14. I asked the Guardian if the Hands of the Cause were unerring in their functions of propagation and protection of the Cause and he replied — they receive instructions from the Guardian. The Hands of the Cause and the Administrative Order complement one another. Function of the Guardian — interpretation; Hands, protect and propagate; Universal house of Justice — legislate; National Spiritual Assemblies — administrate these laws. Bahá'u'lláh established the Institution of the Hands of the Cause; the Master embodied it in His Will and Testament. The machinery is established for the establishment and propagation of the Faith.

15. Revenues for the Guardianship and Hands — and Universal House of Justice, has been clearly established in the Aqdas. Ḥuqúq — 19% — is for the Guardian and Hands of the Cause. Fines and taxes etc. are for the Universal House of Justice.
16. The Pope in Rome has the same — has an organization for the propagation of the Gospel throughout the world. The Cardinals administer the affairs of the church throughout the world. Some distinction exists in the Bahá'í Faith. The difference is in the Bahá'í Faith the individual administers his own affairs — bodies are elected by the believers — which has in it a democratic element — whereas in the Church the priests and Cardinals administer it. Fundamental difference — ours comes from the Source — the Author of the Faith — a split will never be caused. We have had terrible crises — great differences of opinion — tests and difficulties have been greater — yet they never caused a split, a cleavage. The problems are momentary, never lasting.
17. Ameila Bowman asked if it wasn't so that if the Prophets like Christ and Muḥammad had given more explicit instructions — wouldn't the nature of the Churches and religious hierarchy be different. The Guardian explained — if Christ would have said that only Peter could interpret — Paul would never have injected his ideas. In all Dispensations a Center was appointed — but vaguely so — and the Center was never given full authority.
18. There will always be a number — a minority — who will not accept the Prophet — who will never submit — but only a few — even in the Golden Age. But these few can cause trouble. The overwhelming number will embrace the Faith.
19. Opposition is a driving force — it is a propelling force — opposition and criticism. Crises will move the Cause ahead. The Time will come when missionaries will openly attack us. The civil and religious will form a common front — we may have to face a common front. It all depends upon the progress of the Faith. The progress of the Faith depends on the friends, the individual believers. They must hasten the progress of the Faith to get opposition so this opposition will lead to crises which in turn will lead to triumph. It is like a motor. The motor produces electricity. Progress of the Faith causes the spark. The spark accelerates motion — motion created another spark — a series of sparks and motions — victories and crises — victories and crises.

The Arab-Israel war seemed to threaten the Faith — but the Arabs — the real enemies — were defeated. We were in grave danger — both from external and internal from within.

20. Look at Germany, the Bahá'ís have had a great victory. There was great suffering in Germany and Japan, and now the people are more ready for the Faith. During the past — the Party threatened to extinguish the Faith in Germany. They read in the Books what Bahá'u'lláh has said about the Jews. They sought the Bahá'ís — they wanted to extirpate the Cause. When the Germans were approaching Palestine through Egypt — the Bahá'ís were already on their blacklist. The Cause of the World Center was in great danger. As the Germans approached — the Arabs were already speaking of getting revenge — of joining the Germans — and the Covenant Breakers were waiting. {{p13}} The Arabs would have joined them. The Germans were coming near Palestine — from Egypt in the south — they had Crete — and through Syria and Lebanon in the north. Suddenly Rommel was defeated, in the African campaign. If they would have come — they would have sent me to a concentration camp — and would have seized the Archives and destroyed the Shrines. But they were defeated.

Guardian's comments at dinner, March 16, 1953

at Western Pilgrim House

1. (regarding pilgrimage) . it is not the extent of your stay here, but the spirit you carry away with you.
2. Urge the German friends to order the map (of the Crusade) from England. They should immediately translate the pamphlet into German. This will not be difficult because there is little to translate. Of course, the countries on the map need to be translated. It should be widely distributed. First they must become familiar with the plan — study carefully. Second see what they do to promote it.
3. Majíd Din is sinking. He is 98 years old — the incited of Muḥammad-‘Alí. He lives adjacent to the Mansion at Bahjí. The Master has referred to him in his Will and Testament. He has called him the “manifestation of Satan” he was worse than Muḥammad-‘Alí — for he incited Muḥammad-‘Alí. almost 100 years old — and God has kept him so he might witness the rise of the Faith. He was worse than the Arch-Breaker of the Covenant. He is half-paralyzed.
4. A grand-daughter of the maternal uncle of the Báb — 90 years of age — has asked to come on pilgrimage with her son. The son will go to Africa. South Africa will have a descendent of the Báb as a pioneer.
5. The Founder of our Faith — besides establishing spiritual principles — established first, Institutions — second, Administrative principles. Christ did neither. He did establish spiritual principles — but no institutions

— no Administrative principles. Muḥammad went a step further. He established spiritual and administrative principles — but no institution. Bahá'u'lláh gave us both — plus, established a definite institution. That is why the unity of the Faith is assured. There can be no schism.

Guardian said — comparative religion — Bahá'ís should study in their summer schools — to be able to compare the different dispensations of the past.

6. Question was brought up by Rúhíyyih Khánum. a Bahá'í pioneer who defied the Assemblies rulings and freedom of action when they failed to recognize him as being the first pioneer and therefore they must listen to him. Our Guardian said — pioneers should set the example. They must abide by the Assemblies rulings — especially the pioneers, should set the example for their spiritual children.
7. The Guardian asked me “Are the Germans making any regulations? I replied — I don't know for sure, but I've heard they have a tendency to do so. The Guardian then said — the Germans are a disciplined people — they must guard against making too many regulations. The Administration as developed sufficiently for now — we must not try to perfect the Administration. It is an instrument for teaching the Cause, propagating the Faith, if we only perfect the instrument we forget many times its purpose. It becomes the end instead of the means. Too many regulations kill the spirit. There should be less administration and more teaching. That doesn't mean we disregard the Administration — all must obey. The Administrative Order is a channel for teaching. {{p14}} We must use this instrument — not perfect it.
8. I asked our Guardian how about Bahá'ís who can justify their making a career of the military and he replied — Bahá'ís must try to keep free from entanglements in the Army — the Government and the Church. They are not completely free to promote the Cause. They should disentangle themselves from these positions — because there are always some restraints. They should keep themselves free to teach.
9. I said to the Guardian — the German friends always have you on their lips. They love you very much. He said “Yes, I am fond of the German friends — their spirituality — their ability — their thoroughness and concentration. They have a great capacity for work — a great future in the field of scholarship. They will provide the Bahá'í historians of the future — the Bahá'í scholars. also in research work. The Master said whenever I see the German friends, I am reminded of the Persians. I have very great hopes for the future of the german believers. their suffering during the last war has been great — perhaps a blessing in disguise.”
10. They (Germany) must have their own National Archives.. urge them to establish a Nat'l. Archives in one room of the Ḥazíra — as soon as possible. Urge the friends to offer their Tablets and relics as soon as possible. They must be placed in the name of those who offer them — just as I do here.

11. Guardian asked me “Will you stop at Geneva?” I replied “Yes” and he said — “You must tell Mrs. Lynch I appreciate very much her services to the Faith. She is very loyal — very painstaking — a true pioneer — long before the ETC plan began. She is in the same category as Johanna Schubart — she worked alone. The Bahá’ís of Switzerland must be very appreciative of her. Also Miss Kempton — representative of the ETC — she is very energetic — very efficient.
12. I told the Guardian I plan to visit the friends of Luxembourg and the Guardian commented the friends of Luxembourg are very active, very successful. Urge them to be in close contact with the Paris friends — the Paris Assembly — especially in matters of publication. Refer to them on these matters. There are many French in Luxembourg.
13. I mentioned the Regional Conference to be held in Rotterdam in early April during the Easter week-end there, and our Guardian said — the Regional Conferences are very important. They must be prepared for the formation of Regional NSAs — follow the example of the Italo-Swiss — First they must multiply their centers in the Low countries. The Regional Conferences pave the way for establishing the foundation of the Faith. They are very helpful.

‘Alí-Akbar Furútan

Is it possible to realize this Ten Plan of the World Crusade?

1. The first requirement before anything is the assistance of God.

The assistance of God is not an imaginary thing. If the assistance of God does not come, no work can be accomplished. It is as the light to the eyes. The eyes see but if the light does not exist, it is not possible to see. If the light is cut off, there is darkness. We have two gifts: existence and activity. But without divine assistance, nothing can be realized. The earth has its power of growth and we plant the seeds. The earth gives the force of growth, but if the sun did not exist, would there be the power of growth? Of course not, because the seed would not be generated.

The assistance of God is the sun and we are the earth. The possibilities are in us. The assistance is of God. This is what Bahá’u’lláh tells us in His Holy Book, the Kitáb-i-Aqdas: “We behold you from Our Most Glorious Horizon, and will assist whosoever will arise to aid My Cause with the hosts of the Concourse on high, and a cohort of the angels, who are nigh unto Me.” (God Passes By, p. 376)

This is the promise which will not fail. In this sacred Cause, that which is promised is sure and infallible.

This is the same assistance which caused the disciples of Christ to triumph over the world. With this assistance, Peter triumphed over the Roman Empire and this same assistance accompanied the Arabs and helped them open the world as far as Spain.

Why don't these people triumph at this time? Why have they divided themselves against themselves? Because they no longer have this assistance. When the assistance of God was on their side, they dominated the world. Now that the assistance has been withdrawn from them, the world dominates them.

Now we, the disciples of Bahá'u'lláh and His apostles, cannot we fulfill the same tasks as the disciples of Christ? Without doubt we can because we have the promised assistance of Bahá'u'lláh and a living person can dominate millions of dead ones, and an ant can conquer a mountain of wheat. The ant is one and the mountain of wheat has many grains, but the ant takes them one by one and transfers them until, at the end, it has triumphed over that great mountain.

The new believer does not fall from the sky. Some came from Islám, others from Christianity, from Judaism, from Zoroastrianism, etc. This is the mountain of wheat. We are the ants and we must give them life. The Báb said: "For these I died, and the Water of Life revived Me."

We present the Water of Life to the world because we possess the assistance of the God and the hosts of the victorious angels. 'Abdu'l-Bahá has said, speaking to an Egyptian believer: "A pearl is worth more than mountains of stones and heaps of dust."

We are few and the world is numerous, but how many times has a small number conquered a great number of men! The assistance from the Celestial Kingdom is important and fundamental for the realization of this sacred World Crusade.

2. The awakening of the lovers of Bahá'u'lláh.

The awakening of the lovers of Bahá'u'lláh, that is to say, this love is that which will realize their awakening, or otherwise, the decision of the lovers of Bahá'u'lláh.

There are two kinds of decisions: rational decisions with reason, and sentimental decisions without reason.

A famous Persian poem says: "The wise, in crossing a river, look with their reason for a way to construct a bridge, but the foolish ones, the crazy lover throws himself into the river and crosses it without thinking about the danger."

While the wise lose time in reasoning and reflecting, the crazy lover does not think about anything, he does not reason, he only looks to find and see his beloved; confronts the danger and crosses the river. (See The Seven Valleys by Bahá'u'lláh, p. 48)

When Bahá'u'lláh, 'Abdu'l-Bahá and the Guardian asked us to propagate the Cause and sacrifice ourselves for mankind, the wise believer, he who spends much time reasoning, says to himself: "Sustain your life, your family, your children, your book, your possessions, etc." But the true believer, the crazy lover, has answered the call of Bahá'u'lláh, of 'Abdu'l-Bahá, and of the Guardian, and has arisen to serve the Faith. The wise believer that reasons says: "If it be necessary, renounce your Faith, your religion, your principles, your Prophet to maintain your life, your family, your children, your possessions." But the crazy lover offers his life, renounces his family, if necessary, renounces his possessions and the world to maintain his Faith, to maintain his love for God, and to serve and maintain the sacred Cause of Bahá'u'lláh.

This is the decision: the awakening of the lovers of Bahá'u'lláh.

The Bahá'ís should be the crazy lovers. We Bahá'ís should avoid being like the wise who reason. The true Bahá'ís are the chosen people of God; they are the crazy lovers.

All the heroes of the Holy Books, without exception, were crazy lovers. They were not the wise who reasoned. The crazy lovers of Jesus Christ carried the Cross for the love of His Father, but Pilate and the high priests were the wise that reasoned because they looked to maintain their life, their authority and their position.

The crazy love of the Imám Ḥusayn made him drink the cup of martyrdom as a sacrifice for the divine Cause; by Yazíd, the wise one that reasoned, looked to preserve his kingdom, his power and his crown.

Ḥájí Sulaymán Khán, Mullá Ḥusayn, Quddús, Ṭáhirih were crazy lovers of the Báb and Bahá'u'lláh

Náṣiri'd-Dín Sháh said to Ṭáhirih: "Renounce your Faith, renounce the Báb, and I will make you Empress of Persia." Then she replied: "Rejoice in your world, your kingdom and your empire. I will rejoice in my world and my Master."

If she had been of those who reason, she would have said: "Yes, the Empress of Persia wears the Crown of the Empire." But because she was a crazy lover, she preferred martyrdom, preferred to water with her blood the path that led to her Beloved.

Now the Bahá'ís have to choose between being the foolish lovers or the wise ones than reason. They have to choose between maintain their life, their family and their possessions, or leave it all, renounce all to present it as a sacrifice to the service of the Cause, to the service of Bahá'u'lláh. The Bahá'ís must remember one of the most brilliant words of Jesus Christ: "Ye that love me must abandon and renounce everything and take up your cross and follow Me."

The Bahá'ís must choose between a Christ or a Pilate; a Yazíd or an Imám Ḥusayn, a Náṣiri'd-Dín Sháh or a Ṭáhirih.

3. The great changes in the world.

This signifies the preparation of the road for the realization of the Divine Plan.

The first two requirements to assure the realization of the World Crusade are the works of the Bahá'ís. The third is the work of Bahá'u'lláh: the sacred works of God.

God prepares the road so we may advance.

These three things are the three guarantees for the realization of the Divine Plan.

When Muḥammad was in the battle of Khandaq, He said: "The Kosroes, the Caesars have been conquered." The Arabs replied: "This starved one who tied a stone to his belly, he will conquer the Kosroes? He is a crazy poet!" But when Muḥammad conquered the Kosroes and the Caesars, they said: "He spoke the truth."

We Bahá'ís must be sure that all the promises and prophecies of Bahá'u'lláh, 'Abdu'l-Bahá and the Guardian are realized, but our awakening, our decision, our accomplishments are our condition.

When the Commander is sincere and the soldiers are valiant and sacrifice themselves, victory of the world is sure.

We have signed an agreement with Bahá'u'lláh. We must be men and maintain our word.

Hope of World Seen in Bahá'í

Lawrence Hautz

Back after Global Trip to Spread Faith

Auto-generated Table of Contents

Milwaukee's Bahá'í leader, Lawrence A. Hautz, returned Monday from a flight around the world, "absolutely convinced" that only a religion of world brotherhood can save the earth from atomic destruction. Hautz's mission was to help plant the new Bahá'í Faith in every country. He met in New Delhi, India, with 500 Bahá's from 35 countries. "We were completely in arrangement on the religious, racial and political principles which otherwise divide people," he said. "I found that this idea is a reality — not just pie in the sky."

"Here were people as diversified in nature as is possible to imagine, yet completely transformed, relieved of religious, racial, political, economic or sex prejudice, as a result of the unifying force of the teachings of Bahá'u'lláh." The prophet of the Bahá'í Faith.

Went to Russian Embassy

Hautz, who is known for this outspoken nature and crusading zeal, had the time of his life on this trip.

He marched into the Russian embassy in New Delhi and snapped. "You people think religion is the opiate of the masses, but you're dead wrong." He sat down and gave members of the staff a lecture on the Bahá'í faith and told them religion had come a long way from the corrupt form it assumed in czarist Russia. He said they listened politely and told him when he left: "You're not such a bad guy."

He got an appointment with the top Buddhist priest in India. "What are you going to do about your corrupt priests?" he demanded. He detailed stories of corruption from his own observation, and the priest acknowledged that the time for reform seemed to be not too far off.

Has Praise for Nehru

In an interview with India's Prime Minister Nehru, Hautz demanded to know: "What is the difference between a prophet of God and a politician like you?"

Nehru told him politicians must comprise in order to accomplish anything, while religious prophets never deviate from their principles. This impressed Hautz, and they had a 20 minute talk on just what compromises were necessary to guide a superstitious old country like India in the Complex world today.

"Nehru is in my opinion a man of destiny for India, and will never be a tool of Moscow," Hautz said. "He is a rare combination of sincerity, high principle and complete devotion to his country and its objectives."

Hautz Is Insurance Broker

Hautz, an Insurance broker who lives at 5400 N. Lake dr., Whitefish Bay is a member of the city's commission on human rights and a national leader in the Bahá'í faith which seeks to combine all the great religions of the world into one faith, which will unite mankind.

Hautz said he found too many Christians didn't know about Christ, Buddhists hadn't read the teachings of Buddha, Jews hadn't studied the law of Moses and Moslems didn't know their Qur'án. He blames this on "organized priestcraft"

"The result," he said, "is a sorry lot of ignorant people all over the world, easily inflamed and led to excesses by ignorance and fanaticism born of prejudice and taking its toll in human relations everywhere."

Asks Universal Language

What the world really needs, Hautz concluded, is a universal language; recognition of basic moral law as the universal standard by which differences can be judged; free trade, universal currency, a common standard for weights and measures, and universal education.

"All countries derive their basis of government from their religion," he said, "but there has been so much ritual and dogma and superstition added."

"If religion were left to the orthodox elements anywhere in the world, no religious freedom would exist."

He said the Bahá'ís, now established in 200 countries, were trying to answer the call of the Lord's prayer: "Thy kingdom come, thy will be done on earth."

Taxi Mechanics' Strike Is Ended

Seven striking mechanics of the Checker Cab Co returned to work Tuesday after voting Monday afternoon to end an 11 day strike.

They are members of the AFL International Association of Machinists. The strike did not affect cab service.

The mechanics settled for a 10c an hour increase, their new wage rate ranges from $2 to $2.15 an hour according to Julius Drozewski, a business representative of the union.

The company had offered 10c again before the strike began. The union had asked for 15c now and additional increases later.

Top honors at North Division high school's graduation exercises Jan. 27 will go to David Griffith, 16 of 4775 N. 149th St., town of Brrokfield, Valedictorian with a grade of 95.7 and Judith Grauberger, 18 of 3062 N. 12th St. Salutatorian with an average of 95.1.

Talks by Shoghi Effendi

Ben Levy and Marguerite Sears

1953, Levy Sears

Excerpts from the notes of Ben Levy, American Bahá'í in the Armed Forces in Germany. Pilgrimage March 9th to 16th, 1953.

Mankind is not approaching the stage of maturity. Maturity means responsibility and all men are responsible to God for their acts on earth. Great responsibility — both as an individual and as leaders of men. Suffering for mankind is inevitable. Fan suffers — -he is cleansed. It is a cleansing force.

America, Persia and Germany will collaborate in the vast field of Russia; German from the West, Persia from the South, and Americans from all directions. Alaska has a very important position, spiritually as well as administratively. It is most important that Alaska get to Russia. Alaska is a base of operations — that is why we are developing it there. Alaska from the East, Germany from the West, Persia from the South — all converging on Russia.

Speaking of viewing of the portrait of the Báb: The portrait must be put away before prayers and meditations begin. Other-wise in due time it might develop into a Christian service. Once prayers begin there must be no picture ex-nosed. Bahá'u'lláh has forbidden this — no Pictures or ornaments are to be hung.

Marion Jack is a great soul — a pride of the pioneers in the East and West; an example to all pioneers; she has persevered long and hard. The Master called her “General Jack”. She has the spirit of Martha Root — a combs nation of heroism and saintliness. Some are either heroic or saintly. Persians aren't all saints. They are pious but not all saintly. Martha Root combined three qualities — martyr, heroine, and saint — -a unique distinction. Saintliness is very rare, it comes from Purity of motive.

The main thing is TEACH THE CAUSE, extend its range, consolidate its foundations. First the Local, then the National, and the International later.

Alaska will have its own NSA in the Ten Year Plan. It will be a pillar of the Universal Rouse of Justice in the North. It will have its own national endowments and Ḥaḏíra. Fairbanks is near the Arctic Circle. There is a spiritual competition between Canada and Alaska to see who will go beyond the Arctic Circle first.

The Germans are very painstaking, methodical and deep; they are loyal, they are anything but superficial. They don't just read; they study. They pay great attention to detail. Germans have a great capacity, great endurance, and great vitality.

The Anglican Church has attacked the Faith in Persia; gradually it will spread to the Orthodox Russian Church — they are very strong — and eventually it will go to the Catholic Church. Its culmination will end with the Pope. His opposition will lead to his downfall. By opposing the Faith he will plant the seeds of his own destruction. On the Fiji Islands the Moslems have officially declared the Bahá'ís as infidels. They are very influential there. They dominate there.

There is the material world and the spiritual. We must not confuse the two. In the next world we do not lose our identity, our individuality, but we retain it. We become more perceptive but there is much yet to be revealed. There may be life on other planet: still the material world must not be identified with the spiritual world. Bahá'u'lláh tells us we have a great effect upon the souls who have passed on; that is why we pray for them — to help their progress in the next world. There is always progress for the soul; through the Mercy of God and the acts of the soul also. The soul can through its own self progress through its deeds. We know that Bahá'u'lláh says the soul in the next world can reflect upon life in this world whether it lived a good life or not. Earthly life is but one stage in the journey of the soul. On earth the value is that the soul has the opportunity to develop itself. Now we must look at today and the 10-year crusade. Each person must do his part and God will take care of the rest.

The Golden age may be in 70 to 100 years,

Tibet is the roof of the world. (Smiling the Guardian said, the nearest to the Abba Kingdom). It is very difficult for the Cause there. It has a theocratic government — a government run by monks. It is a stronghold of religious orthodoxy — a stronghold of the Buddhist Faith. It will be difficult to enter there and I doubt if one can just now. It has been overrun by communists and it is difficult to cross the border. The Soviets are in control there but it is a very important land.

The Islands of the Pacific must have the greatest concentration of effort. There the islands are scattered, numerous, backward, and are virgin territories. They are inhabited by the Brown Race; they are very important, very promising. The Cause has been revealed to the White, Yellow, and Black but little among the Brown.

Whenever there is a surplus of Bahá'ís, over 154 I like them to disperse to other surrounding areas. I don't like regulations but I like to say that whenever there is a surplus I like to see the Bahá'ís move to new localities.

We must not look for nor expect officials and outstanding people to become Bahá'ís. We must look for capable people — not necessarily outstanding people.

Officials and important people can be our friends, but they are tied either to politics or to other obligations. They cannot separate themselves from their ties; they will always remain involved. They can accept the principles of Bahá'u'lláh and the Cause but are usually not wholly converted to the Cause. They come in with reservations. We must not sacrifice the principles of the Cause for popularity. We must proceed wisely, cautiously and slowly. We must look for pure souls; capable souls not necessarily important. We must concentrate on pure souls.

The stronghold of materialism is America. We must avoid total concentration of teaching in the cities. There the people are immersed in their own surroundings — are distracted, disinterested in things pertaining to the spirit. The more primitive the people are the more near they are to the spirit, to the Faith.

People speak of the so-called civilized world; the more primitive the nearer they are; the more civilized the farther they are. It is difficult to establish the Cause in cities. It is easier in towns and easiest in villages. Bahá'ís must move from cities to villages and not from villages to cities.

Bahá'ís must go where it is easy to find them — in their modest homes. We establish the Administration in the cities; concentrate the teaching outside the cities. Think what would happen if New York, Chicago, San Francisco, and Los Angeles would do this. Bahá'ís can spend years in the cities but many times to no avail; people there are preoccupied. Bahá'ís must propagate the Faith in small centres. We want localities in the Faith, not cities. We must go with the people, live among them, search for them.

It is a mistake for pioneers to get into Capitals and stay there. We must scatter then we reach a rich harvest. This does not mean to abandon cities. We must have a fire functioning Assembly but the surplus Bahá'ís must scatter. Of course there are many difficulties involved, many difficulties to overcome, and it means sacrifice. Bahá'ís must sacrifice many have families, homes, ties. I lay down the principle; the Bahá'ís must try to apply it. All that is required of them is to make an effort; they must make an effort. If one-tenth of the Bahá'ís in Tíhrán alone would disperse the Bahá'ís would have the Faith all over the world. They have learned in Persia the importance of villages. We cannot compel Bahá'ís to disperse but people must make the effort. The pioneering spirit must be created — friends. During the Crusade tell the friends the effort must be continuous, not spasmodic.

The Guardian explained that the Bahá'í School for India shown on his map will be quite different from the summer schools. It is to be opened all year around — maybe non-Bahá'ís will be admitted.

Opposition is a driving force; it is a propelling force — opposition and criticism. Crises will move the Cause ahead. The time will come when missionaries will openly attack us. The civil and the religious will form a common front, it all depends upon the progress of the Faith. The progress of the Faith depends upon the Friends, the individual believers. They must hasten the progress of the Faith to get opposition so this opposition will lead to crises which in turn will lead to triumph. It is like a motor. The motor produces electricity; progress of the Faith causes the spark. The spark accelerates motion, motion creates spark, a series of sparks and motion; victories and crises.

PILGRIMAGES OF MARGUERITE R. SEARS - Haifa, Israel, Feb. 26

Whatever affects the policy of the nation in relation to other nations is controversial and should not be considered in any way by Bahá'ís. Take no sides, keep away from party politics and all inter-governmental policies. We are no party; we promote the policy of no government. We are God's party. We promote God's policy which is above human politics. The Cause is supra-national and because it is Divine in origin not political and not partisan. We must not be ashamed or afraid to state this. Bahá'í must always be ready to clarify their position. To know and to teach. The more confused the state of the world, the more we must clarify our position. This is the only way to protect ourselves and the Faith. It is more important than giving the teachings to give our war a views and Administrative World Policy of God's Cause.

Communism is a political issue but we must be careful not to denounce it. Abdu'l-Bahá denounced communism in a way so as not to hurt. We denounce both Communism and Capitalism in principle. racialism, materialism, capitalism as we see them today in their extreme forms. They stress unduly the welfare of mankind. Anything carried to the extreme is detrimental. Anything that affects the policy of the nation in its relation to other nations is political.

Anything that affects the policy of the nation, issues that are the cause of controversy between nations, we must avoid such issues. Express no views. Bahá'ís may express views about the United Nations because it is not related to the policy of one government against another, but anything that is related to a number of nations, two or more, Bahá'ís must not take sides; must not blame, must not criticize, must not give any advice, suggest anything to any government or any representative of any government but must be loyal. The Marshall Plan and the Point Four program are political issues. Bahá'ís must keep away. Bahá'ís must keep away from anything controversial between nations. In the first place they cannot influence and they are not strong enough to help. Secondly they will endanger other Bahá'ís by their action. Thirdly they will alienate "other governments; they will tease their own, but will alienate other governments. Fourth, we are only too anxious to serve administratively. Not only willing but anxious to receive such posts but we must be on our guard. Such posts are outwardly and inwardly political. Politics are much too corrupt. Bahá'ís by the participation will get corrupted themselves if they participate. It is too strong a current to withstand. In matters intergovernmental or inter-state take no sides, belong to no party. We are God's party and promote God's policy which is above human politics. Not opposed but above. We must proclaim this to the world. It is the only way to safe-guard the Faith. It is much more important to safe-guard than to propagate it. We do not ourselves with any system because all system contains elements that are irreconcilable with our teachings. The sooner Americans know this the better.

We require the goodwill of the authorities in every country in which we work. Say nothing against or for Communism or Democracy. The British say "State First" EVERYTHING ELSE IS SECONDARY. Bahá'ís must think of the principle itself. All countries sacrifice principle in order to safe-guard the interests of the state. Our conduct is fundamentally different. With Bahá'ís principle is first. In the U.N. if each thought of principle they would all agree but all think of country first. Their idea is to let the world suffer if "our" nation is safe. This is fundamentally different, and un-Bahá'í. Bahá'ís say if necessary let our own country suffer for the sake of the condition of the world. Like a doctor he does not think of limbs of the body. Proof of this, if an organ, hand or foot affects the body tree surgeon amputates it. He thinks of the body first whereas politicians each think of one of the organs. They prefer that the whole body should suffer and that the particular part should remain.

Bahá'ís should have the concern of the Faith of Bahá'u'lláh as a whole. If necessary the local or national community should be sacrificed in order to safeguard the Faith. Bahá'ís will sacrifice their own country for the sake of the world. We believe that truth, honesty, justice must always be our watchword in everything that we do whether in promoting the interests of the faith or the interests of our own country. We can disassociate a particular country from these principles but we cannot disassociate the Faith from these principles. For the sake of argument, if possible, sacrifice the Faith and maintain principle. The Cause is the servant of Justice, truth-BAHÁ'U'LLÁH HAS COME TO ESTABLISH JUSTICE, NOT TO ESTABLISH HIS CAUSE. These principles are the purpose of the Revelation of the Faith of Bahá'u'lláh. Missionaries are different; will lie, depart from moral principles, ethical principles, if necessary, in order to gain converts. We must not do that. IT IS BETTER FOR THE CAUSE not to progress rather than for us to depart from these principles because the Cause is for these principles. We must make our position quite clear to ruling authorities so there can be no misunderstanding. If they ask questions we must give clear answers that will not be misinterpreted. Who will obey the State provided it does not require us to depart from our principles. Our principles are more precious than obedience to state. We must be loyal to every established form of Government. If it is in a revolutionary form then we must wait until it is established.

