the Glad-tidings of the Kingdom — conveying the Message of Unity and raising the Flag of International Peace hold the foremost ground in the Bahá’í Cause. {{p244}} When we receive certain heavenly privileges and spiritual distinctions, we must share them with the rest of our fellow men. The very fact that we have received, connotes the, idea of giving. By-teaching, our own knowledge will be increased. When the water is not constantly flowing, it ‘ will stagnate, no matter how crystalline and pure. If you have a handful of seeds, you must sew them during the season, so that you may gather a goodly crop at the harvest. Now this is the seed-sowing time of the Kingdom of Brotherhood. This and this alone will yield fruit. We must, like wise farmers, get up early in the morning, and go about our business with no other thought in our minds except sowing the seeds. We must sow all the seeds that God has given us, and if we have scattered all our stock, he stands ready to replenish it from his invisible storehouse. Once the seeds are sown; the sun of Providence will shine forth, the Breeze of Mercy will waft, the rain of clemency will pour down, causing the growing of the field, waving with a soft, beautiful verdancy and soon attaining to the stage of fruition — the sheaves laden with golden corns. Then is the time of rejoicing for the farmer, because the result of his labor and industry is spread before his eyes.

2. This Is the Day in Which to Lay the Foundations of the House

Before everything else we must lay the foundation. Then go out and gather mortar, stones, bricks, lime, hauling machinery and laborers to build the house. What benefit will accrue to us if we buy the furniture or utensils before the house is ready? How can we build the roof before the structural framework is put together? A wise builder lays a good basis for his house, collects all the necessary material, and then goes on, step by step, in its construction. {{p246}} ‘Abdu’l-Bahá has shown through his life, and deeds how this is the most important work of the Cause. The autumn and winter seasons will come in due time. Our supreme duty now is to arise unanimously for the awakening of souls! Should we follow the example of the Divine Farmer, we will reap a great crop in the harvest season, we will see the reflections of our contented faces in the mirror of the Kingdom, and will observe our names inscribed upon the scroll of time with the pen of light. The friends all over the world are longing to serve the Cause. Praise be to God that their aims are humanitarian, their ideas are lofty, their love for the Truth manifest, their eagerness to diffuse the lights of the Sun of Reality evident and their spiritual susceptibilities warm and aglowing. They are servants of the world of humanity, and heralds of the Kingdom of Light. May they become confirmed to teach the Cause with a new fervor and inspiration!

In a Tablet written by ‘Abdu’l-Bahá several years ago, he says:

3. Our Efforts Must Be Centralized About the

Spreading of the Cause

“The believers with the utmost steadfastness and firmness must engage in the teaching of the Cause. They must become united and agreed. They are all the drops of one river, waves of one sea, breezes of one garden, streams flowing from one fountain, birds soaring toward one apex, hyacinths adorning one Park, intoxicated with one wine and their hearts ravished with one melody.... It is hoped that the friends may become sanctified and holy above all earthly conditions and in concord and harmony, in unity of identity, unity of quality, unity of opinion and unity of thought, set an example for all the believers of other countries and become the spiritual leaders in this arena. {{p247}} Now all aims must verge toward one spring, and all efforts be centralized in one object, and that is: the diffusion of the Fragrances of the Merciful, and the promulgation of the Word of the Almighty. The time of systematization and crystallization shall come. It has not yet arrived. The aim of all the friends must be this: — the diffusion of the Fragrances of Holiness. When a man's efforts are concentrated on this one object, he will undoubtedly reflect the confirmation of the Manifest Light. Except for the guidance of souls, no other cause is equally confirmed. If any person entertains other thoughts than this, he will unquestionably regret them.

“During the season of seed-sowing you cannot gather a crop and at the time of irrigation, harvesting is unthinkable. The soul who, during the summer season, engages in planting trees, will not reap any reward, for that is the season of fruit-gathering, and not that of tree-planting. In short, the purpose is this: During the season of the Divine Spring we must occupy all our time in seed-sowing and irrigation, and not in harvesting and crop-collecting.”

This morning ‘Abdu’l-Bahá called on Mírzá Abu’l-Faḍl, and spoke with him for half an hour on the importance of teaching the Cause in this day, and of the subserviency of all other ideas to the idea of promoting the word of God. In the evening he entertained a Russian Prince and a number of Arab Shaykhs at his home.

Letters and cablegrams are pouring in from all parts of the world. {{p248}} The Master is daily growing stronger, and is attending to all the innumerable duties which are laid on his shoulders.

1. The Life of the East and the West and of How the

Bahá’í Movement Unites Them

The spiritual life of the East is calm and uplifting. It has a celestial outlook. It purifies one's aims. It ennobles the character. It changes the satan into the angel. There is a subtle influence in this life which works like magic over the hearts of men. It steadies the nerves, confers an equipoise, intensifies spiritual feelings and bestows mental calmness and serenity. The realization of the power of faith and prayer dawns upon the mind; the divine Presence is felt as never before and the holy light breaks upon the dark chambers of the heart. Those who have lived in the East and have experienced this feeling cannot describe it in words. It is a fire the flame of which sets aglow many hearts, and which inspires the imagination with pictures of heavenly attributes.

While the life of the East on the one hand is sweetly contemplative, the life of the West is energetically active; the former is a calm river, the latter a rushing cyclone. One interprets life subjectively, the other elucidates it objectively. The Bahá'í Movement establishes a balance between the two poles. The materialism of the occident is imbued with spirit and the unproductive mysticism of the Orient is discountenanced when work is constituted as worship. {{p249}} Thus the Bahá'í Cause is in a position to help both hemispheres with its new spiritual philosophy. 'Abdu'l-Bahá is daily working for the consummation of this object.

2. 'Abdu'l-Bahá Writes on the Future Condition of ### Women

This morning we got glimpses of 'Abdu'l-Bahá as he passed by our house two or three times. He was busy all day. In the evening, the correspondent of the Agdam, published in Cairo, called on him and had a long interview. These days, the Master is devoting much of his time to writing Tablets for the Persian believers. He is fulfilling his promise, that after his return from America and Europe, he would answer all their petitions. I produce herein the translation of one of these Tablets on the "Feminist Question," — one that is very opportune. It is as follows:

"O thou my beloved daughter! Thy eloquent and fluent letter was perused in a garden, under the cool shade of a tree, while the gentle breeze was wafting. The means of physical enjoyment was spread before the eyes and thy letter became the cause of spiritual enjoyment. Truly, I say, it was not a letter, but a rose-garden adorned with hyacinths and flowers. It contained the sweet Fragrances of Paradise and the Zephyr of Divine Love blew from its roseate words.

"As I have not ample time at my disposal, I will give herein a brief answer. It is as follows: — In the revelation of Bahá'u'lláh, men and women stand shoulder to shoulder. In no instance will the women be left behind. Their rights with men are in equal degree. They will enter into all the administrative branches of the body politic. They will attain to such a high plane that they will be honored in the very highest station of the world of humanity and will take part in all affairs. {{p250}} Rest ye assured of this! Do not look upon present conditions; in the not distant future the world of women will become all-refulgent and all-glorious. For His Holiness Bahá'u'lláh hath willed it so. At the time of elections the right to vote is the inalienable prerogative of women, and their admittance to all the departments of life an irrefutable and incontestable right. No soul can retard or prevent it. But there are certain matters, participation in which, is not worthy of woman. For example, at the time when the community is taking up vigorous defensive measures against the attack of foes, the women are exempt from military engagements. It may so happen that at a given time, warlike and savage tribes may furiously attack the body politic with the intention of carrying on a wholesale slaughter of its members; under such circumstances defense is necessary; and it is the duty of the men and not of the women to organize and execute such defensive measures, because the women's hearts are tender, and cannot endure the sight of horror and carnage, even if it is for the sake of defense. For such, and similar undertakings, the women are exempt.

“As regards the Constitution of the House of Justice, Bahá’u’lláh, in the Book of Aqdas, addressed the men, saying: — ‘O ye men of the House of Justice!’ but (when the members are being elected) the right which belongs to women, so far as their voting and their voice is concerned, is indisputable. When women attain to the ultimate degree of progress, then, according to the exigencies of time and place, and of their capacity, they shall obtain extraordinary privileges. Be ye confident on this account. His Holiness Bahá’u’lláh has greatly strengthened the Cause of women and their rights and privileges are the special principles of ‘Abdu’l-Bahá. {{p251}} Rest ye assured! Ere long the day will come when the men, addressing the women will say: — Blessed are ye! Blessed are ye! Verily ye are worthy of every gift, and deserve to adorn your heads with the Crown of Everlasting Glory; because in sciences and arts, in virtues and perfections, ye have become equal to men and as regards the tenderness of heart and the abundance of mercy and sympathy, ye are superior.

I received several letters from England, France and America, each containing cheering news of the steady growth of the beloved Cause.

1. The College Life and Its Expected Results

One of the Persian poets says:

“All the means are prepared for thee, and yet thou art sitting idle.

The outcome of school and college years must be a useful life for the community. If a child is possessed of happy surroundings, if fortune has smiled upon him, he must avail himself of these opportunities and daily prepare himself — so that when he leaves college, he may enter upon the stage of life, ready to act his part with confidence.

In a spiritual way we are all the children of the Heavenly Father. He has prepared for us the means of advancement. He has placed within our reach the instruments {{p252}} whereby we may obtain an ideal education and fit ourselves for the service of humanity. He has given us lessons in many ways. He has encouraged us with words of wisdom, and has pointed out the glorious goal. Yet some of us play truant, do not learn our lessons, and at the time of examination fail. Do you not think the Father will feel sad and keenly disappointed, when he finds that His years of solicitude have brought no results? Let us, therefore, be the studious children of Truth; avail ourselves of all the opportunities prepared for us — so that throughout our lives we may give happiness to others and fulfill the expectation of the Great Teacher.

2. A Talk by an Old Bahá'í on the Sins of Backbiting

“El-ya-hou” is an old Bahá'í. In years gone by he was a Jew before becoming a Bahá'í, he is well conversant with the prophesies of the Old Testament. He has a sweet nature and loves ‘Abdu’l-Bahá more than words can express. In the course of conversation he told us that the Cause of the Blessed Perfection is the reality of Love and the means of unity and concord amongst the children of men; so that all of them may become the waves of one sea, the radiant stars studded in one illimitable sphere, the brilliant pearls of the shell of unity and the sparkling gems of the mine of singleness; thus may they serve each other from their hearts; praise and commend each other; unloose their tongues in manifesting the good qualities of each, and thank the Lord for His Graces and Gifts. They must look toward the horizon of everlasting Glory and as they attribute themselves to Bahá'u'lláh, they must see no evil, and never speak of the faults of others. They must shut their ears to all gossip and {{p253}} backbiting. They must be spiritual beings, with spiritual qualities. A number of souls are walking in this straight path, and, praise be to God, are assisted and confirmed in all countries; but others have not yet reached this exalted, and supreme station, and are not fully established in this Divine Principle. This is a cause of great grief to the heart of ‘Abdu’l-Bahá. There is no greater obstacle to the Cause of God than faultfinding and no greater handicap for the word of God. The friends of God must become the essences of union and accord, enter under the unicolored tent of the Almighty, the expression of one great Ideal, walk in one road, forget conflicting opinions, and leave behind them their divergent views. Then ‘Abdu’l-Bahá will be pleased with them, because he sees that they have dedicated all their thoughts and energies to the promotion of Love and affection, throwing into the corner of oblivion their differences, and growing in the image and likeness of the Creator.

Thus “El-ya-hou” spoke from the depth of his heart.

3. Permission Given to Persian Bahá'í Students to Come to Ramleh

Today we did not see ‘Abdu’l-Bahá, but he sent me several cablegrams to be forwarded to various parts of the world. One of these was to Haifa giving permission to half of the Bahá'í students to come to Ramleh. There are about thirty young Persian Bahá'ís who are students in the American College in Beirut. As this is vacation time they are spending their summer on Mount Carmel. In a few days, half of them will arrive, the other half will come later. To-night we had a meeting at the House of Khurasání. Mírzá Maḥmúd spoke on the trip of ‘Abdu’l-Bahá to Edinburgh. {{p254}} There were many Bahá'ís of different nationalities.

4. ‘Abdu’l-Bahá Praises Mrs. Besant, President of the

Theosophical Society

An interesting Tablet was sent to Mr. Graham Pole, the Editor of the Scotland Theosophy in Edinburgh, in which ‘Abdu’l-Bahá refers to Mrs. Besant, the President of the Theosophical Society. As he has spoken before many of their societies in various cities, both in the United States and Europe, it will not be out of place to quote it herein, so that the friends may become informed of its contents:

“O THOU MY BELOVED FRIEND!

“Thy letter was received from India. From its contents it became evident that thou art occupied, and art spending thy days in the company of that respected lady, Mrs. Besant. I hope thou mayst be ever happy, serene, confirmed and assisted; so that thou mayst become able to render a signal service to the respected lady, Mrs. Besant. The ideal of Mrs. Besant, I say truly is very lofty. She is working and laboring most valiantly, and her utmost hope is to render a service to the world of humanity, and to be the means of the establishment of good-fellowship and love between all the communities of the earth. At all times I am praying in her behalf, so that the Confirmations of the Kingdom may surround her, that she may sow the seed of service in pure, productive soil; and that she may gather many, many harvests; then the heavenly benediction Will be obtained, the outpourings of the Holy Spirit realized, and her services, troubles and hardships crowned with eternal results. I desire this station for her.

“Consider how many important women have come into this world! How many queens have lived upon this earth! {{p255}} How many distinguished ladies have become the presidents of Societies! But neither have their names nor any great account of their deeds been left behind! Yet Mary Magdalene, who was only a peasant woman, — because she became inspired to serve the Kingdom of Christ and to scatter his seeds in productive ground — what a great crop she gathered! And through the blessing of that harvest, they are even now building churches in her name! In all the Churches the people glorify and praise her and now, after 1900 years, ‘Abdu’l-Bahá is speaking of her lofty station! He testifies to the fact, that, in the Kingdom of Christ she served more than all the apostles. She even became the cause of the firmness and steadfastness of the Apostles, for, accordingly to the Text of the Gospels, their faith wavered after the crucifixion, but Mary Magdalene inspired them with resolution, and certainly. Consider what a service she rendered to the Kingdom of Christ! That is why, like unto a star, she is shining from the horizon of Eternity.

”Convey my most respectful greeting to the revered Lady, Mrs Besant.

”Upon thee be greeting and praise.

(Signed) ‘ABDU’L-BAHÁ ‘ABBÁS.”

While in America and Europe ‘Abdu’l-Bahá often stated that the Bahá’ís must associate with the Theosophists because they were nearer to this Cause than many other groups.

RAMLEH, EGYPT, AUGUST 30, 1913.

1. Spread of Bahá'í Cause in the Interior of Turkey

‘Abdu’l-Bahá received a letter from the interior of Turkey, the city of Antab where the Bahá'í Cause is being spread. He read to us a portion of it which describes a lecture given by an Armenian before an audience of five hundred people. The lecturer dwelt upon the trip of the Master of Europe and America, and gave a synopsis of the Teachings. What interested the audience more than anything else was the principle of the Conformity of Science and Religion, philosophy and faith. Science and religion, he told them, have always been in accord, but the despicable, accursed, satans (‘Ulamás) have always sown seed of discord between them. The Master laughed heartily when he read the above conclusion.

2. Let the American Friends Wait

Then he gave each of us the letters just received in our names and while we were sitting in his presence, he wrote several Tablets with his own hand. At last he told us that he was trying to make amends for the past and was devoting all his time to the Oriental friends. Before leaving for America, he wrote that the Bahá'ís must excuse him from any letter-writing, but that after his return he would correspond with them as of old, and now he was fulfilling his promise.

When we left I ventured to say that many petitions from America and Europe were accumulating and solicited his attention. He answered me in a humorous fashion; wait, wait a little longer. Let him now attend to the Persian believers, and the turn of my American friends would come soon.

When we left his house, we were all intoxicated with his divine Love. {{p257}} During our interview the Master spoke a great deal with Mírzá Jalál, because one of the Princes of Persia taught by him had written him a letter.

3. Story of How a Bahá'í Feast Was Given in Baghdád

Mírzá Jamál, our cook, told us a story about a feast in Baghdád.

“The Bahá'ís in Baghdád,” he said, “were not rich, but were firm and filled with fervor. They kept the nineteen day feast. One morning they sent word to one of the friends that the Feast would be held in his house. He touched his pockets and there was no money. What should he do? He had a watch which he had bought for ten majidis. He took it out of his pocket and sent it to the bazaar to be sold at auction. Accidentally one of the Bahá'ís passed by and recognized the watch. He stopped, and saw that it was going to be sold for two majidis. He raised the price half a dollar and bought it. Quietly he carried it home. When night came, he went to the meeting, and after the refreshments were served, he approached the host and, taking the watch out of his pocket offered it to him as a present. The host was very much surprised, but delighted. All the friends were pleased when they heard the story.

4. ‘Abdu’l-Bahá Writes on the Nineteen-day Feast

I may now conclude by quoting from a Tablet, which ‘Abdu’l-Bahá writes to Mr. Jos. Hannen:

“O thou who art firm in the Covenant!

“Thy third report was received and its contents imparted the utmost exhilaration. The 19-day Feast was the Lord’s Supper, and its results are eternalized. Although physically ‘Abdu’l-Bahá was far away, he was present in that meeting with heart and soul. {{p258}} Truly I say, it was a glorious feast, perfect in every way. Do not ye look upon the present, nay rather, look into the future. The Lord’s Supper during the lifetime of that divine Light, had no importance in the estimation of the public; but consider how the rays of that sun of Reality illumined that meeting afterward... O thou my kind, Mr. Hannen! I am most pleased with thy service, and I hope that these services of thine shall make thee a standard in the Divine Kingdom. Announce the utmost kindness to Mrs. Hannen. If Mrs. Hannen can undertake to spread broadcast the diary letters which are forwarded to you from the East concerning the travel and sojourn of ‘Abdu’l-Bahá, it is very acceptable....”

5. The Muḥammadan Month of Fasting Comes to an End

In two days the month of Ramaḍán will come to a close and all restrictions will be taken away. There will be general feasting and five holidays. To the Muḥammadans, this is one of the most important occasions for joy-making and for calling on each other. Already the air is full of expectation for the coming feast!

1. The Story of the Blind Man and the Serpent

“When I was in Seesan,” said Mírzá Jalál Síná, “the friends of God brought to me a very old man with a patriarchal beard, and wished me to speak to him about the Cause. {{p259}} They had often told him of the teachings, but with no evident result. He was simple, yet fanatical, tender-hearted, yet full of religious superstitions. At heart a child, in body a Hercules. He had the strength of a lion, yet his firm belief in dogmas, inspired him with apprehension as to his future. With rough and uncouth gestures he entered the room and squatting on the floor cried out: — ‘Tell me now, what have you to say? I have no patience to sit through a long sermon!’ Immediately I got, as in a flash of lightning, how I must handle this overgrown child of nature. I told him — ‘My friend! I have really nothing to tell you but with your permission I shall relate a story. Will you give me your ears?’ ‘Forsooth I shall. I do love to hear a good story with a moral to it,’ he said, his face already brightening with interest. ‘All right, then listen with attention: — Once upon a time there was a man of good position and fortune. As a public servant he ranked high in the estimation of the members of society. He had a palatial residence, and his servants were innumerable. His stable, stocked with Arabian and Persian horses was the pride of the neighborhood. Many famous men sat at his table and ate of his bounteous food. He dispensed hospitality like a prince, and received people of all ranks with royal courtesy and lavish splendor. As time rolled on the heaven of his fortune became beclouded, and like the thunders of the sky, successive reverses overtook him, breaking the mountain of his wealth into a thousand pieces. Soon he found himself in complete poverty. By this time all his old friends had left him, and in the hour of destitution, no one would condescend to so much as recognize him. From height of opulence, he was thrown headlong into the depth of despair and indigence. As though these humiliations were not enough, the Fates visited him again and made him totally blind. {{p260}} Now indeed, the cup of his sorrow was full to overflowing, and all doors were closed forever before his face. He was considered an outcast, and no one would associate with him. Finally through this chain of circumstances, he was forced to become a beggar in the public square. One cold morning in the winter, he left his dirty hovel and went to his accustomed place. While he was walking, his feet stumbled against something. He knelt down and searched for it. He felt a long sinewy thing in his hand and thought it was a silk whip of some special value. He took hold of it and he walked along unconcerned. A passer-by, frightened by the sight of the object being carried by the blind beggar, cried out: — ‘Man! Man! Dost thou not see what thou art holding in thy hands? It is a serpent, it will bite thee. It will kill thee. Throw it away quickly.’ ‘No, indeed. No indeed!’ the blind man retorted angrily. ‘This is a silk whip which costs at least five majidis. Feel it with thy fingers, how soft it is. No! I shall not listen to thee. Thou art a covetous, greedy beggar and wantest me to throw it away so that thou mayst take it up and sell it.’ ‘Really, my friend! This is a poisonous serpent, but the cold weather has benumbed it, and soon the rays of the sun will bring it to life.’ ‘No! No! Don’t talk to me like that. I will not throw it away. If thou art very anxious to have it, I will sell it to thee for four instead of five majidis.’ By and by a large crowd gathered, each one calling upon him to throw away the seemingly dead serpent, but he, having lost all confidence in humanity, persisted in believing that it was a whip. In order to show his utter contempt of public opinion, he folded the serpent and placed it near to his skin, standing erect in the already rising sun, in the horrified sight of the spectators. ‘What art thou doing? Art thou thine own enemy? The serpent will sting thee with its venomous fangs. Cast it away while there is yet time.’ {{p261}} No! the more they insisted, the closer he hugged it to his breast. The serpent, warming up under the downpour of the rays of the star of the day, started to move slowly up and down the body of the beggar, stinging him several times. He shrieked and cried with pain, then fell to the ground in terrible agony. The deadly poison working up rapidly through his body caused his death.

“Now, my old friend, thou art in the position of that blind beggar, because thou art hugging to thy heart the old, superannuated symbols of a decayed and dying religion which will not benefit thee in the least. That serpent, however, caused the death of only the body; this serpent causes the death of the spirit. During the past years all these friends of thine have testified that the old form of religion will not be conducive to thy salvation, but like the old beggar, blindly, thou art in thine obstinacy persisting in that this is the silk whip — my religion is good enough for me — and not a serpent. The serpent of superstition, ignorance and dogma is next to thy skin, and these men cry out to thee to cast it away; so that thy spiritual life may be saved, but no, thou wilt have none of their advice. I portrayed his inner condition so vividly that he commenced to shake and weep. From that time on he became a dweller in the kingdom of Abhá, and a most progressive member of the community.”

‘Abdu’l-Bahá went to Alexandria this morning and in order to have some papers signed by the judge, he presented himself to the court.

During the evening he came to our house for half an hour, and the talk was on the coming national Fete of Ramaḍán.

1. The Watermelons of ‘Akká

We have received fine watermelons from ‘Akká. ‘Abdu’l-Qásim sent ten big ones for the Master and he forwarded six of them to our house. If we cannot go to ‘Akká now, at least the watermelons of ‘Akká come to us. While we were enjoying them, I said that I wished that I could send one of them to America to show the friends how big and juicy are the watermelons of ‘Akká. Mírzá Maḥmúd laughingly said: “Thou wouldst have sent it if thou didst know how!”

2. ‘Abdu’l-Bahá, and the Story of the Policemen

of Ramleh

Arising early this morning Khusraw entertained us with some sidelights on the current events. He sleeps in this house and goes to the Master’s home a little after sunrise to begin his work. This morning he delayed his departure, and explained the reason as follows:

“All the policemen in this quarter have received generous gifts of money and presents from the Master. there is one who stands in Khusraw’s way every morning and tells him a long story, so that he may repeat it to the Master who may give him some money. ‘I have three children. My salary is not sufficient and since the Páshá, His Excellency ('Abdu'l-Bahá) has come here, a new hope has dawned from the horizon of my heart. One of my children goes to school, and for him I have bought a pair of new shoes for the coming feast. {{p263}} The other two who are only a few years old, left stealthily their small beds last night and came to me without any noise. They woke me gently and said: "Papa, papa, we are the Furies. If thou dost not buy two other pairs of shoes for us, we may strangle thee right now." I laughed and hugged them to my breast and sent them back to their beds with a promise that if they are good, behave well and obey their mother, then probably the new "Páshá" may give them the shoes. Now, please, Khusraw Effendi, tell this to "Páshá." Other policemen whose duties are patrolling in other quarters come to Khusraw and ask him: "How long is the new 'Páshá' going to live here?" He says: "Probably one month!" "Good, good! because after two weeks this quarter will be assigned to us and then the 'Páshá' may be as generous toward us as he has been to others."

3. 'Abdu'l-Bahá Talks on the Power of Imagination

Ḥájí Níáz arrived this afternoon from Cairo and brought us the good wishes of the believers. He is the same happy old man with a nature of sunshine and good will toward all. About 6 o'clock 'Abdu'l-Bahá passed by and called on Mírzá Abu'l-Faḍl. After a few moments Shoghi Effendi returned and brought me the good news that I was summoned by the Master. I stood before him on the veranda. He was speaking to Mírzá Abu'l-Faḍl on "imagination," quoting the epigram of an Oriental Philosopher: "Imagination is the greatest ruler in the human world." No matter how scientific a man may be, yet at time, "imagination" gains an ascendancy over his mind. For example, while a man is alive he is able to strike, to beat, to kill, yet you sleep with him in the same room. When he is dead, science teaches us that his body {{p264}} returns to the mineral kingdom. He can neither strike, nor kill. The body lies there like a piece of stone, inanimate. But you would not sleep with it in the same room. What is the reason of this? It is the power of imagination. It grips you with its imperial energy and overwhelms you with invisible force. All the convincing proofs of science will not induce you to live in the same room with a corpse.

Then he related a dramatic story to further illustrate the subject, but as soon as he finished it, he turned to me and said: "Don't write this." He could see in my face how deeply interested I was! Ere long, he fell into a deep heavenly silence, and the beautiful atmosphere was permeated with a languorous quietness and peace. The brilliant hosts of the sky were arrayed in shining armor of white light, fighting bravely against the deepening darkness. With the ears of the spirit we could hear them chanting and praising, because the face of the earth was illumined by the Face of its Lord.

4. Oriental Bahá'ís Portray “Natural Spirituality”

Returning home, I found a number of the friends engaged in conversation. How happy, how carefree, how detached these people seem to me! They are beings created and fashioned in other worlds. Their happiness, their joy, their detachment are all so natural, so unconscious, so outflowing from the springs of their hearts. There is no affectation, no sanctimony, no religiosity. They do not try to be spiritual. It is not through the exercise of the will. How well ‘Abdu’l-Bahá echoes the secrets of their inmost hearts when he writes in a recent Tablet: —

“The days of human existence are like vanishing shadows. With the utmost rapidity they are brought to a close. {{p265}} From amongst mankind those who live a heedless life are at the end, afflicted with manifest loss. For the days of their lives will come to a sudden close, leaving no leaves, no blossoms and no fruit. They shall remain in the lowest degree, and no mention of them will be left behind. From kings to servants all walk in this path and live in this circle, except those souls who are freed from all ties. They are not greedy after comfort, nor are they seeking fleeting pleasures. They are not longing for honor, neither are they chasing phantasmal pictures of glory and wealth. They are the devotees (or veterans) of the Blessed Perfection and are in the utmost state of renunciation and evanescence. They are wanderers over mountains and deserts. They call the people to the kingdom of God, and are the cause of the guidance of souls. Like unto candles they are ignited with all the virtues of the world of humanity. This is Everlasting Glory! This is Eternal Life! This is the divine sublimity of the Creation of God!”

Daily the cord of correspondence between the East and the West is becoming stronger, and the interchange of ideas more common. Each one of us must do our humble part, no matter where we are; so that the millennium for the coming of which we pray, may soon be established between all peoples and nations and tongues.

RAMLEH, EGYPT, SEPTEMBER 2, 1913.

1. Moving Picture Theatres in Egypt

This is the second greatest feast in the Muḥammadan world, — the feast celebrating the passing of the month of Ramaḍán. {{p266}} In a way it fills the place of the New Year in America. It is called the Feast of “Beyram” and is a national holiday. All the government departments, offices and stores are closed for from one to five days. The older people pay visits to each other, and the younger generation dressed in bright colors, receive gifts and presents, and eat much candy to their great delight. Although the thin air of sadness broods over many hearts owing to the Balkan wars, yet the general impression is that of happiness, gaiety and fun. Life to a simple-hearted Arab is like a moving picture gallery, and he loves to see the scenes of creation unfolding before his eyes without leaving his seat; to this we may attribute the springing up of many nickelodeons and cheap show-places all over Egypt who advertise their pictures in a lurid and sensational manner. These show-places attract a large clientele of heterogeneous elements. On a day such as this, the managers, mostly Italians, Greeks and Levantines, reap a golden harvest.

2. The Feast of Ramaḍán and Its Spirit of Joy

On the other hand, the religious spirit of the people finds expression in the gorgeous decorations of the mosques and in long hours of prayers and preaching.

Last night Mírzá ‘Alí-Akbar brought three kinds of candies for the callers today, so this morning they were put on different plates ready to be served. The Samovar was boiling and the tea brewing. I was dressed and walking on the veranda, when I saw ‘Abdu’l-Bahá coming toward our house. {{p267}} I was glad to look into his face on this Fete day, and my heart sang the songs of joy. What else really do we want except his good pleasure? Is there anything more worth while? Do we not live and move and have our being in him? Is he not the supreme object of our lives? The sun of his unalloyed peace shines upon all and everybody is contented.

How thoughtful and beautiful of the Master to call on Mírzá Abu’l-Faḍl before anybody else! Is it not just like him?

By the time he returned to us a number of believers and outsiders had gathered on the veranda. He greeted them with affability, and afterwards he wished them a happy and blessed “Beyram.” Then tea and candy were served in turn. He beamed on the friends with heavenly joy and cabled to the Bahá’í world the glad news: “My health is perfect.”

3. Talk on Education and the Story of a Selfish

Mother

The subject of his talk was “Education” and the duty of mothers toward their children, — a most appropriate message to go out to the world of motherhood.

He stated that fathers and especially mothers must always think how best they should educate their children, not how to fondle and embrace them too much and thus spoil them. By every means at their disposal, they must knead onto their growing bodies, souls, minds and spirits the basic principles of sincerity, love, trustfulness, obedience, true democracy and kindness toward all races; thus, hereafter the world-civilization may flow in one mighty current and the children of future generations may secure the foundation of human solidarity and good-will. {{p268}} From tenderest childhood, the children must be taught by their mothers the love of God, and the love of humanity; not the love of humanity of Asia nor the humanity of Europe, nor the humanity of America, but the “humanity of humanity”. There are some mothers who have a strange, inexplicable love for their children. One may call it the inversion of love, or as we call it in Persia, “Bearish love”. This kind of love does more injury to the child than good. When ‘Abdu’l-Bahá was in ‘Akká, during the life of the Blessed Perfection, he entrusted the son of one of the believers to a German carpenter. After a month the mother went to Bahá’u’lláh and lamented and bemoaned that she wanted her son, because he was unhappy with the carpenter, who cursed his religion. Bahá’u’lláh told her to consult with Áqá (‘Abdu’l-Bahá) and abide by his decision. She went to ‘Abdu’l-Bahá and after telling her side of the story, he said to her: ‘The Germans do not curse any one. They are not accustomed to it.’ She went away and after a month called again with another complaint, saying that this carpenter had forced her son to carry a load of wheat on his back. Again ‘Abdu’l-Bahá told her that if the carpenter had done this, it was for her son’s discipline. Outwardly ‘Abdu’l-Bahá satisfied her, but she was murmuring inwardly. A few months rolled by and she returned with another set of complaints, frankly confessing that she did not want her son to be away from her, for he was the apple of her eye. Realizing how selfish her love was, ‘Abdu’l-Bahá told her at last that he would not take her son away, but that he must stay with the carpenter for eight years, until his apprenticeship was over. She yielded to the inevitable. After eight years of study the son left his master, and his mother was very proud of him, because his work was in demand on all sides. {{p269}} In short, mothers must not think of themselves, but of the progress of their children, because upon the children of today — depends the molding of the civilization of tomorrow.

All day telegrams poured in from the leaders and important men of Turkey, Egypt, Arabia, etc., congratulating ‘Abdu’l-Bahá on this Fete and wishing him a happy “Beyram”!

4. Story of the Theologian and the Sea Captain

There was a caller on ‘Abdu’l-Bahá, a theological student of the College of Azhar, and the discussion turned upon the utter futility of Muḥammadan theology and metaphysics, and of how some young men wasted their lives on the study of this one branch for twenty or thirty years. Once there was a theologian who took a sea trip. While he was pacing the deck and watching the calm sea, the captain passed by and inquired about his health. Our friend was so full of his theology that he asked the captain: “Dost thou know theology? He answered “No.” “Then,” the student declared with much pompous dignity, “half thy life is lost.” The captain did not answer him but continued his walk. Next day the sea became very stormy, and the ship was in danger of being wrecked. The captain called on the theologian and found him prostrated with sickness. “Dost thou know how to swim?” he asked. “No.” “Then all thy life is lost,” the captain thundered at him. And you should have heard the Master laugh. Then he quoted several of their metaphysical, hair-splitting axioms over each one of which the theologians wrangle and dispute days and nights.

5. Story of a Metaphysician and the Correction of

His Book by a Teacher

Another time, a theological poet, after several years of hardship and privation, finished a book and took it to a learned man to be read and corrected. He read the book and found that the contents were very much like the cobwebs of a spider, or the phantasmal imaginings of a sickly brain. {{p270}} Therefore he marked the first and the last pages, thus conveying the fact that the book was not worth correcting.

In the afternoon the Master sent all of us to the garden of Nozha. We had a pleasant time and on our return we heard that he had been entertaining many Arabs, first at our house and then at that of Mírzá Abu'l-Faḍl.

6. Study of Science and True Religion Must Be

Combined

At noon 'Abdu'l-Bahá told us that he did not mean that religious study must be neglected, but that practical sciences should be learned, so that the lives of the students might become useful. In the future, the theological seminaries must discard all their dogmas which are contradictory to science and reason, and lay a basic foundation, not to be destroyed by the fretting tooth of time. We hope that they will accomplish this task.

RAMLEH, EGYPT, SEPTEMBER 3, 1913.

1. Persian Bahá'í Students of American College

Arrive

Last night eleven young Bahá'ís arrived from Haifa. They are students in the American College at Beirut. and have been passing their summer vacation on Mount Carmel, waiting impatiently for permission to visit the Master. {{p271}} These are not all of them. When the present party leaves for Haifa, another one composed of an equal or larger number, will come. They are all young boys from 8 to 18 years. studying in various branches of science, and equipping themselves to become useful members of the body politic. Morally pure, intellectually keen, spiritually susceptible, mentally alive, they combine with these qualities rare power of reserve, simplicity, naturalness and dignity of character, seldom to be witnessed in other youths of the same age. Every one knows by memory many communes and supplications, and this morning after drinking tea, they sat around and chanted Tablets. The American spirit of freedom and activity is in their constitutions. They will become fine and progressive citizens of Persia, when they return to that country. Although their names may sound unfamiliar to our American friends across the ocean, yet they may be of interest. They are as follows: — Mírzá 'Azíz'u'lláh Khán, Mírzá 'Alí-Muḥammad Khán, Mírzá ‘Adu’l-Ḥusayn Khán, Mírzá Maḥmúd Khán, Mírzá ‘Abdu’l-Ḥasan Khán, all of Shíráz; Mírzá Aflatún of Hamadán, Mírzá ‘Alí Áqá of Rasht, Mírzá Maḥmúd Khán of Isfahán, Qudsí Effendi of Haifa and Áqá Siyyid Gasem of Sabzivár.

‘Abdu’l-Bahá sent for me and after a few minutes talk, told me to go and bring the students. I conducted them to the house and they were ushered into the reception room. Hardly a minute had passed when the Master appeared. They all rose to their feet and although he told them not to do it, yet one after another knelt before him and kissed the hem of his garment, his hands or his feet. {{p272}} This is the highest sign of respect, nay rather adoration, and flows from the depth of their hearts. It is spontaneous and natural, full of sweetness and attachment. It is neither dictated by custom nor ceremony.

2. Persian Students in Paris and London

He told them that they were very welcome! He had been longing to see them, but up to this time the way was not open. Was their vacation spent pleasantly in Haifa on Mount Carmel? The College of Beirut was very good. They could not realize how some of the Persian students spent their time in profitless pursuits in London and Paris. Not only did the Europeans look down upon them, as members of an inferior race and half-civilized, but they (the students) confirm them in this opinion by indulging in the questionable pleasures and vices of the European lower society. They hardly do any study. The major part of their time is spent in the gratification of the appetites, such as sensuality, attending dance halls and theaters, wine drinking, association with undesirable members of the community in which they live, and leading an insipid and voluptuous life, ruinous to themselves and the Persian nation alike.... Praise be to God that the faces of these Bahá’í students were radiant; the rays of the love of God were shining from their countenances. He was most pleased to have met them. It is very strange that when a face is not illumined with the light of the Love of God, it is dark, and when you look into it, the traces of the divine Glad-tidings are not manifest, but when the light of God shines upon it, it becomes bright and enlightened, as it is said: — {{p273}} “In their faces you shall see the verdancy of Paradise and in their countenances there is the sign of worship.”

3. ‘Abdu’l-Bahá Tells the Students How to Study

Afterward the Master left the house to call on Osman Páshá, and in his company, a visit was paid to the Khedive who celebrated the feast yesterday in Cairo, and today in Alexandria. Before noon, the Master came to our house to meet the students. He told them that it was his hope that they would make extraordinary progress along spiritual lines as well as in science and art; so that each one might become a brilliant lamp in the world of modern civilization, and upon their return to Persia that country might profit from their acquired knowledge and experience.

4. The Students Read ‘Abdu’l-Bahá’s Talks in

America

In the hands of the students there were copies of ‘Abdu’l-Bahá’s address given before the Forum Club of San Francisco. He asked one of them what he was holding in his hand? The student presented it to him and he read the last portion concerning the philosophers and the cows, and how the modern materialists should go to the cow to learn the principles of materialism. After speaking on some other subjects, he left us. The students are all eager to take down every word which he says to them and they are writing to their parents and friends the incidents of their trip and of their experiences.

Before he left he told Mírzá ‘Alí-Akbar to accompany all the students to the Persian Consulate at 4 P.M. As we are quite numerous, both dinner and supper are served in turn; {{p274}} first the students sit around the table, and afterwards the rest of us.

5. ‘Abdu’l-Bahá Calls on the Persian Consul

At 4 o’clock, we found ourselves in the large reception room of the Persian Consulate General in Alexandria. For the first half hour we were entertained by the Consul, then the Master came and spoke with him in Turkish. The Consul is a genial old man, and loves the Master very deeply.

When we returned home, the Master had arrived ahead of us, and was talking with a number of prominent callers. At night we had an unusual gathering, full of interest, many of the Bahá’ís related the story of how they first embraced the Cause of God.

RAMLEH, EGYPT, SEPTEMBER 4, 1913.

1. The Story of the Royal Bird Gedam

The Eastern mind is a treasure-house of mystic stories, each one fraught with significant lessons. One of these beautiful stories was related to me the other day by Mírzá Jalál Síná, and fore-shadows the coming of the Manifestation of God into this world. I report it here without its interpretation, knowing that my readers will supply it by their own imagination: —

Far, far away in a jungle, inaccessible to man, beyond the Indian ocean, there lived a bird of royal birth, majesty and beauty. Her name was Gedam. {{p275}} Her song was endowed by the Creator of Mankind with incomparable beauty, richness, sweetness, and charm. The strains of her natural melodies belonged to other than this material world, which is full of the cawing of crows, the cackling of geese and the twittering of sparrows. Whenever Gedam began to sing, she raised her melody to such a lofty height as to silence all the other birds, who were ashamed of their own weak, discordant voices noises. Thus were they discomfited and filled with envy and regret, and wondered what they could do to bring about the end of Gedam. Finally they arranged a large meeting in which they might deliberate as to how they should heap vengeance upon her unsuspecting head and cause her death.

After much consultation, they agreed upon the plan of destroying the eggs of Gedam whenever and wherever she laid them; so that her descendants might not increase. In order to carry out this plan with vigilance, they appointed a committee to execute the decree. They agreed amongst themselves that they would continue to break the eggs of Gedam till the time came when she would grow old and die, thus protecting themselves from the power of such a rival. For a number of years Gedam patiently endured the persecution of these little birds who were exulting over the success of their plan in thus systematically destroying her eggs and not letting her progeny increase. Gedam never said anything nor manifested any trace of concern. Then at a time when the birds were away from their nests, she laid one egg in each and flew away, perching on the loftiest branch and singing her own entrancing melody. The other birds, not knowing exactly what had happened, sat as usual on their eggs, and after a while the little ones stepped out of their narrow world into open space. Tenderly and with much solicitude and devotion were they taken care of, and from the mother birds' beaks the little ones were fed. {{p276}} Soon their dear growing wings were covered with soft feathers like unto velvet, and the parents were delighted to see their darling offspring developing into the size of birdhood. Gedam from the loftiest branch was watching, how day after day, her children were nurtured by these different birds with a wistful tenderness and sympathy as though they were their own. Then, when she observed that they had reached the flying stage, she perched on the highest green branch, filling the empty void with her wonderful music, which vibrated, and rocked through the atmosphere. The little birds who were her real children, heard the clear, resonant melody and finding its exact similarity to their own, and realizing from the depth of their hearts, their true kinship with the invisible singer, suddenly fluttered their wings, and up they soared to join their Mother. Out of every nest a number of birds such as doves, partridges, sparrows, crows, nightingales, blue-birds, etc. who had become accustomed to the harmonious companionship of the children of Gedam, joined them in their flight. Although they were of various forms, colors and species, voices and kinds, — they soared together with love and sweet fellowship, toward the azure height and there composed a divine company, circling and circling around their beloved mother, as the songs of thanksgiving and gratitude with soft appealing notes flowed like a clear stream from their hearts.

2. Purity and Chastity the Foundation of Spiritual ### Life

While the students and other pilgrims were drinking tea, the Master entered the house. He walked through the rooms and inquired about the health of each.

Then he went to the veranda and sat down. {{p277}} The first thing that he said, showed his interest in the welfare of the students. He asked Mírzá ‘Alí-Akbar to take them to Nozha Park. Then, introducing them to an Arab Bahá’í, he remarked, that these students were doing well with their studies and that in reality they were the cause of his happiness.

He also gave a most interesting talk on what the students should study while in Europe, and what they should shun. After giving a minute account of the social customs of the Western people, he told us that chastity and purity are two divine standards of the spiritual and moral law. The greater the aims of a man the nobler his deeds; man must ever be thoughtful of others and polite and courteous toward his fellow beings. This will win for him the good-pleasure of the Lord and the satisfaction of the general public. One’s sitting and rising, conduct and manner, speech and conversation, social intercourse and communication, must be based upon a firm foundation and be conducive to the Glory of the world of humanity.

3. The Brother of the Khedive Calls on ‘Abdu’l-Bahá

In the afternoon Prince Muḥammad-‘Alí, the brother of the Khedive, called on ‘Abdu’l-Bahá. The Prince arrived in his automobile at the door of our house, and hearing that the Master lived close by in another one, said that he would walk to it. Mírzá Munír was about to go on ahead to notify ‘Abdu’l-Bahá, when he appeared in his long, loose, cream-colored coat from the other side of the street. Thus, in the middle of the road, the Master and the Prince met, each offering to the other courtesies designated for the most distinguished men. Every one looking at this strange scene wondered, while trying to imagine what had brought a royal Prince of Egypt to the Threshold of ‘Abbás Effendi. {{p278}} The Master was walking ahead and the Prince a few feet behind, and while they were talking in the most animated manner, they disappeared from our view.

4. American Ice Cream for Students — Their Visit to the National Park

Late in the afternoon ‘Abdu’l-Bahá came to visit the pilgrims and after a few minutes went to see Mírzá Abu’l-Faḍl, from which place he returned home to rest.

Before the students left for Nozha Garden, Khusraw brought a jar of American ice cream, prepared for them by Mrs. Getsinger. It was very good, and everybody enjoyed it.

5. The Student’s Love for the Bahá’í Cause

All day there were different groups here and there, each speaking about the Cause and putting forth arguments to prove the Dawn of the Sun of Reality. It seems to me that these young men are very devoted to the Movement, and free, and ready to receive and assimilate all kinds of useful information. I have no doubt that from amongst them a number of most capable teachers will arise.

RAMLEH, EGYPT, SEPTEMBER 5, 1913.

1. Who Is ‘Abdu’l-Bahá and What Is He Doing?

‘Abdu’l-Bahá is eloquent in his silence and speaks with the tongue of the angels in the congregation of the elect. His heavenly songs, stream down from unknown heights. Like unto the bird of Paradise, he raises his voice and humanity hears it. His heart is a variegated rose-garden whose fragrant narcissuses of knowledge, gentle violets of wisdom, sweet anemones of love and graceful hyacinths of sympathy spread their perfume. The heaven of his mind is begemmed with orbs of reality, dispelling the darkness of doubt. The grandeur of his spirit, the sublimity of his ideals and the epic events of his life are the noblest examples set before the eyes of man. To the wanderer he is a refuge; to the thirsty he is a cooling spring, to the poor he is a treasury of wealth; to the despondent he is a source of inspiration; to the orphan he is a kind father; to the sick he is a physician; to the weak, he is a power-house of energy; to the hungry he is a divine table.

2. The Persian Students and Prayers

Every morning presents to my view a happy scene of worship, because all the students pray before sunrise. They attract to themselves a moral force, infusing into their lives that quality of Faith which changes hate into love, strangeness into friendship, and enmity into amity. Through prayer their minds are polished and their hearts purified with the fire of the Love of God. They attain to the station of confidence, realize the divinity of holiness, are drawn unto God, and become clear mirrors in which the ideal images of the Kingdom are reflected. They put forth green leaves of hope and blossoms of radiant acquiescence. {{p280}} With prayer, they learn their lessons; with prayer they take their examinations; with prayer they make intellectual progress and with prayer on their lips they rise in the early morning and go to sleep at night.

Today I was speaking about the servants of the Cause and Mírzá Jalál Síná told me the following story.

3. The Story of a Man Who Was Hired to Build a

Wall Around a Garden

A man hired a mason to build a wall around his garden. The next morning the mason came to start his work. The foundations were already laid by other laborers, and an assistant was hired to pass him the bricks. At the moment when the first one was handed to him a friend of his passed by and was hailed to come near, and they engaged in a lively conversation. The mason forgot all about the building of the wall, and the time slipped by until noon. He had yet the first brick in his hand when the hour of twelve struck. At that time the owner of the garden arrived on the scene, and seeing the work not even started, dismissed him and brought another mason to do it in his place.

4. In the Cause of Brotherhood There Are No Titles

There are some souls who are similarly situated. When a work is entrusted to them by the Great Builder, they take it as a personal thing. They do as much of it as they think advisable according to their limited understanding or do not do it at all. In such a case the Great Builder without telling them anything about it, takes the work out of their hands and entrusts it to those who will dispatch it with the utmost rapidity. {{p281}} Personalities do not count in this Cause; work, enduring work, patient impersonal work is called for. There are no titles in this Movement. Let all the workers banish such dreams from their minds. In God's estimation the laborers are all equal. We are all His servants. 'Abdu'l-Bahá has taken the title of the "Servant of God" and the servant of humanity. Every sincere soul, according to his ability, must strive day and night to walk in this path. The divine path is the path of servitude, humility, evanescence, — severance from aught else save God, and service.

5. 'Abdu'l-Bahá Inquires from the Persian Students

about Their Teachers

At 8 o'clock 'Abdu'l-Bahá came and all the students were ready to receive him. He inquired about their health and if they were comfortable in their present quarters.

He asked them to tell him whether the teachers took pains to instruct the students, or if like some professors, they went through the lessons as machines without showing any feeling or interest in the progress of the pupils?

6. People Are Not Awake to the Danger of War

Holding in his hand several copies of his American addresses which had been published in the newspapers, he informed us that the people of Egypt were not interested in them and that any reference to them would bring only the answer, "very excellent," "very good." However, they were interested in the most unimportant news of the day. They are not thinking of those principles which will build up the future civilization of mankind; yet they acknowledge the fact that the world of humanity is in great danger, and is going through a most crucial period. Although war may cease temporarily, yet there is an invisible war constantly carried on which is a tremendous economic loss. {{p282}} These unseen drains are breaking the financial backs of the nations. They do not know by what means or instruments the comity of nations, or the peace of the world can be achieved.

7. ‘Abdu’l-Bahá Dictates Tablets for American Bahá’ís

Then he told me to have the letters ready, and in a few moments I was following him toward the garden. He was glad to be away from the people, and for three hours he dictated Tablets for the friends beyond the seas. Some of those who were honored with Tablets were the following: Miss Jean Masson, Mrs. Gertrude Diffet, the Editor of the “Master Mind” in Los Angeles, Mrs. Harriet Cline, Mrs. Mary C. Bell, Miss General Jack, Mrs. Thornberg Cropper, Mrs. Anna Killius, Mr. Horace Holley, Mrs. Fred Mortenson, Madame H. Maron, Mrs. Stansell, Miss Juliet Thompson, consul General Topakeyan, Miss Edna MacKinny and Miss Maria Wilson.

Yesterday the Master’s daughter left for Cairo with Bashír, for a short stay. Today Shoghi Effendi joined his mother with Hájí Níáz. In the afternoon four Bahá’ís arrived from Cairo.

8. Program for a National or Religious Feast

About 4 o’clock, ‘Abdu’l-Bahá came again and gave us an interesting talk on how a religious, or national Fete should be celebrated.

The program for such fete days must be so prepared to yield a permanent result. As these are day of freedom from work, the leaders of the communities must discuss such problems as may be beneficial to the individuals and the outcome of which will be eternal. {{p284}} They must be occupied with prayers and thanksgiving, and be grateful for the Favors and Bounties of God.

9. Driving around with ‘Abdu’l-Bahá

Then he called me to follow him. Outside a carriage was waiting. He beckoned me to sit beside him and told Khusraw to sit next to the driver. We stopped at the Hotel Plaisance and took Mr. Atwood with us. The carriage drove for more than one hour on the shore of the Nile. We passed many large palm groves and the Arab hovels of Fellaheens. These Arabs live in real squalor. Pigs, hens, donkeys, goats sleep with them in the same mud rooms. Arriving at the Nozha, we drove through its shady avenues and our eyes were brightened by the wonderful flowers. The Master left the carriage and we passed into the place where the band was playing and where more than two hundred Englishmen were picnicking with their families. He walked through the Park and finally sat down on the side of a well. He was steeped in a world of thought. Then he went away from us and sat on the green grass. For nearly 15 minutes he remained there undisturbed. The sun was sinking behind the western sky when our carriage was driven homeward. The Master putting his arm around the shoulders of Mr. Atwood told him that he went driving today especially for him as he loved him very much. He was most pleased with him, because he had resigned his will to the Will of God.

Mr. Atwood thanked him for his kindness and said:

“Master, I think often of you and of your great work. I can never forget the time when you called at a mission school in Alexandria. {{p284}} The principal in greeting you, said: ‘You are the father of the poor and I am their servant!’ You answered: ‘I am the servant of the poor, but you are their father!’ ”

RAMLEH, EGYPT, SEPTEMBER 6, 1913.

1. The American Bahá’ís must make great efforts in teaching the Cause of Peace.

When I stood in the Master’s presence this morning, he asked me whether I had any news. Then in a talk he emphasized the fact that the American Bahá’ís must, with one accord, and one voice unite in raising the pillars of Universal Peace in their regions. God will reinforce them with the Powers of the Kingdom if they arise wholeheartedly in the service of this Cause. They have every means at their disposal, and no lack of extraordinary desire to do the will of God. By example and by deeds they have seen the workings of the Glorious Lord. Now that ‘Abdu’l-Bahá is in the Orient, he loves to hear that the seeds of Truth which he has sown in the West are beginning to sprout, that the ideals of Peace which he has diffused are taking root in the hearts. They must gird up the loins of endeavor, enter the arena of activity and let the reports of their fresh triumphs gladden the heart of ‘Abdu’l-Bahá.

2. Prof. Armenius Vambéry’s Letter to ‘Abdu’l-Bahá

Before I left his presence, he handed me a letter written to him by Prof. Vambéry of Budapest, who met him during his sojourn in that city. {{p285}} On his arrival in Port Sa’id, ‘Abdu’l-Bahá revealed for him a Tablet and sent him a Persian rug as a present. I will translate the letter as a matter of historical interest. The Professor’s letter is in Persian:

“I forward this humble petition to the sanctified and Holy Presence of ‘Abdu’l-Bahá ‘Abbás, who is famous throughout the world, the Center of Knowledge, and beloved by all mankind!

“O thou kind, noble friend, thou who art conferring guidance upon humanity — may my life be a ransom to thee!

“The loving epistle which you have condescended to write to this servant and the rug which you have forwarded, came to hand safely. The meeting with your Excellency and being in your Presence, which is full of benediction, recurs to the memory of this servant and I am longing for the time when I shall meet you again. In reality, although I have traveled throughout many countries and cities of Islám, yet I have never met a lofty character and exalted personage to compare with your Excellency, and I bear witness that it is not possible to find one. On this account I am hoping that the Ideals and accomplishments of your Excellency may be crowned with success, and yield results under all circumstances; because, behind these Ideals and deeds, I easily observe the future welfare and prosperity of the world of humanity.

“This servant, in order to gain first hand information and experience, entered the ranks of various religions; that is, outwardly I became a Jew, a Christian, a Muḥammadan and a Fire-worshiper. I discovered that the devotees of these different religions do nothing else but hate and anathematize each other; {{p286}} that all these religions have become the instruments of tyranny and oppression in the hands of rulers and governors, and that they are causes for the destruction of the world and of humanity. Considering these evil results, every person is forced by necessity to be enlisted on the side of your Excellency and embrace rejoicingly, the prospect of the Universal Religion which is being ushered in through your effort.

“I have seen the father of your Excellency from afar and have realized the self-sacrifice and noble courage of His Son, and my admiration has been increasing. For the principles and aims of your Excellency, I express the utmost respect and devotion and if God, the most High, confers a long life upon me, I will be able to serve you under all conditions. I pray and supplicate for this from the depth of my heart.

(Signed) “Your servant, Vambery.”

3. The Persian Students meet Mrs. Getsinger

In the reception room of the house of the Beloved the students met Mrs. Getsinger. She spoke to them most beautifully and they listened with rapt attention. None of them had yet seen or heard an American Bahá'í. She related for their benefit, the story of the Beloved's lecture in Columbia University of New York, and in Stanford University of California and when she told about Mortenson, and of how he traveled from Minneapolis to Green Acre — under the trains — and of how he was received first by Mr. and Mrs. Ed. Kinney and later by ‘Abdu'l-Bahá, all eyes were dim with tears. {{p287}} Then she spoke about spiritual knowledge, prayer, and the conformity of science and faith, and at the end chanted a prayer by Bahá'u'lláh.

4. ‘Abdu'l-Bahá Speaks on the Power of Unity

Then ‘Abdu'l-Bahá came in and said that God had brought us together in Ramleh. No other power could ever have accomplished this. We were meeting with the utmost joy and fragrance. Spiritual attraction had united us. The Divine outpourings and the Bestowals of the Blessed Perfection had called us to this heavenly banquet. Just as in this material world we were brought together at this meeting, similarly may we associate with one another in the kingdom of Abhá.

In the afternoon the Beloved dictated several important Tablets, and later entertained the French Consul of Haifa who had come to meet him.

Many hours today were spent in writing and in listening to the delightful stories related by Mírzá Jalál Síná.

RAMLEH, EGYPT, SEPTEMBER 7, 1913.

1. The Story of the Mythical Republic and of a Curious

Way of Electing a President

Let me relate to you the story of a poor man and how he became the Ruler of one of the ancient Republics. Back of it you will detect the spiritual history of God and His relation with mankind.

Years and years ago the inhabitants of the country of ... who enjoyed a sort of Republic, had a most curious way of electing their President. The people gathered once a year in the largest public square of the capital. {{p288}} Then they would bring out the golden cage of the bird, "Homai," and place it at the head of the procession of dignitaries, amidst universal rejoicing, while the music of the national band played. After many ceremonies, and the delivery of eloquent addresses, they would open the gate of the cage and release the bird Homai before the eyes of all the citizens. The bird, gaining its freedom, would rise higher and higher toward the blue ether, and then descend on the head of an individual in the crowd, whom the people would hail as the next Ruler.

It was on such an important election day that a stranger entered the city. He observed decorations of flags and bunting, and the streets filled with seething humanity. Every avenue, like a tributary to the sea, emptied its rushing people into the great public square. All the seats, tier upon tier, were filled. After much pushing and pulling, the stranger found his way to the square, where a wonderful spectacle met his view. He was thunderstruck at the lavish splendor of this sight. While he was looking at it, he felt some one tapping on his shoulder. He was hot and pressed on all sides. "What do you want, man? Do you not see that I am nearly dying of suffocation?" "Wilt thou make me thy aide-de-camp if thou art elected President of the Republic?" "Pooh! Art thou gone insane, man? I have just entered this city and know not a single soul. I would like to know who would elect an absolute stranger to the highest position in the Republic?" "I think thou dost not know the laws of this country, neither is there any time for their explanation. Just give me thy word now." "All right," the stranger laughed aloud. "If I ever become the President of the Republic, thou wilt be my aide-de-camp."

Hardly was this promise given, when he felt the sudden weight of something upon his head. Then he heard the deafening hurrah of the great multitude which filled the air and which rocked the very foundations of the buildings. The bird “Homai” had sat upon his head, and he was already, by the sovereign will of the people, the President. The notification committee, followed by the most prominent citizens, informed him of his election, and with much solemnity conducted him to the capital. {{p289}} For one week there were great festivities in the capital. Fireworks and illuminations, athletic games and banquets, brilliant processions, and public receptions, attracted the attention of all the classes of citizens. The inaugural ball, which brought to a close these successive festivities, eclipsed all other events in points of brilliancy.

To the delight and satisfaction of Congress and the Cabinet members — the new President showed extraordinary knowledge on all public questions, and an intuitional grasp of necessary reforms. These reforms had been needed for a long time, but the nation had not been fortunate enough to have a man at the helm of the government who could make them possible for practical legislature.

Soon after his inauguration, the president received a letter from an unknown man, reminding him of his promise. He sent for him immediately, and found in him the requirements of an aide-de-camp. In the course of mutual association, they became great friends and one day, the aide-de-camp said to the President in an off-hand manner: “do you know what is going to happen to you after the expiration of your Presidential term?” “No, I have never thought about it.” “Well, I will tell you, because you have been very kind to me. When your term expires, the citizens will come to the Palace, drive you out of your executive office, ask you to put on your old clothes, take you through the streets, make you ride backward on a donkey, and at the head of a sneering, ridiculing mob, parade you through the avenues and bazaars. {{p290}} In this ignominious manner the procession will leave the city. They will proceed for several miles until they reach a broad river on the other side of which is an island. Then they will place you in a bat, and a boatman will row you to the other side. There he will leave you and return. As the island is surrounded by the water, there can be no communication with the outside world.”

The President was quite disturbed by this account. “Why did you not tell me of this before?” “Firstly, I did not know you; secondly, this knowledge could not prevent ‘Homai’ from alighting on your head; thirdly, even should you have known this, the people would not have accepted your refusal.” “But, have I not given them a wise and efficient administration, and on that ground, am I not entitled to a second election?” “You must realize that the people are not electing you. It depends upon the caprice of a bird, and I am sure, that even if they let you stay in the public square on the election day, you would not have the remotest chance of being re-elected. On the other hand, no power on earth, except the will of the whole people of this Republic, can amend this provision of the constitution. It is simply impossible.” “Then what must I do? Will you give me your advice?” “Well, you can do one thing. As long as you live in this Palace, you have a perfect right to expend your salary on any undertaking you deem most necessary and urgent. You are able to select a number of architects, masons, engineers and laborers, send them to the island, and give them the commission of building a commodious house, in which you may live during the remaining years of your life. I have been aide-de-camp to many former Presidents, and in every instance I have urged them to do this, but they were so occupied with the gratification of their own desires, that they did not heed my advice, and the time slipped by. {{p291}} Suddenly they saw that the year had expired, and they found themselves in manifest loss.”

This President, however, was of a different disposition, and from that day on, he devoted his leisure hours to the construction of a house on the Island. When the term of his service expired, he went through all the strange rites prescribed by the law with a cool head, a confident heart, and a serene mind, because he knew that on the other side, everything was prepared to receive him....

After a few days on the Island, he started to explore it, and here and there came across a number of emaciated and starved looking men who were clothed in tattered garments. He asked them, “Who are you?” They answered: “We are the former Presidents of the Republic of X. We were not as wise and as far-seeing as you have proven to be. While we filled our Presidential Offices, we thought only of our own importance, and pursued the pleasures and vanities of life, instead of thinking of enduring and eternal principles. We never troubled our minds about our future, neither did we heed the admonitions of our friend. Thus this present misery is the result of our own past heedlessness.”

2. ‘Abdu’l-Bahá Spends a Busy Day

This morning the students were summoned into the presence of ‘Abdu’l-Bahá, and he gave them a stirring talk on the union of the East and the West, and of how the Cause of Harmony was set aglow and the hearts of mankind and how its flame is getting stronger and stronger every day.

1. The Arab Bahá’ís Give a Feast to the Persian Students

Five of the young Arabian Bahá’ís acted as hosts to the students, and the friends. {{p292}} The feast was given in the garden of Nozha. The tablecloth was spread under the shade of the trees and forty of us sat around it. The dinner was delicious, and our Arabian friends dispensed true old-fashioned Oriental hospitality. during the day, Tablets were chanted, songs were sung, short speeches delivered and the spirit of Bahá’í friendship deeply felt. Although there existed no outward relation between the Arab and the Persian Bahá’ís, yet they conversed together with great sympathy as though they belonged to the same family. After dinner we were divided into small groups and walked through the Park. On our return, we found the Samovar boiling and tea prepared.

2. How an Arab Became a Bahá'í

One of the hosts told us how he was first attracted to the Cause: “Two years ago, a similar picnic was held here on this very spot by the Bahá'ís. I passed by, and looking at them, saw a divine happiness upon their faces. I became curious, and began to ask questions. Soon I obtained the privilege of entering the kingdom of Bahá'u'lláh. Now, all of these men who are passing by, looking at us with wondering eyes, who knows but there may be some who will become Bahá'ís, two years from now?”

3. Importance of Agriculture

When we returned home we found ‘Abdu’l-Bahá dictating Tablets in the garden. Mírzá Munír was the secretary. Several new men were permitted to go into his presence. {{p293}} Later he sent for the students, because they had not seen him in the morning. He spoke with them on the subject of agriculture and the present need for it in Persia. He asked them whether such a course was given in the Beirut College. He laid great stress upon the study of scientific agriculture and encouraged them to become the teachers of this science and the spreaders of its principles. He concluded, saying that he expected the appearance of great things from them.

4. A Prayer for the Illumination of Mankind

One of the prayers changed by the students today in the Nozha garden is the following:

“He is El Abhá!

“O Thou pure God! Make thou this gathering the candle of the world and suffer this assembly to become a rose garden and a verdant meadow. Let its meeting become a delectable paradise and its horizon the dawning-place of the lights of the Merciful. Perfume Thou the nostrils of the dwellers of the Mount of the Friend with its Fragrance and rejoice the hearts of the pilgrims of the Holy city of the Desired One with its amber-scented breeze. Protect Thou these souls under the shadow of an asylum of Protection in the fortress of Thy Majesty, the One, the Most High! Shower upon us the Confirmations of Thy Abhá Horizon and bestow upon us the Graces of Thy Supreme Concourse. Although we are birds without feathers and wings, yet have we built our nests and homes in the gardens of Thy Cause. We have taken refuge at the Threshold of Thy Oneness, and we are begging of Thee Confirmation, help and aid. {{p294}} When we look upon ourselves, we are smaller than the atoms; when we behold the sea of Thy Generosity and Liberality, we see the atoms as brilliant suns, nay rather, more brilliant!

“O Thou Kind King! Cover the sins of these weak ones with the hem of the garment of Thy Mercy. Change the indifference of these heedless ones into the essence of fidelity, wisdom and understanding! Grant the souls a loftier effort and cast another tumult in the heads; so that they may sing the melody of the Supreme Realm, seek after the Everlasting Glory, long for the delicacies of the New World, soar toward the highest horizon, enter into the congregation of the Almighty and become the recipients of the Bestowals of the Kingdom of Abhá! Thus the dark world will become luminous, the satanic field will be transformed into the Court of the Merciful, this mound of earth will become the celestial heaven, and this terrestrial globe the Eternal Rose-garden. Verily Thou art the Powerful, the Mighty, the Hearer and the Seer.

“‘ABDU’L-BAHÁ ‘ABBÁS.”

5. The object of the Coming of Bahá’u’lláh

‘Abdu’l-Bahá writes in a Tablet: —

“O ye real friends! And ye who are drawn to the Beauty of God! This is the time of attraction and acclamation, and the period of rejoicing and merrymaking. This is the morn of Glad-tidings! Is it not suffused with splendors? The Candle of the world is bestowing light upon all the assemblages. Is it not luminous? The Manifest Orb is rising from the dawning-place of the Most High! Is it not Glorious? The Blessed Perfection and the Most Great Name — may my life be a ransom to His believers, arose in the city of self-sacrifice like unto the banner of Guidance. {{p295}} While he was under the chain, He was a helper to every oppressed! From the Manifest horizon, He shone forth glorified by trials! In the midst of the world, He withstood the attacks of infinite persecutions; so that these withered ones might become enkindled, and these extinguished souls might be set aglow with the Fire of the Love of God. May we close our eyes to both worlds, and be ignited and burn with the Fire of Longing! Now, O ye spiritual friends! Is it just that we sit silent, become speechless, sorrowful and pessimistic! No by God! This is not the attribute of fairness and gratitude, but the essence of unfairness and negligence.”

1. A Bird’s Eye View of the General Conditions of the World

Would you like to hear the translation of a Tablet which was read this morning? It contains a wonderful spirit and a most significant exposition of the general conditions of the world at this time.

“He is God!

“O Thou who art holding fast to the Pure Hem; thou who art the twig of the Blessed Tree!

“Look thou with deep insight at the world and the inhabitants thereof! {{p296}} It is an immense theater upon the stage of which most spectacular plays are being enacted.

“Here, thou wilt see upon its plains the victorious and vanquished legions of profit and loss and there, thou wilt observe the waves of the sea of folly, rising and falling with great impetuosity. Cries are heard on every side, and the agonies of revolution, revolt and unrest reach to the ears of every progressive man.

“There is a tremendous clash and strife between capital and labor and the war between the aristocratic and the democratic adherents is carried on with relentless sword, javelin, bow and arrow. The phalanxes of the grand Army are drawn in battle array, each squadron taking its position. The world-raging armaments and the heavy artillery are prepared in every part of the field. The dazzling splendor of the swords of enmity blind the eyes from the most remote distance; the lightning effect of breastplates, the brilliancy of the lances and the sparkle of the bucklers of hatred brighten the gloomy night and bewilder our eyes.

“In short the weapons for strife, battle, and war are being prepared with the utmost celebration.

“Thou wilt observe that from every house, the strains and notes of music are raised, the confusing melodies of harp, lyre, cymbal and flute are heard, and the mad revelers dance while in a state of inebriation with the wines of these vanishing pleasures and joys.

“Here, thou wilt see wanton and soiled decorations, and there, flimsy shows of a gilded class of creatures. Here, embellishment and luxury is made possible through illicit wealth, and there are displayed the ravishingly beautiful appearances of this mortal and ephemeral existence. >From one part of the world sighs of anguish, lamentations of poverty and agonies of misery are raised, and from another voices, acclamations and Jeremias calling for succor have reached the gates of heaven! {{p297}} Here, one sees the tears of the hopeless and listens to the appeals of the oppressed; there, the trembling murmurs of the helpless and the harrowing wails of the shipwrecked in the sea of perfection. The heat of the conflagration of separation spreads on all sides: the flame of the fire of longing is raging with great intensity, and the tongue of an avalanche of calamities leaps forth. Here, one observes the absolutism and oppression of kings, and the utter thoughtlessness of the Cabinet ministers, and there, one sees conflicts and wars on the battlefields of thoughts and ideals by ambitious generals, statesmen and administrators of the nation and countries. They consult together, they scheme, they plot, they exchange their views, they organize fallacious enterprises, they float superfluous companies, they circulate false notes, they destroy and they lay the foundation of their political careers.

“In short, when thou considerest the reality, the outcome, and the fruit of all these theatrical performances, thou wilt see with thy real eyes, that they are the results of an illusory mirage and their sweetness is as bitter poison. A few days shall roll on their axis, and all these conditions will become non-existent, evanescent and completely forgotten. But when thou shuttest thine eyes to this dark world, looking upward and heavenward, thou wilt behold light upon light, eternity onward to eternity, and from everlasting to everlasting. Then thou wilt see the realities of Mysteries.... Therefore, happy is the pure spirit who does not attach himself to the changing conditions of this transitory world; and who clings rather to the Purity, Nobility and Grandeur of the Never-ending world.

“Upon thee be Bahá!

2. The Spread of the Bahá’í Cause in Germany Makes ‘Abdu’l-Bahá Happy

This morning I had the great pleasure of finding myself in the Presence of ‘Abdu’l-Bahá. {{p298}} A cablegram from Marseilles announced the departure of Mrs. Fraser and her approaching arrival in Port Sa’id. ‘Abdu’l-Bahá sent a telegram to Ahmad Yazdí to receive and direct her to Ramleh. Another telegram from America inquired about his health. Letters from Boston and Washington, as well as from Germany contributed to his happiness. The Bahá’í Cause in Germany is making splendid headway, and believers, enthused by the presence and example of the Master, have arisen to spread the Movement with a determination and strength never equaled before. As he walked back and forth, while I was reading the letter from Germany, he smiled and was much elated, saying: You see, you see! He wished the believers to spread the Cause of Bahá’u’lláh. If they do this, divine Confirmations shall encircle them from all directions.

The Cause, he said, has thrown a universal reverberation through the pillars of the earth, and the divine Power of Bahá’u’lláh shall encircle the globe. Rest thou assured of this.

3. Photographs Received from America and Germany

Distributed among the Persian Bahá’ís

This week I received five packages of photographs of ‘Abdu’l-Bahá from Mr. and Mrs. Killius of Spokane, Wash., which were to be divided between Mírzá Maḥmúd and myself. After making the division in equal parts I have distributed a number of them among the students and pilgrims. They are all made very happy by these presents. {{p299}} I also received some photographs from Consul Schwartz of Stuttgart which are already given away to many believers. In this way, the Western friends can impart the greatest joy to the hearts of their Eastern brothers.

[Editor’s note: The book goes from No. 3 to No. 5; No. 4 is missing.]

5. The Silence of ‘Abdu’l-Bahá Is Eloquent

In the evening the Master came in while the students were sitting on the veranda. As he entered they all arose. Before sitting he told us that this was a good gathering, a luminous gathering. He sat for ten minutes, but he did not speak one word. Silence, calm and eloquent, pervaded the whole atmosphere, and when he left we were quite as contented and happy as if he had given us an address.

1. Good News Received from America and Europe

I received a number of letters from the United States. Chicago, Spokane, New York, San Francisco and Washington were represented. I am sure that all the good news will make the heart of ‘Abdu’l-Bahá very happy. I had also letters from Budapest and Stuttgart, London and Paris. In London the believers are already laying plans for the promotion of the Cause during the winter. The American friends, I have no doubt, will likewise carry away the wreath of triumph, and shall guide many souls into the green valley of Divine Faith.

2. A few Arabian Proverbs

Here I would like to quote a few proverbs which the Arabs use in their conversation. {{p300}} The Arabs are generally very lively and dramatic. Their talk is enriched with numberless epigrams, and is endowed with a wonderful power of expression and poetic fancy. They are simple, yet winsome, graceful and most chivalrous.

“Make neither your friendship a pretense, nor your hatred a menace.”

“Don’t ask a man about his origin; you can read it in his face.”

“A ruler without justice is no better than a river without water.”

“A man is often an enemy of things concerning which he is ill-informed.”

“There is no honor like the possession of a good character.”

“Disdain not a kind action, be it but to give water to one who is not thirsty.”

“Knowledge without practice is like a bow without a string.”

“No pious act is more beloved by God than the telling of the truth.”

“Without Hope, no mother would nurse her child, nor would any peasant plant his land.”

“The young who revere the aged will receive reverence themselves when they are old.”

“The next best thing to belief in God, is sympathy with people.”

“A true believer is not content while his neighbor is hungry.”

“There are men who are keys to the good, and locks to the evil.”

“Avoid vain hopes — contentment is prosperity.”

“Wisdom lifts a slave unto the dignity of princes.”

“Hearts, like bodies, become tired and should have recreation.”

A wise enemy is less harmful than a foolish friend.”

“Man is not to be valued by the robes he wears, but by the character he shows.”

“If you censure your friends for every fault they commit, there will come a time when you will have no friend to censure.”

The beautiful spirit of the hospitality of the Arabs is often illustrated by the apt inscription of welcome engraved above the gates of their homes; {{p301}} for example:

“Welcome to him of whose approach I am all unworthy.”

“Welcome to the voice announcing joy after lonely melancholy.”

“Good tidings thine; off with the robes of sadness; for know, thou art accepted, and I myself will take upon me whatsoever grieves thee.”

3. A Prayer by ‘Abdu’l-Bahá for Detachment

I will here translate a prayer from the pen of the Master.

“He is El Abhá!

“O Thou kind, Incomparable God!

“Familiarize these hearts with Thy Mysteries and detach them from friends and strangers. {{p302}} Suffer them to drink from the cup of the Wine of the Morn of Eternity and intoxicate them with the Goblet of Everlasting Felicity. These servants long and yearn for Thee and these lovers are enamored and attached to Thee. They are dwellers in Thy Mount and attracted with the Beauty of Thy Face. They are the gazelles of Thy flock wandering in the wilderness of separation and scattered in the valley of regret. Send Thou to them the Messenger of Providence and cause to descend upon them the angel of guidance: — so that the fragrance may waft from Thine Abode to their nostrils and an effulgence from Thy Face may illumine the hearts of these servants; the impenetrable darkness be changed into light and the thorny place transformed into a rose-garden. Verily Thou art the Powerful, the Seeing and the Hearing.”

In the evening Mírzá Abu'l-Faḍl came and all the students gathered around him and he spoke to them about the early events of the Cause.

1. How the Persian Students Lived Together

Tomorrow our band of earnest students will depart, and everything will again be quiet for a few days before the second party arrives. The past days my room was a busy center; here a number of them were speaking, there some were writing letters. From morning till late in the evening they were constantly coming and going. {{p303}} Many of them were anxious to possess the Master's talks in America which I gave to them and of which in turn they made copies forwarding them to their homes. They were not only polite and courteous toward us, but also toward each other. They exercised the utmost kindness and consideration and did not lack the sense of true friendship and fellow-feeling. Like members of one family they inspired confidence and emulation. They were full of hope and each a true optimist. I can hardly remember a more united, a more congenial or a more devoted band of young men. Each one has set in his heart the accomplishment of a certain object, and is intent on carrying it out. The photographs of the Master sent by Mrs. A. B. Killius of Spokane, arrived in due time, and many of them were made happy by receiving this gift. In every one of his speeches, the Master has expressed to them his satisfaction and pleasure, because they are studying with zeal and their lives have been pure and uncontaminated. They are wonderful examples of the spirit of modern Persia.

Today ‘Abdu'l-Bahá came to see them both in the morning and evening and each time he delivered a very eloquent and effective address, which I will share with you soon.

2. An Important Tablet Revealed by ‘Abdu'l-Bahá for

China

I will now give the translation of a very significant Tablet revealed for a learned gentleman in China. It may be taken safely that this is the first important Tablet which has been sent to the Chinese Republic. I would like to see it translated into the Japanese language and also into Chinese. {{p304}} Once translated into these two languages it will be well if it were printed in a small pamphlet with a short historical sketch of the Bahá'í Cause, and distributed.

“He is God!

“O THOU WOOER OF TRUTH WHO ART ATHIRST FOR REALITY!

“Your letter was received. Its contents was evidence to the fact that from the horizon of consciousness the refulgent light has become manifest. It is hoped that after the appearance of the dawn, the brilliant sun may rise so gloriously as to cast its splendors upon all regions.

“It is a fact well-known to your honor that the world of existence is in need of an educator and instructor. The educators are of two kinds. The educators of the world of nature, and thee educators of the world of reality. If you leave the earth in its natural condition, it will become a jungle and a thorny place; but once it is entrusted to the hands of a skilled and kind gardener, the jungle will be changed into an orchard, and the thorny patch transformed into a rose-garden. Consequently, it has become evident that the world of nature is in need of training. Moreover, reflect carefully, for should humankind be deprived of the graces of culture and instruction, it would become a poisonous body; because the savage tribes have not acquired any of the separative distinctions which differentiate man from beast. For example: what is the difference between the African negro and the American negro? The former has not yet adorned himself with the ideals of culture while the latter has become intelligent, sagacious and civilized. During my journey throughout America, at the time when I was in Washington and elsewhere, I delivered detailed addresses in the universities, churches, conventions and meetings of the negroes, and found their audiences composed of most intelligent persons who could grasp the subjects under discussion as well as any other audiences of civilized and intelligent Westerners. Thus a great chasm exists between these two communities of negroes; one in the lowest depth of ignorance; another rising toward the pinnacle of civilization and freedom. Then it is plain that education is the distinguishing mark. Undoubtedly, culture or instruction is the cause of the glory of the one, while the lack of education is the means of the degradation of the other.

“Hence it is proven that education is the concomitant necessity of the world of modern civilization.

“Furthermore: Civilization is of two kinds. The civilization of the world of nature and the Civilization of the world of reality which belongs to the realm of morality. As long as the influence of these two types of civilization does not appear fully in the body politic, complete success and prosperity will not be obtained. Consider that the tent of material civilization is pitched in the European world; yet notwithstanding this how dark it is! The thoughts of all men converge upon the law of the ‘Survival of the fittest’ and the ideals of all the inhabitants revolve around the doctrine of the ‘Struggle for existence.’ The extravagant expenditures on armaments are daily increasing at a terrible rate, and the staggering expenses of the financial budget to support the preparations of the military storehouses, have brought the nations to the brink of bankruptcy. Civilized mankind is in a state of civil insurrection and under a too heavy burden; they are struggling, with wonder and astonishment, to free themselves. All this is because the civilization of morality, spirituality and attraction with the Fragrances of God is entirely lost sight of.

“In short: Just as the Instructor and the Teacher are necessary in the material world; so in the Ideal realm, i.e.: the Kingdom of spirit and consciousness, ethics and morality, infinite virtues and the perfections of humankind and salvation in both worlds — there must needs be an Educator and Teacher. {{p306}} The founders of natural civilization are the philosophers of the earth, and the Teachers of the Ideal civilization are the Holy Divine Manifestations. Therefore if the human world is deprived of the training of the natural and ideal teacher, unquestionable it will fall headlong into the lowest stratum of the animal kingdom. Natural civilization is like unto a glass; divine civilization is like unto the light. Material civilization is similar to the body, Divine Civilization is the spirit. The lamp is in need of the light and the body is only quickened through the spirit. Read the work of Galen, the famous Greek Philosopher, which he has written on the progress of the civilization of the world of humanity. He says: ‘Religious beliefs are the greatest means of impelling upward the world of civilization and humanity. As an example to this: — We observe that a number of people contemporaneous with us are known as Christians. Inasmuch as they are firmly rooted and well-established in their beliefs, the common people of this sect are as true philosophers, are adorned with such ethics and manners that the greatest philosophers attain to them only after many years of study, troubles, hardships and discipline. The simple folk of this community are characterized with the infinite virtues and excellences of the world of humanity.’ Hence it is established that mankind is in need of an Ideal, Universal Instructor, in order to unify under the shade of one Word the various nationalities, causing antagonistic communities to drink from one fountain; changing enmity and hatred into amity and love, and transforming strife and war into peace and salvation. {{p307}} In this manner His Holiness Muḥammad — upon him be peace and greeting — conciliated the various contending warlike, barbaric tribes and nomads of Arabia, and ushered them into the shade of the Tent of agreement, upraised a lofty banner in the world of physical and spiritual sciences, and caused them to attain to the highest station of Everlasting Glory. Likewise, His Holiness Christ — upon Him be peace — gathered around one spring of Unity, the inimical, the quarrelsome and the warring nations of Greeks, Romans, Syrians, Chaldeans, Assyrians and Egyptians who exercised toward each other the utmost rancor and contempt. He established amongst them the ideal band of communications.

“The above instances irrevocably demonstrate that the world of humanity is in need of Universal Teachers and Instructors, and that these are the holy, divine Manifestations. If certain souls pretend to be of the elect and in no need of education, it is similar to a pretension put forth by private soldiers that they are skilled and efficient, and do not require the instruction of the general. It is evident that such statements are baseless. All the individuals of the army, whether privates or officers, are in need of the supervision of the commander-in-chief, who is the general instructor.

“This is enough and sufficient for those who have hearing ears and to this God bears testimony!

(Signed) “‘ABDU’L-BAHÁ ‘ABBÁS.”

1. Departure of the Persian Students

Separation from the friends of God is a difficult thing. Although by this time we are more or less used to it, having already traveled so much, seen so many countries and associated with so many Bahá’ís — still we feel keenly when we meet and grow to love a number of the Bahá’ís — then suddenly they depart and in all probability, never will we meet again. However, in this separation, there is one consolation and that is: — these friends go out into the world after attaining to the meeting of the Beloved, to teach the Cause of human brotherhood and to equip themselves to become more useful instruments. Thus in a spiritual sense there is no separation between those Bahá’ís who are truly devoted to the Cause of God and are striving in the path of Reality. Consequently, from an external standpoint, we were all sad, when we saw the body of students leave the house for the station. The Master received them in the afternoon and delivered to them his last word of advice and exhortation.

2. Russian Count Meets ‘Abdu’l-Bahá and Talks on the

Two Aspects of Reincarnation

The Master had sent for me to go to the hotel and translate. A prominent Russian Count who understands English and French was calling on him. In a moment I was there, and soon ‘Abdu’l-Bahá plunged into a deep and most interesting discussion about the two aspects of reincarnation, the particular and universal, the return of generic and specific ideas, and a presentation of the logical proofs concerning the existence of a Divine, Supreme Power, animating and energizing all creation. The Count seemed greatly interested, and was going to ask more questions, when the Secretary of the brother of the Khedive was announced. {{p309}} Thus he postponed his questions for a later meeting and departed with satisfaction and pleasure.

3. Strive That Love May Increase Day by Day

“Strive ye as much as ye can; — so that love and amity may increase day by day amongst the believers of God; all of you can help each other and be ever ready to sacrifice your lives for one another. This is the quality of the people of Bahá.”

4. Tablet of ‘Abdu’l-Bahá to the Author of “Modern Social Religion.”

The flowing is a Tablet to Mr. Horace Holley, the author of the Bahá’í work called “Modern Social Religion:”

“He is God!

“O THOU SON OF THE KINGDOM!

“A copy of the book written by thee and forwarded to this spot was received. The friends re engaged in reading it. They praise and commend your book most highly and appreciatively. God willing, it will be translated and I likewise will read it. Thank God that thou art confirmed and assisted; thy aim is to render service to the Kingdom of Abhá and thy object the promotion of the Teachings of Bahá’u’lláh. Although the glory and greatness of this service is not known at the present it will in future ages, assume most great importance and attract the attention of scholars. {{p310}} Therefore strive more and more as far as thou canst in this service, so that it may become the Cause of thy everlasting glory; in the Kingdom of Abhá thou mayest be enkindled like unto a candle and in the horizon of majesty thou mayst shine like unto a star. Upon thee be Bahá’u’lláh.

(Signed) “‘ABDU’L-BAHÁ ‘ABBÁS.”

5. Pure Intention Is the Magnet of Heavenly Assistance

In another Tablet he says to Mrs. Killius:

“O thou who art attracted by the Love of God! Thy letter was like a mirror in which were reflected the pictures of Divine Confirmations. Thou hast a heart which is turned toward the Kingdom of Abhá, a spirit rejoiced by the Glad-tidings of God and eyes illumined by beholding the Lights of God. Your aim is to render service to the world of Reality. Pure intention is the magnet of heavenly assistance and the only means whereby to attract a great power.”

To another person whose house had been burned down he reveals:

6. “Strive to Quicken Dead Souls”

“If thy earthly house is destroyed, be thou not sad! May the Palace of the Kingdom be upbuilt! O thou bird of reality! If thy terrestrial nest is ruined, be thou not unhappy, a heavenly nest is destined for thee. His Holiness Christ, the Holy Manifestations and the apostles possessed no nest whatsoever in this mortal world, but in the Universe of God a glorious Palace. It is hoped that through the Divine Bestowals, on a lofty station, in the Universe of God, a radiant palace may become prepared for thee. {{p311}} Consider that the palaces of former kings from the day of Adam to the present age are ravaged by the relentless hand of time, while the towering Palace of the believers of God are built throughout Eternity and are never subject to destruction. Reflect carefully and thou shalt observe that all the buildings are uptorn, but the foundation of the apostles of Christ is becoming firmer and loftier every day. It is my hope that thou shalt likewise lay the basis of such a lofty palace. The foundation of this Palace is the Call of the Kingdom of God; its galleries are the Teachings of Bahá'u'lláh; its decorations the virtues of the world of humanity and its radiant lamps the lights of the Divine Kingdom. Therefore strive as much as thou canst to quicken dead souls, to guide erring ones, to cause to drink those who are thirsty and to invite those who are hungry to sit around the heavenly Table and partake of the Divine Foot."

1. From Ramleh a Mysterious Power Is Silently Quickening

the World

Ramleh is honored with the presence of 'Abdu'l-Bahá. >From this quiet summer resort of Egypt the mysterious power of God is felt in the uttermost corners of the world. Men, women and children belonging to all nationalities and religions are turning their attention to this spot. Here lives and moves the God-man amongst the people, as lived and moved Jesus over 1900 years ago along the shore of Galilee. His munificence and generosity embrace the world of humanity. {{p312}} His love is all-inclusive and the fountain of his sympathy flows without any interruption. With their burdens, sorrows and sufferings, the children of men come to him. With willingness and pleasure he shoulders their burdens; he cheers the despondent heart; he inspires the downcast; he strengthens the weak; he helps the poor and sows the seeds of wisdom in the garden of their minds. With fortitude he stands before the world and proclaims the coming of the kingdom of God. Those who are endowed with divine perception can easily realize that the spirit of God is moving over the world, the doors of the kingdom are open, and the Graces and Bounties of the Lord of Hosts are manifest. Thus awakened they arise to glorify their Lord and to summon mankind to the Banquet of Eternal Life and Everlasting Felicity.

2. Story of the German consul in Haifa and how He Became the Victim of Bravo

This morning 'Abdu'l-Bahá accompanied by Shoghi Effendi came to our house and sat for about half an hour. Throughout his talk he laughed, giving us much happiness. He told us the story of a German Consul in Haifa, illustrating how certain people come to a sad end because they enjoy and believe the flattery of sycophants.

In Haifa there was at one time a German Consul who became 'Abdu'l-Bahá's friend. He used to call on him often, and 'Abdu'l-Bahá returned his visits. At one time he disappeared for a whole month. Suddenly, one day he entered 'Abdu'l-Bahá's room. He had a stick in his hand and was lame. "Oh, sir, how is it that you have not inquired about my health during the past month?" —

“Why, friend, what has happened to thee?” “Yes,” he pitifully answered, “I am the victim of ‘Bravo.’ Let me tell you how it happened. {{p313}} The German colony had prepared a ball, a ball, to which I was bidden. The governor, the judges and the officials of Haifa were likewise invited. When the dancing was over, they had a jumping contest. One by one they started to jump, but in a clumsy manner. I saw that none of them had learned the secret of jumping a long distance, but I had learned it in boyhood, going to gymnasium in Germany. When the last one failed to reach the mark, I volunteered as a candidate. All eyes were on me now. My first attempt was so successful that it elicited the hearty ‘Bravo’ of the governor. In my heart I was pleased and thought I would try again, and go beyond the first limit. I went back and back, then jumped forward, and when I landed on the other side, a tumultuous applause was raised from the governor and the officials. ‘Bravo, bravo,’ rang in my ears. By this time, I was puffed up with pride and became blind to my own limitations. ‘Now I will show them,’ I said to myself, ‘what real jumping is,’ and with this determination I started the third time. I wanted to go further, much further than the first and second time, and so, when I came down upon the earth with a great crash, I felt a most excruciating pain in my right foot. My leg was broken. I became unconscious, and when I opened my eyes, I found myself in bed. For the last thirty days I have suffered much. Thus you see now, how I became the victim of the ‘Bravos’ of the governor.” There are many people in this world who will go to the limit of doing anything, even in attacking the purity and the motives of their friends just to gain a temporary applause and Bravo without thinking of the ruinous effect of such a thing upon themselves in the future, and the loss of public confidence.

3. ‘Abdu’l-Bahá Dictates Tablets for Russia

The Master had received many letters from the East and America. {{p314}} He wondered to which direction he should turn his attention

Seeing a package of letters in my hand, he laughingly asked: Is this the work I had prepared for him? How many hours did I want? It seemed to him that there was no end to my requests.

In the afternoon he dictated Tablets in the Garden to Shoghi Effendi for a long list of believers in Baku, Russia. Tea was served while he revealed the heavenly words. He also entertained the Arabic professor of the American College in Beirut. He spoke with him about the unification of religions and the principles of the Bahá’í movement. The professor went away with a new light in his heart.

RAMLEH, EGYPT, SEPTEMBER 14, 1913.

1. The law of Universal Love and the Bahá'ís

In the garden of the heart plant only the flowers of Love. The fragrance of the hyacinths of Love, the influence of the divine Love, the efficacy of the spiritual Love must constitute the foundation of the life of every Bahá'í. You shall know the tree by its fruit. You shall recognize a real soul by the quality of Love he manifests. With Love in our hearts we are enabled to benefit humanity. Love being the magnet, its possessor is enabled to attract the hearts to the Kingdom of Peace. {{p315}} True love never changes, and has no similitude or shadow of turning. Love is the basis of human sympathy, and sympathy prompts us to be kind and compassionate to all those who are in sad circumstances. With Love the enemy is changed into a friend, the cheerless is comforted, the weary traveler is lodged, the hungry fed, the naked clothed, the destitute made rich, the weak reinforced, the hopeless made hopeful, and the barren life made to blossom like unto a rose. Love is the great panacea for the healing of all social, political and economic evils. Love is the Holy Fire enkindled in the hearts by the hand of God. The only Love that is all-enduring is the Love of mankind. Let the power of this Love take possession of our beings. Let the sea of this Love flow toward the countries of our hearts. Let the rays of this Love illumine the dark recesses of our minds. Let the sun of this Love flood the regions of our souls. Those who have experienced this Love will never become despondent; with shining faces and smiling lips they shall march through the storm of difficulty, scale the impassable mountains of trials and reach the goal with added zeal, increased energy, supreme faith and unfaltering courage. This Love exalts one's Ideals, purifies one's motives and glorifies one's thought.

The Bahá'ís are the servants at the Court of this Love; they adore and pay tribute to this king. Love, only Love, makes them invulnerable. With this weapon they gain victories over the cities of the hearts. With this torch they dispel the gloom. With this medicine they heal the sick and with this water they allay the thirsty ones. Out of this book they have learned the Mysteries of God; from this spring they have quaffed the wine of Knowledge, toward this exalted height they are soaring, and in this illimitable ocean they are submerged. {{p316}} They are the followers of the Lord of Truth, whose words, actions and ideals are spelled in letters of Love — Love for the world of humanity. Their watchword is Love. Their calling is Love and their avocation is Love. They eat Love, they drink Love, they are clothed in Love and have their existence through Love. They have known the source of Love, and Love has made them free. They love God and they love mankind. With this omnipotent power they have arisen to serve the world. In all their transactions and dealings Love is their Instructor. They love to live a life of simplicity, prayerfulness, helpfulness and service. For them there is no more sorrow or hate. Life is an Elysian garden of joy and happiness where men may live together lovingly. Love is peace, peace is contentment, contentment is light.

2. Tablets for German Bahá'ís

This morning I was called into the presence of ‘Abdu’l-Bahá . He has taught us what Love is, and how we should gain more capacity to become the custodians of Love. He called Khusraw to bring him a small cup of coffee, and when it was served, with a twinkle in his eye, he said:

“Who says that Mírzá Aḥmad does not drink a cup of coffee? Khusraw, bring him one!”

Then he dictated several wonderful Tablets for the German believers. He was especially pleased with the letter of Miss A. Knoblock, and with her splendid work in several German cities. He ordered the translation of her letter to be sent to all parts of the Orient. He started to dictate a Tablet for her: “O thou herald of the Kingdom of Abhá” — then he turned to me saying:

“Truly she is a herald of the cause of God. She has won this title by her noble work in guiding the souls.”

Then he continued. At this time Mírzá ‘Alí-Akbar was announced and later on Hájí Níáz.

1. A Busy Day for ‘Abdu’l-Bahá

We did not see the Master today. In the morning he was busy reading his letters; in the afternoon he dictated Tablets for the believers of Persia; in the evening he gave an interview to two correspondents of Arabic Dailies in Cairo. We were standing near the door of the Victoria Hotel, expecting him to come out when the interview was ended. About 10:30 P.M. we saw him descending the stairs. He was feeling well, but a little tired.

2. The Story of the King and the Thorn-picker

If you would like to hear the story of the king and the thorn-picker as related to me by Mírzá Jalál Síná, I will be glad to share it with you:

Once upon a time the king of the country of the North went hunting. While he was chasing a deer, he forgot all about his retinue and royal tent, and charged his steed through glen and dale; the deer ever evading him by leading him on. Suddenly the king realized that he was far away from his servants, the midday sun poured its hot rays down upon his head. He looked around, and to his amazement found himself in a vast desert full of thorns and briars. Then in the far distance he spied, with his eyeglass, an old man gathering thorns. The old man startled, looked up. “Who art thou?” the king asked. “I am a thorn-picker and maintain my large family by selling thorns in the city.” “How many times a week dost thou come here?” {p318} “Oh, I come every day. If I miss one day, my people will go hungry." "But surely thou art not equal to this hard work." "What else can I do?" "Come, my brother," the king said, as he extended his hand to him. "If thou dost listen to me and obey all my orders, I will make thee the richest man in the world. I will teach thee the secret of the Philosopher's Stone which transmutes the baser metals into gold." "Very well, I will follow and obey thee under all circumstances." "But thou must first realize that the road is full of temptations. Thou must look neither to thy right nor to thy left, listen to me and renouncing all things, ever follow me." "Yea, yea, I will do anything thou dost command me." "Very well, then, come; I am willing to give thee a trial." The thorn-picker, throwing away his stiletto with which he used to cut the thorns, started to follow the king.

For one hour they walked till they reached a desert which was shining under the rays of the sun. The old man asked the king: "Why is this soil so brilliant?" "The ground of this desert is of silver." "Oh, oh, can I not fill my pockets with it?" he asked, all excitement. "Did I not tell thee that thou wilt encounter temptations in the path?" The old man, being thus rebuked for his apparent forgetfulness, became silent and said nothing, but in his heart he coveted such free, abundant wealth. In order to keep his mind away from his secret thoughts, the king tried to entertain him with varied conversation until they had passed by this plain, and entered another which was of a dazzling yellow color. "What is this?" the thorn-picker asked, while blinking his eyes. "The soil of this plain is of gold." "Gold, gold, my goodness! There is so much gold scattered here, and I am so utterly, so miserably poor; and my family always half-starved." Half bent, inclined by an uncontrollable desire, he was going to grab a nugget, when the king took him by the hand: {{p319}} "Come, come, my brother, I shall make thee so rich that thou wilt not deign to look at a mountain of gold." "Well, I don't know how! Here I see so much gold, a pocketful of which will make me rich beyond my fondest dreams." "Don't listen to the suggestions of thy heart. This desert of gold is not to be compared to the treasures which lie before thee." "I will wait and see."

At last they crossed the desert, but the old man was moody, his eyes wandering to the right and to the left, looking at the immense amount of gold dust scattered over the plain. Finally they entered another desert. Here their eyes were almost blinded by the dazzling brilliancy everywhere. "What is this plain made of? Please tell me at once," the old man asked excitedly. "I have never seen anything like it in all my life." "Oh," the king answered calmly: "Nothing especially valuable. This is the diamond plain." "Diamond!" His eyes were ready to fall from their sockets. "I have heard that it is the most precious gem in the world. Surely you will permit me to fill at least one of my pockets with these precious stones. Just think how one of them will make me quite independent!" "No, brother, thou must not act like a child. On this pilgrimage thou canst not carry anything with thee. Like a bird thou must be free. Thou must not soil thy wings with water and clay, otherwise thou wilt not be able to soar and reach the height." With much persuasion, the old man was at last prevented from loading himself with diamonds, and by and by they were out of this plain too.

Now it was nearly sunset, when lo, on the Western horizon they saw a wonderful body of water shimmering under the last rays of the sun. the king pointed it out to the old man with an exultant cry: — “Look, dost thou see the ocean lying before us? {{p320}} This is the sea of the ‘Philosopher’s Stone’, one drop of which will transmute all the baser metals into the purest gold.” The old man was, however, extremely tired by this time, and as he was thinking in an absent-minded way how to answer the king, he saw another thorn-picker, who was a friend of his, appearing on the scene. “What does thou do here?” he asked. “Today,” he said, “several members of our guild went on a strike, so a load of thorns is fetching a high price in the city. Come along with me. We two, all our lives, have been non-union members, and for the next two or three days, before the strike is settled, we can make a nice profit by supplying the citizens with the necessary fuel.” The old thorn-picker got very much excited over this unexpected news, and forgetting the king, the ocean of the Philosopher’s Stone and the inexhaustible fortune awaiting him, turned back. The king, pitying their ignorance, cried out after them, promising that he would make both rich beyond their dreams. The younger man hesitated for a moment, but the old man would not listen. “He has fooled me all day, and now he is going to make another fool out of you. Let us run quickly before he persuades us again to obey and follow him.”

For two days they gathered several loads of thorns, hoping that they would sell them at their own price and become independent and rich. But when they entered the city, they learned to their utter dismay that the price was even lower than its current standard, because there was no strike at all amongst the thorn-pickers, and the information given to the younger man was based on hearsay. Then the old man remembered the king, the plains of silver, gold and diamonds, and the ocean of the philosopher’s stone. Wildly he ran out of the city, searched and searched all the neighboring plains, but he could find no trace of the king. {{p321}} Everything had disappeared like magic. “Why did I listen to another man? Why did I not obey the king? Why did I deprive myself of such a heavenly treasury?” Thus he was rebuking himself as he continued his search, ever hoping to find the king.

1. Arrival of Pilgrims and Other Incidents

This morning I could see the Master only for a few minutes and presented to him a number of letters just translated. We did not see him any more before sunset. At that hour he passed by our home going to Mírzá Abu’l-Faḍl’s apartment, where the Arab believers gather weekly to hear him speak. A number of Persians were also there. He sent for Mírzá Maḥmúd and told him that there were some pilgrims who would arrive at 7:30 P.M. from Port Sa’íd, and that we should go to the station to welcome them. We walked to Sidi Jaber and when the train rolled into the station, we were glad to receive two young Persians, one from Russia, another from Beirut, and Mrs. Stannard from Haifa. She has spent a pleasant summer on Mount Carmel and is going to stay at Ramleh, as long as the Master continues to live here. We conducted her to the Victoria Hotel. Miss Hiscock also has left her Hotel and is now at this one. {{p322}} I hear that Mrs. Getsinger will go to ‘Akká and Haifa to visit the holy Tombs of Bahá’u’lláh and the Báb before starting on her journey to India.

2. Translation of a Tablet, Giving the Keynote of the Bahá’í Movement

“He is God!

“O YE FRIENDS OF ‘ABDU’L-BAHÁ! In this Divine Dispensation and lordly Cycle the fundamental principle and the supreme object is the establishment of the oneness of the world of humanity; so that through this oneness and agreement all wars and contentions will be wiped away from amongst mankind and the Beloved of Union appear in the Assemblage of the world.

“The promulgators of this Union must be the believers of God, — so that through the merciful power they may dispel from the horizon of the world the darkness of strangeness and the Adored One of Unity may unveil her sweet and heart-captivating Countenance. If the least ill-feeling exists amongst the friends themselves, how, then, can this great matter be realized? Therefore, everyone of the believers must strive valiantly with heart and soul; so that not the smallest speck of dust may sit upon the mirror of fundamental Unity; Love should increase day unto day, and the qualities of good-fellowship, intimacy, friendship and mutual kindness be clothed with resplendent realities amongst the believers.

“O God, O God, I lay my forehead and place my face upon the dust of humility and submission — looking up toward the kingdom of Mystery and beg of Thee with a contrite, supplicating, entreating, humble, submissive, broken and pain-encircled heart, from the Threshold of Thy Holiness — in the world of Lights — to render asunder the veils of Pluralities, and with manifest signs reveal the Beauty of Fundamental Unity in the hearts.

“O Lord! {{p323}} Make Thy believers the waves of the sea of Thy Oneness, the Breezes of the rose-garden of Thy singleness, the stars of the heaven of amity and good-fellowship and the pearls of the ocean of Love and Guidance; — so that they may drink from one fountain, breathe in one air, be illumined by one light, turn entirely their faces toward the world of renunciation and the Center of inspiration.

“Verily Thou art the Mighty, the Beloved, the Glorious and the Most High!

(Signed) “‘ABDU’L-BAHÁ ‘ABBÁS.”

3. Give Hearing to the Deaf, Sight to the Blind and

Speech to the Dumb

“O thou sign of Guidance! Thank God that thou hast advanced from the region of darkness toward the center of Lights and after crossing the desert of mirage, hast reached the sweet, cool and salubrious springs. The rays of Guidance thou hast beheld in the horizon of Unity, and in the Valley of safety, thou didst hear the soul-refreshing Call of God from the Blessed Tree. The honey of the Love of God thou didst taste, and hast become intoxicated with the Wine of the Knowledge of God.

“Now is the time when thou mayst become the associate of the known and unknown and at every moment raise the cry of Ya-Bahá-El Abhá. Unloose thy tongue in the most great Guidance; give hearing to the deaf, sight to the blind and speech to the dumb. Bestow exhilaration and rejoicing upon the lukewarm, and happiness and joy upon the despondent. Confer intelligence upon the heedless, awake the sleepy ones, cause to drink those who are thirsty, guide the erring ones, make confident those who are deprived, and reinforce the weak. Verily thy Lord will assist thee and help thee; {{p324}} will inspire thee with the breaths of the Holy Spirit and cause thee to utter His proofs and arguments with great penetration and conviction.”

1. The Spiritual Palace of International Brotherhood Is

Being Built by the Peacemakers

All the palaces that are built are subject to destruction, save only the Palace of Love which is protected. So far as Love is the Ruler of hearts, there is no difficulty, but when it is replaced by indifference, and the fire is extinguished. In order to remove the possibility of estrangement, we must look to the higher principles of the spiritual life. For life indeed is sterile, unless it produces the fruits of love, a Love which breaks through all the walls of national and racial prejudices, and enters upon the plane of universal brotherhood. The spiritual Palace, the foundation of which is the Love of God is never laid waste.

The Palace of the Bahá'í Cause is firm; because its architect is Bahá'u'lláh, its builder is 'Abdu'l-Bahá, its masons are the companions of God, its laborers are the friends of God, its foundation the Word of God; {{p325}} its cement the Law of God, its water the blood of the martyrs, its materials and principles of absolute Reality, its rooms the religions of God, its light the sun of righteousness, its decorations the virtues of the world of humanity, its imperishable flowers the glorious attributes of Divinity and its dwellers the people of Truth.

Men and women from East and West, North and South are daily working on the construction of this Palace. With noble self-sacrifice, with unparalleled enthusiasm, with confident self-reliance, they are continually adding new partitions to this heavenly Palace. They do not rest for one moment. For them spiritual treasures are destined and inestimable bounties are provided. Are they not joint-partners in the building of the Palace of International Peace and arbitration, the edifice of the equality of human rights and the structure of the economic adjustment of all the inescapable problems of this modern era? We are assured by the Divine Architect that the volcanic events of the times and the corroding effect of the coming ages, shall not leave their impressions upon this spiritual Palace.

2. “Christian Commonwealth” and Bahá’í Articles

Today ‘Abdu’l-Bahá had a slight fever; notwithstanding this he wrote many Tablets for the believers of ‘Akká with his own hand. He received the newly arrived believer, Mírzá Siyyid Ḥusayn, a fine young man, a graduate from the college of Beirut, and the son of the sister of the Master. Of course, he lives in His house. The rest of the students are expected to arrive tomorrow. In the afternoon the Master passed by and went to the garden. He stayed there for more than an hour, telling several stories to Ḥájí Níáz who was in his presence. On his return we caught just a glimpse of him.

The Christian Commonwealth is publishing weekly articles and these are regularly translated into Persian and circulated in the Orient for the benefit of our Eastern friends, especially the August number which contained an article on the Prison Experiences of ‘Abdu’l-Bahá. The Master has often expressed the wish that the friends should serve the Cause by subscribing to this paper. {{p326}} The other day a Tablet was revealed for the editor which I transcribe here; so that it may encourage the Bahá’ís to increase their subscriptions. They can do so through Mr. Joseph H. Hannen; because he is its Bahá’í correspondent. One of the latest copies will contain the Master’s article on Universal Peace.

3. Tablet to the Editor of the “Christian Commonwealth”

“He is God!

“O THOU KIND, BELOVED FRIEND!

“The copies of your peerless paper which are in reality the proofs of your high ideals, the exaltation of your aims and the principles of the prosperity of the world aims and the principles of the prosperity of the world paper of yours which is like unto a clear, transparent of humanity — were received. Truly I say, this unique mirror, reveal the images of Reality. It is the reflection of Truths which mirror forth through the pages of this paper. All the Bahá’ís are grateful and thankful to you on account of your praiseworthy intentions. The significance of these articles is not realized at the present time, but in the future they will gain such importance that every copy containing an article on the Cause of Bahá’u’lláh will be framed, preserved and hung in the most honored place, and their contents quoted by people of culture. Therefore, rest thou assured that thou art sowing pure seeds in pure ground. {{p327}} Ere long they will grow and develop and many harvests will be gathered.

“Upon thee be greeting and praise,

(Signed) “‘ABDU’L-BAHÁ ‘ABBÁS.”

4. The Sojourn in Ramleh Has Been Fruitful

So far as I can judge at the present, our stay in Ramleh is coming to a close, though the next place to be honored by the presence of the Beloved is not definitely known. I hear talk about his going to Haifa. However, he will be here at least one month more. Our summer was altogether very delightful. ‘Abdu’l-Bahá was a source of great joy and strength to the hearts of many believers who made the pilgrimage from all corners of the Orient to see him and to receive his spiritual instructions.

RAMLEH, EGYPT, SEPTEMBER 18, 1913.

1. ‘Abdu’l-Bahá Writes to the Believers in Russia

This morning the Master dressed in his beautiful soft cream-colored robe, entered our house. Mírzá ‘Alí Akber handed him a few letters from Russia. He read them without delay and asked Mírzá Munír to bring paper, ink and pen. He dictated answers to each, and through them you can see how he adapts himself to the individual needs and the spiritual capacity of every person, and out of his abundant treasury, showers upon them the wealth of the Kingdom of Abhá. Although these believers live in the remote Empires of Russia, Persia, Turkey, or Arabia, yet he knows them and they know him. {{p328}} How they hunger for and preserve every Tablet which he reveals for them!

2. In the Bahá’í Cause There Are No Salaried Teachers

One of the believers asked him what should he do, what course of action should he take up? He told him to go and teach the Cause, spread the coming of the Kingdom and herald the dawn of the Sun of Reality. To convey the message is a confirmed matter. Whosoever arises in this service will always be aided by the angels of the Supreme Concourse. It is true that the friends will do everything in their power to help a person who devotes all his time to the service of the Cause, but let there be no doubt on this subject, that in this movement there are no regular salaried teachers. A paid teacher will not be able to accomplish as much work as if he were independent. In this cause ‘Abdu’l-Bahá desires to have teachers who sacrifice all their belongings, possessions, hearts, lives and spirits in the work of God. This would be very effective. The Cause must be promulgated with devotion and personal sacrifice, and not through financial operations.

3. Wit Is the Salt of Conversation

Then he told us that, although he did not feel well, he had written many letters to the believers of ‘Akká with his own hand, because they were old and tried friends.

He mentioned their names, one by one, a long list, I assure you. {{p329}} Speaking about the Tablet written to Abú’l-Qásim, the gardener, he said that Abú’l-Qásim had sent some pomegranates to him from the garden, so that he might write back that the skin of the pomegranates were as rosy and pink as the cheeks of Jamílih (the gardener’s wife), but that the former is through the creation of God, while the latter through the power of devotion. He laughed a great deal, finally saying that it is necessary to joke now and then, for joking is the salt of conversation.

4. The Second Party of Bahá’í Students Arrive

About ten o’clock the second party of Bahá’í students arrived from Haifa. They are all fine fellows, full of the spirit of the Cause, and devoted to their studies. their names are as follows: Habíb’u’lláh Khudabakshí, Badi“” Bushrúyyih, Mír Jalál, Mír Kamál, Abu’l Ḥasan Khán, Qulam Ḥusayn Khán, Ḥasan Khán, ‘Abdu’l ‘Alí and Ṭaráz’u’lláh. The first two are very brilliant young men, and owing to their superior wisdom and intelligence exercise a most salutary influence over the student body. They are, in a way, leaders without the name of leadership. Badi“” Effendi is a versatile poet as well as Habíb’u’lláh. The former sings beautifully, and on account of this advantage, both of them have taught all the students Bahá’í songs and poems. As soon as they entered the house, the atmosphere was changed, and we heard snatches of songs, now in solo and again in chorus. After a while the Master sent for them and they had a short interview with him. He fired their hearts with words of encouragement, and hoped that they would combine together literary knowledge with practical science. From now on they will stand daily in the presence of the Master and listen to his advice.

5. Mrs. Fraser Arrives from America

In the afternoon ‘Abdu’l-Bahá passed by, followed by Shoghi Effendi. {{p330}} He called for me and I walked behind him in the rose-garden. A telegram sent to Port Sa’íd from the Master to Aḥmad Yazdí: “Send Mrs. Fraser to Ramleh,” brought back the answer that she had left at one o’clock. He told me to go with Shoghi Effendi to the station and bring her home. We were expecting her for a few days. I was delighted to hear the news.

6. Mrs. Fraser is Welcomed at the Station by Shoghi

Effendi

It was a hot day, but the rose-garden is always cool, the fresh breeze wafting. The master asked Shoghi Effendi to bring him a bottle of Evian water. Meanwhile an Arab, who is a laborer, came in and saluted him. The Arab told a long story, illustrating it with poems, about the source of the Nile, that it is in paradise and flows from under a throne — a pretty legend. Then a few men came in to see the Master. He spoke to them in detail on trustworthiness, and told them three stories about his own life. For three hours we sat in his presence listening with attention to every word he said. When he left the rose-garden, Shoghi Effendi and I went to the Sidi Jaber station to welcome our dear sister, Mrs. Fraser. We greeted her on behalf of the Master. After ten minutes, she stood before him. She is going to live with the Holy Family, and I have no doubt that the Bahá'í world will receive a rich and valuable treasure when her Diary is given out.

1. The American Bahá'ís Will Be Going to India

With the early departure of Mr. and Mrs. Getsinger and Mrs. Fraser to India, we will have three active teachers in that great field. May they work together unitedly, and hoist the banner of the Cause in that vast region! Each one of these three Bahá'ís is gifted with a particular spiritual talent, and when they combine their forces they will be able to render a most brilliant service to the Cause. To India, — a region of sects and creeds, — this truth goes as a balm of reconciliation, a remedy for religious differences and a cooling water of knowledge for those who are thirsty. Their work will carry them through many cities and the assistance of God will be with them. A cable was received from Doctor Getsinger saying that he would be here in three or four days.

2. The Importance of the Art of Translation

This morning 'Abdu'l-Bahá sent for the students. They were all filled with hope and longing. When they stood in his presence, he welcomed them and tea was served. Having received the constitution of "a central London Bahá'í Committee" which is in the process of organization, he gave it to Badi' Effendi to translate, and then delivered a short talk on the art of translation, advising them to write at least one page every day, either from English into Persian, or from Persian into English, thus they might acquire efficiency in this line of work. {{p332}} He recommended for the future that when the means are provided, a committee of translators be organized from both nationalities, who would know the two languages well, in addition to Arabic. Then the Tablets would be properly translated. Again he spoke about Persia and the part which they play in her reconstruction.

3. The Past Glory of Persia and Her Future

Opportunity

He said to the students that there was a time when Persia was like a fragrant Bouquet, perfuming all nostrils. She was the center of the glory and honor of the world of humanity. The inhabitants of Persia from a social, industrial, political and moral standpoint were superior to the rest of mankind. Now conditions are reversed and the same high standard is not kept waving aloft. Like a great giant, she is prostrated on the ground, groaning with a pitiful voice. If the Persians could clearly see the sad and gloomy state of their own country, they would weep bitter tears of remorse, but they are all self-occupied. It is a natural and divine law that when a nation or country sinks to the lowest degree of degradation, then God, in His Bounty, comes to help her, uplifting and raising her to the highest zenith of glory. As Persia has experienced these sad events, the Lord in His Mercy has willed that that country be illumined, so that her future condition may become even more glorious than her past, and that she may advance greatly along the path of science, industry and art. Now God has purposed that they may become a means of this reformation, and strive day and night that Persia may be enlightened. They must equip themselves with practical education; — so that Persia may be benefited through them. The Confirmations of Abhá will always be theirs. {{p333}} If a person studies all the sciences and arts, without receiving heavenly Confirmations, he will not be able to accomplish very much. Now he hopes that they will become the Cause of the moral and scientific advancement of all the Persians.

4. The Bahá'í Students Meet Mrs. Getsinger and Mrs.

Fraser in the Home of 'Abdu'l-Bahá

Afterwards he sent for Hájí Níáz, Mírzá 'Alí-Akbar, Mírzá Maḥmúd and me. I was carrying a package of Tablets just translated, which I gave to him. He took it out of my hands and gave me a hard blow on my right cheek. "Bravo," he said. Then for a few minutes he spoke about the events of Persia, and the attitude of the governors toward the Cause, and the believers. A package of petitions had just been received. He opened it and read a few. They all contained good news about the progress of the Cause in Persia. Then he went into his own room and sent Mrs. Getsinger and Mrs. Fraser to see us. When they entered the sight of them brought me the significance of the Bahá'í Cause. Here we were, four Persians and two American ladies meeting on the ground of perfect spiritual friendship! Who has brought to us this divine edifice in which we abide? Those who have lived in the West all their lives, are not quit able to realize this wonderful transformation; this alchemic change of hearts. When we left them, I was yet under the spell of the realization of it, and was more than ever thankful to Bahá'u'lláh for thus uniting the hearts of the East and the West by breaking away the barriers of nationalities, and causing the appearance of the light of Reality.

5. Bahá'í Meeting for the Americans

In the afternoon the students were taken to the garden of Nozha by Mírzá 'Alí-Akbar and Hájí Níáz, after which they attended a meeting in Khurasání's house, where Mrs. Fraser, Mrs. Stannard and Miss Hiscock were present. Mrs. Fraser had her first experience of a Persian-Arabic Bahá'í meeting, and for her honor the students sang Mrs. Waite's poem of "Alláh-u-Abhá" and other pieces. {{p334}} This gathering composed only of men, must have appeared very picturesque and strange to her. The Master attended the meeting for a few minutes. In the evening several people visited him and he spoke with them on the theological questions of the East, and of their futility. While the students were in the Park, he passed and asked for Mírzá Munír.

6. 'Abdu'l-Bahá Amid a Profusion of Thousands of

Roses

After a few minutes Mírzá Munír returned, saying that the Master wanted us to go to the rose-garden. Mírzá Jalál Síná, Mírzá Maḥmúd and I joined him. He was sitting under the shade on a tree, while the breezes played about him. This is a rose-garden divided into two part, the first section overlooking the other and joined together by steps. Daily twelve thousand roses, pink, white, red, yellow, are sent to Alexandria and Cairo florists. The fragrance of these roses is exhilarating. The gardener is a simple Arab and most devoted to the Master. He always jokes with him.

7. Description of the Garden of Bahá'u'lláh in Ṭihrán

After speaking and reciting several stories of the life in 'Akká, 'Abdu'l-Bahá reverted to the rose-garden, expressing his love and admiration for roses. He said that outside of Ṭihrán his family had a great park planted by the Father of Bahá'u'lláh. {{p335}} This was a wonderful garden. It contained four gates, Eastern, Western, Northern and Southern. As you entered the Eastern gate, the Western gate was visible, and similarly from the Northern you could see the Southern gate. In the center of the garden, a throne was built, the four great avenues branching off toward the gates, so that you could see all four gates as you sat on that throne. On both sides of these avenues poplar trees were planted to the number of ten thousand. These trees rose erect and majestic toward the sky. Under them thousands of rose bushes were growing, the fragrance of which filled the air. Often 'Abdu'l-Bahá used to sleep in this throne at night. The moon, clear, full, silvery, shone upon him. The galaxy of stars shedding their rays, now faintly, and again with a lustrous twinkle over the calm and mystic scene of the garden. Long before sunrise he would open his eyes and look with wonder at this infinite universe of God. Then the nightingales would break into a glorious concert of divine music; the gentle murmur of the rills flowing on all sides reached the ears, and the zephyrs wafting through the leaves made soft music, the branches hand-clapping and applauding. In the early morning the Blessed perfection would rise and prepare tea for the family, and while the sun was dawning from the Eastern horizon, they would gather about him, drinking tea and enjoying the heavenly scene.

Then he started to walk through the rose-garden, now and then standing before a rose on a bush, contemplating its structure and petals.

8. A Single Rose in the Garden of Constantinople

Looking at a rose which was very like an American beauty, he said that it was just about this season when he arrived in Constantinople. {{p336}} The garden of the house where he lived contained one bush, on a branch of which a single rose bloomed forth after sunset. The believers, never having seen roses at this season were overjoyed, and until late at night were gathered around it.

1. Thoughts on the Mediterranean Shore

It is ten o'clock P.M. I have just returned home, after lying quietly on the shore of the Mediterranean for more than an hour. While my body was stretched on the soft sand, my eyes gazing at the infinite orbs of light, my spirit was holding communion with the friends beyond the seas. The night was dark and still, and my ears enjoyed the music of the waves, murmuring along the shore. Here I am, I thought, and where will I be in the future? Did I ever dream last year that I would be returning to the East in the service of 'Abdu'l-Bahá? Truly, how our own plans seem futile when compared with the glorious plan mapped for us by the Designer of the Universe! How often in a foolish fit of pride we prefer our own pigmy scheme to that of the Almighty! The Cause is great and our destiny is very high! {{p337}} I praise God for thus taking me out of the noise and clamor of the West into the calm and beautiful serenity of the East! As Mírzá Abu'l-Faql said the other day:

"You are now in the school. Daily you are learning your lessons but the time may come when 'Abdu'l-Bahá will send you away into the world to carry out his will and to serve the cause of humanity."

2. 'Abdu'l-Bahá Talks to Mrs. Fraser and Mrs. Getsinger

About Their Trip to India

This morning after the students had visited the Master, we were sent for, and he dwelt on the same subject on which he had spoken with them. It was on the internal condition of the Cause in Tíhrán and the history of one of the believers. Then he told me that I might come at any time to see Mrs. Getsinger and Mrs. Fraser to talk with them about the details of the plan of their voyage to India and prepare for them a list of addresses. For an hour in the afternoon we discussed their approaching visit. The former gave me a copy of her diary of yesterday, and I will quote here a part of it: —

“Suddenly turning to me, ‘Abdu’l-Bahá asked, ‘Can you think of an excuse to secretly take me to India with you? What plans have you made for India?’ ‘I have no plans,’ I answered, ‘except to obey the will of ‘Abdu’l-Bahá!’ Then turning to both of us, he said: ‘What will you do if they dispute these teachings?’ Mrs. Getsinger answered, ‘I shall turn to ‘Abdu’l-Bahá and call upon him for spiritual confirmation. After repeating the Greatest Name, I shall open my mouth and say what is given me to say.’ ‘What will you do if they beat you?’ ‘What will you do if they put you in prison’ ‘I shall thank God that I have walked in His path, and have been permitted to share what ‘Abdu’l-Bahá has suffered for years.’

“‘Abdu’l-Bahá was silent for a moment. Then he raised his voice, giving it a dramatic emphasis — ‘And what will you do if they kill you?’ {{p338}} ‘I shall realize that the first favor that I ever asked of ‘Abdu’l-Bahá had been granted. And the minute my soul is freed from my body, I will fly to God from whom I hope it will never be separated through all eternity.’

“There was a silence. The master’s eyes were closed. Then he told us: When one goes forth to teach, he should think of all these things. He must be prepared at all times, for whatever comes in the path of God. During the many years that he was in prison, each moment he lived under the sword. He felt that perhaps tomorrow, or tonight, or in an hour, or on the very hour, an order might come from the Sultán to kill all of them. He never went to bed a single night all that time, thinking to see the morrow!”

3. Mr. Hooper Harris and Harlan Ober’s Trip to India

In this connection let me bring to your attention the good and excellent Bahá’í work done in India, by our two American brothers, Mr. Hooper Harris of New York and Mr. Harlan Ober of Boston. Both these brothers scattered far and wide the seeds of the Bahá’í Cause, and their memories are always kept fresh in the hearts of those who have seen or heard them. Their services will never be forgotten. Like true, staunch pioneers, they worked nobly and faithfully, and when they returned, they laid many laurels of victory at the feet of ‘Abdu’l-Bahá. With the lamps of guidance in their hands, these other teachers will soon hasten toward India, and will summon all to the kingdom of Abhá, and impart the Glad-tidings of Peace and Brotherhood.

1. The Story of the King and His Search for the

Fountain of Life

“Please tell me a story,” I asked Siyyid Jalál Síná as I sat down in the front of my writing table.

“Once upon a time,” he started without hesitation, “a king of antiquity who had conquered many countries, and had raised the Flag of his authority over many climes, became restless and discontented with his lot. On the occasion of a New Year’s Day, when all the Cabinet Ministers, Dignitaries of the States, colonial Governors and officials of remote countries had gathered in the capital to pay homage and tribute to their emperor, and while he was sitting on his diamond-studded throne, with all these men standing before him, he raised his voice addressing the concourse of officials, clothed in their dazzling robes of ceremony:

“‘My friends! From my earliest youth, I have obtained everything for which my heart has wished. I have had the good fortune of receiving wise instruction from excellent teachers and statesmen. Then having attained the age of maturity, I ascended the throne after the death of my father. I have ever striven to keep Peace within the vast heterogeneous elements of my empire, and have extended the boundaries of my possessions beyond the seas. The mighty arms of my generals have carried the authority of my government, and the influence of my laws to the confines of the earth. Notwithstanding these things, I am not contented. My heart longs for the attainment of an object which seems to my mortal eyes unattainable. I do not know what it is, but I feel that there is something for the possession of which I am ready to give up my whole empire. {{p340}} The idea has occurred to me that I may ask each of you to relate the story and the experiences of your lives, perchance through your narration I may be able to learn the secret of this longing which is knocking at the door of my heart.’

“For several minutes the great throng of people in the audience-chamber fell into a deep silence, so deep that if a pin had been dropped, one could have heard its fall. They looked furtively at each other, and each wondered in his heart, ‘What is this Something for whose possession the king is willing to forfeit his whole Empire?’ At last, the prime Minister arose from his seat, and related a long story about his experiences. He sat down, and others followed in the order of succession. All the while the king shook his head, showing that the problem had not been solved. Finally an old man, who had been the wise mentor and guide of the king from his early childhood, rose from his seat and, with a penetrating and convincing voice, spoke as follows:

“‘Sire! I know the object of your Majesty’s search. You are longing for the water of Life, the fountain of which is situated in the Kingdom of Darkness. I have been there. I have seen it with my own eyes, and have drunk of it deeply. Now having attained to Eternal Youth, I am bound for the Kingdom of Light.’ ‘Oh! Oh!’ the king exclaimed, rising from his throne, and shaking off his lethargy, ‘that is the thing that I have wished for, all my life, but I did not know what it was. From this very moment I will make preparations to start the search and will close my eyes to all rest and comfort till I have found it.’ Then he ordered his generals to summon the army, and issued an edict for the Imperial Guards to prepare to start on a long journey. After a week of feverish work, everything was ready and the king appointed his successor.

“On the last day, the inhabitants of the capital arranged a mammoth open air reception, and when the king had delivered a farewell speech, amid flying colors, and to the singing of the national anthem, he started at the head of his great army for the Kingdom of Darkness. {{p341}} After many months of journey through desolate deserts and over impassable mountains, the exhausted army reached the desired destination. But the king, to his great disappointment, remembered that the old man had told him in a private meeting, that there were about 2000 fountains in the Kingdom of Darkness, and as regard to color, taste and property, they were exactly alike.

“Therefore it would be a matter of impossibility to distinguish one from the other. Thinking that all the hardships of this arduous journey would be crowned with no success, and filled with apprehension and terror at the gloomy darkness enveloping his innumerable legions, with no possibility of escape, he resigned himself to the hand of Fate, and began to think how he and his army could manage to extricate themselves from the impenetrable gloom. At this juncture, the same old man appeared on the scene, and the king’s hope immediately revived. He confided to him his great perplexity at not being able to find the real Fountain of Life, inasmuch as there were so many of them.

“‘This is very easy,’ the wise one said. ‘I have come here especially to relieve your mind from further anxiety on this point. Here is a dead fish. Take it along with you. When you reach a fountain, drop it in. If it is revived, you will know, without a doubt, that you have the Fountain of Life before your eyes.’

“The old man disappeared in the same mysterious way. The king thus heartened by the advice of his mentor, ordered his army to decamp and to continue the journey. After several days, they reached a large fountain, and as soon as the king dropped the fish into the water, it became a living, moving creature. {{p342}} He prostrated himself on the ground, and thanked God for thus guiding him at last to the Fountain of Life. And so he camped there for a few days, and drank deeply of the water, gaining new life, new hope and new courage.

“Realizing that he had attained to the supreme object of his existence, he decided to return. Just before their departure, a great, invisible voice filled the air. ‘Whoso ever takes away the stones from the bottom of the Fountain of Life, will regret it afterwards, and whosoever does not take the stones will also regret.’ The people were puzzled, and did not know what to do. Should they take, or should they not take? Finally a number of them filled their pockets, under the pretext that even if they did not take any, they would regret, so that it was just as well to take them; others argued, why should they burden themselves with any of these stones, and then regret it afterwards. So it happened that half of the army possessed themselves of the stones, and the other half returned empty-handed. When they came out of the kingdom of Darkness, they observed to their great astonishment, that these stones were precious gems. Those who had taken them, regretted that they had not taken more, and those who were empty-handed, regretted that they had not taken any. Thus both sides were afflicted with remorse and regret.

“Now, instead of giving the full significance of this story, I will give you the key. The king, every man: Old man, reason; Fountain of Life, religion; Fish, the heart; Invisible voice, Intuition; Stones, good deeds; Kingdom of Darkness, material world; Kingdom of light, spiritual world; Eternal youth, Everlasting life; {{p343}} Two thousand fountains, Creeds and sects.”

2. The Simplicity of Life, and How the Arabs Live on

the Desert

In the morning the Master came to our house and s a preliminary to his talk, spoke about the renewal of the rent, which, of course, meant a longer stay in Ramleh. than as naturally he fell into a description of the complexity of the means of modern life.

How complex are the means of life in the present age, and how much more complex are we making them daily! The people’s needs seem never to come to an end. The more they accumulate, the more they want. There is only one way of freedom, and that is by shutting one’s eyes and heart to all these things that distract the mind. The Arab of the desert teaches us a great lesson in the simple life. Living as he does, in the vast Sahara, he lacks all means except a tent, a rug or mat, a caldron, a sword hanging to the inside pole of the tent, and a javelin tied to the outside pole. This is all his furniture. Then if he is wealthy, he has a mare, or a horse, a few camels, and maybe, adjoining his tent, a palm grove. It never occurs to his mind, that thee is anything else in this world. He is happy and he has no worry. His food consists of a bowl of milk and a few dates, and he may well wonder how the city man can digest all the different kinds of dishes with their flavors and spices. He enjoys perfect health. His thought is peaceful and serene, contrary to the city people, who are always haunted by the nightmare of making a bare livelihood.

3. ‘Abdu’l-Bahá Talks with Mrs. Fraser

Afterwards I went to see the Master. He was surrounded by many people and was talking and writing at the same time. {{p344}} In the afternoon, I visited Mrs. Fraser and Mrs. Getsinger and for quite a while we talked together about their forthcoming trip to India. Both are full of enthusiasm and are looking forward with great pleasure to their approaching experiences. In the evening, the Master sent for me and in speaking with Mrs. Fraser, told her that he was very pleased with her, because as soon as she received his cablegram, although there were difficulties in the path, she pushed them aside and came. The Confirmations of the Kingdom of Abhá shall descend upon her. She was going to India in the service of the Kingdom of God and the Angels of the Supreme Concourse shall assist her. Let her rest assured. Because her heart is pure, she will attract to herself the heavenly Bestowals.

1. ‘Abdu’l-Bahá’s Spiritual Moods

Last night, when Mrs. Fraser left the room, ‘Abdu’l-Bahá continued to walk. He was fatigued. He sat down and closed his eyes, saying how glad he would be when he leaves this world; this world of darkness and sorrow, pain and suffering. He sighed. It seemed to me that he was too exhausted to speak another word, and I was going to retire. Then somehow, Mrs. Haney’s letter came to my mind, so I said:

“I had a letter from Mrs. Haney the other day, in which she expressed great joy at reading the story of the Self-sacrifice of Mullá Mihdí Kandí.”

Immediately he opened his eyes, and looked like a different person, as though supplied by a tremendous force from an invisible source. {{p345}} As soon as the name of this martyr was mentioned he was energized, got up from his seat, and began to speak with inspiration and eloquent fervor, throwing additional sidelights upon the life of that divine martyr, and then just as unconsciously, a clear stream of words flowed from his tongue in praise of Mary Magdalene, and of how she became the cause of the constancy and steadfastness of the disciples of Christ.

2. Doctor Getsinger’s Arrival in Alexandria

This morning Shoghi Effendi entered my room with a wireless message, just arrived from Dr. Getsinger, advising us of his arrival Monday morning, and as this was Monday, the Master sent word for me to go to the wharf to welcome him. I was on my way without delay, and had to wait until noon. The “Prince Heinrich” of the German Line appeared, and after a few minutes, I spied Doctor Getsinger on the deck. We had to wait two hours in the Custom House before we were freed, and then taking a carriage, and putting his trunks and valise in front, we drove to Ramleh.

At four o’clock the Master greeted him in his house, and about six we called on Mírzá Abu’l-Faḍl. He was very glad to welcome Dr. Getsinger back to the Orient and inquired about many believers in Washington, Chicago and New York. Then a historical discussion about the Bible and the exact date in which Zoroaster lived waxed hot until the Master came in. We all sat on the balcony for a few moments, ‘Abdu’l-Bahá joked with Doctor Getsinger, reminding him of the days when he was traveling with him in America.

He dictated a long Tablet to the believers of Mazindarán in the garden. {{p346}} Returning from his walk he came to our house and spoke with the students. Thus he attends to his flock with care and solicitude Doctor Getsinger is going to have a room in the New Victoria Hotel as the guest of the Master.

3. Tablet of ‘Abdu’l-Bahá to the Bahá’ís in Leipzig,

Germany

“He is God!

“O YE SONS AND DAUGHTERS OF THE KINGDOM!

“The heavenly daughter, Miss Knoblock, has given the utmost praise about your Faith and Love; that Glory be to God, you heard the call of the Kingdom, that your spirits gained the capacity of flight, your hearts were illumined with the Light of Guidance, you drank the Elixir of Bestowal from the Cup of Divine Knowledge and became intoxicated with the Wine of the Kingdom. Thank God that He has chosen you from amongst all The people of the world and has granted you such an eminent Gift: — so that each one may enter into the Kingdom of God, and like unto the stars may shine and gleam. This Bestowal of the Most great Guidance is not so apparent now, but in future ages, it will illumine the East and the West.

“Consider that during the days of His Holiness Christ — Upon Him be Glory — no one gave any importance to the guidance of the Apostles. The populace pretended that a number of insignificant souls, who were catchers of fishes, had gathered around a poor man and were talking foolishly. They laughed even at the Blessed Personage of Christ and spat upon that radiant, luminous and wonderful Countenance. {{p347}} But reflect that afterward the guidance of those catchers of fish became famous throughout all regions, and up to this time mankind is glorifying and praising them.

“Upon ye be Bahá’u’l-Abhá!

(Signed) “‘ABDU’L-BAHÁ ‘ABBÁS.”

4. Another Tablet to a German Bahá’í Asking How to Teach

“He is God!

“ O THOU RESPECTED YOUTH!

“How many holy souls in past ages have longed most intensely to hear the name of the Divine Kingdom and live during the day of the Promised one of all the nations of the world; but they passed away and left this world with utter regret, because they did not attain to their wish. In this radiant Century God has so confirmed thee that thou mayst step into the Universe of Life, be trained in the Cradle of God's Protection and Preservation, suck the milk of tenderness from the breast of Providence and take a share and a portion from the Light of Guidance. Consider what a great Favor is this! What a wonderful bounty! Therefore loosen thy tongue in the glorification of this most Great Bestowal and summon the people to the Kingdom of God, so that others may receive a goodly portion from this Holy Cause.

“Upon thee be Bahá el Abhá.

(Signed) “‘ABDU’L-BAHÁ ‘ABBÁS.”

1. Speeches to be Delivered at Public Meetings

As now and then the question of public speaking in the Bahá'í meetings has more or less agitated the minds of the believers, I desire to quote herein an extract from a recent Tablet which will show clearly the attitude of ‘Abdu’l-Bahá on this rather important matter:

“Rest ye assured that the Breaths of the Holy Spirit shall inspire you with the power of speech. Consequently, loosen your tongues and speak in every meeting with undaunted courage. First, before beginning, turn your face toward Bahá'u'lláh, beg for the Confirmation of the Holy Spirit, and then open your tongues and speak out whatever is dictated to your hearts. Speak with the utmost serenity, conviction and dignity. I hope that day by day the circle of your meetings may be enlarged and that the investigators of Reality may listen to the proofs and arguments. With heart and soul, I am with you in every meeting. Be ye confident.”

2. History of the Life of Arminius Vambery

This morning, with Doctor Getsinger, I called on Mrs. Getsinger and Mrs. Fraser and had a long talk with both of them. Then Mrs. Stannard came and the conversation turned upon the death of Prof. Vambery in Budapest, and his most significant letter written to ‘Abdu’l-Bahá just a few days before he died. This letter will be published in the Egyptian Gazette and copies of the same will be sent to the European Press. He was well-known all over Europe on account of his travels in the interior of Asia, and on account of his writings. Mrs. Stannard thinks that this letter is one of the most wonderful documents of the Cause on account of the importance of the man, for he wrote with thorough understanding, and sympathy. {{p349}} The European Press prints long articles about his adventures and early life, and singles him out as a unique man.

Arminius Vambery was born in Hungary in the Village of Duna-Szerdahely, in March, 1832. His father was a Jew in humble circumstances. He was apprenticed at the age of twelve, to a dressmaker, but having acquired some book learning, he presently became tutor to a publican's son. After enduring much privation, he had mastered, by the time he was sixteen, several other languages besides Latin. Four years later, he went to Constantinople, where he was engaged as tutor by H̄usayn Din Páshá. In 1853, he brought out a German-Turkish Dictionary. He had now lived so long in the East, that he could pass for an Osmani, and in 1862 he started on his long and arduous journey to Central Asia. He disguised himself as a Dervish which disguise he assumed at T̄ihván because of a knowledge of Persian and Turkish and of a careful practice, not only of the customs of Orientals generally, but also of the ways of the Dervishes — the mendicant friars of Islám. He made his way to Khive, where he was granted two audiences by the Khán. The Amir of Bokhara heard suspicious stories of the traveler, but having seen that Rashid Effendi, as Vamberey called himself, was a good Moslem and all that he professed to be, dismissed him with handsome presents. On his return to Europe, Vamberey paid a visit to England, where he met with a reception both from the geographers and the public. His first account of his "Travels and Adventures in Central Asia" was published in London in 1864, and had a large circulation. {{p350}} He wrote also a "History of Bokhara," based chiefly on the works of Persian and Arabic historians.

In recognition of his linguistic attainments, Vamberey was appointed Professor of Oriental languages at Budapest. He frequently visited England, and seldom missed an opportunity to give his opinions in European periodicals on any new developments of Eastern and Middle Eastern politics.

During the visit of 'Abdu'l-Bahá to Budapest, Vamberey met him twice. His knowledge of Oriental languages, especially Persian, Arabic and Turkish, was amazing. He was a pleasant looking old man of rather short stature and wrinkled face. In the course of conversation with the Master, he said:

"For many years have I followed your teachings and ever longed to meet you. I admire more than anything else your supreme courage in that at this advanced age you have left everything and are traveling all over the west to spread your humane principles. You are doing a great work. It will be crowned with success, because your sincerity, unwavering faith and high ideals have stamped themselves upon the minds of the World's thinkers."

His last words as 'Abdu'l-Bahá bade him farewell in his long drawing-room and library, were these: —

"I hope to hear from you. Please when you return to the East, send me the writings and Treatises of your Father and I will do everything to spread them in Europe. The more these principles are disseminated, the nearer will be the age of peace and brotherhood."

The story of how Vamberey, physically afflicted, for he was lame, fought for existence against hunger, and persecution, and gradually mounted the ladder of fame, furnishes one of the most remarkable pages of the history of the Jewish race. At school Vamberey once said: —

“Hunger, mockery and insult — I experienced them all in turn; {{p351}} but the greatest misery was not capable of darkening the serene sky of youthful mirth for more than a few minutes, and even my healthy color returned after a short interval of bodily collapse.”

He was well received at the English Court both in the reign of Queen Victoria and in that of King Edward. On the occasion of his seventieth birthday, in 1902, his Majesty conferred upon him the title of Commander of the Victorian Order. The present King of England, when the Prince of Wales, proved equally amiable when the distinguished Hungarian Professor stayed at Sandringham. One day, while the latter was occupied with his correspondence, he received a message from Queen Alexandra, inviting him to join her in the garden. Vamberey wished to wash his hands before going, but there was no one in sight. At length the Prince appeared, and asked him what he wanted. Vamberey told him, and the Prince disappeared, returning in a few minutes with a large jug in his hand, which he placed, smiling, on the washstand. Thus was a poor Jewish beggar-student of former days, waited upon by a Royal Prince, whom, moreover, he had the temerity to name “The Royal Jug-bearer.”

In the afternoon and evening many people of various nationalities called on ‘Abdu’l-Bahá, and the demands of several “gentlemen beggars” were satisfied. When I was walking in the evening with two others, we passed by a house, the windows of which were open; we looked in and saw the Master sitting on the Divan talking with the Páshá.

“God has created us that we may love each other” — were the words that came to our ears as we passed by.

1. A Persian Bahá’í student delivers a lecture in English.

Since the arrival of the students from Haifa, table-talks have become the fashion. {{p352}} These talks are delivered in English. Now and then one hears a good speech, short and to the point. It seems to me very interesting how these young men are eager to learn everything from everywhere and thus increase their fund of information, so that in the future they may become able to teach the Cause with eloquent tongues and fluent speeches. Why then, do they practice in English rather than in Persian one might ask? This in itself, of course, is another sign commingling of interests and ideals. The one all-absorbing thought of these young men is to equip themselves with the mental instruments whereby they may go out to war against ignorance, selfishness and greed. I may therefore quote one or two short addresses given by these budding orators. The following is an example:

“Gentlemen! Bahá’í Brothers! About seven thousand years ago, according to the religious history, God the Maker of all things through His Mercy and Providence created the world and made man after his own image and likeness. Since that time up to the present day, His Manifestations have successively appeared upon the earth and thus the dark world has been quickened and vivified through the spiritual vibrations of their divine Teachings. By this education mankind has attained to a higher degree of knowledge. It has passed over the arc of ascent, until now it has obtained the capacity for the recognition of the Manifestation of God. When His Holiness Moses appeared, thousands believed in him, and having received and lived according to his divine teachings, became leaders of other nations. {{p353}} God showed them His Love and showered upon them His blessings like unto a torrent. He freed them from the tyrannical yoke of Pharoah, brought them out of Egypt, and established them in the Promised Land. He sent down for them manna from heaven, He cleft asunder the sea and made a safe passage for them to pass through. He called them His children and they became worthy of every praise and embodied every virtue. Later, they forgot the heavenly laws, followed their own inclinations and worshiped idols instead of the Almighty Jehovah. As a result they stopped progressing. Their civilization waned and their moral virtues retrograded. For many ages they were scattered, humiliated and scorned. But now, praise be to God, they are stirred with a new life, resuscitated with a new spirit, and many of them are quickened by the call of the Kingdom. The Lord of Hosts hath come, the King of Kings hath appeared. The rays of the sun of His Mercy have enlightened them and the Breeze of His Benevolence has wafted over them. Thus are they endowed with a seeing eye, a hearing ear and an understanding heart.

“One of these blessed souls is a brilliant young man of 30 years of age. His face is shining, his speech is winsome, his heart is radiant with the light of the Love of God, and his countenance is as pure and bright as the brightest diamond. His dark, ample brow, his towering forehead, his slender nose, and his graceful manners denote a sensitive nature and a true Bahá’í. His attitude is well-disciplined, his character, and his nature amicable. His intentions are pure, his desires holy and his aims philanthropic and he thinks ever of the welfare of the world of humanity. My humble delineation of this gentleman seems quite superfluous when we remember the repeated praises and commendations of ‘Abdu’l-Bahá in reference to him. {{p354}} His word is a divine testimony, a heavenly witness and a celestial blessing. The name of this young man is Doctor Habíb’u’lláh Khodabaksh. He is sitting now at this table, and is one of the promising Bahá’ís of this century of light and knowledge. We heartily congratulate him and offer him our best wishes, hoping that he will be assisted by God to cure the ills of humanity, both physical and spiritual; bestow eternal life upon every dead one, and cause mankind to obtain immortality by leading it to the fountainhead of light and bounty.”

2. ‘Abdu’l-Bahá Wishes the Bahá’í Students to Take ### Post-graduate Courses

This morning the Master received the students. His talk to them was about his lecture in Leland Stanford University, praising meanwhile, the President, Doctor Jordan, and his labors, in the field of International Peace. He encouraged the students to take post-graduate courses in that University, because he had spoken about this matter with Doctor Jordan. Already many are considering going there, and they mean to write to the President to ask for particulars.

3. The Mission of the Bahá’í Cause Is Universal and

Not Local

Yesterday the new Persian Consul General arrived from Constantinople and the Master sent all the students to welcome him at the steamer and today, with Mírzá ‘Alí-Akbar, he went to Alexandria to pay him a visit, in the hotel where he is staying for a few days before his departure for Jadda. {{p355}} In the course of conversation ‘Abdu’l-Bahá pointed out to the Consul General the impartial attitude of the Bahá’ís in recent developments in Persia and how they are the lovers of Peace and progress. The mission of the Bahá’í Cause is universal and not local; its principles are for all humanity; its objects are world-wide. The Bahá’ís are the army of spiritual and intellectual advancements. Then he spoke a few words about the promotion of the Cause in America and Europe. The Consul General became very attracted, and made an engagement to come next day and call on the Master. On his way back in the street car, the Master showed love and kindness to a little child with his mother. The child was so attracted, that he came and sat next to him. ‘Abdu’l-Bahá gave him a present and kissed him, and the mother thankfully and happily carried him away, reluctant.