We need scholars in the Faith. I need to condense so much due to lack of time and so much to say. Every Bahá'í should have picked up the seven points ("Advent of Divine Justice" p.12) of the progress of the Faith and know them. We need to pray, meditate, study and act more. The seven stages which we should know are Obscurity: ignoring of the Faith as in Italy, in the goal countries of Europe. The Cause is passing through various stages in different countries. In Europe it is mostly in obscurity. 2. Repression — persecution. Persia, of course, has been in the stage over 100 years. Regarding marriage in pain they have to do as in Egypt. Get married according to the Bahá'í ceremony. The marriage is not recognized by the State and their children are considered illegitimate but the Bahá'ís do not mind. They have been obedient. 3. Emancipation — Egypt has reached this stage in part in that they are free from letters of the religious leaders. The clergy has recognized them as an independent religion but the State has not. 4. Recognition: This stage has been attained, not by Persia, not by the ten goal countries, but by America and Israel. 5. Establishment — No community has reached this stage. In the strict sense it means one Faith. Not only equal status to other religions but to become the state religion of a country as Islám in Persia; and the Anglican Church in England. We are bound to reach that stage when any one country gives the Faith the same status as other religions, Persia may jump to 5 because of number. 6. Sovereignty or Bahá'í government when all political matters will be referred to the House of Justice. When the Faith will reign, not only be established, but reign, when the Bahá'í State is established. When the Faith will cease to be a religion of the State but will become itself the State. The State Church, not the Church State. This will be when the Government proclaims the religion to be the Bahá'í Faith — not that (only, but the institutions of the Cause will assume functions of Government. 7. World Commonwealth. When a number of Governments will join together -6-ria-r-oc a super Bahá'í Government — a common-!wealth. The National Spiritual Assemblies will become the National 4federal Governments. We must refer only to the first f.914/, ' in the stages of development when we 4peakpu4Ttay_flo-ithetluta, being and use wisdom in discussing these stages among non-Bahá'ís.

In the Tablet of the Holy Mariner, the Holy Mariner means Bahá'u'lláh through allusion. The Ark is the Faith itself. The Tablet predicts problems and difficulties which happened at Adrianople and 'Akká. The burning meteor is a symbol of God's avenging wrath.

In the Tablet of Carmel (Gleanings p.14, 15, 16, & 17) the "Ark" referred to is not the Ark of the Faith, it is the Arc of the laws of the Faith. It refers to the establishment of the Universe of Justice. The "People" of Bahá'ís are the members of the Universal House of Justice. The House of Justice directs the Ark; the Ark of the laws of God will sail on Mount Carmel.

A Hand is one who serves the Cause in an outstanding manner. The American Hands were appointed: Leroy for services rendered during the first seven year plan, Dorothy for her teaching ability, Millie and Fred for their great financial contributions during times of greatest need. They upheld the Faith. Roy was a saint, Sutherland for the Shrine of the Báb, Horace for his services in the Administration, Mrs. True for her Temple Service, Mason for continued service over a long time and for visiting all countries for the Faith.

In the future outstanding scientist writers, leaders in their fields, will immediately become Hands as soon as they become Bahá'ís. It does not necessarily mean that they are greater spiritually, but they must se.

We must teach laws as well as principles. All people appreciate the principles, but the laws are challenging. Alcohol abstinence and monogamy will be difficult for Africans to accept at first. Monogamy is the rule. Bahá'u'lláh said monogamy was recommended; 'Abdu'l-Bahá said there must be justice and made monogamy the rule. In Africa if a polygamist becomes a Bahá'í he must not divorce all but one wife, but after becoming a Bahá'í he must not take another wife. If he takes another, this one will be the reason for his breaking the law and this one must be divorced. All must be acquainted with the laws but if they are broken the offender must be 1. Admonished, 2. Warned, 3. Warned, 4. Warned, 5. then his voting rights taken away. We must be certain in the first place that he is acquainted with the laws.

We must first attract, then educate in the principles and the laws. We have principles laws and Institutions. The Christians-have principles but no laws. The Moslems have principles and laws but -no institutions. The Bahá'í Faith has all three. We have a definite statement regarding succession, this is unique.

Bahá'u'lláh insists on Justice. Justice must be administered by Assemblies. The Most Great Peace be the result of the Most Great Justice. This will safeguard the unity of mankind. Bahá'ís should be guided by Justice not by mercy, love or forgiveness in Assembly work. Bahá'u'lláh said, "I personally would be. Inclined to forgive my enemies, but I am restrained by the law of God". Individuals may forgive, Assemblies must be very strict regarding justice.

The House of Justice, .or Assembly must administer justice. This is the beginning of the State Church. We must start now to act as such — be prepared for the future.

There are many differences between the Pope and the Guardian. The Hands will be somewhat similar to the House of Cardinals. The Pope has legislative and interpretive authority. The Guardian has no legislative but interpretive. The legislation is by elected bodies in the Faith. The interpretive and legislative are separate in the Faith. This is unique and one of the distinguishing features of the Faith. Teachers must teach this. This Faith is for the maturity of mankind.

We must develop local, regional and sectional NSA's. Each country in Africa will have an NSA eventually. There will be 60 NSA's in Africa.

Pioneers must deepen, widen activities, and scatter. They must teach the natives of the countries so thoroughly that they may administer for themselves and then go to a new place. Pioneers must safeguard the Faith by teaching thoroughly, increasing the numbers, multiplying the centers and keeping in touch with Assemblies and committees. The Administration of the Faith applied in Africa will be an object lesson, to the British authorities. It will open their eyes, attract them and then alarm them.

We must become scholars of the Faith like the Germans. They are the scholars. It is not enough to read the writings or to study at the Summer Schools. We must study daily so as not to have just a superficial knowledge of the Faith. The Summer Schools should have lectures and discussions but they must have studied to be able to discuss. We need scholars of the Faith. The German people should be our example. Bahá'ís should, for instance, be able to differentiate between Dispensation, Era, Epoch and Cycle. Bahá'ís who study know these things and can discuss them intelligently.

Peter was the true head of Christianity not Paul...Christians have to come to this understanding. All was the true head of the Moslem Faith and the first Imám, not the Caliphs. The Caliphs put 'Alí fourth but He was the first Imám. Shí'ah Islám is the closest to the truth not SunnÍ. The SunnÍ Muḥammadans have to become Shí'ah to become Bahá'í, just as the Protestants have to accept Peter as the true head of Christianity before knowing the truth of Christianity.

The year 9 should be stressed this year, stressed and stressed. We should be meditating and thinking of the fate of Bahá'u'lláh in the Síyáh-Chál. We have to know about it to think about it. We should study about it in "God Passes By", "The Epistle", Nabí's "Some Answered Questions" and the "Íqán".

We must know our basic books thoroughly, not superficially, reading them and considering them studied. Everyone should know thoroughly the New Era, Some Answered Questions, 'clan, Epistle and Gleanings.

We should know the significance of the year 9. The prophecy in the Bible of the 1st, 2nd, and 3rd Woes. Bahá'u'lláh kept His mission a secret for ten years. During that time He wrote poetry alluding to His Mission. There are many odes in Persian and Arabic which have not yet been translated. Nabíl refers to the Odes. "The Sweet Scented Streams", was revealed in Kurdistan.

The Luminous Maiden (p .101 "God Passes By") the symbol of Religion in the highest form, to Moses it was the burning bush, Christ the Dove and the Angel Gabriel to Muḥammad.

Shoghi Effendi referred to the cable sent to America which appeared in the Bahá'í News where he likened the "Tree" to an "Olive Tree". He said the tree of 6000 years started with Adam, the last of Many Adams, it grew in Abraham, Moses, Jesus and Muḥammad; — The tree, like an olive tree, yielded its fruit in the Báb, in His martyr-dom it was crushed by the mill of adversity. The oil from this crushed fruit made the light which appeared 10 years later in the Síyáh-Chál. It ignited in a flicker in the darkest dungeon, it was clouded over for 10 years and when it reached the land of mystery, Adrianople, it became more radiant, it became a crystal. For 40 years it only showed its light in ten countries. After that it spread to the west. (See Chapter on Birth of the Bahá'í Revelation in "God Passes By").

The growth of the Cause was by diffusion, Machinery, and there be suffusion. This, he said, must be taught in the Summer Schools.

The Machinery will continue throughout the formative years after the 10-year crusade.

This began with Adam and ends with the Golden Age. There will be a reaction in favor of the Faith and great destruction but we are not concerned with the catastrophe but only with the 10-year crusade. He emphasized the necessity of teaching about the Birth and Growth of the Faith now and the understanding and touching of the significance of the year 9. He told us that when Rúhíyyih Khánum read this at the Dedication of the Temple it would be the most solemn moment of the entire time. We are celebrating the birth of the light of God. We are not only to charm the Bahá'ís by speaking of his but to convince the non-Bahá'ís with the explanation of the year-9.

The Spirit of the Cause is not enough, we need the institutions. The institutions are the embodiments of the spirit of the Cause, the channel through which the spirit of the Cause flows. Any idea, any work, of education, religion, social life, will never be effective in the world unless it is translated into an institution. For example, education; it will never have its influence felt on society unless the idea of education is incarnated in an institution or college. So with everything else. An ideal must be translated into an institution, and the Bahá'í Faith which is primarily a powerful spirit in the world must be embodied in an institution, incorporate itself in an institution if it is to exert its power in the world. We must recognize the station of the Báb, Bahá'u'lláh and the Master and at the same time recognize the necessity of institutions through which the spirit of these three central figures is now including, preserving, promoting.

These institutions have not been established by us, they have been established by the Founder of the Faith Himself. That is why they are essentially different from the Christian Church, because we have institutions and they have institutions — we call it “Spiritual Assembly”, they call it “Church”. If they say you are doing the same thing we are doing, you say, “Yours was man-made — ours was Divinely appointed”. Not established, by the Master in the will nor appointed by the Báb, but provided for and established by Bahá'u'lláh in the Most Holy Book — the Book of Laws. This is the fundamental difference between our institutions and the institutions belonging to all other religions, not only Christians. They are essentially man-made, ours are divinely appointed.

But always remember, those Institutions are a means to an end. We have to utilize these institutions for a purpose. Our purpose is to carry out the Divine Plan the Master — we had to wait ever since the Master revealed those tablets, 1915, 16, 17 (20 years) until the administrative order was sufficiently established and beginning to function in order to utilize them for this purpose. The Master gave instructions to the American believers to establish the Cause throughout the World, the Divine Plan, a few years before He passed. In those days we didn't have the means. A few individuals were working, Martha Root started her travels. Mr. and Mrs. Dunn went from California to Australia. Imogene went to Italy, but all on an individual basis, not organized, not systematic, not continuous, more or less spasmodic. It was not directed toward a definite plan and target.

In other words, they didn't formulate a plan. So unlike plans of each NSA now which are specific.

When the Master passed away, the first thing we did was establish the administrative order according to the blueprint the Master gave us. He told us how to establish this Administrative Order, Nationally and Locally. He told us how the House of justice would be established eventually. Then we started the long laborious task of raising the structure of the Administrative Order. It took us two decades—20 years to do this. As the work progressed, some of the Bahá'ís began to wonder whether that was going to be the sole concern of the Bahá'ís, to establish these institutions. Some began to doubt, some to criticize. Ahmad entirely misunderstood our purpose for the simple reason that I asked the Bahá'ís to think of nothing else but building these institutions that were to be the means in our hands to achieve a purpose later on. It took us 20 years to establish two stage of this administrative order, local and national Assemblies. When the local and National Assemblies were established and beginning to function, then I directed the attention of the Bahá'ís to the purpose for which these institutions had been created and were being perfected. The first part of the plan America's, then Latin and South America, Canada. Then the 2nd stage in Europe—now we have started in Africa—That is why the Cause is progressing so rapidly.

In England it took 50 years to establish 2 Assemblies, in 6 years, 19 Assemblies were established, not only in England but Scotland, Wales and Ireland.

Love of the Master is not enough. We must have a deep Faith. Three things we must remember, 1. Faith, 2. the Covenant, 3. The Administration. The Covenant is the child of the Faith. The Administrative Order is the child of the Covenant.

Abdu'l-Bahá, the “Mystery of God”—we must never hope to unravel that mystery. He is not a Prophet—He is unique the spiritual history of mankind. He stands between the Prophet and the Guardians, but in addition we have something in Him which other religions do not possess, the institution of the Center of the Covenant. He is a mystery because He shares not in the nature of the Manifestation, but the quality of the Manifestation—perfect but not Divine, that is why He is a mystery. ‘Abdu'l-Bahá, all knowing, but not a Prophet of God.

The Unity of Mankind is absolutely new, there is nothing like it in the teaching of previous religions.

First we must lay the foundation. Then we can start to build. The foundation must be strong—firm. Every community must do three things: 1. Promote teaching work in the community, increase the number of believers, multiply the groups and 2. Consolidate institutions already established. Consolidation and expansion at home. 3. Initiate activities outside of community and country. The teaching committees should be primarily concerned with increasing the number of believers, extending the range of the Faith. Consolidation of the community mainly concerned with institutions already established. To see that Local Assemblies are maintained, groups converted to Assembly status, etc.

Regarding America, the probability is that it will become directly involved in the coming conflict. Time bombs etc, will poison the earth.

The British NSA is watchful, careful and successful. I have a great admiration for it, The United States is chief custodian of the Divine Plan. All other countries are auxiliaries—they will assist the chief custodians who are the believers in the United States. The U.S. has an ally in the Canadian Believers because some of the Tablets of the Divine Plan were addressed to them both.

Dr. Esselmont was the 1st Hand appointed during the formative age.

America will suffer probably more than any other nation in this souring conflict. The U.S. is the home of materialistic civilization. It will all come about in a gradual, mysterious and unexpected manner.

Ques: If the House of Justice is under the guidance of God would it make a wrong decision? Ans: It is the Guardian's responsibility to tell them whether they should legislate on such a matter, or not—whether it is within their province. They would not make wrong decisions, but there is this safeguard of the Guardian to ask them to reconsider the matter.

In regard to personal matters-Assemblies were established for two purposes. 1. To safeguard the interests of the Faith; 2. to help individuals when in crisis.

Ques: What about floods etc. in a country when Bahá'ís are asked to help in relief. Ans: Assemblies must —, the Bahá'ís privately should associate themselves with whatever measures are taken by the general public or Government in order to prove universality of the Faith—that it promotes the interests of the entire community. They must watch, wherever there is such an opportunity, they must help—even a token contribution, nationally, locally and individually.

When the House of Justice makes a statement about a certain law which has not been clearly stated in the teaching they are guided. They are not only to be obeyed, they are infallible. The NSA's have to be obeyed but are not infallible.

The inter-continental conferences will be a prelude to a world conference—preferably at the world Center of the Faith. In the plan for the next ten years there is a two-fold internal aspect: One relating to the institutions, the other relating to teaching. The Wilmette Conference will consider first and foremost the opening up of the remaining territories to the Faith in the Continent of America and the Islands, second, to consolidate the Cause in the territories already open to the Faith. That in itself will be institutional, and the other teaching. The internal aspect in the U.S. and particularly the Temple and Dependencies.

There are three aspects of the Faith, Devotional, Administrative and Teaching. We have great need for more teaching. We must pray, meditate and then act. Teach financial contributions to the Faith must be systematic, continuous methodical. In order to promote the interests of the world center of the Faith here, at Haifa, appropriations have to be made from each A. It is my duty to impress upon them the importance of this chase of the work. As to the sum I leave it to the discretion of the NSA's. I emphasize its importance and the needs and I leave it to their discretion to allocate the sum.

Individuals have three-fold obligation, to support local institutions, National and inter-national. Resources will be acquired from three different sources. Stress is being made on the International development of the Faith. From the World Center of the Faith go contributions to all parts of the world. It is not only for the Báb's Shrine. In the last year some of the money has gone for the Ḥaḏíra in Africa, the land in Constantinople, the site of Bahá'u'lláh's house, to Germany and to England.

The International Interests of the Faith have precedence over National interests.

The Ḥuqúq will come when the Hands of the Cause will begin to assume their primary function.

A great change will sweep over the world. A wave of the Most Great Peace. There will prepare and lead the way for the Most Great Peace.

There will be oppression—justice—peace.

Persia, the Holy Land and America are in the greatest danger because of materialism:

The character of the coming upheaval will be different from the World War. The atom bomb may exercise an influence on the whole world. There are two plans operating in the world, 1. the Major plan or God's plan. It is mysterious and we have nothing to do with it. 2. The Minor plan or the World Crusade of the next ten years, about which we have everything to do. God's plan involves disturbances. People must be shaken, aroused, their eyes opened in order to acquire the capacity to accept the Faith.

America was given the privilege of being the Chief executors of the Divine plan. America now stands 5th in rank in service to the Faith. The English are the best organizers in the Bahá'í World, the Americans, the best Administrators. The only value U.N. work is that we can add to our prestige through it. We must not think that the U.N. is going to form the world state of the future.

The Americans and the Persians are too emotional. They are both alike in this respect. They are not impersonal enough, not objective in their thinking. They think of themselves or people first and the Cause second or last. The Cause must come first, individuals later and no personality. Americans spend too much money on luxuries, the Persians spend too much money on hospitality.

Bahá'ís should not spend all their time in doing these things that in themselves are good and not teach the Cause. We must 1st be Missionaries and then humanitarians.

Devotion to the Cause is different from being lovers of mankind. We must all be lovers of mankind. The Master said, the trouble is that we disassociate God from Man. We think of God in the Abstract sense. If we love God, we must love His creatures. We must love God so much as to become the lovers of His Creation. We must love people because we love God. You can truly love everybody if you truly love God and connect these creatures with God, that is why the love of God is so essential. When you love a person you love the people connected with that person. Recognizing God is different from loving Him. Being awed by God is different from loving Him, and the degree to which you love God must sooner or later reflect itself in our love for mankind or the Jack of it. There will always be people who do not believe in Bahá'u'lláh. It does not mean that everybody will become Bahá'í, or that evil will cease to exist even in the Golden Age. There will always be the element of perversity, but it will be negligible. (To Roy) In our dealings we must cultivate and communicate with Presidents and Prime Ministers and not 4th class officials. This is the way things should be done. We must first establish contact, attain a certain degree of acquaintance if not friendship and then bring issues to their attention.

The Shrine of Bahá'u'lláh is the Most Holy Shrine in the world.

The Íqán and the Kitáb-i-Aqdas are the two foremost books of all the religions of the world. The Aqdas was revealed in 1870.

It requires purity of heart and extreme concentration to communicate with the next world. The Bahá'í who turns to God—he only can achieve miraculous things, but can exercise a great influence on others.

There is no cessation of work at the International Center except on the nine Holy Days.

The Master had great admiration for Mary Magdalene.

The early Bábís believed in reincarnation. Mullá Ḥusayn in Fort Ṭabarsí was longing to be martyred and then return. One of the signs of maturity of the world will be when Kingship will remain with none willing to bear its weight. The few remaining thrones are trembling with the repercussions of the fall of their fellows. Kingship will be restored.

Do you think if I had started to think about the condition of Europe seven years ago, when it was almost prostrate, I would have had courage to ask Bahá'ís of America to start opening the campaign and sending pioneers? God works in His own ways along the same lines but in a different manner.

The 54th Chapter of Isaiah refers to the Mother of 'Abdu'l-Bahá (Navváb).

Speaking of an elevator or escalator at the Temple. The Guardian seemed to prefer an elevator. He described it as efficient, quiet, dignified and quick. He said the friends should aim at these things La any-thing they do.

Vigilance and thoroughness are qualities that the Guardian admires in the British.

All the nations of the world have suffered, why not America: It is corrupt and it is flabby. Russia can do anything to America. America escaped before but this time it will not escape. The streets of New York will run with blood. Politics and individuals are corrupt. America is an atomic base—a target for Russia. England has become the aircraft carrier for atom bombs. The worst danger is that which faces New York. Skyscrapers will fall—there will be burning of the cities as prophesied in the Bible.

The Guardian was asked the question: “In the writings it states that we can only affect another spiritually to the depth we ourselves are affected spiritually, is that the reason for the lack of progress in America?” The Guardian spoke for almost two hours on this question.

The Guardian pointed out that in 1950. He had given the inestimable, privilege to America alone of going o pioneer in Africa. This, He said, he did in a general letter. Not one American responded.

In 1951 He sent a cable giving the American Negro a special blessing and opportunity and only one soul responded out of the entire country, Bill Foster of Chicago.

At the Kampala Conference only Liberia was represented by American pioneers. There should have been a far larger number of Bahá’ís from America at the Conference. America has failed in this respect. There were only nine Americans at the Conference Where there should have been at least 20 or 30.

Americans are too concerned with their homes, trivialities, business. These things keep them back like a dead weight, they put these things first and Africa and the Faith last. Africa should have been the first concern of every American believer. The distinguished American Bahá’ís should have immediately arisen—regardless of anything else—spontaneously. America didn’t arise at all so God inspired the Persians and the British.

No sanction nor appeal have any effect. It must be a whole hearted response and this cannot be created. The Cause has not spent itself in America: it is youthful and virile but it is unaroused in service, Americans are self-sacrificing financially, they raised the administrative order splendidly, but this can be done without spiritual development. The Americans have not gone to fortify other communities within their own country, how could they be expected to go to Africa.

I would have given America more territory in Africa, but it did nothing with what it had been given. Scene had to be taken away and given to the British

Marian Jack typifies the true spirit the pioneer should have. We must follow her example. Marion_ Jack went from Canada to Bulgaria, where she is yet. When the war broke out I wrote her, urging her to go to Switzerland or to come to Haifa. She begged to stay where she was. She stayed under the utmost difficulties. The Master appreciated her very much. Not her ability, her spirit and detach-me0.– The Canadians must be very proud of her. Even the Oriental believers have not risen to this height of detachment. She stayed in Bulgaria during the war. The Americans took the first boat home. The Americans must become detached. Race prejudice and materialism are the greatest evils in America. Africa should be fit for everyone's mind. Americans are too attached to material comforts this is the tragedy of America.

The Administrators and the distinguished should arise. The Administrators feel that if they leave everything will be lost. God will take care of the administration at home all they have to do is arise.

We must become as light as the spirit, as swift as the wind, as ablaze as fire, as resigned as the earth. (Bahá'u'lláh)

Americans must give up all their encumbrances—give up everything—they must forsake their homes, give up everything and they won't need money it will come.

The Collision's are admirable.

Each American Bahá'í would make 200 Bahá'ís in Africa if they would demonstrate the spirit Bahá'u'lláh demands of the pioneer. When Bahá'ís demonstrate the true spirit of the Faith this alone will result.

Leaving one's home and settling as a pioneer is not enough. 1440.1 must be right. We must get close to the spirit wants the pioneer to attain. This is purely individual, a struggle with one's own nature.

The hosts of the supreme Consensus are suspended between earth and Heaven waiting to assist, but we must be like a magnet to attract this spirit. This spirit has accumulated because it has not been drawn upon. There have been no magnets is to attract it. We will arise with spirit and spontaneity. This call should have _____ to the American negro more than anyone else but they _____ because: they are too bogged down with the materialism.

The tests today are the same as in the day of Muḥammad, He wrote in the Qur'án that the tests are: Death, children, wealth and _____.

New York and Chicago are the most dangerous places in the _____. The skyscrapers of which Americans are so proud will fall _____ houses of cards.

The American believers are mediocre. They are superior to non-Bahá'ís, but compared to Bahá'í standards they are very mediocre. We have a large number of mediocre Bahá'ís in the world. There are only a few distinguished ones. All Bahá'ís must measure themselves according to the standard of the teachings only.

It is easy to establish the administrative order but it is hard to make converts. 'Abdu'l-Bahá was very disappointed in America. He wrote and spoke there of the dangers of materialism and He went un-heeded, and they are still unheeding.

Not until we approach the standard set down in the teachings will we have great victories. Americans can render great service in Administrative fields, but cannot teach without the right spirit, land will not attract and confirm new believers.

We require another quality. Quantity is not enough; we require a high degree of quality. It is easy to administrate but difficult to make converts. In the administration field we can succeed with quantity and mediocrity. We are too organized—too material. The Cause requires much more than administration.

Consolidation is related to teaching. We are called upon to increase the number of Bahá'ís—we cannot do it without the spirit. The ten-year crusade has nothing to do with administration.

Persian believers have the right spirit.

It is easier to bring a Negro into the Faith in Africa than it is in America. In Africa they are pure in heart—in America they are too attached to their personal comforts. The American Negro talks about his love of Africa and the African's Cause, but they are not willing to leave the comforts of their own homes to do anything in Africa. This is a curse—a cancer eating into the vitals of America.

All civilization is sinking, sinking. No one knows this better than the Russians, they are very observant.

America's most vaunted civilization is falling—materialism is like a cancer eating into the body of the nation. Africa is the safest place in the world today. God is very merciful to the Americans, giving them the opportunity to go to Africa.

We need the crusading spirit in America. America had relative security and it was sweet, now they are beginning to taste the bitterness of it. The leaders realize this more than the masses. The American Skyscrapers are built on shifting sands—when the atom bomb drops they will see are tasting the bitter fruit, they are caught in a trap and it is God's trap.

The so-called backward people are living in the safest environments, while the most civilized are living in the dangerous. Civilization is turning upon itself. Moderation is necessary even in this. This is prophecy, 'Abdu'l-Bahá told us all this. America is a young nation that is going astray. The leaders have this knowledge of what's coming in their hearts, but they will not tell the people. Look at Korea, blood, blood, blood, when will it stop? 'Abdu'l-Bahá denounced materialism in America in His speeches. He realized that Europe was a village, America a city. The skyscrapers built on shifting sands will collapse like a house of cards. The greatest point of danger is New York and then Chicago. If London hadn't been destroyed by fire I wouldn't have said these things. I am only calling attention to what has already begun. Compare Hamburg to New York and Stuttgart Chicago. If London hadn't been destroyed in a fire I wouldn't say this. Materialism and racialism are their greatest tragedy — their chance is gone. There is no getting out of it now. Now war will devastate the last remaining stronghold — America. Americans must suffer, be chastised, be purified and then they will be victorious. Bahá'u'lláh proclaimed this, 'Abdu'l-Bahá warned of this while in America but it was un-heeded, I have tried and tried until it has become a waste of cables, there is no response. Americans could lead the world—if they taken the lead in Africa the victories would have been even greater than they are now.

Europe has spent its force; there is not much hope left there. America is young but it is going astray with tremendous rapidity. It has to be stopped. Americans are not generally nationalistic but fear makes them that way when they think, they might lose their homes. America has to be chastened and purified to establish the Peace foretold. The immediate future is very dark but the distant future is very bright, but we are not concerned with the coming catastrophe, only with the development of the ten year crusade.

The immediate future of the Cause is dark also because it is linked with the destinies of the people, but the distant future is very bright. There may be a cutting off from the World Center for a time such as occurred in Germany. America will taste the sweetness of true and abiding civilization, not materialism, not European, not American but world civilization.

It is most essential that we use prayer and meditation. Life is a constant struggle with one's own instincts. We must struggle, be active and persevere, then we will reap the fruit of victory.

(After this the Guardian arose from the table and said, "Give my love to the Friends wherever you go". Then He left, but as He reached the doorway He turned, looked at me and said, "Don't discourage them.")

After this Rúhíyyih Khánum said, "Are the Americans jelly-spined? They have to face facts, they have to grow up. The Guardian is trying to talk to them as adults now, they can't be coddled as children." Whatever affects the policy of the nation in relation to other nations is controversial and should not be in any way by Bahá'ís. Take no sides, keep away from party politics and all inter-governmental policies. We are no party, we promote the policy of no government. We are God's party. We promote God's policy which is above human politics. The Cause is supra-national and because it is Divine in origin — not political and not partisan. We must not be ashamed or afraid to state this. Bahá'ís must always be ready to clarify their position. To know and to teach. The more confused the state of the world, the more we must clarify our position. This is the only way to protect ourselves and the Faith. It is more important than giving the teachings to give our world views and the Administrative World Policy of God's Cause.

Communism is a political issue but we must be careful not to denounce it. 'Abdu'l-Bahá denounced communism in a way so as not to hurt. We denounce both Communism and Capitalism in principle. Communism, racialism, materialism, capitalism as we see them today in their extreme forms. They stress unduly the welfare of mankind. Anything carried to the extreme is detrimental.

Anything that affects the policy of the nation in its relation to other nations is political. Anything that affects the policy of the nation, issues that are the cause of controversy between nations we must avoid such issues. Express no views. Bahá'ís may express views about the United Nations because it is not related to the policy of one government against another, but anything that is related to a number of nations, two or more, Bahá'ís must not take sides; must not blame, must not criticize, must not give any advice, suggest anything to any government of any representative of any government but must be loyal. The Marshall Plan and the Point Four program are political issues. Bahá'ís must keep away. Bahá'ís must keep away from anything controversial between nations. In the first place they cannot influence and they are not strong enough to help. Secondly they will endanger other Bahá'ís by their actions. Third, they will alienate other governments. Fourth, we are only to serve administratively. Not only willing but anxious to receive such posts but we must be on our guard. Such posts are outwardly administrative but inwardly political. Politics are much too corrupt. Bahá'ís by their participation will get corrupted themselves if they participate. It is too strong a current to withstand. In matters inter-governmental or inter-state take no sides, belong to no party. We are God's party and promote God's policy which is above human politics. Not opposed but above. We must proclaim this to the world. It is the only way to safeguard the Faith. It is much more important to safeguard the unity of the Faith than to propagate it. We do not identify ourselves with any system because all systems contain elements that are irreconcilable with our teachings. The sooner Americans know this the better.