1. An Analysis of the Letters of UNITY by a Persian

Student

The other day I was speaking with one of the students as we were walking along a broad avenue. The subject was “Unity,” a word much used in the Bahá’í Movement. “Unity,” he said, “is the foundation of all successful undertakings. With unity of purpose, a harmonious action is produced. When various elements are brought together, and basic unity is established, an organism is the result. In the political world, Union is the watchword of all the statements and in the Bahá’í world it has a deep significance. {{p356}} The aim of this Cause is, as we all know, a confederation of the world’s religious systems, a consolidation of the political interests of the nations, and a truly grand realization of the brotherhood of man. To my mind, every letter in the world ‘Unity’ stands for a great principle or quality. For example, ‘U’ stands for ‘understanding,’ we must at all times try to understand truth impartially and improve our minds; ‘N’ stands for ‘nourishment’; once we have acquired understanding, we must ‘nourish’ it with wisdom and knowledge and cleanse it with the water of intelligence; ‘I’ stands for ‘investment’; if we have a capital we should ‘invest’ it, in order to increase it. The Bahá’ís must teach the Cause and spread the Glad-tidings of the kingdom of Abhá and awaken those who are asleep. ‘T’ is for ‘thoughtfulness’; before teaching we must think, or in other words, before teaching others we must teach ourselves. ‘Y’ means ‘yield’ to the truth. If you investigate an object and realize that it is reality, yield to it. Don’t shut your eyes to the truth, once you have seen the glory of its beauty. Let us cling to the truth, as a shipwrecked sailor clings to the cliff. In short, our aim is to ‘understand’ everything in a comprehensive manner, to ‘nourish’ our understanding with the truths from every clime, to ‘invest’ our acquired knowledge in the best possible channel pleasing to our Lord; practice ‘thoughtfulness’ under all circumstances and ‘yield’ to Reality no matter from what horizon it dawns — thus may we become the cause of UNITY in the world of humanity.”

2. Story of the Stork, Fish and Prawn

At this juncture Mírzá ‘Alí-Akbar joined us and asked what we were talking about. We told him.

“Let me tell you a story,” he said, “which illustrates this very point. Once upon a time there was a stork, a fish and a prawn. {{p357}} They became friends and planned to travel together. They said to each other that they would do everything in ‘Unity’; but the stork wanted to start on the journey by way of the air, the fish through the watery paths of the river, and the prawn by the track of a pond. The three formed a board of consultation to see which mode was the best for traveling together. They had several sessions, lasting for hours, but they could not determine upon any plan, each one insisting that his opinion was correct, and not willing to yield to the other. Finally they saw a little baby carriage not far away and decided to use it as a common vehicle for traveling. They came and hitched themselves to the carriage, confident that their differences were now brought to an end; but, no sooner did they start than they began to assert their varied natures. The stork flew ‘upward,’ the fish went ‘forward’ and the prawn was pushing ‘backward.’”

1. ‘Ishqabád, Russia, an Important Center of the

Bahá’ís Movement

The city of ‘Ishqabád is an important Bahá’í center wherein the first Mashriqu’l-Adhkár is built. The Bahá’ís are free to teach and pursue their religious principles without any molestation on the part of the Russian authorities. In that city the Bahá'ís are quite numerous and are respected by all classes. During the last few days the Master has been entertaining a believer from that city by the name of Aḥmad Áqá and now he is going away, his life perfumed with Fragrances of the Love of God. ‘Abdu’l-Bahá has revealed three Tablets for the believers in that city. {{p358}} He came this morning and after reading them aloud, handed them to Aḥmad Áqá to be taken to ‘Ishqabád. Here are the translations of two of these Tablets:

2. Tablets to the Bahá'ís of ‘Ishqabád

“O YE BELIEVERS IN THE HEART AND SPIRIT OF ‘ABDU’L-BAHÁ! “It has been well-nigh three years since this Servant at the Threshold of Bahá has been a wanderer over mountain and desert and a traveler upon plain and sea. One morning I was in this province and one night I spent in another. As the express train speeded over vast stretches of land and traversed long distances, — thus joining together the remotest parts, — I became associated with and the confident participator of very meeting and sang the praises of the Lord in each assembly. Day and night I was teaching and explaining and in public gatherings and important Congresses I upraised my voice. I imparted the Glad-tidings of the Sun of Reality and made an exposition of Divine proofs and Arguments. I laid the foundation of the Teachings of God and elucidated the truth of the Merciful Effulgence. “After enduring infinite hardships, traveling through and visiting many countries, diffusing the Fragrances of God and promoting His lordly instructions, I returned to the East. But the difficulties of this long voyage were so numerous, that toward the end, my body was attacked by a severe illness and I was at the point of breaking down. {{p359}} this is the reason why correspondence has been suspended for such a long time. “Now, praise be to God, my constitution is, to a certain extent, reinforced and the illness removed, and therefore day and night I am engaged in answering letters. Not for a moment do I rest or seek comfort. Continually do I remember the friends and as far as possible, I am writing to them. Truly I say, ‘Ishqabád is the city of Love. Each one of the friends of God is occupied with service and engaged in adoration. They are the friends and the companions of ‘Abdu’l-Bahá. “As regards the members of school committees, in reality they are serving with heart and soul and perform their duties with rejoicing. They put forward extraordinary exerting in organizing and systematizing the school and in the instruction of the pupils while all the other believers are assisting and cooperating with them. On this account, I am greatly pleased with the friends of that region. Day and night do I supplicate and ask heavenly assistance: — so that that city may become the envy of all the cities of the world. “O God! O God! This is a city wherein the Fragrances of Thy Holiness are spread, the delightful odors of the garden of Thy Mercifulness are diffused and from which the voices of glorification and thanksgiving, praises and commendations to the Lord of the Kingdom, are raised. For he has revealed Himself on Mount Sinai with a light of radiant effulgence wherefrom the regions are illuminated. Glory be unto Him who hath caused the appearances of the Morn! Glory be unto Him who sendeth the winds! Glory be unto Him who resuscitates the spirits! {{p360}} Glory be unto Him who breathes into the bodies of the world the inspiration of Existence! “O Lord! Accept their supplication toward Thee! their trust in Thee and their invocation between Thy Hands! Verily Thou art the Merciful! thou art the Great! and Thou art the Ancient Lord! (Signed) “‘ABDU’L-BAHÁ ‘ABBÁS.”

The next Tablet is the following: “He is God! “O YE BLESSED SOULS! “The beloved pilgrim like unto an overflowing cup has a heart full of your praises. Continually this Servant expects that all the believers unloose their tongues in the commendation of the friends; nay rather, they may adore each other and sacrifice their wealth, comfort, life and spirit for the sake of one another. “O ye friends! This Cycle is the Cycle of Bestowal and this period is the period of Mercy. All the seasons are the seasons of spring and all the periods are the periods of the Grace of the Almighty. The Breeze of Providence is wafting, the Fragrances of the rose-garden of the realities and significances are perfuming the nostrils and the melody of the Kingdom of Mercifulness has stirred into joy and happiness the heart and the soul! What a delightful age is this! What a heart-attracting century! But a thousand times alas! that the spiritually dead are not awakened by the blowing of the trumpet of Revelation, that the blind are deprived of the sight of the world-illuminating Orb while those afflicted with colds cannot inhale the odor of sanctity. praise be to God that ye have opened your eyes, have won the ball from the arena of self-sacrifice, prostrated yourself before the Threshold of His Highness the Merciful, become the manifestators of the Favors of the Incomparable Beloved and at all times are advancing and progressing! “Upon ye be Bahá el Abhá! (Signed) “‘ABDU’L-BAHÁ ‘ABBÁS.”

This morning the Master passed by our house, went into the garden and dictated many Tablets for the Eastern and Western believers. {{p361}} About eleven o’clock he returned and stayed a few minutes. The students were speaking together in English when he suddenly entered and laughed heartily over their speaking in a foreign tongue. Then he went to the Mosque, followed by Mírzá ‘Alí-Akbar. Again in the afternoon he was in the garden revealing Tablets. Toward five o’clock we went to the meeting. Doctor Getsinger talked about the Master’s address in the Jewish Synagogue of Washington.

1. Tablet in the Handwriting of Bahá’u’lláh

Have you ever seen the original writings of Bahá’u’lláh? Tablets written with His own blessed Hand? I had the privilege of seeing such a Tablet today. Just think to hold and read with your own eyes a Tablet written by Bahá’u’lláh’s own Hand! For many minutes I looked at the writing. The Tablet belongs to Hájí Náz. He went to Cairo yesterday morning and returned in the evening bringing it with him.

When years ago he was in the presence of Bahá'u'lláh, he requested Him to reveal for him something. {{p362}} The Blessed Perfection took pen and paper and wrote the following prayer.

2. Prayer for Spiritual Strength by Bahá'u'lláh

“He is the Knowing, the Wise! “O God! O God! I beg of Thee by Thy Radiant, Collective Name, to change the humiliation of Thy Chosen ones into Thy Glory; their weakness into Thy Strength; their impotence into Thy Omnipotence; their poverty into Thy Wealth and their fear into Thy Assurance. “O Lord! Illumine their hearts by the Light of Thy Knowledge! “O Lord! Behold Thou these thirsty ones journeying toward the River of Thy Bestowal and the Ocean of Thy Generosity. Verily Thou art the Powerful, The Mighty, the Benevolent.”

3. Someone Must Arise to Write the Life History

of Bahá'u'lláh

What would one not give to receive such a prayer from the Hand of Bahá'u'lláh. Truly this was a great bestowal. These old men who have seen Bahá'u'lláh many times are to my eyes very wonderful. I always look upon them with a peculiar reverence and respect. If someone had the time just to write down their stories, they would make, I am sure, most interesting reading. One of the most dramatic events connected with this Movement is the ascension of Bahá'u'lláh. Hájí Níáz was living in ‘Akká that tin=me and for six months after the ascension. He has witnessed everything, and having once heard his story, I will some day reduce it to writing; I am now waiting to hear of it from other eye-witnesses, and once I have all my material together, I hope to being the story in a consecutive manner. {{p363}} Up to this time no adequate history of the life of Bahá'u'lláh has been compiled. All that we have are fragments, or a mere outline. How I long for a man endowed with spiritual insight, divine faith, historical imagination and intellectual perspicacity to arise, and with patience and perseverance, to travel through the East, collecting the proper material, and then writing a connected history of the life of Bahá'u'lláh! Such a man will confer an eternal benefit upon mankind. It is a hundred times easier to undertake a work like this at the present time, than in the coming ages! Not only are there many people living who have seen Bahá'u'lláh and whose stories must be preserved, but we have amongst us ‘Abdu’l-Bahá, who has lived and traveled with his Father in all His sufferings and wanderings and exile and imprisonment.

4. Pilgrims Arrive from India, Persia and Russia

Yesterday and today many pilgrims have arrived; four men, two women and three children, all Zoroastrian Bahá'ís; from the Persian Gulf, a prominent ex-governor; from Russia, an ardent believer and from Persia an enthusiastic youth. Those who desire to see a religious Congress must come and stay with ‘Abdu’l-Bahá, and observe how these men and women of various types and faiths appear from all parts of the world to receive heavenly knowledge from his Bounteous Table, and to then return to their respective homes, inspired with the celestial Spirit. A number of us went last night to the station to welcome our Zoroastrian brothers and sisters. Their faces were aglow with the fire of the Love of God. They were great, big-hearted men, with that stamp of nobility and dignity in their faces that does not wear off. How glad were they when they heard that the American Bahá'ís would go to India to spread the Glorious Message!

“We long to see them,” they said in a chorus, “we are ready to receive them and to sacrifice our lives for them. {{p364}} How wonderful! How wonderful! that God has given us the mighty privilege of witnessing His miraculous works. Are thy not our real brothers and sisters? Al the believers in India are expecting their arrival and will cooperate with them to the extent of their capacity to spread the message of light and truth.”

5. ‘Abdu’l-Bahá Urges the Students to Practice Public

Speaking on All Subjects

In the morning ‘Abdu’l-Bahá spoke in detail with the students about public speaking, and emphasized the fact that they must practice at all times, for, as the future teachers of the Cause, it is essential to develop this God-given faculty. They must choose various topics, physical and spiritual, and then speak amongst themselves and thus employ their imaginations.

RAMLEH, EGYPT, SEPTEMBER 28, 1913.

1. Farewell Words to the Students

The Master received the students this morning. They are going to leave tomorrow for Beirut to be there before the opening of the College on October 5th. He reminded them of the former Glory of Persia and of her present decadence, and encouraged them to continue with their studies; {{p365}} so that the confirmations of God might ever be with them, and wished for them to be as radiant stars on the horizon of Bahá. Afterward the Zoroastrian believers were ushered into his presence. They were so happy and glad because they have reached the destination of their long journey.

2. I Desire That Thou Mayst be Filled with Bahá’u’lláh

In the course of his conversation with Mrs. Fraser, the Master told her that he desired that she might be filled with Bahá’u’lláh. She must concentrate all her ideas and thoughts around the promotion of the Word of God. Just as the cup is filled with wine, so her heart must be overflowing with the Love of the Blessed Perfection. Let her look at him. How from early morning till late in the evening he is engaged in the service of the Cause. He devotes all his time to Bahá’u’lláh.

He will help her. Whenever he sends someone to serve the Cause, he prays in his behalf and God will assist him. Let her rest assured that He will be with her and she will be enabled to render great services. Let her heart be at ease and have no fear.

3. Mrs. Stannard an Earnest Bahá'í

In the afternoon the Master was again in the garden dictating Tablets to Mírzá Munír. Mrs. Stannard was also permitted to be present. The Master is turning his attention to the believers of the Orient, and the Secretaries are kept busy copying his innumerable Tablets. Now and then a number of Tablets are revealed for the West, but the East is getting the lion's share. Before sunset, as I was walking outside of the house, I saw the Master coming out of the rose-garden followed by a number of believers, Mrs. Stannard and a newspaper correspondent. {{p366}} With the latter, the Master walked away, and I joined Mrs. Stannard and walked toward the beach. For nearly an hour we sat on the sand, watching the sea, and speaking about the Cause, and its future progress. She is a wonderful Bahá'í and the Master always praises her sincerity, her broad vision and her unfailing energy in many directions.

This being the last night, the students and resident Bahá'ís had a farewell meeting, and addresses were delivered both in Persian and English. Each one was followed by a Bahá'í song. We were singing and talking until late in the evening.

4. An Address Delivered to the Students

“My dear Bahá'í Brothers! During the last few days, through the kindness of ‘Abdu’l-Bahá we have been brought together. We have lived under one roof, sat around one table and associated together in the spirit of love and unity. I cannot express to you adequately how much I was impressed by your earnestness and true friendship. The memory of these days as well as of the days spent with your companions who constituted the first party, will ever live in my mind. We cannot gainsay one thing and that is, that the Fire of the Love of Bahá'u'lláh is burning in the heart of each one of you. God through His Grace has chosen you from amongst the people of Persia and has crowned your heads with the diadem of Faith! This is the highest privilege in the kingdom of Abhá! Undoubtedly you must have been worth the reception of this spiritual Gift. In this day only those who are pure in heart, are enrolled in the invincible ranks of the army of God. {{p367}} By this you can easily see that each one of you is a soldier and must be a courageous one, ready at any instant to give up his life for the sake of the Cause. Bahá'u'lláh is your Commander-in-chief, and from the invisible world he is continually reinforcing you with the powers of the Holy Spirit. Your artillery is the principles of the Cause, your cannon the love of God, your rifles the divine Teachings and your defenders the angels of the Supreme Concourse. In your hearts is the love of humanity, on your lips is the word of “Ya Bahá-El-Abhá,” in your hands is the sword of light. Before you there is no defeat, behind you there are glorious victories, and upon all sides you are surrounded by the Confirmations of God. ‘Abdu’l-Bahá has instructed you and has inspired your hearts with the mysteries of self-sacrifice. He is looking toward you with wistful tenderness, expecting that each one will become a great teacher in the Cause. From a physical standpoint you are the citizens of Persia, but from a spiritual standpoint, you are the citizens of the kingdom of Abhá which means the citizens of the world. Consequently, although Persia has a claim on you, the world has a greater claim.

“You are all aware of the fact that through the Revelation of His Holiness Bahá’u’lláh a new spirit of brotherhood is abroad, leavening all the degrees of society and enlarging the horizon of the human intellect. Naturally, then, every Bahá’í is called upon to contribute his share to this general awakening and once you are out of the campus of your Alma Mater, you will be called upon to gird up the loins of endeavor and to spread among the present day religions and nations, that spirit of tolerance and freedom from prejudices which is so much needed.

“I can never forget the day in Washington when ‘Abdu’l-Bahá called on the Ambassador of Turkey. {{p368}} He was sitting near the window watching the men and women in the street. At the time a young negro, as black as coal, passed by. ‘Did you see that young negro?’ he asked. ‘Yes’ I answered. ‘I declare by Bahá’u’lláh that I wish him to become as radiant as the shining sun.’ This example will show you how ‘Abdu’l-Bahá is anxious, and how he is working day and night — so that all mankind may advance daily along the degrees of spiritual and intellectual activities, every marching upward.

“We must polish the mirrors of our hearts, we must make ourselves more receptive for the appearance of the hidden virtues of the world of humanity, otherwise, we will not be confirmed in the accomplishment of universal services.

“In his recent addresses and Tablets, ‘Abdu’l-Bahá has repeatedly emphasized the principle of teaching the Cause, of awakening those who are asleep, of bestowing sight to the blind, hearing to the deaf and life to the dead! Today, this is the greatest Service in the Cause of God. This is of paramount importance and must not be overlooked. In other parts of the world, East and West, North and South, the friends of God are doing their best to spread the Glad-tidings of the Kingdom. I know full well that for the present teaching in Syria, Turkey and Egypt is not allowed, but you can do one thing, and that is to prepare yourselves for the time to come. When a nation determines to go to war, the commissary department will make definite plans, fill the arsenals with powder and cartridges and keep the magazines will supplied with food. Therefore you must be always ready for war, the kind of war that destroys ignorance, wipes away spiritual prejudices and shatters the forces of darkness. Let us acquire knowledge, more knowledge and yet more knowledge; {{p369}} for that which decreases ignorance and increases wisdom is acceptable in the sight of the Lord!

“Personally I have done little in the Cause, but during my stay in America I have learned one thing and that is, that the more one learns the greater is his ignorance. However, in this Supreme Dispensation, Bahá'u'lláh has promised us that, as we arise to serve the Cause spiritual Confirmations will come to our assistance and from all sides the doors of God's Graces will be opened before our eyes. Consequently, our trust is in the Lord of Hosts. We must at all times turn our hearts toward the Kingdom of Abhá and rest assured that all our ideals will be realized as long as our aim is to promulgate the Cause and to scatter the teachings abroad.

“After the lapse of a few hours, you will return to college scenes and life which no doubt you cherish and love, but a few of us will yet stay here, near ‘Abdu’l-Bahá to learn more of the lessons of selflessness, renunciation, holy enthusiasm, firmness and severance from all else save God.

“You are laden not only with the jewels of his words but your memory will be refreshed by the wafting of the Breeze of his presence. We all enjoyed your association, were stirred into cheerfulness by your ringing Bahá'í songs and will ever remember these happy days. May the stars of your highest hopes dawn from the Eastern horizon! May you become true servants of the world of humanity! May you ever strive to serve the Cause of Universal Peace! May you be the founders of the palace of spiritual brotherhood! May you with one accord raise the melodious anthem of the kingdom of Peace! May you unfurl the banner of human solidarity and invite all mankind to enter into the shade of the Tabernacle of eternal conciliation, Union and fraternity!”

1. The Persian Bahá'ís Are Anxious to Know All

about the Western Bahá'ís

Our ten students, after having a few farewell words from ‘Abdu’l-Bahá, departed for Syria, and two Kurdish theological students of the University of Al-Azhar who were visiting him returned to Cairo. Tomorrow our ex-governor from the Persian Gulf will depart for Tíhrán with another Bahá'í via Russia. It has been a source of great joy to come in contact with these men of various countries and climes, who bring to us the good news of the progress of the Cause. They are all eager to hear of the promotion of the Bahá'í Movement in America. What are the believers doing? Are they happy now that the Master has been in their midst? Are they carrying on the great work he has started? Are they teaching new souls? Are the Western people susceptible to spiritual emotions? Are the friends enkindled with the fire of the Love of God? Are they going to assist us in bringing about the Cause of Human brotherhood? Is the light of reality shining in their hearts? Do they really think and believe that we are their spiritual brothers and sisters? How we long to see them and sacrifice our lives for them! {{p371}} These are the questions they ask me one after another, so tender in their feelings, so true in the expression of their innermost thoughts, so beautiful in their attitude, so wonderful in their faith!

“Yes,” one of them told me, “I have heard that the American Bahá’ís are spreading the Cause very strenuously, and every night, before going to bed I pray for them from the depth of my heart. I beg of God to reinforce them with the angels of the Kingdom and to surround them with universal Confirmations.”

2. “Mahmal,” or the Holy Carpet

Today “Mahmal” or the Holy Carpet was taken from Alexandria to be carried to Mecca. It arrived from Cairo and was paraded through the streets in a long procession, before it reached the steamer. As the story of “Mahmal” and its significance in the Muḥammadan world is very important, I will later devote a few pages to its narration, so that our Western brothers and sisters may have a clear conception in regard to it.

3. ‘Abdu’l-Bahá Speaks to the Bahá’í Students before

Their Departure for College

In his farewell talk to the students, this morning at his own house, the Master praised God that they had come. For many days they have been here and with perfect joy and fragrance they associated together. These days passed incomplete happiness. It is his hope that through the favors of the Blessed perfection, they may finish their studies in the college of Beirut. Let them rest assured that they are confirmed. Many people are like unto sheep without a shepherd. They have not protector and no defender. But the students are the sheep and the Blessed Perfection is their Shepherd. He is kind to His flock. The majority of men are in great loss, but theirs is the spiritual profit. There are many who are retrograding, but they are progressing. {{p372}} Many trees are withered, but they are the young plants of the orchard of Abhá and daily they are growing in freshness and delicacy. Others are like unto the fallen stars, but they are rising with great brilliancy from the horizon of Reality.

Then he spoke about the Mahmal, and told them to go and see it before they departed for Beirut. Their steamer sailed at 4 o’clock P.M.

4. Mírzá Jalál and Wife Arrive from London

The Master and his family were surprised and delighted to welcome, unexpectedly, Mírzá Jalál and his wife. I have just heard this news. Tomorrow I will see him, and no doubt he will tell us of his experiences after our departure from Paris. Sometime ago I had a letter from London telling me that they were visiting some believers there.

5. All the Pilgrims Gone and the House Seems

Deserted

It is now late and I am writing these few words. I look all around the room and there is no trace of last night's party of students. I do not hear their songs. They are all gone. I may meet them again or I may not. Everything is in the hands of a higher Power. He brings us together and then separates us, but an indelible impression is left on the pages of memory which will last during a lifetime. After all, we are travelers in this world. We stay a few days in this Caravanseri, but the home of our spirits is the world of light.

1. The Procession of Mahmal in Alexandria

Yesterday the Beloved ordered a number of us to go to Alexandria and see the gorgeous procession, carrying the Mahmal to Mecca. When we arrived, the main avenues through which the Mahmal was going to pass were thronged with thousands of Arabs — men and women and children, dressed in all the picturesque colors of the East. Egyptian soldiers and mounted guards kept the crowd in order. Although we could rent chairs in the front row by paying the royal sum of “two cents and a half,” we preferred to mix with the holiday makers.... We had to wait two hours in the sun before the head of the procession appeared. It is popularly believed that whosoever touches the Mahmal, God's blessings will descend upon him and his family. For this reason, there is always the fear that the crowd, in a burst of religious zeal, will gather around the Mahmal and in the confusion, trample many people under their feet.

Therefore the Government had ordered several regiments of soldiers to stand along the sidewalks, their rifles pointed at the crowd, who, enthused at the sight of the Mahmal, were singing Pilgrims' songs. The other day I was reading a book on the customs and manners of modern Egyptians. In one chapter the author gives an interesting account of this historic event and here I will quote a few extracts bearing on the subject: —

2. Mahmal a Great Annual Event

“One of the greatest events of the year in Egypt is the starting of the Holy Carpet for Mecca. {{p374}} As regularly as the month of fasting comes to a joyful end in the Bairam Feast, the populace begin to look forward to the festival of the Mahmal, as not only marking the time of the setting off of the pilgrims to the Holy City, but as an event of great moment to all men religiously inclined, especially to the poor who have few hopes of making the journey themselves....

“A surprising fact, if one did not know the East, when one learns that the cost of the Pilgrimage Caravan of the Egyptian Mahmal is no less than L250,000 a year, mostly borne by the State, including the gifts sent to Arabia with it. My first interest was whetted by the permission given to visit the place where the Holy Carpet is woven every year and where the Mahmal and the beautiful door coverings and other sacred decorations are embroidered. ‘this is a government place,’ the boy told me at the gate with courteous welcome, ‘but it is kept under separate rule, and is not accessible as other government offices are.’ I turned to listen to the melodious voice of a Shaykh reading the Qur’án in a balcony overlooking the courtyard. ‘Ours is the only place where under the government’s supervision the Holy Qur’án is read. This place is as sacred as a Mosque during all the time of the year.’ We were taken at once to a long room to see the spinning looms, where the raw yellow silk is prepared before being dyed. Next we saw the actual weaving of the Carpet — how it ever came by such a name cannot be imagined when one has seen it. In reality, of course, it is the outer cover of the Kaaba, and the name ‘Carpet’ is never applied to it by any but the Europeans, who persist in so naming it; {{p357}} and what is curious, who think at the same time, that the Mahmal, which is a camel palanquin, really goes to Mecca with a carpet inside it, and brings it back to Cairo. Tourists who think they are seeing the Holy Carpet’s return see only the Mahmal, coming back, as it went, quite empty.

3. Qur’án Verses Woven in Mahmal

“It would be better to speak of the holy ‘Curtains’ of which there are eight used in the complete covering of the Kaaba.... The curtains are black, and the art of making them consists of weaving the Qur’án texts into the material, also in black, with an effect like that of damask, the lettering, which is large, being in the decorative Arabic. The watered-silk effect of the lettering is most striking, and in certain lights, when the cover is hung upon the Kaaba, it can be read at a considerable distance....

“It was extremely interesting to be able to see and handle the famous band which encircles the Kaaba. This magnificent belt is about two and a half feet deep. The following from the Qur’án, called the throne verse is heavily embroidered on it in gold: — ‘God! There is no God but He; the Living, the Eternal; nor slumber seizeth Him nor sleep; His whatsoever is in the heavens, and whatsoever is upon the earth... His Throne reacheth over the Heavens and the Earth, and the upholding of both burdeneth Him not and He is the High, the Great.’

“That the carrying of all these sacred objects connected with the Carpet to Arabia is in itself a considerable undertaking, was brought home to us by seeing the tents and the waterskins and other requirements for the long journey.... We now went into the courtyard, and the two very fine camels — in a way held sacred too — which are kept here solely for the purpose of conveying the Mahmal to Mecca, were brought out for us. {{p376}} They are of great size and of the cream color which distinguishes the finer breeds. These animals live a secluded but luxurious life within these precincts. By the credulous populous all sorts of miraculous signs mark them out in the first instance for selection to their sacred task.... A celebration took in the building under the citadel on the night before the Kaaba hangings and the Mahmal start for Mecca. There the Mahmal was shown and, more interesting still, there was set up an exact model of the Kaaba, with all the curtains hung as they appear in the Holy City.

4. Mahaml or Carpet Is a Secret Object

“There is no religious celebration in Cairo more impressive and beautiful than the festival, held on the eve of the setting of the Mahmal’s Pilgrimage to Mecca. There re other great public occasions, when the Oriental splendor of illumination breaks out, to the thrill of the thronging populace and the out of door excitement of the fair are linked wit the claims of pious significance; but this official fete in the Pavillions at the foot of the citadel combines in equal proportions a sense of sacred office with that of subdued entertainment, a feeling of religious awe being curiously mingled with that of rejoicing....

“The real center which drew every Moslem man and child was the Mahmal, now to be seen in pubic for the first time since its return from last year’s pilgrimage. Round the Mahmal men crowded; they stroked a fringe of it, always with the right hand and then to imbibe the blessing immediately stroked their faces while they muttered a prayer. Little children were held up that they might repeat the parents’ act. {{p377}} As we stood near the Mahmal we could see seated on the floor at a short distance, in a double row, about twenty-four men facing each other, chanting praise of the prophet and reciting traditions about him. At a certain point they came to an end of chanting; all hands went up to the breast, upraised, as a sign of silent petition... Occasionally, there came a man who prayed with more than usual intentness and seemed as if he could not tear himself away from the Mahmal and others less devout would take his place, content perhaps with a touch.

5. People from All Over Egypt Come to Visit and

Touch the Mahmal

“And why is this Mahmal, which in its material aspect is just a camel palanquin, so intensely revered? To begin its history at the end, there is no doubt that the reason for this deep reverence is that the Mahmal goes to Mecca every year exactly as a pilgrim goes, visits every spot that the devout pilgrim visits....

“I can never forget a scene near the Mahmal at ‘Abbássieh, where the Pilgrimage is eventually organized for its actual start to Mecca. A number of poor women, whose accent betrayed that their origin was that of Upper Egypt, were sitting in a close group on the ground as near the Mahmal as possible, singing very sweetly a song of the Pilgrimage. The Lord had denied them the privilege of praying in Mecca, but they were not left altogether desolate, for their eyes were rejoiced by seeing the blessed Mahmal.

6. How Mahmal Was originated

“The Mahmal dates from the 13th century, when the first Mahmal was made by order of the Queen Shajarat-El-Dorr, to serve for the pilgrimage which she intended to make. {{p378}} The Queen’s name signifies ‘a tree hung with jewels’ and the Mahmal is sometimes called by this name. In the following year she sent the empty palanquin, as a symbol of Egypt, and in memory of her own pilgrimage, and from this the annual custom grew up, to be followed by other countries, who take the occasion, as Egypt does, to send with their Mahmal the national tribute of money and food to the Holy City. The Court historian told me that he thought that the custom of sending a state symbol was older than the Queen’s Mahmal, a special Camel termed the Mahmal, being sent with presents to Holy Kaaba in pre-Islamic days. The prophet himself sent such a Mahmal from Medina to Mecca with presents.

7. Many Mahmals Mentioned in History

“Many Mahmals are mentioned in history — from Mesopotamia, from Yaman, from India.... The old rulers so exaggerated the importance and sacredness of the Mahmal, that they ordered every functionary through whose locality it passed, to kiss the foot of the Camel bearing it until Sulṭān Kakmak prohibited what had become a custom in the 15th century....

“When the Carpet arrives at Mecca it is handed to Shaykh Shelby in the presence of the chief ‘Ulamás and notables, and kept by him till the day of sacrifice, when it is hung upon the Kaaba. None of these holy drapings come back to Egypt, but when they have fulfilled their purpose they become the property of the Sherif of Mecca, being in turn sold to pilgrims in special shops near the Kaaba. Rich people buy the beautiful door covers and portions of the Kaaba band. {{p379}} The poor are contented with a shred of the black coverings....

“The making of a cover for the Kaaba goes back to the time of Ignorance before Muḥammad — the first being made of skin, and later ones of cloth, and all the tribes of Arabia took a share in paying for it.”

8. The Hardships of Bahá’u’lláh to Become the Cause of the Awakening of the People

For the last few days ‘Abdu’l-Bahá often spoke about Mahmal and how people forget the spirit and cling to the letter; that while the fountain of the salubrious water was flowing, they were running after brackish water. This morning when the Zoroastrian believers stood in his presence, he asked them, what did they see yesterday? And then gave a detailed talk on the Mahmal and its significance.

In the afternoon before sunset, he called at Mírzá Abu’l-Faḍl, and a number of friends, both Arabs and Persians were present. He talked on the severe trials and vicissitudes of Bahá’u’lláh, when he was exiled from Ṭihrán to Baghdád and the hardships the party accompanying Him, had to go through. He hoped the results of those hardships would be the illumination of the world of humanity and the emancipation of men from the defects of the animal nature.

RAMLEH, EGYPT, SEPTEMBER, 1913.

1. What It Means to Be with ‘Abdu’l-Bahá

To be with ‘Abdu’l-Bahá, {{p380}} to taste the sweetness of his love, to drink the elixir of this affection, and to be intoxicated with the wine of his tenderness — is to be immersed in an ocean of spiritual lights; for is he not the essence of sweetness, the rose-garden of love, the source of affection, and the dawning-place of truth?

From the unattainable attitude and the unsearchable height of the heart, hidden beyond the mountains of his spiritual world, flow rivers of divine grace, broad and noble. And with majestic beauty and mystic light — these rivers ran through the arid land of the souls of humanity, causing miraculous transformations. Where formerly were thorns and briers, now there are hyacinths and violets; where before were wild jungles, now there are cultivated orchards; where in times gone by there was sterility, now there is fertility.

Like unto the rain, the Words fall from the heaven of his mind, creating thousands of rills and streamlets, and these in turn converging toward one center and impelled by a common interest, make a mighty river, on the banks of which a heavenly civilization is developing. This celestial river flows through many deserts, always with the same effect of changing them into fragrant gardens, wherein the flowers of friendship and mutual helpfulness blossom, perfuming the nostrils of all those who are far and near.

These days in Ramleh and with ‘Abdu’l-Bahá! Ah, me! How divinely spiritual! These are days touched with Promethean fire; — days taken out of the calendar of heaven; {{p381}} days flooded with the rays of the Sun of Reality: days blessed by the tender and loving presence of our Beloved and made significant and ever memorable by the revelation of holy tablets for the friends of the East and the West!

Daily he breathes into the half-conscious body of the world the Breath of the Holy Spirits: — reinforcing the visitors with heavenly Confirmation, vivifying them with the principles of righteousness. He receives the devotees of all religions; shoulders the burdens of all his people and welcomes the adherents of every sect with a beatific smile. In his presence all are welcome. The sun of his Love pours upon all humanity, illumines the chambers of every heart and ennobles the ambition of every soul. He is not the respecter of persons but the lover of quality. If a man is a beggar but has a pure heart, he loves him more than a king in royal robes, surrounded by courtiers.

2. The Students Consist of a Large Delegation

As there is quite a large delegation of students and as they are to be the honored guests of the Master, he decided to divide them into two parties. The first party have come and gone. They stayed about ten days, received the benedictions of the Beloved, listened to his daily words and illumined their eyes by beholding his countenance. Then with songs of praise on their lips and paens of thanksgiving in their hearts, they left for Haifa that they might be ready to enter the College.

The second party has just arrived and will no doubt stay as many days as the Master wishes them to be here. The boys are from 12 to 25 years old. They live together, and the bond of Bahá'í love and good fellowship is strong and unbreakable between them. Unquestionably, they will not only form an invulnerable force for liberalism in Persia, but they will become the invincible army of the kingdom of Abhá, and with the sword of love put to rout the forces of darkness and banish the ghosts of ignorance. {{p382}} They have consecrated their lives to the service of the Cause and once their zeal and enthusiasm shake hand with knowledge and experience, they will carry the flag of “Ya Bahá-El-Abhá” to the furthestmost corners of the earth. They have set their ambition very high and have made up their minds to attain to it. What would be the effect of the accumulated result of science and experience, if they were not devoted to the propagation of the Cause of Abhá, which is the Cause of universal Peace, international brotherhood, and spiritual civilization?

3. The Students Sing Mrs. Shahnáz Waite's Anthems

Every one of the students studies and speaks English; they sing Bahá'í songs and the anthems of Mrs. Waite, which are translated into Persian verses by two of the great Bahá'í poets resident in Tīhrán. These anthems they sink with great feeling; and all over the East, the poems of our “American nightingale,” as the believers affectionately call Mrs. Waite in their poetic language, are sung by young men and women. She is loved and honored, because she is the poetic voice of the far West, crying in the wilderness of cold skepticism and summoning the people to the banquet of Bahá'í Peace and Love. how happy she would be — how grateful she would become, how her eyes would be filled with tears of joy if she could listen for one moment to the melodious voices of these Eastern brothers, singing her songs with true understanding and sympathy!

4. Happiness and Tranquillity of Heart

In order to bring my remarks to an end, I will share with you, the outline of two talks of ‘Abdu’l-Bahá given to these students.

On one occasion, he stated that they are welcome to Ramleh. {{p383}} Are they happy? If they are not happy, then, in this wide world, who could claim happiness? Happiness is the most natural possession and immanent attribute of every Bahá'í. Praise be to God that they are free from every tie, are engaged in the study of spiritual and physical sciences and are beneath the protection of Bahá'u'lláh. god is with them, for they are not holding any thought which leads to intemperance and temptation.

The heavy-burdened people are afflicted with a hundred thousand sorrows and griefs and are at all times influenced and made unhappy by the changing conditions of life. In this world the greatest gift of God is the tranquillity of the heart, especially when such a heart becomes the abiding place of the Love of God. This is the highest attainment in the world of creation!

But if, on the other hand, a man has all the wealth, comfort and luxuries of life, and does not possess tranquillity of heart, all these things will become conducive of anxiety and nervous breakdown. When the tree is firmly rooted in the earth, no matter how much the hurricane rages, the furious winds blow and the rushing rains fall, this will only add to the firmness and verdancy of the tree, and it will loom toward the heavens with greater confidence and assurance. But if its root is not firm, even though the sun pours down, the winds blow, the rains descend and the breezes waft, — there will be no foliage, no branch, no blossom and no fruit.

Now praise be to God, that the hearts of the believers are tranquil and assured in the Favors and bounties of the Blessed perfection. What bestowal is greater than this? {{p384}} No matter what affliction may befall upon us, the heart is in the utmost tranquillity, serene and full of rejoicing. We can withstand all kinds of afflictions and resist all manner of persecutions with imperturbable courage and faith. Those souls who are under the shade of the Cause of God, if they are not shaken and agitated, will advance through the infinite degrees of perfection. There is a vast difference between the bird which is already imprisoned in the cage, and the bird which after being set at liberty, is caught again in the net through its own negligence.

5. Lasting Enjoyment Is for the Moral Man

In speaking to the students on another occasion, he stated, that, when the heart is confident, man knows that all is well. At one time in 'Akká, thirteen Bahá'ís lived in one room, but they radiated peace, joy and love. Praise be to God, that they have come to Ramleh and stayed with him for nine days. They associated with one another and became his intimates. Their presence gave him much happiness. Likewise, they have spent many memorable days on Mount Carmel and in the vicinity of the tombs of Bahá'u'lláh and the Blessed Báb. Now they are going to return, but let them rest assured that these experiences have been permeated with ideal results and the invisible Confirmation shall ever descend upon them.

It is his hope that they will study with persistence and perseverance. He is well satisfied with their conduct in the College of Beirut. Truly they have borne themselves with urbanity and dignity. May they ever become better, sweeter, more perfect and more accomplished! In this path lies life's enjoyment. {{p385}} The success and pleasure of this physical life lies in uprightness! What a difference exists between those souls who live in accord with the good-pleasure of the Lord and those who are guided by their own thoughts and self-interests! The former are always attracted always enkindled, always immersed in the sea of God's Favors, always thinking of the well-being of humanity, always joyful and humble!

When you reflect carefully, you will observe that real and lasting contentment is in the possession of the moral man. Some may imagine that because they frequent theaters, accumulate wealth, or attend balls, they are always enjoying life; whereas, in reality, these things often scatter thoughts, confuse the minds and dissipate the faculties. The effect of these amusements is like the effect of the wine upon the body; — it exhilarates at first, but its after effect leaves one weak and the mental faculties exhausted. But the man who is chaste and moral receives his strength from the hidden spring of the universe; he is stirred continually by the Divine Glad-tidings; he is spiritual and godlike.

Praise be to God that their life is directed by ethical laws and molded by moral principles. He hopes that day by day their dignity and composure may increase; that they may strive with greater exertion in their studies; that the spring of their beatitude and happiness may gush forth unfailingly. The assistance of Bahá'u'lláh is with them and they shall precede all other students in their works.

6. The Meaning of Faith

Faith does not mean acknowledgment and mere confession. Faith means that one's conduct and behavior, one's character and life be in accord with the divine teachings. This is the quintessence of Faith. {{p386}} The greatest bestowal of the world of existence is a tranquil heart, and it is impossible to obtain a tranquil heart save through the good-pleasure of the Lord; i.e.; man should so adorn the temple of his being with lofty attributes and philanthropic deeds as to be pleasing at the Threshold of the Almighty. There is no other path! Consider the condition of kings, ministers, captains of industry and the leaders of mankind! Looking at them from the superficial standpoint, you would think their hearts to be in the utmost composure, joy and peace; but if you reflect carefully, you will observe, that they live in great agitation, surrounded with haunting fears and griefs. They do not enjoy one moment of ease and rest!

7. The Basic Principle of the Good-Pleasure of God

The point is this: let all their thoughts, their ideals, and aims revolve day and night around one common object, and that is: — to live in accord with the good-pleasure of the Lord. Then all the doors of felicity will be opened before their faces, they will be successful in all their undertakings and will become confirmed in all their accomplishments. The basic principle is the good-pleasure of God and the good-pleasure of God is obtained through the tranquillity of the heart and the tranquillity of the heart is obtained by living in accord with the divine teachings and exhortations.

When a person attains to this station, he is contented and peaceful. Then he will become prosperous in all affairs. This station is joy succeeded by joy, confidence after confidence and paradise after paradise. Thus we read in the blessed Qur'án: — O thou assured soul! turn to thy Lord, confident and well-satisfied. If thou dost associate with my true servants, it is as though thou hast entered paradise. {{p387}} Having attained to this exalted station, man lives in paradise, although walking upon the earth; he lives in paradise when he departs from this world; his heart is ever in paradise; his spirit is in paradise; and he is encircled by the joys of paradise!

8. The Successful Student

Consider the condition of a student who attends school for five years and applies himself to a life of study. If at the time of examination he is not successful, he will become extremely despondent. He is living in a hell of despondency. But if, on the other hand, he passes examination with success, he is honored and beloved on all sides; receives his degree with pride and achieves great distinction in the world of humanity. In other words, he is living in a Paradise of fulfillment.

The students must therefore, strive so that, they may become thoroughly grounded in science and arts. Let them ever be thoughtful, supplicating, and entreating before God. Then when they are attending their classes, heavenly confirmations will uninterruptedly descend upon them.

The foundation of life is morality. They must exert themselves to improve continually the moral side of their nature. If the morals of man are merciful, although he may not be a great scholar, yet will his character be loving; but if his morals are corrupt, even though he be a master of sciences, he will be a harmful agency in the body politic. Instead of becoming the cause of illumination of the world of humanity, he will become conducive to its darkness. Instead of helping the Cause of general construction, he will materially further the ends of destruction. Instead of adding to his energy for the cause of progress, he will enlist himself on the side of the cause of decline. {{p388}} On the other hand, if his character is merciful and he is also well grounded in sciences and arts — then, he will be light upon light.

9. Light and Knowledge

Here the Beloved paused for a few moments, and then gave a wonderfully, illuminative interpretation of a verse in the Qur'án, which is known as the “verse of Light.” In phrase after phrase, he elucidated the Qur'anic words in the most comprehensive manner under the significance of knowledge. He closed his remarks with the statement, that, it is evident that light is knowledge. If the light is shining in a black and sooty lamp, it will not shed any radiance; but if the light abides in a transparent glass — in other words, if knowledge abides in a clear heart, imbued with merciful morality, characterized with faith, assurance and holiness, enkindled with the fire of the love of God and attracted by the Fragrances of God, such a heart will become a center for the outpouring of divine Bestowals and this will be light upon light!

10. Letter to the Students from the President of College

I may quote herein a letter written to the Persian students by president Howard S. Bliss of the Beirut College. The letter is written on Board S. S. Royal Mail Steamship Pannonia and mailed from New York, dated April 14, 1913: —

“TO THE PERSIAN STUDENTS:

“DEAR FRIENDS:

“Before landing in New York, which we hope to do tomorrow, I wish to send you a special word of greeting and thanks for your very kind letter of farewell. {{p389}} I appreciate your thoughtful kindness very deeply and it has been a great pleasure to re-read your letter. We had, a long but pleasant journey. We are now eager to see land and to receive word from loved ones in Syria. Of course this includes the College and all the students. I hope that the Persian students will have a prosperous ending to their years and all may be planning to return. I hope also that you may have addition to your numbers and that the good record that you have had during the past may be continued. I always look forward to returning to the campus which we love so ardently. My love goes to each one of you. Your president

(Signed) “HOWARD S. BLISS.” { .sig }

Thus the East and the West join hands of communication! And these students, because they are acquiring material and spiritual sciences will be the greatest links of unity between America and Persia.

May they succeed as they have already succeeded all their undertakings!

11. The Bahá'í Cause as Interpreted by ‘Abdu’l-Bahá

The Bahá'í Cause as lived and interpreted by ‘Abdu’l-Bahá is a clarion call for the unification of the people of the Orient and the Occident. It is a light to lead the storm-tossed travelers to the haven of peace and brotherhood. Millions of people all over the world are praying for the coming of the day when truth will reign and the clouds of prejudices will be dispelled from men's consciousness.

We as the followers of ‘Abdu’l-Bahá are able to inspire these men and women with words of encouragement and examples of unselfish service. {{p390}} Let us unfurl the flag of the religion of God and gather in its shade all those who desire to enlist their names in the invincible army of the kingdom of Abhá. Our supreme Commander is Bahá'u'lláh; our General is ‘Abdu’l-Bahá; our rule is the Word of God; our guide is the power of the Holy Spirit; our aim is to establish upon the earth the dominion of heaven; our hope is to defeat the soldiers of ignorance and fanaticism; our resolution is to make this world the paradise of the Almighty and our purpose is to gain victory for the forces of Justice, Truth and Liberty.

We as Bahá'ís have no other ambition, no other desire and no other plan. Let us fill the hearts with gladness; illumine the souls with the light of the Sun of Reality; refresh the minds with the breezes of the garden of universal Ideals and sing the thrilling anthem of the Union of the inhabitants of the East and of the West, of the North and of the South!

1. The Life of the Spiritual man.

We have an old Bahai by the name “El Yahou”. His former religion has been Jewish and his devotion to the Beloved is unquestioned. The other day he went to the house wherein the Master lives and started to weep and cry near the door. The members of the Blessed family hear the cry of the man inform the Master about it. Abdul Baha called him, giving him consolation and telling him that in this day no one must cry for any reason, nay rather, we must be very happy and contented with our lot and know of a certainty that the Lord of Hosts is with us, ready to restore our health and alleviate our burden. We must not let anything disturb the balance of our minds. Under all circumstances we must control our feelings and curb our inclinations. We must fulfil our duty, attain to the highest station of perfection and close our eyes to all imperfections.

{{p12}}

2. Abdul Baha’s message of Joy

Then the Beloved taking the pen and paper in his hands writes for him the following holy Tablet: “O thou my Kind friend! It is my hope through the Bestowals of the Blessed Perfection that thou mayst ever become assisted and confirmed, happy and joyous; that thou mayst not cry and lament, nay rather thou mayst sing and chant. It is said that the son of the Glorious Friend had a wonderful melody and a sweet voice. The Psalms of David are spiritual chants. They are not lamentations and mourning or crying by day and night. Therefore, be thou happy and let the songs and anthems of joy be on thy lips! (Sig) Abdul Baha Abbas.”

Our “El Yahou” came back with the possession of a new happiness, a new inspiration, a new serenity. We all felt his joyful vibrations and watched delightfully his calm face. Then he drew his book of poetry out of his breast pocket and sang a stirring Bahai song with the energy and zest of a youthful singer.

3. To raise a New Call

Today the Beloved sent for the Zoroastrian and other pilgrims. He inquired about the health of the Cause in Bombay and the spiritual health of the believers. It seems that the burden of his message this morning was to encourage those who were present to go forth and spread the Cause. They must remove all obstacles from their path. They must loosen eloquent tongues in the explanations of proofs and arguments. Like the apostles of the old they must not mind any trial or test. With the infiltration of the spiritual melodies of the Kingdom of Abha they must raise a new call. They must clear the road of righteousness, blow through the Trumpet of Reality, teach the laws of love and gentleness, herald the Glad-Tidings of the Lord of Hosts and pitch up the tent of Universal Peace in the centre of the world. The light of the heart is love, let it shine brighter and {{p14}} brighter unto the perfect day.

4. To go forth into the World.

The receipt of cables from America will take back Mrs. Fraser. I am very sorry, for many reasons, because she is now unable to go to India, I had great confidence in her ability. Of course she is greatly disappointed but the Beloved gave her the hope that she might visit India later. Whenever she may be, he stated she will serve the Cause of God. In America she will be able to render a great service. Let her rest assured! He loves her very much. She is now his daughter, his real daughter. Let her inquire from Mirza Ahmad, how often he speak of her. He does not need to speak of this before her face. She has been here, has heard the Words and associated with his family. Now she should go forth into the world and teach the commandments of her Lord. Let her heart be enkindled with this new fire of the Love of God; let her lips sing the praises of joy, let her tongue commemorate the glorification of true Peace; Let her spirit be stirred with the breezes of heavenly happiness. He is {{p15}} with her; he will be always with her. While the Beloved was uttering these spiritual words of guidance I knew that there must be a great wisdom behind this sudden call of Isabel and we will come to know of it later, and no matter where she is she will be the same indefatigable worker for the Cause of good-will and Peace. Now that she will return to America, Doctor and Mrs. Getsinger will leave for India without a third person. Mrs. Stannard may join them later. She is not yet very strong and must keep perfectly quiet in order to win back her health.

5. A visit to Mirza Abul-Fazl

The Master called in the afternoon on Mirza Abul Fazl and stayed with him for more than an hour, speaking about the book which he is now writing.

6. Abdul Baha's answers to letters

Later on a large package of letters were received. He looked over each and dictated answers to a few of them. To one he wrote:

“At present we are living in Ramleh, near Alexandria. From all parts the {{p16}} believers are arriving daily and the banquet of meeting is spread. Likewise numberless letters are being received in large quantities. If devote my day and night to their reading alone it will not be sufficient”. In answer to a letter from London he dictated: “Praise be to God the Fragrances of Holiness are diffused and the believers and the maid-servants of Merciful are engaged in the promotion of the Most Great Glad-Tidings. They are overflowing like unto a cup with the Love of God. This is the Favor of the Almighty”. In another Tablet he speaks: “O thou new plant of the garden of Abha! Happy is thy condition for thou art a fresh branch in the Paradise of Glory! Thou art the twig of the Tree of Life, hast entered in the Citadel of guidance of God and art free from the dross of error. Thou hast attained to the Most Great Purity, opened thy eyes and unstopped thy ears and become the Candle of the assemblage. I hope that day by day thou mayst add to thy faith and assurance, knowledge and wisdom, firmness and steadfastness.”###October 2nd 1913 Ramleh, Egypt

1. The Bahai love and a verse from Koran.

The Bahai love towards all the creatures must be as free as the air, as unshakable as the mountains, as imperishable as the spirit of God and as tender as the love of mother towards her children. There are abundant evidences that answering to the Love of God in the heart, there must also be love to man. One of the allegorical verses in the Koran shows clearly, mystical longings of the heart toward this Love which is declared to be a Light and this light is no other than God’s illuminating love for man. The verse is as follows:

God is the Light of the heaven’s and of the Earth. His Light is like a niche in which is a lamp - the lamp encased in glass - the glass, as it were, a glistening star. It is lighted with the oil of a blessed tree, the olive, neither of the East nor of the West, the oil of which would well-nigh give light though no fire touch it. It is {{p18}} light upon light.

2. The sayings of Mohamad and Ali

When the Arabs observed Mohamad’s charity towards the orphans and unprotected, his extreme simplicity and democratic attitude towards all mankind they used to say, “he is in love with his maker”. One of the sayings of the Prophet is, “Do you love your creator? Love your fellow-beings first. In another place he says:”Do you wish to approach your lord? Love his creatures. Again he says: “That man, who is most considerate of his kind, is the favourite of God”. He says in another place: “How do you think God will know you when you are in His Presence? By your love of your children, of your kin, of your neighbours, of your fellow-creatures”. Once of the prophet played with great earnestness: “O Lord! grant me the love of Thee; grant that I may love those that love Thee: grant that I may do the deeds that may win Thy Love; make Thy love to be dearer to me than self, family or wealth”. Ali, the son-in-law of Mohamad and his successor, in a supplication.

4. Arrival of American Bahais.

One of the most happy events of today was the arrival of Mrs Von Lilianthal and Mrs Beede of New York City. Since we left them in Paris they were living in Switzerland and now they will have the daily privilege of meeting the Beloved. They arrived at noon and dined with him in the holy Family. I saw them in the evening. They were looking very happy and well. Today also several believers arrived from Cairo and other parts of Egypt; a few Bahai young men are leaving for Beirut and others are departing for France to be present at the opening of their Schools. Ramleh is at present a spiritual clearing house. Believers and friends come and go, impelled by holy impulses, filled with the Divine Glad-Tidings and inebriated with the wine of the Love of God. So many people arrive each with his peculiar problem to be solved by the master. He is surrounded with insuperable difficulties but he faces them with an optimism and goodwill never witnessed in any other man but him who is the source of real happiness.

6. Golden Opportunities

About 12'oclock he passed by our house and called for me. As it was a warm day, he carried an umbrella in his hand. I followed him and he walked toward Bacos station. In the course of conversation he stated that God through His Grace in the processes of the unfolding of the life of every man, opens before his face a wide door of golden opportunity. There are people who take this opportunity by the forelock and enter in the garden of the heavenly good pleasure even praying, striving with protection of this spiritual station; others shut their eyes and let the opportunity slip out of their hands. I had ordained for — a palace of diamond but he did not appreciate it. He followed his own desires rather than to live in accord with my good pleasure. How often I argued with him to set aside his will and follow the will of God. He did not listen. I loved him. I wished him become like unto a glorious sun irradiating the rays of severance and holiness but he preferred to wallow in the filth and quazniers {{p20}} gives us clairvoyant power to pierce the veils of mysteries. This love dwells entirely on the Fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man and will not rely on fear, or compulsion. It is a love that includes in it universal charity, and the “enthusiasm of humanity”. True love enjoins upon us to love mankind, practice meekness, patience, kindness, benevolent charity and All the divine qualifications. In this day eve as Bahais must show forth in our daily lives and dealings that love which is fully revealed in the mirror of the heart of Abdul Baha. He is beckoning us to lofty ambition, divine aspiration, heroic endeavour and majestic deeds. The underlying principle of all social and economic activities is love and affection. may we become honoured to express these qualities, to upraise this standard, to shed this glorious light, to scatter these promising seeds, irrigate this fertile field and to devote all our time and effort to this humanistic service <21> of human propensities. Behold, how my love was cordial and my attachment heartfelt! Man in all his transactions and feelings must be sincere and straightforward. The Blessed Perfection accepted all the oppressions and persecutions and promulgated thereby divine Teachings; so that, people may become sincere in their dealings toward each other. On repeated occasions, the Blessed Beauty would tell us that while his holiness Christ suffered derision for three years and finally crucified, he was daily, nay hourly martyred and yet forbore all these so that mankind may clad itself with celestial garment of sincerity. No one could ever stand the strain and pressure brought against Baha-ollah for one moment.

7. Abdul Baha Train about Tolstoi

He walked till he reached a Persian store where he rested for half an hour. Here he spoke about Tolstoi in detail; "I consider him a Bahai, a real Bahai, because he lived and acted in accord with the good pleasure of Baha-ollah, because he divided his possession between himself and his farmers. {{p22}} Many of the translations of the Holy Tablets were forwarded to him and toward the latter end of his life he was going to write a book on this Cause but death overtook him. While he lived, all Europe listened to his utterances and his works are translated in many languages".

8. Speaks also about Jamal Ed-Din

Speaking about Jamal Ed-Din Efgan who opposed very vigorously this Cause during his lifetime he said: this admirers have written to me that the traces of his tomb owing to neglect are almost effaced. We beg you to order some of the Bahais to build his tomb. Now I hope to do this. If he was inimical toward us we did not oppose him all. When, however, I observed that he was entirely misrepresenting the Cause by charging foul calumnies, in the Egyptian Press I wrote to him: -Ere long thou shalt hear the thunderous peals of this bell and the resonant sound of this Bugle from the Supreme Concourse, glorifying and praising my Lord the El Abha! After that he stopped his attacks. Then we returned home. On the way the Postman delivered into his hands a large bundle of letters. ###October 3rd 1913 Ramleh, Egypt

1. Our daily life in Ramleh

Probably you will be interested to know how our lives are spent daily, close to the heart of the Beloved. First let me tell you, the Master's family - in a Bahai sense - is very large, very large indeed. He and his own family live in one house, the secretaries and with as many pilgrims as they can accommodate live in another and there is besides these two houses a third which is rented only for the pilgrims. The American and European pilgrims live in New Victoria Hotel as well as prominent Persian nobilities. There is another hotel in Bacos station which is brought under service when there is an overflow of pilgrims. All these houses and hotels are used at this time for the accommodation of the friends who are constantly coming from the four corners of the earth to welcome Abdul

Baha. The secretariat is like the club house {{p24}} for all the pilgrims. Except the sleeping hours, they spend all their time with us. Here in the East everybody gets up early, so that between the hours of 5 and 6 we are out of bed with the greeting of "Allaho Abha" on our lips. There are four morning customs that have impressed me deeply and are the significant signs of the religious nature of these people. First: Their early rising and although in the West it is taught early to bed, early to rise it is seldom practiced. Second: No sooner they open their eyes, the holy Name of God is on their lips, thanking Him for all His past Graces and future Bestowals. Third: Their quiet solitary prayer and concentration from ten to thirty minutes according to the religious spirit of the individual. Fourth: As soon as they have finished their individual prayers before taking their breakfast they assemble in the reception room and pray to God, read communes or sing an anthem. Then they will gather around the table to partake of the material food. {{p25}} After the performance of these unconscious rites it is about 6 or 6:30 and the friends begin to arrive to take their breakfast with us. When everybody is present we all go to the reception room and have a 10 to 15 minutes prayer. Thus refreshed with spiritual food we enter the dining room. We sit around a large table over which the Samovar is brewing and Aga Jamal, our faithful cook dispenses tea. Breakfast consist of tea, native bread and cheese, nothing else for easterners as a rule do not give much attention to morning repost. Everyone drinks from one to three cups of tea, helps himself with a piece of bread and cheese and within a few minutes we are all through. Then the pilgrims go out and sit on the Veranda, often Mirza Abul Fazl comes and talks to them. Within half an hour someone from the Master's house arrives giving the news that the pilgrims are summoned. They return laden with the Jewels of the Kingdom. Some of mornings {{p26}} the Beloved pays us a visit. The pilgrims are now free; some to go to the city, a few sitting down to write letters home or copy Tablets or the Master's Western addresses while another group is engaged in conversation; imparting and in turn receiving the news of the progress of the Cause in their respective countries. My room is quite large and whenever there is an influx of pilgrims eight persons sleep in it and often till past midnight they talk and sing with great joy and harmony. When we first arrived I arranged my writing desk near the window, then transferred it to the center of the room and now it is placed between two beds. Although there are constant interruptions, I manage to do my work in morning hours. Our lunch is simplicity itself, only one kind either Persian soup called "Ab-jousht" or fried eggplants etc, with large thin round native bread. When we have many pilgrims they are divided into two parties for lunch and dinner. {{p27}} The secretaries are always included in the second party and the guests and pilgrims in the first. We eat a great deal of fruits, such as grapes, pomegranates, figgs, cantaloupes, watermelons etc. After lunch the pilgrims are scattered, many taking their afternoon siestas. Between 3 and 4 tea is served and again the friends arrive. We read Tablets and talk about the Cause. Then forming different groups we go out but always near and around the pilgrims house in the hope that the Master may suddenly come. Meanwhile, he may be either dictating Tables in the nearby rose-garden or calling on Mirza Abul Fazl, or entertaining some Pashas in his house or calling on a learned or simple person. At eight o'clock again we are gathered in the dining room and eat the one course dinner. {{p28}} After dinner usually we are free and may make our own choice either going out to take a walk or sit in the house to read or converse with others. Before midnight everybody is in bed. Our house is the rendezvous for all the beggars. Every day, several call with petitions for "Abbas Effendi". None of them go away empty-handed. The Master was busy all day and except the pilgrims none met him. Shoughi Effendi, his mother, Basheer and a maid left for Haifa and therefore the Master's house will be quite for awhile. Doctor and Mrs. Getsinger's departure for India is for the present postponed and they will leave tomorrow for a week's stay in Haifa with the Foastrian Bahais who have gone to visit the holy Tomb. Mrs. Fraser will be here for a few days longer. She is very happy and enjoys her personal contact with the holy Family. Her diary of the daily life of the Beloved will be a treasure. ###October 4th 1913 Ramleh, Egypt

1. Two Tablets by Baha-w-llah to the Jews.

Having not had an occasion I have seldom incorporated in the main body of my letters from Baha-ollah's Tablets but the other day Haji El Yahou brought me two Tablets from His presence with a request of translation. The first is a long one in which the Jewish people are reminded of the fulfilment of the prophecies of the old Testament. In the light of the Beloved's epoch making addresses in the Jewish Synagogues of the United States this Tablet has a deep significance and peculiar interest:

"In the Name of the Wise, the Mighty! This is the Day in which the Throne amongst the tribes, (of Israel) is calling to all the inhabitants of the Earth, summoning them to the glorification of the Almighty.

this is the Day in which the angels of heaven {{p30}} are continually descending with the Cups of Explanation and the Goblets of Knowledge and having being perfumed with the Holy and sweet Fragrances they are ascending.

Proclaim: The Promised Lord saith: O ye Concourse of the Jews! You have belonged to me; from Me you have appeared and to Me ye shall return! What has happened to you that now you are not recognizing Me, although I have appeared with all the signs. You have taken mine enemies instead of friends and have abandoned the real Friend!

This is the Day in which the New heaven hath appeared and the old earth is renewed. Should you look with sanctified vision ye shall behold the New Jerusalem! Should you listen with the attentive years, ye shall hear the voice of God!

This is the Day in which all things call unto you and invite you to advance toward the Promised Lord! But alas! You are so intoxicated with the Wine of haughtiness and are not aware even {{p31}} for one moment! The ear is for the sake of hearing My voice and the eye is created to behold My Beauty! Hearken ye unto Me and detach yourselves from ought else save Me. The Tabernacle of the Lord through the hand of divine Providence is hoisted and the Cause of God hath become manifest. The time of the olden things is rolled by and the Cycle of regeneration hath come. The Lord hath so willed that everything be renewed. But only a new vision is enabled to behold this transformation and a new intelligence is informed with this condition.

The Origin and the End were couched in one blessed Word and that blessed Word hath appeared and stepped upon the Arena of existence. It is the spirit of the Divine Books and Scriptures. It has been from the Beginning before which there was no Beginning and it shall continue to the End after which there is no End. It is the Key to the Most Great Treasury of the Lord and the Concealed Mystery of God {{p32}} which hath been hidden from eternity behind the Canopies of Celestial Infallibility. It is the Alpha and Omega prophesied by John. It is the first and the last, the Manifest and the Hidden.

O thou Abd-e-Hosseini! God willing thou shalt become confirmed in rejoicing the tribes (Israelites) with the prophecies revealed in former times in the Holy Book. This Glad-tiding is indeed like unto the water of Life for the dead people of the world. Blessed are those who drink therefrom!

Declare: Today the city of God hath appeared and become manifest with the utmost adornment. Ponder ye over the words of John who hath prophesied concerning the coming of the holy and glorious city of God, saying: "For the Lord God Almighty and the Lamb are the temple of it. And the City hath no need of the sun, neither of the moon to shine on it, for Baha-ollah (the {{p33}} Glory of God) did lighten it".

In the name of the True One, hold in the hand the rod of trust and with complete severance guide the erring souls to the great city of God; perchance the lost ones may return to their real home and ideal country and the blind receive new and penetrative sights. Verily He is powerful to do whatsoever He willeth and in His Mighty grasp everything is captive and He is the Omnipotent and the Omniscient!

The second Tablet is short: "In His Name, the Commentator, the Wise!"

I perused thy letter and heard thy voice. Thy lamentation and groaning are like the lamentation and groaning of the sincere and favored ones! The Lord of the tribes (Israelites) hath cast His Glance over all and is informed with all matters. His Garment was a spiritual Messenger. Thou hast attained, recognized and quaffed from the Water of His Love. Protect {{p34}} these stations in the name of the Glorious Lord. He hath hearkened to the cry of every wronged one and hath advanced toward everyone who hath turned his face to Him. He is the Helper, the Supporter, the Powerful and the Mighty! Rest thou assured in His Bestowal, take hold of His Rope and cling to the hem of the garment of His Generosity! Verily He is the Generous, the Munificent.

This morning the master received the Zoroastrian pilgrims and in a farewell talk spoke about the ancient civilization of Persia in contrast with its present decadence. He told them they must practice the virtues of their ancestors and enkindle their extinct lamps. At 2 o'clock they left for Holy land with Doctor and Mrs. Getsinger to return after a week. All afternoon the Beloved was out. Single and without assistance he is teaching the upper state of Egyptian society bringing them nearer to the Cause and leading them gently along the paths of truth. ###October 5th 1913 Ramleh, Egypt

{{p35}}

Our house is once more quiet, the birds have flown away and the garden is longing for the melodies of other nightingales. Nowhere on the face of the earth do you find so many different nations and religious as you find them in the neighbourhood of Abdul Baha. The Russians of the North with their picturesque dresses, the turbaned Ulemas from the University of Al Ahzhar, the Arabs, the Turks and the highly civilized Europeans and Americans meet together with perfect harmony. Although in outward garments and even in ideas of worldly culture they differ yet they are impelled forward by the ideals of the oneness of the world of humanity. On the points of international arbitration, comity of nations, universal religion, economic improvement of human society and the diffusion of education, they are united, {{p36}} for all believers are brothers. Thus in a concrete manner we are daily watching the progress of the Bahai world and came into touch with those who are putting their shoulders to the wheel and pushing it forward. It is extremely interesting to meet these men - young and old - inspired with the principles of fraternity and peace. With one common impulse they go on from step to step, getting nearer and nearer to the goal. They are earnest and ever ready to sacrifice their lives for the progress of the Cause. Once they have the Holy Presence (they spread the Glad-tidings from clime to clime) (and before reaching their homes). They are so enkindled with the fire of faith, service to humanity and the love of God that each one is shining like unto the lamp and illumine the dark recesses of the hearts. They know that Baha-w-llah will inspire those who arise to promulgate the word of Reality.

{{p37}}

It was early morning. Leaving the house I walked toward the sea. I sat on a rock, the waves dashing against it. I was musing in a quiet manner and watching the rising of the sun out of the clear blue. Someone tapped on my shoulder I turned around. It was Mirza Jalal Sina. "Ah come my friend! I was just thinking about you. It is sometimes since you have told me a story. Will you please sit down and tell me one?" I said. "Would you like to hear the story of forty camels?" he said as he sat on the rock. "Yes! I would love to".

Once upon a time there were forty camels living on a green pasture. The luxuriance of the meadows, the flowing streams, the delightful atmosphere and the beauty of environment appealed to them greatly. While they enjoyed the life of plenty they frolicked joyously from one to the other {{p38}} end of the verdant meadow. Grazing through in this field during spring and summer, they did not think of change in their outward condition. Nothing could induce them to leave these premises as long as they had plenty to satisfy their hunger and supply their comfort. With no thought of tomorrow, they revelled in the luxuries of today. Their minds being filled with the vain pomp and the alluring scenery of the present, they were not disturbed with the distant thought of a future. Of a more complete state of life they could not conceive and the frontier of their minds was limited by the visible horizon. They ate, drank, slept and now and then took short excursions neither and you. Contented with the present dreaming of no other world, elated over their seemingly permanent happiness, stuffed with vain glory, bloated with the idea of false patriotism they lived on, looking with deep disdain and soulful contempt upon any member of the party who dared to so much {{p39}} dream of other planes of existence. They argued that neither by choice nor necessity they must worry over the idle conception of a future life. "Let us eat and drink, ramp on the grass and bask in the sunshine. Our fortune is secure, our happiness is unchangeable, our reign is supreme, the means of enjoyment are at hand. Why should we care for anything else?" While with these arguments they stifled the voice of conscience and checked the promptings of the spirit, the spring and summer months rolled by and dreary seasons of autumn and winter drew near. Of course during the fair weather they did not bother nor shook off their lethargy to lay by a store for the rainy days. Believing in the immutability of the seasons, they found themselves to their despair in dire want and starvation.

As by the magician's wand the aspect of nature was changed, the grass was withered, the leaves dried up, and no food could be obtained anywhere. Day by day the weather become colder; the flowing river and streams frozen, the thunders pealed forth, the windows of heaven opened, the mighty torrent of rain pouring down, the snow covering the field with a white blanket and the hail adding to the general discomfort. The camels shivered and could find no shelter. After much deliberation they decided that there should be no other way of relief than to send one of their members to scour the beyond country, perchance he may find a green pasture. The one to whom this commission was entrusted started out. Many days elapsed and there was no news of him. Those who were {{p41}} left behind showed signs of worry, not only because they feared they will lose him but because they were hungry and famished. At last the messenger appeared. He brought wonderful tales of adventures accompanied by heart-throbbing descriptions. They all gathered around him and listened with breathless eagerness:

'My friends! I have been away for sometime but I have followed up a line of investigation that unfolded before my eyes many wonderful things, the recital of which will be very hard for you to believe unless you see them with your own eyes. Beyond the frontier of this country I found Elysian fields, most enchanting in their verdancy and extraordinary in their luxuriance. In all my life I have seen nothing like them. The dwellers of those divine gardens told me that perennial spring reigns there! {{p42}} Neither the blasting ravages of autumn nor cold frost of winter gains any foothold in that climate. Its meadows, pastures are always verdant, its water cool and its weather temperate. The only difficulty that one meets however is at the entrance because the gate is small, indeed smaller than the eye of a needle and the passage leading to the garden very narrow. In order to enter through the gate we must eternalize our bodies, be changed into pure spirits, leave behind mortal desires, become free from the ties of carnal appetites, sanctified from worlds pleasures and released from coarse materiality. If we can characterize ourselves with these attributes and it can be done in a twinkling of an eye - then as radiant beings we shall enter into those garden of bliss. Of course, it is painful to go through these experiences and let {{p43}} go our heedlessness; for at every step we must sacrifice something that we consider very essential to the pursuit of our pleasures and the gratification of our desires. But once freed from these chains, the rest of the journey is accomplished with ease. Now if you are made of such heroic stuff and are courageous enough to face these process of purification, let us start on our way. I have already gone through the test and having actually seen the garden, I know whereof I am speaking. Carried away by this description but not fully realizing the difficulties of the personal sacrifices they should make, they started out and crossing many deserts, they reached at last at the gate. The guide instructed them how they should look through the hole. They saw spread before their eyes the most splendid panorama of nature and scenes of ravishing beauty. First they looked at the extreme narrowness {{p44}} of the hole, then they looked at themselves and not a few started to laugh at the clever joke played upon them. How can I ever pass through this hole? cried one in despair. This is all ridiculous, another one jeered. Posh! How can a camel go through a hole? a third clamoured. A few without troubling themselves much sacrificed all their personal desires and passed through the hole; others could not give up self and remained behind.

When we returned home tea was ready and Haji Niaz was dispensing it like a real, old Patriarch. After awhile the Beloved passed by and handed me a package of photos from Mrs. Killuis of Spokane, Washington for distribution amongst the Oriental friends. He looked well and {{p45}} was on his way to Mirza Abul Fazl. In the afternoon the learned Editor of a monthly magazine, called El Bayan published in Cairo called on him. This Editor expects to write an article on the Cause and so he has come to the source for his information.

Mirza Moneer and I were taking a walk before sunset when we met the Master coming toward us from the opposite direction. We followed him and he came to our house. He sat on the veranda and apropos of something spoke about his first trip to Beirut about 30 years ago and how one of the celebrated judges of Islam Sheikh Mohamad Abdu met him and was constantly with him during his 40 days sojourn in that city. Afterward when some strangers asked his opinion about the religion of Baha-w-llah he answered: "While other leaders of the religions of the world are talking, the Bahais are doing the work of unity and spiritual awakening. Their action and word coincide with each other. They are deadly in earnest". ###October 6th 1913 Ramleh, Egypt

{{p46}}

"I feel the earth move sunward I join the great march onward and take with joy while living My freehold of Thanksgiving.' In this age the supreme longing of all the spiritually-minded men and women is to see the highest ideals of divine and human justice and righteousness embodied in visible forms and tangible realities. Glittering generalities do not suffice. Theoretic explanations are not wanted. After many ages of social inequalities, economic despotism, and degrading slavery, mankind at last has arisen from its deep slumber to the consciousness of its inalienable rights and prerogations. The river of progress has washed away the shores of reaction and retrogression. The legions of sciences and arts have conquered the dark Kingdoms of ignorance and illiteracy. New laws {{p47}} breathing health and vigor have replaced the archaic, dead rules. Marvelous inventions have modernized the old, narrow world. The splendid heritage of culture has become the intellectual legacy of all humanity. The means of transportations and communication have knitted together the remotest parts of the earth. Salient revolution, invisible to the eyes, and more far-reaching in its effect than all the dynamic wars has been going on, upsetting the great army of progress. The only difference that exists is that some are in the front rank, a few in the middle, a few are behind, while the rest are logging in the far off, but everyone is marching onward according to its order, capacity and environment. Just as in the world of literature and government, politics and philosophy there has accrued a great change, why must we not enjoy a renaissance in the world of religion?

Religion is the foundation upon which the whole structure of human society rests. Now if the forms of structure -modes of living are changed; have we not a right to assume that this is high time to lay a deeper foundation, a more lasting basis? In the construction of a common building - to say nothing of the skyscrapers - we bring into use all the modern, scientific methods of architecture and engineering; then how is it that when we desire to lay the foundation of our lives which is the greatest and most important of all - there are so many Pseudo-architects who are ready to convince us that the haphazard rules of the ancient are good and safe enough? The ancient cities and palaces are laid in ruin and except from an archeological standpoint, they have far us no other interest. For everyday a new food is destined. In every season there are new fragrant flowers. The spring of last year {{p49}} although very beautiful is a matter of history. We want a new spring with its latent and manifest (powers and signs.) Humanity having reached the stage of maturity demands string nutriment and clothing. Children's jacket and food will not do. From every clime the cry of progress is heard, even from the small hamlets and villages of the East and of the West. Let us have a real revolution in the realm of Ideas a stepping forward. We have had enough of hide - bound systems and war-like rules. Let us throw away these shells and search after the white pearls. Let us discard the Kernel and have the mea. Let us abandon superficiality and investigate Reality. Let us relinquish the deadly customs and with one bound become free. Let us love the rose no matter deed, no matter from what race, follow the light no matter from what lamps and praise man because he has character and {{p50}} not because he was fashionable clothes of the latest cut. Listen to the claims Call, growing in volume bursting out of the very heart of humanity and creating, wonderful life- throbbing echoes in the steppes of Russia, the jungles of African the deserts of Asia, in the cities of Europe and in the metropolis of America. This is all the out working of the mystic fate of the earth and the gradual progression of the divine plan. Humanity by going through these infinite phases of growth is evolving to its ultimate stature of perfection; vices are being eliminated, virtues inculcated; tyranny overthrown, justice liberated; indifference provender at, glad news spread abroad; materialism dethroned, spirituality enshrined in the hearts; selfishness punished, altruism promoted; misanthropy checked, love of human family nourished; insularity ridiculed, universe sadism glorified; prejudices satire, appreciation admired.

You who are endowed with insight and spiritual vision realizes that not only the past ages have passed through great revolutions but the future holds in its grasp greater revolutions, bringing in their travois peace, security of justice and love for every man on their face of the Earth when Mirza Jalal Sina came in from a long walk and broke the thread of my reflection. He has been conversing with Mirza Ali Akbar and Haji Maz and because they could not agree he illustrated their dilemma by the following story: "There were a blind man, a deaf man and a lame man who started to travel together. They were traversing a great desert when suddenly the blind man said 'I see the hand of robbers who are going to overtake us'. The deaf man said: 'yes, yes, I hear the clatter of the hoops of their horses'. The lame man who was thinly dressed said: '-yes, friends let us run fast, for fear they may role us!" Then he went to bed and I was light again to my oven musing with no possibility of other interruption, because everybody is sleep.

{{p52}}

This morning the Master came to our house. He could not sleep last night very well. Having been the guest of a Pasha who had invited other nobles and dignitaries to meet him ate a banquet he had spoken and entertain them for nearly 5 hours. Besides he had partaken of heavy dishes, most difficult to digest. The result was of course sleeplessness. He stayed for more than half an hour and as I had received my mail from America I gave him the resume of the news. His eye were closed and listened to my narrative.

A letter from Baku, Caucasus, from Sayad Assadollah tells us of his spiritual victories in spreading the Cause and scattering the seeds of the flowers of the Paradise of Abba. He has travelled throughout many cities and everywhere souls have been attracted to the Kingdom of God. Surely Divine Confirmations are descending upon him.

###October 7th 1913 Ramleh, Egypt

{{p53}}

Dear Friends!

Today mankind is more in the search of Peace than any other time in the course of its history; but three things have impeded its realization. First mistrust, second jealousy and third misunderstanding. Nations having no confidence in the protestations of friendship by their neighbors increase yearly the means of defense. This breeds jealousy and ends in misunderstanding which in turn is transformed into war and bloodshed. Arbitration Conferences, Peace meetings, Conciliation Congresses are yearly organized and thousands of men and women attend them and in their last sessions excellent Resolutions are presented and unanimously adopted but the tangible results are wanting. We may depict most vividly the horrors of wars or describe in great rhapsody the victories of Peace but after all we have not gone beyond the realm of words.

We may discourse eloquently in the burden of Armaments but on the other increase in at geometric ratio the frightful annual in naval budget. The Permanent Court of Arbitration before which all the governments may settle their disputes is a grand and noble Ideal for the realization which we are all striving but the difficulty arises from the fact whether these nations are altruistic and unselfish enough to present all their cases - boundary line, commercial disputes, national honor - to the abatement of the international Court. So far there have been certain questions which the nations of the West are not yet willing to yield to the decision of the court, no matter how impartial, or to a joint - commission no matter how representative! They fear each other's designs or amicable dealings. Jealously they hug to their bosom their hard work or inherited independence, suspecting that their neighbors will trample it under the hoofs of their cabalary horses as soon {{p55}} as they are exposed to outside attack. Outwardly all the nations are committed to the principle of arbitration with or without reserve but how are they going to establish the Court of Arbitral Justice on a permanent basis of national representation and international dignity? These nations do not want to have Peace tempered with justice. It is heard from many quarters that the third Hague Conference will be inaugurated within two years and that from now the diplomats and statesmen of Europe and America are preparing suitable proposals to be submitted to the Conference. It is hoped that when the delegates of the governments are gathered together in that August Assemblage of the Armament of Mon. they will not only discuss how to minimize the horrors and cruelties of war but how to bring about either limited or total disarmament, how to constitute the various function of the Permanent <56> Court of Arbitration, how to devise a plan whereby all the nations may be willing to enter into a general government and how to create an international naval police force to protect the commerce on the high seas. If they are assisted in carrying out even partially these matters which are seething in the minds of the pacifists they have rendered an enduring service to the world of humanity and their names will shine through the history of mankind like unto the brilliant stars from the horizon of eternal glory.

For the last 20 yrs. the cause of Peace has been greatly accelerated, Peace Societies have sprang up everywhere and the followers of Peace are increased. The Pacifists of all countries and of all nations have carried a vigorous campaign of public education and face to face with the legions of war we have the legions of Peace. Here thee may be an army of death but there is an army of life, Government may drill {{p57}} hosts of destruction and invent engines of slaughter, God is teaching the cohorts of constructions and brings into the field artillery of love. The former lies his trust in the brutal force of Dreadnaughts and indomitable phalansces of men; the latter puts his confidence in the Pioneer of the Holy Spirit and the Confirmation of the Supreme Kingdom.

This present day nations are like unto so many armies of Peace. They need a wise Commander - in - chief in this struggle. As soon as the supreme general with undaunted courage and universal conception appears he will bring all these scattered armies under the Flag of Eternal Peace. It is said that once the rats made pathetic complaints against a big cat whose mighty attacks upon them decimated their rank and file. They organized a meeting and deliberated upon the means whereby they may stop the murderous ravages of the cat. All the delegates expressed their opinions individually but they did not hit upon any plan. Finally {{p58}} an old rat, well-known for its sagacity and insight arose from its seat and said: "I have found a way, and that is by tying a bell around the neck of the cat. Then whenever it approaches us from afar we will hear the sound of the bell and run away." Everybody thought this was the best suggestion but their heated enthusiasm cooled down when they began to think who will have courage enough to take the bell and tie it around the neck of the cat.

Now, the principles of Peace and arbitration are very good and beneficial but which one of the governments of the world will arise to practice it first, and then by this example teach other nations to follow? It is hoped that America - the house of the brave and the free - will be the first government to hoist this flag, to let the dove of Peace fly out of the cave of human egotism and selfishness and brutal materialism and to lead all mankind in the arts of love, friendship and conciliation. May the <59> American delegates at the third Hague Conference show forth this statesmanship and foresightedness! May they constitute themselves the champions of Peace without limitations arbitration without restrictions! May they raise their voices in behalf of the oppressed amongst mankind! May they lay the foundation of the Glorious Palace of the Permanent Court of Arbitration on the Parliament of Mon - thus their names and home may shine throughout all future ages and cycles!

Today the Beloved was not feeling well. He was in bed all the morning. In the afternoon we met him only for a few minutes in the Victoria Hotel. He was weak and did not speak but a very few words. He told us he is going to rest. One of the Arabic papers of Alexandria called "El-Ahali" of today contained an interesting article on the cause and gave a wonderful Eulogy to the Master and his work.

Dear Friends!

"Great Ideals make great peoples."

The Bahai Ideals as revealed by Baha-ollah and expounded by Abdul Baha are the noblest and most luminous principles of the 20th century. The force and efficacy of these Ideals are so irresistible that any person coming in contact with them acknowledges the fact that they are the world of humanity. The followers of the Bahai Movement have demonstrated in their lives and their deeds the outworking of these teachings not so much by sensational advertisement as by the firm and steadfast adherence to the light of truth. With meekness and humility, with single-minded devotion and sacrifice they have shown to the world that they have no other interest at heart but the solidarity of the human race and the confraternity of all mankind. East {{p61}} and west, North and South, wherever you meet a Bahai you will find him a lover of mankind, taking the side of progress, spirituality, equality of rights and freedom of conscience. With broad-mindedness and fellow feeling they serve the people of all creeds, religious, and nations. They ask for no reward or compensation. Freely they have received, freely they give. The adulation of the friends nor the poisonous attack of the enemies change their determination. The glorious sun of their hope is never set; the righteous moon of their tolerance always sheds silvery beams; the stars of their high aspirations are eternally bright; the Zephyr of their loving kindness is never hushed; the garden of their universal amity is imperishably green, the fountain of their sympathy is flowing; the rain of their compassion and charity pours down; their search after truth is unhampered, their thirst for the water of Knowledge and wisdom is never alloyed.

In the path of righteousness they are resolute. They strive to show forth in their daily lives the qualities of the holy beings and manifest in their dealings with all men those godlike attributes which characterized Christ, Baha-ollah and Abdul Baha. In their estimation mankind are the sheep of God. The almighty Father is the Universal Shepherd. Having created all, he provides for them. He loves all, therefore he showers His mercy upon them. In every cycle he has inspired divine Messengers to lead these souls from the state of ignorance to the station of Knowledge. The Bahais having burned the self with the Fire of the Love of God are ever ready to serve the inhabitants of the world and sacrifice their lives for the prejudices they are free. They have no religious prejudices, because they believe all the religions are founded by God. They have no political prejudice, for they know all humanity are the children of God. They have no racial <63> prejudices, because they realize that in the sight of the Lord all are one and the purer the heart the nearer he is to the source of all Good. They entertain no patriotic pride, for they are conscious of the truth that this globe is one home, these countries one Country and it belongs to God. Their wings are not soiled with water and clay; thus they soar towards the sphere of spiritual brotherhood. Their minds are not clogged with dogmas and sacerdotal rites, consequently they have a keen intellectual appreciation of all that the former thinkers and philosophers have contributed to the advancement of the world. Their spirits are not as physical with the gas of vain illusions and superstitions phantoms, hence they are intoxicated with the Wine of the love of humanity. Their character are molded in the school of Reality; their experiences are gamed through the association with all men of every creed and thought Being convinced of the gaminess of this revelation {{p64}} nothing can shake their faith. To them every philosophic movement is but a partial replica of the Principles of the Bahai Cause, a faint echo of the resonant voice of the Teachings of Baha-ollah. They hide not their faith, neither do they dissimulate. Under all circumstances they are proud to be Known as Bahais amongst their communities. They wear the badge of their sincerity in their faces and behaviors. To be a Bahais is the greatest privilege and the most heavenly honor. They display the utmost exertion to spread the Cause they cherish in their hearts. They pray every morning, and whenever they can, for they believe strongly in the efficacy of prayer. They Know that of themselves they can do nothing but with the assistance of the Holy Spirit they can accomplish all things. They have no leaders and no one is appointed as their superior in the religions world. Like unto brothers and sisters they associate with each other and consort with all mankind, with joy and fragrance.

They are neither ostentatious nor proud. They are humble and meek, evanescent and contrite at heart. With man livers and truthfulness they conduct themselves. They do not swear nor curse. They do not drink and smoking is forbidden in the Bahais live a life of simplicity, and service to God and man. They must shine like unto the stars and live like unto the angels. They must be the promoters of the Glad-tidings of the Kingdom of Peace and the Standard - bearers of the army of righteousness. They must be the embodiments of happiness and the true ensign of love.

Today we did not see the Master several important people called on him, and many questions were answered. Mira Mohsen, the son-in-law of the Beloved and another believes arrived from Haiffa. They brought to us much good news. In the afternoon we called on Mirza Abul Fazl and had a long talk with him on the meaning of certain terms in the hidden Words.

Dear Friends!

“The world of humanity has two wing, one the male; the other the female. When both wings are reinforced with the same impulse the bird will be enabled to wing its flight heavenward to the summit of progress.”

In the Bahai world the position of women is unique and unprecedented. Through the revelation of Baha-ollah the women of the East have gained their right position in society and day by day they are advancing along the paths of progress and refinement. They have shattered the cage of confinement and isolation and are freed from former restrictions. Many schools with a modern curriculum are springing up here and there to teach the future mothers of the East. We are in a transition period when old rules and established customs are put aside and progression ideas are planted in the hearts and the minds. The complete emancipation of the women of the East will be realized through an evolutionary process, step by step and not by a radical revolution. The most important Eastern problem as regards women and girls is their education and training; so that they may fully realize the responsibility of their complete freedom once they attain to the degree of enjoying it. A hasty and radical change will be followed by chaos and disorder and no good will come out of it. The Western nations in a general way have a wrong notion about the status of women in the East because some of the prejudiced missionaries have depicted their conditions in the blackest manner. For example they have quoted the flimsiest and most doubtful traditions of Islam to show that the influence of Mohamad's teachings have degraded the women and have buried them alive behind the seraglio and Harem. “Women are the whips of Satan” is a pre-Islamic adage and was current amongst the Arabs before Mohamad was ever born. Or “When women was created the Devil said to her. You are half my army; you have my confidence, I need no better weapon.” There are many other statements such as these quoted by the Christian missionaries to demonstrate their enormous prejudices. These misrepresentations beclouded the heaven of fair judgment as to prompt a Canon of the church of England to declare; ‘So little did, the prophet reckon of women that she is never even mentioned in the Koran.’ Another English authoress announced; “The Moslem does not even attributes the possession of a soul to women.” These allegations are not only unjust but cruel in their treatment and put the men of the East in a false position. In reality there are many sayings of Mohamad both in the Koran and traditions which prove the falsity of these accusations. In order to impress his followers with the sanctity and importance of the position of the Mother in the community he hath said: “The Keys of Paradise are at your mother's feet.” In the Koran he says: ‘Associate Kindly with women, for in them God hath placed abundant good,’ “He hath put love and tenderness between you.” These sayings clearly show that Mohamad never commanded the seclusion of women but on the contrary he enjoins upon his followers to ‘associate’ with them. Again he says: “The best men are those who are best to their wives and daughters. The best Moslems are those who best treat their wives.” You will be no doubt surprised to know that Mohamad never commanded women to wear veils. On the contrary he says: “A woman should not show but her face and hands.” But later on the Mohamadan priests and self-seeking clergy prevented women from being educated as the Ministers of the Christian Churches in Medieval ages Monopolized learning’s in the Convents and spread abroad the wings of the woeful birds of ignorance and obscurantism. Another instance which more clearly show that the veil is a social custom and not a religions creed is the following authorization story about Mohamad and one of his adherents:” When Al Mog here Ibn Sheba informed Mohamad that he was About to marry he asked him, “Did {{p70}} you see her?” “No,” was the reply. The prophet then said,” you must certainly see each other before you marry;” A new teaching of Mohamad against which the Arabs of the day were at first inclined to revolt is - “People! be humble before God, who hath created man and his wife of the same soul.” Here is a declaration of perfect equality: “Ye have rights over your wives and your wives have rights over you.” Indeed an astonishing doctrine in that day and period.

On the other hand the ideal state of marriage has never entirely lost in the East. It was in the sixteenth century when Sharani who died in Cairo penned these imperishable words:-“We Sufis have entered into an engagement to espouse only one wife, and not to associate others with her. The man who has only one wife is happy....A pure - hearted wife is a great happiness in the house. Oh! how often while I was weaving have I stolen a glance at my wife, the mother of my son, sewing garments for the poor. I understand then {{p71}} that I have happiness in my house. Often she opened her larder and distributed its contents to the poor.” I have already quoted from the Koran that Mohamad taught that men and women are endowed or created with the same soul. The following quatrain of Rumi, the celebrated mystic poet makes this point still clearer:

“Love and tenderness are qualities of humanity Passion and lust are qualities of Animalist Women is a ray of God, not a mere mistress. The Creator’s sell as it were, not a mere creature. In conclusion let me quote another verse from the Koran showing how Nish mad looked upon this mother:”Truly the men who resign themselves to God, and the women who reign themselves, and the devout men and the devout women and the men of truth and the women of truth, and the patient and humble, and who give alive and who fast and are chaste, men and women; and the men and women who often remember God; for them hath God {{p72}} prepared forgiveness and a rich recompense.” These quotations and there innumerable others which will show you most conclusively how the Pure religion of Islam - free from the accretions of the Ulemas - look upon this rather important matter. Now for many ages past the Eastern women could not enjoy any educational facilities but through the Blessings of the teachings of Baha-ollah they are beginning to see the light and come out of their hard crusted shells. The dark ages are behind, the century of light is ahead. For them there is no retrogression. They are pushing forward. They are hungry for Knowledge. Their intelligence is quickened, their susceptibilities are refined, their progress is assured, their future emancipation is certain. Step by step they climb the mountain of human rights and equality and soon they will take possession of the summit. Once they have gained they highest altitude they will stay there. They will be in full <73> command of the height and enjoy the fruits of their hard won victories. Baha-ollah is their Supporter! Abdul Baha is their Confirmer!

This morning the Beloved came to our house and stayed for a few minutes. Then he went out with Mirza Ali Akbar to see the new houses which he is going to rent for the rest of the season. This shows that we are going to stay here for a few months longer. In the afternoon Mir Sayad Hossein Afnan departed for Cairo, thus reducing the family of the Master but other may come next week from Haifa. Mrs. Isabel Fraser departed for Naples and may return after a few days. About 5'oclock the Master sent for Haji Naas and getting into a carriage they drove toward the sea and the Beloved coming out of the carriage stayed near the shore for nearly one hour, Returning to the Victoria Hotel he sent for me. Mr. Afwood's daughter, Helen, 7 yrs. old was brought in by Mirs Hesiok and the Master took her into his arms for a long time, calling her "My dear daughter. I love you very much" and giving her some money. Then he left for the house. We followed him to the door and he bade us farewell. I was very happy, because I saw him today. ###October 10th 1913 Ramleh, Egypt

{{p74}}

Dear Friends!

In this twentieth Century, man from the time of his birth to the time of his death is subject to the influence of four progressive degrees of human life; physical, intellectual, spiritual and celestial. As soon as the babe is born the mother suckles it from the breast of Kindness, nourishes it with the utmost tenderness, and trains it with the greatest compassion and spends many sleepless and anxious nights watching over its cradle. Having reached the stage of childhood she strives to engrave upon the clean tablet of his mind the elementary lessons of sincerity and honesty and illumines in the chamber of his heart the lamps of the refinement of feelings and spiritual susceptibilities. She wards off from his path the possibilities of any danger and supplies all his physical needs. Before the child attains the age of maturity the mother has done everything, putting forward {{p75}} energy and life to cause his all-around material growth. Then, the necessities of his life are multiplied. He must work personally for his food, shelter and clothing and solve independently the 3 cardinal problems of his physical existence, namely, nutrition, reproduction and production. Thus his physical life is always fluctuating between health and sickness, joy and sorrow, light and darkness, happiness and depression. Consequently in the physical life no matter how perfect there is no stability and permanency.

His intellectual life begins when he enters the school and starts to learn the principles of Knowledge, and later on assimilate the thoughts and ideals of the sages and wise men. His mind is nourished through the lofty ideals of ancient and modern philosophers. Having learned all that he ought to learn he starts on his business or professional career and to a large degree contributes his share to the welfare to the community. His mind becomes a store-house for useful {{p76}} information and his intellectual life is constantly replenished through association with other peers of progress. Naturally, a man of his accomplishments and attainments is vastly superior to the physical man who lives only for the sake of enjoying material pleasures.

Going a step further and we meet the spiritual man. The man whose spirit is sustained through the moral precepts, ethical advices of the past messengers and prophets. If a man of this type lives up in accord with the best moral instructions he will influence the lives of many people, his heart like unto a pure mirror reflects the rays of the sun of the Holy Spirit, he will guide his friends to the Path of rectitude and integrity and thus become an example of purity and virtue. That is why in our contact with the men of religions and professions we often meet a truly grand, noble spiritual soul whose words are comforting and whose deeds are philanthropic. Intendments houses and in social service of the {{p77}} large cities we find a band of men and women awakened by a sense of moral and spiritual responsibility are devoting their whole lives to the improvement of the awful conditions of the slum and the poor who are dragged down with poverty and misery. These people are not doing these things for any selfish purpose but because their inner consciousness is stirred by a feeling of pity and sympathy, they devote their time to such a noble work. The Lord loves these people and great reward is destined for them.

The highest expression of the life of man on this planet - in this age and many ages to come - is celestial; that is to live and act in accord with the Teachings of Baha-ollah and he steadfast in the Love of Abdul Baha. The Principles of the religion of the Blessed Perfection adorn the spirit with the highest attributes of the Kingdom of Abha, illumine his heart with the sun of the love of God, make him {{p76}} a servant of the world of humanity, a standard bearer of universal Peace, and an orb shining from the heaven of righteousness. He forgets himself and lives in the flow of the Love of the True One; he embraces all mankind with an ineffable tenderness and strives day and night to serve his fellowmen. He becomes a herald of the Supreme Concourse and wins the good pleasure of the Lord of Hosts. He will be attracted with the Fave of the Beloved and immerses his whole being in the Ocean of humility and meekness. He will enlist himself in the army of human progress and the limitless advancement of the race. Through his Zeal he will sacrifice everything in the Path of God and quaff from the chalice of Eternal Life! This is the most glorious Bounty of this age! This is the Bestowal of the Bahai Cycle! This is the Light that illumines every heart! This is the water that alloys every thirsty one! This is the divine Elixir changes man into {{p78}} the image and likeness of the Almighty!

Today we did not see the Master at all. He did not leave the house as he was not feeling well, for the last 2 or 3 days he has been suffering from a cold; but toward the evening we heard that he is feeling better and we will have the great joy of seeing him tomorrow.

Several packages of the National Geographic magazine mailed to me by our brother Mr. Wilhelm have relieved the quietness of the Eastern life and their fine pictures are interesting as well as instructive.

The greatest holy leaf, with Mirza Jalal and his wife left for Cairns this evening and may stay there for a few days.

Toward the evening we passed by the hotel and enjoyed a long talk with our American sisters and Mrs. Stanard. They are all delighted with their new experiences especially Mrs. Von Lilienthal and Mrs. Beede. No doubt they will write about their visit to the Master to New York friends. Greeting and Love to all. ###October 11th 1913 Ramleh, Egypt ? {{p80}} ? Dear friends! ? True happiness is shared by those souls who find their faith anchored in Abdul Baha, their lives becoming the serene expression of his spiritual ideals and their hearts reflecting the artistic pictures of Love, Joy and Peace. The more we are surrounded by the ministering angels of his heaven-like Presence the greater will for the immortal consciousness of self-surrender. He inspires our minds with the pure reflections of the Glorious beings and ignites with his divine fire the lamp of our holy enthusiasm. His magnetic attractions draws us near unto the Throne of the Forgiving Lord and his humanistic qualities teach us the lesson of brotherhood. To love him is to serve mankind, to stand in his Presence is to feel the Love of God, to hear his voice is to listen to the harmonies of the Kingdom and to remain firm in the Cause is to grow and develop day by day. Ours is indeed a great privilege to have {{p81}} accepted this Revelation and in order to become worthy of this privilege we must work for the Cause and flinging our comfort and rest to the wind we must arise to acquaint with the universal principles those who have not heard the Message before. Whilst the Master lives amongst us we have no more important work than the weakening of the souls and summoning the people to the Kingdom of Abha. Praise be to God that the believers of America and Europe are all united and in one accord. They are not attached with any personal tie and are freed from dogmas and traditions. Their greatest desire is to serve the world of humanity and promote the confederation of mankind. They are the noblest altruists of this or any other ages, ever striving in the Path of renunciation and sacrifice. Having no other selfish hope they long for the day of Millennium, constantly working for its realization. They are devoted to the cause of Peace and reconciliation. ? {{p82}} ? It is hoped that during this year they will with voice and one ultimate purpose make an extraordinary forward movement, organize meetings, invite souls to the Cause, teach the people and cause the tree of Baha become more fruitful. They are assisted uninterruptedly with the cohorts of the Supreme Concurrence and the angels of the Kingdom of Abha. They must not lag behind but must summon others to sit around this divine Table and partake of this spiritual food. The Cause of Baha-Ollah is for the whole world and not only for one section in exclusion of another. It is all-in-collusive and all the people shall taste this sweet water. If we do not exert to inform others with the universality and teachings of this Revelation we are either spiritually selfish or unworthy. If we work for the Cause without any personal motive undoubtedly our painstaking endeavour will be crowned, with success and the Blessed Perfection will become pleased with us. ? {{p83}} ? This morning the Master sent for me. After dictating a cable from New York, he told me he has been unable to sleep all night because his mind was the battle ground for many conflicting thoughts of the Cause. Later I was called again to translate for Mrs Beede but it was only for a few minutes because the Beloved expressed a wish to retire owing to the sleeplessness of last night. ? According to the recent development Mrs. Stau-nard is giving to India later on in the season to join Mrs. Getsinger; so she called on the Master in the afternoon and had a long interview with him. In the course of conversation and in answer to various questions the Beloved said: ?The principle of the Bahai Cause are the pure seeds which we are sowing in the fertile grows. Unquestionable many harvest shall be gathered. Daily these seeds are sprouting, growing in size and vagrancy and soon they will reach the stage of fruition. Rest {{p84}} than assured that all thy services in the Cause will yield abundant results. Now you will go to Bombay. I am not going to give you any set of rules but let the spirit and the requirements of the time and moment guide you in your propagation of the Cause. There are many friends in India with whom you can consult whenever you feel the need of consultation, you may stay in Bombay as long as you die in it necessary then you may go to another parts. Praise be to God than art free, detached from husband or son or home tie. Thou hast cause created all thy time to the service of the world of humanity. Deliver your addresses according to my speeches in America and Europe. Let them be the foundation of all your public talks. To the Indians says-God is the Shepherd of all and we are his flocks. There are not many races. There is only one race. Were you to look carefully the Englishman is the Persian, the Persian {{p85}} is the American, the American is the French, the French is the German etc. Don't talk about politics. Speak about the good work? the English have done in Egypt. To the Persian Zoroastrian say: Awake, Awake! For the sun of join salvation both arisen from the horizon of Persia. Ere long the ancient glory of your native land shall return, you will be honoured amongst all the nations of the Earth. Shake off your sleep! Aburo Miazda has come and? he shall make this world a paradise and its inhabitants the angels of heaven! Be kind and considerate to all the religions and sects and show your genuine sympathy and respect toward all. The spiritual youth shall inspire your heart. You are young. Man alone does enjoy physical and spiritual youth but the donkey and we could have only the former and are deprived of the latter. The spiritual youth revives one's force from heaven and up builds one's character. It is the great elixir that changes the leaser metals of human nature into precious divine attributes of the divine nature. ? {{p86}} ? To the theosophists be Kind and considerate. They are readier to receive this Truth than many other sects. Make them understand that a young bay educated in Oxford will not become the universal educator of mankind. One who is in need of the Knowledge of the Professors of uni-versity will not become the Manifestation of God. Christ was never taught by any man yet he was the universal Educator. Baha-ollah did not study but his Knowledge was immeasurable. He became the general instructor of the world of humanity. Even his enemies testify to this fact. In short associate with all joy and fragrance. The Confirmations of the Kingdom of Abha will encircle you at all time.? Then other matters were discussed and after drinking of tea we left the house. Together we called on Mirja Abul Fojl and here we heard from him a most of his structure account of the migration of the civilization from one country to another till how the Americans and Europeans have become the heritor's of the old pioneers.?????? ?

###October 12th 1913 Ramleh, Egypt ? {{p87}} ? Dear friends! ? Many years ago the Eastern believers received many wonderful Tablets from the holy Pen of Abdul Baha, each a gem on the Crawler of existence, a star in the heaven of the Orient, a fragrant rose in the garden of Abha. They preserve these Tablets as their most precious possessions. Their anxiety is changed into tranquillity, their poverty into wealth, their sorrow into joy and their pessimism into optimism. Often the receipt of a few words from the Beloved transforms cold agnosticism into gleaming faith, barren materialism into pure spirituality. His altered and written words are endowed with that mystic creative power which cannot be found in the words of the thinkers and philosophers. The Eastern people being by nature religion to them is the vital force of life and not a cloak to wear on Sunday and put it aside on week days ? are always deeply affected by an overwhelming manifestation of the religion of God and once fired with {{p88}} enthusiasm they are ready to sacrifice everything in its path. Hence we observe the extraordinary self-immolation of the Persian believers in this Cause. Herein I may translate of the Tablets of the Master revealed several years ago to one of the assemblies of Persia! ? He is God! ? O ye friends of God! ? At this moment, while the sun of the elemental world is being set behind the western horizon Abdul Baha is engaged in your mentioning and occupied with your remembrance. With the utmost humility and meekness I supplicate and entreat at the Threshold of Oneness; - so that the Kind God may decorate His friends with the order of His Nobility bestow upon their happiness, in the spiritual world He may grant them divine sovereignty, and in the heavenly Kingdom, celestial, ecstasy; This station is dependent and conditional upon one matter and that is self-sacrifice, consecration of one's self to the Cause and merciful attributes. ? {{p81}} ? Self-adoration must be entirely forgotten; in order that the melody of the angel of the Kingdom of Abha may reach to the ears. Through that soul- entrancing harmony and the sweet strains of the nightingale of faithfulness the hearts and the spirits are quickened and resuscitated, the banquet of the spiritual bliss is spread, the goblet of the wine of the Love of God is given around, the birds singing with the most attractive voice and artistic expression upon the branches of the tree of Reality; thus creating a joyous exhilaration in the body of the contingent world and causing to reach the spiritual vibrations of rejoicing to the Supreme concourse. ? Upon you be Yaha El Abha! ? (Signed) Abdul Baha Abbas. ? He is God! ? O than sincere servant of the Thrive One! ? Be them a speaker of the Truth and a skilful physician. Be then a remedy to the sick one and a balm to the wound of the heart and the soul. Seek than the quick {{p82}} healing medicine for the body of the world and work for the welfare of humankind. Be than the cause of the happiness of the world of humanity and bring than together the news of the prosperity of the children of God. Show them sympathy and love to all the creatures and be a will-wisher of mankind; Be thou friendly and at peace with all and associate with every one with moral integrity and sincerity; so that the Eternal Grace of the Merciful may become thy associate and the Effulgence's of the Supreme may become the cause of the firmness of the feet and the strength of the heart. Upon thy be greeting and praise! ? (Signed) Abdul Baha Abbas. ? He is God! ? O thou Ali Akbar! ? Whosoever is the servant of the believers is the leader of the righteous and whomsoever is the captive of the friends is the sovereign of both worlds. To serve the True One and the Thralldom of the Threshold is the Kingship of the {{p83}} of the East and of the West. Blessing be upon there who arise to serve the believers of God. (Signed0 Abdul Baha-Abbas. ? He is God! ? O thou who art exhilarated with the Wine of the Covenant! Know thou this of a certainty that today the little of the Most Great Bestowal is firmness and steadfastness in the Covenant of the Almighty but the magnet for the attraction of the Graces of His Highness the Merciful is to teach and guide humankind. Thank then God that thou art assisted in the former and the latter and art confirmed with every glorious attainment. Loosen thy tongue as much as thou cause in conveying the message and with the utmost eloquence and fluency explain the proofs and demonstrated the evidences of His Highness the One! Upon thou be greeting and praise! (Sig) Abdul Baha Abbas. ? This morning the Beloved sent for Knirza Moneer and dictated and many Tablet for {{p84}} the believers of the East and the West. For the last few days he was too busy to reveal Tablets. Mirza Jalal Sina, Mirza Ali Akbar and Haji Niaz received word to go and see the Master and when they returned they were all happy. In the afternoon there was a native wedding procession which attracted numerous spectators and incidentally the Beloved was sitting in front of a tailor shop under the Victoria Hotel. He sent for Mrs. Von Lilienthal and Mrs. Beede to come and watch the intensely, colourful, picturesque procession and they enjoyed it very much. Later on they called at the Beloved's house and passed a pleasant hour in spiritual conversation. ? During the day several Persians came from Alexandria and visited the Beloved and drew heavenly comfort and cause from his advices and extirpations. Thus our days are spent in quietness, peaceful activity and spiritual contemplation. May our hearts be inspired with the Love of humanity! ?

###October 13th 1913 Ramleh, Egypt ? ###No.8 ? ###Diary of Mirza Ahmad Sahrab. ? ###Beginning October 13th 1913 ? ###Ending October 21st 1913 ? {{p1}} ? Dear Friends! ? Another short period of separation from the Master is dawning upon us, thus beclouding the vista of our happiness and deprived of the rays of the Sun of his beauty. Just for the change of air and environment he left today for Aboukir, a little town half an hour away from Ramleh. Mirza Moneer and Khasro accompanied him. Aboukie, historically is very interesting, because it is connected with the military campaigns of Napoleon in Egypt. When he invaded Egypt with his great army he did everything to enlist the sympathy and the active co-operation of the Islamic world in his ambition of the world conquest. Thus ?the contemplation of Islam fascinated him. When here, he went to pray in the Mosques, dressed as an Arab and debated with intelligent Sheikhs. He sought in many ways to conciliate himself with the great Ulenias of Al Azhar, in Cairo, gathering them around him and taking their counsel on all occasions, when circumstances permitted. When his troops were starting for Egypt he impressed upon them the duty of showing the greatest respect for the Koran, the mosques and the Imams. Indeed, it was said that he seriously contemplated becoming a Moslem. ? In his proclamation in Cairo Napoleon said: ?The French are the true Muslims. We become better Christians than before by becoming Muslims. By the political Alliance of France with Islam {{p2}} we create a military power with which the world must count. By the religions alliance of the Gospel with the Koran we will make such to shine such a light for the souls of men as they have not yet seen.' And when the hopelessness of St. Helena encircled him, he still often expressed his sympathy with Islam and spoke of many of its tenets with praise. ?It is generally tonight that the French people have-and-to-always came nearer to sympathetic understanding of the Muslim people here than those of any other nation. It was, I thinks, only a Christian Frenchman who could have written these words of the Muslims: ?We wait also the return of the Messiah, though we do not know when or how he will appear. Nevertheless, the Spirit of Jesus, who is light and love, can spread itself abroad in the hearts of men with a power and a new purity to accomplish between brothers, too long enemies, a reconciliation which is altogether beyond their own efforts. Be then Christians of Islam and Moslems of the Gospel.? ? I have digressed from my main subject which is the departure of the Beloved for Aboukir to stay there a few days and thus be away from the rush and stress of Ramleh. All of us saw him this morning. He was dressed in long, cream robe and looked very vigorous and his eyes were shining with the mellow-light of love. He left about eleven a.m. and later on we received a letter in Persian from Mirza Monner giving the news of his safe arrival. Herein I will give you a translation: ?Praise be to God the divine Template arrived safely in the small town of Aboukir and this locality become adorned with the Blessed feet {{p3}} of the Beloved. There are hardly any signs of busy city or the progressive thrift of even a small town. It looks like a country without fertility. The only scene that strikes upon the retina of the Eye is the ever-shifting Sahera of and Saud and the groves of palms the dates of which are beginning to be ripened. The weather is however clear and fine. About 15 minutes to eleven the Master left from Ramleh for Aboukir. From the window of the train the Beloved Temple looked at the natural scene, gardens, orchards and Palm grows and the very slight change of air reacted upon his tender constitution and he felt much better. I hope the weather will agree with him. The manager of the hotel has seen the Master in Ramleh and is very considerate and kind. The petrous have already left and everything is very quiet. I remember the dream of Sayal Jalal Siva, (it refers to a dream about the departure of the Beloved) I do not Know when the Blessed Temple shall return to Ramleh. He may stay for a week.? So you see for the next few days we will be deprived of his beauty, although we may receive permission now and then to go and see him. In the afternoon a number of Persian young new who are on their way to Mecca came to see the Beloved is away I don't know what we will do with ourselves. We are like lost children. I frequent Mirza

Abul Fazl's house every afternoon. As of old he makes his oven tea and serves his guests. His historical talks are intensely interesting, now about India, again about Turkey. His religious dissertations are instructive. We all love him very much. ? {{p4}} ? A few quotations from recent Tablets may not be out of place: ? ?It is sometimes since that you are living in Yazd. Unquestionably you are the means of joy and happiness of the friends of God. The Afnoos are the cause of the ecstasy and joyousness of Abdul Baha. Continually do I remember them, and beg for those blessed souls especial Confirmations. At all time I have entreated toward the Kingdom of Abha, wishing for each infinite Protection and Grace,- so that each one of them may become like a shining stars in the horizon of Reality, like a shining sharp-edged sword they may divide the wrong from the rights, becoming the ensign of guidance and the Flag of the Supreme Concourse.? ? To another believers he writes: ? ?Praise be to God that in every Society than didst investigate the Reality and at last thou didst attained to the Center of Reality. Those society were like so many stages on the road but the Kingdom of Baha-ollah was the final goal and the object of the heart and the soul. Now be then thankful to God that thou didst reached the Center of Reality and at the termination of the journey thou didst find the Palace of His Highness the Desired One. Therefore, strive with heart and soul to become firm, steadfast and unshakable in this great Cause.? ? To another Bahai he reveals: ? O thou beloved daughter? Thy letter was received. It because the cause of great rejoicing for it spoke concerning thy faith and thy advancement {{p5}} toward the Kingdom of God. This light of Guidance which is enkindled in the glass of thy heart must become more luminous day unto day and illumine all directions. If thou shouldn't travel to Japan for the sake of guiding the souls unquestionably divine Confirmation shall descend upon thee. ? Convey on my behalf infinite kindness to and say to her: The doors of the Kingdom of God are open, the Call of the Lord of the Kingdom is raised, divine Graces are infinite and the splendors of the Sun of Reality have enlightened the East and the West. Under such circumstances negligence and carelessness are not permissible. With the utmost joy and acclamation thou must proclaim the Bounties of thy forgiving Lord.? ? To a lovely Persian poetess he writes: ? ?O thou who art attracted with the Fragrances of God! The eloquent and delightful Odes of that maid-servant of His Holiness Baha-ollah. ? May my life be a sacrifice to His friends were in the utmost sweetness and charm. Praise be to God that thou hast a poetic nature and thy tongue is inspired with exalted rhythmical thoughts. Therefore, compose then at all-time songs and anthems in the glorification and praise of His Holiness Baha-ollah who hath illumined the dark regions, hath conferred new life upon all created objects and infused a new spirit in the temple of the world.? ? To an Arab Bahai he says: ? ?That beloved {{p6}} both at home and abroad. With my heart tongue and pen I mention thee. As regards to my vicissitude it is ease in the path of God, trouble and trials are comfort, tests are the bounties and favors of Thy Lord. Therefore be thou not sad on account of my difficulties, occupations, burning and sufferings.? ? To another believer in Teheran he reveals: ? ?These days are like unto the days of Christ and the days of the Apostles. Unquestionably all the people, especially the leaders of religions and the mission arise shall loosen the tongue of ridicule and contritely about you and they will become the enemies of your souls on account of your love for His Holiness Baha-ollah and will strive to heap upon you every kind of persecution. You have undoubtedly read in the gospel how the Jewish Rabbis oppressed and maltreated the apostles. They were scorned and divided at every turn but after a while they defeated and vanquished and the banner of His Holiness Christ and He's Apostles were unfurled. All the flags were brought down but the Flag of the wronged and oppressed Peter and Paul was upraised. The Standard of the Roman Emperors are account of their opposition to the Cause of God was shattered to pieces. Consequently to all the people of the world including the enemies. Rest ye assured that ere long the Banner of Guidance shall over and over all the regions and the Harmony of the Bahais shall fill the Kingdoms of the East and the West.? This is our duty in this glorious Cause.? ? ? ? ? ????? ?

Dear Friends!

Mirza Moneer came down from Abou Kir, bringing to us the good news of the health of the Beloved. He left again after a few hours to be with him. Haji Niaz, Khorassani went also to Abou Kir to see him. He talked with them about the early events of the Cause and their wonderful effects in the future. They all returned in the evening loaded with the joyful fragrance of the Spirit of God whispering to them the charms of service and holiness. When Khasro returned from Abou Kir he brought with him a nice little letter in English from Mirza Moneer which I will incorporate it in my Diary and share its contents with our friends. He says in part:

?I am delighted to state that our Beloveds' health has been gradually changed for the last two days for the better. This little town, Abou Kir by name, with its narrow sandy streets, old huts and fellaheen tents and a few hundred inhabitants is still a remarkable place and a historical spot in both English and French annals; for here the memorable event transpired and astonished the world when Nelson, the Admiral of the English fleet bothered and put hors de Combat the French men of war and forced Napoleon to return to France and try to forget his dream of world conquest. As the town is built on the shore of the Mediterranean a fortification is still to be seen standing as a mark of that great event. I have just walked through all the dusty, narrow {{p8}} streets and am back to the hotel, taking only five minutes. The Arabs with their children were squatting in front of their shabby huts. It seems to me, however that I was walking a whole day, bearing in mind those dreadful events of the past. Later on I went out to buy a simple kind of vegetable for the Master but all my search availed nothing. Hence the Beloved wrote a short Tablet with his own hand to Khosro who was at the time in Ramleh to buy and bring it with himself with his dinner.

In the morning when I asked our Lord whether he had slept the night before he answered; "Just part of the night." This hotel where Our Lord is staying is near the station and there are many trains which leave daily for different parts of the country. It is about half an hour distance from Alexandria. It seemed very significant to me that our Lord the spreader of Peace and good will amongst all men is today upon the same ground that Napoleon, the Lord of war and militarism was treading about a century ago. What a vast difference between the two messages! The ambition of one was to become victorious through the sword of war, while the Ideal of the other is to summon the people to the Kingdom of Peace through the sword of love. The former was a hero of battle; the latter is the messenger of conciliation; one caused the eyes of many mothers to weep the tears of blood the other is conferring sunshine and happiness upon all the hearts.

This is a divine night. The full moon is shining with its soft, radiant, beams upon the desert, vast immeasurable, mysterious. The calm atmosphere is wonderful and its enchanting quietness grips the minds and entwines around the heart, filling it with an unalterable longing for the Ineffable Good and Sublime mystery. Where is the Ineffable Good? Who is the Sublime Mystery? How can we ever attain to one or solve the other? For a few minutes I pondered over this. Suddenly I saw Our Beloved Lord coming from the opposite direction. He was walking majestically in the Veranda. Contemplation was on his brow. Deep reflection was upon his countenance. He was all alone. Instantly I realized that all those who have turned their faces toward him, have focused their attention on him will attain to the Ineffable Good and shall finally solve the Sublime Mystery. For every one feels that the hearts of all the servants of God are open before him. His infinitely penetrating sights piercing through the veils of invitations longs to find an unoccupied room in the hearts of all mankind where he might dwell and shed the radiance of the Love of God all around. But if the hearts are engaged only in material pursuits of life and are filled with worldly desires and ambition the Spirit of Truth will return to its own holy station; but if a heart is severed and pure, clean and empty it will become a receptacle for the shining forth of the Sun of Reality. Thus it has been stated: "The heart of the faithful believer {{p10}} is the throne of God."

About one hundred supplications were received today and there are a package of Tablets to be signed by him."

Mirza Moneer has promised me to write a daily letter as long as the Master stays in Abou Kir, thus we will not be deprived entirely from the news. Judging from this one. I believe our brother will give us some interesting accounts of the Master and his Movements. I am glad he is with Him. Meanwhile the Beloved will have a complete rest. Today Mrs. Bede called on us and wanted to go to Alexandria to buy some beads, so I accompanied her through. Turkish bazar which is most interesting. Natives shops are on both sides of the narrow streets and the turbaned owners and sellers are all squatting. In the afternoon

Mrs. Stannard called and together we went to see Mirza Abul Fazl. Several other gentlemen were there, all listening to his afternoon, informal talks. He does not have any set of speeches but the spirit of the occasion and the need of the persons who call give him a key to speak on any subject which is of special interest and benefit to the hearers. After half an hour stay, listening on the incidents of the life of the great Persian philosopher Al Buruni who have written more than 50 volumes, the most wonderful amongst them being on the ancient religions of India, we returned to the Hotel. Here I told her a great deal about the Beloved's experience in California and how the believers are all happy and the spirit of sunshine.

As our base coming to an end, tomorrow we must leave this house but we do not know where we are going. We have not rented yet any house as it is not definitely decided whether the Beloved will go to Haifa or stay here. However by tomorrow noon other unexpected developments may come up.

I will bring this latter to a close by a few quotations from the Master's recent Tablet:

"The quintessence of the matter is this: with the greatest effort one must arise to spread the Teachings of Baha-ollah, the teachings which are the very spirit of this age and they consist of the oneness of the world of humanity, love towards all mankind and other principles which I promulgated in London and America. Rest ye assured that the confirmations of God shall descend and the spirit of the heavenly love will be breathed in the hearts. If ye act in such wise and show steadfastness, ye will be ignited like unto the lamps in the assemblages of the world."

In another he says:

"Convey my infinite love and kindness to __ and say:"One must summon the people to the Kingdom of God. Silence and speechlessness is not at all permitted."

To another friend in Japan he writes;

"O thou herald of the Kingdom of God! The contents of thy latter written to __ was perused. Thank thou God that in that country thou hast become assisted to raise the call of the Kingdom and like unto the candle than hast become ignited and art diffusing the light of guidance. Endeavor as much {{p12}} as thou caust to create a spiritual awakening in Tokyo and the Flag of the Kingdom be hoisted. Turn thy face to the Blessed Perfection and beg for heavenly confirmations and be confident that victory and triumph shall descend upon the uninterruptedly."

In Another Tablet revealed years ago he says:-"O thou who art thirsty for the Salsabil of divine. Bestowals! The acquirement of a part of the Gifts and Graces of God depends upon ability, worthiness and capability. Man will attain to them through effort, exertion and diligence. Another part is pure bounty and absolute mercy and generosity on the part of God and man will not attain to that supreme favor and most great gift through his own striving and tireless work. Divine guidance, being vested with the privilege of the Knowledge of God and the recognition of the True One is Absokute Mercy and Pure Generosity. This Glorious sun will not arise and will not flood the regions with its glorious lights through human power, and human might. That is why it is said; "This is through the Mercy of God, He giveth unto whomsoever He willeth." It is also said; "He specializes whosoever He desireth for His Mercy. Likewise it is said:- "Thou art not guiding those whom thou lovest but God is guiding whomsoever He willeth." Therefore, O thou who art guided by the light of the guidance of God! Thank God that thou hast obtained such a Grace and hast partaken of such a food, Blessed art thou and again blessed art thou."

{{p13}}

Dear Friends!

And yet wonders never cease! The Master is back! Our hearts are palpitating with the thrills of joy. Again he is in our midst. We could not bear to be away from him, even for the distance of half an hour. He is the light of our hearts, the joy of our souls, the radiance of our lives and the rainbow of our horizons. If he leaves us, in his separation we droop and know not what to do with ourselves. Now praise be to God! he did not stay away a long time. I was thinking that if he stays several day I will ask permission to go and refresh my spirit through his kind and heavenly Presence!

Early this morning before anybody was awake the Master Knocks at the door of Moneer's room and surprised him by declaring that he is going to leave in five minutes and he should hurry and pack up the bagger before the train leaves. Well! he had to get busy, for the Beloved, having given him this command was on his way toward the station. All the trainmen and conductors were upon their chatter of idle talks. Having a bouquet of flowers in his hands he distributed it amongst them, inquired about the health of each and made them were trying to precede each other in serving him although nobody had told them to do so. The divine dignity of his attitude, the majestic bearing of his walk, the inmate freshness of his manner and the contagious smile of his lips mark him as separate and {{p14}} and distinct from the rest of mankind. I tell you it was indeed a joyful moment when Mirza Mooner entered the house with the glad-tiding of the return of the Beloved on his lips. The face of every ne was immediately wreathed with smile of happiness. For the moment we forgot all about our departure from our present abode but we had to come back to earth and attend to our packing. It is arranged for the present that we may move in the other house which belonged to the pilgrims but now it is empty, pending further decision on the part of the Beloved. There is some semi-serious talk about his going to Haija to pass this winter there. A few of the old believers think the conditions in Turkey are not stable and his return to Haija may give the authorities another chance to renew his prisons. Thus they urge upon him not to go to Haija. However by the 24th insist we will know which direction the wind blowing. The Master irrespective of any personal advice or consideration will no doubt act as the spirit leads him and directs him. He has the benefit of the Cause at heart and wherever he goes and whatever he does is based upon divine wisdom the purport and motif of which is not clear to us. We have observed in the past and knows this to be an irrefutable fact.

In short, we made all due preparation and at 2 o'clock into our house which is quote near, just around the corner. In our court house these are many palm trees, bearing long cluster of dates and having been ripened they are red and ready to be cut off for market. Our present landlady is a Greek girl on her father's side and {{p15}} Italian on her mother's side. She has born in Alexandria, has never r been in Europe, is a family good painter and speaks fluently Greek, Italian, French, English and Arabic. Generally speaking, you find a larger number of linguists in Egypt than in many parts of the world, because here is the meeting-place of the East and the West and the confluence of widely-shattered streams of races and nationalities.

At 3'oclock Mrs. Stannard came to our new house to see how we are situated. After staying awhile she expressed the desire to see the Master and together we went out. When we arrived he was just awakened and was standing near the table making a glass of lemonade for himself. He welcomed Mrs. Stanard and started to prepare another glass for. 'I did not find any difference between the weather of Abou Kir and here, therefore I preferred to return he said, "Besides, this there were nobody there and the manager was anxious to shut the door of his hotel and go away, for this was at the very end of the season." Then he sat down and started to write a Tablet with his own blessed Hand. Mrs. Stanard told him that he is going to engage her cabin for the 28 of November for India. Without raising his head and continuing his writing he said: "Thou seest that although I am not feeling quite well I work from morning till evening and have not a moment of rest. Thou must likewise, walk in my footsteps and forget everything saw Baha-ollah; that nothing in this world may prevent thee from {{p16}} from the service of the Cause and that in this trip thou mayst ignite such a fire that it may not become extinguished." While he was giving her further instructions word was brought in that Constantine Teuntunji Correspondent of "Abram" desires to meet the Beloved and receive an interview for his daily Journal published in Cairo. He was conducted in the reception room and after a few minutes the Master entered and greeted the gentleman with a wealth of oriental courtesy. He spoke first about Baha-ollah's imprisonment in the penal prison town of Acca and how the first few years the conditions were well night unbearable. "We were thrown into the barrack with no permission to have intercourse with the outside world!" The Correspondent could not believe in such a cruel treatment. "Do you mean the barrack?" he exclaimed incredibly. "The barrack where the criminals are imprisoned? Do you mean that? How is that? What was your crime?" he asked indignantly against the tyrants. "Oh! Our crime was the proclamation of religious liberty, to worship God according to our own hearts, to spread universal Peace, to educate public opinion for moral and civic uplift of the nations, the equality of the sexes, universal education so that no ignorant boy and girl remain in the country, the development of spiritual susceptibilities, rectitude, uprightness honor and righteousness. These were a few of our crimes." "And did they put you in prison for these things?" he asked. "Yes. They were very better against us. They desired to do {{p17}} away with us but in a nice way. The climate and the weather of Acca were abominable and in sending us to this living tomb they had in mind the idea that in 3 months we will be exterminated by the common enemy, but God intervened and frustrated their plans. While we were in the barrack an important meeting of the Pashas (here he named their names one after another which opened the eyes of the correspondent) was held in Turkey. They all agreed upon the fact that soon there will be left no trace from us, that the young plant of the Bahai Cause will be completely uprooted and its fragrant flowers soon withered. But today each one of those Pashas is afflicted with military or civil punishments, they are all scattered to the winds but the Bahai Cause became triumphant and with the greatest freedom I am living in Egypt. The events of the time have clearly shown us whose Cause was the spirit of the age." Then the correspondent asked about the war which has been waged by the Balkan Allies against Turkey." War he said emphatically "is the work of Satan, the devilish instrument of hell. Nations in various ages have resorted to different excuses to slaughter their fellowmen and crown their heads with the bloody crown of so called victory which we may call it defeat. In the past religions-wars were repeatedly waged on the ground that this is Mohamadan that is Christian, this Hindu, that is a Jew etc. This was a pretend appealed to the religions emotions of mankind. Another excuse has been and is that of country, or patriotism, this is France, that is German, here is England and {{p18}} that is India. Let my country advance at the expense of another, Let me do something to grab a piece of somebody's else land. Let the commerce of my people develop while the other is ruined! The wars are brought about by Kings, politicians and diplomats. The poor people of all countries are united together by an invisible bond of brotherhood. They have nothing to fight for, they have no seen each other. But these leaders of the bastions live in their palaces, are surrounded with luxuries, they walk for recreation in fairy gardens, they give royal entertainment. They breathe the purest air in their summer palaces. And if they are a little wearied of life they prefer the rhythmic the nations of the waltz in the ballroom rather than the stern realities of the battlefield. The dreamy music of the drawing room is more enjoyed by them than the stirring march of battle where human lives are used as pawns and the field crimsoned with blood. If they mean what they say, let them go to war, let them leave the indolent life of council chambers and chancelleries and come out in the open to face each other in this brute struggle they set up from behind the closed doors. If they have any grievances against each other, why should they marshal huge armies against each other who are entirely innocent, let them settle their disputed in the liest moment their consciences dictate to them. Another excuse for war is that of race. This is black, that is yellow. You are white, he is red, and then they fall on each other's lives instead of each {{p19}} other's neck. What utter stupidity! What sheer ignorance! These are all flimsy excuses and they stand neither the test of reason or religion. They are pure fictions of disordered minds and interested parties. While in reality we all seek to worship the one Supreme God who is the Father of us all. He is the Shepherd and we are his flock. The whole world is one home and mankind are the numbers of one family. In the estimation of God there are not many race but one race and that is humanity. Therefore, the motives for all these wears are superficial and baseless. Countries are devastated, villages are razed to the ground, thousands of men, women and children are killed for the sake of these shadowy imaginations. When I was in America they asked me whether Turkey will be able to word off the defeat inflicted on her by the Balkan Allies. I answered she cannot do it, because she is one and they are four. The ads were too much a against her. In a way she was surprised and attacked on four sides, defeat was certain in the face of the combined consolidation of the four States, but I said also that as soon as the Allies achieve their aim they will disagree on the division of spoils and the erstwhile friends and brothers drew sword to shed each other's blood and as you see now all these predictions came to pass...Your daily paper"Al Abram is a progressive journal and one of the best dailies id Egypt. God has sent His prophets and messengers to wipe away these prejudices from amongst mankind. May He assist {{p20}} your paper to carry on this work, that it may become a wonderful instrument for the propagation of Knowledge and peace, that it may anguish the regions of darkness and teach that all the people are the sheep of God, that they must love each other. The differences which exist in the physiognomy of men, although substantial an extraneous do not lead to war, then why should the differences based entirely upon human imagination cause bloodshed and carnage? Is this worthy of the station of man? The sheep, the doves, although they may belong to different countries and have various colors do not light. If you gather them all in one pasture or at the top of one tree they will associate with each other with perfect intimacy and love. Then are we less than these domestic animals? Why should we ever create any imaginary differences between ourselves? Why should we build wells of iron and steel with such airy materials as evil thoughts, malice, race hatred? Religion is the Cause of fellowship, not stoniness, the motif of ideal communication and not separation, the basis of complete union and not ill-feeling, the foundation of the solidarity of human race and not backbiting. I hope you will work day and night to make people understand these divine principles."

{{p21}}

Dear friends!

Yesterday and today I have felt a greater joy of the nearness of the Master because I have been permitted to stay in His Presence a long time and thus imbibe again the spirit of joyousness and and youthfulness which he alone is able to impart. I like to do something to make all those who are around me that I am very happy, that I love to see everyone a fountain of joy and beatitude. A Baha'i must be always happy; his happiness must be infectious. He must live above sorrow and misery. From the height of imperishable glory he must look upon the world and its conditions as ephemeral, as the of a fly or the grain of a dust. The Master of happiness is with us, the Mystery of joy is living, the fountain of ecstasy is flowing, the tree of serenity is green and fruitful, the nightingale of exaltation is singing, the rose of delight is fragrant and the angels of acclamation are descending! Why should we be brokenhearted. Let us exhilarate those who are fallen, cheer up those who are heavy laden, sympathize with those who are sorrowful. In the glowing words of one of our distinguished brothers in the Cause. "The mass of men are worried and confused; they cry for peace. They are unhappy; they long for joy. They are dissatisfied with mere material pleasures; they pray for something that is satisfying. They feel the chains of self centered living; they long for release; their inner self is a prison, they would exchange it for a palace." Here {{p22}} lies our mission, my brothers and sisters! Let us pull up our sleeves and gird up the loin of endeavor, rush toward the area of activity and try to alleviate the ills of humanity with the words of Baha El Abha, the teachings of the Blessed Perfection and the Exhortations of Abdul Baha. According to the measure of our efforts are we judged in this Glorious Cause. The word of "Baha'i" is meaningless unless we are clothed with these divine attributes. Through our effort the sparkling sea of sympathy must become tempestuous and the high-waves of tenderness dash to pieces the vessels of hard-heartedness and cold indifference. In all our dealings with men let us be prompted by generous motives and unselfish reasons, for one ray of kindness will melt a frozen immensity; one drop of the honey of compassion will counteract a pound of deadly poison; one fragrance of the love will dispel all the stench odor of hatred; a whisper of amity will drown the high sounding noise of enmity and the little small voice once heeded will establish a divine equilibrium in the life of man.

Do your work without turning your head to the right or to the left. What do we care whether people praise us for it blame. The good pleasure of our Lord is the greatest reward. Let us first create that genuine equality of happiness within every fiber of our beings and then go into the sorrowing world. Let us uplift mankind not only with smiles {{p23}} but with liberal, social and philanthropic activities.

This morning the Beloved sent Mirza Ahdor-Raoul for me. Without waiting one moment I was on my feet. He had just received his mail. He handed me my letters and asked for news from America. Mr. Albert R. Vail of Urbana, Illinois had written a most significant and eloquent article on the "Dynamic Powers of the Baha'i Movement", sending a copy for the approval of the Master. Mr. Vail is the Minister of a Unitarian Church and desires his article to appear in one of the magazines. The Master told me to go and translate it into Persian. I had the rough copy ready for the afternoon and took it to him. He asked Haji Niaz and others come in and listen as I read the translation. "Consider" he would say “This is written by a Minister!” He most pleased with its contents and while he was drinking a glass of water - symbolic of the giving of knowledge and confirmation - he dictated the following tablet for the author who has made him very happy today:

He is God!

O thou son of the Kingdom! The article that thou has written was perused. There is no doubt that thou has composed this article through the confirmations of the Kingdom; for many of its contents are evidence of the descent of the invisible inspirations. Although its value is not known for the present yet it will {{p24}} become evident and manifest in the future. There are many authors and their written works are spread in all parts of the world. However thy article is the crown of all their compositions; because their books belong to the world of materiality but thy composition belongs to the world of the Kingdom. Theirs is an earthly melody but thine is a heavenly harmony. Through the lapse of centuries and cycles all their works will be forgotten but the fume and the circulation of this article of thine will increase day unto day and in the future ages and periods it will be read in all tongues. Therefore, thank thou God that thou art assisted in the writing of this article. Publish and circulate it.

Upon thee be Baha El Abha!

(Sig) Abdul Baha Abbas

While the Master was dictating Mirza Mahsen came in and said Mrs. De Bous and her little girl of 9 yrs old with Mrs. Stanard have come to see him. After having slept for one hour he felt refreshed and in good humor. He was dressed in his beautiful cream-white coat and with his white turban and white beard he looked wonderful, a picture to the drawn by the pen of a Michael Angel or Raphael. Those men with their rare finesse painted at their very best an imaginary picture but today the living Spiritual Being is amongst us, teaching again the sons of men the ay and the truth.

{{p25}}

As soon as the Master entered the reception room the center of attraction was the little Mona. He took her into his arms, kissed her on both cheeks and started to converse with her. “Art thou a French or an English?” he asked. Being shy she did not answer. “If the people ask thee whether thou art English or French, tell them I am a Baha’i. Once upon a time there was a shepherd who shepherded the sheep of Hossein Ali. He was very simple man. He could neither read nor write. His neighbors would come and ask him, ‘Art thou a , a Jew or a Christian.’ He did not know how to answer them, but a moment of reflection he would say, I don’t really understand your questions but all that I know I am the shepherd of Hossein Ali.’

Thou art my daughter, my dear little daughter. I want to slap you” and with great gentleness he patted his cheeks and back. Everybody was of course amused and laughed. Mrs. Stanard had a long from Mrs. Rosenberg giving the progress of the Cause in London. Mrs. Lewis, the Minister of the Church in which the Master spoke has offered the hall of the Church to the Baha'is to hold their meetings. "This is indeed very significant and miracle. The believers must have the utmost consideration for him and show toward him true love. When a minister shows such broadmindedness we must praise him for his liberalism and tolerance. I hope he will be assisted with divine aid."

{{p26}}

Some are asked about China's future. He said: "The Chinese civilization is very old and heavy with age. Once they start on the right path, they shall reach their destination very quickly. Like the Japanese they are industrious and intelligent." To Mrs. De Bous he said: "You must give your daughter a Baha'i education so that she may become an excellent teacher of the Cause. She must receive a spiritual education. Then she will make extraordinary progress. Religious teachings are essential for the proper development of the mind and the spirit. If religious instruction is not given to the children they will grow heedless and forget moral susceptibilities. They will laugh at all moral obligations. The children are like unto green branches. As long as the branch is wet you can train it in whatever way you think best but once the branch is dried up you cannot do anything with it. If you want straighten it, it will break." Then somehow questions were asked about Germany. He said: The future of Germany is very bright. The German people on the whole are religious. They are very noble and progressive. The Cause of God will advance amongst such a good-hearted people. The star of the religion of Baha-ollah will arise from the horizon of that country. The banner of universal Peace will waive over the German people, to the contrary notwithstanding. They love peace and desire to maintain their amicable relations with all the nations."

{{p27}}

Again he spoke with the little Mona: "Dost thou love thy parent?" "Yes." "Which one do you like better? Thy mother or thy father?" "I love both equally" "Bravo! Well said! Now tell me dost thou love better Baha-ollah or thy mother?" This was a difficult question. She waited a moment and finally said with much emphasis: "Baha-ollah." Then he hugged her in his arms and kissed her. Then the question was turned upon one of the western nations who sends yearly 15,000 pilgrims to the holy land to visit the Holy Sepulcher. The Master told several side-splitting stories about the jokes which are played every year upon these simple, innocent pilgrims who come really with an ardor of faith and enthusiasm. Oh! He made us laugh! Sometimes in the future I will write these stories for the benefit of the friends. Then together we walked toward the shore. It was a very beautiful sunset and we enjoyed it very much, especially after such an exhilarating talk by the Beloved. We returned then to the hotel and on the veranda we had an interesting talk about the Cause. The Master sent for me again. He was dictating Tablets to Mirza Moneer. I read to him some of the petitions from America and he revealed answers. Now walking and again sitting he dictated Tablets till 10 o'clock and there were no one else in the room. Toward the end he revealed four Tablets in Arabic and he chanted them in his most musical voice, creating an atmosphere of spirituality and enveloped unto this Holy atmosphere we left their house.###October 17th 1913 Ramleh, Egypt

Dear friends!

To translate a few Tablets is better than my own trite and uninteresting writings, thus I will share this joy with you: -

“O ye spiritual friends! Thank ye God His Highness the Almighty who has granted ye such a gift and conferred such a Bestowal! He enkindles the splendor of the Most Great Guidance and burned away the veils of superstitions. He destroyed the foundation of strangeness and laid the basis of oneness. He caused the illumination of the eyes and made the ears to hearken the melody and the harmony of the Supreme Concourse and listen to the Divine Call, to such an extent that the heart and the spirit cried out, ‘yea, yea!’. This is through the generosity of His Highness the Incomparable One who hath suffered this Imprisoned Servant to be engaged with you mentioning and occupied with your remembrance with the utmost joy and fragrance. Thank ye God for this! Verily this is a great Bounty! Verily this is a great favor! (Sig) Abdul Baha Abbas.”

Another Tablet: -

O ye friends of His Highness the Merciful! A hundred thousand glad-tidings are descending at every moment from the Kingdom of Abha and thousands of the starts of Bestowals are shining at every second from the horizon of Providence. But the heedless souls like unto adamant rock do not receive any benefit from the Grace of God and the inferior realities are shameless from the Bounties of the Superior world.

{{p29}}

The crow and the gnat will never become the royal eagle and the owl and the bat will not take the form of the sweet nightingale. Therefore you who have taken a share and a portion from this Bestowal and have received an inexhaustible pack from this most Great Favor like unto the wine-adoring cup-bearers must become intoxicated and taking into your hands this Divine Chalice may cause to drink the immortal wine those who are the seekers of the Covenant of “Am I not your Lord?” and inform the longing ones who desire to see the Beauty of Merciful with the sweetness and Charm of the Ancient Countenance;”

Another Tablet: -

O thou who hast inhaled the Fragrance of faithfulness from the rose-garden of the Bestowal of God!

By God, the True One, verily the Prophecies of the Books and the predictions of the Tablets have come to pass and become manifest, like unto the manifestation of the lights of the Sun and are shining upon all the countries and regions. Glory be unto my Lord, El-Abha! Verily the Splendor of success shine forth upon the Kingdom of humanity, the garden of Holiness is perfumed, the nightingales of Affinity are singing melodiously, the meadow of significances are adorned, the Paradise of Grandeur is decorated, the Houris of realities are evidenced, the goblets of attraction are given around, the hearts are gladdened, the souls are rejoiced, the spirits are exhilarated, the minds are dilated, the faces are illumined and the temples {{p30}} of sanctification are inspired. But the heedless ones are in manifest darkness and the agitators are in great pride!"

Another Tablet: -

O thou real friend! At this time Abdul Baha in the city of Alexandria is engaged in the mentioning of the friends and day and night with the utmost supplication and entreaty I beg the confirmation and assistance from the Threshold of the Lord of the Kingdom; so that the friends may cooperate with each other and assist each other in the establishment of unity in this material world; to such an extent that every stranger may become a friend, the remote one become near and the unknown known. In the world of existence there is no greater harm than difference and no more useful object than unity. The Beauty of the Almighty caused the appearance of the oneness of the world of humanity on this earth. But Alas! that the inhabitants of the world have deprived themselves on account of a few from the most great sea. The Blessed Perfection for more than 50 years accepted most severe hardships, passed His days in exile and imprisonment, chains and letters; - so that the Tabernacle of the oneness of the world of humanity may be pitched in the center of the world and the Flag of unity may become unfurled. Undoubtedly the hosts of the people of the world shall not withstand in the path of the most {{p31}} great Cause. I hope that ere long this Flag may be upraised and the basis of strangeness may be raged to ground and the world of mankind may become the paradise of Abha!..."

Here is a supplication: -

"O God! O God! Cause me to drink from the cup of Thy Bestowal! Illumine my face with the light of guidance! Make me firm in faithfulness and steadfast in Thy Ancient Covenant! Suffer me to become one of Thy sincere servants. Open before my face the doors of prosperity. Prepare for me the means of livelihood! Give me my bread through channels over which I have no control - Thy heavenly treasures; grant me the power to turn my face toward Thy Merciful Countenance and be faithful in Thy Cause. O Thou the Clement and the Compassionate! Verily Thou art Gracious to those who are firm and steadfast in Thy strong and impregnable Covenant! Praise be to god, the Lord of the world!"

This was another beautiful day in our calendar for early morning I was present in the Holy Presence of our Beloved. Mrs. De Bous and her child were going to leave for Cairo and so they came to say farewell. He told her: "You must leave and conduct yourself in Cairo in such a manner and characterize thyself with such attributes that when people come in contact with thee they may feel thy spiritual influence, that if they are earthly they may become heavenly, if they are blind, they may find sight, if they are dead they may become quickened, if they are material they may become spiritual.

Speak to them on divine subjects. Tell them that this world is ephemeral, it is not worth human attachment. Man must seek after eternal joy, he must obtain everlasting life and become in the image and likeness of God. Speak about the Cause with thy Western friends. Teach thy pupils the beauty and charm of the spiritual music, the harmonies that exalt the spirit and enables one's thoughts. But when the words are the expressions of our deeds, then it will be light upon light... When you write to your mother in Paris give her my greeting and tell her: Thou has made me very happy with thee. Thou has become the cause of my joy. I shall never forget thee and beg from the Kingdom of God that thou must sit upon the throne of everlasting glory..." He spoke a great deal on this and then took a piece of Russian gold out of his pocket and gave it to Mona as a souvenir. He caressed her very much and told her mother, "This girl must become spiritual, divine and heavenly. Spiritually illumined she may become a great teacher in the Cause of God and invite innumerable souls to the Kingdom of Abha."

After an hour we received the letters from the West, especially from Germany, a petition from Stuttgart believers made him much happy. My goodness! He gave me such a hard slap on the face to express his joy! For the last two days he has been showering these graces upon me. How I love to have all of you to share them with me. I am sure you {{p33}} will enjoy them. Then he said: "Always bring me such good news! These news give me a new happiness because I see the souls have arisen to teach the Cause of God, to diffuse the Fragrances of God, are detached from the world and its alluring conditions have hoisted the Banner of Baha El Abha and are spreading the glorious signs of the Merciful One. These news give me spiritual delight, heavenly bliss and bestow to my heart ease and tranquility. Look, look," and he extended his hands towards the West, his face wreathed with longing souls. What relation exists between Germany and Persia! Notwithstanding this the fire of the Love of God is enkindled in their hearts, the glowing light of the Kingdom of Baha-ollah is visible on their faces, the rays of the Sun of Truth are emanating from their eyes." Then while walking to and fro, as though intoxicated with the of joy he dictated a wonderful Tablet for them. Till noon he dictated many holy Tablets and then we left the house our cups filled with the essence of the spirit of revelation.

In the afternoon the Beloved called on Mirza Abul Fazl and spoke about some of the phases of the life of which he was being there. From there he resorted to the hotel and met our American pilgrims. He's talk to them was on the physical and spiritual talk. Then we went back home to rest and more saw him that night.###October 18th 1913 Ramleh, Egypt

Dear friends!

The news that the Master is going to Haifa is gaining the ground and visible signs are becoming evident. Mirza Jalal, the daughter of the Master and the greatest holy Deaf who have been passing a few days in Cairo have returned and preliminary preparations are going on as a result of our approaching departure from Ramleh. When I think of Mount Carmel and the holy atmosphere of that sacred spot my heart flies toward it. I have no doubt that the Master will recuperate entirely in Haifa, for this is the best season there. All the country will be green and wild flowers covering the fields. A number of the believers hearing about the impending departure of the Beloved have come over from Cairo and each person had a private interview with him, coming out of his room with smile on their lips and light on their faces. Each person, most naturally, believing in his heart that the Master was most gracious and kind to him alone and that he loves him more than anyone else in the Master have no doubt realized these two effects upon the people who go into his Presence. However, each one brought out the good news that the Beloved is feeling well, is happy, has been joking with them and laughing. In the afternoon he was in the Hotel Victoria speaking unto two prominent Arabs and then with our {{p35}} American friends on the various stations of life.

During the day many Tablets were revealed to all parts of the world. Although yesterday I translated many quotations from Tablets many years ago today I will give you a few brief quotations from the recent Tablets:

“Thy letter was received. It contained good news and that is: thou hast guided to the Kingdom of Abha one new soul. Today those souls who have arisen to guide the people are assisted with the Configurations of the Kingdom of Abha, for the Call of the Kingdom of God is the magnet to draw heavenly confirmations.” From this extract you can draw your own conclusion how important it is today to herald the glad tidings and invite the souls to the heavenly Banquet. We must keep always this question of teaching the Cause before our attention, but other affairs make us forget the supreme importance of this one universal. Bahai law. Every Bahai is a herald of the Kingdom of Abha, a promoter of the religion of God, a unifier of the hearts, a brilliant star in the horizon of sanctity. He must of a necessity be and live these things before he cannot put any claim to the name Bahai.