We require the goodwill of the authorities in every country in which we work. Say nothing against or for Communism or Democracy. The British say "State First" EVERYTHING ELSE IS SECONDARY. Bahá'ís must think of the principle itself. In all countries they sacrifice principle in order to safeguard the interests of the state. Our conduct is fundamentally different. With Bahá'ís principle is first. In the U.N. if each thought of principle they would all agree but they all think of country first. Their idea is to let the world suffer if "our" nation is safe. This is fundamentally different, and un-Bahá'í. Bahá'ís say if necessary let our country suffer for the sake of the condition of the world. Like a doctor he does not think of the limbs of the body. Proof of this, if an organ, hand or foot affects the body the surgeon amputates it. He thinks of the body first whereas politicians each think of one of the organs. They prefer that the whole body should suffer and that the particular part should remain.

Bahá'ís should have the concern of the Faith of Bahá'u'lláh as a whole. If necessary the local or national community should be sacrificed in order to safeguard the Faith. Bahá'ís will sacrifice their own country for the sake of the world. We believe that truth, honesty, justice must always be our watchword in everything that we do whether in promoting the interests of the Faith or the interests of our own country. We can dissociate a particular country from these principles but we cannot disassociate the Faith from these principles. For the sake of argument, if possible, sacrifice the Faith and maintain principle. The Cause is the servant of Justice, truth — BAHÁ'U'LLÁH HAS COME TO ESTABLISH JUSTICE, NOT TO ESTABLISH HIS CAUSE. These principles are the purpose of the Revelation of the Faith of Bahá'u'lláh. Missionaries are different; will lie, depart from moral principles, ethical principles, if necessary, in order to gain converts. We must not do that. IT IS BETTER FOR THE CAUSE not to progress rather than for us to depart from these principles because the Cause is for these principles. We must make our position quite clear to ruling authorities so there can be no misunderstanding. If they ask questions we must give clear answers that will not be misinterpreted. We will obey the State provided it does not require us to depart from our principles. Our principles are more precious than obedience to state. We must be loyal to every established form of Government. If it is in a revolutionary form then we must wait until it is established.

We need scholars in the Faith. I need to condense so much due to lack of time and so much to say. Every Bahá'í should have picked out the seven points ("Advent of Divine Justice" p.12) of the progress of the Faith and know them. We need to pray, meditate, study and act more. The seven stages we should know are Obscurity: ignoring the Faith as in Italy, in the goal countries in Europe. The Cause is passing through various stages in different countries. In Europe it is mostly in obscurity. 2. Repression — persecution. Persia, of course, has been in that stage for over 100 years. Regarding marriage in Spain they have to do as in Egypt. Get married according to the Bahá'í ceremony. The marriage is not recognized by the State and their children are considered illegitimate but the Bahá'ís do not mind. They have been obedient. 3. Emancipation — Egypt has reached this stage in part that they are free from fetters of the religious leaders. The clergy has recognized them as an independent religion but the State has not. 4. Recognition: This stage has been attained, not by Persia, not by the ten goal countries, but by America and Israel. 5. Establishment — No community has reached this stage. In the strict sense it means one Faith. Not only equal status to other religions but to become the state religion of a country as Islám in Persia; and the Anglican Church in England. We are bound to reach that stage when any one country gives the Faith the same status as other religions. Persia may jump to 5 because of its number. 6. Sovereignty of Bahá'í government when all political matters will be referred to the House of Justice. When the Faith will reign, not only be established, but reign, when the Bahá'í State is established. When the faith will cease to be a religion of the state but will become itself a State. The State Church not the Church State. This will be only when the Government proclaims the religion to be the Bahá'í Faith — not that only but the institutions of the Cause will assume functions of Government-7. World Commonwealth. When a number of governments will join together and form a super Bahá'í government — a commonwealth. The National Spiritual Assemblies will become the National Federal Governments. We must refer only to the first four points in the stages of development when we speak publicly for the time being and use wisdom in discussing these stages among non-Bahá'ís.

In the Tablet of the Holy Mariner, the Holy Mariner means Bahá'u'lláh through allusion. The Ark is the Faith itself. The Tablet predicts problems and difficulties which happened at Adrianople and 'Akká. The burning meteor is a symbol of God's avenging wrath.

In the Tablet of Carmel (Gleanings p. 14, 15, 16, & 17) the "Ark" referred to is not the Ark of the Faith, it is the Ark of the laws of the Faith. It refers to the establishment of the Universal House of Justice. The “People” of Bahá’í are the members of the Universal House of Justice. The House of Justice directs the Ark; the Ark of the laws of God will sail on Mount Carmel.

A Hand is one who serves the Cause in an outstanding manner. The American Hands were appointed: Leroy for services rendered during the first seven year plan, Dorothy for her teaching ability, Millie and Fred for their great financial contributions during times of greatest need. They upheld the Faith. Roy was a saint, Sutherland for the Shrine of the Báb, Horace for his services in the administration, Mrs. True for her Temple Service, Mason for continued service over a long time and for visiting all countries for the Faith.

In the future outstanding scientists, writers, leaders in their fields, will immediately become Hands as soon as they become Bahá’ís. It does not necessarily mean that they are greater spiritually, but they must become so.

We must teach the laws as well as the principles. All people appreciate the principles, but the laws are challenging. Alcohol abstinence, and monogamy will be difficult for Africans to accept at first. Monogamy is the rule. Bahá’u’lláh said monogamy was recommended, ‘Abdu’l-Bahá said there must be justice and made monogamy the rule. In Africa if a polygamist becomes a Bahá’í he must not divorce all but one wife, but after becoming a Bahá’í he must not take another wife. If he takes his another, this one will be the reason for his breaking the law and this one must be divorced. All must be acquainted with the laws but if they are broken the offender must be 1. admonished, 2. warned, 3. warned, 4. warned, 5. then his voting rights taken away. We must be certain in the first place that he is acquainted with the laws.

We must first attract, then educate in the principles and the laws. We have principle, laws and institutions. The Christians have principles but no laws. The Moslems have principles and laws but not institutions. The Bahá’í Faith has all three. We have a definite statement regarding succession, this is unique.

Bahá’u’lláh insists on Justice. Justice must be administered by Assemblies. The Most Great Peace will be the result of the Most Great Justice. This will safeguard the unity of mankind. Bahá’ís should be guided by Justice not by mercy, love or forgiveness in Assembly work. Bahá’u’lláh said, “I personally would be inclined to forgive my enemies, but I am restrained by the law of God.” Individuals may be forgive, Assemblies must be very strict regarding Justice.

The House of Justice, or Assembly, must administer Justice. This is the beginning of the State Church. We must start now to act as such — to be prepared for the future.

There are many differences between the Pope and the Guardian. The Hands. Will be somewhat similar to the House of Cardinals. The Pope has legislative and interpretive authority. The Guardian has no legislative but interpretive. The legislation is by elected bodies in the Faith. The Interpretive and legislative are separate in the Faith. This is unique and one of the distinguishing features of the Faith. Teachers must teach this. This Faith is for the maturity of mankind.

We must develop local, regional and sectional NSAs. Each country in Africa will have an NSA eventually. There will be 60 NSAs in Africa.

Pioneers must deepen, widen activities, and scatter. They must teach the natives of the countries so thoroughly that they may administer for themselves and then go to a new place. Pioneers must safeguard the Faith by teaching thoroughly, increasing the numbers, multiplying the centers and keeping touch with their National Assemblies and committees. The administration of the Faith applied in Africa will be an object lesson to the British authorities. It will open their eyes, attract them and then alarm them. We must become scholars of the Faith like the Germans. They are the scholars. It is not enough to read the writings or to study at Summer Schools. We must study daily so as not to have a superficial knowledge of the Faith. The Summer Schools should have lectures and discussions but they must have studied to be able to discuss. We need scholars of the Faith. The German people should be our example. Bahá'ís should, for instance, be able to differentiate between Dispensation, Era, Epoch, and Cycle. Bahá'í who study know these things and can discuss them intelligently.

Peter was the true head of Christianity not Paul... Christians have to come to this understanding. 'Alí was the true head of the Moslem faith and the first Imám, not the Caliphs. The Caliphs put 'Alí fourth but He was the first Imám. Shí'ah Islám is the closest to the truth not Sunnî. The Sunnî Muḥammadans have to become Shí'ah to become Bahá'í just as the Protestants have to accept Peter as the true head of Christianity before knowing the truth of Christianity.

The year 9 should be stressed this year, stressed and stressed. We should be meditating and thinking of the fate of Bahá'u'lláh in the Síyáh-Chál. We have to know about it to think about it. We should study it in "God Passes By", "The Epistle," Nabíl's "Some Answered Questions" and the "Íqán". We must know our basic books thoroughly, not superficially, reading them and considering them studied. Everyone should know thoroughly the New Era, Some Answered Questions, Íqán, Epistle and Gleanings.

We should know the significance of the year 9. The prophecy in the Bible of the 1st, 2nd, and 3rd Woes. Bahá'u'lláh kept His mission a secret for ten years. During that time He poetry alluding to His Mission. There are many odes in Persian and Arabic which have not yet been translated. Nabíl refers to the Odes. "The Sweet Scented Streams", was revealed in Kurdistan.

The Luminous Maiden (p. 101 "God Passes By") the symbol of religion in the highest form, to Moses it was the burning bush, Christ the Dove, and the Angel Gabriel to Muḥammad.

Shoghi Effendi referred to the cable sent to America which appeared in the Bahá'í News where he likened the "Tree" to an "Olive Tree". He said the tree of 6,000 years started with Adam, the last of Many Adams, it grew in Abraham, Moses, Jesus and Muḥammad. The tree, like an olive tree, yielded its fruit in the Báḅ, in His martyrdom it was crushed by the mill of adversity. The oil from this crushed fruit made the light which appeared 10 years later in the Síyáh-Chál. It ignited in a flicker in the darkest dungeon, it was clouded over for 10 years and when it reached the land of mystery. Adrianople became more radiant, it became a crystal. For 40 years it only showed its light in ten countries. After that it spread to the west. (See Chapter on Birth of the Bahá'í Revelation in "God Passes By").

The growth of the Cause was by diffusion, Machinery and will be suffusion. This, he said, must be taught in the Summer Schools. The Machinery will continue throughout the formative years after the 10-year crusade.

This began with Adam and ends with the Golden Age. There will be great reaction in favor of the Faith and great destruction but we are not concerned with the catastrophe but only with the 10-year crusade. He emphasized the necessity of teaching about the Birth and Growth of the Faith now and the understanding and significance of the year 9. He told us that when Rúḥíyyih Khánum read this at the Dedication of the Temple it would be the most solemn moment of the entire time. We are celebrating the birth of the light of God. We are not only to charm the Bahá'ís by speaking of this, but to convince the non-Bahá'ís with the explanation of the year 9.

The spirit of the Cause is not enough, we need the institutions. The institutions are the embodiments of the spirit of the Cause, the channel which the spirit of the Cause flows. Any idea, any work, of education, religion, social life, will never be effective in the world unless it is translated into an institution. For example, education; it will never have its influence felt on society unless the idea of education is incarnated in an institution or college. So with everything else. An ideal must be translated into an institution, and the Bahá'í Faith which is primarily a powerful spirit in the world must be embodied in an institution if it is to exert its power in the world. We must recognize the station of the Báḅ, Bahá'u'lláh and the Master and at the same time recognize the necessity of institutions through which the spirit of these three central figures is flowing — guiding, preserving, promoting.

These institutions have not been established by us, they have been established by the Founder of the Faith Himself. That is why they are essentially different from the Christian Church, because we have institutions and they have institutions — we call it "Spiritual Assembly", they call it "Church". If they say you are doing the same thing we are doing, you say, "Yours was man-made — ours was Divinely appointed". Not established, by the Master in the will nor appointed by the Báḅ, but provided for and established by Bahá'u'lláh in the Most Holy Book — the Book of Laws. This is the fundamental difference between our institutions and the institutions belonging to all other religions, not only Christians. They are essentially man made, ours are divinely appointed.

But, always remember, these institutions are a means to an end. We have to utilize these institutions for a purpose. Our purpose is to carry out the Divine Plan of the Master — we had to wait ever since the Master revealed these tablets, 1915, 16, 17, (20 years) until the administrative order was sufficiently established and beginning to function in order to utilize them for this purpose. The Master gave instructions to the American believers to establish the Cause throughout the World, the Divine Plan, a few years before He passed away. In those days we didn't have the means. A few individuals were working. Martha Root started her travels. Mr. And Mrs. Dunn went from California to Australia. Emogene went to Italy, but all on an individual basis, not organized, not systematic not continuous, more or less spasmodic. It was not directed toward a definite plan and target. In other words, they didn't formulate a plan. So unlike plans of each NSA now which are specific.

When the Master passed away, the first thing we did was establish the administration order according to the blueprint the Master gave us. He told us how to establish this Administrative Order, Nationally and Locally. He told us the House of Justice would be established eventually. Then we started the long laborious task of raising the structure of the Administrative Order. It took us two decades — 20 years — to do this. As the work progressed, some of the Bahá'ís began to wonder whether this was going to be the sole concern of the Bahá'ís, to establish these institutions. Some began to doubt, some to criticize. Ahmad entirely misunderstood our purpose for the simple reason that I asked the Bahá'ís to think of nothing else but building these institutions that were to be the means in our hands to achieve a purpose later on. It took us 20 years to establish two stages of this administrative order, local and national assemblies. When the local and National Assemblies were established and beginning to function, when I directed the attention of the Bahá'ís to the purpose for which these institutions had been created and were being perfected. The first part of the Plan America's, then Latin and South America, Canada. Then the 2nd stage in Europe — now we have started in Africa — that is why the Cause is progressing so rapidly.

In England it took 50 years to establish 2 Assemblies, in 6 years 19 Assemblies were established, not only in England but Scotland, Wales and Ireland.

Love of the Master is not enough. We must have a deep Faith. Three things we must remember, 1. Faith, 2. The Covenant, 3. The Administration. The Covenant is the child of the Faith. The Administrative Order is the child of the Covenant.

'Abdu'l-Bahá, the "Mystery of God" — we must never hope to unravel that mystery. He is not a Prophet — He is unique in spiritual history of mankind. He stands between the Prophet and the Guardians, but in addition we have something in Him which other religions do not possess, the institution of the Center of the Covenant. He is a mystery because He shares not in the nature of the Manifestation, but the quality of the Manifestation — perfect but not Divine, that is why He is a mystery. 'Abdu'l-Bahá, all knowing, but not a Prophet of God.

The Unity of Mankind is absolutely now, there is nothing like it in the teachings of previous religions.

First we must lay the foundation. Then we can start to build. The foundation must be strong — firm. Every community must do three things: 1. Promote teaching work in the community, increase the number of believers, multiply the groups and scatter. 2. Consolidate institutions already established. Consolidation and expansion at home. 3. Initiate activities outside of community and country. The teaching committees should be primarily concerned with increasing the number of believers, extending the range of the Faith. Consolidation of the community mainly concerned with institutions already established. To see that Local Assemblies are maintained, groups converted to Assembly status, etc.

Regarding America, the probability is that it will become directly involved in the coming conflict. Time bombs etc, will poison the earth.

The British NSA is watchful, careful and successful. I have a great admiration for it. The United States is chief custodian of the Divine Plan. All other countries are auxiliaries — they will assist the chief custodians who are the believers in the United States. The U.S. has an ally in the Canadian Believers because some of the Tablets of the Divine Plan were addressed to them both.

Dr. Esslemont was the 1st Hand appointed during the formative age.

America will probably suffer more than any other nation in this coming conflict. The U.S. is the home of Materialistic civilization. It will all come about in a gradual, mysterious and unexpected manner.

Question: If the House of Justice is under the guidance of God would it make a wrong decision? Answer: It is the Guardian's responsibility to tell them whether they should legislate on such a matter — whether it is within their province. They would not make wrong decisions, but there is this safeguard of the Guardian to ask them to reconsider the matter.

In regard to personal matters — Assemblies were established for two purposes. 1. To safeguard the interests of the Faith; 2. to help individuals when in crisis.

Question: what about floods, etc. in a country when Bahá'ís are asked to help in relief? Answer: Assemblies must, the Bahá'ís privately should associate themselves with whatever measures are being taken by the general public of Government in order to prove universality of the Faith — that it promotes the interests of the entire community. They must watch, wherever there is such an opportunity, they must help — even a token contribution, nationally, locally, and individually.

When the House of Justice makes a statement about a certain law which has not been clearly stated in the teaching they are guided. They are not only to be obeyed, they are infallible. The NSA's have to be obeyed but are not infallible.

The inter-continental conferences will be a prelude to a world conference — preferably at the World Center of the Faith.

In the plan for the next ten years there is a two-fold internal aspect: One relating to the institutions, the other relating to teaching. The Wilmette Conference will consider first and foremost the opening up of the remaining territories to the Faith in the Continent of America and the Islands, second, to consolidate the Cause in the territories already open to the Faith. That in itself will be institutional, and the other teaching. The internal aspect in the U.S. and particularly the Temple and Dependencies.

There are three aspects of the Faith, Devotional, Administrative and Teaching. We have great need for more teaching. We must pray, meditate and then act. Teach.

Financial contributions to the Faith must be systematic, continuous, methodical. In order to promote the interests of the world center of the Faith here, at Haifa, appropriations have to be made from each NSA. It is my duty to impress upon them the importance of this phase of the work. As to the sum I leave it to the discretion of the NSAs. I emphasize its importance and the needs and I leave it to their discretion to allocate the sum.

Individuals have three-fold obligation, to support local institutions, National and international. Resources will be acquired from three different sources. Stress is being made on the International development of the Faith. From the World Center of the Faith go contributions to all parts of the world. It is not only for the Báb's Shrine. In the last year some of the money has gone for the Ḥaḏíra in Africa, the land in Constantinople, the site of Bahá'u'lláh's house, to Germany and to England.

The International Interests of the Faith have precedence over National interest. The Ḥuqúq will come when the Hands of the Cause will begin to assume their primary function.

A great change will sweep over the world. A wave of the most great opposition which will prepare and lead the way for the Most Great Peace.

There will be oppression — justice — peace.

Persia ,the Holy Land and America are in the greatest danger because of materialism.

The character of the coming upheaval will be different from the World War. The atom bomb may exercise an influence on the whole world. There are two plans operating in the world. 1. The Major plan or God's plan. It is mysterious and we have nothing to do with it. 2. The Minor plan or the World Crusade of the next ten years, about which we have everything to do. God's plan involves disturbances. People must be shaken, aroused, their eyes opened in order to acquire the capacity to accept the Faith.

America was given the privilege of being the Chief executors of the Divine plan. America now stands 5th in rank in service to the Faith. The English are the best organizers in the Bahá'í world, the Americans, the best Administrators. The only value U.N. work is that we can add to our prestige to it. We must not think that the U.N. is going to form the world state of the future.

The Americans and the Persians are too emotional. They are both alike in this respect. They are not impersonal enough, not objective in their thinking. They think of themselves or people first and the Cause second or last. The Cause must come first, individuals later and no personality. Americans spend too much money on luxuries, the Persians spend too much money on hospitality.

Bahá'í should not spend all their time in doing these things that in themselves are good and not teach the Cause. We must 1st be Missionaries and then humanitarians.

Devotion to the Cause is different from being lovers of mankind. We must all be lovers of mankind. The Master said, the trouble is that we dissociate God from Man. We think of God in the abstract sense. If we love God, we must love His creatures. We must love God so much as to become the lovers of His Creation. We must love people because we love God. You can truly love everybody if you truly love God and connect these creatures with God, that is why the love of God is so essential. When you love a person you love the people connected with that person. Recognizing God is different from loving Him. Being awed by God is different from loving Him, and the degree to which you love God must sooner or later reflect itself in your love for mankind or the lack of it.

There will always be people who do not believe Bahá'u'lláh. It does not mean that everybody will become Bahá'í, or that evil will cease to exist even in the Golden Age. There will always be the element of perversity, but it will be negligible. (To Roy) In our dealings we must cultivate and communicate with Presidents and Prime Ministers and not 4th class officials. This is the way things should be done. We must first establish contact, attain a certain degree of acquaintance if not friendship and then bring issues to their attention.

The Shrine of Bahá'u'lláh is the Most Holy Shrine in the world.

The Íqán and the Kitáb-i-Aqdas are the two foremost books of all the religions of the world. The Aqdas was revealed in 1870.

It requires purity of heart and extreme concentration to communicate with the next world. The Bahá'í who turns to God — not only can he achieve miraculous things, but he can exercise a great influence on others.

There is no cessation of work at the International Center except on nine Holy Days.

The Master had great admiration for Mary Magdalene.

The early Bábís believed in reincarnation. Mullá Ḥusayn in Fort Ṭabarsí was longing to be martyred and then return.

One of the signs of maturity of the world will be when Kingship will remain with none willing to bear its weight. The few remaining thrones are trembling with repercussions of the fall of their fellows. Kingship will be restored.

Do you think if I had started to think about the condition of Europe seven years ago, when it was almost, prostrate, I would have had the courage to ask Bahá'ís of America to start opening the campaign and sending pioneers? God works in His own ways along the same lines but in a different manner.

The 54th Chapter of Isaiah refers to the Mother of 'Abdu'l-Bahá (Navváb).

Speaking of an elevator or escalator at the Temple. The Guardian seemed to prefer an elevator. He described it as efficient, quiet, dignified and quick. He said the friends should aim at these things in everything they do.

Vigilance and thoroughness are qualities that the Guardian admires in the British.

All the nations of the world have suffered, why not America: It is corrupt and it is flabby. Russia can do anything to America. America escaped before but this time it will not escape. The streets of New York will run with blood. Politics and individuals are corrupt. America is an atomic base target for Russia. England has become the aircraft carrier for atom bombs. The worst danger is that which faces New York. Skyscrapers will fall — there will be burning of the cities as prophesied in the bible.

The Guardian was asked the question: "In the writings it states that we can only affect another spiritually to the depth that we ourselves are affected spiritually, is that the reason for the lack of progress in America?" The Guardian spoke for almost two hours on this question.

The Guardian pointed out that in 1950 He had given the inestimable privilege to America alone of going to pioneer in Africa. This, He said, he did in a general letter. Not one American responded.

In 1951 He sent a cable giving the American negroes a special blessing and opportunity and only one soul responded out of the entire country. Bill Foster of Chicago.

At the Kampala Conference only Liberia was represented by the American pioneers. There should have been a far larger number of Bahá'ís from America at the Conference. America has failed in this respect. There were only nine Americans at the Conference Where there should have been at least 20 or 30.

Americans are too concerned with their homes, trivialities, business. These things keep them back like a dead weight, they put these things first and Africa and the Faith last. Africa should have been the first concern of every American believer. The distinguished American Bahá'ís should have immediately arisen — regardless of anything else — spontaneously. America didn't arise at all so God inspired the Persians and the British.

No sanction or appeal have any effect. It must be a whole hearted response and this cannot be created. The Cause has not spent itself in America, it is youthful and virile but it is unaroused in service. Americans are self-sacrificing financially, they raised the administrative order splendidly, by this can be done without spiritual development. The Americans have not gone to fortify other communities within their own country, how could they be expected to go to Africa. I would have given the Americans more territory in Africa, but it did nothing with what it had been given. Some had to be taken away and given to the British.

Marion Jack typifies the true spirit a pioneer should have. We must follow her example. Marion Jack went from Canada to Bulgaria, where she is yet. When the war broke out I wrote to her urging her to go to Switzerland or to come to Haifa. She begged to stay where she was. She stayed under the utmost difficulties. The Master appreciated her very much. Not her ability, her spirit and detachment. The Canadians must be very proud of her. Even the Oriental believers have not risen to this level of detachment. She stayed in Bulgaria during the war. The Americans took the first boat home. The Americans must become detached. Race prejudice and materialism are the greatest evils in America. Africa should be first in everyone's mind. Americans are too attached to material comforts — this is the tragedy of America.

The Administrators and the distinguished should have and should arise. The Administrators feel that if they leave everything will be lost. God will take care of the administration at home, all they have to do is arise.

We must become light as the spirit, as swift as the wind, as ablaze as fire, as resigned as the earth. (Bahá'u'lláh)

Americans must give up all their encumbrances — give up everything — they must demonstrate the spirit Bahá'u'lláh demands of the pioneer. When Bahá'ís demonstrate the true spirit of the Faith this alone will bring results.

Leaving ones home and settling as a pioneer is not enough. The spirit must be right. We must get close to the spirit Bahá'u'lláh wants the pioneer to attain. This is purely individual, a struggle with one's own nature.

The hosts of the Supreme Concourse are suspended between earth and heaven waiting to assist, but we must be like a magnet to attract this spirit. This spirit has accumulated because it has not been drawn upon. There have been no magnets to attract it. We must arise with spirit and spontaneity. This call should have appealed to the American negroes more than anyone else, but they didn't arise because they too are bogged down with the same materialism.

The tests today are the same as in the day of Muḥammad, He wrote in the Qur'án that the tests are: Death, children, wealth and hunger.

New York and Chicago are the most dangerous places in the world. The skyscrapers of which Americans are so proud will fall like houses of cards.

The American believers are mediocre. They are superior to non-Bahá'ís, but compared to Bahá'í standards they are very mediocre. We have a large number of mediocre Bahá'ís in the world. There are only a few distinguished ones. All Bahá'ís must measure themselves according to the standards of the teachings only.

It is easy to distinguish the administrative order but it is hard to make converts. 'Abdu'l-Bahá was very disappointed in America. He wrote and spoke there of the dangers of materialism and He went unheeded, and they are still unheeding.

Not until we approach the standard set down in the teachings will we have great victories. Americans can render great service in Administrative fields, but cannot teach without the right spirit, and will not attract and confirm new Believers.

We require another quality. Quantity is not enough, we require a high degree of quality. It is easy to administrate but difficult to make converts. In the administration field we can succeed with quantity and mediocrity. We are too organized — too material. The Cause requires much more than administration.

Consolidation is related to teaching. We are called upon to increase the numbers of Bahá'ís — we cannot do it without the spirit. The ten-year crusade has nothing to do with administration.

Persian believers have the right spirit.

It is easier to bring a Negro into the Faith in Africa than it is in America. In Africa they are pure in heart — in America they are too attached to their personal comforts. The American Negro talks about his love of Africa and the African's Cause, but they are not willing to leave the comforts of their own homes to do anything in Africa. This is a curse — a cancer eating into the vitals of America.

All civilization is sinking, sinking. No one knows this better than the Russians, they are very observant.

America's most vaunted civilization is falling — materialism is like a cancer eating into the body of the nation.

Africa is the safest place in the world today. God is very merciful to the Americans, giving them the opportunity to go to Africa.

We need the crusading spirit in America.

America had relative security and it was sweet, now they are beginning to taste the bitterness of it. The leaders realize this more than the masses. The American Skyscrapers are built on shifting sands — when the atom bomb drops they will see. Americans are tasting the bitter fruit; they are caught in a trap and it is God's trap.

The so called civilized people are living in the safest environments, while the most civilized are living in the dangerous.

Civilization is turning upon itself. Moderation is necessary even in this. This is not prophecy, ‘Abdu’l-Bahá told us all this. America is a young nation that is going astray. The leaders have this knowledge of what’s coming in their hearts, but they will not tell the people. Look at Korea, blood, blood, blood, when will it stop? ‘Abdu’l-Bahá denounced materialism in America in His speeches. He realized that Europe was a village, America a city. The skyscrapers built on shifting sands will collapse like a house of cards. The greatest point of danger is New York and then Chicago. If London hadn’t been destroyed by fire I wouldn’t have said these things. I am only calling attention to what has already begun. Compare Hamburg to New York and Stuttgart to Chicago. If London hadn’t been destroyed by fire I wouldn’t say this. Materialism and racialism are their greatest tragedy — their chance is gone. There is not getting out of it now. Now war will devastate the last remaining stronghold — America. America’s must suffer, be chastised, be purified, and then they will be victorious. Bahá’u’lláh proclaimed this, ‘Abdu’l-Bahá warned of this while in America but it was unheeded, I have tried and tried until it has become a waste of cables, there is no response. Americans could lead the world — if they had taken the load in Africa the victories would have been even greater than they are now.

Europe has spent its force, there is not much hope left there. America is young but it is going astray with tremendous rapidity. It has to be stopped. Americans are not generally nationalistic but fear makes them that way when they think they might lose their homes. America has to be chastened and purified to establish the Peace foretold. The immediate future is very dark but the distant future is very bright, but we are not concerned with the coming catastrophe, only with the development of the ten year Crusade.

The immediate future of the Cause is dark also because it is linked with the destinies of the people, but the distant future is very bright. There may be a cutting off from the World Center for a time such as occurred in Germany.

America will taste the sweetness of true and abiding civilization, not materialism, not European, not American but world civilization.

It is most essential that we use prayer and meditation. Life is a constant struggle with one’s own instincts. We must struggle, be active and persevere, then we will reap the fruit of victory.

After this the Guardian arose from the table and said, “Give my love to the friends wherever you go”. Then He left, but as He reached the doorway He turned, looked at me and said, “Don’t discourage them.”

After this Rúhíyyih Khánum said, “Are the Americans’ jelly spined? They have to face facts, they have to grow up. The Guardian is trying to talk to them as adults now, they can’t be coddled as children.”

“The Administrative {{p1}} Order will gradually evolve into the World Order.”

Leroy: The establishment of Universal Peace does not mark the World Order?

Guardian: “No, No! The Lesser Peace will in all probability be in the Formative Age of the Faith. The Golden Age will witness the Most Great Peace. The Lesser Peace is a non-Bahá’í World Superstate. The Most Great Peace is the Bahá’í Superstate; the proper term is Commonwealth.

World Civilization will be the result of the establishment of the Most Great Peace. The establishment of the Commonwealth will follow the Most Great Peace as a development of it and the World Civilization will follow that as an evolution. It is a very long process from germ to maturity. It started in the Heroic Age and will culminate in the Bahá’í Cycle, not in the Bahá’í dispensation. This is more than the fruit; it is the Fruition. (Note three steps).

The Superstate will go on perfecting itself. It will take some time before International problems are solved and the Superstate begins to function properly. Meantime the Bahá’í World Order will be developing and gradually it will absorb the non-Bahá’í Superstate. when the nations are united and functioning as part of one whole, the Bahá’í world Order will be progressing and will gradually absorb one nation, then another. We have to wait until the majority of nations are Bahá’í before we have the Bahá’í world Commonwealth.

When the majority in a state become Bahá’ís, it will cease to be democratic and will become theocratic, following the Laws of Bahá’u’lláh — essentially religious. Ours is neither democratic nor secular for the simple reason that Bahá’í representatives are not responsible to the people, but to the Universal House of Justice. The representatives are elected by the people, which is democratic, but are responsible to a higher body. the rule is of God, not the rule of the people. Democracy is the rule of, for, and by the people. The Bahá'í state is the rule of God for the people by the Representatives of the people; essentially Divine, true theocracy. The Catholics believe their's is a theocracy, but there is a difference: their theocracy is man made.

World Order develops through National Communities. As nations pass through these stages (stated in Advent) World Order will be evolving at the same time and when the majority of the nations are Bahá'í, the Bahá'í World Commonwealth will be reached.

Marion: What is the spiritual condition of humanity during most of the Dispensation? (I had reference to the WOB as the “sole refuge” and that the whole of humanity didn't reach it until near the close of the Dispensation.”

Guardian: While politically developing, the world is spiritually declining all the time. The world will feel more and more in need of a spiritual {{p2}} revival and the WOB which is developing all the time, will be its deliverance. The world has to be politically united, then spiritualized. Political unity and spiritual revival — these are two essential needs of the world at the present time: unified and spiritualized; politically united and spiritually vitalized.

The great disaster that befell the Roman Empire was confined to the Empire, whereas this is on a world scale. A world convulsion which prepares man for political unification and ultimately spiritual revival.

The World Crusade as two aspects: territorial, the propagation; the administrative, the establishment of institutions. When Pioneers arrive at their posts, they must not think they have accomplished territorial expansion, but they must start building the administration — local LSA's, and National in the future. The reason why Bahá'ís scatter is not only to scatter but to increase numbers. The movement from place to place must be supplemented by action:

Move, settle, teach Arise, Persevere, Establish, Respond to pioneer call, lay foundations By increasing number of believers.

TEMPLES

The Temple on Mount Carmel will be the Mother Temple of the Holy Land; that of London, the Mother Temple of the British Isles; Sydney, the Mother Temple of the Antipodes; Paris, the Mother Temple of France; Sydney will have the Mother Temple of the British Commonwealth unless Canada beats it. In this case the mother will have to let the child surpass it!

‘Ishqabád Temple was built with bricks on a plain; Wilmette Temple was built by a lake with concrete; Persia and Germany will be built of stone. Later they will be built of marble. Eventually rubies, precious stones will be used.

The Master named five doors of the Shrines after believers associated with the building of it. One person later became a Covenant-Breaker but his name will remain associated with his door.

Bahá’u’lláh is the founder of the Shrine, and much more, He is the Founder of the whole set of Institutions on Mount Carmel. He is the Founder of both the spiritual and the administrative centers. The Tablet of Carmel is the Charter of the World Order of the Faith just as the Will is the Charter of the Administrative Order. We build according to the direction of these Charters. The Divine plan constitutes the 3rd Charter for the propagation of the Faith. There are three distinct processes:

1. Building the administrative Order according to the Will.
2. Propagation of the Faith according to the Divine Plan.
3. Building up the World Center according to the Tablet of Carmel.

Note. The Guardian sat a long time in silence after this. {{p3}}

Guardian: Communism was never successful among the peasants, but only in industrial areas. Russia will make this experiment but in the end will see that it is not successful. Meanwhile the world and Russia will suffer.

- 1st epoch, the 25 years of the Formative Age distinguished by the rise of local and National Institutions;
- 2nd epoch (now) distinguished by the rise of world institutions — Shrine of the Báb, establishment of the International Council prelude to the U.H.J.;
- Purchase of land on Mt. Carmel (now about half million square metres);
- 120 acres of land on Mt. Carmel and in ‘Akká;
- Purchase on land for the Bahá’í Temple —; All this is evidence that the World Center of the Faith is being established in the Holy Land.;
- Appointment of the Hands

The final stages in the evolution of human society.

Adolescence — now — efflorescence of Tree of Divine Revelation.; Coming of Age World Unification.; Lesser Peace; Most Great Peace. Spiritualization of man.; Fruition of Tree of Divine Revelation.

When all the processes merge, it will mark the birth of World Civilization. This is the starting point of a succession of dispensations culminating in the maturity of the World Order of Bahá’u’lláh, the majority of the Fruit of the Tree of Progressive Revelation, and the maturity of human society (all this together).

The World Order of Bahá’u’lláh is progressing, but purely Bahá’í. At the same time the world is progressing. Divine Revelation is progressing. (Here the Guardian showed a chart which he did not wish to be copied, showing this process) It is interesting how the two will merge: World Order and human Society, because they have to; they cannot go on being separate processes. The Bahá'í World and the non-Bahá'í world will meet in the World Civilization. They culminate in the same thing. Both culminate in the Bahá'í World Commonwealth towards the end of the Bahá'í Dispensation (not Cycle) and this leads to the birth of the world Spiritual Civilization. This is the fruit of the Golden Age.

(Note) In speaking of the world process of Human Society and showing it on the Chart, he told us that this process ends when it merges with the Bahá'í process of World Order.)

The process of the Diffusion of the Light of Bahá'u'lláh throughout the Planet — starts with Adam. In a way it is the evolution of the Divine Revelation... From Adam to the Báb is represented by the branch, leaf, bud and flower. The Báb is the fruit if one compares Him to the olive tree. The olive tree is mentioned in the Qur'án, not without reason. It is a different simile altogether. (See Convention Message USA 1953, also July Br. Journal #81.)

This is the station of the Báb: I compare it to the fruit. The olive sacrifices itself for the oil. The oil is ignited — this is Bahá'u'lláh. {{p4}}

The Qur'án refers to the tree that belongs neither to the East nor the West, and the oil is so powerful that it lights by itself. This oil refers to the Báb; when it is ignited it becomes Bahá'u'lláh. This happened in the Síyáh-Chál.

(Shoghi Effendi then read from the Súrah of Light. Sales version, sec. 5 v. 35.)

“Alláh is the Light of the heavens and of the earth; a likeness of His light is as a pillar on which is a lamp, the lamp is in a glass, and the glass is as it were a brightly shining star, lit from a blessed olive tree, neither eastern nor western, the oil thereof gives light though fire touch it not — light upon light — Alláh guides to his light whom He pleases, and Alláh sets forth parables for men and Alláh is cognizant of all things.”

In the Síyáh-Chál the light is only a faint glimmer, a flicker; soon enveloped by clouds, for ten years obscured, eclipsed by calamities. Then Bahá'u'lláh revives the community; the flicker becomes a lamp lighted in Baghdád. When Bahá moved to Adrianople, the lamp was lighted in a crystal globe, meaning the stage of proclamation of the message in Adrianople: it shown more brightly. The light was confined to the East at this time. when Bahá passed on, through the Covenant the Light strikes the “fingers” of the Continents of America, Europe and Australia. After the Master, as a result of the birth of the Administrative Order, (its father, the Law of Bahá, its mother of the Covenant) the light spread over all continents. This is the stage we now witness. It is now “diffusing its light over all continents. Then it will “penetrate.” When the Administrative Order is firmly established in each country, this firm establishment will cause penetration of that Light that its first flicker in the “year Nine”. The olive tree and also the almond tree; these are very similar because the fruit of both give oil.

In the Qur'án the olive is symbolic of the Christian Dispensation and the fig is symbolic of the Mosaic. In the Tablet of Rá'ís (Prime Minister of Turkey) Bahá says that 'once We appeared as a olive (Mount of olives) or Zetah and once as a fig. In another passage in the Qur'án, Muḥammad swears by the fig and the olive (i.e. by the Christian and Mosaic Dispensations) and by 'this noble city, which means Mecca. The Muslim dispensation is not symbolized by the tree, but by Mt. Paran, near Sinai. Missionaries have derided Muḥammad for swearing by trees, whereas He meant Dispensations. All three mountains are mentioned in Deuteronomy: Sinai, Paran and Seir (Christian) and the "10,000 saints" referring to Bahá (33.2)

Marion asked: Will there be the same process each 500,000 years?

Shoghi Effendi: "Beyond 500,000 it is much too distant. There is nothing in the Teachings to reveal the station of the Manifestation after that.

L.I. "Will humanity start all over again in each universal cycle?"

Shoghi Effendi: "We do not know if humanity will start over again."

(Note) The Guardian showed us a chart. Rúḥíyyih Khánum told us that he had been working on it all day. He did not wish us to copy it. The following are the actual headings and sub-headings.) {{p5}}

STAGES IN THE EVOLUTION OF HUMAN SOCIETY

Circa 4156 B.C. — 501844 or Bahá'í Cycle.

- A. Adamic or Prophetic Cycle: circa 4156 BC-1844 A.D.
(list of 7 Religions below.)
- B. Cycle of fulfillment: circa 1844-501,844 Bahá'í Cycle.
  - 1. Bahá'í Dispensation at least 1000 years.
     Bábí Revelation
     Bahá'í Revelation.
  - 2. Succession of Dispensations.

(Note: 4156 BC comes from the statement that Adam appeared 6000 years ago; subtract 6000 from 1844 A.D. Also note that "Bahá'í Era and Bahá'í Dispensation are the same) Bahá'í Cycle is different.)

The Revelation of the Báb is the 8th Revelation. This is why the throne of God is carried by eight (Bible) and why there are 8 pillars, eight minerals, eight doors, in the Shrine of the Báb. It is one before nine.

The Seven Religions of the Adamic Cycle:

Hinduism - Aryan - India
 Sabeansim - Semetic - 'Iráq
 Judaism - Semetic - Palestine circa 1500.B.C.

Zoroastrianism - Aryan - Persia 1000 B.C.
Buddhism - Aryan - India 600 B.C.
Christianity - Semetic - Palestine
Islám - Semetic - Arabia 632 A.D.

The process of World Order starts only with the Bahá'í Revelation. The Administrative Order is in the embryo and has three stages: Local, National, and International Bahá'í Institutions. We are now starting the third stage. It will gradually lead to the birth of World Order — the offspring. This will pass through the phases of

1. Obscurity
2. Emancipation
3. Establishment
4. Repression
5. Recognition
6. Sovereignty.

The emergence of a Bahá'í World Commonwealth marks the coming of age of the World Order of Bahá'u'lláh, signaling the establishment of the Most Great Peace, This is the Golden Age.

This has never happened before nor could ever happen any other time. The planet was not yet discovered when Muḥammad appeared, neither America nor the Far East; so it was impossible for Muḥammad or the Prophets before Him to stress the unification of man. First the world had to be discovered; then science developed; then the world must contract — this marks the coming of age — the culmination of the 6000 year process. nothing more important happens in the life of man than reaching 21. Something happens inside him. (spiritually, psychologically,) Maturity reached at 40 is due to the change that came over him at 21. What happens at 21 is more important than what happens at 40, for the latter change is determined by what happens at 21. That is why the Revelation of Bahá'u'lláh is so important ... This is the answer Bahá'ís must give when people object to our saying that other major Prophets will be under Bahá'u'lláh's shadow. {{p6}}

This is the only answer we can give.

We do not claim finality. All other Religions do claim it, and the Bahá'í are fundamentally different. In fact no Revelation will be final after Bahá'u'lláh. It is unreasonable to assert that Divine Revelation is final, it is progressive, and indefinitely so. But, at the same time we must assert that future Revelations will be under His shadow. We are not contradicting ourselves when we disclaim finality, yet claim that Revelations after Him will be under His shadow. The Revelators following will give Laws better suited to the evolution of humanity as it progresses but His spiritual station will be less.

Bahá'ís claims are very challenging, tremendous, but essentially reasonable. We make the most tremendous claim, are are most reasonable. No one had made a greater claim than Bahá'u'lláh in history, and no one of the Prophets a lesser claim than Muḥammad because He, Muḥammad, stressed the least challenging aspect of God. In the Íqán Bahá'u'lláh gives all the stations of the Manifestations (the Guardian quoted them here) "If We say we are servants, we are right; and if we say we are God, We are also right." Muḥammad claimed only to be the Messenger of God, the least challenging. Bahá'u'lláh did the opposite. He claimed to be the reflection of God. When One claims a very high station, all lower ones are included.

Previous Prophets were all "preliminary" Manifestations, preparing the way for Him, under His shadow. Like John's relation to Christ the Báb to Bahá'u'lláh. There are two distinct Cycles — the Adamic or Prophetic; and the Bahá'í Cycle. The word, Prophet" means "announcer"; all those who appearing announced the coming of Bahá'u'lláh and paved the way. Their purpose was Bahá'u'lláh's Revelation, although They were major Prophets, independent, with Books and established new Dispensations. The "Seal of the Prophets" means the last of the Prophets" to announce" (Seal means last, prophet means "to announce".

Alaska is the connecting link between the Bahá'ís of the USA and the USSR through which the Americans will have to pass (to teach the Cause) They will enter Russia through Alaska. The Bahá'ís will converge on Russia from different directions and in all Soviet Republics the Cause will be established. 'Iráq, Persia, Germany, (into the Ukraine) the USA — all will converge on Russia. Eventually Siberia itself will be open to the Faith. Bahá'ís have been banished there. It is a huge concentration camp. I have promised their relatives that in Siberia there will be LSA's and a Mashirqu'l-Azkar.

Just as Fezan, the Central Province of Lybia, has been opened to the Faith, it is quite possible there will be an LSA this Riḍván. 'Abdu'l-Ḥamíd intended to banish the Master there... Cyprus too is historic. Şubḥ-i-Azal is buried not far from Famagusta where he lived. The Persians will send pioneers there. They should disburse all over Cyprus as soon as Necosia has an LSA. There will be an LSA in Famagusta.

Bahá'í invalids, especially in London, should disperse. It would be very good for the Cause and very good for their health. They should go to semi-tropical islands: Madeira, Canaries, Mediterranean islands. The British NSA reports are concise, precise, It is easy to read their reports. They always distinguish between the essential and non-essential, neither {{p7}} too detailed or too abridged. The USA still has too many details.

Commenting on 1000 Jewish visitors on day to the Shrine, S.E, said: The fundamental reason why the Jews, after 2000 years of dispersal returned to Palestine is to become supporters of the Faith at its World Center. This is their future destiny. Their immediate destiny is to build up their state which is very valuable to the Faith. The Arabs would never have done this.... the Jews are 'cousins of the British" in tenacity and courage. They fought very bravely when defending their State. They are great thinkers, a scientific mind. They are keen business men — also a British trait.

Shoghi Effendi: told us that John R his wife and daughter have settled in Bechuanaland, in Mafeking. His son is a university student in Johannesburg and another son is pioneering elsewhere in Africa.

The period of Bahá'u'lláh's service started with the Declaration of the Báb. In the 9 years of the Báb's ministry the Cause spread to 2 countries; in the 39 years of Bahá's ministry the Cause spread to 15 Oriental countries; in 29 years of 'Abdu'l-Bahá's ministry, 20 were added (9.39.29 strange coincidence) in that 3¼ of a century number of countries was 35. When the Cause was in the days of its infancy, its spread was necessarily slow. It spread more in the days of the Master, not because it was a superior time but because the Cause had more vitality.

The author's name did not appear on the original copy of these notes, but it should not be too difficult to find out as there are plenty of clues in the notes. Spelling errors are retained. This online edition provided by Robert Stauffer, 1997.

From the author:

"We must be careful in giving pilgrim notes as there may be errors. However, Jessie and Ethel Revell took the notes in short-hand."

"I did not write while sitting by the Guardian as one could not, but after dinner, I went upstairs, wrote the notes and compared them with the Revell sisters and therefore they should be as nearly perfect as a pilgrim could get them."

"There was one other pilgrim Louise Caswell from Honduras, Central America."

"I feel the same about the Shrines as I did in 1938."

Pilgrim's Notes

Author Unknown

January 1953

We have a {{p1}} living Faith.

Báb — Grandeur. — Shrine 'Abdu'l-Bahá — Simplicity. Bahá'u'lláh — Peace.

Shoghi Effendi placed me at the head of the table next to Him and it was my privilege to remain there during the pilgrimage. At times he served us.

He is the greatest man on earth to-day.

Description of the Guardian: — Grey hair — first thing that amazed me. Wife says from worry and strain. Short — no taller than I. Wears black fez. Hazel eyes. Dynamic. Teacher — takes books — reads, re-reads, explains. Quick in movement. Kind. Accomplish many things. Types all his work, Translate. Divine Plan, Administrative Orders, gardens — map 10 years — letters, cables, etc.

His first night of teaching was on Unification.

He said that American civilization began when we were became unified.

America, middle-East, Persia and India will suffer and brought to their knees as they are not spiritual.

I asked Him where cradle of civilization began and He answered 'Irâq. From there, people migrated to India and Africa.

Second eve with Him was thrilling one and He lifted everyone in the room.

I did not speak to Him about immortality but that I would never get over our son's death. He said, "Do not think about it but be assured that now he is released from all the fetters of this world and he is enjoying a much fuller life. I will pray for his soul and you will pray for him at the Shrine and I will join you in prayers."

Question about cancer: Why haven't the prophets given the scientists the cure for cancer, etc.? (I am blaming God)

Answer is "He has" but man has a will and fails to follow it and thus retards the cure. He said God is giving the cure gradually. If man does not work steadily, it will be delayed.

Question: What does the 144,000 in the Bible represent?

Answer: It is allegorical. It means by thousands the saints and holy ones will come into the faith. (Figure of speech.)

Question: What is the meaning of the first shall be last and the last shall be first?

Answer: A world revolution, {{p2}} e.g., Slave — President. King — Slave.

Question: When we have inter-stellar communications, will it be with one another from this earth or will it be other beings?

Answer: Other beings. (He said he did not go beyond that & laughed)

He told us that Paul distorted the teachings by bringing in his own philosophy into the teachings of Jesus; as Jesus did not leave in writing that Peter was the expounder. Peter being ignorant and Paul a lawyer and philosopher therefore injected his philosophy.

He told us that one of the brothers of Christ was the head of one of the first churches of Christ in Jerusalem. He was like the President of the church and a Covenant Breaker.

He says: of course you are familiar with the Tablet of Mt. Carmel, Holy Marina and Divine Plan. He explained that the Ark mentioned in the Tablet of Mt. Carmel in the Gleanings, means Administrative Order and the Ark mentioned in the Tablet of the Holy Marina is the Ark of His Faith and He is the Captain.

Then in Bahá'í News, a pilgrim got the notes mixed on the Formative Age and 'Abdu'l-Bahá's Divine Plan. And told Mr. Ioas to inform them in Chicago that no more pilgrim notes are to be printed, and then He told us the difference, they must not be confused.

We have had the first 25 years of the Formative Age which was the first epoch of the Formative Age. We are now in the second epoch of the formative Age and the third epoch of this age will be the Golden Age.

'Abdu'l-Bahá's Divine Plan is not the Formative Age.:

We have had the 1st. 7 year plan We have had the 2nd 7 year plan We are now entering the third 10 year plan and when completed will finish the first epoch of the Divine Plan in 1963.

He explained that each Dispensation has a spiritual and an Adm. Centre. Ours will always be in Haifa. In Christianity, the spiritual place is Jerusalem and the Adm. Order is in Rome.

We visited the Catholic Cave of Elijah again on Mt. Carmel and the Muslims have one too, each claims his to be the one. Shoghi Effendi said Elijah probably went in both of them. Then He said that the Báb is the return of Elijah and is interred near the cave and He does not believe the Jews will like this when they hear it.

On the 1/17/53 Shoghi Effendi spoke about the Ten year plan. We are to have a Religious World Crusade and not a political crusade.

The important Bahá'í cities in order are:

1. 'Akká: Bahá'u'lláh is buried.
2. Haifa: Báb is buried
3. Baghdád: Most Holy House.
4. Tíhrán: Bahá'u'lláh was born
5. Shíráz: Báb
6. Adrianople: City of Mystery.

He explained that Isaiah and Daniel are the most important of the minor prophets.

He referred to the Holy Leaf as being more exalted than Her mother because of Her status.

The Holy Spirit came in the following manner:

Zoroaster — fire — Mineral Kingdom Moses — Burning Bush — Vegetable Kingdom Christ — Dove Animal Kingdom Muḥammad — Angel Gabriel — human Kingdom Bahá'u'lláh — Maiden — which is the most perfect form of creation.

Grand Mufti said he would exterminate the Bahá'ís when he came into power in the Holy Land.

Muslim faith has declined in Turkey (we found that out) and we also visited the Holy Spot in Istanbul. {{p3}} The Jews in Haifa are not as strict about their Sabbath as they were in 1938. Christian Faith in Russia and Europe being wrapped up and a new one replaced. Shoghi Effendi told us that Russia has set up a new Catholic Church (true one) but they only doing it to undermine the people.

Truth is not absolute but relative — progressive. This should be stressed in the Temple by the guides, he said.

Sovereign States are increasing as old governments break down. This will bring about a U.S. of the World.

In the archives, there are 3 oil paintings of Bahá'u'lláh and one photograph. The photo was taken in Adrianople while He was under stress and strain of the conditions thrust upon Him.

The oil paintings portray Bahá'u'lláh in the Bath, one like the Báb and one as a Dervish. Shoghi Effendi's favourite and my favourite.

There are 4 monuments in the Eternal Gardens. The family:

The wife of Bahá'u'lláh — most Exalted Leaf The daughter of Bahá'u'lláh — the Greatest Holy Leaf The Son of Bahá'u'lláh — the Purest Branch The wife of 'Abdu'l-Bahá — Munírih Khánum

The Most Exalted Leaf has six pillars (Monument). Munírih Khánum and the Purest Branch have 7 pillars. The Greatest Holy Leaf has 9 pillars and represents the International House of Justice. (Dr. Ḥakím said.).

19/1/'53 another wonderful eve with Shoghi Effendi. He read from page 85 of the Gleanings about Christ. It raises Him higher than the Protestant Faiths do. It states the whole creation wept when He was crucified. Not only Jerusalem but all creation.

Shoghi Effendi said we believe in Virgin Birth, Primacy of Peter, in Trinity as explained in our Teachings.

I asked him if the Holy Spirit is the Prophet and He said “No” do not confuse it, that is the thing the Catholics do.

He told us how Christ revealed His station to His disciples in Tiberius, taught in Nazareth, born in Bethlehem, crucified in Jerusalem. The ministry of Christ is most important thing not birth or crucifixion.

Peacock is Bird of Paradise and stands for Immortality and also the Cedar Trees. The Eagle stands for Victory, Aggressiveness, Immortality and the Ascendancy of the Faith. The Eagle also stands for Imperialism, and this of course we have nothing to do with.

There are nine terraces now, there will be nine more to the top of the Mt. Carmel making 18 and the Shrine of the Báb will make the 19th, and each one will be given one of the names of the Letters of the Living. {{p4}} A street runs under one of them. It is called ‘Abbás Street.

There will be a Temple in Rome.

The correct pronunciation of the Temple is: Mash-rek-ul-az-kar. Haz-e-rattle-Kuds. Q. is K Rúhíyyih Khánum said. Sub-E-Azal.

He put out the ten year map and gave it to us in detail. 10,000 will be distributed in color and with explanations.

Issaiah 54 tells about the Most Exalted Leaf Issaiah 54 verses 3 thru 7 tells of a New Birth of Bahá’í Faith.

Too much is said about the place where Peter is buried. More glory should be stressed on the Sepulcher of Christ.

Gleanings tells of our teachings Íqán tells of our comparative religions S.A.Q. is the philosophy of our teachings Dawn-Breakers gives us the History Page 113 “Promised Day is Come” read about Peter and the Immaculate Conception.

He said, “To-day I remembered your son at Bahjí.”

The Dawning place of praise is the Mashriqu’l-Adhkár.

Tibet is the roof of the world.

God’s plan is operating and may interfere with our own plan, but we go right on. We have nothing to do with God’s plan, only our own.

Jessie Revell said “read the Dawn-Breakers about becoming a Bahá’í.” Tablet of Wisdom tells about philosophy of which Shoghi Effendi spoke. Page 586.

When we visited the Most Great Prison I could feel a great power. In time we shall own the whole Barracks. ‘Abdu’l-Bahá in room downstairs and Purest Branch died there. The house of [space] is the place Bahá’u’lláh revealed the Aqdas. He was held prisoner here for seven years.

Zoroaster visited the Holy Land.

Question: about Hidden Words: “O Son of Spirit! And O Son of Man”.. Answer: He does not mean anyone. The term is allegorical.

Each Dispensation has a great women:

Muḥammad — Fāṭimih — His daughter Christ — Virgin Bahá’u’lláh — Greatest Holy Leaf Báb — Ṭáhirih.

The Shrine of the Báb has 3 crowns. Arcade, Parapet, Octagon of the Dome.

A Dispensation is the length of time the laws evolve.

Bahá’u’lláh suffered more in ‘Akká than any other place.

Oil and minerals may be found in the Holy Land as they are drilling now. {{p5}} Israel will expand. May be from Euphrates to the Nile and take in the River Jordan.

The social aspect is good. But it depends upon the character of the person. (In teaching.)

Question: Is the Holy Sepulcher the place where Helena, mother of Constantine, discovered when she came to the Holy Land?

Answer: Do not know?

We must have diversity in non-essential matters. In essential matters we keep to the Constitution. We keep to uniformity. He has no more time to write to the N.S.A.’s. He has to cable.

People can call us a cult, etc. (Dispensation) But the worst he says is a Persian Garden as it is neither Persian not a garden. It is a World Faith and a Shrine.

As soon as one repents (he uses the word frequently Jessie Revell says) he must be reinstated, if his voting rights have been removed.

Haifa is the Heart of the World and the Heart of the Bahá’í World Faith. This (The Holy Land) is the most temperate spot in the temperate zone.

21/1/’53 — We went to Tiberius and Nazareth. These cities are the important places because Christ revealed Himself there.

It is the Feast of the Martyrdom of the Báb and Birthday of ‘Abdu’l-Bahá, (Lunar Time) The Friends came from all around, sang songs, poetry of Ṭáhirih set to music about Bahá’u’lláh and songs about ‘Abdu’l-Bahá. Then we went to the Shrines and our Blessed Guardian chanted the prayers.

Message to Indians.

He said we started to teach the white race during the Báb, the black during Bahá'u'lláh, yellow during 'Abdu'l-Bahá, the red since 'Abdu'l-Bahá's time and now we must teach the brown race in the Islands of the Pacific. When we teach the Brown we will complete the circle. Not only races but also religions. We have taught the Christians, Jews, Zoroastrians, Muḥammadans and now we have the Hindus of India and the Buddhists of China and Ceylon, and Tibet. This is the message to the Indians.

He does not want us to be a minority group but we must be the majority in a place.

We must associate with the people of the country, eat in their homes, sleep there, even to the point of inter-marriage. This is the test. The Indians have a great spiritual capacity and when they embrace the Faith they will render a great service. When you go to India you will tell them this.

He returned from Bahjí to bade us good-bye. He said "I shall pray for your son." He gave Homer the Oriental embrace. He said, "This is your home!"

There is a great pressure while you are at the table with the Guardian. During 1938 I was blessed by being able to visit the Shrines every day for 2 weeks and go to Jerusalem. {{p6}} This time I went but 3 times because of my cracked ribs, knee, cold and weather.

This time I was blessed by seeing the paintings of Bahá'u'lláh and being in the protective shadow of our Beloved Guardian and whose shadow is for all mankind.

The message to the Egyptians was as follows:

Go to Kampala Go to Stockholm Take care of local affairs; join in 10 year World Crusade. He will pray for their success and protection as they are surrounded by enemies.

HIGHLIGHTS FROM A REPORT OF ALLEN McCORMICK'S PILGRIMAGE.

These are the things that Shoghi Effendi and Allen discussed, which Allen believes the Guardian wants us all to hear. (When the Guardian mentions Chicago he also means the surrounding communities.

[Allen found that his pilgrimage was not an easy one.]