In another Tablet he says: The Spiritual Assembly (board of consultation, working committee or other names given to it in America is not the House of Justice. It is only a spiritual gathering the Cause of God, spreading the Fragrances of God. If the believers on the whole arise to do this the existence of {{p36}} such a board will be not incumbent or necessary. The aim is to teach the Cause of Today that which is the most urgent of all affairs is to promulgate the Religion of God. We must arise in this service a new light, this dark earth may become illumined, these magnified dead may obtain a new life, these negligent hearts may become aware and mindful and freeing themselves from the nether world they may soar toward the realm of night.”

In another Tablet he says:

O thou real friends. Thy letter was received. Thou hast written concerning the unity and concord, the affinity and communication, the fellowship and attraction amongst the believers of God and how these qualities are made manifest in their dealings toward each other. It is befitting that I may sacrifice my life for such news: for this glad-tiding.

I hope that the results of the vicissitudes and the trials, tests and sufferings, persecutions, forborn by the Wronged One of the regions and the martyrdom of His Holiness the Bab may not become wasted. When a just and fair person thinks of the oppression heaped upon the Blessed Perfection he will never harbor in his mind any idea of rest, comfort, will not entertain {{p37}} any thought or idea and will not chase after any life or immortality. He will make himself totally evanescent and will have no other hope save self-sacrifice at the Altar of Love. In brief, My point is this: These days are the days of gathering in the fruits of the persecutions and sufferings of the last seventy years; so that the martyrdom of the martyrs, the self-sacrifice of the friends and the sufferings of the Blessed Perfection may impart results. At such a juncture, each one of us must become the essence of sanctity and like unto a bright candle we may illumine the world of humanity. This is the day of severance, this is the day of attraction and this is the day of self-sacrifice! If on such blessed Perfection that it is regret after regret and loss after loss.”

In another Tablet he reveals:

“The purpose is the Everlasting Glory of the friends and the heavenly sublimity of the believers, that is, to teach the Cause of God, to spread the Fragrance of God and to promote the Word of God. I hope you may become assisted and confirmed therein; then you will become a member of the congregation of the elect and a light in the Divine Assemblage.”

Thus from there many Tablets we can faintly understand the importance of the command. “Teach, Teach the Cause.”

During this coming winter, through the exertion and unanimity of the believers the Bahai Cause must advance extraordinarily. God has so willed and the time is at hand. We must not let this golden opportunity slip out of our hand. We have all the means and we must strive to teach new souls, organize new meetings, awaken new sleepy ones and let the new follow the new. We have partaken of all the divine Favors we must ask others to receive a portion. We have quaffed from the fountain of the Knowledge of God we must cause others to drink. We are intoxicated with the wine of the spiritual wisdom, we must let others come and take a share. The truth of God is not a monopoly, neither the Love of the Merciful is a trust nor are we as trust magnates. Like unto the pure air it circulated throughout all the awareness and vistas of the human life and similar unto the sun it shines upon all the contingent beings. The rights of the Kingdom of God are not patented. They are distributed without distinction of race or nationality. So the Bahais must likewise try their utmost to divide with their fellow men these divine treasures, otherwise they will be taken away from them. Both materially and spiritually the more we give, the greater will be our capital, the more we teach the better will be our own conviction and the more we herald the principles of Baha-ollah, the greater will be our assurance. ###October 19th 1913 Ramleh, Egypt

Dear Friends!

Having not seen the Beloved today and not being present at the various interviews I cannot write anything or report his words but I know he has been feeling well, his health improving, that the pilgrims and Mrs. Stanard have seen him during the day, the latter 3 times and that he took a long drive in the afternoon with Mirza Ali Akbar talking with him all the while about the Cause. In the evening he went out with Haji Niaz to call on a prominent Pasba.

Personally for the last 3 days I have not been feeling well, a strong headache pursuing me like one of the old Furies and trying its best to attack me so hard in order that I may fall if not on the floor, at least on the bed. But I have been meeting the onslaught of the enemy by counter-revolution-reducing any diet to a few glasses of warm water daily; eating and drinking nothing else. This I have found is quite a maneuver; the result is that although I have brought myself to a starvation basis, the pertinacious enemy quite reluctantly is getting its hold loose, leaving me in the possession of my head minus ache.

A few more Bahais have just arrived from Cairo and as our house cannot hold all of them they are living in the hotel Orient near Bacos station and take their heard with us. A more jolly crowd {{p40}} of men-old and young - one seldom sees anywhere else. One of these new arrivals Mirza Abul Gasem Galestaine of Shiraj, hunged around my neck for more than two minutes kissing my cheeks and of cause I inflicted the same punishment on him. Finally the amused friends had to come and separate us; so that he may go around and perform the same oriental ceremony. This is a custom which is kept intact amongst the men in the East but if the company is large the poor new comer must consume a solid half an hour before he is through with this charming custom.

In order to have a few choice dishes of the spiritual food I will transtate again a few extract from the recent Tablets revealed by our Beloved;

“O thou who art thirsty for the fountain of guidance! Thank God that thou hast reached to the fountain head of guidance and quaffed from the Salsabul of the Love of God. Thou wert a longing nightingale, therefore thou has found a way to the divine rosegarden. Thou wert an adoring moth thou didst behold the lights of the lamp of the Almighty. I hope from the Favors of Hid Holiness Baha-ollah that thou mayst become the cause of the guidance of others.”

Regarding the Star of the West he says to one of its editors:

{{p41}}

“Shrine most strenuously that such Tablets articles and news be published in its columns so that they may become the cause of the attraction of the hearts of the seekers and conducive to the happiness of the heart of the friends.”

A beautiful Tablet was revealed to Sardar Umbroosingh of Majitha living now in Budapest and who was with our Beloved often during his stay in that city:

He is God!

O thou Sardar of the spiritual Army!

The letter that thou hast written to his favor Mirza Abmad was recieved. Do not sat thatit was a letter but a muse - diffusing aroma; because the sweet fragrant of the Love of God was inhaled from its contents. During the days that I was in Budapest thou worth my companion and associate. That fellowship and love will never be forgotten. It is my hope that the results of that fellowship may become very great in the future because it was in the utmost sincerity and unity. In all occasions we were engaged in the conversation concerning the advent of the Sun of Reality. Thou hast complained and expressed hopelessness on account of the negligence, blindness and deafness of the people, become than not hopeless for all behold there are many hopes before us. After the darkness there will appear {{p42}} many suns. The beginning of every undertaking is difficult but once the foundation is laid the structure will be constructed with the utmost of facility. Consequently, show ye firmness and steadfastness and be ye occupied in the diffusion of the rays of Reality. Then rest ye assured that the angel of the Kingdom shall support you and the confirmation of the lights of the Kingdom shall shine continually.

Upon thee be Baha El Abha!

(Sig) Abdul Baha Abha!

Another Tablet to Mr. Moore of Budapest may be of interest:

He is God!

O those real friend! “Moore” in the Persian language is “ant” but I hope this Moore may become the lion of the forest and the eagle of the apex of prosperity and success. Divine Power shall assist. All the powers of the world are limited but the Power of the Kingdom of God is unlimited. All the dominions shall at last be animated but the Dominion of the Kingdom shall exist forever and ever.

Therefore I beg from the Favors of His Holiness Baha-ollah to confer upon thee the power of the Kingdom so that than mayst become able to guide the souls, suffer the people of defects to attain to the degree of perfection, {{p43}} giving sight to the blind and the spirit of eternal life to the dead.

Mrs. Hamford Ford, the authoress of the Oriental Rose who is now in London and will be on the continent during this winter is honored with the following wonderful Tablet:

"O thou heavenly daughter!

Thy detailed letter written to his favor. Mirza Ahmad was perused. It is very acceptable and seasonable that thou hast taken this voyage. The apostles of His Holiness Christ were always travelling and calling the people to the Kingdom of God. Consequently, walk thou in their footsteps. Travel thou to every country and wider all circumstances raise the Call of the Kingdom of God. Mankind like unto the children are satisfied with water and clay and love to play with their play-things. Their ambitions are very inferior. Praise be to God that thou hast a lofty ambition (magnanimity); therefore, arise in calling the people to the Kingdom of God. This Call shall fill the East and the West and will continue throughout all ages and cycles. It is endless. That is why in this day, the wise and perceiving souls exalt their ideal and engage in heralding the Kingdom of God.

Upon thee be Baha El Abha signed Abdul Baha Abbas.

To another believer he writes:

{{p44}}

O thou seekers of Truth! All the people are submerged in the ocean of superstitions and know nothing of the appearance of the Sun of Reality. As thou wert a lover of Reality, praise God that thou hast attained to it and took a portion and a shore from the Divine Favors."

To another he writes:

"Thou must undoubtedly be very happy because thou art confirmed in teaching the Cause of Thy Forgiving Lord. How many philosophers and Professors are living today but God has crowned thy head with the diadem of Guidance; so that thou mayst herald the people of the city to the Divine Kingdom and become the cause of the guidance of many souls. I have not forgotten thee nor will I ever forget thee."

Thus I may go on indefinitely translating these words of light and life which are falling from the lips of the Manifestation of the Covenant in this Glorious age. The whole world feels the vibrations of this new age, new possibilities are becoming manifest new avenues, are being opened new science are discovered, new teachings are powered down from the heaven of the divine will new souls are arising to serve the Cause of their Lord, new mysteries are unlocked, new fountains are pushing forth to irrigate the forebode ground of humanity. Blessed are those who know. ###October 20th 1913 Ramleh, Egypt

{{p45}}

Dear Friends!

It is good to go on the shore of the great sea where the sun is set and the mysteries of the inspiring. I was there half an hour ago lying on the soft sand, my eyes gazing upward, my mind wrapt up in the contemplation of your ebullient dome of God . The moon was not yet up and so the stars were in greater evidence so lustrous, so luminous, so faith-inspiring. The Milky way was a royal path strewn with millions of stars, each one probably larger than our globe. It was a truly magic night over which was thrown the spell of beauty and the motion of the spheres. How stupendous is God's creation and how small we are trying to make it, to bring it within our human ken and petty understanding! Have his mighty spirit pervades throughout all these infinite worlds, keeping each in its circumscribe circle and never allowing it to go out one hairs breath from its natural course! How glorious is this divine workshop wherein the most complicated mechanism is adjusted by the minutest and most unalterable love! I could not close my eyes, the more I beheld these handiworks of the Lord, the more I was infatuated by them, held as though by an invisible force. No wonder that astronomy held and still holds a most honorable position in the colleges and universities of the world and is one of the most instructive and valuable part of our modern education.

As I was thus spell-bound with the charm of the stars I heard a voice which brought me to the earth again." What art thou doing here?" I looked around and it was the harbor police - an Arab Negros. 'I am watching the stars.' "Are they not wonderful? I look at them here every night and I believe they are the eyes of the Lord which look down upon the earth, so that men may be ashamed and do no evil." he answered with firm belief. Then we started to talk together. He asked me, "Where dost thou come from, brother?" "From America." "Oh!" he gasped. I thought I have heard about it. Is it not very far in the other end of the earth." This gave me a chance to enlighten and at the same time astonish him a little bit on the subject. He could not believe that there are building 40 or 45 stories high in New York. "If such buildings exist they must have of course been constructed by the genius as no man can accomplish such a thing" he finally concluded. "Are there any Moslems there?" he was anxious to know. "Yes!" I rejoiced his heart "there are many fair - minded Americans who believe that Mohamad is the prophet of God and mention the name of the Arabian Messenger with honor," "Are you telling me the truth? Someone must have then worked a miracle in their hearts, because all the Christians I see hate our prophet and consider us Moslems as infidels and worse than pagans, yet we all believe in "Sayyedena Massih" Our Lord Christ." "I assure you my brother that I am telling {{p47}} thee the truth." Praise be, then to Our God on High!" he cried out. "The time has come together in the bond of love and affinity and forget their prejudices and know that they are brothers." "Oh!" he said "What a joy will it be when that day comes! May our Lord hasten its coming. The Moslems are willing to meet their brother Christians more than half way." :I have lived in America." I answered him as I arose and shook off the sand from my coat for many years and I give thee the good news that will rejoice of all the people that there are thousands of men, women and children in that country who believe in the prophet bond of Mohamad and their numbers are increasing." He did not know how to thank me and I left him to his own thoughts. I hope I will see him another right and tell him some more. Now wasn't this an interesting experience ! I returned home absorbing what the negro Mohamadan told me and how he was interested to know everything about America and the people living there. If we appreciate duly the Bahai Cause it is the most heavenly gift of God! for with this light in our hand our path will never be dark and we shall never lose our way. We will hail the good no matter from what source! It gives us such a universal sympathy for all mankind and a keen sense of discrimination to weigh and judge the truth no matter where and how we come in contact with it.

As I was returning here I saw the Master coming out of the hotel Victoria. I followed him to the door of the house and I was glad to have had even these few minutes with him. I was going to tell him my singular experience but there was no time. In the morning also he sent for me and gave me a package of Tablets to translate. Before I left him however he did strike 2 times on my face. I took them as part of my salary advanced and arrears. In the afternoon also he came to Mirza Abul Fazl and there were several Arabs present he presented a wonderful interpretation of several mystic traditions of Mohamad which were greatly appreciated by his bearers.

Today another interesting pilgrim arrived from Cairo, a very old man. He is the man sent by Baha - ollah many years ago before His departure to Khartoum to find out the whereabouts of Haji Mirza Heydour Ali who was imprisoned there for 12 years and no one had heard anything from him. Finally this man was sent to find them out. He walked on foot for months before reaching his destination and finally accomplishing the work entrusted to him and returning to the Blessed Perfection with the news.

Tomorrow Mirza Mohaen and the daughter of the Master will leave for Haifa as the first party and probably in a week or so we will be on our way. The Master has finally decided to go which will give joy to the hearts of all the believers of Sigma.

{{p49}}

I will translate herein the lovely Tablet revealed to the German Bahais, thus giving you the vision and the noble outlook of that sturdy nation:

He is God!

O ye sons and daughters of the Kingdom! Your letter dated September 30th 1913 duly received. From its contents it became evident that the Fire of the Love of God is ignited in that region, such as Flame that shall illumine the world and shall make the East and the West the field of the heroes of the Kingdom: All the people are slap on the bed of negligence, praise be to God that you are awake! All are deprived of the Bestowals of the Kingdom and you have taken a goodly position. The crow and the owl do not enjoy the brilliant rose garden. The beauty and the virtues of the rose is the food of the longing nightingale. It will receive a share and a portion from the Fragrance, delicacy and elegance of the rose.

Now the Kingdom is like unto a rose-garden and ye are the fortunate and sweet-singing nightingale. The world of the Kingdom is like unto the fountain of life and ye are like unto inconsolable, thirsty fish. Thank ye God that in the day of the appearance of the Kingdom ye have become so accepted and favored at the Threshold of the Forgiving Lord. Therefore strive ye with heart and soul so that the world of humanity may become illumined, the foundation of hatred and animosity may become entirely raged to the ground and {{p50}} all humanity may associate with each other with the utmost love and kindness, good-fellowship and intimacy.

Upon, ye be Baha ElAbha!

(Sig) Abdul Baha Abba

In another he says:

O thou servant of His Highness the Friend!

Strive they utmost that in the center of the world than mayst became the sign of the Merciful and beneath the protection of the Almighty thou mayst become the manifest ensign. Mayst thou prepare, thy sustenance for the spiritual world in this mortal life and from the hand of the cup-bearer of Providence mayst than drunk the overflowing goblet of Favor! Rend than asunder the garment of patience and clothe thyself with the garment of joy and happiness. Become than so light and ethereal that thou mayst soar in the pure atmosphere and become the token of the essence of essences,”

O thou servant of the Beauty of Abha! Be thou happy because thou hast presented thyself at the table of the heavenly food and partook of the spiritual sustenance; thou didst perfumed thy nostrils with the fragrance of Holiness and Illumines thy face with the light of faith; thou didst quaffed the creep of the Mast Great Bounty and sweetened thy taste with the honey of the Love of God. Thou must thank God for this divine Generosity a hundred thousand times, because thanksgiving behaved this heavenly Bestowal.”

###October 21st 1913 Ramleh, Egypt

Dear friends!

As the question of consultation in the Bahai movement is of supreme importance I like to translate herein three Tablets which are revealed by the Beloved about 15 or 16 years ago from the Persian believers. They were at that time published and distributed amongst the friends. I translate only a few extracts which can to a more or less degree be applied to our Western conditions.

The first Tablet is opened with a prayer: He is God!

O Lord! Thou art the Confirmer of every assembly which is organized for the purpose of promoting the Word of Thy Mercifulness and the Supporter of every society which is united in the service of the Threshold of Thy Singleness! I beg of Thee by Thy hidden Face in Thy invisible worlds of Abha to encompass these with the Glances of the Eye of Thy Compassion, strengthen them by Thy Supreme Power and reinforce their backs by Thy penetrative force which is permeating throughout all things. Verily Thou art the Listener of all our prayers and verily Thou art Powerful to do that which Thou willest! Today the meeting of consultation has great importance and intensive necessity.

The members must so conduct themselves both in discussion and consultation so that the Causes of ill-feeling and difference may not creep in. This aim is obtained if the following suggestions are followed. After the opening of the board each member may with the utmost freedom {{p52}} express his opinion and present facts and if another member opposes it he must not at all feel sad or agitated; for unless discussion is carried on freely concerning all the questions the right decision will not become known. The light of reality appears resplendent through the amicable conflict of thoughts. At the end of the discussion if a unanimous vote is cast the aim is attained, but if God forbid, there still exists a difference of opinions they may settle it by the vote of majority. Whenever the plans or arrangements of the board of consultation are disliked or criticized by the believers or a few from amongst them, the members must not rebuke or quarrel with anyone. They must keep silence and write to this servant.

The second Tablet deals with the sin duties of the members of the board of Consultation: "The first duty of the members of the board of consultation is the sincerity of intention, the illumination of reality, severance from Fragrances of God, meekness and humility amongst the believers, patience and forbearances under the test and servitude at the exalted Threshold of God. When they are qualified and characterized with these attributes the victory of the Invisible Kingdom of Abha shall surround them."

The second duty is the affirmation of the Unity of the Invisible Beauty of Abha, the confirmation of the perfect supreme appearance of His Holiness, the first Paint (the Bab) and {{p53}} the declaration of the absolute, pure real, outward and inward, identical and essential servitude of Abdul Baha without the least expression save this. This is my highest station! This is my ultimate condition! This is my abode in Paradise! This is the light of my Face! This is the consolation of my heart! This is the balm of my breast! This is the delight of my eye! This is. Whosoever believes other than this, verily he has opposed Abdul Baha!

The third duty is the promotion of divine Principles and the encouragement of spiritual laws amongst the believers such as prayers, communes, fasting and other divine commandments.

Fourthly: The protection and preservation of all the believers under all circumstances and conditions and the amelioration of public affairs such as the education of the children, the instruction of morality, the advancement of useful sciences from all parts, the foundation of the schools and colleges for both boys and girls, the guardianship of the poor, incapacitated, the forward children the orphans and the old people and holding fast to those means which would increase arts, commerce profession and the progress of the general well-being.

Fifthly: General prohibition from taking part in any movement which would breed disorder and conception and serenity and composure under all circumstances {{p54}} and showing love and friendship toward all mankind.

Sixthly: Leniency toward the people of negligence and heedlessness. The Third Tablet is as follow: In all the affairs whether universal or particular consultation must be observed, so that which is suitable may become apparent. Consultation is the cause of insight into the affairs and reflection upon unknown subjects. The lights or reality are apparent on the faces of the people of consultation; the fountain of life will flow in the meadow of the man of truth, the lights of everlasting glory will shine and the tree of existence will be adorned with wonderful fruits. But the members of the board of consultation must deal with each other with infinite love, fellowship and sincerity. The principle of consultation is one of the greatest principles of God.

These are a few portions of the Tablets the contents of which may serve as guiding stars for all the assemblies and inspire them with great zeal and enthusiasm to teach the Message of the Kingdom.

Another Tablet which is addressed also to one of the oldest Bahais years ago may find a place here: "O thou who art attracted by the Fragrances which are diffused from the garden of the Bestowal of God!" Proclaim: Verily God has opened the doors of prosperity with the hand {{p55}} of Might and Power and the herald of Happiness is crying out. Hasten ye toward success, O ye essences of spirits. Be ye rejoiced on account of the appearance of this Manifest Day, Praiseworthy Light and lofty station on the part of your Lord, the Clement. I declare by God that the shining light in the Blessed Tree of Sinai has sent forth its flaw, raised its tongue, spread its luminosity and scattered its rays and its heat has enveloped the East of the earth and the west thereof.

As to thee O thou who art stirred into cheerfulness through this Bestowal and art a harbinger for the appearance of this glorious Mercy, dilate thy breast, rejoice thy heart, because God has assisted thee to diffuse these Fragrances through which the regions are perfumed. Verily, I declare by the Glory of Thy Lord that the hosts of the cohorts of the Kingdom of Abha are saluting thee from the Supreme horizon and address thee: Blessed art thou O thou herald of the name of God! Glad-tiding be upon thee! O thou who art attracted to God! Happiness be unto thee O thou speaker of the mention of God! Rejoicing be unto thee, O thou who art assisted by the Holy Spirit from the highest heavens. Reinforce thy back! Strengthen thy knees! Illumine thy eyes, purify thy heart, dilate thy breast for God hath confirmed thee with this unparalleled Grace - which shall shine and gleam like unto the brilliant star {{p56}} and world - illuminating sun upon the vast regions, the dawning places of existence and the vests of power.

This morning I was called into the Holy Presence. He put unto my hand numerous Tablets to translate and after taking two cups of tea which was served by Mirza Jalal I returned. The Beloved was surrounded by letters from all parts of the globe and he sat then his eyes closed, immersed in a sea of reflection. What was he thinking? No one could ever dream? No one can ever guess the working evolutions of his mighty brain. Single and alone he has faced the whole world and as the Master Man of the age he must solve all the problems of our age, social and ethical. No one who has studied in the least the marvellous story of the Bahai Cause can doubt the spiritual ability of the Beloved in adjusting not only the difficult and superhuman work of the salvation of the Eastern people but in establishing social righteousness and economic justice in the complicated life of the West. He has solved this wondrous problem to a large extent and his daily life and teachings are doing the rest. The fact that the progressive movements of the world have been largely influenced and helped by these divine Teachings no fair man can deny but this is clearer than the sun in noonday and all the thinkers and philosophers have testified. We are all battling the birth and growth of this new world movement which is being learn on the {{p57}} sea of existence and impelling upward the latent forces of progress and brotherliness.

Today more pilgrims arrived from Cairo and the Master has telegraphed to many others to come but many of them will not stay more than a few hours. They are the generals on the field of action and must receive their orders before the departure of the Commander in Chief.

In this afternoon he came to see Mirza Abul Fazl who was welcoming a distinguished Arab. The Beloved talked with them a great deal on the mystic life of religion and its influence on external life. The Arab caller was most delighted with the talk and left the Presence charmed with the words of truth.

I would like to bring this letter to a close by the following quotation from a wonderful Tablet revealed by the Beloved: "Now you must engage in the service of the Cause of God with the utmost firmness, steadfastness and resolution and expend day and night in the promotion of the religion of God. Do not unloose your tongues save for conveying the message. Do ye not behold save the Kingdom of Abha. Wish for no other companion save the True One. Do ye not desire other associate save turning thy face toward the Supreme horizon. Do ye not search for any other delicacy save the heavenly food and do ye not hope any other sweetness except the love of the Beauty of Abha."

Praise be to God that the standard of victory is unfurled over that region and the fame of the Covenant has reached the ear of every wise and intelligent person. Spiritual means are prepared. The Merciful Table is spread and the Banquet and the Feast of the Lord is inexhaustible. Now is the time of attraction and ecstasy; so that, that horizon may become wholly illumined and that worthless dust be changed into fragrant muse.

I declare by the Blessed Perfection - may my life be a sacrifice to his believers so that if the believers arise to act according to the good-pleasure of the Blessed Perfection, the lights will be revealed, the mysteries discovered, the recoils rent asunder, the darkness dispelled, the verses of unity chanted, and the melodies of the spiritual music of the Glorious Lord sing.

Show ye an effort! Work unceasingly. Labour diligently so that the Everlasting Bounty be realized. Eternal life be destined and the nostrils be perfumed with the Holy Fragrances. ###October 22nd 1913 Ramleh, Egypt

Dear friends!

This was a day of movement. The Master gave up the house in which he and his family have been living since his arrival in Ramleh and in and around which so many wonderful and significant events have transpired and will even fill a place of historical interest in the Bahai Cause in the future. The Beloved was up early and the Khosro assisted by the other members of the family were packing the trunks and other household utensils. The Master was in his own room, standing near the window. For months every morning the family gathered together around his patriarchal figure chanting prayers and supplications and listening to his word of life. There has been an air of sanctity and sacredness in the very atmosphere of all the late comers felt this spirit permeating the home life of the Master. Every morning the spiritual batteries were not set to work, sending forth divine energy for the quickening of nations and people. In these morning prayers the Master always prayed for all the friends both in the East and the West and begged the descent of the Holy Confirmations upon all, supplicating God to reinforce the believers with a new hope and courage to go out into the wide world and teach by word and by deed the principles of universal civilization. But now for the first time the morning prayer was suspended, one could not hear the mellow, sweet voices, there was no trace of the daily devotion at the Altar of Love but the Master alone was praying and {{p2}} offering his supplications before the Throne of Baha-ollah. On his face there was the light of heaven, in his eyes there were the immortal ray of the Sun of Reality, his whole being was in a rapture of ecstasy and celestial peace; the Proof of God amongst men.

Then he sent for a member of believers who had arrived last night and the rest of the pilgrims. For a long time they were in His Presence and his talk to them was on how the soul is purified from all dross and sanctified from all desires once it goes through the fiery furnace of sorrows and tests, that Christ being a Man of sorrow filled the world with his never-failing joy, that Baha-ollah undergoing willingly all the sufferings and persecutions was for no other purpose than to make the loads of humanity lighter, their hearts brighter and their innermost beings more luminous. Let them go out with this divine fire. Let them rest neither by night nor by day and work for the general uplift of humanity. Let them have no thought of their own save the Will of the Lord of mankind. Let them be ever joyous. Let them be positive forces amongst men. Like unto the rain they must pour down upon the rose-garden and the thorny Sahara. Like unto the sun they must shine upon the orchard and the jungle. Like unto the wind they must blow over the living and the dead. They must see no evil, hear no evil and talk no evil. They must be kind toward all their fellowmen, associate with all mankind with joy and fragrance and like unto the roses of the garden send their perfume to all directions.

Everyone has received the leave of departure, amongst them our story teller with whose name no doubt you have become familiar Mirza Jalal Sina. He is commissioned to go to Ashkhabad and later on other cities of Caucasus and Russian Turkestan. All along he has been a happy, instructive companion and I hope his stories have delighted you. I will miss him very much but have been delighted with his association. After his long stay in the Presence of the Beloved and coming in touch with so many pilgrims from all over the world he will assuredly be assisted to teach many souls and guide many people to the right Path. Our cook also, Mirza Jamal will leave also for Haifa. All the members of the Holy Family left today for Haifa via Port Said, leaving behind only Mirza Jalal. The Master has engaged in the Victoria Hotel on the first floor No. 26. The room is situated in the corner and is under the big cloak giving the Western and Eastern time a significant coincidence for all those who understand the universal spirit of the Bahai movement. By one o'clock all the baggage's were either hauled in our house or to the station and the Master transferred his abode to the hotel and the apartment was delivered into the hands of the Proprietor.

At noon he sent for me. He had already gathered all his belongings personally and was tired. As I entered he smiled at me and bid me to sit. The room was quiet, the family had left and he was waiting for his lunch to be brought by the faithful Khosro. He turned to me his penetrating, kindly eyes: "All are gone" he said. We are again left alone. During the last few months we have found many friends but they have all {{p4}} left us. We have returned to our original number, the old and tired friends. We are the same number of friends - three or four - inseparable and with the assistance of Baha-ollah we will be always inseparable. I love faithfulness. I was very happy. Who will not sacrifice his life to a friend like Abdul Baha? Who will desire to serve any one else after serving Abdul Baha? Only to serve the Cause of God, the friends of God, because they are the visible expressions of his Love, the outward manifestations of his attributes, the true symbols of his power, the standard-bearers of his army. Then he turned the conversation toward an opposite direction: "Thou must be always ready for the time when I send thee back to America." I was startled and said: "Oh no! One hour in the Holy Presence of Abdul Baha is better than a hundred years in America." I said it with much earnestness. It was the inmost voice of my heart, the living expression of my secret aspiration which leaped forth without my own volition. Now I could not leave the Master if they gave me the whole world. Later on, probably and that also with his expressed Command. Am I so childlike after all as to leave the Beloved and chase after my own fancy? There is nothing on this earth and above this earth that can separate me from him, the King of my heart. I live beneath the protection of his Majesty and I do not care for any earthly glory, name or fame. All are phantasms save his love, illusions except his good-pleasure. These thoughts passed through my head and as though he divined them {{p5}} he raised his head and with twinkling eyes said: "Yes! Yes! This is important. All the rest are simulacrum. Its importance is not known at the present. It will become apparent in the future. People do not realize what is going on at the present time. They are totally ignorant as to the supreme importance of this Cause and those who devoid of any self interest are serving it. Some time ago a great discussion was carried on between the theologians of Persia as to who is the greater - Gabriel or Ganbar (the latter was plain servant of Mohamad, a young illiterate man who walked on foot beside Mohamad whenever he was riding and performed the small unimportant errands entrusted to him). After months of debates they agreed that Ganbar was a greater personage and his rank higher than Gabriel. A humorist, however taunted stirring the decision of the theologian by saying: Amen! Hence fear of God! Ganbar after all was the servant of Mohamad but Gabriel was the servant of God! Do you put the former above the latter? But no one gave any heed to the criticism of our wit. The decision of the Council of the learned Ulemas stood unchanged. By these I mean that the stations of those who are serving at the Court of Baha-ollah are very glorious! Even those who are engaged with do not appreciate it duly, cannot see its grandeur in all its wonderful settings. That is why we often see that certain people deliberately turn away from the Cause and scatter to the winds the heavenly glory {{p6}} destined for them. They are like the children who will ground to dust a diamond ring, thinking it is made of glass or will exchange it for a piece of colored crakeries."

In the afternoon he came to Mirza Abul Fazl where a number of Egyptian men had congregated. They had come to invite him to speak at a meeting. He declined the invitation by saying: "Egypt is the place for our retirement. Our field of labor is Europe and America. We have come here to rest. We speak from the platforms of the Universities and the pulpits of the churches of America and Europe." Then he gave a very vivid account of his addresses in the University of Stanford in Calif, and Oxford in England. Those who were present listened with rapt attention and when the Master arose they were filled with the spiritual Ideals of the Kingdom of Abha.

Our American sister, Mrs. Beede, Miss Hancock and Mrs. Lilianthal are overjoyed because the Master is living in the hotel. With Mrs. Stannard they live on the same floor and they hear the voice of the Beloved often speaking with the servants and showering kindness and gifts upon them as he walks to and from through the large corridor of the building.

The plan of the departure for Haifa although not definitely given up is a little shaken and although there was every sign of departure a few days ago I am not so sure now whether we will leave Ramleh after all or stay here. ###October 23rd 1913 Ramleh, Egypt

{{p7}}

Dear friends!

For the first time after many months I can go to the Master at any time of the day and be practically with him at any hour of the day. Mirza Jalal has also a room in the hotel with the Beloved, so he is not alone. This morning I got up very early full of anticipation. I passed by the hotel and went toward the sea. For the first time last night it rained, washing off the dust from the green trees, flowers and lawns giving to them a spring like appearance. The morning was very young and the fresh air most invigorating. The sea was swollen by the downpour of the rain and I had a fine view from the veranda of a large, palatial residence. After half an hour I returned and from far off I saw the turban of the Master from behind the window. The street was most quiet and having seen me he made a sign with his hands to come up. I bounded up the stairs and in my eagerness to reach the room I almost walked into a Nubian waiter who was lumberingly coming down with a tray in his hands. When I entered the room he was looking over an Arabic newspaper. "Where were you this morning so early?" he asked. "I was walking toward the sea." "Do you go there every morning?" "Yes, sometimes I go in the early morning, at other times in the evening." "What do you do when you go there all alone?" "I love to go all alone and for a few minutes meditate away from all men." "Very good! But what kind of {{p8}} meditations do you have?" He skid this half amusingly and then continued: "Once there was a man who had a negro servant. His name was Kafour. Having decided to make a voyage he bought a horse and with himself he took Kafour. After travelling all day, they reached a small ruined caravanserai and realizing how tired they were they resolved to pass the night here and refreshed with sleep, start next morning their journey. As that locality was infested with robbers, they agreed that the master should sleep till midnight provided Kafour will keep guard over the horse. Then Kafour should sleep in turn and the master sit awake. After their supper the master slept but after an hour he awoke and asked: Kafour! What art thou doing? He answered: I am meditating! On what art meditating? I am meditating on the subject of why God has fashioned the edges of these thistles so sharp and cutting? Very good, the master chuckled to himself as he drew his head under the blanket, continue to meditate. This is a good subject! Again he awoke half an hour before midnight and asked Kafour pleasantly, what art thou meditating now? Oh master! I am meditating who is going to carry on his back tomorrow morning the saddle and the bridle?" Then the Beloved laughed and I laughed because I thought my "meditation" after all was not quite useless for it made him tell me the above story. After awhile Khosro brought tea and Mirza Jalal also came in. He took a very light cup and while he was drinking it he laughed heartily. An event of the Bahai life of Bagdad had come to his mind and he told us: "It was when Baha-ollah was away in the mountain of Sanleymanieh. We lived most economically as the resources of our livelihood were all closed. I remember that Aga Ammow (brother of Baha-ollah) was very fond of tea. He was so accustomed to tea that if he would not take any he would feel weak and not able to walk. Somehow we had manage to have a little tea for him every morning. We had a small, old coffee pot. After boiling water we dropped a little tea in it and served Aga Ammow. This was of course a luxury as we had no means at our command to avail ourselves of the same. Aga Moussa (another brother of Baha-ollah) and myself drank tea twice a week, Tuesday and Friday. Each one had 3 lumps of sugar. We would sweeten our tea with one and keep the other two. Then every morning after Aga Ammow had his tea, I would put some more water in the coffee pot and boil it for several minutes. The result was a very light colored tea like this (and he showed as his cup half emptied by this time and laughing again). In this way we had tea for six day of the week and on the seventh having no sugar we went without any. Notwithstanding this we were really most happy. Happiness is a mode of thought. It is in the mind and in the heart and not in external things. We were happy because we did not give any importance to these outward conditions." Then another Bahai who had arrived yesterday {{p10}} from Cairo to visit the Master entered the room and with him he spoke about some of the humorous phases of his stay in Paris - such as cooking, turning the joke on me that I always enjoyed a good, square breakfast or dinner but he was not accustomed with their strange dishes. Then in this connection there was a man who lived 112 years and who for his breakfast had everyday two whole bread, a large portion of butter and two large dishes filled with honey. He was a good man and loved Baha-ollah. He was a Sheikhi, the follower of Sheik Ahmad. He used to say, I do not need to become a Bahai. Why? I asked him. Did not the Bab love Sheik Ahmad? he questioned. Yes! I replied. And do you not love him? Yes! Then reaching his conclusion why should I become a Bahai? Sheik Ahmad whose follower I am and whom you love shall intercede for me!

After awhile the Master sent me to translate Tablets but I had to be back because Mirza Jalal Sina was going to have his farewell meeting with the Master. He was walking in the long corridor back and forth when he entered. The Master said: "I have written the Tablets for all the persons that has asked. But thou art a manifest book. Like unto a speaking book thou must return. Be thou an eloquent book. Today those souls who are free from every thought save the True One, their hearts are inspired with the divine inspirations. Whenever they began to speak on any subject they are prompted by the spirit, {{p11}} as though someone speaks to them. Wherever thou seest one of the believers of God, convey to him my greetings and salutations and say to them: My heart and soul are occupied with the friends of God by day and by night. I entertain no other thought save their spiritual advancement, happiness, good-pleasure, attraction and progress. Praise be to God that thou hast come, hast seen everything with thine own eyes and hast observed that in this Holy Spot there are no other ideals and no other hopes save the diffusion of the Fragrances of the rose-garden of Abha. In sickness and in health, in fever and out of fever, under all conditions and circumstances we are striving, making the utmost effort to promote the Word of God. Mayst thou ever be beneath the protection of God! I hope that always good news will be received from thee; saying that in such and such a city Mirza Jalal Sina has become the Cause of spreading the fragrances of God, has been the instrument for the creation of love and good-fellowship and has become the means of the happiness of the hearts of the beloved ones. Thou must leave this place in an ecstatic state so that every one who comes in touch with thee may feel the vibrant power of truth. I have great love for thee. In reality thy household have sacrificed every condition in life in the Path of the Blessed Perfection; this family of Nayyar and Sina have forgotten every thought and given up every aspiration for the sake of the Cause and because of this I love them most devotedly.” {{p12}} Then he embraced him and kissed him. Tears were flowing from his eyes and he left the Divine Presence of the King of Kings with fire in his heart.

A little later the Star of the West No. 11 was presented to the Beloved. The fine photo of Mr. Chase attracted his attention. He kissed the picture several times and tenderly cooed into the face, saying these words in English. “This is my Mr. Chase. My dear Mr. Chase. I very like Mr. Chase” and repeating it several times. His lunch was taken by Khosro to the Hotel after which he had a restful nap.

At 3 o’clock he came to our house. Another large number of Persian Bahais had just arrived from Cairo and were expressly waiting his arrival. He inquired after the health of each person and in answer to some questions he said: “We summon the people to severance and enkindlement. We call their attention to spirituality. We have nothing to do with political treads and chicaneries. All the nations and governments of the world are harbouring these thoughts, are flying in this devitalizing atmosphere. But God has given us wings whereby we may soar toward the inaneusity of space wherein we find the radiant worlds of abstraction, beatitude and certainty. Know this, I give you the following as a disinterested advice. In the world of humanity nothing is as important as the universal principles. They are imperishable. Do give your attention to their propagation and never fail in your enthusiasm. All the limited problems once {{p13}} solved have limited results but the lights of the guidance of God are ever shining. In this manner man attains to eternal happiness and will enjoy perpetual spiritual health. For the happiness of man is through evanescence and complete self-abnegations, the happiness of man is to renounce everything in the path of the Blessed Perfection; the happiness of man is through the divine Bestowals; the happiness of man the conceptions of the Kingdom. The misery of man consists in the absence of these.”

Then he spoke about his trip throughout the states contrasting the mode of travelling in America and Persia and many other subjects many of them illustrated by interesting stories.

At 6 o’clock he sent for me to go to the hotel. As he was going to talk first with a number of Sheiks he left me downstairs to entertain Madame Labeelie Hashem, a wonderfully cultured Arab woman and the Editor of one of the most well-written monthly magazine in Cairo. She speaks French and English fluently. I had a long, interesting talk with her on Woman's influence in the Orient. She is a rare woman. After an hour the Master called her into his room and gave her a resume of the Bahai teachings especially detailing that principle dealing with woman. She is going to write an article on the Cause in her magazine of the next issue in November. Her magazine is called the "Woman of the Orient".

###October 24th 1913 Ramleh, Egypt

Dear friends!

Today we received our mail from America and in the Presence of the Beloved the most distant parts of the world were connected together. A petition from Mrs. Harriet Latimer of Portland Oregon containing charming little letters from children to the Master delighted his heart. As we all know one of the most divine qualities of Abdul Baha is his love for the children and these spiritual feast was duly provided today. These little letters are so wonderfully touching and beautiful coming out of their natural and simple hearts that I like to quote them in this letter. However as an introduction to them I will quote Mrs. Latimer's letter to the Master:

"These little letters which I am enclosing, are from the little ones in the Sunday School. Their mothers were all so anxious to have a Sunday school and asked me to help teach them. We have had 3 meetings. Dear Doctor Buchanan has helped us a great deal. It is such a joy to serve these little ones in your precious name. I know you are with us in the meetings. I do feel sure that we can help them to understand what it means to know of you and to follow your example. It was so beautiful at the first meeting, when I asked them to tell me what your dear name implied. Little Hewart Stimson arose and with earnestness in his voice said, "I believe Abdul Baha is a great Ambassador sent by God {{p15}} to teach us to know God." All followed with similar answers, and oh it did make our hearts leap with joy to hear them."

The dear little letters giving us a peep, into the mystic and unknown hearts of the children and showing us how they speak with the Master are as follows. Practically all of them are addressed to Dear Abdul Baha:

Bahram Gabb Hum writes: "I think of you with great Love everyday and I pray that you will love me and help me grow and that I may work in the Cause."

A little family of children ranging from 15 to 4 by the names of Edwina, James, Dorothy, Jack, Ruth and Alfred Clough write: "Please bless and care for these little family of children."

Claire Stimson 4 years old writes: "I dreamed you came to our Bahai school. I am four years old."

Betty Stimson says: "I love the Bahai Sunday School in Portland. Mrs. Latimer is my teacher. I hope you will come to Portland soon. My love to you."

Margaret Stimson writes: "I go to the Bahai Sunday School. I am five years old."

Helen Jeanette Nash sweetly says: "I am a little girl 9 years old. I love you very much and long to meet you. Wilt thou sanctify me from all else save Thee."

Audrey Richardson writes: "Make me true and sincere to Thy Face, to diffuse Thy Fragrances."

Birrell Guild Adams writes: "Love and Greetings to Abdul Baha! O Thou Center of the Covenant of God! Grant me a shelter in Thy Threshold and bless me in my endeavours to do God's will. Bless our Sunday school so we'll grow in honor and Love to {{p16}} serve Thy Cause. I hope you will come to America soon and I will have the blessed privilege to meet you with much love to all the children of Persia."

Cecelia T. Nash says: "I am a girl of almost 13 years. I want to be meek and lovely and become a maid-servant in the Bahai Cause. I love you very much and would love to see you."

Horace H. Nash says: "I am five years old. I love you and want to see you. You are a good man."

William K. Nash writes: "We are wandering around Thy abode and longing for the Gift of Thy meeting and loving Thy characteristics."

A little family of four children of 11 to 1 years old, Katherine, William, Minerva and Martin Blakely write: "Please bless and care for this little family of children of which I am the eldest. With love."

And lastly a boy of 9 years old write: "I think you are the Messenger of God."

Thus these dear children with their pure, innocent hearts speak heart to heart across the American continent and the wide expanse of the Atlantic and Mediterranean oceans with the Beloved. In the word of everyone there be a world of meaning, the unconscious, sweet belief of childhood which springs from the depth of the sea of humanity and is only understood by the Possessor of all the hearts. I can never describe the divine happiness on the face of the Beloved as he read the translations of these little children. "These are my children, the new plants of the garden of Abha" he shouted with joy. And then he dictated {{p17}} a wonderful Tablet to them and another to Mrs. Latimer praising her for her great work. This is a most noble example of how the Bahais everywhere must give greater importance to the establishment of Sunday Schools upon Bahai basis so that the children may be nursed with the milk of the Love of God and the honey of the Knowledge of God, be adorned with moral and spiritual virtues and become the standards of the legions of the Kingdom.

As soon as I was out of bed I went to the hotel. The Master was up before me and was reading an Arabic journal when I entered the room. After drinking tea he gave a package of petitions just received from America and told me to go and translate them. He was for two hours alone in his room chanting supplication aloud. The servants of the hotel as well as our American friends were attracted by the sweet voice and having gathered behind the door they listened with rapture. Later Madame Labeelie Hashem comes again to see him before leaving for Cairo. "Will you give me a few advices?" she asks. "Be thou kind to all mankind. Try thy utmost to alleviate their burdens. Enlighten the minds with the light of knowledge. Work unfalteringly for the emantipation of the Oriental women. Illumine thy hearts with the rays of useful sciences. Consider the members of humanity as thy own brothers and sisters. Elevate public opinion to the summit of excellence. Let not any difficulty discourage thee. Have faith in thy mission and inspire others with the same."

{{p18}}

After the Master said: "She is a very rare woman, alert, intellectual and a worker. She writes well in Arabic and her articles are eloquent with natural and inmate expressions."

In the afternoon having all the petitions ready. I took them to him. I gave them to him. He laid them aside for a minute and asked me: "Why hast thou come here?" "I have come to drink spiritual tea." I said. He laughed. When Mrs. Stannard entered and Khosro brought in the tea he told her what I have said and asked her whether she has come also with the same purpose. Then he ordered Khosro to bring to us two cups of the "spiritual tea". Somehow the name of a newspaper was brought in. He said: I hope you will read the newspaper of the Kingdom of Abha the articles of which are the ideals of God. This newspaper will perish but that newspaper is indestructible. The thoughts of this newspaper is material but the conceptions of that newspaper are spiritual. The Editor of this newspaper is a man but the Editor of that newspaper is His Holiness Baha-ollah. The subscribers to this newspaper are frail humanity but the subscribers to that newspaper are the angles of the supreme concourse. The policies of this newspaper are earthly but the policies of that newspaper are heavenly. The pages of this newspaper are made of perishable materials but the pages of that newspaper are made with the celestial texture". Afterward he dictated several Tablets to {{p19}} our American believers and at about half past 4 he left for Mirza Abul Fazl to meet the friends of God. As he entered the room all arose and he said:"I have been writing up to the present moment. This Mirza Ahmad will not give us rest. Whenever he comes near me he makes me work." He laughed and they all looked at me reproachfully.

Apropos of someone asking a question he gave the explanation that in every dispensation three persons are mentioned. In the Mosaic dispensation there was Jehovah, the burning bush and Moses. In the Christian time we had Christ, the holy-spirit and the Father. In Islam we had Mohamad, Gabriel and Allah. Consequently God revealed Himself to Moses through the burning bush, to Christ through the Holy Spirit and to Mohamad through Gabriel. These different names mean one thing. Then he gave a lengthy explanation on the meaning of three Kind of Words, “literal Word”, “intellectual Word” and “divine Word” according to the Mohamadan metaphysic and how the “Divine Word” is embodied in the world and for what purpose. He spoke in Arabic and as I was standing out I could not catch all that he said: Then he returned to the hotel and at 9 o’clock Khosro took him his dinner, Pilau and vegetable stew. It was a rainy night. We sat in our veranda and till midnight the windows of heaven were open and the artillery of the skies was booming forth. The world was deluged - I mean the streets of Ramleh were filled with water. ###October 25th 1913 Ramleh, Egypt

Dear friends!

Today our Beloved was feeling well, happy and active. I was with him all day. Early in the morning I was up and in order to have an excuse to go and see the Master I took with myself several copies of the National Geographic Magazines. “What have you in your hands?” he asked as I entered the room. His Countenance was radiant and was reading a newspaper. Tea was served and in the meanwhile Mrs. Stannard came in. Mirza Jalal was also present. The Master joke about slapping me and that while Mirza Jalal and myself were in good health and strong Mrs. Stannard was lean and tall. She must do something to get stouter. “The Arabs” he said, are a hardy race; their physical constitutions are like iron. The Arabs of the interior of the Peninsula still preserve their strong physiques and astonishing agility. Their sterling qualities of hospitality and faithfulness are proverbial. Although their principle of faithfulness is clannish yet their idea of hospitality is all-embracing. One may well wonder how these Arabs live in the Sahara with hardly any modern essential means of living, yet developing such sturdy personalities and genial characteristics. As soon as the Bedouin Arabs hears the clutter of the hoofs of a horse he comes out of his tent, thinking that a guest is in sight. Then he welcomes him with a cheerful countenance, brings out the only carpet he has, spreads it under his {{p21}} feet orders his wife to prepare coffee and his servant to kill a mutton. Then he goes around and invites all his Bedouin friends to dinner, giving them the good news that he is honored in thus having a guest in his tent. Their conception of hospitality is so unique that if a guest either by accident or by purpose kills the son of host and takes refuge under the latter’s tent he will be protected and his crime forgiven.

After Mrs. Stannard asked she is writing a letter to Germany. Has he any message for the believers. “Yes! Convey to them my heavenly Bahai greeting. Write to them that I am most pleased with them and ever pray that they may more than ever be confirmed in spreading the Glad-Tidings of the Kingdom of Abha.”

About a quarter of nine he asked Mirza Jalal and myself to follow him out. He was going to call on a Persian believer whose family was going to leave for Cairo.

On the way as it was found the streets were too muddy we got into a cab and were driven to the house. The Master walked in, the men believers waiting in the front room welcoming him. Then he entered in the other room and meet the women. There, no stranger has any right of way and we walked in the garden while the Master was speaking to them. When he came out and got his seat in the cab he talked to us about "Contentment." "Man", he said "must live in accord with the exigencies of the time. He must not make himself the slave of any habit. He must eat a piece of state bread with the same {{p22}} relish and enjoyment as the most sumptuous dinner. Contentment is real wealth. If one develops within himself the quality of contentment he will become independent. Contentment is the creator of happiness. When one is contented one does care neither for riches nor poverty. He lives above the influences of them and is indifferent to them. When we were in Bagdad, often with one pound of meat we served dinner to fifteen or 20 people. We cooked with it Persian stew and filled the pot with water; so everyone could have a bowl of the thin soup. Notwithstanding this we were all very happy and thought that ours is the most delicious dinner."

Having arrived at the hotel he walked for a few minutes in the corridor and talked with the proprietor. He in turn brought his cook and introduced him to the Master. Of course he spoke with him about cooking and described to him the process of making a cutlet and some Turkish dish with such knowledge and precision that the cook stood there astonished and delighted.

Then he came up to his room and dictated many Tablets for the Persian and American believers. At this time the servant entered the room and arranged the bed. The Master arose from his seat and coming toward me slapped me hard on the face. The servant was just going out of the room; he called him back. "Did you hear the noise of the slap?" The man answered "No". "Well, then come {{p23}} I will let you hear it this time and he slapped me again. The man laughed, the Master laughed, as to me, I assure you I laughed heartily. Then as though the servant was not rewarded by such a scene he was given some money and an orange beside.

Mrs. Hincok told the Master about her going to the poor house in Alexandria which was visited by him some two years ago. "You have done well. The poor are my trusts amongst you. You must do everything to alleviate their burdens. I love the poor."

Mrs. Stannard brought a bottle of orange perfume for the Master. He was walking to and fro from one end of the corridor to the other. She pinch into his hands. He puts a few drops on her hairs and anoints my head. Then he laughs. "Now I have anointed you."

After his modest lunch of "Abgousht" he takes his nap. Mirza Jalal leaves for Port Said to attend to an errand and I came to the hotel to take his place for the night, because he will return tomorrow evening.

In the afternoon the Beloved goes to Mirza Abul Fazl and while Haji Niaz and Mirza Moneer are present he speaks to them about the Cause in Bagdad and Teheran in contrast with its present standing and its world recognition as a mighty force for all that which is noblest and best in the world of humanity.

When he returned to the hotel Mrs. Stannard was present to greet him and we followed him to his room. Here we had a delightful quiet hour, the Master looking over the pictures of the National <sup>{p24}</sup> Geographic Magazine and was pleased especially with the tall structures of Siam, elephant hunters of Africa, ancient architecture of China, the colored pictures of the Russian emigrants to Siberia, the costumes of the Serbian people, the marvellous impunity of the arts in building their homes and storing away provisions etc. Surely our brother Wilhelm who has been so kind to send me these excellent magazines was doubly and spiritually rewarded. Besides, all our Persian young men are reading the articles contained therein with much profit.

Mrs. Stannard asked about the power of — and whether it will be transferred from — to —. The Master answered: “This power is not verbal. It must be actual, demonstrative, dynamic. This power has gone out of the body of Islam. The Islamic world cannot grasp the political principles of the modern time and is devoid of the spiritual potency. If they desire tremendous progress in as a short time as possible they must get hold of this spiritual potency, thus reforming and changing all the various branches of their institutional life. The Western nations for the last five centuries have been steadily going forward and with a superhuman energy pushing further and further the frontiers of ignorance and illiteracy they have attained to their present unassailable position. Now if the Islamic people start on this path with the same determination and constancy it will take them at least five centuries before they could reach the <sup>{p25}</sup> up-to-date level of Western civilization. This is of course a slow process and as I told you, they must get hold of this Celestial Power. Then you will observe their magical advancement.” Mrs. Stannard, then spoke about her voyage to India: “I believe” she said “that the only way for the salvation of the Foroastrian people and their glorification is to accept this Cause. There are many generous hearted people amongst them and are anxious to serve Persia but they do not know through what channel.” The Master said: “I hope thou wilt become confirmed to render a great service in India and guide these people to the Shore of Reality.”

In the evening all of us gathered in the Beloved’s room. He was looking fine. The race question was touched. Then he talk longer than one hour, repeating the contents of his addresses before the Colored meetings and Churches of the United States showing how untenable and unreasonable is race prejudice; giving us illustrations form the animal and vegetable kingdoms and their varieties of colors and shades, yet these things are not made the causes of misunderstandings. “When I was in America and Europe” he said “I went through some of the Zoological gardens. There I saw great polar bears, savage-looking, black and white. The white bear did not say to the black bear; thou art of another race. I dislike thy association. Get thee behind me. Nor the black ever grudged the whiteness of its fellow. They lived in one cage without molesting each other. <sup>{p26}</sup> Now can we confess with shame that man, notwithstanding his godlike intelligence is even inferior to these ferocious bears?”

Then he spoke with much love about Mr. and Mrs. Gregory of Washington and the progress of the Cause amongst the colored people of America. “Mr. Gregory” he said “is a true, devoted Bahai. He has a gentle spirit and is continually serving the Cause. I love him very much. He is my son.”

Toward the end of his talk he related the story of Esfandeyar, the colored attendant of Baha-ollah. In his palace my grandfather had many colored maids and servants. When Baha-ollah became the head of the family, he liberated of all them and gave them his permission to leave or stay but if they desired to remain it will be of course in a different manner. However all of them revelling in their new found freedom preferred to leave except Esfandeyar. He remained in the household and continued to serve us with proverbial faithfulness and chastity. Then when Baha-ollah became known as a Bab and he was teaching the people right and left, the populace arose against him and with the tacit consent of the government, our home was pillaged and ransacked. My father was put in the prison and we were persecuted on all sides. For days the rabble in their fanatical fury and rage threw stones into our homes, broke the windows and damaged everything. At that time I was {p27} probably 6 or seven years. Everybody had left us and our family, then consisted of my mother, my sister and Aga Ammou. Fearing that the stones thrown into the house may hit one of us, my mother went out and rented a small house in another quarter of the city and for fear of recognition, she carried us safely to our new humble quarter by night. On the other hand, the enemies of my Father who had poisoned the mind of the Shah that he harbors secret plans against the throne were convinced that Esfandeyar is the guardian of all the secret plans of Baha-ollah. Therefore they imagined that once they lay their hands on Esfandeyar they will force out of him everything and then be able to substantiate their reargue accusations. With these solid facts. Hence they commissioned one hundred and fifty policemen to find him and bring him before them. Esfandeyar had a chum with whom he passed most of his time. At first they tried to get hold of his chum, thus he may divulge the hiding-place of Esfandeyar but they failed in their purpose. One midnight we arose out of our sleep by the loud knocking at the door. It was opened and lo and behold it was Esfandeyar. My mother told him with anxiety: “How is it that thou art yet in the city? Dost thou not know that there 150 policemen after thee? Fly as quickly as thou canst. If they get hold of thee thy life will be in danger.” But he smiled and answered: “No. I will not {p28} leave Teheran even if a thousand policemen are after me. I am not afraid. I have much debts in the Bazaar. I owe money to many shopkeepers and before I leave this city I must pay off all the debts. I do not want the people say afterward that the negro-servant of Baha-ollah escaped without paying his debts.” Then he left us and for one month and half he was walking in broad daylight in the streets and Bazaars and finally succeeded to clear off all his financial obligations. All this time the policeman were after him but could not catch him. Then one night he appeared again and said: “I am now free. I have payed actually all my debts and will leave the city with a clear conscience.” He went to Mazandran and the governor who was not a Bahai engaged him in his service, made him the chief of his equerry and protected him from the pursuit of his enemies. Years elapsed and the governor being a religious man desired to make a pilgrimage to the Holy City of Karbala. Naturally he took Esfandeyar with him who by this time had grown very much in his favor and could not separate from him. When they reached the city of Bagdad, Esandeyar was overjoyed to stand again in the Presence of Baha-ollah because he loved him most intensely. He requested Baha-ollah to keep him with himself; that he rather leave the governor and serve his old Master. But Baha-ollah told him: "You must act in this matter in accord with the {{p29}} wish of the governor. You owe him a debt of deep gratitude. Because at a time that your life was in danger and no one would have received you he gave you position and stopped the persecutions of your enemies. Now if he is willing for you to remain with us, we will accept you, otherwise you must continue to serve him with the same zeal and sincerity that you have served us in the past." Esfandeyar went to the governor and explained his case. He answered: "It is impossible. I cannot find in this wide world another man as honest and faithful as thyself. Thou must continue to stay with me. I have grown to love thee and will do everything to add to thy comfort and happiness." Of course Esfandeyar was heart-broken over this decision but he had to abide by the wish of Baha-ollah. He in turn consoled him and showered upon him his blessings. Esfandeyar returned to Mazandran with the governor and stayed with him till his last day. Such was the starting faithfulness of Esfandeyar that whenever I think of him my eyes grow dim with tears. He was a king among men, a glorious star in the heaven of humanity. Although his face was black, his heart was as white as snow. He was peerless and had no equal. I cannot sufficiently praise him. I loved him. He was a glory and a jewel on the crown of the colored race. For his life was noble record of proud achievement and the whole world will learn a lesson from it." ###October 26th 1913 Ramleh, Egypt

Dear friends!

I slept last night in the hotel. I was very glad to be again with the Master even if it is for one night. At midnight I awoke and went out on my porch. How scintillating were the stars! How clear was the sky! How sweet to the ear the laughter and dance of the sea! How quiet everything seemed! The universe with all its organic creations was at that moment instead of a huge, ruthless mechanical machine - a sacred, awe-inspiring temple of the Almighty! The bird of Silence had outstretched its imperial wings over all phenomena. The soul was exhilarated by the divine Presence of the Spirit; the mind was renewed through the mystic beauty of the scene and the heart was transported into the elysian gardens of Paradise. What wonderful witchery and mysterious charm there lie hidden in the silent liaison of an oriental night! One became so absorbed in the contemplation of all these majestic forces surrounding his more majestic spirit that one does not only forget himself but the whole world. Who am I? What have I to do here? Whether am I bound? The Baha'i cause explains these eternal questions both from a moral and philosophical standpoint. At last we have a logical interpretation of these sphinx-problems and the hearts of those who have obtained these answers are at complete rest. In every object they see life, joy and ultimate welfare. They are indeed the elect of God and his faithful servants.

It was twilight when I got out of my bed and dressed was behind the table to write a few letters when I heard the footsteps of the Master coming toward my room. I jumped out of my seat and opened the door. He looked in and told me to prepare tea.

Having drank his tea he spoke on the hatefulness of envy. "There are some people who make this short span of life miserable to themselves and others because they harbor "Envy" in their hearts. Envy is the most despicable quality in man. Some people are so filled with it that they cannot see of their friends receive greater privileges and higher promotions in life. Life poison it kills all their nobler sentiments. Envy lowers the station of man and makes him a supreme egoist and self-centered. If man extricates himself from the claws of this ignoble monster he has defeated the powers of Satan. Then he will attain to tranquility and peace of mind. Man must become evanescent and self-denying. Then all the difficulties and hardships of the world will not even touch him. He will become like unto a sea that although on its surface the tempest is raging and the mountainous waves rising in its depth there is complete calmness. No one can ever imagine even faintly how we were surrounded from all sides by tests and trials in the nascent stage of the Cause. When we were exiled from Persia outwardly the means of happiness were completely lacking; we did not have even our wherewithal; notwithstanding this whenever I think of those days my heart is filled with exaltation. On our way from Teheran to Bagdad we could not afford to buy {{p32}} tea for Baha-ollah, so Aga Amman prepared a sort of hot drink with and served it to Him in an old brass cup. Sometimes there was an extra cup, then he would give it one day to me another day to my mother and so it went all around."

A flock of French warships has just arrived in the harbor of Alexandria. The Egyptian government the French population and a number of foreign societies have prepared an elaborate program of entertainment to feast the officers and blue jackets. Mrs. Stannard referred to this matter. The Master rising from his seat and looking out of his window toward the blue sea said: "I desire that you may see the divine ships. These ships are the blessed souls who are traversing on the sea of divine mercy; their propellers are the powers of spiritual love and their captains are the inspirations of the Holy Spirit. No ship is ever wrecked on this sea. Its waves are life-giving. Each one of the friends of God is like unto an ark of salvation. Each ark saves many souls from the storms of troubles. The signs and traces of these souls are never-ending and eternal. The future centuries and cycles are like the sea on the surface of which these arks glide blissfully toward their spiritual destination."

Then Mrs. Lilianthal and Mrs. Beede had an interview in the course of which the Beloved spoke about the heavenly accord and communication that exist between the Baha'is of all races and countries. When they departed he commenced to dictated Tablets for the believers of Persia. Many of them being in Arabic he dictated in this {{p33}} wonderful voice of chanting. His eyes were closed and he was chanting in a supplicating and entreating tone at the throne of the Almighty. We thought he was directly conversing with the Lord of mankind. What a contrast between now as he sweetly and clearly chanted these prayers in a room in Egypt with no audience except the written and those tremendous moments when he raised his mighty voice in big churches of America and Europe in vast congregations! I could hardly believe myself at the magic transformation, so real and yet so mystical! How wonderfully he prays! All the fibers of human heart responds to his sensitive pleadings! Many of the Tablets were about the education of the children revealed to the authorities of the Baha'i school in Hamadan. Then about now he came out and I followed him toward the sea. For more than half an hour he sat on the shore watching the sea submerged in the Great Deep of reflections. On our return Khairo brought the lunch and for the first time in many months I had again the joy of eating with him the frugal repast. At four o'clock he took the tramway for Alexandria and I was with him. When he descended from the car he bought apples and for one hour walked on the sidewalk near the sea. Returning he went up to his room and dictated some stirring calls to the Baha'i to rise and teach the Cause of God and deliver eloquent speeches in meetings and assemblages. Mirza Jalal returned from Port Said and so for tonight I am returning again to our house. One of our friends was setting silent. The Master asked her to speak. "I would rather pray quietly in Thy Presence", she said. "May thou ever be in a prayerful attitude. In the world of existence there is nothing more important than prayer. Prayer confers spirituality to the heart."###October 27th 1913 Ramleh Egypt

Dear friends!

For the present New Victoria Hotel, Room No. 26 is my Mecca and the Mecca of the whole Baha'i world. There being no obstacle on the way my feet tread every morning toward the Holy Shekinah. My first thought as I open my eyes in my bed is "My Beloved Abdul Baha" and the last thought as I fall in the unconscious state of sleep is about him and what he did and said during the day. Great is my joy and inexpressible is my thankfulness because I can look into the face of my Lord every morning and stay with him till late hours of the night. Do I not see on his divine Countenance the freshness of Paradise; in his voice the Aeolian music of the Seraphs; in his words the wisdom of the Ancients; in his carriage the majestic dignity of a heavenly King and in his daily life the full reflection of the Kingdom of God? To me everything he does, everything he says, is a miracle; no one else in this world can do or say the same thing in exactly the same way! This of course is a miracle! All that he does or says are original unto himself. He has not acquired them from others. He is like unto a clear fountain the source of which is in the Great Deep of the earth. We are depended upon him but he is independent from all else. Thus when circumstances arise that I do not see him every hour of the day I feel like unto a dried well but now I am swimming in the sea of His Gracious Mercy. The Sun of his beauty is rising from the horizon, shining upon the Kingdom of the heart and the Spirit.

I was in his Holy Presence early this morning. He was praying when I quietly entered the room. He did not see me, so I sat on the floor and in my heart prayed with him for all the believers in America and Europe, entreating that God may confirm them in the promotion of the Baha'i Cause. When he turned his head and saw me sitting on the floor he smiled and asked me how long I was present in the room. "I felt when thou didst enter the room" he said "But I knew thou art praying so I did not wanted to disturb thee." Then Mrs. Von Lilienthal, Mrs. Beede, Mrs. Stannard and Miss Hiscock, each in turn paid short visits to the Master and listened to his advices. One of them inquired about his health. "My spiritual health is always perfect. I enjoy an eternal health of the spirit. I hope all the people of the world will gain this celestial gift. You pray that the spiritual health of mankind may be improved daily; for there are many doctors who attend to the physical ailments of the people, but there are very few divine physicians. It is in this connection that Christ said: Do not be afraid of those people who have control over your body but have fear of those who may control your spirits. Let your spirits be free so that they, may be soon toward the height of sanctity. Let your spirits push forth the white wings of progress. Often physical sickness draws man nearer unto his Maker, suffers his heart to be made empty of all the worldly desires, becomes tender and sympathetic toward all the sufferer and compassionate to all the {{p36}} creatures. Although physical diseases cause man to suffer temporarily yet they do not touch his spirit nay rather they contribute toward the divine purpose - that is, spiritual susceptibilities will be created in his heart."

One of the radical changes in our party surrounding the Beloved is the approaching departure of Mirza Ali Akhar for Constantinople. He has been such a staunch and faithful companion to Abdul Baha during his journey in America and his stay in Egypt. We have grown to love him and honor him as a man of sterling qualities and strength of will. We felt the pangs of separation when our dear old Sayad Assadollah left us for the fray of battle and the head of activity and now another will go out equipped with spiritual lances and darts to pierce through the rank and file of the army of ignorance and superstitions. The Beloved is sending away one by one to work in the vineyard for this reason he was in His Presence a long time receiving instructions for his Spiritual Campaign in Constantinople. All day different races, Turks, Arabs and Europeans called on him. In the afternoon I showed him a number of long articles with photos about Green-Acre. He looked at each and said: "Nothing in this world can prevent the final triumph of his Cause." In the evening he Kept Mirza Ali Akbar with himself to dine with him. I left the hotel at 10 o'clock with a joyful heart and happy conscious.###October 28th 1913 Ramleh, Egypt

Dear friends!

“If you are sincere in your love for me, then love and serve the believers of god, love and serve your fellow men.” This was the keynote of the Beloved talks and observations today. Love must sweep away all the iron-barriers; love must change the mental copper into spiritual gold; love must uplift man from the animal Kingdom into the Celestial Presence of Deity; love must teach us the lessons of human brotherhood; love must illumine the dark recesses of our hearts; love must readjust our social and economic relations with the rest of humanity; love must make us independent from all else the Beloved; love must instruct us to forget evil and remember only the good; love must banish away the gloom of despair; love must inspire us to forebear every humiliation for the sake of the Loved One; love must purify us from all the stains of egoism and self-adulation. Love must plant in the garden of our bearing fruitful trees; love must so overpower us that we may look upon all creatures with the eyes of love; love must heal us from all the moral diseases; love must transform the shriveled and cramped area of our hearts into the rose garden of the Kingdom of Beauty; love must rest us with instinctive sympathy; impeccable veracity, resistless energy and divine hope; love must make the inhabitants of this world the angels of Paradise love must make us divine, spiritual and godlike.

{{p38}}

With everyone who came to see him today he spoke on Love and its efficacy under all circumstances. “These days” he would say “I do not feel very well. My remedy is to hear and see the believers love each other. Any other news makes me sick and unhappy. Let everyone speak to me about Love and I will love him more. The friends must be real peace-makers and not stirrer up of strives and the sowers of the seeds of discord and superiority of one another. I am not growing old, Ah! very old. All through my life I have carried on my back gladly the burdens of the believers. But now I ever anticipate to hear the good news of their services, services actually accomplished. Save this I have no other joy in this world. Will they not make me happy? Will they not answer my call when the shadow of the last night of my earthly life is falling slowly across my path? Will they not arise with a superhuman energy and united effort to spread the Cause, thus imparting to me new vigor? Will they not listen to me? Ah me! How my heart leaps with joy when I hear the friends are loving to each other, overlook each other’s small mistakes and forgive their enemies!” Then he would close his eyes and the listener was melted in tears and wished all the believers were here to see this moving, soul-stirring scene of divine love and pity and pleading of the Master for the display of greater love and charity on the part of the believers {{p39}} toward one another and toward the designers of the world. This morning after drinking tea from his tender hand he dictated for some of the friends in Persia giving them permission to leave for Egypt and gave a package of Tablets to translate for the American believers. In the afternoon Mrs. Beede called on the Master and found him in good humor. He spoke in English with her. "I ate today piece bread, little cheese, four olives and bowl broth! Very good. I sleep one hour. You well, happy! All right. Weather good today. Not cold, I go out Mirza Abdul Fazl." It was very sweet to hear him speak so well. I told him he does not need any interpreter because he can speak so many phrases and words with great facility. Then he went to Mirza Abdul Fazl to address the young Arab Bahais and told me to remain in the hotel waiting the arrival of someone who had made an appointment with him. On his return a French Doctor called and had an interview with him. Because he does not sleep at night as many hours as usual the Doctor has advised him to take a bath every night before going to bed. This is the third night that he has commenced and beneficial results are forthcoming. After his bath I rubbed his feet and breast for a long time. Then Khasro brought his supper about 10 o'clock. When he retired to his bed about 10:30 we left the hotel for our over abode in the expectation of seeing him again in the morning.###October 29th, 1913, Ramleh Egypt

Dear Friends:

Mrs. Stanwad left this morning for Cairo to prepare herself for the trip to India. Before her departure the Beloved called her into this Presence and spoke to her as follows:

"Consecrate all thy time to the service of the Kingdom of God and the propagation of its principles. Let thy one supreme concern be the promotion of the Word of God. Thou wilt be ever surrounded by the Invisible angels of Confirmations and they will always come to thy assistance. Whenever thou dost enter a meeting raise thy voice and say: 'O ye believers of God! This day is the day of your attraction! This day is the day in which you must diffuse the Fragrances of God! This day is the day that you must unfold the banner of the Kingdom of Abha! This day is the day of the proclamation of the oneness of the world of humanity! This day is the day of forgiveness and leniency! This day is the day of Truth and righteousness! This day is the day of conciliation and beatitude! This day is the day of awakening and enkindlement. Waste not your precious time in fault-finding and backbiting. Polish the surface of the mirrors of your hearts from the dross of human frailties, if you live according to the standard of other communities, then what difference does there exist between you and them! Baha-ollah has summoned you to such a lofty summit the very thought of which is too dazzling a {{p41}} prospect! He has not chosen you to be satisfied with water and clay! Then must live in a such a spiritual condition that thy very presence in the meetings may transform the audiences into the congregations of the elect and self-aglow in their hearts the Fire of the Love of God. Exalt thy ambition. Universalize thy ideals, spread thy wings of compassion over all the regrows of the globe. If some people come to thee alone complaining against each other don't listen to them, don't let them breathe the faults of others in thy presence. Tell them, 'I have not come here to engage my time with these things. I am not a judge. I have cause to summon the people to the Kingdom of Abha, to call you to unity and accord, to raise the dead, make mindful those who are unaware, awaken those who are sleep, breathe new life into the moldering bones and sound in the trumpet of resurrection. Friends! This is high time that you throw away these tales, these barren stories. God is not pleased with them, humanity is not pleased with them. Your time is too costly to be expended on these trifling events. You are made in the image and likeness of God. Your birthright is more valuable than all the treasures of the empires. Arise with heart and soul and let not these golden days ship by without results. This day is the day of the splendors of the sun of reality. This day is the day of the Lord of the Kingdom! This day is the day of the fulfillment of glorious providence. This day is the day of joy and fragrance! {{p42}} These petty bickerings and jealousies make one lose all the traces of spirituality excommunicate a person from the divine company of the worthies, submerge one in the sea of , suffer one to become cold and pessimistic and throws him headlong into the depth of despair and haunting hopelessness. You must not listen to any one speaking about another; because no sooner you listen to one than you must listen to someone else and thus the circle will be enlarged endlessly. Therefor O friends! Let us come together, forget all our self-thoughts and be in one accord and cry at the top of our voices, 'Ye Baha-El-Abha' ”

After the above talk the Master stayed in his room translating some of the Tablets lately revealed. Meanwhile a Jewish Bahai who had come to see the Beloved from Rasht and has been here and received permission to depart. A believer had just received a letter from the Persian Gulf giving the news of heaping persecution upon a Bahai. He said: “Happy is his condition, for in this letter part of his life he has become the object of sufferings in the Path of God! May we all attain to this great gift!”