The Guardian was at the table as we entered. He arose to greet us. He greets you with a kiss on each cheek. He is a tiny person, but you do not notice this. You notice only his tremendous vitality and strength beyond description. It seemed to exude from every pore. He pointed to the seats at the table: Rúhíyyih Khánúm was on his right and Millie Collins across the table from her. He first asks you about your trip, but he really isn't interested. I realize that as I began to tell him. He gets everything across. You are never uncertain about anything he wants to stress.

Leslie Boles was spending his last night at Haifa and Milly Collins told me that the Guardian would probably talk mostly to him. However, after asking me about my trip and not permitting me to say anything, he said, "I understand that you are from Chicago" (Allen said that he was glad he did not have to say that he was on the L.S.A. there.)

What the Guardian had to say was extremely unpleasant as far as I was concerned. He is extremely frank and vivid. I was not prepared for this. I was prepared to have the Supreme Concourse itself, floating around the dining table, I guess.

The Guardian is a very hardworking person, a driving person. I felt that if the Supreme Concourse were there, they had been sent out on a specific task and that was why I had not seen them.

I was unable to take down any notes because all I was doing was sinking down deeper and deeper into the chair. Fortunately, the Guardian, was very busy and could only spend an hour and 15 min. If he had been there another 15 min. I am sure I would not have been on the chair at all."

[Allen's notes actually begin on the second night he was at Haifa. The Guardian said that when Allen brought his messages back to the friends, he shouldn't frighten them. It is important that they should know these things, however. And they should act upon them.]

He spoke of 3 great cities of the U.S.A. N.Y.C., San Fransisco, and Chicago, saying that these are our greatest centers of materialism and that it would be wise if the Bahá'ís leave them. They would have the greatest suffering in the days to come.

Chicago and NYC are the modern Babylons. This materialistic civilization we have today is the curse of our age. The Guardian said that the friends ought to leave Chicago and NYC before they are trapped. He also added as an afterthought that London and Paris were equally materialistic. Then he ended this evening by saying that these people who would arise and go out and teach, would not find it easy. They should not feel that the mere fact that they were going out to teach was an "open sesame", but rather a very difficult task, and that we MUST NOT COMPROMISE.

The following evening the Guardian said that the Bahá'ís are going to discover that they are in great need of the Bahá'í Faith and that the Faith is in no need of them. Then he spoke to Ethel Daur about the temple site to be selected for Australia. It is most important that they realize that they spend what they have, and that they must not take out a mortgage. Then he spoke a bit about marriage. He said it is most important that the Bahá'ís do not conceal their faith. It is possible to be married by other faiths, but you cannot conceal that you are a Bahá'í.

Then he went on to say that now is the time for action and the application of our laws and principles. Many of us, living in our very complex societies, felt that now is not the time for practicing our laws — that there are certain compromises to be made. Allen said that he realized now that this is not so. NOW is the time, as the Guardian said. The Bahá'ís must begin to lead that exemplary life which will make them recognizable on the street as being a different kind of person. When you compromise with truth you no longer have it. You no longer have anything.

It is possible for every one of the Bahá'ís to be one of the new creation if they only desire to be. But you have to desire it awfully hard. For everything that it asks us to do it gives us a magnificent reward. It provides for us the greatest means for the greatest happiness, if we only ACT.

The Guardian spoke a little about prayer. Allen asked about Mrs. Moffet's book, "Do'a: Call to Prayer." The Guardian told him that the steps outlined there were correct. Those 5 steps are very important. Prayer must always be directed towards something. He spoke about the temple in Wilmette. This is a wonderful place to pray. The Bahá'ís in that area have a wonderful opportunity to pray there. He said that we should pray in the middle of the building and then meditate in the alcoves. There the Supreme hovers. There, if you will follow the technique of prayer, you will have the greatest assistance.

It is important that Bahá'ís all over the world pray at dawn. At this time there is little conflict, and that it is very wonderful to pray at dawn. It is better to make a little effort. When you pray you should then go out and serve the Faith of mankind.

This evening the Guardian spoke about the first dependency in Wilmette. The first we will erect is a home for the aged, and it will be open to all.

The Bahá'í World Center at Haifa is very exposed, and so is the cradle of the Faith in Persia. And so is America. The Guardian has no idea what will happen to the Holy places. It is the spirit in the building that is important. And speaking of the Center of the Faith, this Major plan of God — is not subject to complete control. It might upset the plan of Bahá'u'lláh. This is our salvation.

One of the questions Allen wanted to ask was about money. So Rúhíyyih Khánúm was persuaded to ask the Guardian about money. Where is all the money to come from for this great Task?" The Guardian laughed and said most of the jobs that take money are already done. Many of the Pioneers are already there. The land has been purchased. The Bahá'ís worry about money so much they forget that his is God's plan, and that money will be forthcoming.

He then spoke about the spiritual contact between this and the next world. This is a very real thing, and the conditions for it were set up by thy Master and that they are extremely difficult — centered about struggle and effort. In contrast between this world and the next, the matter of concentration is extremely important.

It is very important for every Bahá'í to develop the ability to concentrate and get a job done. He is an example for every one of us to hold before us. He, more than anyone else in the world, must struggle and put forth more effort. And knows more heartbreaks.

It is very important that Bahá'ís learn to work together!

We have had more and greater crises than any other faith. The recognized leaders of other faiths have been loyal — but in this faith they have not. In the time of Bahá'u'lláh there were members of the family who were loyal. In 'Abdu'l-Bahá's time some of the family were loyal — but in the present Guardian's time none of the family are loyal. It makes us realize that WE are the family of the Guardian. (end of handwritten notes) He (the Guardian) spoke of the 3 great cities of the U.S. — New York, Chicago, and San Francisco. He said these cities are our greatest centers of materialism. He said that it would be wise for the Bahá'ís of these 3 cities to leave them. They would have the greatest suffering in the days to come (perhaps, in a descriptive way, the suffering which these will undergo will be much like that of London in the last war). It will be' sudden, swift and terrible. They will be trapped, and the Cause would lose a great deal. Then he repeated that he was very disappointed in both Chicago & New York. He felt they were losing their great opportunities. They have done such magnificent service in the past — he felt they are not performing the service of which they are capable.

He went on to talk of the materialism of the day in which we live. It is the greatest evil which we have to com bat. He hopes that the Bahá'ís of these cities could be kept free of materialism which is all around them.

He turned to Mrs. Daw (spelling of name not sure) from Australia. He had as many compliments to express about Australia as he had not had for Chicago. There are just 400 Bahá'ís in Australia. The Bahá'ís there and in Japan will have the big job of spreading the Faith in the Pacific. He was very proud that they had gone ahead with the plan before he had even set it out for them.

He spoke also of the only thing that was at all uncomplimentary to the Australians — their racial problem. This is their great opposition to the Japanese. But he said it is the Australians and the Japanese who must set the example. These communities are going to have the leadership of the Bahá'í Faith in the Pacific.

Then he spoke of the opposition that we are going to have. Allen said he felt that he looks forward to it. He said in the U.S. the organized church would oppose the Bahá'ís first and then after that the politicians would be against us. This opposition must be. But a great deal of it would be due to our own unwisdom. But of course, we must defend ourselves when it comes.

He spoke about communism. Many Bahá'ís are prone to attack communist and this is not good. We should not attack any government. While it is evil, we must not attack it. The Guardian said, “you are in America are prone to do this. You in America have a great evil in common with them. This is materialism.” Capitalism and communism have many evils, but they both have materialism. He spoke of the Major plan of God and the Minor plan. The Major plan is the evolution of man. The over-all plan which is carried out by man. The Major plan calls for great suffering, and that is going to be this great suffering which will open the eyes of the world to the Faith. So far it hasn't, and this time it will. This suffering will be very important in changing the heart of men, making them fit to live in this world.

The Minor plan is Bahá'u'lláh's plan. Eventually this Minor plan will become the Major plan (in other words, they will sort of blend). The Bahá'ís must know of the Major plan of God. They must know what is going to happen and must not dwell on it. They must work for the Minor plan. We Bahá'ís are prone to dwell too much on the negative. These things should serve as a stimulus for taking a part.

One of the people at the table said, “What part are we going to have in the achieving of this peace that is to come.” The Guardian said, “Very little.” The lesser peace will be brought about by politicians.

Bahá'ís must always keep in mind the development of God's major plan, but our efforts and striving must be for Bahá'u'lláh's plan, for therein is our safety and sanity in these days to come.

The Guardian said that Australia would have the lion's share of teaching in the Pacific. Then he turned to Allen and said, “Of course, the U.S. will have the lion's share all over the world.”

The Guardian spoke of the pioneers who had gone out in the Pacific. He said that Chicago had been the Mother Assembly of the West, and it should take that station. He paid tremendous compliments to our N.S.A. Chicago must really begin to move.

When the Guardian is in a humorous mood, he has a wonderful light sense. His eyes really light up and shine. He said Chicago should pick the difficult places to go to. In addition to concentrating on South Africa, Chicago should go to Spitzbergen and to the Falkland Islands. In addition, there are places like Tibet. These are the places that the friends from Chicago should go.

After talking about these places, the Guardian said that in the sight of God there is no excuse for inaction. From the point of view of our own eternal life, it is very important. Allen said, “Friends, he wasn't talking about the Community as a whole. He spoke on the love of the individuals. This is a movement of individuals. This is something which each and everyone must answer for ourselves. I think it was a great shock to me.”

The Guardian gave Stanley Bolton a message for the N.S.A. of Egypt. The Guardian said, “I want you to impress upon them that they are to select a site for the Temple and I will not select it — and they must do it right away. They must select a section high off the ground and overlooking a body of water.” Allen said, “This Guardian must be unique because of the things he must do because the Bahá’ís will not do them. Any person who works as He does, — it is fabulous, this job he does.

Chicago & New York are the modern-day Babylons. This materialistic civilization which we have today is the curse of our age. The Guardian said that the Friends ought to leave Chicago & New York before they are trapped. He also added as an after-thought that London & Paris are equally materialistic. And then he ended this evening by saying that these people who would arise to go out and teach would not find it easy. They should not feel that the mere fact that they are going out to teach would be the “open Sesame”, but rather, it would be very difficult to teach, and we must not compromise!

The following evening the Guardian said that the Bahá’ís are going to discover that they are in great need of the Faith, and that the Faith is no need of them. Then he spoke to Ethel Daw (spelling ?) about the Temple site to be selected for Australia. It is most important for them to realize that they must spend only what they have and not take out a mortgage.

The G. spoke a bit about marriage. He said it is important for Bahá’ís everywhere not to conceal their Faith. It is possible to be married by other Faiths, but you cannot conceal that you are a Bahá’í.

He went on to say that now is the time for action and the application of our laws and principles. Many of us living in our very complex societies felt that now is not the time for practicing our laws, that there are certain compromises to be made. Allen said he realized now that this is not so.

Now is the time when, as the Guardian said, the Bahá’ís must begin to lead that exemplary life which will make them recognizable on the street as being a different kind of person. When you compromise with truth, you no longer have it. You no longer have anything.

It is possible for every one of the Bahá’ís to be one of the new creation if they only desire to be — but you have to desire it very hard. For everything that it asks us to do, it gives a magnificent reward. It provides us the greatest means for the greatest happiness, if we will only ACT.

The Guardian spoke a little about prayer. Allen asked about Mrs. Koffat’s book: “Do’a: Call to Prayer”. The Guardian told him that the steps for prayer outlined there are correct. Those 5 steps are very important. (Florence’s note: We have this, a little yellow book). Prayer must always be directed towards something, and must always result in action. He spoke about the Temple in Wilmette.

This is a wonderful place to pray. The Bahá'ís in that area have a wonderful opportunity to pray there. He said we should pray in the middle of the building, and then meditate in the alcoves. There the Supreme Concourse hovers. There, if you will follow the technique of prayer, you will have the greatest assistance.

It is important that the Bahá'ís all over the world pray at dawn. At this time there is little conflict, and it is very wonderful to pray at dawn. It is better to make a little effort. When you pray, you should then go out and serve the Faith and mankind.

It might upset the plan of Bahá'u'lláh. It is important that Bahá'ís do not worry about what will happen. This will do no good. But rather to work for Bahá'u'lláh's plan. This is our salvation.

One of the questions Allen wanted to ask was about money. So Rúhíyyih Khánum was persuaded to ask the Guardian about money — “Where is all the money going to come from for this great task.” Then the Guardian laughed and said, “Most of the jobs that will take money are already done. This is a very real thing and the conditions for it were set up by the Master and that they were extremely difficult, centered about struggle and effort. In the contact between this world and the next, the matter of concentration is extremely important.

It is very important for every Bahá'í to develop the ability to concentrate and get a job done. When the Guardian gets on a job he never seems to let it go until it is done. He is an example for everyone of us to hold before us. He, more than anyone else in the world, must struggle & put forth more effort, and knows more about heartbreak.

It is important that Bahá'ís learn to work together. We must associate together.

We have had more and greater crises than any other Faith. The recognized leaders of other Faiths had been loyal, but in this Faith they have not. In the time of Bahá'u'lláh, there were members of the family who were loyal. In 'Abdu'l-Bahá's time, some of the family were loyal. But in the present the Guardian's time none of the family are loyal. It makes us realize that we are the family of the Guardian. He reacts to the news he receives, both good & bad. You have no idea of the joy he experiences with good news.

The Guardian said that Americans must learn to concentrate, meditate, and pray; and then act.

This plan is one which is going to be accomplished by the young people. It is the young people who are going to accomplish these great things. We in Chicago who are young must scatter all over the world. It would be wonderful if there were American Bahá'ís in every one of these goal countries. The young people in Chicago really have a great opportunity. They should set the example for the young people all over the world. This is a very terrible responsibility. The Guardian said once again that we must set the example in Chicago. It was the first center of the West.

The Guardian spoke once again about some of the people who had performed great services. That is a very wonderful thing to see — the justice of the Guardian. Those who have done great service receive great rewards and recognition from the Guardian. He spoke of the Dunns of Australia. As he talks about them, you cannot help but feel that their station will be a magnificent one.

What we do and what the Faith does demands upon the individual action of the Bahá'ís. Once more, there is that within the Faith which can give to everyone the ability to be like one of the lesser prophets of old. There is a reward for you which is greater than anyone of us deserves, but which anyone of us can have??

Notes On Report Of Visit To Haifa

Clara Edge

May 16-25, 1954

It was Sunday evening shortly after 6:00 p.m. when I arrived at the goal of my heart's desire — Haifa, magic word with all its great significance for the believer in the Bahá'í World Faith. The day had been spent sitting out the hours at Lydda awaiting my baggage; just imagine, waiting from 8:00 a.m. till 3:30 p.m. that near the Shrine of the Báb unable to go on without all my belongings. Well one can get close to exhaustion, but that first glimpse of the golden dome paid for all fatigue.

That precious little package of humanity — Jessie Revelle, came to the door of the American pilgrim house at the ringing of the bell. The latest pilgrim was ushered into her room, advised to rest. However, rest is difficult, particularly when one hears the voices of the dear residents of this charmed place. After about half an hour, am sure it was no more, tea having been served in the sitting room outside the rooms of Mason Remey, this pilgrim found herself with the others comparing notes for the day and awaiting the coming of the beloved Guardian, the 'Sign of God'. How does one ever even think of the possibility of going into that presence, unable to cast off the many, many frailties to which we all seem too prone to fall heir, or take on. But one as to forget if they can bolster up their lagging spirits till the wonderful moment finally comes when the announcement is made that the Guardian awaits us at the table.

The latest arriving pilgrims, Lillian Richards (daughter of Solon Fieldman), and I — being given first place in the procession, walked down the winding stairs, across the large hallway into his presence. With such a gracious smile, he welcomes us so that all fears leave and we are seated across from him eagerly awaiting the much anticipated message we feel sure he is going to give us — specially suited to our particular needs.

Since there were two non-believers at the table, the conversation was general. However, whatever was said by the visitors was quickly brought back to the Bahá'í view point. At first one feels disappointed to have the beloved Guardian cramped in his message to all present; but the gracious kindness shown to the visitors makes one feel ashamed of impatience, and ready to enjoy the conversation and the handling of the situation by a past master at meeting difficulties.

The notes are few, but in response to conversational leads by one of the non-believers, the following came out:

In America, the power is now in the hands of the masses. This is not good for they can be and are swayed by the press. It is far better to elect, as the Bahá'ís do, in a three way election, Local Spiritual Assembly, State Convention, National Convention. The masses voting for a majority do not pick for the best qualities for office, but from the influence as above. The Bahá'ís is a three-way election. They pick the best for their spiritual and practical qualities (see God Passes By — page 218). National civilization will improve as soon as more emphasis is placed on spiritual qualities, rather than on the material. There is too much emphasis on material civilization in the West, and we must balance it by spiritual civilization through, first, periods of suffering and cleansing; second, through unification (could mean purging and welding through fire); third, establishment of a Bahá'í World State. There will be great destruction, the friends should move out of the big cities to villages. The Guardian was most gracious in expressing his gratitude to Lillian and her husband for the service to the cause in Ankara, Turkey.

May 19 — The Guardian in referring to the enthusiasm of the friends at convention said, “This enthusiasm is fine at the Convention, but after it is over, the friends forget. The American friends are very enthusiastic and industrious, but they do not carry through consistently.

Mary Elston — “What nation do you think is the most stable on the planet?”

The Guardian: The British are the most stable and carry through their undertakings. The Latin and Oriental are unstable and so are the Turkish, immature and like children. They get very enthusiastic and then it fades away. Do you have any success with the Jews? When the Jews turn to Bahá'u'lláh, they have a deeper sense of reality than do others. When the Catholics come into the Faith, they are devoted.

He asked Lillian Richards if there any Jewish people in Turkey. "Yes, there are and also a large American community, but I cultivate mostly the Turkish people as they live there permanently." The Guardian answered that it is more important to reach the native people in every country. (There were three Persians who had left Istanbul and gone to Ankara. The Guardian said they should return to Istanbul and reestablish the Local Spiritual assembly because that would be the city where the Ḥaẓíratu'l-Quds would be built (partly because of the fact it was the place where Bahá'u'lláh suffered so greatly and also since it was the key to the Black Sea area.) The friends move where business is more convenient and where their lives (at the time) are safer. They must GO WHERE THE CAUSE NEEDS THEM. They must forget material comforts and think of the spiritual. Material civilization is DOOMED and WILL BE DESTROYED. It must be so. Mankind cannot be purified and cleansed except through suffering. The Lesser Peace will be in this century. (see insert — p.6)*

Question: "Do you mean by that, the 20th century?" Ques, "Will it be established by the youth of today?"

Answer: "It is very essential that the youth study deeply to the help usher in the MOST GREAT PEACE. The time of the Most Great Peace is a Mystery."

Question: "Will the global crusade have an influence in establishing world civilization?"

Answer: No, it will establish the Bahá'í World Faith about the world and will not have a direct influence in establishing the united states of the world.

Question: Will the pioneers be expected to return to America, to help in the reconstruction after cataclysm?

Answer: RECONSTRUCT WHAT!!!

May 20 — The beloved Guardian was feeling better, more rested when he arrived for dinner at almost 9:00 p.m. and was radiant. He reminded us of certain pertinent statistics regarding membership of committees in several countries as he had referred to them in his cables to the national conventions, making comparisons between a year ago and when the world crusade was first instituted and the present. He spoke of Africa, Germany, England, but his happiness was so great in speaking of Uganda where the numbers are phenomenal by comparison to American and other countries. He said that France has only 3 or 4 communities after over 50 years. (See April News Letter, we were told.)

Question: Should bodies be embalmed before burial, in order to complete the cycle back to the mineral, etc?

Answer: They should not be embalmed. If death comes in a state where the law demands embalming and cement vault, the body could be taken to an adjoining State where there might be no such law — since we must be obedient to the law. Further, the time could come when a body could be taken the width of a continent in an hour's time, and thus the Bahá'í law could be kept.

The authentic cave of Elijah is the higher one where Bahá'u'lláh revealed in a loud voice so that the priests could hear him — “The Tablet of Carmel” — not the lower one where the Moslem tradition places it. See Gleanings 14-21.

Asked about Bahá'u'lláh referring to Himself as This Youth, and its meaning, the Guardian said Bahá'u'lláh was only 27 years old when he espoused the Bábí Cause, and 35 years of age at the time of His first declaration (of being “HIIM WHOM GOD WOULD MAKE MANIFEST.”) Afterward there was a difference of opinion as to whether he said it expressed youth and vitality or eternal youth.

He spoke of the many changes in Palestine under different influences. One time it was the Land of Kings. The Jews have suffered much persecution. Once it was part of the Roman Empire, then under the Moslems (arabs and Turks), later mandated to the english. The Arabs have had the greatest influence on Palestine.

At one time less than 1,000,000 Jews were surrounded by 40,000,000 Arabs, yet they kept their freedom in a bloodless revolution. 1,000,000 arabs fled and 1,000,000 Jews moved in. The Jews suffered almost 2,000 years punishment for three years' persecution of the Christ, who was the Son of God. Therefore the Moslem people will suffer much more than the Jews did. Bahá'u'lláh was the Father, Christ the Son. The persecution of Bahá'u'lláh lasted for over 50 years, therefore that will cause the Moslems to suffer far greater punishment than the Jews and in a very short period of time. The Moslems will be scattered with great suffering.

When the Beloved Guardian rose to leave, with the sweetest and most expressive smile, he spoke directly to allen and Mary Elston (from Kampala, Uganda, “I have extended your stay for another day, and you will have one day in Jerusalem and one in Tel aviv. I have a treasure for you to take back to the people of Uganda.”

The next evening after his message, the treasure given to them was a coat of Bahá'u'lláh. Needless to say, they were not only excited but astonished and very, very happy to have something so wonderful to take back to the friends of Uganda.

May 21 — The Guardian though tired, spoke with great emphasis — his voice rang out. He was discouraged, all to apparently with the American believers, lashed out at them for their apathy, corruption, decadence and heedlessness of his many warnings, for the corruption and decadence of the American people influence the Bahá'ís — too, too, much.

In referring to the American Bahá'ís he said, "I can urge them, but I can't create the spirit." It is unhappiness for me and danger for them (the believers) — that is what really counts. They SHOULD PACK AND GO. No one has the right to prevent them WHEN THEY ARE INDEPENDENT. They should take their passports, pack and go. The cause triumphs in spite of the inactivity or inaction of a large number of its supporters.

There are 700 negro Bahá'ís in one year in Africa. If America does not respond, they will suffer, they will suffer materially and spiritually. The cause will not suffer, but the believers will suffer. In fifty (50) years there are now only 500 negro believers in the united States, but 700 in Africa. This is a true eye-opener.

Those who do not respond will lose everything. Those who do respond will gain everything. The large cities are centers of materialism and the believers there will be caught in a trap. Cities like LONDON, PARIS, CHICAGO, NEW YORK, SAN FRANCISCO, will suffer. 'Abdu'l-Bahá warned the people about the danger of the racial problem in America, but they did nothing and had two wars. The situation is very grave and I wish the friends to realize it. They calculate too much, there is not enough self-sacrifice, not enough trust in God. While they are calculating, the BLOW WILL BE STRUCK. They, themselves, WILL EVAPORATE (go up in smoke), YES THEY WILL!!! The American continent is going to suffer, particularly THE NORTH AMERICAN CONTINENT. This is a very grave challenge and if they on't face it, they will be very sorry.

To Mary Elston; "Did you ever dream of such results? (in Kampala). Kampala has set an example to the whole Bahá'í world. The Cause is stagnating in America. Africa is full of vitality. America is a stagnant pool, everything is declining there, manners, art, music, money is depreciating, there is terrible corruption, they are full of fear and disillusionment. These are all signs of decline and it is all because of this materialistic civilization. They should be less materialistic, more spiritual, less intellectual and more spiritual. People are going to church in fear. Irreligion and agnosticism are increasing. There is so much godlessness and it is increasing. Everything is carried to excess in the United States. An ordeal will share them. Fear is driving them to churches. The Pope is shaking in his shoes. Anything can happen. People are enveloped in a fog. They are fascinated by the life of the great cities, they have much contamination in large cities and the Bahá'ís are affected by this through association.

The Guardian here read from material sent him from a large city in America. He was disgusted with — what shall I say — almost puerility of admonishment to the believers — in a vein in which Bahá'ís should not be addressed. But on the other hand, they should be reminded from the teachings of their obligations/ to the Cause. He spoke in no uncertain terms of his disgust, etc. (and responsibilities)

The home front is an absolute failure. This was as of Feb. 14, 1954. Thirty (30) cities have fallen below 9. There are 10 states with no assemblies. They have SO MUCH ORGANIZATION and they have NO SPIRIT. They MUST BE FIRED WITH THE SPIRIT. They feel an urge for a second, then it evaporates. They read superficially. People say, "I have read the Íqán like a tourist who says: "I ave done Paris, I have done London in 2 hours and know all about it." They have too many material preoccupations, they read so many magazines, which are absolutely trivial; they should throw them away into the wastebasket. This is what is called materialistic civilization. There is no progress in this suffocating atmosphere, there is a great DANGER!!!

To Mary Elston, "You must be very grateful and proud of Africa." After 50 years there are only 4 Indian tribes having believers in America. In Africa there are believers in 70 tribes who have entered the Faith in 2 years. Those with independent means should take passport, pack and go, they do not have to ask the NSA. Those who are independent financially should take their passports, pack and go, they can go anywhere they want to. They must have the urge to go and be inspired to go, the must be consecrated. The Americans feel they must have a car, a radio, one or refrigerators, television (latest model).

I CANNOT CREATE THE SPIRIT, all I can do is use the tools given me, I am the person who will direct those who arise. When I find no response, I become unhappy, I become paralyzed, I cannot do anything. This creates unhappiness for me and danger for the believers. The friends know that a MASS RESPONSE will make me happy. The Cause triumphs in spite of the inactivity of a large number of its supporters. In some mysterious way the Cause triumphs. They bring into their schools the American standard instead of driving it out.

In the British Isles sixty percent (60%) have left their homes. In America the atmosphere is STIFLING, STAGNANT. The Bahá'ís reflect this atmosphere. They MUST PURIFY THEIR ATMOSPHERE BY GETTING OUT. The Cause is steadily rising in Africa, but this is not so in the States. There were 495 volunteers in the American Conference, only 200 actually left. There should have been 3000. The Bahá'ís must PROMOTE THE BAHÁ'Í STANDARD, not the American standard. They must drive the American standard away. They should persevere and NOT LONG FOR HOME, SWEET HOME. 'Abdu'l-Bahá said, "Would to God I could go on foot." America has cultivated such a high standard of living that it is difficult for the Bahá'ís to lower those standards. They reflect the American standard. The standard here in Haifa will be raised, but it will have to be lowered in America. He asked "What is sacrifice?" Then answered, "we will go at any cost." Americans have to alter their standards of living. They do everything with the slightest (least) exertion, ride in cars. They have more leisure and time to do non-essential things (Note: for unsensible things). They should go to Africa and lead a strenuous life.

There should be MASS-MIGRATION, and they should dedicate themselves permanently to the task. Africa and the Isles of the seas will have a great future. The cause will triumph in spite of the neglect of the Bahá'ís. If one country fails (falls short, another country will make up for their failure. The friends must realize that if they do not do their duty, they will LOSE EVERYTHING, but

THE CAUSE WILL TRIUMPH. Spanish Guiana is the only country not settled in Africa (someone told us that a pioneer or more has settled there). There are 195 centers in Africa, 700 colored Bahá'ís in Africa — 70 tribes — 30 languages.

The Guardian was asked if it was true that if pioneers went out it was protection for those left at home and he replied, "GO FOR YOUR OWN PROTECTION."

May 22 — The Guardian, much to our great relief and happiness, came for dinner though we had been told he was too tired to come. He had brought a letter or copy of one written to the NSA of United States (so we understood) by a young man who was ready to go pioneering. It was as the Guardian noted — very spiritual, and showed definite desire to consecrate his life to the Cause wherever he might go. The Guardian in no uncertain terms said that here was a young man eager to go pioneering, but he would be discouraged from going — even prevented. Then, if he has the means he should go anywhere he wishes. The NSA should back him up when he arrives at his post. He does not need permission from the NSA or any COMMITTEE. He is permitted to go whether he is sponsored or not if he has the means. Ultimately, it is the spirit that counts and that is something between God and the individual. This is A CRISIS, a spiritual crisis. Bahá'ís (meaning NSA *** and committees) time is occupied with details, details that are absolutely dry and empty. I can visualize these things. The time is occupied with trivial matters, they are immersed in material things. They are occupied with the things in the cities. Bahá'ís will soon become involved. The large cities have a very bad effect on morality or on spirituality. It is becoming positively dangerous to live in the cities.

Non-Bahá'ís are even realizing that the great cities are doomed because there is so much crime, immorality, etc., etc. WE MUST GET TO A SIMPLER LIFE. NOW IT IS LIKE BABYLON, ROME, POMPEII. The Master said that in general in Central Asia there are cities which have been destroyed (leaving nothing to show how destroyed). It is absolutely hopeless for those who are capable teacher in these cities. God must remedy the situation. The Master warned them (people in the United States) about the racial problem, but they were heedless to His warning. As a result there have been two wars and it is not ended. For fifty (50) years the fortunes of mankind have been steadily declining. There are two reasons for this:

1. Mankind did not heed the Master.
2. Materialism, which will lead to the BURNING OF THE CITIES.

The last war was only the beginning. The next conflict may give a chance for the non-white to contribute its share. (The yellow race could come and take possession of the U.S. and could be followed in the same manner by the negro race.) CITIES ARE DOOMED. WHITE people have done a great deal of harm and will suffer. America will become a storm center of the future. THERE ARE VERY, VERY DARK DAYS AHEAD. The situation is very, very grave. Anything can happen, decrease in population, destruction of cities. WESTERN CIVILIZATION HAS INVOLVED THE WORLD IN ONE OF THE GREATEST OF CRISIS. In 1912 ‘Abdu’l-Bahá saw it and {{p6}} warned them, now the people are beginning to see it. America is the most disturbed nation on the earth. This is reflected in the Bahá’ís of the west, in their activities. THEY ARE LIVING IN A FOOL’S PARADISE. The excesses to which the Americans have gone have raised up enemies (induced hatred). Russia is the greatest enemy. It is all in God’s plan. Who would think the [time] could come when America would have such fear! Anything can happen and any time SUDDENLY. Bahá’u’lláh praised agriculture, A GREAT FUTURE FOR AGRICULTURE. A new race of men will appear after the cataclysm (catastrophe) We must have a totally new mode of life — NEW CITIES — SIMPLER.

Tower of Babel was not a building, but it was carrying things to excess and God stopped them. THE STORY OF NOAH IS RENACTED NOW. Godlessness, materialism — everywhere. We must have the right kind of education...

To the writer (/): “Now you know what to tell the friends at home!”

Clara: In other words, I’m not to pull my punches.” A sad smile was his only response. He left us so overburdened with the worries of the Bahá’í world, tired to exhaustion, and that was the last time Lillian and I were to see him. He was unable to leave his bed the rest of our stay 23, 24 and 25.

INSERT to page 2 — He gave further instructions, but the important thing was that she did not have to go home to tell these friends what they must do — for the beloved Guardian turned to Leroy Ioas, gave him instructions to write Ankara. This it was not to be through Lillian but directly to the members of the Local Spiritual Assembly in Ankara from the Guardian, and there could be no misunderstanding or difficulty caused for a pioneer in an older community.

Note: Prayer of Ahmad was revealed in Adrianople — “this remote prison”.

Notes of the Pilgrimage

Edith McLaren

May 2-10, 1954

My arrival in Haifa just before noon on May second was exactly one year after I made the decision to request permission from the beloved Guardian. To at last have the privilege to come to this blessed spot was the fulfillment of a long cherished dream.

This very first day was filled with unexpected events, for it was the anniversary of the Martyrdom of the Báb according to the Moslem calendar. Rúhíyyih Khánum was entertaining the Bahá'í women from 'Akká, the Persian women pilgrims, and the American women on the International Council at a luncheon. Since I was the only western pilgrim for the first two days they seemed as delighted to meet me as I was to meet them. The love shone out of their eyes, from the youngest girl to the elderly niece of Bahá'u'lláh in her simple gray flannel dress.

Later in the afternoon we were all taken to the Shrine of the Báb where we waited in the little portico outside the Eastern Pilgrim house until the beloved Guardian finished his conversation with the men pilgrims from Persia. Just at twilight when the stars were beginning to come out I had my first glimpse of the beloved as he came out of the house, slowly walked up the path to the Shrine followed by the men. The lights went on at the Shrine and the women followed going into the side reserved for them. Therein that matchless room, that sacred spot, I suddenly heard the voice of the Guardian chanting the Tablet of Visitation of Bahá'u'lláh as the fragrance of attar of roses permeated the evening air. Next we entered the room next to the left where ‘Abdu’l-Bahá is situated and heard the Guardian chant again. To have had this tremendous experience during the first hours of the day was like being lifted into another world. It was nearly nine o’clock when we went in to the dining room for dinner. The overwhelming feeling of unworthiness that comes over one as he walks across the dimly lighted room for the first time and sees Shoghi Effendi rise from the table in the dining room and come forward to greet him is felt to a great degree by every pilgrim. One can scarcely eat seeing his eyes for the first time and hearing him speak. After the first words of greeting and asking about the activity in Rome where I had stopped for a day or two, as compared to the activity of the activity of the Faith in the U.S. The Guardian asked about Mrs. Easty in Buffalo, near my town of Hamburg. Mrs. Easty is the believer who presented the large portrait of ‘Abdu’l-Bahá to the Guardian as well as one to hang in the Temple in Chicago. Then the conversation turned to the World Crusade and the need for dispersal. He told us that if the Bahá’ís do not bring about this dispersal God will do so...that we now have nearly 3000 centers in the world but what we need is more believers. Six hundred of these centers are in Persia. He spoke much about pioneering and remaining at your post. Do not go away after you get there. Remain and teach the natives.

When asked the question if the youth in the Faith should join the army or remain in college if one had already begun his studies he smiled as he answered that one could join the army and give a list of places where one would like to be sent — such as Guam. But each one has to decide for himself. The spirit and desire are the important things.

He spoke of Africa as an example to all, in the way the Faith is growing there. Americans should bring more of the Indians and colored people into the Faith. If we don’t teach them the negroes from Africa will have to come teach. The Bahá’ís like to go to social affairs but they should teach — pioneer. The European Teaching Committee is not doing enough.

The committee should send more pioneers to France, Milan, etc. The Bahá’í must teach, consolidate and incorporate. Then receive endowments. When asked which Fund is the most important at this time the Guardian answered that the World Center Fund and the National were more important at this time than the local. He said if we support the World Center and National Funds the local will benefit. (He did not mention which should come first of these two.)

More local assemblies should incorporate. But this should be done through the national assembly — that is, not without consulting the national body. They must be sure of holding it before incorporating. The Guardian spoke much about the small increase in believers in the U.S., the loss of local assemblies and the deficit in the National Fund.

The pioneers should go to the difficult places not to the easiest ones. The Americans are too materialistic. They will have to suffer to learn. America will suffer the most. The Guardian seemed tired and very serious this evening and there were many pauses which made one realize the seriousness of the times.

The next evening, Monday, May 3rd we found the Guardian very happy and healthy. His eyes were sparkling and his cheeks were pink. He had many cables and letters which had come that day. They all had good news. He could scarcely eat for he wanted to read so many of them to us. Several new pioneers had arrived at their posts, the NSAs had sent cables — he read some of them — from Canada, Australia, India, Persia, Sweden. He was displeased with Sweden because the NSA had spent $21,500 for land for the Temple, 20 miles from the capital when they had only $3000 in their fund. He was very pleased with Africa especially and Canada and Australia. He spoke of several youth who had gone to pioneer in different places. He also read to us from the president Ben Svi of Israel and that both were working for the welding of the nations.... Leroy Ioas was to speak at the Rotary Club in Jerusalem the following day. The Guardian said that he wished to send some Bahá'í books to the president, since he had asked for literature. (I remember so well that he spoke of the books then — Prayers and Meditations, Gleanings, Dawnbreakers and the Appreciation of the Bahá'í Faith. He also said that he would send some plants to Mrs. Ben Svi for her garden. The reason the Guardian was so happy over this visit was because this was the first time a president or high official had called on him. The minister of religions had been invited to come but had refused.... Finally he read to us his cable to the U.S. in which he said that the Honor Roll was now being closed and giving the latest information on the growth of the Faith. At the end of the dinner time there were maps of the property of the Síyáh-Chál prison which the Guardian brought out and talked about with the members of the Council. He mentioned that the individual who bought the property should now work with the NSA of Persia and decide with Bahá'í consultation how the building should be developed and financed.

On another evening the Guardian talked much about the development of the Faith in the East — of the NSAs of Japan, South East Asia, South West Islands and Australia. He was so pleased with the accomplishments of the Australians. They have the good qualities of the British and not the bad, and a few of the good qualities of the Americans. The East, we hope will progress even faster than Africa did. The Fozdar family was mentioned — how they had all been so active and were wonderful pioneers. In speaking of the Covenant-Breakers in Persia he said that Mr. Samandarí is the shield of the Cause. He scatters the Covenant-Breakers. He had sent him to Mashhad and also to Tīhrán. He was the only one who could handle the Covenant-Breakers in these places.

Reference was made one evening to the Temple in Isaiah. The Súrah of the Temple is a Tablet written by Bahá'u'lláh in 'Akká. It represents the five pointed star as the temple of man. (page 213 God Passes By)

The Guardian pointed out the fact that the Bahá'ís were the only religion in Israel that did not have to pay tax on property used for the Faith because we comply with the rules in contract of land ownership, namely: 1 — we will not sell. 2 — We do not build. 3 — We will not rent. 4 — We will not sell produce from the land. We now have property valued at four million dollars. We waited 40 years for the Mansion at Bahjí, 50 years for the land on Mt. Carmel, 60 years for the Shrine and 100 years for the Síyáh-Chál.

IN reference to the Americans again the Guardian said that since they have failed to teach the negroes perhaps they will teach the Jews. They should form special committees for this purpose. The Jews character was effected due to enslavement by the Egyptians. That period is now over. Moses was with them. They had persecuted Christ and had to suffer 2000 years persecution. The Jews are the chosen people to support the Bahá'í Institutions in the future — the distant future.

The Shrine of the Báb was in the heart of Mt. Carmel and the Temple will be built at the head.

The Kitáb-i-Aqdas is revealed for future civilization. These laws will not be given out in their entirety at one time. They will be given out a few at a time over a long span of years. Then the beloved Guardian spoke about how this great Cause develops. First came the Revelation, then the Covenant, then the Administration. Next will come World Order and finally World Civilization.... Once he mentioned that our enemies have made the right moves and aided the Cause and its development. Bahá'u'lláh would never have come to 'Akká of his own accord. He brought more than a revealed religion. He brought a plan for the world civilization.

So often the Guardian spoke about America during the 9 days of my pilgrimage — how it must suffer to be purified, then obtain its destiny and be welded with the other nations. 1. Suffering — to prepare for the welding. 2. Administrative Cradle. These two will prepare America fore its destiny to lead all nations spiritually. Not because America is so good but so corrupt was she chosen for this destiny. The early believers thought that the Master was referring to America at that time but he was referring to the destiny of America.

Again and again the Guardian spoke about teaching and pioneering. We must teach the Faith with dignity and never peddle it. The Faith is too precious for that. Example — the way it is handled in Israel.

The pioneers should get out, stay at their posts and teach the Faith. They must not forget that they are there to teach the Faith. They must seed out the sincere souls who are prepared.... As to the Summer Schools — the primary books to study are Kitáb-i-Íqán and Some Answered Questions. Keep away from the occult and mysticism. Study the writings and know them, then teach. Study, concentrate, then act. There is too much social life at Green Acre and not enough study. There should be study in the evening as well as the daytime. A little play, a little recreation, but not to overdo it. Concentrate on the goals of the Ten Year Crusade and not introduce other things. Be light as the spirit, pure as the air, unrestrained as the wind and blazing like fire.

Some of the things I learned from the beloved Guardian were these:

He has great patience. He loves the believers dearly, knows their faults and is always hopeful that they will exert greater and greater effort for the Faith. He has the vision of the Cause as no one else could possibly have. He is focused entirely in the Faith. He works tirelessly, ceaselessly, always keeping his eye on the goal. He goes ahead and makes plans even when there are severe blocks and obstacles not yet overcome as in the case of the property for the Archives Building at that time. The title was not yet clear for the land but the plans were all ready to begin work when they could. Though his station is not the Exemplar as was 'Abdu'l-Bahá's yet he is still the great example to the believers everywhere.

Words of the beloved Guardian to

Mr. Hiroyasu Takano

March 1954

Taken down in Japanese; they are now translated back to English.

The Pacific area is most important for the Bahá'í world, as well as the African continent. There are two centers in this area - Japan and Australia. This may be explained in two different ways. First: They are like magnetic poles. Japan must work as the northern pole of the North Pacific Ocean. Japan is not only the North Pole, but she must be a light to shine in the North Pacific Ocean. She has the duty of serving the North Pacific Ocean as well as the Soviet Union upon which Japan in the East, Germany in the West America in the North and India and Persia in the South must function as the sources of light. In the ten year plan, Japan is the only country north of the Pacific Ocean to have a N.S.A. This matter is fundamentally important in building up the International House of Justice. We do not require China and the Philippine Islands to have N. S. A's.

What should Japan Do?

Japan must have preparation in order to work as a center. She must become firm in the Cause to do her duty as a magnetic pole and source of light.

For that purpose she must concentrate on establishing the N.S.A. For this Purpose it is necessary to have isolated centers. These isolated centers are like points which will make letters, and these letters will make words, and words will make sentences. In this way isolated centers will become local groups which will soon grow to L. S. A's. In order to attain this it will be necessary to have many isolated centers. Especially in Japan it is necessary that the members in large cities disperse to neighboring cities; for instance from Tokyo to Yokohama.....I believe now is the time for the Tokyo Bahá'ís to begin to disperse. The principle cities must have Bahá'í Halls as center of administration, worship and spirituality. The center of worship must become a House of worship.

(From Mr. Takano: "Our beloved Guardian told me that since Mt. Fuji is the holy mountain in Japan, it would be nice if we could have a Temple there in the near future.")

The meaning of establishing the N.S.A. in Japan, as you understand from my words is to work letters for sentences at first, and then to function as centers of the principal districts, The N. S. A's are now twelve and in the future it will be necessary to have at least sixty before the House of Justice will be established. Japan must not be content only to establish a N. S. A.

In order to spread the teachings we must avoid being like jelly, but must be like mercury in that we must offer ourselves not only by money.

Duty of Tokyo. The center of the development of the Faith is Tokyo. By this time it is also the center of the Bahá'í Faith. The L. S. A's in other cities must consider the Tokyo L.S.A. as the N. S.A. and Tokyo should take the responsibility of developing the Bahá'í Faith in Japan. In order to attain this responsibility, the Tokyo L. S. A. should have a committee for translation and for spreading the teachings (afterwards pioneers), and educate. The spreading of the Bahá'í teachings should not be done through words, but through action and character. It is necessary for us to be spiritual, emptying ourselves and following the teachings of the prophets which have come from God, realizing according to our ability the divinity by which people will be attracted. Translations should be made of gleanings; some answered questions Iqan. Important part must be learned by heart. Tokyo should prepare for National Hall, because it is so important for the Bahá'ís that they had Bahá'í Halls when they are persecuted. All Bahá'í should have opportunity to participate with the National Bahá'í Hall in Tokyo. Cooperate especially with Australia and also with Germany, America, India and Iran. Japan and the Japanese people are qualified to make this cooperation. The Japanese are diligent and capable and spiritual like the Germans, and moreover they have a balance in their hearts. They have ability as shown by the modern progress. They have already had experience in organizing things. Japan is the only country that has experienced the atom bombing. That was their sacrifice. It is wonderful what the Japanese Bahá'ís have accomplished these past two years and this proves the fact of what I have said.

Conclusion

The Japanese Bahá'ís should be very careful in organizing, because organization is a very important thing to spread the teachings. They must not make haste in spreading the teachings. For example, if they should select any member, you must choose the one who is of good characters in haste, then they will interrupt the development of the faith in Japan. These words are spoken to the Japanese themselves, but not to the foreigners in Japan and this must be understood. That is, the Japanese should have responsibility and self government. Japan should send pioneers to islands of the Pacific Ocean, Formosa, Manchuria, Mongolia and Sakhalin, etc.

Irene Bennett (<http://bahaihistoryuk.wordpress.com/2013/04/01/irene-bennett-pilgrimage-1954/>)

It was approaching noon on Friday 18 February, 1954 and there I was, standing at the door of No 10 Persian Street in Haifa almost precisely four days after opening the telegram that read “Not too late, Shoghi.” Four days of whirlwind activity and confirmation in the power of the “Remover of Difficulties” had brought me to my goal, but at this point I felt so unworthy of having been singled out for this honour that I needed a minute or two to gather myself together before announcing my arrival by knocking upon the door of the building known at that time as the Western Pilgrim House.

Western Pilgrim House

There was no help for it but to take the necessary action, overcome my shyness and knock. The door was opened, to reveal the dearest little person reaching about up to my chin, who immediately kissed me and welcomed me in so lovingly without even knowing for certain whom she was greeting. This was dear Jessie Revell. Next, Sylvia Ioas added her welcome to that of Jessie, and Hand of the Cause Leroy Ioas followed suit. Already I felt at home. Then Jessie took me to my room leading into the small, cosy, circular sitting-room and overlooking the lower half of Mount Carmel on which this house was situated, and the blue Mediterranean Sea. Jessie chatted to me so naturally as if she were in the company of a well-known friend, and my heart responded with love for her.

I learnt that I had three fellow-pilgrims but they were away at Bahjí. Two had come from Wauwatosa, Wisconsin in the U.S.A., Al and Maud Reimholz, and the third, Joyce Lawrence, also American, had come from the Lofoten Islands, off the coast of Norway, where she had pioneered during the past year and thus become one of the “Knights of Bahá’u’lláh”. Jessie lamented that I had just missed Marion Hofman, for she had departed that very morning from the room which now was mine. My delayed arrival had thwarted the plan of the Guardian for us both to be there together, the Guardian thinking thereby to make me still happier on my pilgrimage. It was not far from lunch-time but dear Jessie, before leaving me to settle into my room, took me along to the larder to see what we might find available there in case I felt hungry. We came out each with a piece of cheese to snack on meanwhile. When she came back she took my arm and guided me to the small dining-room telling me on the way that she had news for me, and this was that the Guardian had arranged for me to join the other pilgrims at Bahjí that very afternoon. He had thought that I would enjoy my visit at Bahjí more that way, as it was not known if any other pilgrim(s) would arrive during my stay. I was to be escorted there in the Guardian's car by Leroy and Sylvia Ioas.

At lunch I met for the first time dear Hand of the Cause, Amelia (Millie) Collins, whose contribution to the Fund had enabled the beautiful decorative wrought-iron gate to be fashioned and placed at the entrance to the gardens at Bahjí – the Collins Gate. Millie lived at the home of Shoghi Effendi and Rúhíyyih Khánum – the House of ‘Abdu’l-Bahá – and she too then welcomed me and greeted me in her lovely inimitable fashion, adding still more to my feeling of being at home in the wonderful atmosphere of love that surrounded me. It was at lunch-time too that Jessie could introduce me to her sister, Ethel Revell, of a very unobtrusive and shy nature. Ethel took care of all the typing matters of the administration at the World Centre, while Jessie's role was that of accountant and book-keeper. I came to know of another visitor I had just missed, to my sorrow. Loulie Albie Matthews, author of the book Not Every Sea Hath Pearls, which I had read with such delight as a new Bahá'í. At that time she was a frail old lady who, while on a cruise, had spent two days during that week in Haifa. They told me that the Guardian had jokingly told her that she should now change the name of her book because every sea now had pearls and one pearl was lying at the bottom of the Mediterranean, a reference to our beloved Hand of the Cause, Dorothy Baker, my adored spiritual mother. In all ways, I was made to feel so much a welcome member of this family of the companion-helpers chosen by the Guardian, and the eagerness of everyone to have news of the Faith and the pioneers in East Africa drew me comfortably and happily into the conversation, and my imminent transfer to Bahjí, surprising to all, naturally provoked a topic of conversation in which most wanted to join with some comment, explanation or advice.

I was urged to take my warmest clothes, it being winter, and the buildings there had no form of heating. I had to confess, however, that I had no woollen clothes and in view of the fact that I had just landed from tropical Africa, all were concerned about my not catching a chill, which resulted in a search for suitable garments to add to my inadequate stock of wearing apparel. The Western Pilgrim House was also the seat of the International Bahá'í Council and the home of the Guardian's administrative staff. Sylvia reappeared shortly and presented me with woollen jumpers, ankle and knee-length socks and a pair of winceyette pyjamas, a selection from which I immediately put on or inside the overnight bag I was to take with me. Jessie came in and chatted to me all the while. Then at the appropriate moment, she took me to the balcony of my room overlooking ‘Abdu’l-Bahá's house across the road to give me my first glimpse of our beloved Guardian as he left the house, his home, to enter his chauffeur-driven car for his afternoon visit to the Shrine of the Báb and succeeding promenade around it in conversation with the gentlemen pilgrims from Írán. All the pilgrims from Írán were lodged in the Eastern Pilgrim House, adjacent to the Shrine of the Báb, i.e. the building which has since become the meeting place for all pilgrims, who are nowadays responsible for selecting their own accommodation in hotels etc.

Later, that car with its chauffeur, Muḥammad Bahá'í, was at the disposal of Leroy and Sylvia Ioas for their taking me to Bahjí, and in the late afternoon we were on our way. Leroy pointed out to me the interesting features along our route, including the hill from where Napoleon tried to shell 'Akká, and the mosque in 'Akká where 'Abdu'l-Bahá used to pray. Then we turned off to Bahjí and alighted at the entrance to the new and lovely gardens designed and set out so recently by the beloved Guardian. Just as we arrived, Saleh the caretaker of the Mansion and the Shrine, switched on all the lights. These hung in groups of four lamps, spaced so lavishly that when lit they formed what the Guardian called a sea of light and brilliantly illumined every little corner of the gardens with breath-taking loveliness.

The gardens so far developed, stretched in just a quarter of the present circle, around the north and north-west of the Shrine, from which they radiated in long vistas, symbolic as Dorothy Baker had described them to us in Nairobi a year previously, of the way the Guardian's vision works – in long vistas. Leading to the door of the Shrine from the lovely Collins Gate is a broad pathway of Jordan Valley pebbles like sugared almonds, which Rúhíyyih Khánum said would be kept constantly free of weeds if every pilgrim plucked out nine on walking over them. All the Guardian's paths both at Bahjí and on Mount Carmel were made either of these pebbles or of broken pieces of red tiles so that, viewed from a distance, they made attractive patterns of red and white among the greens of the gardens. As well as peacocks (birds of paradise and symbols of immortality) Italian urns and vases, each pathway had marble steps leading to it and on pedestals two snow-white marble eagles, each feather carved to perfection. Growing in the gardens were baby cypress trees, a few artistically spaced off the original olive trees, and beds of flowers, of which the latest planted contained in circles nine rose-bushes. In the still undeveloped three quarters of the grounds stood five hundred and fifty olive trees. As we walked in the gardens we could see far away across the Bay of 'Akká the twinkling lights of Haifa on Mount Carmel, with our beautiful Shrine of the Báb, Queen of Carmel, surrounded by its terraced gardens all illumined and standing out resplendent as a cross of golden lights, the cross at its very centre.

Next we directed our steps to the Shrine of Bahá'u'lláh. A crystal chandelier illuminated the porch-way and the gilded Greatest Name over the door in its centre of golden rays. At the beginning of the porch-way a yard or two from the steps to the door we took off our shoes so that we took a few paces on the pebbles in our stockinged feet "to make us feel kind of good" as Leroy said. A glorious and unexpected surprise greets the eyes as one steps over the threshold and faces the end of an interior brilliantly lit garden of cypresses, flowers and little orange trees, which at that time of the year were loaded with fruit. We stepped over layers of most beautiful Persian carpets and found ourselves penetrated by a peace, a tranquillity almost tangible. We reverently walked a few yards, then turned to the right to face the doorway to the Inner Shrine. Taking my cue from Leroy and Saleh I too reverently bowed down to the ground, but unlike my guides I was unprepared with a prayer learnt by heart. On rising we slowly proceeded to the Sacred Threshold perfumed with a lavish spread of cut flowers scattered upon it, and again there in turns knelt down and bowed our heads to the step in prayerful attitude. A handful of the flowers from the Threshold were given to me to share with the friends in Nairobi. Over that Threshold pilgrims do not step but on looking within, the eyes are delighted by a vision of light and beauty. When we had all paid homage and silently prayed if so moved, Saleh at Leroy's request chanted the Tablet of Aḥmad in Arabic and we each read aloud a prayer from our prayer books. After once more reverencing that Holy Spot, we walked backwards round the garden so as not to turn our backs on the place where lie the sacred remains of Bahá'u'lláh. I wondered about the great spiritual power spoken of by pilgrims to that Shrine and whether that would have meant an experience of more than the happiness I felt if I had been more spiritually prepared. I could only marvel at my presence there in the heart of the Qiblah.

On leaving the Shrine we proceeded to the house contiguous with it where 'Abdu'l-Bahá used to stay when He went to Bahjí, and as soon as we opened the door Joyce Lawrence came forward to greet me and welcome me into the little group that had arrived the day before. Joyce was to become my dearest pilgrim friend during the rest of her pilgrimage. She led me into a small room where Al and Maud Reimholz were sitting beside an electric radiator with their two escorts from the Pilgrim House in Haifa, namely Hand of the Cause Mason Remey and the lovable Luṭfu'lláh Ḥakím. Before I knew it I was being hugged by Luṭfu'lláh and introduced to Al and Maud. At first Maud and I were just shaking hands unthinkingly but that would not do for Luṭfu'lláh who was not happy until we had properly embraced each other and then I had to be captured "in his little box" i.e. a Brownie box camera.

My fellow-pilgrims had just returned from their visit to Masra'ih and wanted first and foremost to enter again the Shrine of Bahá'u'lláh, so out we went, the four of us together, to first circumambulate the Shrine and then enter, to pay homage and offer prayers again. Joyce told me of the value of consecrating articles at the Holy Threshold, as a result of which I left my Bahá'í ring and prayer book there overnight and learnt afterwards that Salah had put them on the Inner Shrine.

Meanwhile, an evening meal was prepared for us and of this we partook at 'Abdu'l-Bahá's table in the dining-room where birds still fly in and out when the door is open, but it was too cold to allow the door to stand open at the first meal. It was followed by a glass of Persian tea and Persian sweetmeats and when we had warmed ourselves again by the electric fire we left 'Abdu'l-Bahá's house and proceeded into the Mansion. There, after removing our shoes again, we entered that room, so light, airy, spotless, and beautiful in its simplicity, where Bahá'u'lláh passed away on the bed on the floor, left just as it was when He lived in that room.>

We went up to the divan at the far end of the room, where Bahá'u'lláh was sitting when Professor Browne from Cambridge, the only westerner to have attained His presence, was granted an interview, following which he wrote his famous memoir of the occasion, quoted in Bahá'u'lláh and the New Era. In turn we knelt and prayed at that spot where Bahá'u'lláh used to sit, then passed beside the bed again and prostrated ourselves in reverence at the foot. After we had all said a prayer aloud, Salah showed us Bahá'u'lláh's taj, His aba, His socks, His slippers, His winter sheepskin coat and His summer silken one.

We entered all the other rooms, one or two more that night and the rest the following morning, and saw many priceless treasures such as the originals of the Arabic Hidden Words, illuminated tablets, a tablet revealed by Bahá'u'lláh in the hand-writing of 'Abdu'l-Bahá, the bold hand-writing of Bahá'u'lláh before He was poisoned, and a script written by His shaking hand at a later date, the hand-writing of Bahá'u'lláh's father, and the whole of the Aqdas in Arabic written inside "The Greatest Name", which was solidly covered by this tiny hand-writing. We saw pictures of the early disciples from the east in the time of Bahá'u'lláh and others from the west in the time of 'Abdu'l-Bahá, one of the immortal Badi', who carried the Tablet of Bahá'u'lláh to the King of Persia and died a martyr as a result, a photograph of the captain of the firing squad that martyred the Báb and, placed by the Guardian in the corridor opposite to his photograph, those of Spiritual Assemblies around the world so that "the executioner should constantly gaze upon the results of his work." We went into the room of Abu'l-Faql and saw there a portrait of him, his library, and charts of progressive revelation, and then entered the Esslemont room where John Esslemont's book Bahá'u'lláh and the New Era was found translated into all the languages in which translation work had by that time been done. We saw shelves of books and pamphlets in Braille, photographs of May Maxwell and Martha Root, and the coffin in which the wife of Bahá'u'lláh was buried in 'Akká prior to being removed to Mount Carmel. Another room contained miniatures of all the popes from St. Peter to the present day. That of St. Peter was circled in blue, the two who lived in the time of Muḥammad in green, and the one who received a tablet from Bahá'u'lláh, in red.

In the central hall were illumined models of the Shrine of the Báb, the Temple at Wilmette and that of one which in the fullness of time will be built on Mount Carmel. On another table there were framed photostat copies of all the registrations and incorporations of Spiritual Assemblies, including our Kenya certificate of exemption from registration. In the central hall and in all the rooms were beautiful Persian carpets gifted by the believers, and some bearing symbolic patterns were hanging on the walls of the Guardian's room in the Mansion. After we had seen much that night we were allocated rooms in which to sleep and to me fell the room whose walls were lined with the pictures of the popes and the kings.

Before breakfast the next morning, when we did have the birds flying in and out of the room, we paid one more visit to the Shrine of Bahá'u'lláh and I saw the beautiful gardens for the first time in daylight. Shortly afterwards Muḥammad Bahá'í arrived in a station-wagon to take us on our next visit to 'Akká. He took us first to the "Most Great Prison" where Bahá'u'lláh was incarcerated for over two years and in His prison cell we bowed our heads to the floor and prayed. We saw the place where the "Purest Branch" fell through the roof and met his death, and the spot on the city wall outside, from which the first pilgrims, who had walked all the way from Persia, could stand and wave to Bahá'u'lláh, and then, content to have seen only His waving hand in response, had to set off again on their six months' walk back to Persia with the news that their Beloved was still alive.