In the afternoon the Master spoke about taking a trip to the upper Egypt! Lusor Assuit Asswan by the Cook's steamers which run on the Nile, giving excursion of one, two and three weeks but it was arranged that we may investigate the matter. Then the Chamberlain to the Khedine came to see the {{p44}} Beloved. He was with him for a long time. He is devoted to the Master. Someone said that if the Master takes this trip no one must follow him, no secretary must accompany him and no letters must be sent to him. “All right” I thought to myself “I am not a secretary neither will I carry any letter with myself” and forthwith I uttered my conviction in word. The Master laughed. “No indeed” he said half amused “Thou hast two positions here, secretary and translator.”

At four p.m. he told me to be ready because he was going to take a walk. As I was ready without having a recourse to my room I just walked behind him. Having reached the telegraph office at the Bacas station he ascended the few steps of the modest building and sat on the chain which was offered him by the head-operator. The master used to come often to talk with him or in other word “Elbow with men and miss with them” right in the market place. How wonderful it seems to me the power of the Beloved's adaptability to all people under most peculiar circumstances! How he brings himself to the intellectual or moral level of the listener and how he enjoys the free and unimpeded association of men. Here was the Lord of mankind sitting in a small telegraph office of Ramleh, talking hurtling Arabic with an operator and how he listened to Him. First he spoke about the brother of Khedorie and he met him in America and France, praising his progressive ideas and intelligence. Then he said: "Where I was {{p44}} in America I was most busy. Often I addressed meetings in a day and gave innumerable interviews from early morning till midnight. In Europe I spread certain divine Teachings which will ensure security to the human world and taught them that the foundation of the religions of God is one and the same. Now I have returned to Egypt in order to rest from the effect of this arduous journey and while I am here correspondence is uninterrupted with all parts of the West. All the newspapers and magazines published my addresses and the Western world is ringing with this Call. I have done this not because I expected the praises of men. Far from it! How foolish are some people who may think that we have accepted all these hardships and underwent forty years of incarceration by Sultan Abdul Hamid in order to receive the commendations of men. How thoughtless they are! Neither their adulation or blame shall reach me. I have done my work. I have sown my seeds and leave to the Power of God to cause their growth. You wait a few years longer and you will then hear the notes of this melodies music! Once upon a time there was a poor Hellah (former) whole cultivated a patch of ground with cotton. His neighboring farmers were all rich landlords and Pashas and so they prevented in a high handed manner those poor Hellah to receive his just share of water whereby to irrigate his parched farm. He pleaded several times to their fair sense of justice but they laughed him out of their presence. Finally realizing that his cotton will dry and labors fail, he {{p45}} went one midnight and changed the current of stream toward his own farm and irrigated it most thoroughly. When in the morning the landlords saw what their daring neighbor has done he sent for him and rebuked him severely. Not having satisfied with this they bastinadoed him very hard. While he was undergoing this cruel punishment he cried out 'O ye men! I have an already irrigated my farm. This will do you no good. I have saved the destruction of my crop from drought! Why do you inflict upon me such a useless torture! The earth is watered."

In a similar manner we have done our work the censure and criticisms of all mankind will not undo it. It is said that late at night a man was passing a house. He saw a man digging patiently and laboriously and quietly at the wall. "What art thou doing?" he asked "Oh I am digging the foundation?" the man in the dark answered "For what purpose?" "To rob the house" "But no one hears the noise of thy hammer. How is that?" "There is yet time. Tomorrow they will hear it. Its noise shall fill the whole town." Now before long the people of the Orient will be awakened and hear the great tones of the New Music of God."

Bidding the delighted operator goodbye he arose from his seat and returned homeward. On the way he stopped at the apartment of our beloved Mirza Abul Fazl, said a few words of greeting and came to the hotel.

Here we received a telegram from Ahmad Yazdi giving the news of the safe arrival of our two dear American sisters Mrs. Haag and Mrs. Wise. Permission was sent by wire and tomorrow they will be with the Lord of Majesty. They have journeyed for, little did I realized than less than a year I will be here with the Master ready to welcome back our American pilgrims.

Mrs. Von Lebarthal and Mrs. Seede called on the Beloved in the holy presence and had many spiritual questions to ask. One question was about the fish and the five loaves. "The five loaves" he explained "Are the five different kinds of teachings with which Christ satisfied a hungry multitude and the twelve baskets left over were the twelve disciples."

When the long interview came to asked he said "My hope is that in this dark world you may become like brilliant torches illuminating the gloomy path of the wandering travelers."

I left the Presence of the Beloved late at night, my heart happy and my soul peaceful because for the last few days I have been again permitted to be with the Master. For one hour I walked through the deserted streets and quiet Villas, thinkings over the Bounties of the Most Merciful.

Many people have left Ramleh for Cairo, because the social season has come to an end, the hotels are practically empty and one sees fewer people in the bazaars and avenues. But as long as the Heart of the world beats in this body (Ramleh) is the most important place of the world. ###October 30th, 1913, Ramleh Egypt

{{p47}}

Dear Friends:

Now that the trip to Haifa is given up after all its outward signs we are again at sea where the Master is going this winter. All the members of the Holy Family are gone save Mirza Jalal and he may also have for Haifa any moment. Of course Ramleh is very lovely, delightful place and it will be very quiet from now on but I don't think the active spirit of the Beloved will be satisfied. He needs rest but when all the means of rest are prepared for him he longs for activity; so if I am not mistaken the month of November will bring a change in our made of living, we may have a sea -voyage, where I do not know. The trouble or it may be the advantage is the Master never lets us know what he really and actually wants to do. However we are glad and satisfied with what the day livings to us and are supremely happy under the protection and glorious care of our Lord! As there are not many distractions one can to a certain degree concentrate his thought upon the object of his heart. The aim of our lives is to serve the Cause of Baha'u'llah and unfurl the Bannu of brotherhood amongst all the nations. We love this Cause not because it gives us joy and spiritual satisfaction but because it confers universal salvation upon all mankind, Abdul Baha today is the center around whom revolves the forces of unity and concord. He has made possible the gatherings of the East and of the West and the adequate foundation upon which the structure of human, solidarity shall be built is prepared by him. {{p48}} This morning I found the Master in his room reading our a package of Tablets for correction and his final signature. He desired to send a cablegram to Ahmad Yazdi to stop the departure of our American sisters from Port Said but it was too late. Later on Mrs. Von Lilianthal and Mrs. Beede and Hiscock called on the Beloved and received ample answers to their questions. To Miss Hiscock he said: "Thou art a good Bahai. Thy heart is at rest and I have great love for thee. I hope that wherever thou goest thou wilt be confirmed to serve the Cause." Later on Khosro brought to him several very small heads of lettuce and he ate these with the juice of pomegranate with great relish. He apparently enjoyed it and then as he could not sleep very well last night he tried to snatch an hour of quiet slumber out of the hand of latter time. For lunch he ate a little "Abgousht with bread. His fare is just as simple as his life. A telegram from Ahmad Yazdi gave us the news that Mrs. Haag and Mrs. Wise have left for Ramleh. I went to the station at 3:30 pm but it become apparent they were going to arrive at 7:30 so I returned home disappointed. I heard the Master is in the rose garden and as copies of the Christian Commonwealth containing his article on Universal Peace had just arrived I took a number to him. When I arrived I saw him sitting in front of a large patch of red roses, thousands of them making the air most fragrant- a symbol of his love for all the people. Mirza Ali Akhan and Mirza Moveer were there else but the Beloved was not speaking, he was looking straight into the faces of the roses <p49 conversing with them in the language of the spirit. It is only in such surroundings that one would like to see the Beloved - roses, everywhere roses, himself the Kings of all the roses, unfading, imperishable fragrant.

When I gave him the article glancing over it he said: "Universal Peace is the best panacea for the deceases of the Islamic world, because it cannot withstand the military aggression of the European natives. But the cause of international Peace is fully established then there will be no wear and the world of Islam will find eternal security. At present their social and intellectual lives are in a chaotic condition and on the verge of disintegration. They can face what is left to them through the proclamation of Universal Peace."

Then he came to the hotel where two Russian Princesses and two noble men from Russia who have already known somethings about the Cause were wasting his arrival. One of the women is elderly, knows 14 languages amongst which are Persian, Turkish and Arabic and lives during the winters in Egypt. She is a talented artist both with Argush and with musical instruments. The Master at first spoke to them about his journey through Europe and America and send me to bring some copies of the newspapers containing articles on the Cause. As she is a Theosophist she was also glad to get several copies of the Theosophy in Scotland and other similar .

A part of the Master's talk is as follows: {{p50}} "A Bahai is at the same time a Christian a Jew, a Zoroastrian and a Mohamadan. The Bahai Cause is like unto a tree on the branches of which you will find all manner of fruits, it is the ultimate goal to which all the paths are converging. The mysteries of the old Testament, the objects of Christianity, the principles of Islam and the inner teachings of the Theosophists are made to appear in this Cause. You will likewise find herein the essentials of divine and material philosophy. This Revelation is like unto a great banquet on which there are all kinds of dishes to satisfy the peculiar tastes of all people. A cause in this age must be Universal and man must embody the universality of the Cause, otherwise it will yield no fruit. For example a man has head, eyes, ears, hands, feet, heart, mind, soul and spirit then he is called a perfect man. The essential part of man is, however his spiritual faculties, (the glad-tidings of God) the powers of perception the comprehension of the divine mysteries. The spirit of man must be capable to journey throughout all the degrees of the world of creation. For instance he is in the East, he may travel throughout the West. He is living upon the earth he may travel the illimitable distance. Man must reach to this station. Otherwise he is not man he an animal. Just now were there no light in this glass it would have been dark. The spiritual powers in man is like the light in the glass. Our hope is to see all humanity united with the ties of one family to such an extent {{p51}} that the power of the spirit may encircle the earth and wipe away all the difference of race and nationalities. One is white, another is black, this is yellow and that one is red. I am tall and you are shot. All these are imaginations. I am Persian and you are a Russian! Creations of brain all these. When the spirit becomes the ruler all these non-essential considerations are wiped away. Just now, although we are of different nationalities we are perfectly united and are conversing together with great spirituality. Every movement in this world has a center. For example the power of gravitation has a center and although there are mint luminous centers of lights yet there is a most great center and that is the sun. Now in order that you be independent from all the smaller centers you must turn your face toward the great Orb. For example this electric bulb is a center of light but it only illumines the room but the sun shines upon all the created phenomena without any destination. This was a lovely night. Praise be to God that we associated together with the utmost of Concord. The power of divine spirit has brought in together. I hope that we may be together always spirituality that our spirits may talk one to another, that although we may never see each other in this physical body we may commune together on the plain of reality. May you ever be assisted the investigation of truth and the search of the God". {{p58}} They left the Beloved with the parting word that we shall never forget this meeting and this conversation.

Then the Master walked for half an hour on the open veranda of the Hotel and at 7 o'clock again I found myself at Sidi Jaber station to welcome our dear sisters. At 7:30 the train entered and I was indeed very joyful to see Mrs. Haag who was working all the time during the Beloved stay in California and Mrs. Wise who was our companion traveler in New York. We exchanged heartfelt greetings and were in the carriage after a few minutes. They have with themselves many loving messages from the friends of America and my heart went to them with divine gratitude. Having reached the hotel their rooms were assigned to them right on the same floor of the Beloved and very near to him. As he was rather fatigued he send his loving greeting to them with the message that they must rest tonight and he will see them tomorrow morning.

I wish all the Western believers were here to see our Master and hear his heart enabling words, but when one or two believers come we look upon them as they representatives in every sense. The spirit has so united that no difference is left. They are the rays of one light, the fruits of one tree the series of one sea and the notes on one music. They have known the truth and the truth has made them free. ###October 31th, 1913, Ramleh, Egypt

{{p59}}

Dear Friends:

Mirza Ali Akbar, the friend of Abdul Baha and the friend of the friends left the headquarter of the commander in chief for the active engagement in front. The Beloved took him this morning into the rose garden and while he was walking through the flower beds he spoke to him words of kindness and love.

“Thou hast been with me for a long time and I have grown to love thee very much. When I love people I do not tell them in their faces. You know how much I love Mirza Abdul Fazl and Haji Mirza Heydar Ali but I have seldom told them in their faces. I am sending thee away. Thou art not alone. The hosts of the supreme concourse are with thee. They will assist thee and reinforce thee under all conditions. Doctors tell me I must completely rest (and he turned his wondrous eyes straight to him). Don’t listen to them. When I hear good news from the believers, then my health is improved. Now if thou longest to see me in good condition, go away and serve the Cause and teach the souls. The news of thy spiritual conquest will make me well. Wherever thou goest announce my wonderful Bahai greeting to the teachers of the Cause and tell them on my behalf: ‘The responsibility of the steady progress of the Cause depends upon you. You are the physicians of the sick body of the world of humanity. You must not stay anywhere for a long time. Travel ye from land to land like the apostles of Christ and carry with you the glad-tidings of the kingdom of Abha to the remotest corners of the earth. Why are {{p60}} ye silent? Shout! Why are ye sitting? Move. Why are ye quiet? Stir. This is not the day of rest and comfort. Travel ye constantly and spread far and wide the teachings of God. Like unto the stars arise ye every day from a horizon. Like unto the nightingales, sing every day from the different rose bush. Like unto the breeze waft every morning from a garden. Do not stay a long time anywhere. Let the world profit by your lessons and learn from your examples. My health does consist in the progress of the Cause and the progress of the Cause depends upon the energy and wisdom of the teacher!’”

Our brother left at two o’clock for Haifa. From there, after a few days he will go to Constantinople. After his departure the aster sent for Mirza Jalal and told him to take Mirza Monur and myself to the Russian steamer and bid him our last farewell. As the steamer was going to leave at 5pm we had ample time. After 40 minutes ride on Tramway we found him in his Cabin. He was most thankful to our Lord for his loving messages and extreme kindness. We stayed with him half an hour and expressed our hope that he will be confirmed and assisted in his glorious mission. While we were in our little boat returning to the shore we saw the French warships and troops beat the decks with flags and hunting. Mirza Moneer said (pointing to the warships) Abdul Baha desires to remove from the face of the seas these monstrous blotches upon the present day civilization with the point of his pen and he will do it with the assistance of the Holy Spirit. The world, no doubt must learn the lessons of Peace at a heavy cost. They must use all these brute forces before they realize their fertility. At present they are like the children. They are playing with these dreadnoughts and warships and know not the impending danger. Soon they will come to their senses and know their own follies. Like drunken people they cannot think intelligently. What a waste of money and humanity!

When we landed on the pier we did not take the car but walked back through the Arab quarter! I walked through the narrow streets like a dazed man! What filth! What dirt! What poverty! Small, narrow houses like dark jails, the children covered with dirt coming out of these dreadfully unsanitary houses, little shops and restaurants men squatting on the floor! Such evil odor filling the narrow lanes, women all pale and haggard looking! As I passed by I looked through the open doors of the houses and through the dark passages I saw women beautifully dressed sitting on the damp floor. How my heart ached at these dreadful sights! It seemed to me that civilization has marched all this time above their head and has not left the slightest impression in their manners and customs. You see, there are certain things that we must learn by going to school and there are other things that we learn easily by observations and examples. Now I thought as I was going through these unclean streets there are many things in the line of sanitation and cleanliness that these Arabs could learn from their constant contact with the Europeans but no! They have not done so. Really I was sad spectator of all these squalor and misery and wondered all night whether there is a way to teach these Arabs the better ideals of life, a life so full of the Beautiful and joy if we just look from the right standpoint.

In the morning the Beloved received Mrs. Haag and Mrs. Wise. He asked about the health and condition of many believers and how they fared on their long journey. "I am most pleased with the believers of California. They are sincere and full of devotion. There is no feeling of superiority of one over another and no differences of opinions exist." The believers must truly and cordially love one another and serve mankind to the best of their ability" "This divine power shall encircle the East and the West and today it is being spread all over the world."

In the afternoon the Beloved spent his time all alone in the rose garden. There was no one there to trouble him and he read his correspondence. When we returned in the evening again he asked for Mrs. Haag and Mrs. Wise. This time they presented to him the loving messages of many friends and received answers for each. They were most happy to be the those permitted to cause and {{p63}} see him in Egypt. The friends of God must devote all their time in teaching the Cause and spreading the rays of the Sun of Truth." he said at last "You see how this world is dark, they must illumine it; how the people are material, they must illuminate it; they must spiritualize them; how they are negligent they must make them aware."

A lovely nice Kodak brought by Mrs. Haag will be my future companion and I hope I will be able to use it to the best advantage. There will be many scenes and people who will find a place in the film of my Kodak and in turn all of you will share with me the joy of seeing them if not in person, at least in photographs.

I may bring this mouth to a close by giving you the translation of a tablet revealed the other night to a believer in Persia showing again how important is the cause of teaching the truth in these days. "O thou who art chosen by Abdul Baha for the diffusion of the fragrances of God! Thy letter was received. Praise be to God that in Marageh thou hast become confirmed and assisted. Today no praiseworthy action can be compared with teaching the Cause of the forgiving Lord. For this is the seed sowing time. Every real farmer engages his time only in seed-sowing. But the heedless ones during the seed-sowing season think of the time of the crop. Harvesting is one of the columns of agriculture but not in the time of seed-sowing. The crop is the result of farming but not as {{p64}} the time of irrigation. Now, praise be to God that thou hast occupied all thy time in seed-sowing and unquestionably thou shall become assisted and aided. Travel thou in all the cities of and guide the souls to the fountain of light. And when thou findest time journey through Caucasus and guide the people to the Religion of God. All the countries have attained to the greatest capacity but very little teaching is done. In another tablet to the "Assembly of teaching" in Hamadan he says.

O ye blessed souls! Many assemblies are formed and organized in this world but the name of this Assembly is the hope of the people of Heart. It is indicative of teaching and from the Kingdom of Abha is honored with the eloquent firman. "Assembly" means the diffusion of the fragrance of God. "Assembly" means humility and friendliness toward the believers of God. "Assembly" means the promotion of the word of God. "Assembly" means to be sanctified and holy from all else save God. Such is the spiritual assembly. Such is the divine meeting. Such is the lordly congregation! The ultimate desire of Abdul Baha is the organization of such assemblies and he is their servant: for this servitude is the crown of eternal sovereignty and this thralldom is freedom from both worlds.

Therefore, O ye divine friends, strive with heart and soul" so that you may become a life member and an eternal organ of the heavenly assembly and the meeting of the Kingdom of Abha. ###November 1st, 1913, Ramleh Egypt

Dear Friends

The clean, bracing air, the turquoise blue sky, the soft rays of the sun, the wafting of the cool breeze and the occasional showers have made the weather of Ramleh most exhilarating! Under the charm of such invigorating air the health of the Beloved is daily improving, the hours of his sleep become longer and the reservoir of his physical energy better supplies. One month or even one week of complete rest works wonder and he will be then better enabled to cope with many branches of his spiritual work. When he enjoys comparative good health at this advanced age the world will become richer through his teachings and instructions. The moral atmosphere of mankind in this age has become foul and vitiated he must purify it. The tone of the divine life is lowered; he must raise it. The palace of human welfare is threatened with destruction he must safeguard it. The river of heavenly graces is dammed; he must cause it to flow. The mirrors of the hearts of mankind are be clouded; he must polish them. The sea of celestial susceptibilities is calmed down; he must set it into motion. Humanity is confused and restless; he must confer upon it order and serenity. The ideals of the kingdom of Abha are as yet invisible; he must disclose them. The Cause of universal peace is in the hearts of men; he must lay its solid foundation. Hail unto him! For he has all power and might and we are all his servants standing before him! {{p2}} After taking his tea and receiving a number of visitors he called for Mirza Moner and toward the rose garden he set his feet. From morn till noon the Beloved walked through the golden avenues and shady lanes of the ideal rose garden of Abha preparing bouquets of never fading, colorful flowers to be sent as never to be forgotten souvenirs to all parts of the world. Every spring this rose garden bursts and into the luxuriance of a thousand multi-colored flowers the fragrance of which is welcomed by all the lovers of nature but the rose garden of Abdul Baha is abloom in all the seasons and its fragrance is hailed by the spiritually-minded people. The flowers of the farmer are only for a few days and then fade away, while that of the latter are for all ages and cycles. The petals, the hue and the perfume of the one are the outcome of the chemical refinement of the lower elements, whereas that of the latter are made with the indestructible elements of the kingdom, its petal is the love of God, its hue the essence of knowledge and its perfume the compassion of the almighty. As the spiritual gardener he plants in the ground of the hearts the seeds of the flowers of reality; so that the conscience of every person may become an ideal, delightful rose garden. He desires us that we may pull over the thorns of selfishness and the tares of in order that these seeds may receive the rays of the sun of truth and the rain of the clouds of providence. May we become confirmed to act in accord with his good pleasure and prepare a holy place for him in our hearts. {{p3}} In the afternoon he wrote manu short Tablets with his own hand for the Zoroastrian believers in India. He loves these people so much that he revealed these epistles for them as a mark of his love and affection. Although each tablet carries on its envelope many names I translate herein only the text:

He is God "O ye friends of God! Praise be to God that those pure souls are released from the world of matter and enlisted in the rank of the angels of the universe of the spheres; that is you have obtained a heavenly nature and found your way to the secret chamber of his highness the merciful. (Sig) Abdul Baha Abbas>”

He is God ”O thou forgiving Lord! Shed Thy Radiance upon these servants of thine and give unto them a melodies voice in the rose garden of the most high! Make them the musicians of the heavenly feast. Suffer them to become soul-sacrificing in the arena of nearness and unions and let them rest on the couch of the everlasting glory. Verily thou art the giver, the generous, the pardoner and the kind! (Sig) Abdul Baha Abbas.

He is God! O ye real friends! Whosoever belongs to the company of the elect, his head is at the Threshold. Whosoever is humble, he is the most noble and whosoever is dispossessed of passion and desire, he possesses everything. Therefore walk ye in the footsteps of Abdul Baha for he is in the utmost state of humility and submissiveness. Upon ye be Baha El Abha. (Sig) Abdul Baha Abha.

He is God! “O ye servants and the maid servants of God! Happy are ye for ye have found the Sovereign of the heavenly empire, heard the music of the spheres of the kingdom, without waiting ye have turned your faces toward his highness the incomparable one and displayed sagacity and understanding. I hope that ye may become worthy for the crown and the throne of eternity and each one of your become the general of the army of God. (Sig) Abdul Baha Abbas!”

He is God! O ye wooers of the Beloved of regions! The true Beloved like unto the Joseph of Canaan, unveiled his face entered the emporium of Persia. Some desired to buy him with more words and others tried to gain his love through self-sacrifice. Those who wished buying him with words did not show steadfastness and soon after words they thought they were cheated. But those who came forward with the idea of self-sacrifice found the beautiful Joseph in arms of supplication and invocation. Therefore thank ye God that ye are sincere buyers! (Sig) Abdul Baha Abbas.

He is God! “O ye divine believers! For many centuries the horizon of Persia was dark and the country of Iran an open arena for the Arab, Turk and Tajik. Now the sun of the universe on high hath shone forth from the orient o glory and its zodiacal tower was the region and the providence of Persia. Therefore the Zoroastrians must commemorate that day like unto {{p5}} the auspicious new year’s day and occupy their time in celebrating the praises and commendations of the forgiving Lord with the utmost joy and gladness. Upon ye be Baha! (Sig) Abdul Baha Abbas”

He is God! ”O ye beloved maid servants of God! In this most wonderful dispensation God hath clothed the women with a new garment and hath crowned their heads with a glorious diadem and that is; equality between men and women. Therefore in the coming ages the women shall make signal progress. Hence, render thanks unto the Lord who hath bestowed upon ye such priceless gift. Upon ye be Baha! (Sig) Abdul Baha Abbas

After writing these beautiful tablets with his own blessed hands drinking his tea he sent for Haji Niaz and together they took the train up to Sidi Jabar and then a carriage drive through the Nogha garden. On the way he talked with Haji Niaz on the beauty of the shifting scenes and dwelt on some old events of the Cause in which the old veteran had participated. On his return he ate some lettuce and rested for a while. Then he called for our American visitor. It was about six o'clock. After greeting each and inquiring about her health and comfort he said: "You must feel very happy because you have with me and we are associating together with the utmost kindness. In reality, our stay here is like unto worship, for praise be to God we are occupied with his mention and have no other aim same his good pleasure. It is my hope that its important {{p6}} results will be the issue of our gatherings in this place. All the people are sleep but you are awake. They are all engaged with the affairs of this world but ye are occupied with the thoughts of God. This is a most important Bestowal! It is not made possible for every soul. In this connection Christ says: Many are called but few are chosen. The importance of this fact is not made evident in this day but it will become known in the future. The believers in Christ gathered together in those early days but on one thought their meetings were important. Later it become manifest and its importance unfolded. Similarly our gathering together at this time may not have any outward importance but its richness and superiority will become known afterward.

The aim of the long journey that I undertook to America thus necessitating to cover a long distance was to teach those who had not hear of this Cause, that the fame of the Cause of God might reach every year, the believers of God might be trained, that they might be vested with spiritual characteristics, might become illumined merciful and the lights of the kingdom might shine in their hearts. Thus in all the degrees of creation they might become distinguished from the rest of the worlds; in the refinement of ethics they might become distinguished from everyone else; in sincerity they might become distinguished from all the people and they might the characterized and qualified with the virtues of opposition against the sinister orcs of ego and self. Thus their highest desire might because the God pleasure of the Lord and might attain to the station of self-renunciation, thereby they might obtain eternal life and might become real Bahais. This was my object and for this reason I accepted willingly the hardships of this long trip. This body of mine is totally affected by the difficulties of the journey. It is as though all my limbs and organs are disjoined from each other. I hope that these hardships of mine will yield results which results might contribute to the welfare and happiness of mankind.

One of the ladies asked whether he was in the rose garden." Roses make us mindful of Baha-ollah."She said,"It is well." he said "For example when we enter a rose garden we think how through the heat and the rays of the material sun such wonderful fragrant flowers are produce out of the black soil. Then we are lead to the thought of the world of humanity, to the ideal flowers and roses that are being produced through the revelation of Baha-ollah. Just as this phenomenal sun is the educator of the contingent beings, likewise the sun of reality is the educator of the ideal principles of life. Then after reflecting over the above thought we make our utmost effort to reach the ray of the sun of reality and through its assistance might develop in ourselves the virtues and excellence of kingdom.” Many other questions were asked and the Beloved gave ample answers. He told them to keep a diary, therefore I do not need to go here into all the details as they will later on spread their own account. In the evening Mrs. Sayad Hassein Afnan arrived from Cairo and had a long interview with the Master. He stayed over for the night but will leave tomorrow.

###November 2nd, 1913, Ramleh Egypt

{{p8}}

Dear Friends!

His Royal Highness Mohammad Ali Pasha is the brother of the of Egypt. He is a great traveler and student of the customs and manners of different nations. Last year he took a long trip through the United States and Canada and the result of his varied experiences and learned observations is embodied in a compact volume of 424 pages just out of publication. This book is now on my table and I find on page 414 an excellent testimony by this royal prince about his interview with the beloved in New York. For the benefit of our Western readers I will give herein an exact translation. The book is of course written in Arabic. He writes:

“On the morning of Monday July 22nd we rode in a carriage and went out to buy some architectural books dealing with the American school of Architecture in order to present them to Mahmoud Bay Fahmy the head architect of Vakfo. On our return to the hotel they announced to me that the learned and erudite the glorious oriental, Abbas Effendi, the leader of the Bahais desire to pay me a visit. I appointed the hour of 3 in the afternoon of this day. At 2 o'clock came to me Jalal Bay the Turkish Consul to the United States. I found him a perfect gentleman. On his face I observed dignity and virtue and through his talk I detected his power and ability. I was delighted with him and begged of God to increase the number of such Turkish officials especially in the European countries. {{p4}}”Afterward Abbas Effendi arrived. I arose and welcomed him. His presence imparted me exceeding joy and I reversed him accordingly. His marvelous intelligence is not in the least by the old age. He stayed with me for more than one hour and spoke to me on Sunday subjects which were most instructive and indicated faintly the vast range of his knowledge and the unlimited variety of his information. Lo! And behold he is a wise man, great and the greatest man of the orient! After the departure of the glorious personage we got an automobile.

”Afterward we went to pay back the visit of Abbas Effendi. I found his home comparatively small but containing all the means of comfort and order. There I saw about the persons who wore on their head Persian hats. From this I realized that this honorable wise man has divined the American disposition in thus bringing with himself this large number of people in order to attract their attention. By this statement I do not mean in the least to detract from the position of this Person, may rather this idea of his denotes again most forcibly his intelligence and his knowledge of the ways through which the souls are attracted and the people are satisfied.

“As regards to his innumerable addresses. They were effective in the hearts. Verily these addresses started a great intellectual revolutions in America and at this very {{p10}} moment they are quoted in the newspapers and magazines and made the form center of a great discussion. Around these addresses the opinions of their learned men of religion revolves his influence and power has reached to such a degree that the envious indeed envy him. I stayed with him for a long time. I spoke to him and he spoke with me. The charm of his words enthralled me. Then I departed from his presence. For ever I do preserve in my heart his love and honor.”

Today the Master had Osman Pasha and a few others as his guests at lunch. Khosro was ordered to prepare a good oriental dinner. The guests arrived at noon. Before noon the Beloved went out and had a long walk. I may just well say here that the Biography of Prince Mohamad Ali contains a good sized introduction by this Osman Pasha who is taught as one of the most intellectual men of Egypt and a man much loved and admired by Kheduie. At the table the Master served Pilau and chicken to our America believers which they enjoyed very much. For more than three hours he spoke with these men on almost any subject under the sun and when he ascended the stairs to go to his room and rest he was very tired. He arose from his nap about 5 o'clock and came to our room. He felt very happy and his face was full of smiles. He said he liked to slap me and which he started to do it before I could say 'yes'. When the slap {{p11}} was given he laughed and asked me to say aloud Alhamdollet-lah. This I did but the thought it would be better to repeat it again this time a little louder. Then he sat in the porch and the tea was served to him. His happiness was contagious and my heart in me responded to it and the outward manifestation of it were tears, but I had to check them before he could turn his face.

Sheik Asad and another Pasha - two members of the Turkish Parliament from Syria have just arrived from Constantinople. They are old friends of the Beloved. They sent their secretary to inform him about their arrival in Alexandria and the Beloved immediately went to the city to call on them. He returned about 9 o'clock and brought with himself two very influential officials. As our American sisters were in the reception room he spoke about the recognition of Mohamad as the prophet of God. Till eleven o'clock he was speaking with these men. In the afternoon Mrs. Haag and Mrs. Wise called on Mirza Abul Fazl. Twelve years ago he was living in Portland and Mrs. Hagg and the deceased Mrs. Cle and Mrs. (unreadable) many weeks attended the instruction classes taught by him. Therefore it was a great joy to hath to both to meet each other after so many years. In the course of conversation he said: 'You must be very proud and happy because our Lord Abdul Baha travelled through your land. Up to this time the feet of no founder of religion have tried on the soil of America. This is the first instance in the history of the world. Teaching in the United States at this time must be comparatively easy; because many people either have seen the Master or heard him speak or read about him in the press. They know that the spirit of this Cause is brotherhood and freedom from prejudice. When you speak about this revelation to a Christian you do not tell him 'Leave your Christ' because you as Bahai believe more firmly in the Christ and have a cleared conception of him, but you tell him 'Discard your prejudice, love mankind, see the countenance of your Father in every face, love your brother catholic or Methodists, love the devotees of other religions. Consequently your work is chiefly a work of conciliation; you must convince people that fellowship is better than enmity. We must put aside all these names and worship the reality" Many other subjects were discussed, all of them most instructions. He served them tea with his own hand and before they left three photos were taken, two above of Mirza Abul Fazl and one with our two sisters.

This was a very full day for the Beloved for he talked for hours with these men. Although not Bahais, they love the Master very sincerely and will do anything for him. From him they receive light and guidance and they are deeply grateful. His praise is on their lips, his love in the depths of their hearts. ###November 3rd, 1913, Ramleh Egypt

Dear Friends!

I have started every letter with the simple two words "Dear friends", knowing well the quality of friendship is more permanent and lasting amongst those who are handed together in the kingdom of Abja and that this friendship is "dear" to the heart of each one of us. What magic touch and power there lie in the spirit of a true friend. The thoughts of a friend are just as precious to us as the brilliant jewels. The latter adorn the body, the former embellish the mind. How after we are transported into the seventh heaven of rapture because a friend has sent his loving thoughts to us! It is to a certain degree true that we "meet" of often those who are absent because we have only to shut our eyes and dream of those who are thousands of miles away from us while those who are around us are precluded from this ideal companionship. Physical friendship is limited and shallow. Spiritual friendship is unlimited and deep. The former is the light of the candle, the latter is the effulgence of the sun. There is no separation between those who are spiritually united with the bonds of friendship. Friendship is the elixir of life and the healer of many wounds. The aureole of friendship is around the heads of those who have given up everything for the sake of the Beloved. Friendship is spontaneous instinctive and not calculate nor taught. Like unto the sun it rises slowly but surely from the horizon of the heart. Its charm is irresistible its beauty is bewitching, its simplicity is , its object is humane and its support is sincerity.

{{p14}}

Early this morning our American sisters found themselves in the presence of the Beloved. They all set silence drinking in the spiritual atmosphere that surround his divine personality. They were of course most happy to be thus honored. After a while he raised his majestic head and said in Emplish: "This is beautiful weather, beautiful sunshine, weather is like California. East is temperate now, moderate like spring. Chicago, New York, Paris, London cold now."

Then he spoke through the translate as follows: "Today I am going to speak to you on the object of the appearance of the prophets. It is evident that the world of humanity is in need of educators. As we look at the phenomenal world we observe that growth and development depend upon culture and education. For example when we look at the plant life and the trees we observe that if they have no gardener they are turned into a jungle. The trees will remain sickly and fruitless and there will be no symmetry, no order and no beauty in the garden. But if the jungle falls into the hands of a gardener fruitless trees will be grafted by him and become fruitful. Or if the trees have been stunted by neglect, yielding poor fruits, the care of the gardener transforms them, causing them to produce delicate and luscious fruits. Whereas formerly they had no freshness and delicacy they gain these attributes through cultivation. Through the training of the gardener the little rose with live petals is changed into a rose of a hundred petals units fragrance increasing correspondingly. Thus having been a small rose it becomes a large one. This shows that in the vegetable kingdom there must need be a gardener. {{p15}} Now if we cast a glance in the mineral kingdom we see that a piece of ground left without a gardener, thistles and thorns will grow on its surface and weeds and tares abound and the earth loses its fertility. But if a farmer is engaged and the land entrusted into his hands, after a while we observe that through his labors it will yield fruits and vegetables. He pulls up the thistles and plants flowers. From an ungainly appearance the land is transformed into a charming scenery. From this we understand that even the mineral kingdom is in need of cultivation. The wilderness holds no charm of life because it is not green with vegetable luxuriance but the prairies, the widows and cultivated farms have great attraction to the eyes. Consequently the mineral kingdom requires a person to cultivate it, that it may become productive.

When we look at the animal kingdom what a difference we find between the domestic and the wild animals! The dog is one of the domestic animals; the jackal is one of the wild animals. Although these two are much alike in appearance yet in action they are very different. The sheep is a domestic animal, the wolf is a ferocious beast and we see what a difference there exists between the one and the other! The wild dog running over the mountains is one of the most ferocious beasts. It is naturally savage, ravenous and ungrateful in disposition. No matter how much kindness a person showers upon this sort of a dog the result is ungratefulness. This also demonstrates that the animal kingdom is in need of education.

Coming to the human kingdom we observe that the uncivilized and uneducated are similar to the wild tribes of Africa lower than the animals. We see that the animal does not tear to pieces and devour those of his own kind but in Africa cannibalism still is practiced in certain parts. A tribe will kill and eat those belonging to it. There is nothing worse than a savage man. But if he is given an education he will become a perfect being. As man who has not received an education is the center of all the defects; give him the necessary education and he will become the collection center of all the virtues. An uncivilized man is a calamity to the world of humanity, an educated person is the light of mankind. The uneducated man is the destroyer of the world of humanity, the educated man is the constructor of human race.

This finally bring us to the conclusion that the world of humanity, including all the lower kingdoms, is in need of education.

The above statements are however only the premises and at our next lesson we will go a step further.

Then the Beloved was left alone for an hour or two after which he went to our house and stayed a long time there. He was in a hilarious mood and related several stories which brought forth laughter and tears to the eyes.

At noon he had honored guests at the table, two of the Turkish Representatives from Syria. At the table he spoke to them about his tour in the United States and Europe, because this was the thing they were most interested to hear. They had read a great deal about {{p17}} his marvelous work in the Press but they were eager to hear the account from his own lips.

In the afternoon the 14 French warships of various sizes passed by and the Master with a marine glass in his hand went up on the roof of the Hotel to see them passing out of view. They were formed in a military procession, quite distant from each other, an imposing spectacle of armed peace. From here they go to Beirut, then they will touch other ports before they return home. The Beloved looked at them through his glass for a long time. The clouds of pains and sorrows were slowly gathering on his ample brow. What was he thinking? What were the thoughts that were crowding in upon his mind? What ideals of Peace were seething in his brain in contradistinction to these iron-clad dreadnoughts? What were the emotions of his heart as he looked the passing by of this naval demonstration and pageantry? Slowly he raised his head. In his eyes I saw the pity and compassion for the ignorance of man in his grace was depicted not despair but the light of the unquenchable hope. "Yes" he closed his eyes, and as though talking to all the peace-workers and peace lovers of the world. "The law of peace has cause to stay. We are living in the radiant age of Peace. The angels of peace are having above our heads. We are daily advancing in the path of peace. The army of peace is being recruited from amongst all nations and people. Let the pacifists know that the unquenchable power of God that irresistible, moral, ineffable. Somethings is behind them. No government and no nation {{p18}} can withstand them. With this power alone they will be able to defeat all opposition and remove all the stumbling blocks. From now on lesser and lesser will be the magic spell of war, greater and greater will be the influence of peace. The day is coming when the dove of peace shall reign over all the continents, the laws of peace shall rule all the nations and the resources of war will be expended over that which would be conducive to the spiritualization of mankind. Let all the pacifists gather their scattered forces and combine their material and moral resources. They must look forward and not backward; above and not below/ They are the real benefactors of humanity, the burning torches of bright hope. Just as the heaven is above the earth, so their ideals must soar above the ideals of this age. Unfailingly they must inspire the hearts with peace and concord! With perfect faith and assurance they must toil and labor and know of a certainty that the goal is ahead. They shall rich there if they work steadily and firmly. The Lord of hosts is reinforcing them. The sun of peace is up in the horizon and its rays are penetrating through the clouds prejudice and ignorance. These warships will be changed into the merchants steamers hiding the nations and countries more closely together. The cry of peace is being heard from every throat and the sweet, resonant harmony of peace shall drown all the screeching noises of war. Blessed are those who are enlisted in the rank of peace!"

Dear Friends!

Everyone in the Bahai movement today feels the need of greater activity, more efficient propaganda, a broader field of labor and an unchanging and unchangeable quality of enthusiasm, the statement of Christ is just as significant and true today as 900 years ago that the harvest is ready but the laborers are very few. The world is ripe for the reception of the revelation but it must be presented them in the same spirit of Abdul Baha. From every possible new point the Beloved has been of late urging the believers to put forward a new zeal in the promotion of the teachings and the spread of the cause. They must subordinate all other objects to this object and with unparalleled determination unfurl the Flag of this truth from the Kingdom of every opportunity. They must invite the souls to the meetings. They must rest neither by day nor by night, for the day is so short and the people are anxious to find the way and the life. They are searching and investigating, longing to see the light and free from darkness. While the iron is hot they must strike and strike very hard.

{{p20}}

For this reason I may again translate herein the contents of a few tablets recently revealed by Abdul Baha; "Truly I say his honor is striving with all his powers in the diffusion of the Fragrances of God. Therefore for a few months he must travel in and around province. From there he may go to India to spread the message, then to the Holy Land."

"Praise be to God that the Fragrances are daily spreading in those parts. This is through the self-sacrifice of the friends. Therefore with heart and soul Abdul Baha supplicates toward the Beloved of the spirits so that the effulgence of his beauty and perfection may be reflected upon the nature and disposition of the friends. May they at every moment find a new spirit! And carry away a manifest victory! It is assured that this prayer will be fulfilled. If Abdul Baha had time and opportunity he might have written individual letters to each and all the believers. Notwithstanding this he is busy day and night and letters are being forwarded uninterruptedly to the friends. This is through the motion of the sea of the love of Abdul Baha who loves each one of the believers better than his life and spirit.”

Praise be to God that the believers of are in the utmost of happiness and poise and are engaged in the service of the Manifest Light. I hope that in the future they may be confirmed in teaching the most great message. The friends of God must associate with the spirit of friendship with other souls and show to them infinite love and {{p21}} tenderness. This kind of association will display an effect in the hearts of many people. Then they will listen to the words. Whenever they see what a capability is created, they may speak with wisdom and difference and utter the words with dignity and kindness. At first they must make the effort to remove all the barriers of reserve and indifference. For example, each one of the believers may select at the very least one soul in a year. In the beginning he must show him the beauty of friendship and hospitality in a practical way so that he may not shun his association, then little by little he may teach him the truth. This is one of the many best ways.”

“In reality, Hamadan may rather all Persia has found infinite capability. Therefore all the friends must unloosen their tongues in teaching the Cause; that is, each one of the believers may at least associate at least with one outside in year. In the first he may only show him companionship and friendship and astonish him with his praiseworthy actions and deeds. When love is obtained between them then he may teach him step by step. It is possible for every believer to teach in this manner.”

”O ye real friends! In every country and city of the world innumerable meetings are organized. Their organizations are well established and mass varied in nature. But the objects of all such meetings belong to the {{p22}} material world. Here is a meeting the object of which the accumulation of wealth; there is a syndicate the aim of which is to usurp the property of the nation. Here is a club the clarion call of which is imperialism and militancy and there is a society for the exploitation of mines, the invention of infernal instruments and the making of deadly armaments. But praise be to God in Hamadan the merciful assembly is organized. That assembly must be illumined. The illumination of every assembly is teaching the cause of God. The spirituality of every meeting id the diffusion of the Fragrance of God. The mercifulness of every gathering place is to correspond the deeds, actions and behavior in accord with the teachings of God. This is the meetings! This is the assemblage! This is the gathering! Blessed are those who are assisted there into! Upon ye be Baha El Abha! (Sig) Abdul Baha Abha.

He is God! ”O God! O God! Thou beholds these faces are brightened by the light of Guidance these eyes are looking toward thy kingdom El Abha, these hearts are overflowing with thy love amongst mankind and these breasts are dilated with the signs of thy unity in the expanse of the earth.

O Lord! They have relinquished the lowest depth of superstitious and soared toward the seventh spheres the speak of knowledge.

{{p23}}

O Lord! Assis them with the army of proofs and guidance's, confirm them with wisdom and understanding and inspire their tongues with such eloquence and elucidation as to humble the intelligence and conquer the voices!

O Lord! They are poor! Make them rich with the treasury of thy Kingdom. They are lovely, under them through the outpouring of thy realm of might! They are thirsty, cause them to drink from the fount of Tasnim (a fountain in Paradise) and they are naked dress them with the garment of sanctity! Verily thou art the clement! Thou art the compassionate the merciful and verily thou art the bountiful, the ancient! (Sig) Abdul Baha Abha

Last night Haji Sayad Javad arrived from Cairo and stayed over in the hotel to see the Master. He was standing in his presence this morning, receiving his instructions before leaving for Port Said. What an old man he is! There are so many old! Bahai men in these parts, all between 70 and 90 years, many of them have seen Baha-ollah many of them and up to this day whole-heartedly working for the progress of the Cause.

A letter was received about a friend stating that she has cremated the body of someone died in the family. The master said: "This is not good. Why do they step so suddenly the wheels of evolution? The body is composed of so many elements and each element in its dissolution must return to its original constituent substance. Now cremation {{p24}} arrests too suddenly this process of returning of each element to its original part. Someday this body will become flowers and adorn the field with loveliness and charm. Why should we then hinder this charming transformation? What would we gain incarcerating the ashes of this body in a glass bottle?

After a while the Beloved called into his room one of our American sisters. She was weeping with joy and could not contain her feeling of capture and delight. She went and kissed his hands. "How she is pure at heart. Whenever she enters the room my heart is rejoice other sight" he told me. Then to her: "I love this very much. From thy heart I sense the feelings of spirituality and sanctification. I hope that the banner of this cause will be upraised first in America, for the Capability of America is very much. The American believers must demonstrate an extraordinary effort to spread the cause. Often one soul becomes the cause of the spiritual awakening of one city, once divine lamp will illumined a whale empire." When she left the Beloved said with a vibrant note of happiness in his voice: Truly I say, what a wonderful woman she is! I wish all the souls become like unto her. Her heart is illumined, her spirit is pure and holy. Like unto a mirror she is clear."

In the afternoon we were sent to Alexandria to find out the steamers that shall leave with the next few days for Port Said. The Beloved {{p25}} desires to take a short trip on sea and at the same time meet a number of pilgrims gathered there. Doctor and Mrs. Getsinger also have returned from Haifa and are now in Port Said waiting the Master's command."

On our return from Alexandria the Master was sitting in the Hall of the Hotel. These days belonging to the manager were scampering around. Their jollification brought to his memory a dog story. "There was in Acca" he said a Greek merchant who had grown very wealthy. He has a dog which followed him everywhere and was renowned for its intelligence and faithfulness, He understood everything his master told him. Once he had piled many loads of wheat in front of the mosque in the center of the public square. The Sheikh of the mosque came to him and said 'You must pay somethings for this taking much space in front of the mosque!' 'I will do mothing of the kind! The Sheikh threatened to carry away a load of wheat. The merchant said something in the ear of the dog. It climbed the loads and stood there keeping guard. As soon as the Sheikh came near to make good his threat, the dog came down on him and he had to fly away for his life. This Greek merchant died after a years ago. The dog became very disconsolate and would go to the touch of the master and bemoan and bark. Several times they brought it back. Finally they had to tie it with a rope. All night it would only weep/ it would eat nothing and finally died in this pathetic state. On the other hand, three days after the merchant's death his wife put aside black and was laughing and making merry. Although he was so good to her in his life that he had made it a rule to bring her something every day. Afterward when it became known, people said to the same account the dog was faithful to the merchant, his wife was unfaithful."

{{p26}}

Dear Friends:

The beloved having his tea and inquiring about the health of each of his servants take me to ask our American sisters to come and see him. After two or three minutes they were sitting in his Holy Presence. He was writing a tablet but he did not put it aside and commenced speaking in his rich divine tone:

"The other day we touched upon the subject; convening the object of the appearance of the prophets. For what purpose did God send Moses? For what object did Christ appear? What was the mission of his holiness Mohamad? Why did his holiness the Bab step forth upon the arena of the world? For what cause did his holiness Baha-ollah manifest himself? The answer is: The appearance of all these divine men is for no other reason save the education of the world of humanity. Thus mankind may become the dawning place of the virtues of the Lord of hosts, obtain eternal life and be established upon the throne of the kingdom. Through this education the drop may become a sea, the atom find the importance of the sun, the extinguished lamp become the brilliant star and the wild tree a fruitful one. Consequently, if we observe a person qualified with these characteristics, then he is the first educator of mankind and the first instructor of the race. Then there remains {{p27}} no doubt whatsoever that he has come on the part of God.

One of the prophet of God was his holiness Moses. If we study his life and teachings and find he has fulfilled these duties we came to the conclusion that he was the first spiritual educator of mankind. We observe that Moses was a Jew. From an outward standpoint he had no power, no dominion and no influence and there were no means at all at his disposal. He himself was in the utmost poverty. A person like unto this appeared on the field at a time when the Israelites were in the lowest stage of humiliation. They were extremely ignorant and wrapped in the dark and gloomy atmosphere of human defects. They were captures and were looked down upon by all mankind as a nation of serfs! His holiness Moses delivered them from captivity. out of the darkness of their former conditions he lead them into the Holy Land of Promise and imparted them a moral education. As a consequence of this education they attained to the highest degree of civilization. He conferred upon them ideal virtues. In scientific knowledge they made great progress, such progress that degree by degree they became famous throughout the world. And distinguished from all other neighboring countries. Their knowledge and wisdom reached such a state of perfection that the philosophies and learned men of Greece travelled to the {{p28}} Holy Land and learned from them the lessons of philosophy. Then the Solomon's sovereignty was established . Therefore there requires no shadow of a doubt that his holiness Moses was the first educator of mankind. Unique, single, with no assistance, no support, no aid and notwithstanding a stammering tongue he caused the rise of such a lowly degraded nation to the apogee of spiritual attainment and wisdom. This shows that he was unquestionably confirmed by the divine holy spirit, because from every standpoint this is unparalleled. All the great philosophies who have stepped into the world of existence could not give a moral education to the inhabitants of village. The utmost they could do to have ten or twenty students to whom they gave lectures and conferences. From their instances we comprehend that his holiness Moses was inspired by the spiritual power; because mere man would be unable to reform a nation like unto that of Israelites, delivering millions of people from the claws of defects and ignorance and causing them to fly upward toward the realms of light and the effulgence of God!"

In answer to the question of a friend he said: "The health or sickness of the body are the same to me. The spirit of man must enjoy health. I have much work to do and if I am well enough to cope with my duties I am satisfied. I have grown old, very old now. I must not expect to have the powers of youth. <29> Having given me a number of tablets for translation he left the hotel and was out for nearly four hours. When he returned he was in deep thought and did not speak with anyone. He asked for his lunch and Khosro took it to him. He ate very little, because his thought was somewhere else, very far away from his modest repast.

It was about 2 o'clock when I went to Alexandria to buy a few things, because I am laboring under the harmless impression that the Master is going to leave Friday for Port Said leaving most everybody in Ramleh and taking with himself only one person. You don't scold me if I tell you that I long to be that one person. Will you? Because, whatever he says and does you will know after a while through these letters. I am trying to Baksheesh you so the you may come around and look upon the subject from my standpoint.

When we returned from Alexandria I went directly to the hotel and found the Beloved walking in the reception room. He asked me to go in and demanded where I have been. I told him where I was. Apropos of something he said: "It is most strange how some people are utterly ungrateful and have not in them a vestige of humanity. There have been some young men who have been educated through my solicitude and recommendation. While they were going through their studies in the college they would write me {{p30}} most earnest letter that as soon as we finish our terms we will devote all our times in the service of the Cause. But once out of the College they were engaged with their own ideas. My hope in educating these young men was that they will become the spreaders of the teachings of Baha-ollah and the heralds of the covenant but they forgot the cause entirely and preferred their own desires to my will. How will it is said by a thinker that whatever you train will give you same benefits except the trees of a part of humanity. If you cultivate a piece of land you will gather a crop, if you plant a tree, it will give you fruits, if you train a cow, she will yield milk but the tree of an ungrateful will produce nothing else but bitter fruits." Then he told us the story of a merchant who was very poor. He wrote to Baba-ollah and asked for his blessings in his business. The blessed perfection wrote him, 'Wait the blessings of God shall descend upon thee! After a few months fortune smiled at him and he became the possessor of twenty seven thousand English pounds. One day a Bahai called on him and remarking the change in his attitude told him that it was through the blessing of God that he has become wealthy; wealth must not make him found. The merchant laughed and pointing to his large safe said: "Do you that safe. That is my God!" after a few months he lost everything but he became a good Bahai: at last the Master said: makes some people forget God its absence turns their faces toward

Dear Friends:

I hope I am not mistaken this time. The Beloved told me to be ready to go Port Said with him tomorrow and from all indications this plan will not be changed. The rest of the party consisting of Mirza Jalal, Mirza Moneer, Mirza Mahmoud and Khosro will stay here in Ramleh pending Master's further instructions once in Port Said. I have the feeling that we will not return here again this season, although I may be mistaken. The steamer belonging to Russian Company leaves the Port tomorrow at 5pm arriving in Port Said next morning. I am very glad to be with the Beloved on this short Sea trip. It will be a fine change after 3 months stay in one place. Ramleh of course will be always associated with Bahai history in the future. Its streets, its hotels, its houses, are all blessed by the feet of the Lord. Many events have happened here, many incidents transpired in the Cause during the past three months. Personally I could not have a better time had I lived in Paradise. The Lord of mankind was with us under all circumstances and conditions, his angels came from the four corners of the earth to pay him homage, vivid pictures of him shall ever be treasured in memory and heart. The past three months were equal to three years or 3 hundred or 3 thousand years. So wonderful was each day, so spiritual each hour, so calm and peaceful each moment. Who can say we were not happy in being so greatly privileged to have lived a life near {{p32}} the Presence of Abdul Baha? What I have been able to write is not even a thousandth part of what has been transpiring here! My reward has been the sweet and beautiful experiences of the spirit which cannot be recounted with pen or altered by the world of mouth. I have seen and heard many things and I hope I am better fitted now to serve the Beloved and with faithfulness.

Our old Haji Niaz has also received to go to Cairo. He was today many hours with the Master Mirza Abul Fazl will likewise leave for Cairo in a few days and probably I will not see him for a longtime yet. Ramleh will become indeed an empty place. How wonderful were the venerable figures of Haji Niaz and Mirza Abul Fazl as I saw them walking today side by side in the streets. These men are indeed the elect of God. They have given up everywhere for the sake of the Beloved of the world. They have annihilated their selves so that they may live in accord with the good pleasure of the Lord. In this world they live alone for his sake. They love his countenance they are made joyous through his words and are satisfied with his love. Nothing else douse interest them. I love and respect both of them very much. I owe them a great both of them very much. I owe them a great debt of gratitude. For were it not for the kindness of Mirza Abul Fazl and our brother Ali Kuli Khan who were at that time in Washington I would not have probably come to America and the history of my life would have taken entirely a different channel. Praise be to God that I am living in this day and love all the people of the world. {{p33}} This morning the Beloved was busy partly with his correspondence partly with his packing for tomorrow's trip. He spent most of the morning hours in his room. From San Francisco a Mr. Fred W. Workman who has been taught by our beloved brother Mr. Willard G. Hatch had written a petition asking for confirmation and faith. The Master said: "Faith and confirmation are the two great divine qualities conferred upon man by Baha-ollah. I will pray to him that he may receive these two essential qualities." Then a long and eloquent tablet was revealed for a believer in New York City. Looking out of the window he said: Indeed the East is the world of enlightenment never in the West one beholds such a wonderful blue sky as we have today. It is a pity that the Eastern people do not appreciate the spiritual import of these facts and thus they have deprived themselves of the light of reality." Then a propos of something he said two little stories: "Once I was feeling very sick and at the invitation of the governor and the judge of Acca we rode on horseback toward Cheerios. It was a dark night and it was long after 12 o'clock when we reached a plain of olive trees. My friends came down from their horses to perform ablution and pray and as I was not feeling well and tired, I stretched my body on the soft, dry sand under olive tree. The rest of the party being also very fatigued slept waiting for the sunrise. When I got up in the morning I felt well {{p34}} entirely and everybody marveled at the mysteries cure. The dry sand was however the main cause that contributed to my health." "When I was young I never slept on the mattress. I slept on the floor. I would take a book and read it till late at night. When I was drowsy with sleep I would put the book under my head and cover my body with my Abha. How I slept soundly I can never forget the true enjoyment of those nights. For the inside of the mattresses some people prefer straw better than anything else. They think it is healthier others use cotton, silk or dove." In the afternoon he paid a long visit on Mirza Abul Hazl and after that walked all alone toward Bacos station.

The editor of a Persian Journal the other day received a long tablet from the Beloved. It deals about some of the internal affairs in Persia. In the course of that tablet the translation of the following tablet may be of interest to our Western friends:

"For seventy years these exiled ones have undergone these untold persecutions and sufferings for the progress of the world of humanity, the refinement and education of the characteristics of Persians the promotion of the oneness of mankind, communication between all the members of human race, reconciliation between the religious and the illumination and guidance of all the inhabitants of the earth. In other word, all these souls did not run toward the arena of martyrdom all these beloved souls were not sacrificed, all this blood was not spilled and all these {{p35}} hardships and calamities were not accepted in order that we may be praised and eulogized in the newspapers or blamed and condemned. These matters have no importance whatsoever in our estimation. There is no doubt that before long the newspapers of the world will be divided into two parties. One party praising the Cause to the utmost degree and the next party condemning it most thoroughly. We have given our lives in the Path of the Beloved and not in the Path of the newspapers.

Consider that the books of the world are filled with the condemnation and commendation of the Holy, divine souls who have appeared in former times! However those sanctified spirits are present in the sacred chamber of the true one and are free from all these things. The stone of scorn does not touch their pure spirits, the dark and the arrow of ridicule do not reach their lofty summit neither applause and approval find their way to their world of sanctity. They are sanctified and holy above these conditions!"

The interpretation of a Mohamadan tradition is given as follows:

"O thou also art advancing toward the kingdom of Abha! This tradition does not mean literally. It has other meanings than the mere letters." It means that all that has appeared in former centuries: such as the excellences of the world of humanity sciences and arts, inventions and {{p36}} discoveries, undertakings and the disclosure of the secrets of phenomena and the realities of existence are equal to two letters; but those wonders which will appear during the dispensation of Game as regards the uncovering of the mysteries of the universe, the unveiling of the realities of things, the appearance of sciences and knowledges, the increase of the information of mankind, the revelation of the recondite mystery and guarded secrets is equivalent to 25 letters.

Thou observest what important and condition changing events have transpired in the world since the appearance of Gaem. All the knowledge discovered in the past Carmol equal with one of the inventions of the present day. Consider the material world which is only a reflection of the spiritual! For example, all the inventions of great moment and material discoveries out of the hidden treasures of the earth have been made during the present age and the latter part of the 19th century such as telegraphy, photography, phonography, telephone, electricity, wireless communication, etc.”

This is 2 o'clock after midnight that I am writing you this letter. With Mirza Moneer and Khosro. I went to the city for sight-seeing as this is for the present last night and when we returned I had to finish this letter cause I will be very busy tomorrow before one anticipated departure for Port Said.

Dear Friends:

The Russian steamer is late in arriving at the Alexandrian Port and so of course we are yet in Ramleh. She may get in tonight. I have everything ready to start at moment's notice. Today the Beloved was busy receiving many people. From morning till evening he rested not. When I went to the hotel very early there were already some people and they continued to come and go all day. Meanwhile he found time to dictate a few tablets and call in the afternoon at Mirza Abul Fazl is where he talked in details about the prophesies in the old testament and the Falmudic traditions concerning a fabulous city wherein they believe their promised one is living and will come out at the end of the world and make the Jews a nation of rulers over all the people of the earth.

Before noon with Mrs. Haag and Mrs. Wise and Mirza Moneer I went into the rose garden and took six photos of this historical spot where hundreds of tablets have been revealed by the Lord of mankind so many ever living anemones, deathless hyacinths and immortal rose to perfume the eternal essence of men and women in the East and the West.

In order to share with you the contents of some of the recent tablets revealed in this rose garden I will translate them for you. "From the beginning of the dawn of the morn of guidance the friends of Mirza were {{p38}} like unto overflowing cups and respected and beloved in the Kingdom of Abha. The goblet of every ordeal was quaffed by the heroes of God in that great province and with infinite rejoicing the friends drank from that pure wine. They endured every affliction and calamity in the path of God and all of them derive the Graces of His Highness the Almighty.

Praise be to God that blessed land is overshadowed by the sacred tree, the splendors of the sun of reality are cast upon it with the utmost intensity and the breeze of providence is wafting from the direction of the merciful one. My heart and soul is occupied with the memory of the friends that is indescribable. At midnight and the dawn I supplicate at the Divine Threshold and entreat the downpour of the immeasurable bounties and pray: O almighty, suffer that pure ground which is crimsoned with the precious blood of the martyrs to become a wonderful country, illumine its inhabitants with the manifest light, confirm them in rendering great services, intoxicate them with the wine of thy love, make everyone a bright candle and each person conspicuous flag for they are deserving all these favors, because they are awake and mindful and in the covenant and testament firm and steadfast.”

“Thy remembrance is always my intimate and associate and the heart and the soul of Abdul Baha supplicating toward the kingdom of the merciful Lord, so that confirmation {{p39}} may encircle thee in the most great day and that beloved friend with the utmost effort may arise in the promotion of the word of God become the leader of the spirit lovers and the chief of the longing ones and to assemble the friends in the meeting of supplication and the entreaty and the circle of prayer and devotion and raise a melody with the utmost sanctity and holiness.”

Regarding the opening of a branch of the school of Tarbiat he says:

“Thy brief letter made me very hopeful. Praise be to God that thou art firm and steadfast in the covenant and art thinking to spread culture and education in that city. Unquestionably the friends of God must display the utmost exertion so that the school may be founded in Gomrood with thoroughness and efficiency. Convey my greeting and longing to the believers and say, “This school is the cause of fellowship. It is the cause of love and conducive to the enlightenment of the children. By all means you must strive so that a model school may be established in that city and all the people may bear testimony that the children are educated therein in the most perfect manner.”

To another friend he writes: “O thou who art thirsty for reality! Praise be to God that the light of Guidance shows forth and the court of the heart become illuminate. This was through the Bestowal of the Lord of hosts. For the Divine {{p40}} call reached the ear and the message of the kingdom was listened.: Mrs _____ became the cause of thy life and a conducive to thy salvation, so that thou did find the last path and hastened in order to enter the kingdom of God. The kingdom of God is like unto the sun but only those who have eyes can see the sun. The blind ones are deprived of its rays.

I hope that thou mayst become the divine farmer, engaged thy time in that country in the blessed cultivation, scatter pure seeds and irrigate them with the water of life; thus many harvest shall be gathered. The zephyr of Grace might blow, the fragrances of the paradise of Abha might be diffused, the nostrils be perfumed, a large number of people be saved and sacrifice their lives in the path of the everlasting life.

To another teacher of the cause he writes: "O thou spiritual friend! Thank thou God that thou art not an unserviceable and idle instrument. Thou art working. Thy example is like unto an active army engaged in the front in the thick of battle. The attention of the king is entirely turned toward that army which is in the field. Continually he is solicitous about their wee being and success and sends them reinforcement, but the reserves who are being in the barracks and forts and are comparatively comfortable and well at ease are not so much the object of his solicitude and {{p41}} care. Thank thou God that thou art confirmed with this eminent bounty"

"O thou who are confirmed by the divine spirit! A thousand times bravo! Because thou didst forego the material comfort and rest so that thou mayst give the glad-tidings of the heavenly light, girded up the love of endeavor and for the diffusion of the fragrances of God thou didst go to Holland. Should thou realize how blessed is this journey thou wouldst not rest one movement; may rather at all time thou woudest diffuse the fragrances of God. When thou didst go from London to Holland, with heart and soul Abdul Baha was they travelling companion and guide. Although the body was remote, the spirit was near. I hope from the bestowals of the Lord of Hosts, this highness the promised one to crown the voyage of Peter and Paul."

To a Zoroastrian believer in Bombay he writes the following about his probable visit to India:

"Thy letter was received. From its contents it become evident that a report is circulated in those parts that I am departing for India. Truly I say the longing to behold the faces of the friends is infinite, but there are yet some hindrances on the way. As soon as they are removed and the path is cleared unquestionably I shall prepare myself to those."

{{p42}} Our beloved sister Miss Edith Sanderson of Paris is well known to many Bahais. She is one of the staunch faithful believers in the West. The Beloved has given her the name of Rouhich Khanom which means "spiritual". Those who have had the privilege of meeting her know that she fulfills all the requirement his blessings upon her on many occasions both in the Holy Land when she was there on a visit some years ago and on his two memorable journeys to Paris. Lately she was afflicted with the loss of her mother who was a patient sufferer for the past year or two. As soon as the news was received the Master called her words of consolation and afterward he revealed for her two wonderful tablets full of spiritual promises and comfort. A letter from her tells us very touchingly the last happenings. As the Master has been at the bed of Mrs. Sanderson many a time always soothing her pains with cheering spiritual words I would like to quote herein as a keepsake portions off this lovely letter:

“My dear brave, lovely mother left us as you know on the morning of Oct. 21st at about 3 o’clock. She did not realize it was the end. It was heart failure and almost instantaneous. Dear Master you tell me that she lives and all my thoughts acknowledges that she does. When your first cable reached us and I told her of it. She was very deeply touched and kept saying over and over again”how wonderful“! She asked me to chant a prayer for her several times. I am sure she lived {{p43}} through many an hour of beautiful spiritual experiences. She was not able to tell us of them. Towards the end she could not speak above a whisper and it was very hard to understand. We could only tell by her eyes so beautiful and so sad! She loved you and this makes me very happy. I supplicate you to always remember her in your prayers. I have felt all these months your loving kindness and know that through it God has given me strength both physical and spiritual. Mother passed away on the morning of her birthday. For some years passed she felt sure she wpulddie on her birthday. She looked very beautiful as she lay there after death, with an expression of majesty and sweet calm on her face, we had a short ceremony in the house. Eight choir boys sang”Lead kindly light” and “Peace, perfect peace”. The clergyman said several prayers and read a chapter of St. Paul’s. The flowers sent by the friends were very beautiful.”

In the evening the Beloved sent for me and as though by a miracle he spoke in detail about the soul after death. Mrs. Von Lilianthal asked the question about the “last souls” and this opened the way for the explanation of the Master. In another letter I will embody his remarks as well as a quotation from an ancient philosopher of Rome on this subject. I was so struck when I read it with its similarity with modern teachings on immortality that I would like to share it with you, although you may know it already.

Dear Friends!

Again the Beloved of the world is sailing on the bosom of the sea just for one night. It is now eleven thirty p.m. I left him in his well-appointed cabin an hour ago, walked on the quiet upper deck, watched the marmoreal sea with hardly a ripple on its surface shimmering under the white beams of the moon and on the further fringes of which shone the bright and luscious stars. The magic of this divine night had cast its sweet spell on me and I could not tear myself from its elusive charm. Here am I all alone but am I alone? Have I not the Beloved just to myself? Captivated by the grandeur, beauty and attraction of the night and cannot go to my cabin I think of the believers of the present and the believers hundred or a thousand years to come. What would they not give if they could see the Lord face to face, and travel with him from country to country, ocean to ocean and city to city? What a great privilege is then ours in this day of all days! I wonder whether we were able to live even for one hour if we could appreciate fully the marvelous importance of this fact!

At last I am in the writing room. There is no one in. Everyone is sleep on the ship. Deep silence reigns everywhere save the whirl and walk swish of the water. I sit down and try to collect my thought. I think for a few minutes. Then I take my notebook out of my pocket and look over sealed notes filled down hurriedly in Persian. You can't decipher them I am sure.

{{p45}}

It was early this morning when I went to Hotel Victoria to see the Beloved. Evidently he has been up earlier. As I entered and offered him my hearty homage he smiled and said: "We are going away by all means today. God and pack up your things." I answered. "I have already attended to this and am ready to start now." "Not now" he laughed "We have a few more things to attend to but we will leave at 2 o'clock". Then he left the hotel to call on Aga Ali Akbar who is a very old Bahai and lying on the bed of sickness patiently bearing the sufferings of these last days of his life well spent in the cause and worthily lived to glorify God and his manifestation. For the last 2 weeks his malady has grown worse and therefore has called on him several times to comfort and causal him.

On his return after setting the account of the hotel keeper he told me to ask our American pilgrims to be ready because he will see them and talk to them before his departure. When he came up they were all ready. He walked ahead and opened. We open up his room and invited all to come in. After greeting them most cordially he said: "Today I leave for Port Said. I am leaving you her for 3 to 5 days. During my absence speak only of divine subject speak about spiritual, active principles whereby the hearts may soar towards the area of sanctity become illumined and attracted to the Kingdom of Baha. Let all your thoughts be converged toward this heavenly center so that you may be drawn nearer unto God. Speak of nothing but God and recognize no one else save Baha-0-llah. {{p46}} Have no other thought save for the good of humanity. Your heart must be so filled with the love of God that there may be no place for anything else so that when I return I may find you as luminous beings, find you happy, radiant and merciful. Mention nothing save that which is good concerning the people. Praise everyone. If you find a fault or mistake in someone do not speak of it. If you see good qualities, mention and try to emulate them. Love mankind for the sake of God and love each other very much. I have much love for each one of you. Baha-ollah knows how much I love you. It is indescribable. It is immeasurable. It is difficult to leave you and go away but I must do so. Some blessed pilgrims are now in Port Said. They expect to depart for their respective homes and I must go and see them and hid them Godspeed. The Zoroastrian believes who are waiting for me at Port Said are very blessed, very luminous and their hearts are very pure. I love them very much, I consider it, therefore to go and see them. During my absence I shall pray for you. The servants and the maid servants are always in the Presence and they are spiritually associating with each other. The essential thing is the ideal communication of the hearts.

Praise be to God that our hearts and spirits are connected with each other.”

Miss Hiscock said that this was her physical and spiritual birthday, now trebly blessed by his divine Presence. The Master, then gave her a large bouquet of roses which adorned the table and said: {{p47}} “The greatest day in the life of a human soul is when as a thirty-one he arrives at the Fountain of the water of life, when as a lover he attains the presence of the Beloved when as a blind and a deaf man receives spiritual sight and hearing, in short the day wherein he enters the kingdom of God. That is indeed a most memorable day.” At one pm I was again in the hotel and the Master having had his rather short siesta was up. A young believer, Mirza Fazlollah had just arrived from Cairo not knowing the Beloved is going to have. He was a little disappointed but when he stood in his presence he said: “Thou hast arrived at the time of our departure but it is good that thou hast come. Our meeting is spiritual in character and one minute of it is equal to centuries, one drop of the sea of our love will set into motion all the oceans. How many souls came in the Presence of the Blessed Perfection but their spiritual eyes were blind but some people met him only for a few minutes and their hearts were set aglow with the Love of God.”

At two o'clock the Master started with a number of believers who followed him to the Pier. Mirza Mahmoud helped me with my bag and we arrived a few minutes later. The steamer was anchored far away from the Pier and we hired a boat to be rowed to it. From far we saw the Master walking on the deck. Mirza Jalal, Mirza Moner and Khosro were also there. The Master was speaking with the Doctor who examines the passengers and with another gentleman. An Englishman {{p48}} and the Doctor introduced the Beloved to her with greatest pride as the very greatest Eastern man who has travelled all over Europe and America revolutionizing the religious thoughts of the age with his God-given intelligence and the array of his never-ending ideals. It was most interesting to watch this Doctor trying his best to find the superlative praise for the Master before this Englishwoman, because he was a special pride in him as the most wonderful living Oriental. At 5:30 pm our friends and those who had owe to his farewell to Beloved left the steamer because the hour of departure was announced for six but it was a few minutes after seven when “Jerusalem” started toward Port Said. The name of the steamer is also significant of the heavenly “Jerusalem” is on board. He has descended from the heaven of the divine will and is sailing on the tempestuous sea of existence and saving derelict ships and maroons on desolate and uncharted islands of self-conceit and vanity.

There are ever so many large steamers in the Port and they are all ablaze with electricity. The reflection of these thousands of lights in the sea is very beautiful as each light is like unto a shaft piercing through the depth of water. trembling with the motion of the sea. The Beloved watched the lights of the city and the steamers and pronounced the scene most fairy-like and magical. As he walked to and fro on the deck he said: “I feel always much better on the sea” Then he laughed. “It will not be a bad idea if we could travel from Alexandria to Beirut, then to Symerna then to Constantinople, then to other Asiatic ports.”

After walking for a while on the deck under the moonlit and starlit heaven he came down to his cabin. I followed him. For more than half an hour he talked, now about this now about that. Toward the end he said: "I have found a way to gain my living with the sweat of my bro and the labor of my hand. Man must be the candle of severance and detachment. When I go to Haifa and Acca I will get a piece of land and plow it and cultivate it with my own hand. Then I will not accept everything even from the Persian believer." The thought immediately came to my mind that if the time ever comes, God willing I will try to be as near to him as possible and hand him any tool or instrument he needs. What a primeval, charming prospect! To live on a farm with the Beloved and be a farmer. My blood tingles with enthusiasm and great possibilities. I have not the slightest doubt that the Master will then teach the people, even the United States with her experimental farming stations a few lessons in practical and scientific agriculture and many students may come from far and wide to see his model farm. Whether this is realized or not it is immaterial to me but lesson and a precious possession for all of us. To know that his thinking at this advanced age of farming is in itself wonderful, independent of its realization. {{p50}} The bell for dinner rang loud and the Master went to the dining room. As I had a second class cabin with the permission of staying with him as long as I wanted I went also to dine. It must have been an act of Providence because they give me a seat besides the Russian Consul General of Beirut who has been travelling with his wife, has been in Persia for fifteen years and speaks the language fluently. After dinner they came up on the deck and for a long time they talked on the naval reorganization of Russia after the Japanese war, the Russian open support for the Independence of Bulgaria and the moral and economic loss of the Balkan wars. Then the subject of conversation was changed. The Beloved invited him to come tomorrow on shore while the steamer is anchored and dine with him in Ahmad Yazdi apartment. He was so sorry that he could not accept the gracious invitation. Then the charming scenery and the delight of Haifa were dwelt upon. In short the Beloved was delighted with them and there was no need of translator I could sit there a little further and watch the wonderful power and sweetness of the Master.