We were next taken to the House of Abbúd, where Bahá'u'lláh lived for the ensuing seven years after His release from the prison cell. First we visited the eastern section, which was all of the house that His family first occupied and where the Aqdas was revealed, and then proceeded to the western section, which the owner later also put at the disposal of Bahá'u'lláh, enabling the marriage of 'Abdu'l-Bahá to take place, and we were able to enter that room in which He was married to Muníreh Khánum. At the end of this visit we left 'Akká via the old city gate through which Bahá'u'lláh and his family were brought into the prison city. On the way home we all consumed delicious Jaffa oranges, bought for us in 'Akká by Muḥammad Bahá'í.

Back in the pilgrim house in Haifa I spent the early part of the afternoon pressing the flowers given to me for the Nairobi friends. It was the custom of Rúḥíyyih Khánum to receive the ladies on pilgrimage from both the east and the west in her home for tea during the afternoons, but at that time she had been suffering from bronchitis and was still not well. Thus when no call came at the usual time for us to visit with her, tea was prepared for us in our pilgrim house. After we had drunk our tea, everyone agreed on my questioning, that it would be quite safe for me to go and have a bath, since we would be free for the next hour or two. However, while so engaged in the bathroom I heard much chortling outside the bathroom door and thought I was being teased, until it became clear to me that I was in truth being interrupted because Rúḥíyyih Khánum had felt that she could, after all, entertain us for tea and conversation at her home. I supposed I would have to forgo the pleasure as I was quite unready and my hair was wet, but Jessie told me not to worry, to hurry up and she would take me over to join the others who had already gone over to the Guardian's house. When I was dressed Jessie wrapped my hair in a towel, turban-fashion and off we went across the road.

When we reached Rúḥíyyih Khánum's reception room, Jessie opened the door, gently pushed me forward, then closed the door and disappeared. I was at first bewildered at the sight of so many new faces of Persian ladies, as well as the already familiar ones and only discovered Rúhíyyih Khánum from a voice coming from the corner addressing me and welcoming me forward. This was followed by the observation that “by a process of deduction, you must be Irene Bennett.” Rúhíyyih Khánum was sitting on the sofa, wrapped in a shawl and looking very tired. However, she talked to us in English and to the Persian ladies in Persian and then translated. She explained to the Persian ladies what a very new baby Bahá’í I was and added that as they say in Persia, the milk is not yet dry in the mouth. This added further embarrassment to my late arrival and unpropitious turban-headed appearance with all eyes focussed upon me and I would have been grateful if the floor had opened and let me drop out of the limelight. This was not at all the feeling I had hoped to experience on coming into the presence of the beloved one talked of by Dorothy Baker and the author of Prescription for Living that I admired so much. My imagined beautiful experience was instead a sad disillusionment at this stage.

This was the day of the moment to be most looked forward to, when I should be meeting with the beloved Guardian, but my afternoon’s sobering experience had repressed my feeling of joy in anticipation. I thought I was perhaps not spiritual enough and offered up a silent prayer that at least I should not feel unmoved when I came into his presence. This would occur at the dinner table that evening when Shoghi Effendi and Rúhíyyih Khánum would come, as on every evening, to the dining room of the Western Pilgrim House for the main meal of the day in the company of its residents and the pilgrims staying there.

To give due attention and welcome to any newly arrived pilgrim Shoghi Effendi had set up a custom, whereby any such newcomer should lead the way to the dining-table. All the Pilgrim House participants would gather together in the little sitting room to await the call, “Dinner is served” indicating the arrival at table of Shoghi Effendi and Rúhíyyih Khánum. Before 7 p.m. we were all there, Millie Collins, Mason Remey, Leroy Ioas and Sylvia, Jessie and Ethel Revell, Joyce Lawrence, Al and Maud Reimholz and myself. Jessie had already assured me that I need have no fear for the Guardian would make me feel truly welcome and at home, and everyone agreed that the Guardian was master of the art of putting the pilgrims at ease. When the signal was heard, I had to set off first, very bashfully, so Jessie took my arm in her loving way to give me confidence, and together we descended the flight of steps to the door of the dining hall on the ground floor. Through the hall to the table laid at the far end by the front window. I had to proceed alone with the Hands of the Cause and all the others following behind.

Behind two chairs facing the oncomers stood Shoghi Effendi and Rúhíyyih Khánum. As I came into view, Shoghi Effendi moved forward to greet me. While shaking my hand he assured me that I was welcome, indeed I was very welcome, for I had come from Africa. Every feeling of unworthiness and anxiety that I had been earlier entertaining was immediately dispelled, for looking at me with shining eyes and a smiling face, he astonished me by adding that I was a fine Bahá’í, I was active, I was determined and even that I was consecrated!

He recalled that I was the secretary of the first Spiritual Assembly of Nairobi and said that that was a great bounty and privilege for me. Then he said I was to take the chair facing him at the table, and leaving me overwhelmed with such loving attention, he next proceeded to shake hands with each and everyone behind me and ask how they were before they moved to their places at table. (He did this every evening.) When all had been individually greeted and taken their seats he sat down in his own place at the table, an end seat on the long side facing down the hall. At the head, i.e. between himself and me was the “seat of honour” occupied by Joyce, she being the Knight of Bahá’u’lláh. The chair at the opposite end, facing Joyce, was the place of Mason Remey, the Chairman at that time of the International Bahá’í Council, appointed by the Guardian as forerunner to the Universal House of Justice to be elected in the future. The remaining seats along the two longer sides of the table were occupied by the remaining residents of the Western Pilgrim House (the Guardian’s staff) and the other two pilgrims.

That night the Guardian addressed the majority of his remarks and questions to me. Pilgrims seemed to become to the beloved Guardian more than representatives from the country in which they served the Cause, indeed their very personification. He addressed any remarks about a particular area to the person associated with it and in so doing it seemed as if he concentrated himself entirely on that person. So vividly could I experience this feeling that on one particular occasion all assembled at dinner seemed to have melted away leaving just the Guardian leading me heavenwards. He had the most wonderful fascinating countenance constantly changing and radiating light, so that when sitting opposite to him I never wanted to take my eyes from his face. Furthermore, I was in the distinguished position of having a double identity. I was both Africa and Britain. While I was there he recalled outstanding services of British Bahá’ís, such as their record of sixty per cent who left their homes to pioneer during the Teaching Plan requested by the National Spiritual Assembly of the British Isles immediately upon the conclusion of the Second World War. (Jessie and Ethel said afterwards that he so often extolled the British when talking to the pilgrims at this table). As he was also very happy with the progress of the work in Africa I was constantly being showered with his radiant smiles. To have dinner with our beloved Guardian was the event to look forward to and work up to each day.

Then at the close of the meal, following the departure of our host and hostess, we used to make straight for our sitting room upstairs to put down everything that we could remember of what the Guardian had said, Jessie coming along with us to help our memories. As we left the dining-room together on my first night in the Pilgrim House, “Look what the Guardian said to you”, were the first words addressed to me by my fellow-pilgrims, spoken in kindly tones of envy and awe, and Joyce said I must write down what he had said to me, for even if I did not think these words of eulogy were true now (as I said) they would be in the future, for the Guardian would not have said so otherwise, and I must recall them in times of tests. I determined there and then to try to live up to that standard and make them true, but alas, any success I might have had has certainly not been consistent!

At the dinner-table we often heard news arrived in the mail that Leroy Ioas communicated to the Guardian, with ensuing questions and replies. I remember how impressed I was at the speed with which Shoghi Effendi could marshal all relevant facts and come to a decision. This occurred when the National Spiritual Assembly of Panama was requesting advice on the choice to be made between two alternative sites for the future Temple of Panama. Sometimes there was conversation with architect Mason Remey over the finishing details in the design of the Archives Building. And one evening after the table was cleared Shoghi Effendi unrolled his map showing the progress of the Faith in East Africa and this he left with me for additions to bring it up to date after the enthusiastic session we had had regarding it. So beautifully were we made to feel part of that wonderful Bahá'í family at our World Centre!

One evening, on the Wednesday of my pilgrimage, we missed the presence of our beloved Guardian, for our usual intimate gathering together for the evening meal was replaced by a social dinner party, and although the Guardian lovingly devoted himself each evening to his pilgrim visitors, he did not appear at all when the guests were local dignitaries. Such an occasion was a rare occurrence but it took place on that particular evening, which was by chance the date of the first anniversary of my Bahá'í declaration, because one of the Israeli government officials who had been associated with developments in our Faith was about to leave the country to serve elsewhere.

We pilgrims were invited guests at the banquet and to avoid looking embarrassingly conspicuous at the occasion, which called for evening dress, with which I was totally unprovided, I once again needed fitting out in borrowed apparel to suit the occasion. Ethel Revell stood much taller than little Jessie but was of equally slim build, so they looked around Ethel's wardrobe to see what they might be able to adapt for me to wear. They thus dressed me in one of her long evening dresses, bloused over at the waist by a belt to deal with excessive length and finished off with an evening shawl. The three Americans, as one could expect I suppose, had come suitably prepared for whatever necessity might arise.

Rúhíyyih Khánúm was the delightful hostess, playing her part to perfection, although she had been in bed all day still in a state of convalescence. On the dinner table was a fine evidence of her originality, for with fruit cans and fresh produce all around her bed she had created an individual side salad for each of us, a "girl" salad set beside the places for the gentlemen and a "boy" salad beside those allocated to the ladies. Dresses for the former were arrangements of lettuce with frills of pineapple, shirts for the latter were also of lettuce, with trousers of peach slices. The faces of the girls were cut from peaches and of the boys from pears, each having shredded carrot for hair, raisins for eyes, clove for a nose, cherry for lips, and the cheeks were made rosy with a touch of something resembling rouge. Legs and arms were made from small pieces of pineapple, and shoes from cherries. They looked just lovely, too attractive to be dismantled by cutlery, but alas we could not save them and take them home for souvenirs.

In those days arrangements for the pilgrims were made on a day-to-day basis. We would often retire for the night quite unaware of what would be planned for us the following day. But before going to bed one night we were informed that Shoghi Effendi had arranged for us to be taken round the archives – the minor archives the next day and the major archives on the following one. There was, of course, no beautiful Archives Building at that time on Mount Carmel. The relics of the Greatest Holy Leaf (sister of ‘Abdu’l-Bahá,) the Purest Branch (brother of ‘Abdu’l-Bahá) together with some beautifully illuminated Tablets constituted the Minor Archives and were housed in a small building situated in the Monument Gardens.

The temporary home of the Major Archives, being the relics of the three Central Figures, was the third set of rooms in the building of the Shrine of the Báb. The relics there consisted of a wonderfully rich collection of their clothes and articles of everyday use, even locks of hair, finger nails and dried blood. Everything belonging to ‘Abdu’l-Bahá was so simple and plain compared with the more ornate and more lavishly aristocratic appurtenances of the Báb and Bahá’u’lláh. We also saw, in frames of intricate silver and gold work, a photograph of Bahá’u’lláh, paintings of Him in the form of a triptych, and a portrait of the Báb. On one whole wall was a painting of ‘Abdu’l-Bahá, executed by a Polish artist who never saw Him but painted from a series of dreams without knowing whom he was portraying. It was so wonderfully ‘Abdu’l-Bahá, with eyes that looked at one wherever one happened to be standing. Again there were countless illuminated Tablets, copies of the original letters written to each of the eighteen “Letters of the Living”, the whole of the Íqán written again in the tiniest scripts inside the second verse of the Tablet of Visitation. (We had seen this at Bahjí written inside the Greatest Holy Name).

We could visit in perfect peace the Shrine of the Báb whenever we were free, except on the morning of Saturday, the Sabbath, when it was open to Israeli visitors, who flocked there in great numbers, and we were needed to help Lutfallah Ḥakím to take them around, keep them in order and away from the paths forbidden to them. Sometimes I went alone and sometimes with Joyce, my dearest companion amongst my fellow-pilgrims. I found it was most rewarding to go up to the Shrine before breakfast, at about sunrise. On each visit I loved it more and was ready to stay ever longer, reading prayers in the shrines of both the Báb and of ‘Abdu’l-Bahá. How beautiful it was in its garden setting, its golden dome glittering in the sunshine beneath a sky of azure blue and overlooking the Mediterranean Sea, reflecting the blue of the sky!

The unexpectedness with which events could crop up for us during that unique and exciting first pilgrimage of mine was illustrated on one of the days when I thought we were going to be free to plan our own activities. I was going to use the time to give my attention to the Guardian’s map of East Africa and the translation for Rúhíyyih Khánum of a letter she had received in Spanish, and eventually, if the time remained propitious, to get my hair washed. However, on that day unexpected news had arrived informing of the imminent arrival of a Japanese pilgrim, whose journey to the World Centre had occurred in advance of the date he had indicated. This meant that immediately after lunch I had to be hastily transferred out of my bedroom and into Joyce's for this, the last day of her pilgrimage, for the message had said he was already on his way over to the Pilgrim House. All hands got busy helping to effect the transfer and the maid came in and made up the bed.

When all that commotion was over I then proceeded with the plan for my hair. This was accomplished: it was washed, set, and tied up in a scarf to dry while I busied myself with tasks indoors. Such had been my intention until, lo and behold, if we did not receive a summons from Rúhíyyih Khánúm that she was ready to receive the ladies for her afternoon chat and tea with them. Such a possible eventuality had not crossed my mind, for this had not happened during the past two days, in fact since my first experience of this privilege. No wonder Joyce commented on the courage I had in deciding to wash my hair, for, as she said, we never knew from one minute to the next what might be in store for us. Once again, therefore, I had caused myself to feel embarrassed at tea in the home of Rúhíyyih Khánúm, and again could not find anything to say!

That night at dinner we pilgrims represented the four compass points on the globe.

Fellow pilgrims: Joyce Lawrence, Maud and Albert Reimholz, Hiroyasu

Hiroyasu, whom we called Hero for short, was returning to his home in the Far East, en route in Haifa from a year of study in the USA, where he had declared his faith in Bahá'u'lláh; Al and Maud were from the Western Hemisphere, the Middle West of the USA; Joyce had established her pioneer home in the far north of Europe beyond the Arctic Circle; while I was from due south close to the mid-most heart of Africa. This was the night when I was moved one place down the table and we all got acquainted with the Bahá'í situation in the Far East and the work to be done there. The whole of my pilgrimage was a time when events and incoming news all contributed to the happiness of our beloved Guardian and our representative gathering at dinner on this particular evening certainly played its uplifting part.

The pilgrimage of Hiroyasu coincided with that of the American trio on just that one day of his arrival. On their last morning Joyce and I went into the Monument Gardens and sat on the steps at the highest point getting our notes straightened out and discussing our experiences.

Joyce Lawrence in the Monument Gardens, Haifa

The surprising fact then came to light that whereas I was telling Joyce that I believed she was gaining more from her pilgrimage by experiencing spirituality more vividly, both in the presence of the Guardian and when communing with the Central Figures in the Shrines, she told me how strange it was that I could say that, because she had been feeling envious of me and thinking just the reverse! We circumambulated the monument shrines and said the special prayer for the Greatest Holy Leaf. Joyce and I had become very much attached to each other. You would hardly believe how sorrowful we were to part after such short acquaintance. I still have the memento she gave me – a lovely embroidered Norwegian belt.

The coming of Hiroyasu created a second occasion for me to visit 'Akká and Bahjí, when the dear Revell sisters were to be our escorts.

Irene Bennett with Jessie and Ethel Revell outside the Collins Gate, Bahjí

This time I did not miss the visit to Masra'ih, the home of Bahá'u'lláh for four years after 'Abdu'l-Bahá had gained His release from the Prison City of 'Akká. We saw the lovely view of orange orchards and the pretty garden, walked up the long flight of stone steps trodden so often by Bahá'u'lláh, and entered His room left just as it was when He used it. As at the Shrine, we all said prayers – two in Arabic, one in Japanese and the others in English. When our visit was over, Mrs Gerah had tea waiting for us with delicious Persian cookies and oranges and tangerines from the garden. We were also given little nosegays of violets which had been in Bahá'u'lláh's room. An extra gift of a whole spray of tangerines was also given to me.

From Masra'ih we continued to Bahjí where the great bounty and privilege of being in those sacred precincts and the Shrine of Bahá'u'lláh were repeated for me all over again. Once more I slept in what I now looked upon as “my” room in the Mansion, and there in that very room Jessie found, as one among three photographs already framed but not yet hung, the one of myself with the Teso Bahá'ís that the Guardian had said in a letter to Nairobi that he would place in the Mansion at Bahjí. This time as we walked along the main path to the Shrine I plucked about ninety-nine weeds from among the smooth pebbles to make up for not having picked “my nine” on the last occasion. We had hoped to be able to go to the Garden of Ridván, but heavy rain had made the access road impassable.

Our diminished number after the departure of Joyce, Al and Maud brought about a change in arrangements at the dinner-table. I found that I had then been allocated the seat at the head of the table, with Shoghi Effendi at right-angles on my right. I had thus been moved closer to him but I preferred my first position when we faced each other directly.

One morning Hiro and I climbed up the rocky path above the Shrine of the Báb, to the top of Mount Carmel from where we could look down upon our beautiful golden-domed edifice from above to the bottom of the mountain, along Ben Gurion Avenue with its residences of the Knights Templar who in the time of Bahá'u'lláh established themselves there to await the return of Jesus Christ, and to the coast line and Mediterranean Sea beyond.

On another occasion Sylvia Ioas hired a taxi and took us to the top of Mount Carmel further over to the south, to visit the spot destined to become the site of the future Mashriqu'l-Adhkár on Mount Carmel. Leroy Ioas was at that time engaged in negotiations for the purchase of that piece of land which the Guardian called the head of the mountain. Speaking about this matter one evening at dinner he had said that we already have the heart of the mountain and soon we shall have the head. After that the Jews can keep the tail. The situation is really ideal dominating the bay and the town of Haifa over to the right of it as one faces the seat. It was a heavenly spot, where wild red anemones were growing in profusion, symbols according to Abu'l-Faḍl, of the blood of the martyrs, so I picked a few and later pressed them.

Jessie was always my dearest sweetest Bahá'í sister from the Pilgrim House who looked after me like a mother and surrounded me with love and little gifts – a small bottle of perfume, a piece of the golden tiles left over from the dome of the shrine and a photograph of 'Abdu'l-Bahá taken at the Revell home in Philadelphia on his journey across the U.S.A. in 1912.

'Abdu'l-Bahá at the home of the Revell family in Philadelphia (June 1912)

She would put roses from the garden in my room, some new little posy almost every day, even if she could find only one budding blossom. On the eighth day she had the joyous news to impart to me that I was not to be saying goodbye to them all on the following day because our beloved Guardian had granted me an extra day of pilgrimage so that I would not have to leave on "dead" day (Saturday) when Israel became paralysed, and have to stay two days in Tel Aviv waiting for my return flight. This extension was more than a privilege and evidence of loving care: it was to bestow a very special blessing upon me, such as I could never have imagined.

Prior to that I was also to be favoured and able to get to know more intimately that dear Hand of the Cause Millie Collins. On what would have been the afternoon of my departure I had instead dear Millie's company. She first escorted me over to the house of the Guardian, also her home as I have already said, and took me to the room where 'Abdu'l-Bahá passed away. There, after having made me a present of the newest American prayer book which had been consecrated at the Shrine of Bahá'u'lláh, together with a sweet little handkerchief, she left me to stay for as long as I wished. She next took me into the room of the Greatest Holy Leaf, after which visit we then went out arm in arm to take a walk together. Millie was so lovely, so spiritual and devoted to the Cause, and had been so close to my beloved Dorothy Baker. We thus felt linked by this special bond of love for Dorothy. Millie said I had been an inspiration to her, coming as a pilgrim from Africa and being such a young Bahá'í. (All others there were at least middle-aged, Rúhíyyih Khánum, ten years my senior being the next in age). In the course of our little outing we called upon a Jewish friend of Millie's, who prepared tea for us.

Also towards the end of my pilgrimage I was suddenly captured by Muḥammad Tabrizi, an uncle of Jalál and ‘Alí Nakhjavani, who presented me with four little bottles of very precious water to be taken back to East Africa – one for Jalál, one for ‘Alí, one for ‘Azíz Yazdí, and one for myself. They contained some of the water used by the Guardian to wash his hands when he came safely down from performing a task high up inside the dome of the Shrine of the Báb. He had climbed up to that height to place a piece of plaster from the prison cell of the Báb in Mah-ku beneath one of the golden tiles of the dome, while all waiting below prayed and watched in anguish lest their dearly loved Guardian might fall from his precious position.

Finally the culminating happiness of my pilgrimage was reserved for the tenth and last day. The group of poor Persian ladies who had arrived at the Oriental Pilgrim House on the same day as I had made my appearance at the Western Pilgrim House had to leave without seeing Rúḥíyyih Khánúm for several days, owing to her not being fit to host the afternoon tea parties, and they were thereby so disappointed, whereas the extra day allocated to me was destined to fill in the missing link between the idealised Rúḥíyyih Khánúm I had carried to Haifa in my mind and the actual disappointing experiences that being informally in her presence had proved. This happened in the following way.

Towards mid-day, suddenly came bursting into our little sitting room Muḥammad Bahá’í, the Guardian’s chauffeur, in search of me, with a message from Rúḥíyyih Khánúm. He had just brought her back from a visit to her doctor and she wanted to see me to say goodbye before my departure. He was to take me over to her right away. The sun was shining, the morning was warm and there across the road she was sitting on the low wall beside the path leading to the door, and she called me to go up and sit beside her. Then she began chatting to me as if in the company of a close old-time friend, in whom it was natural to confide, sitting relaxed upon a wall. In total contrast to the stiff silent awkwardness I had manifested while drinking tea in the gatherings, in her sitting-room I felt so natural and so much at home perched beside her on the wall, and was no longer tongue-tied, as we laughed and talked together. I realised that she had been holding audience in her sitting-room, getting up for weeks when she should have been in bed, because she could not bear to miss the pilgrims who had come so far, and especially the Persian ladies who met her only at those times. Her adorable soul that I had so eagerly hoped to recognise on this special pilgrimage was fully revealed to me. I felt her love and loved her in return. She told me how pleased she was that I had been able to come and continued by adding. “When we heard here in Haifa that you had become a Bahá’í I said to myself that this new Bahá’í must be a little old lady and that was how I imagined you until you came here. I am so glad to find how wrong I was and to know now that you are so young with many years ahead for service to the Cause”. Among other topics of our delightful conversation was one relating to the official dinner-party held a few nights previously. She expressed sorrow that because of it we had been deprived of the company of Shoghi Effendi and explained that it was a rare occasion for such an event to take place but sometimes it was necessary to invite Israeli officials to dinner on account of the standing of the Faith in Israel. She rated the social intercourse of the occasion as utterly worthless, "all froth" she called it. She had a gift to give me, a lovely white jumper that a Persian believer had lovingly knitted for her but in a size a good deal too small, but perfect for me. I was so happy that when I shortly had to part company from all the loved ones who had made me such a happy member of the family for the past ten days, I could savour this last heavenly encounter to alleviate the sadness of transition to the busy, noisy world of self-seeking, and rejoice too in memory of my last contact with the beloved Guardian as he bade me farewell. He said he would pray for my spiritual growth and that I would be victorious always and he invited me to come back again to Haifa.

We should not congregate in the large towns but should go to the pure air of the villages and teach the pure-hearted and untainted Africans. Nairobi is a large town. I am to tell the friends to disperse when a community becomes larger than fifteen. Any beyond fifteen are spare and can open new areas, and perhaps refill territories which have become virgin again. We are not to think only of Kenya. . . . We are to spread and teach the near centers first, and leave the far off ones for later. Faith is not enough. Good character is also important. We must not try to push people in for numbers. . . . The Guardian said Bahá'ís should cultivate good relationship with the authorities without interfering in their affairs. We must not hide our plans because this creates suspicion. We must not take sides in politics for this will create problems for other countries as Bahá'ís in the world live under different forms of government, and some governments are hostile towards each other, and therefore by mixing with politics, Bahá'ís might split the Faith and endanger the essential unity. If we explain properly to the governments why we keep away from politics, they will understand, be convinced, admire us and have greater confidence in us. It is impossible for Bahá'ís to believe that by entering politics they can clean them. They will be submerged. Politics are too corrupt for them to be able to counteract them and they are becoming more and more confused.

He said that Bahá'ís should be like running water, not like stagnant pools. They should be like mercury. The centers in Africa must not get like the old centers in America or London. They get fascinated by large cities and bogged down. He said that the more the Faith develops, the greater became the problems. They must be referred to the NSA's. That is why these were called into being. The Guardian is against publicity. (This question arose in connection with Norway.) We should not dissipate our energies, e.g. by making short visits to other towns. Not only are centers important, but it is important to increase the number of believers. Not only is it important for pioneers to go to the virgin territories which is not enough. They must spread and teach the Faith.

. . . He described his illumination of the gardens at Bahjí as a sea of light, and those on Mount Carmel as tiers of light. One shrine is situated on a mountain and the other in a plain. . . He said the Americans at home were too soft and lacked the spirit of adventure. They are too busy thinking, "What shall I do when I get there? What comforts can I take with me? Shall I have a refrigerator? Will there be television? Which of my possessions shall I take?" The longer they postpone the harder it will be. They are becoming like jellies, and it is difficult to displace a jelly, isn't it? They should learn from the British who led the world in pioneering. 60% of all the British Bahá'ís had become pioneers; the Persians were the bottom of the scale, and the Americans have followed them in slowness. The American negroes are becoming more and more materialistic and as standards improve they become more and more attached to these things. They have passive — because of the example of materialism of the whites, and the attitude of the white believers towards them which has not been wholly free from prejudice and they feel it in their hearts and get discouraged. The whites should have responded to the call to go to Africa and this would have had a tremendous effect on them. The example set by the whites has not been such as to inspire the coloured believers. The white believers must enkindle their spirits, but they have set a bad example done the opposite. There is great material force attracting them and not a sufficient force to attract them away from these things.

The Guardian said that that the NTC was not working as it should. He stressed the importance of committees and sub-committees. The NTC should have sub-committees for each of the goal countries, and original committees for the 10 year goals. . . He mentioned the sad fact that so little literature had been translated into Japanese. The Guardian said that the most important books for translation are the Gleanings, Some Answered Questions, and the Íqán. The Mashriqu'l-Adhkár in Japan is to be erected in Fujiyama, the Sacred Mountain.

The Guardian said one night that he was very happy but exhausted for he had been writing a long letter to the Persian friends since 2:30 am without food. It was then 7:30 pm. He had been giving them a full report of the progress of the Crusade. He had been telling them, and told us to share this good news with the friends, that in three quarters of a century, to the Jubilee year of 1944, more than 40 new countries were opened to the Faith; in the nine years following up to the beginning of the 10 year Crusade, 50 new countries were opened; and then in one year more, 90 more countries were opened and he was very hopeful that the number would be raised to 100 by Ri van. He pointed out that this demonstrates the power latent in the Cause because the time was obviously not superior to the time when the Founder of the Faith Himself was living. On another occasion he was talking about a government servant who was a covenant breaker and how such a single person could poison the minds of so many yet, he said there was something mysterious about this Cause which promotes and safeguards it — it is the spirit of the Cause. He said that in the Báb's time two countries were opened to the Faith., in Bahá'u'lláh's time the Faith reached the continents of Asia and Africa, in 'Abdu'l-Bahá's time it reached the fringes of the five continents, now we were reaching the fringes of every country in the world and the next plan will be the diffusion and suffusion of the Light within the countries. In the time of the Central Figures, a step was taken, now it has become a stride, next it will be a jump, then he hesitated a moment and said, and explosion. First the spark was kindled in Síyáh-Chál, in Baghdád it became a lamp, and then in Adrianople a crystal globe. The Guardian another night compared the development of the Faith first with a point i.e. an isolated believer, then when points move about and attract other souls they become letters — groups of believers, then the letters become words, LSA's and then sentences — NSA's and then a book — the Universal House of Justice. The point is the starting thing, the word a beginning, the sentence has an idea and the book a theme.

Opening the virgin territories was quick, but the next step will be slow. It will take time for the Assemblies must function and learn to work harmoniously. He said the 50 NSA's will be formed only towards the close of the Ten Year Plan. As each one is formed it will be a pillar of the UHJ. . . We are now building the Administrative Order which is leading to the world Order. Then will come the fruit which is Bahá'í Civilization when the Bahá'ís will take over from the non-Bahá'ís. . . Bahá'í architecture is developing on new and original lines. All the temples are to be original but each is to be circular in shape and nine sided. These were the only limitations imposed by 'Abdu'l-Bahá. . . Now is the time of searching — for jobs, for sites, for souls and the time for experimenting. This is a time of great challenges to the pioneers because their work is so difficult, they are so very meritorious. . . The Guardian said that now the Cause is so big, he cannot keep up with it. NSA's are to do the work.

The enemies of 'Abdu'l-Bahá once threatened to throw Him into the Mediterranean Sea. He said if they did they would do Him the greatest honor for they would give him the widest possible sepulcher. Now Dorothy Baker has this wide sepulcher. If they did not throw him into the sea they were going to banish him to the desert. Now there is an Assembly where he was to be banished.

The Guardian said that the German Bahá'ís get too fogged by detail, the Persians are too fond of anecdotes and do not study, but the British are the happy medium. They are not too scholastic like the Germans and not superficial like the majority of the Persians. Before I arrived he had told the Americans that they were too impulsive and that the British were in balance with both the Germans and Americans.