Tomorrow at nine o'clock the steamer will arrive in Port Said. After more than 3 months of absence we are returning again not from Europe and America but from the delightful summer resort of Alexandria. This time also there is only one servant in the company of the Master. I hope he will take a good rest in Port Said and then start where? Toward which direction? No one knows.

###November 9th, 1913

Dear Friends!

To tell you the truth this is a secret and you must not breathe it to a living soul, walking erect with two feet, I mean a lipid. I love Port Said and I love Ahmad Yazdi and I would like to stay here as long as the Master is here not one minute after his departure; because there is another place that I would love best. You see, beside this primary all sufficient reason I have another reason. Before I ever dreamed of America, before I dared to think that I have so many splendid brothers and sisters across the Atlantic, before I learned that A B C of the language in which I am laboring to express and write the events surrounding the Beloved I actually lived and moved and had y being in this city of Port Said for more than 3 years. Here I met our dear teacher Mirza Abul Fazl several months before his departure for America and the bee buzzed in my ears the first intimation of a faint possibility of my going to the New world. At the time it was too dear and too wonderful to believe it. "Who am I?" I addressed myself "that the Lord of mankind may send me to Mirza Abul Fazl to serve him in that far off mythical land of giants! I know there no one! I know but two or three words of their language! But when the command came I left and crossed the seas all alone and in that strange, tumultuous New World I found all that my heart longed for years genuine hospitality, fathers, mothers, sisters and brothers, because my mother passed {{p52}} away from this life when I was only 2 months old and I never knew what the love of a mother meant till I went to America. I did not have any brother and sister of my own so you can realize how great was my joy when I was surrounded by so many spiritual relations in a strange land, often in the middle of night I would cry out "O Baha-ollah! O Baha-ollah! What miracle thou hast wrought! What love thou hast created in these hearts! O Abdul Baha! O Abdul Baha! What magnificent palace of spiritual brotherhood thou hast raised! What marvelous unity thou hast brought between the East and the West! If I give up my life for these glorious bounties I have done nothing, I have offered no thanks giving. Then let me be the dust of the feet of these friends. Aid me to serve them and if needs be sacrifice my life for them. I am ready to answer thy call as at any moment.

What was I doing during those three years in Port Said? I was working in Ahmad Yazdi's store. He was very good to me and that happy relation still exists between us. Whenever I go to his store familiar scenes come back to my memory. I want to pull my sleeves and pitch in to work but he laughs and prevents me from doing it. Well and faithfully has he served his Lord for the long years stretching in the past. He is a good, active soldier of Abdul Baha. You see them. What I owe him a great spiritual debt because his love and kindness made it possible for me to stay in Port Said till the hospitable doors of America were opened before my face. {{p53}} This morning when I opened my eyes it was half past four and by five o'clock I was on the deck. No life was stirring. The big sea was as calm as a pond, the ship had hardly any motion, a balcony, young breeze was blowing, the stars shines with each other in brilliancy and the whole scene was blissful and ecstatic. I passed several times by the half-opened window of the Beloved's window and peered in. He was sleep yet, because last night when I left him he drew out an Arabic paper from his searched and continued to read. The morning grew brighter and brighter and in the Eastern horizon faint traces of golden color, rosy lines and silver brightness all embroidered together by the hand of nature became visible. I turned to make a round of the deck and stopped on the opposite a minute or two then returned when lo and behold a great ball of vivid fire had lead so suddenly out of the briny deep just as minerca leapt out of the head of Jove fusing the whole Eastern sky with wonderful being colors. Such is then the down of the sun of reality. illumining the sky line of the hearts and minds with its white lights of spiritual susceptibilities!

Little by little the Beloved the sun od reality rose resplendent and beautiful. He came out of his cabin and while he was walking on the deck I prepared tea for him. He found his friend of last night and asked him to drink a cup of Persian tea. They sat side by side and the Master talked and questioned him now and then. He spoke on the duties of the ruler of a nation and his relation to the inhabitants of the country. {{p54}} “A ruler must consider himself the real father of all the people. Just as the father is solicitous about the education for his sons so a ruler must think about the progress of the inhabitants of the country over which he rules either by the law of heredity or by the choice of the nation. He must devise new plans of reforms. He must encourage the building of national highways, bridges, schools, railroads, expand the limits of commerce and insure the safety and security of the public. If he on the other hand devotes his time to luxury, self-gratification, indulges in personal likes and dislikes, fosters favoritism and laps in the lap of debauchery he is not a ruler but a hydra-headed public enemy. For the last six hundred years all the countries conquered by ____ have been deteriorating and even their ancient glories are ransacked. A country in this age cannot be ruled by the sword. It needs the magic touch of progress. The two kings who did a great deal for Persia whose architectural endeavors are as yet scattered all over that land are Shah Abbas and Azadad-Doulet. On the other hand Sultan Soleyman has built only one mosque in Damascus. Nothing else has been done to improve the country or expend the income of the state on those sources which would advance the civilization, open the eyes of the people and let them avail themselves of all the technical knowledge and practical accomplishments. Then the people will be happy and contented and the country shall prosper by leaps and bounds.” {{p55}} By half past seven the outline of Port Said with its towering searchlight became visible. The Master asked me to bring him his marine glass which I did. He looked at the far odd city for a few minutes and its buildings not as tall as New York interested him. All around us there were great ships with sea-worthiness leaving or arriving the Port. It is really a wonderful network of international communication these ships appearing in the far off horizon as though mysteriously leaping out of the depth of the sea, heading along steadily toward the Port and once anchored load and unload their freight and human cargoes and filling their bunks with rich argosies just as mysteriously disappear as though they have never touched the port. This is of course a sign of that greater network of spiritual communication which is being established between the Orient and the occident through the celestial power of Abdul Baha. This outward manifestation of unity is the symbol of the compelling unseen forces of harmony working on and on to leaven the whole earth with the leaven of solidarity. Then travelling in itself gives one always new sensations, new enthusiasm and imports to him new knowledge no matter how many times you may have seen a place, on how many occasions you may have met a friend there are so many things that may have escaped your notice and you will be able to see them again and appreciate them if only you steps are traced so that direction a second time. {{p56}} By nine o'clock the ship anchored quite far from the port and just at that time our brother Ahmad Yazdi and Aga Aziz were spied in Folouke' or a boat. The laden was lowered dove and they came up. The Master welcomed them and as soon as our baggage was transferred to the boat, the Beloved after thanking personally the captain and the Russian Consul General descended. "This is the feast of Beirain" he said to Ahmad Yazdi "I have left it in Ramled and came here." "This is then a real feast for us" answered Yazdi with reverence and a subdued voice. After landing the Master and Ahmad Yazdi drove in one carriage and use in another. The Master is going to live in his home (Ahmad Yazdi's) and strange to say I am in the same hotel Sultany and have been given the same hotel Sultany and have been given the same room I occupied last time. The Master appointed the hour of four for the pilgrims to pay him their first visit for lunch I was invited by Ehrahim Effendi a native Bahai whose son Basheer was graduated as Doctor of Medecine this year in Chicago. He is trying to find some work in Cairo but he is now in Port Said for the holidays. For ten days people are feasting, the schools closed and the holiday spirit is abroad.

At three o'clock I thought I will call on Doctor and Mrs. Getsinger who are staging in Hotel de la Paste but I met them just as the door of the Master's house. After 22 days of stay in Acca and Haifa they looked well and happy. We went up and the Master asked them many questions about the various people in the above two places they have been. {{p57}} At four o'clock he came out of the antechamber where he was resting. He saw all the believers are waiting for him. They all rose from their seats many of them approaching him to kiss his hands and offer him the bouquets of roses they carried. The roses were put on each other on his right hand he was sitting on a long driven. The son of Haji's Mohamed about 8 or ten years old was standing. He backward to him to come and sit beside him. He is a lovely, intelligent boy. It was a lovely picture then to see the Master and the roses and the little child side by side a wonderful portrayal of the simplicity of the kingdom and the poetry of the spiritual life "Praise be to God that you are all gathered together you have brought me the loveliest gifts (referring the roses) you are welcome. I have come to see you." He referred to the debts of a Bahai who passed away a while ago in Bombay. The believers must see all the goods he has left behind. He inquired about the health of some of the old Bahai in Acca and Haifa and then he said: "These old veterans of the cause have been with Baha-o-llah in Bagdad, Constantinople, Adrianople and Acca. They have borne the brunt of war. They have undergone the sufferings of exile and imprisonment. They have served the Cause. When we left Bagdad for Constantinople as there were a large number of us we had to divide our duties. Ada Mirza Mahmoud and Aga Reza were the cooks and I was the commissariat man. One cannot say how hard all of us worked. The former {{p58}} always walked on feet in front of the palauquet of the Blessed Perfection and when we arrived at a Caravanserai after a hard day of travelling these two went immediately to prepare a fire and cook the dimer, I went also after food supplies both for the men and the animals. What a hard time I had, often tell midnight going through villages and trying to persuade the farmers to sell us something. Especially at that time there was a famine in those districts and people loathed to give up their hoarded provisions, fearing the worst may cause also to them. In short all those persons who were on our journey were most blessed souls. Baha-ollah loved them I loved them.

Then he ordered a carriage and with Ahmad Yazdi went out driving. With Doctor and Mrs. Getsinger I came out and walked toward the Hotel. They invited me for dimer and I stayed there till half past eight. The topic of discussion was of course the cause, America, India, Persia and the love of the Master for all these friends.

Today at noon Ahmad Yazdi brought me a package of letters which have been accumulating here pending my arrival. Many letters from America gave me cheer and joy. I thank all the friends for their thoughtfulness, their remembrance. One word from them sent across the oceans is another chain to bind the hearts together. We must all be active in the Cause and be the means of spreading the Messages of the Kingdom.

###November 10th, 1913

Dear Friends!

The first glimpse that we had of the Master this morning was from the upper porch of the hotel. He was walking in the street followed by Ahmad Yazdi. All around him there was a motley crowd of Arabs a European may say with more or less the same clothes but they all looked upon him with an eye of reverences and adoration as though he is sleeping from another world, an over individual descended from the Court of divine Majesty. As he walked they made way for him and then advanced with the spirit of respect to kiss his hand or touch the Hem of his garment. He walked through their dirty, evil -smelling streets and men, women and children come out of their unclean quarters and as he passed by he smiled at them and they paved him the divine homage of love and worship. The simple Arabs do not know him as the Bahais assume to know him and discuss his little and position pro and con but they behold in him the shining of the spirit of God, they love him because he loves them. Knows their needs inquiries about their conditions, supplies their spiritual and material requirements and holds aloft before their eyes the burning torch of true religion of charity and the waving flag of moral ritual. He appeals to their sense of justice and reason and leads them on in his matchless way toward the radiant heights of brotherhood. {{p2}} It was about nine o'clock when the Zoroastrian pilgrims with a few others from Bagdad wended their ways toward Ahmad Yazdi's home to meet the Beloved. Tea was served and he come out of his room and greeted them. For a few minutes he was silent. Then he asked them to speak to him. "Tell me" he said "is whether of India better or that of Arabia." One of the Zoroastrian who loves his native country very much came out and earnestly with the answer. "Persia's climate is the best." The Master laughed. He could read in the eager eyes of our brother this thought "I want to see Persia great and glorious civilized and prosperous advancing steadily in modern culture and science", and henceforth satisfied his loving by the following remarks:

"Persia will become burn nous. Her future grandeur shall by far eclipse for past records glory. How pure is the climate of the mountains of Yazdi. Rest ye assure that Persia shall progress. On this account have the utmost confidence. God has brightened Persia. The example of Persia is like unto a garden which had been taken out of the cultivating hand of the gardener. The wild animals have run through its posture, its meadows are turned upside down, its trees are leafless, its plants are dried and its tender, fragrant flowers trod under foot to such an extent that whereas formerly it was a rose garden it has now become a thorny patch. But when the real garden appears he takes the garden again under his care and arrange it better than {{p3}} its former condition. Whereas before it was a dumping ground for all kinds of refuse, the wise gardener clears it and causes the growth of roses and hyacinths and plants fruitful trees. Listen to me. Do not heed the doubtful prophesies of the malcontents. Persia will progress marvelously. God has opened every door before the faces of the Persians. He has unlocked before them the doors of heaven as well as the doors of the earth. I will illustrate this by the following example and the rest will become plain to you. In this world this is no soil as unproductive as the soil of Mecca. It is a desert of sand, black, bare mountains and barren Sahara. There are no springs in Mecca. They bring in their drinking water from a very remote place. Now because this desert of shifting sand, these fearfully shaped dried mountains, this extremely hot climate became the birthplace of His Holiness Mohamad, the eyes of the Islamic world have turned toward it. Nearly three hundred thousand souls go yearly on a pilgrimage to Mecca to kiss the black sacred stone. Now from this you can judge what will be the future of Persia which is the birthplace of the Blessed Perfection, Baha-o-llah. Its climate is delightful, its soil is rich, its waters salubrious, its gardens charming its meadows green and its topography variety. Reflect upon this and many mysteries will be revealed unto you."

One of our believers who was present mentioned that several hundred of Hajis had returned from their pilgrimage to Mecca but on their way they were robbed bit the Nomads. The Master said {{p4}} the following story in this connection: About 38 years ago a few Hajis who were a native of Yazd came to Acca. On their way they were stripped clean from all their possessions. The steamer accidentally anchored at the bay of Acca and they came on shore. They did not know that such people as Bahais are living in the town. They inquired from the inhabitants are there any Persians in Acca? They answer yes! A guide brought them to me. They were in a pitiful state. As soon as their eyes fell upon me they started to cry. They said 'While we were in Medina, the Arabs accused us unjustly with something we had never committed. Then they attacked all the Persians, beating us with their swords and clubs, killing six of us and taking hold of our belongings. We were fallen on the ground entirely unconscious. When we came to ourselves the government officials saved us from the fury of the Mob. There were many cuts and wounds in our bodies, but there were neither doctors nor medicine and nature had to lend its healing ointment. When news was received from Constantinople that we are innocent they let us go. We have begged all along our way for our sustenance till we have now reached here. We are now at the end of our hope and are destitute of everything. When we reached at this port we thought we disembark, perchance, we may find some of our compatriots who will be willing to assist us. Here we stand in your presence, hungry and naked and needy. You may deal with us according to you justice, sympathy and humanity. At least you may give us one toucan to carry us to Beirut. We plead for your mercy! Thus they spoke and I realized they are letting the truth. In short I prepared for them the means of their journey as far as their home- Persia. As their steamer was going to anchor one day in the port I invited them to stay over for lunch and dimer and ordered tea to be served. When they partook of the Pilaw and other dishes prepared for the and before their departure one of them asked. Who are you and why are you living in this most desolate spot? I answered. 'We are prisoners in this barrack town of Acca! Prisoners! I can't believe it! Why? What for?' 'Because we are Bahais they have brought us here and incarcerated us! They were as to wished. Then one of them said. No indeed whosoever tells us that you are Bahais commits an unpardonable sin. You are very good people. You are good Musuhnans. They have told us that the Bahais are very bad people. You are the angels of heaven. You have treated us with such generosity and hospitality not even equaled by a Mohammadan I do not accept this. You are joking with us! I answered. 'My friends! Listen to me. We are not joking with you. We are telling you the truth. We are Bahais. We are prisoners. Hearken and I will tell you why we are here! They became silent and the {{p6}} I told them the history of the Cause, the principles and the events leading to our incarceration. They were very much impressed and left the town with a happy, yet no doubt a little incredulous a bout own being Bahais". Here the Beloved had a good hearty laugh and continued: 'You must make the people understand the aims and teachings and be bests of the Blessed Perfection, inform them to what cause it has beckoned their attention, how the command us to associate with all, to what height of purity, attraction, sanctity, morality, behavior and deeds he hath summoned us. Then Persia will become like unto a rose garden. If the believers of God like and act in accord with the commands and exhortations of the Blessed Perfection in a short time Persia will advance extraordinarily. I hope you will make India a rose garden thus each one of you may become a fruitful tree, a brilliant star and a spiritual sign of the kingdom of Abha. May you find a new severance a new joy and fragrance and a new hope and courage. Do those Zoroastrians who have migrated to India centuries ago desire to return to their nature land? You tell them that we declare unto you that the glories of Persia will become in the future thousand fold. If you don't believe in our declaration make a note of it in a book that a day is soon coming. When Persia shall reach the highest zenith of glory, it will be built and become very prosperous. All the ancient cities of Persia will be built up and the fame of Persia and the Persians shall be spread over all the regains of the world and the greatness of the Persian civilization will cover the East and the West.”

Then the Zoroastrian women went into his Presence when we left. The Beloved felt well. For the last two weeks all the betters have been kept away from him so that he may have a complete rest. Later on three Arabs received permission to go into his Presence and he gave them a detailed explanation about “sacrifice”. The feast of Beiram is the great Mohamadan feast in which everyone who is able kills a lamb or sheep and distribute its meat amongst the poor. “The outer sacrifice of the sheep is a symbol of the miner sacrifice. One must sacrifice his life, his identity, his being in the path of God. This is a spiritual sacrifice. We must strive to attain to this station,” As some of the Zoroastrian Bahais were presents he pointed them to our Arab visitors and told them how through the Power of God these men who have never believed in Christ, the world of God, Moses, the interlocutor of God, Ibraha, the friend of God and Mohamad, the prophet God have become believers in all these messengers of the divine. That is why it is written in the Koran ’Thou dost not guide them but God guide them!” When they left they kissed the hem of his garment and his hands. I was much moved by this real scene of earnest devotion.

Then he called Mrs. and Dr. Getsinger into his Presence. To Doctor Gersinger he said:

“Greater love has man for no one that I have demonstrated toward thee. Consider that after my departure from America I have send for thee and am sending both of you to India to spread the Cause of God. Send to me always cheerful and happy news. The more you have love and genuine consideration for each other the happier is the heart of Abdul Baha. Be as one soul in two bodies. Then you shall be able to render more effective service to the Cause and will be loved and honored by all the people. This is thy first and most important work. Look at me! I do not listen to sickness. I do not listen to sleeplessness. I do not listen to fatigue. I do not listen to anything. I work and strive. I toil and labor. Both of you must walk in my footsteps and seek my good pleasure and diffuse the fragrances of the kingdom of Abha. This is the path.”

To Lua he talked with great animation, his strong voice at times reaching to a high pitch. He was speaking with a glowing conviction and divine authority. The room was filled with the inspirational atmosphere of his spiritual utterance. I will try to presence here only a few notes out of rushing torrent of celestial music breaking upon our ears from the unknown sources which were full of orchestral beauty and mystic charm.

When thou dost and enter a city in India associate with the people in the begging as a tourist as a person interested in India {{p9}} and a lover of Indian people and institutions. Meet all those who come to see thee or thou callest on them with sympathy and do not in the least prejudice them. Thou must reconcile together the adherents of various religions and the stories of different creeds with eh solvent alchemy of love and infuse amongst them Bahai freedom of conscience and solidarity. If someone ask thee who are thou and why hast thou come to India? Answer. 'I am a teacher of the Bahai Cause. His holiness Baha-ollah has commanded the Bahais to consort with all the religions and nations with the utmost concord and harmony. In our estimation mankind are the children of God and as the children of the almighty it is enjoined upon us to love one another and to cooperate with each other. The past century of prejudice and bigotry has passed, the cycle of the oneness of the world humanity is being ushered upon us. Then speak to them with great power and penetration and cause them to soar toward the divine height of spiritual brotherhood and divine unity.

When thou arrives in the city of Calcutta and happen to mere the editor of _____ say to him: 'Today a most glorious sun hath downed from the horizon of Persia. Even the blind ones have felt the penetration of its heat and rays but you are submerged in the sea of your one thoughts. We who have been living in the furthermost part of the globe have beheld the days of this world illuminating sun and are illumined thereby. How is it that you are yet sleep upon the bed of negligence. {{p10}} This is the same sun which downed 1300 years ago from the horizon of the Arabian Peninsula but now it has appeared with greater potency from the horizon of you country and its heat ere long shall of you cover the whole earth. Now is the time of your redemption! Now is the period of your salvation. If ye are blind. become seeing. If ye are deaf become hearing. If ye are lame, walk ye crack. If ye are dead, be resuscitated. If ye are negligent become ye mindful. The sum of reality hath arisen from the horizon of your country. Become ye illumine the breeze of Bestowal of wafting from the direction of you native land, be ye stirred! The nightingale of significance is singing in the rose garden of you home, hearken to its melodious songs. This movement hath deeply affected the American and European world and hath made us the real friends of Persia. Know ye this of a certainty that the East never conquer the West through the power of material civilization but it can accomplish this as it has done in former ages through the power of divine religion. Now Persia is a position to complete the spiritual victory of mankind through the Potency of the Universal Religion of God. What a marvelous sun is this! What a stupendous movement is this! How the world and its inhabitants are being consciously or unconsciously stirred and moved by it soul satisfying effect!

O ye Persians! The sun of righteousness hath arisen with healing in its wings! Are ye not, aware of it that you country is the dawning place of this glorious Orb, the first rays {{p11}} of which is the oneness of the world of humanity its second ray is love for all mankind, its third ray is universal peace, its fourth ray is the correspondence of science with religion its fifth ray is universal religion, universal language, universal education etc. Speak in meetings and assemblage with a spiritual power. The Holy Spirit shall inspire thee. Explain the principles of Baha-ollah. Make them understood by all the people. Cry out at the top of thy voice.

Furthermore say to the Editor! Despotism ruined Persia. Despotism withered away the geris of Persia. Despotism extorted the incomes of the people unjustly. Despotism made the inhabitants of Persia poor and destitute. Despotism hastened into the arena of martyrdom 20,000 Bahais. Despotism played a havoc upon the resources of Persia. Despotism brought to the verge of starvation the ancient families of Persia. Despotism cast ashes of gloom and despair on the intelligence of the Persians. Despotism kept the people in a state of ignorance and illiteracy. But when the Persians upraised the banner of Constitution everyone became hopeful expecting Persia through the beneficent influence of a democratic government will loom large in the family of the living and progressive nations and will enter upon an era of upward prosperity and internal development. However instead of uniting all their forces together they formed various political parties with no definite policies save to work against each other and then heap greater disasters upon the {{p12}} already weakened and disorganized state. Consequently we observe that even constitution upon which the hope of everyone was suspended did not yield the desired result. Yes, constitution would have saved Persia, were these political parties united upon a broad, national construction platforms; therefore the lack of such a common ground made confusion more confounded. Notwithstanding these mighty events the Persians are yet sleep but there are certain impelling forces which are working for their find awakening.”

In the afternoon again we were in his Presence. He was in a happy frame of mind and joked with Doctor Getsinger. He shed the sunshine of joy and beatitude. Then he ordered grapes to be brought to us which he divide it amongst us with his holy hand. We stayed with him about 2 hours many stories were told and light subjects discussed. When we left him we knew he is steadily improving in his health. Coming out of his presence we walked toward the store of Ahma Yazdi and there met many of the friends. His store is the rendezvous for all the believers who desires to meet each other. A telegram is sent that Khosro may come from Ramledh to attend to cooking and I have no doubt he will start with the very first train. He is so happy in the service of the Beloved and whenever he is away from him, he is grieved and sad. Other pilgrims are on their way and before long many people shall arrive to drink from the fountain head of truth. The Master loves them most affectionately.

Dear friends!

“How fervently I long to go on Mount Carmel- the garden of Lord! How inspiring is the matchless panorama spread before one’s view! How quiet and spiritual is its very atmosphere! This is the best season of Mount Carmel. Those who have seen the sweeping, heavenly scene spread before their eyes from the Touch of the Bah cannot it throughout all their lives. In the future those will be seven beautiful, terraced gardens from the base of the mountain up to the Holy Tomb. Then the scene will be most ravishing and unexcelled in the whole world. The mountain covered with fragrant flowers, the bright sun shining upon it with its vital, life- giving rays, the educational and charitable institutions springing up here and there, the spiritual inheritance coming down from an age of the prophets and going back to an era of the Patriarchs and the sacred stories and blessed traditions woven around every spot- will make this place most cherished and beloved by all mankind.”

Thus spoke the Master with his eyes shut and in a contemplating mood. I also long to go to Haifa and I hope yet that somehow the unexpected door will be opened and I will have the great joy of sleeping and resting and walking and working on that holy mountain so often blessed by the feet of the Blessed Perfection and Abdul Baha. But I must exercise my patience and wait the development. Almost any day something may happen that may carry us to Haifa.

When this morning we went into the Sacred Presence of the Master he said “Mirza Ahmad I am feeling well today and have started to work again. I have already read many letters. Whenever I meet the believers of God I feel much better. I am made very happy.” Then he gave a long talk to the friends about his address in the Jewish Synagogue of San-Francisco and how the noble Rabbi Myer has invited a Christian community to hold services in the Synagogue! Repeatedly and on many occasions the Master has highly praised the noble action and the lack of the prejudice of this “man of God” hoping that he will ever serve the Cause of universal religion and human brotherhood.

A letter from Doctor Clock of Newyork who has been living in Teheran for some years made the Beloved very happy. She writes: - “You know how much we love the Persian girls and women and look forward to the time when they will be better educated. Last year there fourty schools for girls in Teheran and now there are sixty. All these schools are under government supervisions. A young woman employed by the government visits them and reports great progress in general but says the Tarbiat school for girls is best of all.” Cabbgrams received from the various parts of the world as regards to the spread of the Cause or the demand of urgent advices were read to him and answers were in turn cabled.

Mirza Hadi Efnan (the third son-in-law of the Master) and Mirza Hossein (the third brother of Ahmad Yazdi) with two other pilgrims arrived from Haifa this afternoon. Now I have had the pleasure of meeting all the three son-in-laws of the Beloved. They are all very excellent men. As you no doubt already know Mirza Mohsen and Mirza Hadi are the descendants from the Bah and Mirza Jalal is the son of the King of the Martyrs. With a singing heart and happy face Khosro draw into my room. Having received the Master’s telegram he had travelled all night to come as soon as possible. His love for and faithfulness to the Master are his wonderful qualities. I have grown to love him very much an account of his simplicity, and agility. Often in Ramleh he would fill or dishes with what he had cooked for lunch and dinner and we cause to know later on that he had left nothing for himself. With the greatest light heartiness he would then take a piece of bread and cheese and eat with evident relish. He was surprised one day when I gently scolded him why he does not keep back something for himself. "Oh! I never thought of it!" he said.

In the afternoon the Master having read many letters he was quite tired and wanted to have a drive. The carriage was ready after a few minutes and he descended the stairs and beckoned to Ahmad Yazde' to sit beside him. After his drive he stopped at Ahmad Yazde's store and sat there for half an hour. Then he sent for Doctor Getsinger and took him with himself to {{p16}} the house. Here he asked Doctor to speak to him. He related the story of two Irishmen who went to America and then experiences with the New Jersey Mosquitos. The Master laughed and in turn told us a mosquito story written in poetry by a poet of Kashan. In order to appreciate this line you must first understand the double meaning of "Tchang-Zan". Its first meaning is "a player on harp"; its second meaning is "one who scratches his body with his fingers". Now here is the line:-

From the early evening till morning I held a high carnival in the empire of my body; The mosquitoes were the trumpeters, the flees were the dancers and I am what was I, "Tchang-Zan".

Then I said that last night I could not sleep at all because my bed harbored many guests under its mattress and pillows and wooden frame in the persons of bed-bugs. They scorned around me as soon I put out the light and the consequence was a night of vigil and wakefulness. The Master said: "When we were in Bagdad, Constantinople and Adrianople we were bothered to death by these insects-flees mosquitoes and bed-bugs. Many a night we had to sit up without one wink of sleep. Finally we invented the mosquito netting with only one entrance. Once you are in your ties that entrance with a piece of strong thread and then no insect no matter how small can find its way into it. There is a specie of mosquito in Syria which is very small. It does not buzz and is very small, but it bites like a {{p17}} scorpion. Once in Bagdad before we thought of mosquito net Aga Ammon came to me and saw he has found a powder that if spread over the bed the bug will become unconscious and die and thus one gets a good sleep! I refused to use it over my bed but Aga Ammon did it. When we went in the morning to call him we observed he is laid on his bed as an unconscious person and all over and around him the bugs were in a state of drunkenness. We carried him out of the bed and he came to himself after some exertion on our part."

He started to speak with Doctor in English, telling him that this language is very difficult but the Persian is easy, when somehow the word "Conspicuous" was mentioned. I suppose that word caught his fancy and for a long time he was repeating it over and over again and every time he would ask him whether his pronunciation is correct. How we enjoyed it!

Freemasonry was spoken of and again the Master showed his deep knowledge and startling in giving us the history and the origin of Freemasonry. For what purpose and when it was organized? What were its primary objects and why they have been keeping their doctrines secret.

Then he bids us farewell and goes to his room. We leave him with dancing spiritual go out walking in the moonlight. The weather now is cooler even in Port Said and it is very beautiful to walk along the shore and think of the objects of the spirit.

###November 12th 1913 Port Said, Egypt

{{p18}}

Dear friends!

Conscious that is essentially a spiritual age, an age when man must become in the image and likeness of God, an age in which the potential virtues of the world of humanity must be fully portrayed, an age in which all the old ideas must be burned by the Fire of the Love of God, an age of super natural susceptibilities and an age of tremendous spiritual awakening, it behooves the Bahais of the world to stop a few hours, ponder over their great responsibilities to mankind, realize then even if it is so dimly and dedicate themselves again to the service of their fellowmen. Everywhere people are seeking, searching, wandering, groping hither and thither with no apparent satisfaction. The divine urge within them is pushing them onward and forward and they try so hard to solve the problem - not so much of their own lives - but of the lives of their brothers and sisters. They are shattering cherished conventions, throwing to the winds fondled doctrines and breaking into shreds ideas once held sacred. From the depth of their hearts they are crying for Peace, the Peace that passeth all understanding but the scoffers and agnostics laugh at them and consider them mentally weak and irresponsible. The materialists have dethroned God, the majority of the leaders of religious have enthroned superstitions and thus you find people dissatisfied, peevish and replete with doubts. Everywhere in the West the standard of materialism is upheld and when the Ministers deliver sermons on Sundays they {{p19}} are not apostolic in character, they are not emanated from the emanations of the Holy Spirit, they are not the unconscious outflow of the heavenly inspiration - they are rather the results of the theological training, ethics and morality and not the burning message of the Religion unadulterated by human interpretations and intellectual conceptions. Creeds and dogmas do not create a religious spirit, they stifle it. The present days sects are like so many commercial undertakings and business propositions. They are looked upon as good or bad investments. They are judged by the standard of dollars and cents. The eyes of a theatrical manager is to the Box office and the attention of a successful minister is riveted upon the collection plate. The Congregation is now and then and often regularly is warned for their apparent negligence and insisted upon not to contribute cents, nickels, and dimes but dollars. You hear people talking you “such and such a man is the pastor of a rich church, its members are wealthy. They are going to build a new temple or a magnificent cathedral.” Was Christ a success from today’s standpoint? Was it so easy for the rich man to enter the Kingdom of God? What was the simple direction of the Christ 2000 years ago and what are the confusing rules and the Bahai-like regulations of the different denominations attributing themselves to Him in this age? Where and how can the people arrive at the fountain of reality and what method can they catch a gleam of the light of truth? Modern intolerable social and economic conditions have driven pure religion out of the chamber of their hearts and placed in its stead a plaster-cast Christianity.

{{p20}}

Now, again out of the mysterious heart of the Orient a new Spirit of the same religion of God is gone abroad; out of the deep wells of the contemplative life of the East a new spring is gushed forth; from the shining eastern horizon a new sun hath arisen. The Bahais are those people who are quickened by this spirit, drank from this spring and are illumined by the rays of this sun. Men and women, adults and children are daily attracted to this new interpretation of the same fixed moral law. They are from amongst all religious and sects and are slowly and surely forming a spiritual nucleus of the brotherhood of humanity. People of various tastes, and diametrically opposed opinions and nationalities have sat around this heavenly table and their particular appetite and craving have been most wonderfully satisfied and afterward they have all shaken the hands of friendship and comradeship. Thus the Bahai cause has just come in and without much ceremony has set to house-cleaning and cutting away the devitalized and atrophied organs of the body politics. It does not do away with that which is good. It is a constructive evolutionist and not a destructive revolutionist. It is a light that causes the disappearance of darkness. It is primarily a harmonizer and a pure agency for moral upliftment. It discards old superannuated traditions and inculcates living truths; it emphasize the common origin and destiny of mankind and it inspires the hearts with the highest and loftiest ideals of religion. It means the expulsion of prejudices and the ostracism of greed and irreligion.

{{p21}}

I have promised you in a former letter to record in these pages a short talk by the Beloved on the eve of our departure from Ramleh. The question asked by Mrs. Von Lilianthal was:

“Are there any lost souls?”

Abdul Baha. There are souls who are capable of becoming quickened by the Divine Fragrance and the statement of His Holiness Christ in regard to the second birth applies to them - that is one must be born again - born of the spirit. Every soul who is spiritually born through the assistance of the Holy Spirit - that soul which receives the Breath of the Holy Spirit will have an upward journey and attain to a lofty station in the spiritual world.

As regards the souls who do not receive the Breath of the Holy Spirit they remain in the world of imperfection, they are as though blind, deaf, without intelligence and surrounded by darkness. They do not attain to the world of Light. Such souls although they have life, yet are as dead, as lost compared with the souls in the world of Light. To illustrate: Consider: the savages of Africa. Although they live a natural life yet they are as dead because they are deprived of the benefits of civilization, do not enjoy a share of the human progress and are not imbued with the virtues of the world of humanity. They are submerged in the darkness of ignorance. So although they live they are accounted as dead. A person who is not aware of the knowledge of God is dead. A soul out of touch with the Kingdom of God is dead. A soul who does not receive a portion of the immeasurable Mercy of God is dead.

Question. Will God raise them?

{{p22}}

Abdul Baha. God is powerful to do whatsoever He willeth.

Question. Do soul chose to come to this world?

Abdul Baha. That is according to the Will of God. When God wills they step into the arena of human life.

Question. Do we exist as individual souls before coming here?

Abdul Baha. Individual consciousness is realized after birth.

I may also quote herein a wonderful epistle by Seneca the Roman philosopher on the life after death:

“A great and generous thing is the soul of man, reaching to the limits of a common intelligence with the Deity himself.”

He says then of physical death and the life beyond: “Dismiss, therefore, without uneasiness these members which are no necessary part of you; this body which has so long been your lodging. Let it be divided, destroyed, abolished. Why does the thought of this make you sad? It is the common destiny; thus what envelopes the newborn infant perishes. Why have you so much of these things which are not your own? They are only your outward covering. The day will come which shall take this covering from you, and make you come forth from your present unclean quarters. Even now take your flight from them as much as you can, estranged even from those things which seem most necessary to you; fix your thoughts upon something else, higher and nobler.

”At some time or other the secrets of nature will be revealed to you; this darkness shall be dissipated, and light shall break it upon you on every side. Imagine within yourself how great will be that effulgence, when so many stars intermingle their glorious beams. No shadow shall {{p23}} cross that pure, serene radiance; our every side the heavens shall be equally resplendent.

”Day and night are changes known to us only in this lower, elemental condition. Then you will say that hitherto you have lived in darkness; when wholly yourself you shall see around you that universal radiance which now you can but imperfectly discern through the narrow vision of your mortal eyes, and yet are filled with admiration at the distance spectacle. What then, will be the effect of its divine effulgence, when in its own realm, you shall at last behold it.

“Such a thought will not allow anything sordid to settle in your mind; nothing base, nothing ...by dwelling upon which, in our thoughts, we are raised above the dread of armies; no trumpet’s sound can dismay us, no threats alarm. What can he fear, to whom death is an object of joyful expectation?”

When I presented myself this morning in the Presence of the Beloved his voice was weak, the result of sleeplessness last night, otherwise he was feeling well. He gave me a very large pomegranate, a basket of which was brought from Acca by the recent pilgrims. He said: “This is a pomegranate the tree of which was planted in the garden by Baha-ollah himself. It is not yet big enough. They must be left on the trees, encased in a sack till the middle of the winter. Then its size will be doubled and its grains dark red like rubies; its taste most delicious.” Then he went into his own room to sit quietly alone till the pilgrim came.

After a while the pilgrims arrived and he bade them to sit down. As there were a few Arab visitors he spoke in Arabic. He quoted a verse from the Koran. “Do the people think that by simply saying ‘we believe’, then they will not be tested?” Belief without the test is not worth having. Praise be to God that we have presented the Proofs of God and His Manifestations to the inhabitants of the East and the West. We have asunder the veils of misunderstanding from amongst the religions and nations. In many churches and innumerable gatherings we demonstrated that Abraham, Moses, Christ and Mohammad were the prophets of God. Many prejudiced missionaries had written voluminous books against the prophet hood of Mohammad and we cut clear through those iron walls of misinterpretations and made manifest the truth as the sun in midday. The apparent lethargy in the Islamic world is not because the religion of the Arabian prophet was or is false but it is because the Mohammadans have forgotten the pure, democratic principles of the first age of Islam and have taken hold of spurious ceremonies, false premises and are spending their times in the study of dead theology and worthless metaphysics. It is written in the Koran “There is no virtue in this: whether thou mayest turn thy face (at the time of prayer) toward the East or the West but the virtue, lies in this: that thou mayest adorn thyself with righteousness and practice philanthropy. Take the example of the theological students of the University of Al-Azhar. They spend all their lives in that institution with no visible result. When a young man enters a Western {{p25}} college he comes out after a few years, either an engineer or electrician, or architect, or physician, or any of the many technical and practical professions, but these good-for-nothing students of Azhar waste their wonderful lives and are a heavy burden on the shoulder of the state. This is a crime! An unpardonable sin!" Then turning to a Bahai who has two of his boys in a French school said: "Give to your children a manual profession, something that they may be able to support themselves and others. Let polite literature take care of itself; teach them a technical art or profession."

At noon Sheik Moh-yeddin arrived from Cairo and the Master sent for him. He is a learned Bahai from Kordestan who is studying in the University of Azhar. In the afternoon he took him to a drive around the city and for the evening he was invited to dine with the Master. Fortune happily was on my side and I had the privilege also to be present at the table. The Master was jovial and witty. He lightened the evening by telling us many stories of the lives of Mohammad and his immediate followers. I had never heard these beautiful stories before but I assure you the Master laughed while he was relating them and of course what could we do but laugh and be happy. Again he went with a mail fist for the University of Azhar and its unprofitable system of education. He did not mince his words.

At the table he urged me to eat more Pilow and kept on pushing Pilow on my dish "because" he remarked "you will have lots of work tomorrow. There are more than one hundred letters from America that you must translate, so better be prepared."###November 13th 1913 Port Said, Egypt

{{p26}}

Dear friends!

Letters! Letters Like unto the fragrant petals of the roses of the Paradise of Abha, received from the four corners of the world! I am literally buried in them! This morning the Beloved handed me a box containing more than one hundred petitions from all parts of the West - America and Europe. He told me to take them to my hotel and prepare them for his consideration. He had received four times as much from the East - all brought in one or two mails. What a wonderful thing is this chain of correspondence based upon spiritual principles established with all parts of the world. What is the aim of this continual flood of letters? The spiritualization of mankind. It is in the Presence of Abdul Baha that we feel more than anything else the progress of the Cause advancing in all parts of the world. In the West there is a revulsion from the extreme materialism of the age and every letter received from those parts shows clearly that the aspirant's objects are spiritual truth, faith, assurance, and the love of God. There is a condition analogous to the time when Roman imperialism was degenerated, Roman religion, corrupted and the unsatisfied hearts turned to Christianity for truth and light. Listen to me! Brothers and sisters! I am going to quote herein the contents of some of those letters which will show you more than anything else how the heart of the West is crying out for the Knowledge of God and how all the seekers are turning their faces toward Abdul Baha knowing well that he is the source of divine Love, divine faith and divine Knowledge.

{{p27}}

The first quotation explains the condition of thousands of men and women. It comes from the far West and its appeal is so earnest. Here it is:

“I am trying so hard to see the Light, to find the truth. The material is so strong in me that I cannot put aside the burdens of this world and think only of my spiritual needs. I have not Faith! I want it. Oh I want it, but it does not come to me! I fail in everything for lack of Faith, although I pray for it and an understanding heart - but it does not come. Will you help a searching, hungry heart to the Light? Dear Master? Faith will come with the Light. Many, many years I have been seeking. I have drifted from one thing to another, trying to find the truth and praying to be able to recognize it when it come. My sands of life have almost run and I have done so little in the vineyard of my Father. Oh I want Truth and Faith and Light to see and recognize the Truth and strength to hold fast Faith when it comes. I am calling on you for help, dear Master, for strength and light out of this darkness.”

Another seeker of God writes:

“When I was a child, owing to poor environments I was brought up heedless of God. My father did not know what was best to do for his family. He did not allow the word ‘God’ be mentioned in our midst unless it was with a sneer or ridicule...and then being 24 years old I started to want to believe in God...I then studied the catholic religion and became a catholic but only for a few years. When I began to see that I could not go to confession and profess - to confess my sins and ask absolution and say a few Hail Mary’s and be forgiven; in fact I know that I did not tell the truth {{p28}} in the confessional and know positively from my experience of the human nature that no one else does, because they to the things over and over again that they are confessing. After that, I did not go back to the catholic church...Two years ago I joined a Presbyterian Church partly to become acquainted with the people...When during this time I became thoroughly acquainted with the Pastor and a few of the Elders and I found they did have the love of mankind in their hearts nor believed what they preached...I have prayed more of late for the true enlightening Light than ever before. I feel there is something within me that has never been satisfied. I am not in harmony with myself or anyone else. I am tossed about like a ship which has lost its rudder. I have never really and in truth believed in God like others. My heart and soul long for Faith and religion. I am unhappy...I am very weak. My prayer to you is to show me the Right path and to give me Faith. There are times when I do not seem to have faith even in myself. Yes I feel as if I could not go on with my work another day...I am told you have the power to help me. Oh I lack Faith and Light! Please, please give me Light and Faith; show me the way to do right, live aright and for others. I ask for it on my Knees, o God! I want to be right. Help me, help me Abdul Baha and I will pledge my life to help others according to God’s will.” Such are the heart-rending cries of hundreds, may thousands all over America and Europe crying out as though moved by one mighty impulse for the spiritual verities. The purports of all the appeal are the same and the two above, I believe, are typical of the {{p29}} confused conditions of this materialistic age and the determined longing of the Western people to release themselves from its brightening effect. Most fortunately, they are on the right path and they will receive abundantly out of the treasures of the Kingdom of Abha. Their wounds will be healed through the antidote of God; their aspirations will be realized through the Power of God and their entreaties will be heard by the Lord of Hosts.

In these innumerable letters just received news abound of the progress of the Cause. A letter from Budapest states: "Yesterday the first Budapest Baha'i Assembly was held in our house. I opened the meeting with Prof. Vambery's letter addressed to your Holiness. I read then an excerpt of my lecture on Baha'i Movement written in 1912, with comments. At the motion by Mr. it was decided that a pamphlet should be published in Hungarian for Propaganda purposes and I was charged with this work. Undecided to meet on the last Sunday of every month at 11 o'clock a.m. All present asked me to express to your Holiness our deeply felt thankfulness and our reverent devotion to you and to this enlightened movement and to pray for your priceless benediction without which we feel all our work would be in vain. The meeting was closed by reading some lines from Ingham and the present friends were asked to bring next time other people to join our meetings. We hope, that our endeavors to spread that Baha'i Teachings shall be successful and that we shall be enabled by the help of God to form a radiant center of Unity and Love in this country which is really in {{p30}} the greatest need of being opened to these blissful outpourings of Baha-ollah. We feel the presence of your Spirit in our midst and this gives us courage and strength. Your Holiness has given us from your bowl now we shall distribute your bread among the people."

Likewise in Vienna the Cause is spreading. They have established weekly meetings and are going ahead with the diffusion of the Fragrances. One of the friends writes as follows:

"Let me write to your Holiness that we, the Vienna people, remember with great pleasure and profit the days your spent amongst us. The Baha'i doctrine is sublimic, in the full sense of the word. Slowly, very slowly we are climbing to the Glorious Height of Baha. There are people in this country who comprehend your glowing message and to these you were a of things they were anticipating."

A believer from Chicago writes:

"I have heard that there is a great effort being made to go forth and spread the Teachings and bring in new souls. It has been my constant cry and endeavor for a long time. We need an inlet of new souls or new blood and this will strengthen the whole body. We are like gold fish in water that has stood for some days. they grow listless and lie on the bottom of the tank. Put in a siphon and let in fresh water at the bottom and pump out the old from the top and soon the fishes are swimming about full of life and energy. So must we do here. Let in new Life and Love and pump off the old stagnant water - then all the fishes new and old will become vivified and energetic."

{{p31}}

A full report of the Meeting of Bowery Mission April 19 to commemorate the visit of Abdul Baha of the same date last year is before me. It is most interesting and the Beloved is highly pleased with it. It says:

"We had a very large attendance. All were delighted with the service. We distributed 348 twenty five cent pieces as souvenirs to the people present. The four hundred frames from Abdul Baha or 77 in American money and the 10 which Abdul Baha gave to us to start the fund was the total amount distributed on the occasion  $87 = 348$  quarters. We have sufficient to do likewise at the next meeting."

Many speeches were delivered on that occasion and I will bring this letter to an end by quoting here part of Mr. Hooper Harris' address:

"Now there was a time, and not so very long since, when I had very little faith in this Book (Bible), when I had become to believe it was a collection of fairy tales, and it was through the inspiration, through the life and through the teaching of Abdul Baha that I came to have absolute confidence in the Word of God, and not only I but thousands, perhaps hundreds of thousands, perhaps millions in this world have come to believe in the inspiration of that Book through his teachings, because we see in him the duplicate in our own day and in our modern times, the very essence of that wonderful life that shines through this Book. From the time he was 8 years old, a boy banished with his Father who had been stripped of everything He owned, His followers disbanded and Himself banished to a foreign country. Hence this boy from the time he was 8 years of age knew no home, no country and he himself afterward became {{p32}} a prisoner in a Turkish prison, a sword suspended over his neck every minute of the time by a man who could at any moment decree his death. Many times in his prison he was mistreated, for years he was confined in a solitary dungeon with chains on him, and yet during those 40 years of imprisonment nothing could deliver him from the work he knew to be done in the world for the love of you and me. Every moment was spent for other people, not for one instant did he complain of the injustice heaped upon him. So in our modern day we see the example of a man who duplicates in himself that great principle of absolute sacrifice for the love of others and that great principle of absolute carelessness about the things of this world so far as they relate to him. Why, Abdul Baha, if he had two coats he would give away one in an instant. Everything he has belongs to the first person who comes along and needs it. He thinks everything of this, because my dear brothers, Abdul Baha stands for the great principles which Jesus Christ taught, the great Kingdom of God upon the earth and the plan of a great institution, social and economical, which will destroy all those things that tend to drag down your souls, that tend to degrade you. When we leave this place it is not ten steps before we see the lure of the things that drag us down. Now it is through the inspiration of a life like this and the principles that he stands for, the things he proposes to set going in this world, that we can help him by resisting these temptations and letting that light shine in us which is the master and conqueror of outer things no matter what they may do with our bodies.

“Now, my dear friends, I would like to talk further with you. I could tell you many things about Abdul Baha and the things that he stands forth, but my time is limited, and I will close by simply asking you to remember that Abdul Baha stands as the Center of a great Movement in this world which will make the religion of God and the religion of Christ mean something in the way of rehabilitating manhood and making us a common brotherhood and that through practical means.”

I have given you only a few drops out of the great sea of letters which rolled over me today and I have been feasting my spirit and mind. Truly it is wondrous how one is uplifted by hearing from the friends in all parts of the world. The beauty and charm of all this lies in the fact that the aim of this large volume of correspondence is not commerce and business but it is purely for the sake of the Love of God and the furtherance of the Cause of Universal Peace.

Toward the evening I called on the Beloved and as I read to him some of the most letters especially the ones sent by the Baha’i Assembly of Minneapolis to the President, Cabinet officers, clergymen, women’s club, school teachers he was made very happy and commenced to dictate answers to the most urgent ones. Till eleven o’clock pm I was blissfully happy to put down our paper in his words of light and life. I can never describe my feelings when he walks to and fro and dictates Tablet after Tablet. One is truly absorbed in a sea of rapture!###November 14th 1913 Port Said, Egypt

{{p34}}

Dear friends!

The apartment of Ahmad Yazdi is on the third floor and if I am not mistaken there are about 80 steps before one has arrived at his destination. All these steps and everything in the house is blessed by the feet and presence of the Beloved. Ahmad Yazdi’s sister, a matronly, gentle, spiritual woman attends to all his needs. How beautifully calls her “sister” just as he is calling the “Greatest Holy Leaf”. “Hamsheereh” is the Persian word for the sister. According to the Persian custom whenever I knock at the door she must get out of the way and hide herself in one of the rooms. Then I am permitted to enter the reception room. If by any chance or more coincidence I happen to look at her I must either turn my head the other way or look down. The other night I was in the room with the Master and he called on her to take the pot wherein a small chicken was prepared for him and bring it in so that he may look at it whether it was arranged according to his direction. A long time passed and she did not come. Then the Master cried out: "Put a shawl on thy head and come in. Thou art a mother to Mirza Ahmad." Notwithstanding this, she came in, very shyly and I busied myself with looking at a paper and did not raised my eyes from it till she was out of the room. You may think this is very strange, but I assure you very few grumbles over it. It is a custom held sacred for many ages and it may take some time yet before when it is modified.

This morning I called at the apartment more early than usual and the Master was not up yet, so I passed my time by talking with Mirza Hadi, Mirza Hossein, Ahmad Yazdi, etc. These friends know almost all the pilgrims - Americans - who have come eastward for the last many years and they are always full of inquiries about them. They look upon America with an eye of wonder and amazement, ever anticipating to hear life-imparting news from that west region.

After a while the door of His room was suddenly opened and he peered out lovingly and asking wonderingly "Are you here?". When he took his tea he asked me to go into His room and commenced to dictate many Tablets both to the Eastern and Western Bahais. His voice was weak and tremulous, his eyes were shut and the flow of divine revelation continued till noon. Then looking at his watch he said. "It is enough for today. I want to go today to the Mosque. It is Friday." Later on I found out that he carried with himself two pockets full of dimes and nickels - Piastres and half piastres - to distribute amongst the poor who always cluster at the entrance and wait patiently for alms. So that is why he wanted to go to Mosque. Friday prayer is one of the most firm columns in the religious structure of the Islamic world. It is incumbent upon every good Musulman to show himself in the Mosque on Fridays. First he will meet his brothers in faith - rich and poor - on the same equal footing, associate with them in a spiritual manner and performs his invocations at the Throne of the Almighty.

The evening was a memorable one. It was truly a holy night taken out of the heavenly colander. It was almost 7 pm. From four to seven I had a long walk with Doctor Getsinger. I was tired when I tread my feet toward the hotel. I passed by Ahmad Yazdi's apartment and something in me urged me to go up. I tried to argue and reason with it but it would not listen. "Hurry! Go up! Something great and spiritual is awaiting thee." The still mall voice authoritatively commanded me. So I ascended the steps with new and strange emotions. When I entered, lo and behold all the pilgrims were sitting on the divan all around. The Master was in a deep, contemplative mood. The room was throbbing with spiritual vibrations as though filled with the pure atmosphere of the spring divine revelation. Everybody was in deep and reverent silence. I looked well at the countenance of the Master. He was certainly not with us. His mind, his spirit were travelling in the Kingdom of Eternal Light, he was walking along the shady and cool avenues of the spiritual rose garden. What a heavenly moment! Then little by little he opened his starry eyes. The rays of the Sun of Truth were irradiating from them. We all felt the electric power of His Spirit and were ready to receive his message. "Before my arrival in Denver I read in the newspaper that there was held in that city a great religious revival owing to the formal opening of a mammoth cathedral. When I arrived there I asked: 'What has been going on here?' 'A spectacular religious procession!' They answered. 'For what purpose?' 'Oh! Have you not heard? A magnificent cathedral was dedicated to the {{p37}} worship of Christ.' 'Who dedicated it?' 'The honorable Cardinal and many prelates have come from the east to perform the official ceremonies.' 'What did they do.' 'The religious procession was so impressive, that 15,000 men and women were moved by the spectacle and prostrated themselves right along the avenues and streets.' 'Indeed!' I rejoined 'it must have been very wonderful, very awe-inspiring! I wish I was here to witness it. Oh! Oh! But I can recall of another religious procession held in Jerusalem about 2000 years ago. It was somewhat similar to this, with just a few points of difference. In the religious revival of 2000 years ago His Holiness Christ wore on his head a crown of thorns; in this procession the Cardinal wore a tiara of gold and jewels. The clothes of His Holiness Christ were extremely simply and unassuming, but the robes of the Cardinal were made with costly materials and silks; the rod of His Holiness Christ was a piece of plain wood but the scepter of the Cardinal is studded with rubies and precious stones. The music of that revival was the sweet melody of the Supreme Concourse, but the music of this Cathedral was the worldly choir and the strains of the organ. In that religious revival one was ridiculing, another sneering, this man scoffing, that woman reviling but in this procession 15,000 people knelt on the ground. In that spiritual revival there was no blast and trumpet of publicity, in this gorgeous procession all tongues praised it and all the newspapers advertized it. That religious revival was upon the cross this one in the newly constructed cathedral with all due honors {{p38}} and respectability. That was a religious revival and this was also a religious one! But what a vast difference between the two!" Here the Master became so engrossed with the ecstasy of his subject that he was no longer addressing us. With a deep voice, full of emotions, with his eyes shining like two lamps in the darkness, with his hands making the most significant gestures he arose to the very highest altitude of inspiration, strange, fascinating, compelling, irresistible, all-powerful! "Ah! Ah! Ah!" his words burning into the very reality of our spirits. "That was a great spiritual revival, incomparable in its beauty, far-reaching in its meaning, world-shaking in its purport and heavenly in its presentation! Its effect was for all eternity and its influence handed down to all posterity, all other revivals compared with that are child's play! Look at the glorious Christ! Watch him, watch him, he is walking through the streets and bazaars, erect, firm and unshakable. On his head there is a crown of thorns. He has no friends, no assistants and no one to take his side. All around him there is a huge rubble, boisterous, turbulent, vociferous, stormy. They are thirsty for his blood. On their lips are nothing else but taunt, sneer, jeer and derision. On his back he is carrying his cross. Can you not imagine this immortal scene in your minds? Such was the incomparable procession of Christ! Ah! Ah! Ah! How luminous it was! How merciful it was! How godlike it was! How celestial it was! How divine it was!

“But this modern procession was good for those who desire show and theatrical effects! How lofty and noble was the world of Christ and how low and ignoble is the aim of these people! Oh no! Christ {{p39}} raised the standard of spirituality but these people are fostering materiality.” Then he grew silent and you could hear a pin drop. We were all transfixed, motionless and enveloped in the white clouds of his inspiration. He had carried us too far and we could not come back. We were wondering and thinking when he again raised his voice:

”Once there was a Motasarref (governor) in Acca. He was acquainted with me. His name as Zeevar Pasha. On the other hand the monks have a great and pretentious-looking monastery on Mount Carmel. It is much like the castle of a King. They have gathered within its walls all the man’s comfort, luxury and worldly elegance. They live a life of ease, free from any worry and above the fluctuations of time. To them hard work and honest labor are unknown. Having immense sources of religious revenues they have grown extraordinarily rich. Now around this monastery there were large tracts of forests and meadows. Having no particular owner at the time, it belonged naturally to the poor and destitute. They brought their flocks and cattle to graze in the meadow and gathered pieces of woods and kindling either to sell in the bazaar for a few cents, or to cook with as their simple food. One day the monks, like a thunder bolt out of the blue sky, appeared on the scene, drew away the men and cattle and claimed the land as their own. There was a very old woman who had only cow. The grazing around of the cow was the meadow, and in the evening and morning she would sell the milk and live on this means. She came to me with tears in her eyes, because her source of livelihood was stopped by the monks.

There was a poor man who roamed all day over the woods and gathered little pieces of kindlings and in the evening sold them for a few piastres to support his large family. He was also prevented by the monks. The whole proposition was unjust and cruel. The French government took naturally the part of the monks, and in the most high handed way, tried to validate unfair pretensions of the monks.

The inhabitants complained to the authority against the iniquitous dealings of the monks. Then the Motasarref came to me and said, ‘will you please come with me to the monastery and see what we can do?’ Together we went. The monks tried to bribe him but they could not succeed. He told them ‘Have fear of God.’ At last without reaching and conclusion we returned. Realizing that they failed in this, their first move, they resorted to other means. They thought by giving a sumptuous dinner or banquet to Motasarref and his official family, they will put him under their own obligation and then he will be forced to protect them. Hence they went into this with great zest, issued the invitations and left no stone unturned to make the banquet royal in proportion. On the night of the banquet Motasarref came to me, and insisted that I may accompany him. I said 'no! Why should I come? I am not invited.' He answered, 'it is impossible, I beg you to come with me.' I said: 'Very well! I will come but on the condition that you will give me the freedom of action. I cannot sit at the table.' He agreed this and together we went out. The monastery was decorated most lavishly, the lights were burning most brilliantly and the banquet hall was embellished with the most delicate oriental arts and drapery. The table {{p41}} groaned under the loads of steaming dishes, delicious viands, and most palatable and savory food. There were all kinds of fruits and candies, and the table decorations was very beautiful. Motasarref and the officials sat on one side, and the monks took the seats on the opposite side. However, before they sat at the table, taking Motasarref aside, I expressed my ideas to him, that while Christ was in the utmost poverty and destitution, these monks who pretend to walk in his footsteps are fabulously wealthy, influential, and live in such a palatial residence. Notwithstanding this, they are not satisfied, and are aiming to usurp the lands which are the main source of the sustenance of many a shepherd and poor man.

I took my seat away from the merry-makers, near a window, and was watching the proceeding and waiting to see when will they turn up there card. Then lo! A man from amongst the monks arose from his seat. He was well-known for his eloquence and polished speech. HE delivered a passionate and fiery talk, the virtues of the monks. 'Your honor Mostasarref!' he said at last 'you are well aware of the goodness of the hearts of these godlike men. They are kind and hospitable, and they have built this monastery for no other purpose than to give a shelter to the weary traveler and sore-footed way-farer. They are indeed loved by God, for they have sacrificed everything for the welfare of humanity.' Then Motasarref got up from his seat and asked the orator: 'May I ask you one or two questions?' 'Indeed! Your honor I am at your service.' 'Very well. Will you tell me to whom these monks are related?' 'To our Lord Jesus Christ. They are his disciples and {{p42}} followers.' 'Well said. When our Lord Jesus Christ lived upon this earth he did not have a palace like unto this. His home was the mountain and the wilderness. The lamps of his night were the stars of heaven; his pillow was a piece of stone, his bed the bare ground and his food consisted of the grass. But these honorable monks whom you say are the disciples of Christ enjoy the comfort of this palace, enjoy honor and glory and are the possessors of much wealth. As regards to their food, praise be to God, we have had all a taste of it tonight, and have come to appreciate their gastronomic art. Not being contented with all these, they are outstretching the hands of usurpation to seize these tracks of land, which are the sources of the support and maintenance of the poor people of this town! Is not this tyrannical? Is not this despotic? Tell me, what right have they? How can they substantiate their claim? What relation between Christ and these men? How are they the disciples of Christ? What connection between the morality of Christ and the morality of these men?' After a few seconds of silence he said: "The standard is deeds. Look upon the deeds of the people. Standard is deeds. The deeds of every Bahai must be so high, so above the criterion of the present age that he may shine like unto a sun." For the third time he said with great emphasis: "Standard is deeds." then he arose from his seat and bade the pilgrims au revoir till tomorrow. As they were leaving the room his voice rang clear and strong: "You are always with me. You are living in my heart, my mind and my spirit."###November 15th 1913

Dear friends!

For half an hour, pen in hand I have been thinking how to commence this letter and both my memory and resources failed to come to my assistance, although there are such an abundance of materials on all sides. There must need be a trained mind and a sympathetic heart to see things and describe them with sensitive beauty and charm. Whosoever is endowed with such a divine gift he is the true artist. Such a genius leaves to posterity, in immortal images, the ideals and accomplishments of his age. A good memory knows what to preserve and what to forget, what to describe and what to look over. When the Lord of mankind is living amongst us, walking, drinking, eating, sleeping like any other man how supremely important it is to preserve for the countless generations yet unborn, at least some glimpses of his Personality, his movements, his work, and his words. Like unto the fish we are swimming unconsciously in the sea of the heavenly graces and often we are prone to forget those who are going to come after us. They have indeed a greater claim upon us than those who are living in this age; because everyone today can avail himself of the inestimable privilege of seeing the Beloved, hearing his words and standing in his Presence. But what about the future centuries. How they would long to have had one glance, one word from the Center of the Covenant of God and now praise be to God that many of you have attained to this. We must therefore, sacrifice all our identities and arise to serve him and promote the Glad Tidings of the Kingdom of Abha.

{{p44}}

Today I will translate herein a wonderful Tablet addressed to our good and faithful brother Mr. L. Stark of Budapest:

"O thou honorable person! Thy letter was received. Praise be to God it indicated that in Budapest a radiant assembly is organized, blessed souls have been present and discussion which shall yield eternal results have been touched upon. It is assured that this assembly shall attract unto itself the splendors of the Sun of Reality; the heavenly Potency shall strengthen it and universal benefits shall be produced. The Charter of this Assembly is the Oneness of the world of humanity; the Constitution of this Assembly is love between the various members of mankind and its by-laws as though complete abandonment of racial feeling, religious prejudices, denominational spirit, patriotic bias and political maxims. For all these prejudices are pure imaginations. These prejudices have been the cause of the shedding of blood, the destroyers of the foundation of humanity; the means of hatred and animosity, the killing of men, the captivity of women, the orphaning of children, the destruction of the country and the immigration of countless members of people. These events in their most heinous forms were actualized in the Balkan State. Reflect that undoubtedly millions of people were made homeless, shelterless and exiles! How many men rolled in their own blood! How many women and children were maltreated! How many flourishing cities were demolished. How many villages were entirely razed to the ground!

Their first excuse was religious in tone and character. Then they declared war against the Mohammadans and announced it publicly that this is a holy war.

Praise be to God that it became soon evident and manifest that they had made religion the pretest to carry on this dreadful war. Later on another war was proclaimed amongst the members of the Balkan Federation themselves, although the Balkan people have one religion and one faith and we may state that in reality they belong to one race. How they did shed each other's blood and crimsoned the field with the blood of the innocent people! The raging fire of war set a great conflagration to such an extent that all the Balkan nations arose in enmity against each other totally disregarding the inviolable rights of man. Even now they are not calmed down.

Now consider clearly the woeful results of political prejudices! Consequently we must shun entirely these prejudices and pitch high the tent of the oneness of the world of humanity and cement the hearts together. Perchance mankind may lighten its loads and start on the road of pacification. Were the Teachings of Baha-ollah universally spread in Europe all these oppressions, blood-shedding cruelty, rapacity, hostility and aversion would have been removed? Then all the people will become the sheep of God and enter under the benevolent administration of the heavenly Shepherd. The rays of Reality will shine forth dispelling the impenetrable darkness {{p46}} of race antipathy and antagonism.

"Therefore, strive ye with your hearts and souls so that ye may render service to the oneness of the world of humanity; thus eternal life may be obtained and the heads be crowned with the diadem of Everlasting Glory."

Another Tablet to a believer in Vienna is as follows:

"O thou daughter of the Kingdom! The good news of the organization of the Bahai Assembly in Vienna was received. Although this assembly at this time is limited to a number of souls but as it is a divine assembly its circle will be enlarged day unto day like unto the assembly of the Lord's Supper of His Holiness Christ, and its influence shall be felt in all parts of the world. Because the assembly of the Lords' Supper of His Holiness Christ was confirmed by the Breaths of the Holy Spirit, consider what great results and benefits produced! Likewise, whenever and wherever an assembly is organized for the promotion of the Teachings of His Holiness Baha-ollah, know thou of a certainty that the Confirmations of the Holy Spirit shall descend. For the principles of Baha-ollah are the very spirit of this age, the light of the century, eternal life and everlasting glory.”

Words of Truth are these and vivifying. They confer spiritual insight and super natural power! We all hope that these two big cities will become the strong forts of the Bahai Cause in Europe and another two links in the unbreakable chain of celestial brotherhood.

{{p47}}

This morning till about eleven o'clock the Beloved dictated many Tablets. He was in good health and I wrote down his words. I felt the power and magnetism of his Holy Personality projected in the space of our sphere working and changing the old conditions and animating the dead bodies.

About noon the pilgrims entered into His Divine Presence. He said: “From the moment I have been out of my bed I have been thinking of you and wishing to see you. I am pleased you have come.” Then he asked me to read them a letter just received from Prof. Cheyne of Oxford who is greatly interested in the Bahai movement and to which letter he just dictated a detailed answer. When the letter was read he said: “Pray that God may brighten his lamp day by day, cause His Kingdom to be established in the hearts, and the rays of the sun of truth may shine forth into greater brilliancy. Consider where is the prison of Acca and the University of Oxford. Through what power this Cause has become so well-known in that stronghold of learning and education. Once Aga Riza was making confectionary in Adrianople and had a small store. He had made a sort of Persian bon-bon. A Turk passed by and his eyes were attracted by the candy. ‘What is this?’ he asked. ‘It is noghl!’ ‘With what materials has thou made this?’ ‘With sugar and cinnamon.’ The Turk wondered for a while and said: ‘Thou art telling a lie. There is no relationship between sugar and cinnamon.’ Now we might just as well ask. What relation {{p48}} exists between Acca and Oxford? This is no other through the power of God! Professor Cheyne demonstrated to us the utmost kindness and invited us to lunch at his sweet home. He is a great author and has written many volumes. Praise be to God that the Divine Fragrances are being diffused in all parts. Just at this time I wrote a letter to the Islands of Honolulu. These are situated in the Pacific Ocean. Few of the Persians have heard even their names yet the Cause of God has conquered those remote parts. Taking away the first part of the word Hono-(lulu) and using only the last post - lulu- it means scarecrow in Persian. But now it has become a strong bond of unity between the East and the West. The person to whom I wrote the letter has asked permission to go to Japan and spread the Cause. The Cause of God has in itself an innate force propelling it forward and onward. Another good news which we have just received is from Minneapolis. The Bahai assembly of that city has rendered a glorious service. They have forwarded the Glad tidings of the kingdom of Abha to the President of the United States, Cabinet Secretaries, Governors, Clergymen, Women’s Clubs, school teachers. Reflect how God inspires the servants to carry out His work! Who could ever dream that after the hard incarceration of Acca, the spies, and the closing of the doors of all correspondence - to the extent that we could not send out one letter - the voice of the Cause would be heard from Honolulu. The surveillance of the guards in the prison of Acca was so strict that wherever they brought us a few loaves of bread, they were {{p49}} cut in two for fear that there might be hidden some written messages. At that time there was a government physician. He was the prison doctor and came to the barracks to attend to the sickness of the prisoners. He was Greek and his name was Peter. Every day that he came to the barracks he was followed by two soldiers, so that he might not in any way communicate with the prisoners. One day while he was on his tour of inspection, when he reached me he told me in Greek that he had a letter for Baha-ollah. 'I want to deliver into your hand this letter but I do not know how for these soldiers are watching me.' As they could not understand Greek, they did not comprehend what he said. In turn I made him understand that he may leave his hat in the prison and go out with the guards. When he is a block away he may run back to take it, while ordering the guards to wait till his return. He did as I told him and we got the letter safely. By this one instance you can easily conceive how it was impossible to communicate with the outside world, and now in one day we receive more than one hundred letters from all parts of Europe and America."

In the afternoon I wait again to the house. He had an eyeglass in his hand and a propos of it told us go a long which his grandfather had received as a present from the government of Russia, because he was the person chosen by the Shah to carry the three million and a half war indemnity. This telescope on clear days could see twelve miles away. But not we have a divine telescope in our hand that can see the furthest end of the earth and make visible the invisible objects.###November 16th 1913 Port Said, Egypt

{{p50}}

Dear friends!

This is our last day in Port Said. Tomorrow we shall return to Ramleh. The news of the death of Aga Ali Akbar in Ramleh was received last night and the Master sent immediately the family and carry to them the messages of his love.

On the other hand the steamer China of the Austrian Lloyd left tonight at seven o'clock carrying away Doctor and Mrs. Getsinger and the five Zoroastrian men with their women and children for India - that far off land of strange creeds. With them goes the confirmation of the Kingdom of Abha and the host of spiritual angels. Theirs is a glorious mission and let us all pray fervently that they may be succeeded to teach many souls and call the attention of many people to the Cause of God.

Mrs. Stannard has also arrived from Cairo. Having disposed of all her objects she is now ready to start for India with greater ease and confidence. She has burned the bridge and shall leave on the 20th of this month. United in purpose and aim the three will become assisted to perform signal services in the Cause. England, America, Persia and India are going to shake the hand of friendship and Bahai fellowship. Although there are four gardens and four kinds of flowers yet they are all fragrant and once their perfumes are mixed there will be a new sweet fragrance - spiritual, super sensual.

Early in the morning the Beloved called for the pilgrims. As he came in all arose and he walked around looking in the face of each - eager, emanating love and devotion for him. He smiled, he was happy. These were his own spiritual children. Ah me! How in one glance he conveys to each his silent love-thought and the joy of spirit which is keynote of heaven! Then he sat down, his holy face wreathed with the flowers of happiness and indescribable pleasure. "You are all welcome! What joyful spiritual faces are yours!" "Come unto me" he asked the three Zoroastrian children. They ran toward him. He made one of them sit on his right hand, another on his left and the smallest on his lap. With his blessed hands he caressed their shining black hairs and little brown faces. The father and mother were so moved by this scene that they wept tears of joy. "These are my darling little friends. Khasro bring for them ". After filling their pockets and while they were nestling as close to him as possible he said to the grown up:

"This is the last day that I am meeting you, but in reality this is the first day. Although physically it is the last day, yet spiritually it is the first day. In the divine world there is no beginning and ending. From a material standpoint there may be the first and the last, but from the spiritual standpoint there is neither first nor last. We have had together such wonderful days. Praise be to God that we were all engaged in the mention of God. We have no other {{p52}} aim God and entertained no other longing except his servitude. Although outwardly we were living on the surface of the earth, yet inwardly our hearts were in heaven, our spirits were in the Kingdom of Abha. One could never imagine more blessed days than these! Now we expect the results of these ideal experiences". Many eyes were weeping. One of the pilgrims expressed the hope that he will see Baha-ollah in the Kingdom. "Ah yes!" he said softly and quietly. "I hope that we will all be gathered there! Our real gathering is There! Our divine Assembly is There! Our spiritual Feast is There! Our eternal union is There. This meeting is only an introduction to the One prepared for us by the Blessed Perfection." With what infinite longing, what unfailling yearning he uttered these words! They made us all long to enter that realm of light as soon as possible. Again he spoke: "This voyage of yours was extremely significant. Because first, you were with me in Alexandria, then you departed to visit the Holy Tomb of Baha-ollah and now we are gathered in Port Said for the cause. There are two kinds of travelers - pilgrims and tourists. The pilgrims are those who after the visit of the Holy Tomb are surrounded with the Glances of the Mercy of the Almighty, their hearts became the caskets for the Jewels of the Treasury of God, and their spirits stirred by the Breath of the Holy Spirit, but the tourists are those who just came to see the places, showing in all things a historic interest and probably {{p53}} after their departure they will write a booklet. Praise be to God that you are pilgrims... Praise be to God that you are pilgrims!"

One of the believers of Port Said Aga Youseff had invited the pilgrims to lunch, so the Master said: "Well done! Well done! The believers of God must always invite each other. They must show toward each other the utmost hospitality and kindness. A Bahai feast is not like the feast of other people. The receptions given by the friends are the store house of spirituality and fragrances. The Arabs have a saying 'AS soon as you have helped yourselves of the food, depart.' This is a cow-like quality. They graze on the grass, drink from the fountain and once satisfied they leave their pasturage. But when the Bahais gather together they commemorate the name of God, they chant prayers, and encourage each other through spoken words in the love of God - a feast of the soul. The name of God is the feast of the spirit."

"Oh! My beloved ones! I love you very much, because you are the believers of God. If I do not love you, then whom can I love? If I am not made happy through you then who can make me happy? If I had time, I would have come with you as far as Bombay. I have received the news of the death of Aga Ali Akbar from Ramleh. I must return to console the members of his family. Aga Ali Akbar was a pure soul, believer and assured. He was firm in the covenant and his face shone with divine happiness. When he was in Yazdi he was a rich man. No sooner {{p54}} it was known that he is a Bahai. All his property was confiscated and he was thrown into dungeon. They finally brought him out and has him. Seeing that he was a strong man they stripped him of all his clothes and inflicted whips on his bare back till blood started to flow. He never complained. He stood there as a rock. This means faith. After sometimes he came to Acca. He did not have one cent. He was a very contented man. I gave him five francs (one dollar). He went away and for two years this was the capital of his business. Finally one day I asked him whether he has yet any money. He said 'Oh yes. The five francs have supported me for the last 2 years.' Then I joked with him that I will sue him in the court if he does not divide the interests with me."

When the pilgrims left the house he had another long talk with Lua about her trip to India giving her some instructions and toward the last he said: "Now that thou art departing for India I desire that thou mayest become like unto a rose garden to perfume the nostrils of all the people. Be thou a joy-carrier, a of the spiritual spring time, a glad-bears of the kingdom of Abha. Be thou the embodiment of spirituality and independence. Trust in God and work day and night. People are divided into two kinds. The first kind as those who live in the underground of moral darkness and satisfied with the dim light of the candle; others extricate {{p55}} themselves from the prison and soar toward the immensity of space. Strive thy utmost to free people from darkness and cause their entrance into the Kingdom of Thy Glorious Lord! In the middle of nights pray and supplicate to God with such fervor and zeal that I may hear thy calls."

Then he went out at the veranda to walk and after a few minutes he called Lua and me to himself. He showed to us a lovely garden below. "Do you see this garden? Well! This belongs to a European who is in the service of the Egyptian government. He receives five hundred dollars monthly salary. Do you see that lovely Kiosk built in the center of the garden and the shady, charming avenues? When in the evening he returns from his work, after changing his clothes goes under the Kiosk and with his wife drink tea, wine, etc. Then when night comes and the beams of the silver moon are spread over the calm oriental atmosphere, they take their dinner and after a while, together they dance and waltz till midnight through the green lane and fragrant avenue of the garden. They are thoroughly absorbed in each other and apparently enjoy each other's company. While the eternal stars are marching in their prescribed courses, this couple dance in poetic motion and move to the music of the heavenly spheres. Apparently some people may conceive that this is the height of happiness but it is material and fleeting. It does not last. The only abiding happiness is spiritual and ideal. That is real, all others are phantasmal and non-essential. The joy of the spirit confers Peace."

Then coming in the room he took in his hand the pen and paper and wrote himself the following spiritual charter for Lua:

"O thou maid-servant of God, Lua! Depart for India with the intention of Teaching the Cause of God and spreading the Fragrances of god. Go forth with a pure aim, attracted heart and a spirit rejoiced with the Glad-Tidings of the Kingdom of Abha! Be thou so severed from all else God that thou mayest eternally soar toward the heaven of nearness. Be thou so detached from the material world that whosoever causes in contact with thee, if he is extinguished he may become illumined, if he is silent he may unloose his tongue, if he is withered he may be refreshed and put forth leaves and blossoms, if he is blind he may receive sight, if he is dead he may be resuscitated. I hope that this trip will make thee wholly spiritual, and become entirely dismouthed from the requirements of the physical world.

Upon the Baha!

(Signed) Abdul Baha Abhas"

I was glad to find Mrs. Stannard in the afternoon in the Master's house. Mrs. Getsinger was there too: "You two must love each other very much. Be very kind toward each other. Both of you are my dear daughters. Should you realize how much I love you, you would soar with joy!"

Then for the last time the pilgrims came and the Master introduced Mrs. Stannard to them. "She is a spiritual woman, a faithful worker of the Cause. She desires to meet {{p57}} the old Zoroastrian community. It seems that God has desired to unite the East and the West, because these western friends are coming to visit you. These (the Zoroastrians of India) are the plants of the garden of God. I am accepting all these hardships for their sake. These are the sheep of God. Now the Divine Shepherd has come to gather them in one flock." Then they left His Presence. It was a moving, touching scene. The Master went and stood at the door. He embraced and kissed each one as he passed out. Their eyes were full of tears. They fell at his feet and oh so reverently kissed the hem of his garment. The Zoroastrian women were also weeping. The heart of stone is melted at the beauty of the faith and the sincerity of these simple folks.

At 5:30 with Mrs. Stannard I went to the steamer to say farewell to Doctor and Mrs. Getsinger and the Zoroastrian believers. They were all very happy, conscious of the sacred responsibility which is laid upon them by the Lord of mankind. When we left the steamer they were all on the deck shaking their handkerchief and bidding us goodbye. Farewell! dear Lua. Thou hast ever been a faithful servant of the Cause! Mayest thou perform thy mission fully and nobly. We ever anticipate to hear the good news of thy triumphs and spiritual victories. Fare thee well. God is unto thee.

In the evening I was left to myself. I could do as I pleased so I decided to go "slumming" in the native quarter of the town. The streets were dark, dirt and refuse abounded, pools of stagnant water nauseated the passer by. Now and then a weird music of cymbal, the monotonous voices of women rising strictly and their handclapping reached the ears. Then I suddenly came upon the native bazaar. Women squatted on the side walk selling bread and dates, the dirty coffee-houses were filled with Arab coal carriers - their faces as black. I walked from one end of the bazaar to the other end but I did not see a clean spot. How different is this oriental scene with all these Arabs compared with the up to date restaurant on Broadway in New York and the fashionable balls given in the different capitals of the Western hemisphere. Notwithstanding all these hygienic and sanitary handicaps the people seemed to be happy and contented. You could not find in the face of all these people any sign of mental worries and nervous breakdown.

This is for the present our last night in Port Said. Only five more pilgrims are with us; two will return to Bagdad one to Russia, another to Alexandria and the fifth to Haifa. Tomorrow at one o'clock in the afternoon we will leave for Ramleh. To you and all the friends, I send you the Bahai love of these oriental brothers. They all love you and long to shake your hands.###November 17th 1913 Ramleh, Egypt

Dear friends!

"The believers of God must be alive with the sweet Fragrances of God. When you leave this land you must become the creational books, the eloquent epistles and the ceaseless workers in the Vineyard of the Lord." He uttered these words to our Bagdad pilgrims who had sent him a long petition containing many names for whom they had requested Tablets to be revealed. He took out the letter from his pocket and read aloud the names. "I am leaving this afternoon for Ramleh and will have not the time of writing letters to all these friends but I will dictate one for all.” He did so while they were sitting in his Presence. Portion of the Tablet is the following:

“O thou visitor of the Blessed Rose-Garden! Praise be to God that thou hast obtained the Favor of circumambulating around the Abode of the Supreme Concourse, prayed at the Threshold of the Holy Tomb and finally hastened to the country of Egypt and associated with this longing {{p2}} servant. Now depart thou with the utmost joy and fragrance and announce to the believers of God the Divine Favor and Bounty and encourage and incite them to become firmer day by day so that the Bestowal and Grace of the Almighty may become their associates and companions...”

Then he spoke the following words: “His Holiness Mohamad lived 23 years and all his writings are put together in the form of the Book you have in your hands. Once an Arab went to him and asked when is the time to trim the palm trees. He answered: ‘Do not ask of me questions about material things. You are better informed about your worldly affairs.’ Never during thou 23 years a pilgrim left the Presence of Mohamad while carrying to his friends or tribes a letter from him; except after his arrival he would relate to the expectant ones that on such and such a day I heard his holiness the prophet say this or that, and this become the basis of all the traditional sayings of Mohamad. On the other hand consider how many letters are written by the Pen of the Covenant. Every month {{p3}} I must write a book.” Then he asked Mohamad Yazdi who was present: “How many letters you have received from me?” “The Holy Tablet received from the Master by this unworthy servant are numerous. They must form two large volumes.” “Now thou art one of the thousands believers in the Orient.” Haji Mohamad said: Once I was in the Presence of Baha-ollah. He was reading some of the writings of the Master. After reading every line He would praise it and express the highest commendation saying, ‘We have never taught the Master yet he writes with such deep penetration and inspiration but we are daily teaching his brothers and they are copying the Holy Tablets all the time but they cannot write correctly one letter. At another time Sayad Ali was perusing the Tablets of the Beloved and he was strangely moved and said: ‘I sense the perfume of the Writings of Baha-ollah from these Tablets.’

At last the Master was alone and sent me to pack up my satchel to be ready for one o’clock train. At half past twelve I found him walking unconcernedly in front of the house.

I told him if we leave at one o’clock we must be on our way to the station. He sent for the three pilgrims who did not have any money to pay their traveling expenses back home and in hands of each he quietly slipped a few English Pounds. Then he went up and without eating his lunch packed up hurriedly and after a few minutes with Ahmad Yazdi we were on our way to the station. Eight minutes before the departure of the train the Master realized that they have left at the house a package of newly arrived letters. He called Khasro to run like wind and bring back the letters. No one ever thought he will return in time but just as the train was going to pull out we sighted him running with the package of the letters and a large bouquet of roses. Everyone thought he has accomplished a feat and we all felt proud of him. To our great joy Ahmad Yazdi is going to accompany the Beloved and we will have the pleasure of his delightful company. One of the pilgrims who will leave tomorrow for Constantinople is also with us.

After more than three months we are again travelling on the same train bounded for the same destination but this time we have the Lord of mankind with us. Again we passed by Ismailia, changed train at Banha and were in Sidi Gaber station at 7:30 pm. Many of the believers were there to welcome their Beloved. A carriage was hired and the Master was driven to Hotel Victoria taking the same Room No. 26.

While we were on the train about sunset I went to see the Master. He was standing in the corridor watching so intensely the glorious sunset. For two minutes he looked without saying a word. Then turning around he saw me. "Have you ever seen such wonderful sunset in all America and Europe?" He asked. "This is indeed a very divine sunset. The clouds look so much like the white waves of the sea at the time of a tempest." "These are heavenly waves, the waves of the upper ocean."

I stood behind him in silence while the last glimmering rays of the sun glowing behind the fleecy clouds made them seem look like {{p6}} some red, fiery enchanted Islands on the edge of the blue sky - floating in a dazzling sea of opalescent colors. They looked like little lakes set on fire. Nature is the greatest artist and in the most wonderful and simple ways it paints the golden cities of El-dorado in the highlands of the firmament. Then little by little the glowing West faded to a somber gray beckoning dreams of soft music. Slowly darkness spreads its wings and the winking stars appear one by one. Then the glittering vault of heaven becomes the imperial Court of scintillating constellations. After a while fairer and brighter of all the satellites - the Queen of heaven graciously mounts her empyrean throne and from that far-off height sends rays of light to earth. How must one feel truly happy that while one enjoys keenly these sublime portraits of nature one is also beneath the gracious Bounty and Favor of the Beloved Abdul Baha. What was he thinking all those moments while beholding the iridescent sunset? I do not know. But I assure you they were no idle moments. Someday we may hear about them.###November 18, 1913
Ramleh Egypt

{{p7}}

Dear friends!

We are again installed in Ramleh not knowing where will be our next goal. I had a fine time in Port Said. Didn't I? The Master felt much better and today he sent a few cables to different parts of the Orient saying that his health is perfect. All this morning I was busy writing. In the afternoon I called on our American sisters. Mrs. Hoagg has not been feeling well but she is recovering. The Master was walking on the Veranda, speaking with Ahmad Yazdi and his two sons-in law. Then he sat on a chair and drank his tea after which he went to Alexandria near the station bought grapes and cantaloupes and returned about seven o'clock. In the morning he called on the family of Aga Ali Akhan and stayed there a long while them and bringing to them the lights of courage and the assurance that he is living now in the Kingdom of Abha and is happy with his share of divine joy.

{{p8}}

In this letter I will translate a few Tablets which I hope will interest our American and European brothers and sisters: -

“O ye Kind friends! Today in the world of existence the Most honorable profession is the promotion of education. Thank ye God that in Hamadan in the school founded by the Bahais ye have become teachers and Professors. Abdul Baha is expecting to hear good news from that school; i.e. that the young fruits of the divine garden are being developed and educated in the college of realities and significances and are graduated in physical and spiritual sciences, that they are opening the eloquent tongues and are discoursing intelligently in every branch of learning - so that in oratory they may become ideal magicians. I hope that confirmations maybe vouchsafed to the school of Taid and that the teachers and the scholars of the school in general may become the objects of the Kingdom of Abha.....”

The following is revealed to the women teachers “O ye daughters of the Kingdom? In former century the daughters of Persia were totally {{p9}} deprived of the benefits of education. There were no schools, no colleges, no teacher, no professor and no kind instructor. Now in this great century the girls are also surrounded by the most eminent Bounty. Innumerable schools are opened in Persia for the education of the girls but a thoroughly well-equipped system of instruction is yet lacking. The latter at this juncture is more essential to save progress than the former for it is foundation of the advancement of the world of humanity. Now praise be to God that in Hamadan a Bahai school for girls is opened. You who are the teachers must lay a greater emphasis on moral education than merely academic instruction - so that the girls may be adorned with chastity and inviolability, refinement of morals and polite manners. Teach the girls sciences. Should you exercise in this manner the confirmations of the Kingdom of Abha shall wave on the apex of that school. I hope that you will become assisted....”

A Tablet was revealed by the Beloved to my two cousins Mirza Hadayatallah and Mirza Kamal {{p10}} who have come to Teheran from Esphahan with the object of entering in the school of Tarbiat: - “O ye two servants of the Blessed Perfection! The letter that you have written to his honor Mirza Ahmad was perused. As it was an indication of your health and happiness the utmost happiness was produced. Praise be to God that you are assisted to enter the school of Tarbiat. In the estimation of Abdul Baha that school is very acceptable and its founder is his honor Adeeb of the divine School. As this school is founded with a pure intention it will grow day by day. I am likewise most pleased and satisfied with the principal of the school for in reality he shows the greatest effort in the introduction of new branches of curriculum. There is no doubt that he will take the greatest care of you and will be solicitous in the progress of your education. I shall pray in your behalf that the Confirmations of God may reinforce you and that you may be so educated and instructed as to become the cause of the happiness of Mirza Ahmad.”

{{p11}}

In another Tablet revealed to Sheik Mohsen Naincy one of the teachers of the school of Tarbiat he says: - "O those confirmed personage! The letter that thou hast written to Aga Seyad Assadollah was read from first to last with infinite attention. The praise worthy results of the school of Tarbiat, the progress of the pupils and the excellent examination of the new plants of the garden of God imparted inexpressible rejoicing. How blessed art thee for God hath assisted thee in its service!

In this radiant century according to the divine Text the greatest attainment of the world of humanity is the education and instruction of the newly planted trees of the orchard of God. Praise be to God that thou art confirmed in this service . The School of Tarbiat is under the protection and guardianship of His Highness the One, therefore whosoever arises to serve it in some or other manner he will be blessed. I have the greatest satisfaction from the faculty of that sacred school and continuously do I supplicate and entreat at the Court of the Lord of Glory and from the of Beauty I beg for them Grace and Favor.

At this school is made known everywhere as a Bahai institution, the believers of God must strive with heart and soul that day by day it may advance extraordinarily, made ideal advancement and the courses of material sciences be added unto it. Perchance it may because an important influence in the up building of the ruined Persia and such graduates may come out of its door as they may become the means of spreading the rays of the Sun of Reality, Bahai Children are reinforced with the spiritual power. If this school is thoroughly organized and its courses well equipped and its teachers wise and soul-sacrificing, know thou assuredly that such souls will be trained therein and such services they will be enable to render to Persia as to spread in all parts of Persia the fame of the Ancient glory of Persia...”

Of late the faculty of the school has sent out a circular letter containing many Tablets by Abdul Baha and expressing the hope that the believers will co-operate with them to contribute some fund so that they may add a branch of science to its already present curriculum. I hope the America friends will show their generosity in this matter.

###November 19th 1913 Ramleh, Egypt

{{p13}}

Dear friends!

This was a day of roses, red, white, yellow, pink; each kind redolent with the soft fragrance of the eternal hope treasured in the heart of man and symbolic of the spiritual era of youthfulness dawning upon us. As I entered the room of the Beloved my eyes beheld a large table very near to him adorned with many vases of freshly cut roses. He had just been out of the bath and was clothed in his white, snowy robe and flowing, smooth and delicate cream-color overcoat. His face shone like unto the Sun and his gentle and courteous, searching eyes were tenderly gazing toward the roses. He was holding with them a spiritual communion. I almost felt he was speaking with these sweet children of nature and they were divulging to him the secrets of their beauty, charm and delicacy. No one was there to witness this poetic scene, this holy presentation of the divine Life! I held myself aloof and continued to watch this exhibition of floral sympathy between the Beloved and the roses. After a while he extended his hand and took out of {{p14}} one bowl a red and yellow ones and put them on the white shawl wound around his waist. Then he got up and saw me standing on the side of the bed. "Did you see me watching the roses?" he asked smiling. I thought to myself his heart is the spiritual garden of the Blessed Perfection wherein the most splendid roses of idealism are growing in all seasons. The lives of the inhabitants of the world are perfumed through the imperishable roses which Abdul Baha is at all times culling from the bushes and sending them to those who are prepared to receive them. He is the greatest and the most celestial Rose of the Supreme Concourse and the sincere and faithful Bahais are the petals. The petals must hold firm to the heart of the rose, otherwise the contrary winds of passion and desire will shake them off the stalk and once fallen on the ground they sere and die. The Eternal Attributes of the Kingdom of Abha are the colors and fragrances of this Rose. They are not acquired, nay rather they are immanent in it. The awakened souls inhale Its holy fragrance, and thus dilate their hearts, spiritualize their minds and harmonize their conflicting ideas.

When I came out of his holy Presence my nostrils perfumed with the fragrance of all the roses I asked someone "Who has brought all these flowers for the Beloved?" "A present from our American sisters in the hotel" a voice answered. "Oh" I thought. "This is a very lovely present." Then my mind was reverted to the far off America and Europe, thinking of the many gardens that he has planted for the last 3 years in those Western Cities expecting that same day the fragrance of those roses will be permeated to the furthest end of the earth. How are those gardens faring at this present moment? Are the roses fresh and abloom? Are its meadows green and its trees verdant? Are the people delighted with them? Are they growing and developing? With what sacrifice and untiring zeal have I seen him work, taking care of the garden and trying to change the arid land into a flower-spot! It all depends upon the wisdom and sagacity of the gardeners. May they be inspired with knowledge and understanding. May they irrigate the flowers and the trees! We expect to inhale every day the fragrances of those rose gardens wafting to us overseas and lands.

This morning the Beloved came to our hose and stayed for a few minutes. He talked on different home topics with his two sons-in-law. Then he left and went to the hotel, there speaking all day with various individuals. Now giving detailed directions to Khasro about cooking, relating to hams the story of Isfandiyar and calling him by that name 3 times, then giving into an exhaustive account of Greek history, Herodotes and Xenophan and their exaggerated stories with a Greek gentleman and again answering with great forbearance the hazy and indefinite questions of two Mohammadan theologians. Thus it was about 12 o'clock when he went to bed extremely tired.

The question of our trip to Haifa is again reviewed, but as both of us have learned through experience time will show.

Our four American sisters, Mrs. Von Lelianthal, Mrs. Beede, Mrs. Hoagg and Mrs. Wise are leaving on 22nd for Haifa according to the Command of the Beloved. He told them he will join them later on. We are sorry to lose them but they are very blessed to go to visit the Holy Tomb of Baha-ollah and the Bab. ###November 20, 1913 Ramleh, Egypt

{{p17}}

Dear friends!

“My spiritual and material Physician is His Holiness Baha-ollah. His Graces and Bestowals are sufficient for me. Thanksgiving behooveth Him for He hath up to this time protected me under all circumstances. The physicians of Materia Medica have no effect on me.” This is the passage in a Tablet revealed to a believer who expressed the wish that a certain Doctor might treat him. The Beloved is under the direct protection of God and no harm will come to him. He has come to heal the ailments of the moral world and he has brought the true and decisive treatment. Doubts and skepticisms abound in and out of the churches, unbelief is fostered by the purblind materialistic communities and he has the quick-healing remedy to do away with these social chronic diseases. He desires to extirpate the roots of these vices and corruptions and rehabilitate the decayed conditions of our modern Society with its rank atheistic beliefs and disbeliefs. All those who {{p18}} have lost their abounding faith must turn their attention to the Center of all-faith and their hearts and minds will become filled with this god-given gift and their spirits will be fired with the Love of God. They will become conscious of the controlling, intelligent Power, guiding the destiny of the universe and they will attain to the fountain of new joy and hope. Their extinguished lamps will be rekindled. Their lost faith will be regained. Their dried wells will gush forth fresh, salubrious water. Their withered trees will be robed with verdure and bloom. Their fallen stars will rise again in the brilliant horizon of Universal religious. They will become inspired with a diviner zeal, with a holier sanctification, a loftier purpose, a more sacred resolution, a greater love for humanity and a clever vision of life and its complicated problems. This divine Physician above knows the remedies because long before he had diagnosed the symptoms of the world's maladies. Let us turn to him like earnest students and learn from him those lessons which <19> would help us to help our brothers.

In a Tablet to a Bahai Physician in Qazvin, Persia he says: -

"O thou divine Physician! From the beginning of the world to this day there has been in this world two classes of physicians: the Divine physicians and material physicians. It is recorded in the books and epistles that a number of sanctified souls have come as Divine Physicians, diagnosing spiritual diseases and treating them with the heavenly antidote. Those Physicians have studied the science of ideal medicine in the University of God. They are the spiritual diagnosticians of the Chronic diseases of the world of humanity, may rather the skillful Doctors of the hopeless and mortal cases of the body of mankind: thus they treat with prescience and unerring knowledge all manners of moral maladies.

"Likewise, these are material Physicians who are laboring most valiantly and with the love of their fellowmen in their hearts they take care of the sick ones and treat with sympathy those who are ailing in body.

{{p20}}

Both these two classes of physicians are the servants of the world of humanity and from the activities of both kinds immense benefits are accrued to man. But as to thee: Thank those God that thou art the Physician of the heart and the soul as well as the Doctor of the bodies and the physical side of man. Thou art treating those who are spiritually sick with the merciful medicines and thou art healing those who have physical diseases through divine power and Supreme Assistance, Thou art practicing in both schools and in thou hast attained to both schools and in thou hast attained to both virtues. This is a real Bounty. This is true grace and Bestowal for God hath confirmed thee in the service of both friends and strangers and hath made thee the manifestor of infinite Favors. All the souls whether known or unknown who have passed through the City of Qazvin and I have met them are extremely pleased with and grateful to thee. On this account Abdul Baha envies your services and desires to become as confirmed as thyself.

{{p21}}

Oh! How I wish to receive also a share and a portion from this Service but God specializes with His Bounty whomsoever he desires. Convey with the Utmost yearning the wonderful Abha greeting to the spiritual friends.

”Upon thee be Abha El Abha

(Sif)Abdul Baha Abha”<<

This morning I received a number of letters from America. The news containing in the letter of Miss Louise Kruq of New York City made him especially happy. She says: - “Mother and I are working earnestly and have been able to attract many new and wonderful souls to the Cause. Yesterday mother had her first Tuesday meeting. All the friends seemed very happy. The spirit was so peaceful and joyous.” Other letters contained similar news from different cities, all of which were most welcomed by the Beloved. He said with great emotion: “You must praise God for all these Favors. The whole world is set on fire. There is a spiritual configuration going on. The old ideas and barriers are burned away through this Fire of the Love of God which {{p22}} is glowing in the hearts of men.” Then he called in the room one of the friends and praised the quality and purity of her faith. “From my innermost heart and soul I am pleased with thee. Oh! I wish we had many, many believers like unto thee.” All morning he was quietly resting and did not go out. Ahmad yazdi left for Cairo in the afternoon and the Master sent with him a large bouquet of roses for Mirza Abdul Fazl and told us all to go to Sidi Gabar station to bid him farewell. On our return in the hotel the Master was sitting in the reception room. I read to him the contents of an article in the Near East Magazine about the conditions of Persia. He deplored the short sightedness and ignorance of the leaders of the country and illustrated it by a story at the court of Abdul Aqiz. The Sultan of has mastered knowledge of the Western music. One day all his ministers were present and European artist was playing on the Piano the Western Classics. The Sultan was walking and when the piece comes to an end he would explain to his courtiers, surrounding him the name of the music. “Aye Sire! It was most wonderful!” They would all say in while bowing down to the ground. Finally one of them comes forward and says: “You’re Majesty! This is all shame! We know nothing about this music. We are all like donkeys. We make all these protestations just to gain your favor.” The Sultan was very pleased with his truthfulness and promoted him to a higher position.

{{p23}}

Dear friends!

“All takes that are copiously fed must copiously overflow” I heard someone telling me. The cogency and pithiness of the remark startled me and it set me to think whether this is not true in the case of the Bahais scatterd throughout the world and elected by the Higher Power from amongst the various nations and religions for the unification and the solidarity of mankind. Having received abundant portion of the outpourings of the Kingdom of Baha they must share them with the rest of their fellowmen. The lakes of their lives are overflowed with the water of spiritual knowledge they must not dam them. They have been the recipients of so much bounties, why should they not invite others to partake of the sawe. Their hearts have because the caskets for the Jewels of celestial wisdom, for what day or age are they hiding them! There must not be such a thing as passive Bahais, because through the Teachings of Baha-allah if they were poor they have become rich; if they extinct they have become ignited; if they were {{p24}} ignorant they have become wise; if they were little lakes they have become great seas; if they were winters they have become springs. The horizon of their lives is dominated with truth and righteousness, why should they keep silent? They have the right Thing and with a happy countenance they must disclose it to the eyes of the public in the right way. That which is essentially right does not need a champion in this age; it needs only a teacher, an unafraid expounder, one who holds high the torch to guide the steps of the wayward and the erring ones. The character of a Bahai must have been perfumed with the roses of sanctity and the Jessamine of moral sublimity. He must work persistently for the Truth, adore the Truth and know nothing but the Truth. He must put himself in harmony with the Cause of God and not against it; for the Cause of God is the irresistibly sweeping current. We must swim with it and not against it. If we try to oppose the progress of the Cause of the Almighty we precipitate our own downfall and bring upon our heads eternal shawe and disgrace.

The only thing that the Beloved demands of us {{p25}} is to work for the Cause and teach the Principles of the Movement. No calamity must dishearten us; no catastrophe must discourage us; no seemingly outward differences must hinder us; no insurmountable mountain must hold us back; no impassable pass must restrain us. We must become a tower of courage, Niagara of energy, a Gibraltar of strength and a depthness, whiling, waving ocean of activity, going on and on as they go solve all the problems, laugh in the face of difficulties and calmly set them at nought and strive to reach the goal with shining faith of the glorious martyrs of this Cause. They endured all the persecutions and tortures with an undreamed of calmness and resignation, the like of which is not known in the history of the world. Many of us may not have the inclination or opportunity to attain to the station of martyrdom but we can at least live in the mental atmosphere of a cheerful, happy, undisturbed life. This is possible to a degree for all of us, provided it is not of the self-centered kind. If your life is really happy, it must have a corresponding effect upon others.

When I went this morning to the hotel I saw the Master sitting near the window in the center corridor looking at the little green garden below him. As soon as he saw me coming in bid me be seated and told Khosro to bring me a cup of tea. He was chanting quietly to himself and on his face there was the calm relaxation of a restful night. After awhile he said: - "Last night I slept five hours. I passed a cheerful night. One of the greatest gift in the world of humanity is Sleep. Those who have been and are afflicted with insomnia appreciate this fact.

If you put all the bounties of God in one scale and Sleep in another the latter will outweigh the rest. A person who does not sleep all night and rolls in his bed from right to left knows what I mean. If a person lives in a prison and has only a loaf dry bread but sleeps he is better off than a king who has at his disposal all the luxuries and lives in a palace but does not sleep. Once I called on a patient. He was suffering from insomnia beside his other trouble. He told me with a haggard and hollow-eyed expression of utter weariness; I wish to God I could sleep one hour, then open {{p27}} my eyes to feel its restoring effect, then die peacefully! God answered his prayer. He slept for one hour after which he unshut his eyes, looked around with an air of utter relief and then passed beyond the Borderland. How refreshing would it be if one could go to bed at 10 o'clock and then open his eyes to be 6 or seven in the morning! When I got up last night it was 4 am. I could not believe that I had slept so much, then I went to the window and opened the shutters. By the position of the different stars I realized that it was the right time. Then I became very pleased and that is why this morning I feel the joy of living and breathe the fresh air with a new delight. When I was young I worked all day and often till midnight there were callers to be entertained. As the last of them left the house, I felt so drowsy that which I was going up the steps, I was half sleep. It was very strange that as I walked, I had all the sensation of sleeping. Before I reached my bed, I was sound sleep and then I would drop myself on it with my clothes on. Many a morning the family wanted to wake me up but Bahaallah {{p28}} would not let them, saying he came up very late last night. Let him sleep. He will wake up himself."

A long list of the new believers in Esphahan and its surrounding villagers was presented to the Beloved by Mirza Jalal. He said: - "The hosts of the Kingdom of Abha are at all time gaining fresh victories. See how many new souls are accepting the truth and are becoming mindful of the Mysteries of the Kingdom. This is the way the teachers of the Cause must make me happy. This is the time of work. As I am walking here I see clearly the Confirmations of the Kingdom of Bha-Allah above the heads of the friends like unto an imperial Bird of Paradise and this invisible Army are constantly assisting us and coming over us like unto the tumultuous waves of the sea." Afterwards he dictated long Tablets in Persian and Arabic while chanting. His appealing words moved the hearts. "When I dictate a supplication my whole being is absorbed in the mercy and tenderness of God. I am deeply effected and my heart is melted in the contemplation of divine Beauty." he said.

{{p29}}

Dear friends!

You could hear the plaintive spiritual voice of the Beloved. HE was swayed by a holy wave of divine emotions. He was supplicating at the Threshold of God. How deeply he felt every word uttered out of the inner reservoir of his divine heart!

The effect upon the writer was correspondingly great and indefinable, purifying and stimulating. The Soul of the Master is a mystery and that mystery may be revealed in the light of his communion with the source of All-good translated in the vibrant words of his supplications. I would preface this letter by such a supplication flowed this morning from his blessed tongue: He is God!

”O Almighty! Instruct Thou these thankful birds in the rose-gardens of Guidance the tuneful melodies and the harmonious strains of the Psalms of David and teach these royal, white eagles to soar toward the apex of Hope, thus they may prevent the ominous owls from any doleful attack and train the faithless {{p30}} ravens in the lessons of faithfulness.

O God! Unshut these delicate and tender buds through the Breeze of Providence and confer verdancy and freshness to these newly-grown meadow through the down pouring of the Cloud of Bestowal!

O Beloved! Cause the attainment of these yearning nightingales to the rose-garden of the Heart-Ravisher of the regions and suffer these thirty ones after the fountain of Eternal Youth to drink from the Spring of Tasneem. Let these self-sacrificing moths to fly around the night-illuminating Candle.

O Kind Beloved! These souls are Thy friends. They have given up everything for the sake of Thy Nearness. They have become homeless and shelter less for Thy sake. They are enamored with Thy Beauty, prisoners of Thy Abode and without patience and endurance in Thy separation. Consequently, confer upon them the Cup of Grace and cause them to quaff from the Goblet of Faithfulness; so that they become rejoiced, happy, self-sacrificing and shake the hands of Friendship.

Verily Thou art the Giver, the Generous and the Kind!

O Beloved of the world! Each one of them is longing for the meeting of Thy Face, thirsty for the water of Thy stream, is living through Thy Fragrance and enthralled with Thy Nature! Make them the confident Mysteries in the Kingdom of Abha, the invisible World and the Mount of Transfiguration and grant them permission to enter in Thin Own Holy of Holies. Shower upon them even in this world every Bounty and encircle them with all Thy Favors. Verily Thou Art Omnipotent and Thou art the Mighty!

(Signed) Abdul Baha Abhas

Another wonderful Tablet is revealed to the Persian believers. I am sure it will not be out of place in this letter as it will be another strong tie of Unity between our Eastern and Western brothers and sisters:

He is God!

”O God! O God! Praise be unto Thee for Thou hast unfurled the Flag of Thy Singleness, {{p32}} caused everyone to witness the signs of Thy Mercifulness and guided these souls to the Salubrious Water and the Spring of Tasneem in the Garden of Thy Divinity.

O Lord! Glorification behooveth Thee for thou hast illumined the sights, inspired the consciousnesses with the Holy Mysteries, caused the ears to hear the Ideals of the Kingdom and revealed the Word of Guidance in the hearts of the righteous ones. Verily, they have advanced toward with expanded breasts, attracted hearts, spirits submerged in the sea of Thy Grace and souls rejoiced by the verses of Thy Unity.

O Lord! strengthen their feet in this Path! Reinforce their hearts by the Mysteries of the Words! Confirm them by the Invisible Cohorts in the diffusion of Thy Fragrances! Protect them from every test. Guard them from the ordeals. pave for them a direct and straight Path the goal of which is the Kingdom of heavens!

Verily Thou art the Clement! Verily Thou {{p33}} art Omniscient! and Verily Thou art the Merciful and the Compassionate!

O ye kind friends of Abdul Baha! For sometimes like unto the breeze I have been crossing over the wilderness and a wanderer over mountains and desert. No morn did I rest and no eve did I seek repose on tranquility. I became the confident of every meeting and found my way in every society. In every gathering I cried out and imparted the Glad-Tidings of the Kingdom of Abha; so that the blind may receive sight, the deaf be granted hearing, the humiliated became glorified, the misguided ones find the Guide, the weak became powerful, the deprived ones became the confident of the mysteries, the Westerners become the Easterners and the hopeless ones hopeful.

It is now three years that I have not sought one moment of rest. Praise be to God that through the Favors and Providence of the Blessed Perfection the armies of confirmation like unto the waves descended uninterruptedly, the cohorts of the Supreme Concourse achieved triumph, the fame of the Cause reached all the the {{p34}} mention of the Religion of God spread throughout all the vast congregations. The invisible hand and the ideal power seattered pure seeds in that farm-land, the cloud of divine Mercy poured down the vernal shower and the Sun of Reality shone forth with the unprecedented light and heat.

Now with the utmost humility Abdul Baha has put his forehead on the ground and implore and entreat that though divine protection and assistance and the heavenly Gardener that spiritual farm may soon grow and its manifest signs encompass all the regions...”

Today our four dear American sisters left for Haifa. In the morning the Master after revealing the above Tablets called them into his own room and gave them a few instructions. In a general way he said: “Now you have been with me quite many days. You have been the source of the happiness of my heart. You will go to the Holy Land and visit the Holy Tomb of the Bab and Baha-ollah in my behalf. While you are travelling make every one satisfied and pleased with you.

Let no one be offended {{p35}} in the slightest degree. Our real abode is in the Kingdom of Abha. God will be with you. You will be always under this Guardianship. Do not be afraid of anything. Trust in Him.” They left the hotel at three o’clock. Mirza Jalal, Mirza Hadi, Mirza Moneer and myself went with them to the steamer called “Tofygeyah” belonging to the Khedivial company. The steamer sailed out of the port at about five o’clock. During our absence the Master did call at our house, stayed over one hour and superintended the cooking of a special kind of dish - rice, meat and vegetables. Many of the Arab believers likewise called on him and in the evening he was quite fatigued. All night it rained copiously, the wind blowing with great velocity.

I have just received a magazine published in London by the name “The Occult Review” (address: William Rider and Lou Ltd. Cathedral House, Paternoster Row, London E. C.) containing a very fine article on the Bahai Movement by Beatrice Irwin. It is written with sensitive intelligence and knowledge and many of the Bahais across the Atlantic will enjoy reading it. It is the November issue.###November 23, 1913 Ramleh, Egypt

{{p36}}

Dear friends!

Everyone likes to hear the stories as related by the Beloved, Don’t you? He told us this morning in his inimitable way the story of the matrimonial woes of one of the Bahai teachers who is now dead. It will do us good if we listen to him for a few minutes. While he was relating it he was laughing, in turn we laughed and no doubt you will also laugh before you have read it through:

”We had a great teacher in the Bahai Cause by the name. He lived a long life and up to his last breath he served the Cause most faithfully. His most important service in the Cause was to carry the Tablets of Baha-Ollah to the believers of Persia and bring back to him their petitions. Thus he traveled back and forth between Persia and Acre, being for years the sale channel of correspondence between Baha Ollah and the friends. He was one of the most economical man of this age and lived in the most rigorous frugality and extreme simplicity. When he was a young man his friends were most anxious for him to get married but he stubborn {{p37}} by refused their appeals. He was so afraid to take such a hazardous venture on the ground that he will have to meet some extra expenses. One day a wily matchmaker went to him and asked him point blank: ‘Why don’t you get married? You are at an age that you must find for yourself a nice wife and settle down.’ ‘Oh! I am so afraid to get married, for it shall surely entail extra obligations and expenses.’ ‘Extra expenses? No indeed! You are certainly on the wrong track. You have made a miscalculation somewhere. I assure you that you will have no extra expenses.’ ‘How is that? I really can’t believe on faith what you say.’ ‘All right! Now that you are a sort of skeptic on this subject, would you like me to demonstrate to you by arithmetic?’ ‘I will consider it an honor if you could show me how this impossible thing is done.’ ‘Very well! Don’t you have a house?’ ‘Yes! ‘When you are married your wife will live in it and you don't have to pay extra rent.' 'That's so! 'Don't you have furnished room?' 'Yes! 'It is then very easy, share it with her.' 'That's true! 'Do you not have a bed?' 'Yes! 'Let her have half of it.' 'You will have however one small item of extra expense.

{{p38}}

Now you are buying daily one loaf of bread, then you buy two, and considering your ability and energy I have no doubt you can work for an extra loaf without taxing your physical strength.' Well, this kind of reasoning led him into the trap and he began to look around for a suitable wife. He had not to wait long before partial disillusionment came over him as he had to buy a ring and a shawl for his fiancée and afterwards the preparations preceding the marriage made him more than ever feel the futility of ever relying on the advice of a friend on such an all important matter. His nerves were almost shattered under the staggering expenses and he divined rightly that if he had to do all these things before marriage what should he afterwards! Still he clutched hopefully to the first frugal picture presented to him by his friend and trusted somehow it will come to pass. At last he was alone with his wife and before enjoying the sweet pleasure of her companionship and hardly a few days had passed than she got the idea that he must buy all the kitchen utensils, dishes, cups, saucers, spoons, beds, carpets and other things considered by her as essentials of housekeeping.

At first he grumbled and was churlish but she argued him into it and finding himself stripped of all moral resistance he went hesitantly into Bazaar and bought everything she demanded. By this time he was angry with his friend and upbraided himself in being a foolish man as to have listened to him. Before she had time to think over his worries she fell sick and his mother-in-law was beside the bed of her beloved daughter. A doctor had to be called in, the medicines had to be bought and the poor man was groaning under the heavy load of expenses. There was no use and there was no one to sympathize with him. Finally she recovered from her illness and after a year lo and behold there were three in the family! He could not believe in his senses. He rubbed his eyes but nevertheless it was true. What could he do? Everybody in his house made merry; even the mother was bright and happy over the newcomer. He knitted his brows and went out to drown his sorrows alone but curiously in his secret heart the bird of paternal joy was singing. Now he could not even trust himself. He did everything to minimize the expenses but no one would have it. His house was full of people, his mother-in- {{p40}} law and all her relatives were there to congratulate him and faulder the "angel-baby" as they called it. He thought positively this will be the last indiscretion but before another year rolled by, God made the number of family four, and then five, six, seven, eight, nine... a troop of little humanity in the making. No sooner than he set his foot in the courtyard or in the evening returning from his business than the children flocked around him, dining into his ears their childish wishes with a great noise and insistence. ' Papa ! I want a pair of shoes!' 'Papa I want a hat,' 'Papa

I want a doll!’ ‘Papa! I want candy! ’Papa! I want a pony!’ Their demands were very numerous but by that time he had learned how to be patient and long-suffering and how to humor each one of them. Often he would think of his friend and his argument of one loaf of bread and how simple he was to readily accept it. Then he would say to himself half aloud,’ if any young man ever comes to me for conjugal advice I will show him such an object lesson as to never forget it in all his life! ”

The rest of the day was spent b the Beloved in receiving and visiting the friends and speaking to them on many familiar subjects of the Cause. ###November 24th 1913 Ramleh, Egypt

{{p41}}

Dear friends!

God has revealed to the Bahai a vision of the glory of man, eve must not becloud it. He has shown to them the shining aurora of the future grandeur of humanity. We must rejoice in it. He has planted the ground of their minds the pure seeds of the flowers of the commonwealth of all the people,, we must tenderly take care of them. He has unfolded before their inner consciousness the unlimited possibilities of the full stature of the spiritual man, we must help its realization. He hath be gemmed the heavens of their hearts with the radiant stars of inspiration, we must add them into being to be the builders of the Mighty Temple of the Lord, we must hasten its construction. The actions and thoughts of our lives must be as praises and glorification to the Lord. our minds and souls must absorb His Love, immerse in the ocean of His Affection, engage in the spread of His Cause, herald the dawn of His Sun and scatter the rays of His Light.

{{p42}}

I was only a few minutes in the Presence of the Beloved in the morning. He gave me some papers which he had corrected and told me to give them to Mirza Moneer so that he might copy them. He stayed in the hotel all forenoon reading and resting and for lunch he had a bowl of broth and bread. He does not believe in many dishes, he does not want many things. Only one kind and that in the utmost simplicity pleases him more than anything.

At half past two o’clock afternoon he surprised us by entering in the house. “Today I have come to drink tea with you” he said, as a chair was offered him. Khasro hurried in the kitchen to prepare the tea and the Beloved told us to take a chair and sit down. He talked on great many subjects and I will try to produce herein only portions of the same. He said: ”Before the regular stage-past was established in Persia there were many swift-footed letter-carriers and messengers who carried the letters of important personages from city to city. They walked day and night and when the message was very urgent they ran for hours till they reached their destination. They had a curiously way of sleeping. While they walked they did put a little pillow on their right shoulders {{p43}} and inclined their heads toward it and then for an hour or two they slept. Some people walk while they are sleep - somnambulists. The mother of Mirza Moneer when young fell from the roof while sleep and was not awakened neither was she harmed.

When we left Bagdad for Constantinople many of us rode on horses and as we travelled by night I told all the friends they must try to keep awake on the saddle, otherwise they will fall to the earth. Notwithstanding this when night came, sleep gripped them firmly and one by one they fell off their saddles but praise be to God no one was injured. One of the friends vowed that he will not sleep and when on horseback had his fingers stuck under his eyes, yet he slept and fell. How difficult and unbearable were the hard circumstances of those 60 stages! Our trip from Boston to California had not the difficulties of one day of those 60 days." Then he gave a graphic description of how he fulfilled his part of commissariat and how he overcame the prejudices of the peasants in buying from them provisions. At one of the cities on the way Izzah Pasha brings to Baha-ollah {{p44}} many provisions and expresses his love and admiration of the Teachings. "Izzah Pasha" had a peculiar habit. Whosoever came to him and solicited an office or a favor he would answer: 'On my eyes, Effendi. I will do everything to serve you and will not rest till your object is obtained.' The poor man was elated with this fair promise but no sooner he was out of the presence of the Pasha then he would laugh and say 'the fool has believed in my promise.' Afterwards he became the governor of Adrianople and continued to practice his habit of empty promises. Osman Pasha who was at that time the Secretary of War at the Court of Abdul Hamid tells His Majesty this deceiving habit of Izzah Pasha in the course of a conversation. It so happened that the latter after a year or two goes to the Sublime Port to pay his homage to the Sultan. One day he was in the private chamber of the Sultan and Osman Pasha was there too. When the time for prayer comes Osman brings the water-pitcher so that His Majesty may perform ablution. While he was washing his hands he asks Izzah Pasha that 'I have heard thou art deceiving the {{p45}} people. When they come to thee soliciting something, thou givest them fair promises but when they leave the room thou sayest aloud "What fool!"' Izzah Pasha then knelt down and while half-looking at Osman Pasha said 'Your Majesty. I wonder what fool has troubled you with this gossip!' When Osman heard this he left the room and ran away while the Sultan and Izzah started to laugh.

When we were in Adrianople there arrived from Albania a tall, heroic-sized peasant. His business consisted of selling bread in the streets. Curious enough wherever he went he was followed by a ferocious looking dog who attacked him no sooner he was off his guard. He carried along a heavy club with which he protected himself from the onslaught of the dog. One day, he entered a bar and drank heavily. His companions asked him what is the reason that this dog is so tenaciously following him in season and out of season and never leaves him at peace for one moment. As he was drunk, under the influence of liquor he related to them how he did kill the master of the dog several years ago and how it has followed him from town to town, {{p46}} city to city ever seeking to heap vengeance to on his head. ‘Often have I beaten him to the point of death but it seems to me it has a hundred lives. It has really made life very miserable to me’ he concluded his long ramble with a meaningless grin. Tomorrow this report was given to the Police. They searched and found him. In the Court, he confessed his guilt after a long-drawn cross-examination. The day they hanged him in the Public Square, the dog appeared on the scene and manifested the most peculiar signs of happiness, playing antic freaks and rolling itself with great abandon on the ground. When the dog saw the body laughing lifeless on the pillary with one yell of joy he bounded out of the public square and no one saw him afterward.”

Before his coming to our house he went to Alexandria with Mirza Jalal. Toward the evening Mirza Mahmond Forougi with his son and a servant arrived from Persia. The Master welcomed them with great joy. Mirza Mahmond Forougi is one of the greatest orators of the Cause. He is powerful in physique and intellect. He has a long, black beard and his voice superlatively rich and melodious. He has suffered much in the Cause, has been in prison many times but his mind is luminous and his faith firmer than the mountain. He is a veteran of the Army of Abha and the Beloved loves him very much.###November 25th 1913 Ramleh, Egypt

{{p47}}

Dear friends!

“What is it we call great? What lifts and thrills the soul of him who tells it o’er and o’er? Is it not something that they brave heart began wherein success had seemed unlikeliest.”

It is the feeling of admiration and awe that controls every fiber of one’s being when he comes in touch with those souls who have accepted ridicule and prison joyfully in the Path of Baha-ollah. It is very nice to read about these soul-stirring events in your home but it is different, Ah me! so different when you stand actually beside the man who lived two years in the darkest prison; bare-footed and bare-headed carried on a saddle-less horse from one city to another, has received the deadly bullets in his breast and has taken cheerfully the jeers of the enemies and yet has come out of these severe trials like a Hercules of Spiritual Force! Such a man is Mirza Mahmond Forougi. They tell me and I well believe it that he is the greatest orator of the Bahai Cause in the East. He has literally a tongue of fire - a thing much {{p48}} needed to propagate the Cause. He is fearless and unafraid. He utters his convictions with such divine force and impetuosity that the worst enemies are disarmed, defeated, routed. He has carried many open discussions with the Mohamadan clergy and you can well-imagine how they were worsted and mortified as their own ignorance. In many places he had challenged them to form a meeting and he would talk with them about the Cause and establish its validity to their own satisfaction from the Koran and traditions but having learned the sad endings of others they would not dare to accept. Such men are the foundations of this Movement. We in the West, often deplore that the tests are very great, that such and such a person could not stand them, that we are surrounded by the howling winds of tests. I muse and wonder how those tests would stand the critical analysis of comparison with the tests of the Oriental believers! Here is a man who tells me he suffered the most awful tortures for the Cause but he tells them to me with laughter and joy, with many blessings heaped upon the head of the . He has endured these persecutions for a cause {{p49}} and at a time “wherein success had seemed unlikeliest” and that is why we now love him, admire his courage and shall try to repeat his story “o’er and o’er.” It is really a subject uncompassable, unsearchable, inscrutable! I try to comprehend its vast significance and visualize its lofty meaning but I seem so weak and powerless! As long as this Cause has such embodiments of sacrifice in the world one has no fear of its future. Such souls are the fulcrums of the ideal progress of the movement! They are the rare jewels of the Kingdom of Abha, the salt of the earth and the valorous standard-bearers of reality! Now we are enjoying the benefits of their labors. They have really done the mighty work, the work of laying the foundation - not with mortars and bricks but with their blood, their lives. Their stations in the estimation of God are very great. They are the chosen ones. They have won the victory off the field. All that we can do and that so poorly is to walk in their footsteps and be satisfied to receive the rays of their faith, assurance, firmness and steadfastness. I consciously feel myself so small in the presence of these men! I want to run {{p50}} away and hide my face with shame because I have done nothing when compared with the brilliant records of their noble and epic lives. When this morning I went to the hotel the first thing the Master asked me was about our new pilgrim Mirza Mahmond Forougi. “Love him very much. Do everything in thy power to make him comfortable. We will have three more pilgrims tonight and with the rest you go to the station to welcome them. One of them is Elone’ Asdag, another is an Afnan and the third is an Israelitish Bahai. They are all good and real Bahai.” Then he sent me away and after a while he sent for the pilgrims and kept them for a long time. They gave him encouraging news about the advancement of the Cause and the entrance of new people in the Kingdom and how there is a general breaking down of all ritualism and dogmatic sects and that there is a new of the moral forces for the spiritual regeneration of dead religious and ecclesiasticism. Men are being awakened, the hidden forces of purification are set loose, the angels of the New Era are illuminating the minds, {{p51}} the torch-bearers of a revitalized and simplified religion adaptable to all men and all conditions are running to and fro through the dark earth! In turn the Master also gave them a bird’s eye view of the portentous upheaval which is now going on in the religious life of the West, especially America, how men and women are restless, seeking after God, trying to grasp the inner realities of life, the calmness of the spirit and the actual realization of Deity. Here in fact was a clearing-house of the worlds’ longings for a higher life and how the two hemispheres are converging towards our ultimate Ideal. These two divergent poles of human thoughts are being met amicably in the Present of Abdul Baha. He is holding high the lamp of Guidance beckoning all men to gather around it and to be enlightened by it. The more one stays in the vicinity of the Beloved the clearer becomes his mental apperception that he is the solvent for all the problems of the world. He knows better than any living person, the spiritual needs of humanity - East and West - and he is daily supplying those needs by words and deeds.

{{p52}}

At half-past seven all of us were at the station and joyfully welcomed our new pilgrims. Elone' Asdag is an old man- white beard - shorter than the Master's. He is one of the "Hands of the Cause of God" and lives in Teheran. When we reached the Hotel Orient with what wonderful charm and cohesion he spoke about the Cause! He is also a famous teacher who has much suffered. His father was one of the followers of the Bab. In his talk he said "We must entirely annihilate our will and let the will of Our Beloved take possession of our hearts. He is the supreme Ruler of our destiny. He is the Knowing while we know nothing. How gladly we must sacrifice our lives in his path. Personally I have no other wish, long for no other object. I have come a long way to see him. I have no questions to ask. I want just to look into his heavenly Countenance. This is my food! This is my sustenance." How sweet is the deep humility of these men! How spiritual is their lives! They love the Master oh so much! They kneel before him and adore him and see in him the light and the truth and the way which shall usher in the Day of Universal Peace.###November 26th 1913 Ramleh, Egypt

Dear friends!

The Beloved has scared me again. It was about 2 pm he sent Mirza Jalal for me. I was in the middle of eating my lunch but I left everything and ran to the Hotel. He was walking in the corridor. When he saw me coming from far he raised his voice "Welcome! Bravo!" Immediately I felt something is in the air. "Come in. Let me see. Thou hast been with me for a long time, longer than many others and soon I must send thee to America." I was dumbfounded. "O my Lord" at last I stammered. "Don't send me away from Thee. There are many sincere servants of the Cause in America who are heralding the Teachings. What can I do there!"

"Oh yes! There are many services in America and there thou wilt do what I command thee." This is the third time the Master has given me this intimation. In my heart of heart I long to be with him. No spot on the face of the earth has any attraction to my eyes, same where he is. To be in prison with him is better than the freedom of the most royal palace.

What do I want to do in America or anywhere else if I am not in his Presence! These last years of the Beloved's life are the most pregnant and the most significant and I yearn from the depth of my heart to be with Him to the very end - then I can go out into the world - travel throughout the states and consecrate my whole existence to the spread of the Movement and the service of the Kingdom. I have no other ambition, no other thought. May God assist me to be confirmed in this hope! Up to this time I have been living in a world of hopes, none of them have been yet fulfilled but I am looking to the future. The unattainable has been always ahead of me and I suppose it will be always so. I am endeavoring to reach the Unreachable and fly as high as possible, but after all is said and done how paltry our exertion, how cramped our vision, how diminutive the stature of our ideals, how inconsiderable our effort, how bedimmed the atmosphere of our knowledge! We are just like little cogs in the machinery of the Cause of God, each performing a little service but good to be thrown in a junk heap if not receiving the moving energy, electricity.

when I went to the hotel this morning the Master told me he wants to go to the Hotel d' Orient to call on Elone' Asdag and others. On the way he talked about the father of this teacher. "His name was Mollah Salek Magaddas. He was one of the learned men of Persia and when he became a believer he devoted his Knowledge and erudition to the propagation of the Movement. With an unprecedented zeal and holy enthusiasm he upheld the teachings of the Bab and he was destined to play a most important part in the development of the Movement. He became the object of the attack of the enemies. In Shiraz they did run a cord through his nose and paraded him through the streets and bazaars. He followed the spiritual destiny of the Cause and at last he was besieged by the royal army with the rest of the Bahais in the famous fortress of Tabarassi in Mazanderan. Those who are slightly familiar with that dramatic or tragic episode know the and suffering they had to go through. Finally when they were released and put to death he was one of a very few who {{p56}} was given freedom. Later on he came to Acca and visited the Blessed Perfection. the face of man is the mirror on which his ideals are reflected. As such he was a glorious personage. His humility and gentleness deceived many people, thinking that he is only a common man but he was very wise, divine and deeply spiritual. His son is now an old man and a veteran of the Cause. I love him. That is why I go first to call on him."

When we reached the hotel the pilgrims were sitting around the table drinking their tea. They all got up from their seats. The Master did not let them kneel before him, instead he took each in his arms and kissed them on both cheeks. He was with them for nearly 15 minutes, asking questions about the different friends but they were so overpowered that they answered in monosyllables. "While travelling throughout the Western climes" he said "I often repeated the fact that the Persian believers are tried and tested. They are as firm as rocks. Every day they have been meted a new persecution and even they have been surrounded by the {{p57}} impending dangers of the cruel sword."

Then he left them and came to our house to meet Mirza Mahmond Forougi and then after a few minutes he returned to the hotel. Before noon he sent for Forougi. He related many stories which made the Beloved laugh heartily and he came back all elated and happy. “Yes” he said “I made the Master laugh very much. He gave me permission to speak and I did. Once before when I was in Acca the Master was very sad on account of the machinations of the enemies. On one day he had to go 13 times to the court to answer their spurious accusations, so in the evening he was fatigued and sorrowful. I found my chance then and began to speak and relate one story after another and the Beloved laughed and laughed and the clouds were dispelled. Then in the morning the Greatest Holy Leaf sent me a large tray of candies because I was the instrument to make Abdul Baha happy. I am sorry now the greatest Holy Leaf is not here, otherwise I would have received my reward.”

{{p58}}

For the last few days the Master was desirous to call on Mr. and Mrs. Atwood. They have moved from the Hotel Plaisance and have rented a house with a lovely garden around it for the winter. As we did not know the address he asked Miss Hiscock to be our guide and we had to walk quite and awhile before we reached the house. Of course they were rejoiced to see the Beloved. They had not seen him for sometimes and they have been longing for the privilege. Mrs. Atwood has transformed one of the rooms into a little school for girls and she has a few pupils. The Beloved visited the school, donated a sum of money toward its maintenance and was delighted with the results so far achieved. As you may know Mr. Atwood is a crippled, old man and cannot move anywhere except in a rolling chair. The Master loves him very much on account of the beauty of his faith and the simplicity of his life. While we were here the latest copy of the Christian Commonwealth containing an article on Mr. Ralph W. Trine was received and his life was reviewed. The Master listened to it attentively. The quotation {{p59}} that especially interested him was the following: - “Thoughts are forces; like creates like, and like attracts like. For one to govern his thinking, therefore is to determine his life. The life inscrutably and invariably follows the thought. It is simply a matter of the great elemental law of cause and effect.”

As he was tired walking he sent me back to bring a carriage which I did. then he bade them farewell and on the way he severely upbraided the driver because he was not kind to the horses. “Don’t let them walk through the sands. It is cruel to make them walk through this soft sands while there is a beaten road. You must be very kind and humane to the animals. They are created by God.” Realizing that we are already in the middle of the sandy field and how hard it was on the horses to go through he told me to come down and thus he walked on foot, giving a practical lesson to the driver. He did not know how to account for it because he said ‘never had he seen in his whole career more thoughtful man to the animals. No other person would have come down from {{p60}} the carriage to lighten the weight.’

Having reached the path, we rode again in the carriage. As I found myself alone with the Beloved I gave him the resume of the latest news received from America and Europe. An interesting letter from Henrietta Clark Wagner, Pasadena, California, another letter from Miss. J. Revell of Philadelphia, poems from

Miss M. D. Green of Washington D.C., news from Germany, India, France were given to him. He was pleased and happy. "We are all ready for work" writes a believer from California. "and ready to roll up our sleeves and pitch in! Have many plans for extending the work of the Assembly and spreading the message this winter." He told me to translate the poems of Miss Green in Persian for the pilgrims and send the original to the students in Beirut's College so that they may memorize and sing them in their meetings. Before we reached home I mentioned the request of a number of believers for his Presence in some part of the world. He grew silent and after a minute said: "Oh! My thoughts do not belong to this world {{p61}} and its activities. My thought is diametrically opposed to their thoughts. They want me to be in their midst but I long, Oh I so long to be in the Kingdom of Abha! There, there, I shall rest. I am waiting for the coming of that suspicious day. Then and now is the time for the believers to arise and perform these services. With greater power and concentration of purpose they must arise to spread the message of the Kingdom. From the Kingdom of Abha I shall look down upon them and confirm and assist them. No catastrophe must stoke their aim. Rest than assured that I shall confirm them, protect and watch over them. I shall live in their hearts forever and ever."

I cannot describe to you how I felt and how the tears rolled down my cheeks. If I had the power I would have fallen at his holy feet. But I was glad he was not looking at me. Then we reached the hotel and the believers were waiting to see him. He engaged them in an interesting conversation about his meeting with the prominent Persians while in .###November 27th 1913 Ramleh, Egypt

Dear friends!

Lo! There is a revolution. I do not know how to start, where to begin, what to say! I am all wrought up and excited! Do you know what is going to happen after tomorrow? In one hour the whole map of our existence is totally changed. We have a landslide and for the moment consternation is seen in every face and then calm resignation to the inevitable. Can you believe that the geographic aspects of our lives are going to take other shapes? That the ships of our thoughts shall sail on other seas, the birds of our imagination shall sing in other rose-gardens? I can't believe it yet. We have been calm and settled and suddenly a tornado out of the blue sky falls on our heads, shakes us from our torpor and lethargy and leaves us in a state of wonder and amazement. I wish you were here to share our feelings and emotions. I am too agitated to think coherently and too slow to let you know what is in the air? Well, let me tell you. About 7 o'clock pm {{p63}} Mirza Jalal comes to us and announces that the Beloved has commanded that everyone must leave for Haifa and he will come himself alone with Khasro. There is a steamer leaving Alexandria after tomorrow and he wants everyone to leave on that steamer. I remained stock-still in my place. "What do you mean?" I asked "Do you mean that we have to leave the Master all alone? Do you mean that we, Imeau Mirza Moneer, Mirza Mahmond and ... well, myself have to Haifa with the pilgrims and not with the Beloved? Do you mean, well I don't understand what do you mean by such an extraordinary announcement.” And forth I flew to the hotel to see the Master myself. He was calmly sitting in his room reading a letter by the electric light. He raised his head and looked into my face and without a word on my part knew the object of my precipitating call and started patiently - like a loving father to his spoiled child - the wisdom of his sudden decision. “I will come to Haifa as soon as you leave but I must come all alone. Rest thou assured that I shall be there soon, real soon.”

I was with the Beloved in the morning only a few minutes. Then he asked for the pilgrims and spoke with each according to his capacity and comprehension. In the afternoon he was walking in the rose-garden for a few hours. During the day I heard two thrilling Baha’i stories from Forougi and our Jewish pilgrim in connection with their lives. I will try to relate these in the immediate future. I am so sorry to leave the Master but he will join us after a few days. Meanwhile I will have a whole lot of interesting things to write about as soon as we reach Haifa and Acca, thus preparing the background for the arrival of the King of Kings. In the course of a talk with Ebne Asdag the Beloved said: “Tell me how is the condition of Teaching? Do the believers teach? This is that which the Blessed Perfection required from everyone of the Baha’is. This is the day of teaching nothing else will profit us. Consider what the Disciples of His Holiness Christ did by throwing away comfort and rest and devoting all their times and the promotion of the Cause. Let the believers carry the Glad-Tidings of the Kingdom of Abha to every corner of every earth.”###November 28th, 1913

{{p65}}

Dear Friends!

Apparently this is my last day in Ramleh. I especially desire to emphasize the word “apparently” because I simply cannot stand the separation from my Beloved. I must be with him. I will be with him. I have on the other hand packed up all my belonging ready to start tomorrow. In our company these will be Ebne’ Asdag and Foroughi who are two treasures of facts and information concerning the Cause and the biography of each once written will form the most tragic and thrilling story. Both are great speakers and raconteurs and with my attentive ears I may be able to share with you whatever I hear from them. In Haifa and Acca there are many old and experienced Bahais and from their ample granaries I will get a few grains. The station of these men in the Cause are indeed very great. One cannot too much and too often praise their divine fortitude and unexampled submission to the Will of God. They are indeed the true servants of Baha-ollah.

<p66 The morning for the last few days were more or less devoted to the visit of our dear pilgrims. Each has brought with himself a load of secret longing and wishes though never to be uttered in his Presence. Notwithstanding this they bring to him the good news that cheer the heart and tell him of the self-sacrificing services rendered by others. They never refer to themselves. They do not know what self-adulation means.

When I went to the hotel he was engaged in talking with Ebene' Asdag about the conditions and the progress of the Cause in Tehran and the various branches of its activities and manifestations. Tehran to a certain degree is the center of the cause in Persia. From there the principle news of the movement are focused to other parts. The believers are more numerous, more active and more energetic. Thus a peculiar importance is attached to that strategic position. The Beloved again referred to our departure and asked whether we have packed everything. "The friends must be pleased with whatever I decide for them, knowing full well that in this lies their eternal success and future happiness." he said to the pilgrims {{p67}} who had requested him to stay here and accompany him to Haifa. "This is not in accord with wisdom my arrival must not be heralded by any outward signs. No one must the time of my arrival or the name of the steamer. "he answered their further entreaty. When we returned home the son of Foroughi chanted for us a long and beautiful Tablet by the Beloved from memory. He chanted the verses with a sweet voice and very effectively. The power of the words was so great and heartwarming that when I looked in the face of his old father I saw tears are falling on his long black beards. I was astonished to see him weeping and more than ever I stopped to ponder over the magic spell and eternal influence hidden in the words of Abdul Baha, even the rocky heart is pulverized to dust. At this time the Master passed by and Foroughi with his tears stained eyes jumped up from his seat.

A very touching and yet significant incident that happened during the day was when the son Foroughi had found an empty envelope in the kitchen with the name of "His Holiness {{p68}} Abdul Baha Abbas" written on it in English. As he has acquired a little knowledge of this language he came to me with a sad face while holding the envelope in his hand. "Why! This is a sacrilege! I have found this envelope in the kitchen. It must not be thrown away like this. It contains the sacred name of the center of the covenant. This is too serious. They must either tear it to pieces or burn it in the fire but not throw it under the feet." That was a good Leeson, wasn't it?

Later on Ebne' Asdag came and gave us a lovely talk about the blessings that are showered upon us through the machinations of the enemies . We must praise and love our enemies more than our friends because through their antagonism and opposition we become interested in the cause, investigated it levels and attained to this Most Glorious station. We must kiss their hands if they strike us and drink their cups even if filled with poison. All these heavenly teachings and spiritual principles are to awaken us from the deep slumber and create in us the Fire of the Love of God. If we are not quickened with this creative Force {{p69}} there is no difference between us and those who art outside of the cause.

Then Foroughi came from the garden in a ecstatic state. because he has been with the Beloved for nearly 4 hours. He was in the eighth heaven of joy. He was singing and clapping his hands like a boy just out of the school. He has a contagious spirit of buoyancy, vivaciousness and cheerfulness. He is very joyous and gay spiritually a real sunshine. "I have been with my Beloved four hours! What a captivating Beloved he is, he has ravishes away my heart, he is the magnet of my soul, the talisman of my spirit, his eyes are fairer than the gazelle's, his cheeks are more delicate than the petals of the rose, his lacks are the chains around my feet. Oh ye lovers come and look at me! I am his willing prisoner I will not exchange one moment of His presence with all the wealth of the Indies. Oh! My adored one! My worshipped one! What can I say! With what tongue I must praise thee! I am mute and no adequate words fall from my lips! O my Beloved! Take my life as a sacrifice in the path of thy friend!" {{p10}} These are only crude snatches from his wealth of sings chanted with feelings and tears in his eyes! It was so dramatic, so ardent, so sublimely passionate! So burning with the fire of the Love! I had never seen anything like it in all my life. It was something so unique, so spontaneous!

In the afternoon Mirza Jalal came to our home and in the course of conversation he said: "Before the Beloved was freed one early morning I saw him getting out of the house. I followed him with an umbrella because it was threatening to rain. I went after him till he reached a small hovel. He entered in. I approached. I strained my ears and listened. Now and then I could hear the plaintive, weak voice of a sick man thanking him for the offer of gifts. After a while he emerged forth out of the darkness with a heaven of light on his countenance. He was surprised to see me! What do you do here? he asked. 'I have brought you an umbrella! 'No' he said. I do not want it. I am going upon a round of visit to the sick and poor and I would not like to call on them with an umbrella in my hand. For the last few days I have been too busy to call in my friends and carry to them physical and spiritual assistance but now I must do it. God back. I do not know anyone to come with me. I have the Blessed Perfection."

{{p71}}

Dear Friends!

Before leaving the hotel last night I saw the tall Arab servant whose name is Solomon and who confesses believe in the Beloved although he knows practically nothing of the Cause. Having seen with his own eyes all these westerners and easterners come in the Presence of the Master, keeping such respectful attitude and listening to his words of life, he has made up his mind that there is a superior, ultra-mundane power in him. While I was passing through the corridor he asked about my health. "Not good" I answered. "The Master is going to send me away tomorrow with the rest; but I do not like to leave him. Look here, I am going to pledge myself that if I stay in Ramleh with the Master as long as he is here I will give thee twenty big Piasters". With a smile of triumph on his face he confidently declared that I am not going away and will stay beside the Master. When this morning I went to the hotel it was with a held-assured, half troubled heart. {{p72}} The Beloved was feeling quite well and a few letters from America and Canada made him very happy and when Ebni Asdag entered the room he asked me to translate for him the on from Montreal. He enjoyed it very much and wished that it may be translated into Persian for the benefit of our Oriental brothers."All the news are spiritual" the Beloved told him "That is why I am rejoiced over it. Mrs. Maxwell is the essence of sanctity and love. She is a torch of spirituality. She is my daughter." As the letter will be translated in Persian I would like to wrote herein a few passages:" With a new heart burning with the Fire of the Covenant, with a new spirit of confirmation, joy and fragrance from Thine Presence is writing to thank thee with the utmost thankfulness of being! The meetings have been halted in the splendor of the covenant, the friends are seeking and finding the peerless center and the souls are becoming enkindled with the eternal fire of the covenant of God! May we become so centered and focused in thee that the fire of the covenant may consume all else save thy beauty and perfection. May we become wholly illumined and spiritual, {{p73}} severed from all else save thy love and be of those whose lives are expanded in thy service, who diffuse the light, spread the power and enkindle the fire of the covenant in the world of humanity. Thou hast said in the Diary of ____ the most sublime and heart-rending words which it could be our destiny to hear: 'I have finished my work. I await the last call! The souls of all mankind shall how before the mighty and majesty of thine utterances, their tragic significance, their supreme triumph. Oh! My Beloved the hush of this greatest human calamity, this divine victory this mystery of sacrifice is foreshadowed in thy words! May it fall with a mysterious power upon the souls of the servants, may it create them in the image, in the name, in the form of the beauty, in the world of the perfection that they may become the emanations of thy being and the breaths of the holy spirit wafting upon the world."

Then the Beloved came to the corridor and started to walk. Khosro arrived from the other house, Mirza Jala was standing. He asked Khosro why his clothes are yet clean. He did not say anything. Then he {{p74}} walked toward Mirza Jalal and slapped hard twice on his face commanding him to buy a suite of nice clothes for Khosro. "This is my own Knosro. He serves me" he said as he pulled gently his ears.

With the pilgrim he spoke about the internal situation of Persia and the difficulties that the progressive element of the country have to surmount before they can get a reformed administration who may espouse the cause of the people. They listened to him and no doubt have learned many points. Ebne Asdag had brought with himself two little bottles of the essence of the rose to be offered at the feet of the Beloved. They were sent by Mirza Mehdi of Tehran the son of Haji Amma Khanon who was the aunt of the wife of the Blessed Perfection. For the last fifty years the numerous members of this family have ever been stamp and steadfast Bahais and have ever been the active servants of the Cause. These two bottles in turn the Master gave to Mirza Mohammad and this servant. My bottle will be sent to one of the Western Assemblies so that with this fragrant perfumes they may inhale the {{p75}} scent of the flower of the love of God. It is the outward symbol of the inner reality, a sign of spiritual friendship and a token of the imminent consciousness of the Beautiful.

When I left the hotel I saw Mirza Jala coming from the opposite direction and he gave me the long expectant glad news to the effect that Mriza Mahmond, himself Khosro and Ahmad will not go with the pilgrims today. My joy knew no bound but at a second thought I realized Mirza Moneer is left out and I was so sorry. Knowing full well how attached he is to the Beloved.

Well, we returned home and all of us sat in the veranda and the son of Foroughi chanted for us from memory the whole tablet of the covenant. He is a keen, intelligent boy and has learned a little English. I like him very much. His face is fairly afire with the radiance of the kingdom and the soul of courtesy and politeness.

Many cable from America are being received containing greeting and congratulations to which {{p76}} the Master is sending answers.

At two o'clock all the pilgrims came to the hotel to meet the Beloved before their departure. He spoke to them only a few words assuring them that he will soon come. We all went with hem to the steamer. One of the strange coincidence is that this is the steamer on which the Master made his first voyage from Haifa to Port Said. Its name is Kosseir belonging to the Khedivial live an English Company. Kosseir is the name of one of the cities in Egypt. Thus they had the joy of travelling on the same steamer and I had the privilege of seeing it with my own eyes. It is not very large but formerly belonged to Khedive and was his personal Yatch. With my Kodak I took a few pictures but I wonder whether they will turn out to be good as it was a cloudy day. We bade them farewell which their handkerchief were wearing on the upper deck. On our return we found the Master sitting in the salon talking with the Manager. We told him that they all sent to him their humble devotion and love. ###November 30th, 1913

Dear Friends!

When I went to the hotel this morning the Master was not up yet so with Mirza Jalal we started to speak about the departure of the pilgrims yesterday and how everything is again quiet. In this connection he related to me the story of the departure of the Beloved from Haifa on Kosseir after the declaration of the Constitution in Turkey and the granting liberty. "All the members of the holy family were in Acca except my wife. The Master's house and mine are connected together, so one day (it was Sunday) he sent for me and asked me whether I can perform a most important mission provided no one must know anything about it! You go now to the steamship agency and get for me one first class ticket without giving my name! Without asking him any question I left his presence and came to the street, I searched my pockets and found no money whereby to buy the ticket but knowing the agent it was a simple matter to pay him tomorrow. When I arrived {{p78}} at the agent's office I was shaking with apprehension I asked him to give me a ticket for a first class passenger. Laughingly he told me he will not sell me. I told him 'please do not joke. I am