The Guardian wished so much that he could know the situation in places like Czechoslovakia. He said that ideally the Hands of the Cause should travel to these countries. The work of the Hands of the Cause now is to promote the 10 Year Crusade and later to concentrate on the teaching work. There will be great opposition from civil and religious authorities, but this will bring us publicity and cause our rise and their fall.

African beliefs came to them through Sabianism, a corrupt form of Sabianism, which was corrupted by the time of Abraham who rebelled against it. Shinto is a corruption of Buddhism which was a divinely inspired religion. Shinto was not but it had the greatest following. It was a corruption Buddhism. It was a corruption like the various forms of Christian faiths today. The Roman Catholics are idolators, like the primitive Africans, but in a specialized way. Of all the Faiths, Islám is the least corrupted.

WHAT MANNER OF MAN WAS THIS?

Laura Davis

He stood at the head of the table waiting to welcome his friends. With a quivering heart, I waited that welcome, as I stood at the end of the line which is led by the newly arrived pilgrim. How often through the passing years I had tried to imagine Beinh Herr, where I now stood. In a dream once I had found myself here. Now, at, long last, that dear dream had come true, the imagination has become a fact, the longing has become fulfilled.

Who is this man for whose “welcome” I have waited so long? This man who holds himself like a king, for king he is yet there is such profound humility, the humility of the true great.

He wears a black suit over his suit, a black fez or taj which shows dark hair slightly graying at the temples. He is not tall, yet stately, slight yet breathing strength. Eyes of hazel brown that can glow with hidden fire, with flashing light, with rich enthusiasm or lower in deep thoughtfulness.

The face is heart-shaped, delicately molded, the nose straight, the mouth beautiful, as though made more beautiful than is usual by beautiful words that have glowed from it through the years, the small mustache not hiding any of that beauty.

Who is this man and why have I yearned through the years to stand before him?

His lineage goes back through the centuries to Abraham, that Prophet who led His people from one of the chaldees to the Holy Land. Kings have been His forebears. Prophets have been ancestor to him, Muḥammad on his father’s side, and the Blessed Beauty, Bahá’u’lláh on his mother’s side.

His childhood and early youth was carefully guarded by Him, who is the way-shower of all mankind, the master, ‘Abdu’l-Bahá, or as the world knows Him, Sir Abba Effendi. He was born in the prison city of ‘Akká, to a family of prisoners, for these great ones of the Earth had been immured behind prison walls, by those who feared the New Message from God. The princes of the world feared, knowing that He who speaks with the power of God is given full dominion over all the Earth and they knew their time to be short.

The time has come to move forward, to enter that door that separates the world from “home”.. just a few steps now and I stand before him. His wife, the beautiful Ruhhiyih Khánum, tells him who I am, that I come from Canada, the land of her birth. His rich voice welcomes me and in that welcome, I truly come home. It had been enough that I was granted permission to travel to this Holy Land, and to this moment – that alone would have been more than repayment for all that I have done or hoped to do in life – even if the journey had not actually been accomplished. But that I now stood before him was bounty added to bounty.

His name for the world is Shoghi Effendi Rabbání and so he was known until a dark day which fell on November 26, 1921. On that day a greater name became his. That night while still a student at Oxford University in England, he, all unknowingly became the Guardian of the Bahá'í World Faith. That night when passing from this earth to His celestial home, his beloved Grandfather, 'Abdu'l-Bahá placed over his youthful shoulders, though he was not to know it for many faithful days, the Robe of Guardianship.

In the prison city of 'Akká he stood with the other members of the Holy Family and some visiting pilgrims to read the "Great Will and Testament" which held within its pages the answer to the mystery the question so often asked in the past "Who will guide and guard this Infant Faith when the Master ascends?" it is incumbent ... to turn into Shoghi Effendi, the youthful branch.." His reading stopped, he could not read on for there were other words written, "Whose obeyed him not... hath not obeyed God"

The shock was too great! To him who had thought he was being prepared to be the secretary of his beloved Grandfather... and now, that Grandfather had left him! There had been the long, slow journey from London to Haifa, the homecoming where the light of that home had gone out! Days of sorrow, of loneliness of unbelievable change had dragged on. Then that eventful day when the Great Will and Testament had been placed in his hands to read to the assembled company.. to break that seal.. and read.

The document opened with the words, "All praise to Him Who by the shield of His Covenant hath guarded."

THE MONUMENT GARDENS

It was raining when we visited this sacred spot, but the rain could not hide any of the beauty and wonder of that spot. We did not know that it was to be focal point for the Great Arc, which would one day hold the Universal House of Justice.

Dr. Luṭfu’lláh told us that the steps represent the local Spiritual Assemblies; the pillars, the National Spiritual Assemblies; the lovely Dome represented the Universal House of Justice and the little dome on top, he said the Guardian would not tell us of this. And that night at dinner, when the Guardian asked us if we had seen this garden, he explained all of it but the little dome. That he did not mention.

The other two monuments are for the mother and son of the Blessed Beauty. They are very lovely, and the story of how the Beloved Guardian and those bodies brought, and buried in this lovely place is a sad and beautiful story of his love for these dear ones who suffered more than we can know because of the enmity of those who tried to destroy this Faith.

Dinner at 7 P. M. with 31 ladies – we had palau, green onion, Turkish bread, tea, cha served fish with the most beautiful glasses and little plates. Rúḥííh Khánúmm talked of American luxuries to the Persian ladies, told them of our wonderful gadgets and then, what we would do if we had no electricity. How they have knowledge of how to live without gadgets and to give service in peril.. a woman whoa was bitten by a deadly snake, and each one there knew just what part to play to save life. What would an American woman have done? Cut, suck, clean.. at any tea party the man would have died.

SORAB

Sorab visited the Shrines and Holy Homes during the summer of 1954. He made the statement that he had attended the University of Beirut with Dr. L. Ḥakím, but this was not true as the doctor had never attended that university.

Sorab was secretary for ‘Abdu’l-Bahá for a number of years, this in answer by Dr. Ḥakím.

Sorab stayed only a few minutes in the Shrines and in the room of Bahá’u’lláh. He said that the gardens were spoiled by the ornamentation which was done by the Guardian, but Salah told him that he had better buy them in America, knowing that he would not do this.

THE FIRST VISIT TO THE SHRINE OF BAHÁ’U’LLÁH

We ach said a prayer then the Persian ladies chanted. The Tablet of Aḥmad was said by Olivia Kesley and Salah chanted the Tablet of visitation.

When we came out, the night had fallen and we walked back to the waiting room through gardens lighted with so many light standards. Dr. Luṭfu’lláh and I went hand in hand through a land forever near to His Shrine.

7.15. Sitting on the divan with the Persian ladies, before an electric fire and doing our best to talk to them, the men knew English helped us.

A story told by Dr. Luṭfu'lláh Ḥakím of the time of the Master's passing when He told both him and Curtis Kels to stay that they would be needed. "Stay here, you will be wanted." And they did not know why. So they were here at the time of the passing of the Master, Dr. Krug, Fujita, Luṭfu'lláh and Curtis.

Luṭfu'lláh had an album of pictures taken of 40 days before and following the death of the Master. It is now in Persia.

There is straw matting overall the floors which are of tile and very cold. Over the matting rugs are scattered. There is stone, marble and tile everywhere, some so beautifully decorated that it looks like carpet. There is a fortune in the rugs alone, the walls are white, blue trim, as blue as summer skies, on forget-me-nots. There is a lovely violet bed in the Riḍván garden.

During the Prayers at the Shrine of Bahá'u'lláh, Dr. Luṭfu'lláh relived the 40 days of the Master's passing and a veil of sadness covered him. When he had to show us the accommodations at each new place, he said in such a quiet voice, "I am so sorry to be so rude," then he would be like a little boy and smile, "But I do not so want my friends to be comfortable, so must show you how to be comfortable." He always took me first and then I could show the others. He would say, "Yes, I am a naughty boy." And at times, "and you are a naughty girl" then he explained the difference between being naughty or being bad, such a difference! When you do not know you are doing wrong, you are naughty, but when you disobey, you know then you are bad.

The dining room is yellow, like sunlight and there are openings where the swallows fly in. the nest is in the rafters at the top of the room. This is at it was when the Master was here. And the guardian does not wish it changed.

The kitchen is outside and the food is carried and through a large door which enters into a courtyard where there are wire-screened chicken runs and a place with the dearest white rabbits.

The bounty of being with the Persian friends is one that I just do not understand. It was granted by our beloved Guardian. We sat at table — nine of us, four women, 5 men. Olivia Kesley and I from the West, two Persians, all five men were Persians.

STORY OF THE LAYING OF THE PLASTER FROM MAKU UNDER ONE OF THE TILES OF THE SHRINE OF THE BÁB

The Guardian climbed up the ladder to place the wrought silver box under the special tile. The workmen fell on their knees to beg him not to climb. Leroy had had the scaffold removed so the friends could see the work, then the Guardian told him of the plaster which had to be placed in the silver box and placed under the special tile. So the scaffolding had to be replaced. Leroy stayed right behind the Guardian as he climbed the ladder, and when he reached the place where the tile was, Leroy put his arms around the Guardian, held him till he finished his task. The gardeners down below stopped work and prayed that the Guardian would not fall.

STORY of Leroy going the President of Israel, not to let Sorab see anything. Said that he was an enemy for the Cause and must not be allowed to see any of the Holy Places. The Guardian heard of this and said, "Let him go." So Sorab visited all the Holy Places in about 15 minutes. He did not chant one prayer. Leaving, he was asked, "Do you not wish to see the Shrine of the Master?" He said, "Well, yes." He entered, stayed only one minute, then left.

DOROTHY BAKER'S DREAM OF SORAB

Dorothy saw Sorab in her dream. Saw his arm wither and a great change come over him. She said, "How dare you! How dare you!" her husband said, "Why do you worry? Don't you see that his arm is withered already?"

UGO GIACHERIE

When special marble was needed for the Shrine, Ugo found that it was impossible to have the quarries opened – what to do? The marble must be found.

He searched until he found an opening. The man who owned the quarry was a stamp collector. Ugo talked stamps to him until he found that there was a stamp needed to complete a very valuable series. Ugo found where it was possible to obtain, this very rare and valuable stamp, and he bought it. Then presented it to the man who owned the quarries. They became friends. The quarries were opened because of this friendship and the stone was shipped to Haifa for the Shrine.

MAZRA'IH

THE LITTLE HOME WHICH RECEIVED BAHÁ'U'LLÁH AFTER HE LEFT THE WALLS OF 'AKKÁ.

THERE ARE DOWNSTAIRS ROOMS WHERE THE KEEPER LIVES. AND ALONG A HALLWAY, A HIGH FLIGHT OF STAIRS LEADING TO THE UPPER ROOMS. THESE ARE THE ORIGINAL STAIRS USED BY BAHÁ'U'LLÁH. AT THE FOOT OF THEM, a hanging on the wall, IS A LIFE-SIZED PICTURE OF A GUARD WHO BECAME A BELIEVER IN

BAHÁ'U'LLÁH AND GUARDED HIM WELL. BECAUSE OF THIS, OUR GUARDIAN HAS HAD THE PICTURE MADE AND SAID, "HE GUARDED HIM SO WELL, IN LIFE, HE MUST STAND GUARD HERE." HE SERVED FOR FIFTY YEARS IN THE TURKISH ARMY AND HE BECAME A BAHÁ'Í.

The house is cared for by a young lawyer, who is the son of this guard.

The Guardian furnished the four upstairs room in one day with three or four helpers. He knew just what was to be placed there and where each article was to go. It is all very lovely.

The bed of Bahá'u'lláh has a green cover with golden flowers on it, over this, a white cloth is spread and this is covered with blossoms, fresh, fresh blossoms. His taj is placed on the pillow and His shoes are at the front of the bed. On the wall, there is a picture of 'Abdu'l-Bahá with General Allenby.

The guard was Aḥmad Jerrah, the son of "Abdu'l Ruhman Jarrah of Acre, Israel. In the downstairs sitting room, there is a most interesting Persian print of Moses carrying the Commandant stones down the mountain and below him, the people with Aaron setting up the golden calf for worship. The mountains are so typical at Israel, with the sharp points and deep valleys of this land.

The view from the windows of Mazra'ih toward the West lies the old Roma aqueduct, in a lovely valley to the south to the far distance are rolling hills.

The old keeper or Mazr'ih is 85 years old and he was in-charge of the garden when 'Abdu'l-Bahá was alive. He still cares for them, he wears an Arab headdress.

THE MANSION OF BAHJI

After one enters that lovely wrought iron gate and walks along the pathway to the North of the Mansion. And arrives at the leather-covered door with its metal studs, there is a flight of about 32 steps of wide white marble leading to the upper floor, where the living rooms are.

This home is built in the same design as the Western Pilgrim House, with its central room with pillars – the corridor from outside the pillars from which the living rooms, bedrooms and others open out, and around it all the outer corridor with its arched outer wall.

The main or central room has lovely rugs in the center with four tables scattered around the room. On these are models of the Temple in Wiomette, the Shrine of the bab in Mount Carmel, and the Temple that is to be built on Mount Carmel in the future. The fourth table has many of the Incorporations of Assemblies, National and local frame, so that one may realize the growth of this Cause.

The room in the north-east corner is that of which 'Abdu'l-Bahá ascended. It has a lovely rug and though not a bed-stead it has a large cushion bed on the floor as it was when He slept there. Beside the bed, a little white table with an oil lamp on it. At the east of the room, a divan running the entire length of the room. It was here that He sat when interviewing Professor Brown and others. At the spot where He sat, His taj was placed. It is a high hat of brocade material, as seen in pictures. The windows of this room are kept closed and contained.

The spirit of this room is very powerful; prayer here brings great joy to the heart. It is almost as though He was speaking to the heart. And one answers with a realization of His dear nearness. In the night hours, one may rise from his bed and go to His room for a time of quiet communion with his Beloved.

In the corridor is hung a very large picture by Marion Jack. It is one of the scenes from the balcony showing the olive orchard with ‘Akká in the distance and the sea. It is beautifully painted.

One night, Dr. Luṭfu’lláh told me that, after all others had retired I might go to the room of Bahá’u’lláh by myself. That night, I did not sleep. The Mansion was quiet, so still. Quietly I arose, went to that door with the curtain embroidered with His name, gently pushed it aside and entered. The room will always remain my cost wonderful memory the moonlight glowed. There was a little light burning. On the floor, a glorious rug of soft colors in the center of that rug, the little white bed which had His slipper s at the bottom. I prostrated myself with my forehead on those slippers. At that hour, the old world ceased to be for me, and a new world opened. I begged for His protection that I might, however humbly, serve Him. Nothing else in life mattered now, but His love and assistance. For a long time, I lay there and knew that now, at long last, I had reached heave.

THE ONE HUNDRED YEAR OLD COVENANT-BREAKER

Almost beside the mansion, there is an old house, uncared for and sinister.

At one of its windows sits a very old man, he is paralyzed, even his tongue, so he cannot speak.

One wonders why he is forced to live in such a condition, by the loving God, for he has long passed his three score and ten. He is now more than 100 years old.

Years ago this man persecuted out ‘Abdu’l-Bahá. At every opportunity, he did those things that would be detrimental to the Faith of God, to its leaders. At last, seeing that he was not going to change his ways, ‘Abdu’l-Bahá went to him and told him that, for his enmity toward the Faith, he would be compelled to live to see its victory.

At that time, this man may have thought that long life would be a blessing. Many would like to know that a long life lay before them. But the years came and added and added to his span of life.

He became ill, then paralyzed and still he could not die. He prayed for death, but death passed him by, taking all that he had loved from him.

Now he sits, and looking out of his window, he sees lovely gardens rise, sees the great care taken at the home of Bahá'u'lláh, the sately mansion of Bahjí. He sees the success of the Faith.

Salah, the Arab keeper of the grounds, and of the Shrine of Bahá'u'lláh and who loved the Guardian, who had once saved his life, and he could not stand to see the old man at the window, so one day he got his ladders and went up and nailed up that window. A servant of the old man pushed on the ladder and knocked Salah on the head with an old shoe. This quarrel ended in court. Salah was made to learn to leave such matters alone.

When the Guardian heard of all of this, he told Salah to leave this man to God. The victory was evident, that was what mattered.

This was in 1954. as soon as our Guardian obtained the victory and owned the house and its land, he had the house torn down and now a lovely garden erases the memory of one who made himself an enemy to the Faith of God, and a Covenant-Breaker.

THE MOST GREAT PRISON

The first glance of the prison was from an elevation on the wall of the city from which the Persian friends has gazed to see the Beloved, when he was behind those bars. The sea was crashing below us and we were standing on a short of rounded abutment looking over the walls of the Prison toward those two windows at the upper right hand corner. Over these windows are four or five kinds of bars and the thickness must be two inches or more. They were so anxious to hold him thinking that iron bars could do it! There was a stone seat or divan on one side of the prison cell, since taken away, and a lovely rug has been placed where He sat. The walls have been painted white. They were not painted when He sat there in this cold. Now there are men, old and young who are mentally unfit, and they are cared for here in this building, which was the Prison. The prison holds many of them, but not now as prisoners, but as patients. Them in old clothes, and look so confused and lost. It gives one some little idea for those olden days. The center of the fort, which was at that time open for drilling, has now been divided by many walls, giving smaller space for the poor men to sit in the sun. There are nurses, and the one who led us was a Spanish Jewess. After the visit to the sell, which had been occupied by Bahá'u'lláh, this nurse wanted us to go to the place where many Jews had been hung, a room with a floor which jack-knifed opened, which dropped away when a chain was pulled, and the victim would drop to the depths below, A drop of perhaps of 12 or 15 feet. The walls of this room were filled with plaques, with the names of those killed by the Lurks and the Christians after them. The entire Prison atmosphere made one's heart bleed and tears were on all of our cheeks. Dr.

Luṭfu'lláh took my hand and said, "You must not be sad. He is not here."

SHOGHI EFFENDI – GUARDIAN

It is difficult to describe our Guardian as he is all things to all to find in him who is the Center of the Faith.

Delicacy, utmost refinement, spiritual beyond our thinking. He is a small man in stature, with very fine hands, the hands of an artist. His eyes are filled with power and spirit, joy or paths, for he reflects the feeling of the world in its wonder, having the realization of its sorrow in his heart.

He changes continually, depending upon the subject he is speaking upon. All his gestures are graceful, his hands most expressive, so finely made. When you look the Guardian, Shoghi Effendi, you realize that he is the Channel through which the Power of the Spirit of God speaks to men in this day.

Perhaps the best description I can give you is that a bog reflecting mirror which reflects back in its fullest capacity all that comes in front of it. He points out to you to use to the utmost that capacity which God has given you, when he turns to a community of Bahá'ís anywhere, he sees their greatest capacity, and this is sent back to them for use.

When the Guardian looks at the Bahá'í world, he realizes its utmost capacity, and he gives back to it the full obligation for that time. He sees in each of us what we can and should do, and calls up to the highest possible accomplishment. She knows what our spiritual capacity is, while we do not.

Another quality of our beloved Guardian is his extreme humility. He is so humble, as a man that one might think he does not exist as an entity or an individual. To instance this—he never refers to the Ten Year Plan as 'his' plan, he refers to it as "the Bahá'í World Plan". He never says 'my' plan, my work.

Another phase of that mirror is that it is always turned to God. What is reflected when it is turned to God, he gives to the world and that is when he is 'infallible' and where that infallibility comes from. He never refers to his work as his work; two weeks ago he explained to Leroy Ioas some things about the Administrative Order, as applied to the Faith as its Center. Leroy thought to himself, "This will not work here, in certain circumstances, it just will not work." The Guardian looked intently at Leroy and said, "You may think it will not work here", and then he carefully explained just how it would work. He knew our deepest thoughts!

The Guardian was speaking of certain conditions in America with which Leroy was conversant. He asked, "What do you know about this Leroy?" Leroy explained what he understood as to the facts of the case. The Guardian said, "No, that is not it. I will tell you what it is." And he described the affair in such detail, the utmost detail, much more fully than Leroy could have done who had been there at the time, and who saw all the things happen.

One night, the Guardian was very upset by a letter from a prominent believer who had written a bitter complaint about another Bahá'í. The Guardian said,

“This man is man is lying, because he is the cause of the trouble.” He showed the letter to Leroy and said, “I have written to tell him, he will be put out of the Cause, for he is lying to me. Who does he think he is that he can lie to me? Who does he think I am?”

The pulse of the whole world is in his hand. So you can see the character of the instrument of the cause. He reflects success and failure. When new is good, he is very happy, when it is bad, he is very sad. The Will and Testament tells us that we must not let the dust of despondency fall upon him. I often used to wonder how the Bahá'ís could affect Shoghi Effendi, but you can see how victory or failure is reflected in his joy or sadness.

The personal aspect of the Guardian: He is the only person on earth who receives direct guidance from on high and who is infallibility. There is no associate whatever in this state of infallibility. In some way he is the most pathetic figure in the world this Guardian of the Cause of God. Whenever we have problems we can talk them over with our friends, but when he has problems, he cannot talk them over with anyone, not with his wife or the members of the Universal House of Justice, because they all are but servants to help him. So when he is too sad, he will go off by himself to conquer the sadness he has received from the Bahá'í world. His heart is a mirror reflecting the joy of the world, and also he reflects all the sadness that the world has to suffer, and when he suffers, he suffers alone. We can talk our problems over with friends and we get that help and assistance. Knowing this, you can imagine the International Bahá'í Council would do to lighten the burdens and make our Guardian happy.

He has such a deep sense of humor. During the Wilmette Conference, Rihyiyih Khánúm sent special cable telling him of the success of the conference. One evening, he came to dinner with pockets full of cables, smiling very happy. When dinner was served, he pushed it aside and wanted to talk and tell the good news. Five thousand Bahá'ís at the dedication of the Temple, so that three meetings were necessary as the building only seated 1200. A cable told how wonderful it all was with over 150 offers to pioneer.

GUARDIAN AT THE TABLE

You would not think that Egypt was in Africa at all.

They are doing nothing outside of their own area and very little within.

“Africa has 1,000 Bahá'ís in 4 years.

America has 5,000 in 50 years.”

“Canada has done well, but most now purchase its Hariza land, its Temple land. Hariza is very necessary. This is most important.”

1954

The mother of the Guardian died in 1952. His father is still living. There are two brothers and two sisters, all are out of the Cause.

Maud and Albert Reimholtz

---

When we received permission to make our pilgrimage, the Beloved Guardian asked us to visit as many Bahá'ís as possible enroute to the Holy Land; which we did.

New York - Met with Bahá'í friends at West Engelwood (huge crowd). Mr. and Mrs. Curtis Kelsey talked about their pilgrimage and showed their pictures.

Amsterdam - Met Mr. and Mrs. Sysling and friends. Took pictures.

Frankfort - Met Ben Levy. Visited the Ḥaẓíra and friends at which time Ben told about his pilgrimage and showed pictures. Ben said that the acquiring of the Ḥaẓíra in Frankfort was a miracle. The friends had very little money but they were able to buy a building which was in shambles from the bombing during the war including the land on which it stood for very little money with the provision that the original owners could live out the rest of their natural lives on one floor of the building after the Bahá'ís rebuilt it. Now the friends rent out the rest of the building except for the top floor which is the Bahá'í Center and this enables them to pay the expenses. The war has not seemed to turn the hearts of the German people to God generally speaking - the friends find teaching very difficult.

Munich - We were given permission to host the Feast and had a wonderful visit with the friends. Took pictures.

Zurich - We were unable to get together with the friends. (We did not like the city of Zurich).

Geneva - Met with Honor Kempton and friends. Also met Mrs. Johnson who was returning from her pilgrimage: also met Hiro Takano, a Japanese who was on his way to Haifa due to arrive there two days before our pilgrimage was over. While flying from Geneva to Rome; we asked the stewardess to let us know when we were flying over Elba. which she did; and we then said a prayer for Dorothy Baker who had very recently gone down and died in a plane crash. She was returning from Haifa to the United States via London.

Rome — Met with Dr. Ugo and Angelina Giachery and friends. Mr. Frank Baker and Mrs. Beecher, husband and mother of Dorothy Baker were there too. The trials; tribulations and persecutions of the friends in Italy, especially in Rome is almost too much to bear. *The Giacherys are under constant surveillance by the police — their phone is tapped and they are called to the police station for questioning constantly. Took pictures.

Tel Aviv – Met Loyce Lawrence pioneer from Lofoten, Norway Who was also on her way to Haifa for her Pilgrimage.

Haifa – We all drove to Haifa together in a “scrambled taxi” from Tel Aviv.

Upon arrival we were greeted with open arms as though we had been away and were returning home.

2nd Day - Went to the Shrine to pray early this morning. Inside it is peaceful and calm the air perfumed with beautiful flowers. After our prayers; we walked through the magnificent gardens which are much more extensive and beautiful than we had imagined from pictures we had seen. After lunch we were free to take care of personal things until about 5 o'clock when all gathered in the sitting room for tea. At about 7:30 p.m.; they called us for dinner - the long anticipated moment when we would meet the Beloved Guardian for the first time. (More about this meeting; our impressions and what the Guardian said later).

3rd Day – The Guardian had arranged for, Marion Holley Hoffmann, Loyce

Lawrence, Luṭfu'lláh, Moson Remeý and us to go to Bahjí, where we are to spend two nights. After we arrived at Bahjí; we were taken for a stroll through the gardens which are also magnificent although not as extensive as at the Shrine of the Báb as they are only 1/4 completed. (At night the gardens are lit up - 60 light posts; 4 lights in each and it is a “sea of lights” - a breath-taking sight).

We went into the Shrine of Bahá'u'lláh to pray - the same peaceful atmosphere as in the Shrine of the Báb.

In the afternoon we visited the Garden of Riḍván (named after the one in Baghdád) where Bahá'u'lláh used to sit and talk to His followers.

In the evening Sala took us through the Mansion (where we sleep) showing us the various rooms kept in tact — the ones where Bahá'u'lláh and the various members of the family slept.

In the huge central room, Shoghi Effendi has many interesting items such as pictures; Assembly incorporation papers - framed; models of our TEmple; the Báb's Shrine, maps of Bahá'í World from time to time, beautiful Persian rugs.

4th Day - This morning we had to ourselves - to pray in the Shrine. read; write or do whatever we wanted. In the afternoon we went to Mazar'ih where Bahá'u'lláh lived for two years after He came out of the prison in 'Akká. Again, as was the case wherever we went we were showered with love and hospitality. Later, we were taken to visit the walled prison in 'Akká. We visited the cell where Bahá'u'lláh was kept and here we were overpowered with the feeling of sorrow; even more than in the room at Bahjí where Bahá'u'lláh passed on. Then we visited the House of Aboud in 'Akká where Bahá'u'lláh lived for six years where the Book of Aqdas was revealed and where 'Abdu'l-Bahá was married. We also visited the house where 'Abdu'l-Bahá received the first American pilgrims; Mrs. Wm. Randolph Hurst and party. We then went back to Haifa.

Incidentally, at night from Bahjí we could see the; Shrine of the Báb and gardens lighted up across the bay in Haifa.

We were extremely happy to be back because it means another evening with the Beloved Guardian.

All the lady pilgrims, both Eastern and Western. were invited to Rúhíyyiah Khánum's home for tea.

5th Day - Today is Jewish Sabbat and the day for huge crowds to visit the Shrine and gardens. We were all sked to help with the guiding today. There Were over 1,000 visitors today. Later, as was customary every day while we were at the Western Pilgrim House, we had tea in the afternoon with Rúhíyyiah Kahnum and dinner with the Guardian.

6th Day - After our trip to the Shrine for prayers; Jessie Revell took us for a tour of the city of Haifa

7th Day - After our trip to the Shrine for prayers, Sylvia Ioas took us for a drive to the top of Mt. Carmel and then into the new section of Haifa. The view from the top is indescribably beautiful.

This afternoon we welcomed a new pilgrim Hiro Takano; whom we had met in Geneva. We took him under our wing - showed him the Shrines and gardens and monuments in Monument Gardens. Luṭfu'lláh then took us through the Minor Archives. Tea and dinner.

8th Day - We went to the Shrines and stayed a long time because it was our last visit since we would be leaving early tomorrow morning. Luṭfu'lláh then took us through the Major Archives which took the rest of the morning.

This evening we bid farewell to the Beloved Guardian and Rúhíyyiah Khánum. Part of our hearts stayed with them.

There has been a bond of love established which can never be broken.

9th Day - Bade farewell to Millie Collins, Mason Remey; Sylvia and Leroy Ioas, Jessie and Ethel Revell and Homa, the little Persian maid who gave us so much special attention.

After leaving Haifa, we visited Nazareth, Tiberius and Jerusalem in succession.

Nazareth - Visited the carpenter shop where supposedly Mary and Joseph and Jesus lived: the synagogue where Jesus preached as a child: the spot where Mary received the annunciation.

Tiberias - We visited the Sea of Galilee and the shore where Jesus called to the fishermen and said "Follow me".

Jerusalem - Here we spent the last night before leaving Israel.

Athens - Here we had a glorious time visiting with the pioneers - Banánís and Allens. They took us on sightseeing trips of a Greek ruins and the spot where they prayed upon their arrival which turned out to be the very spot where St. Paul gave his message to the Athenians.

Rome - Back to Rome where we were told the airlines were on strike and we would be unable to get to Sicily where we had planned to visit the pioneers there. We decided then to go home and we were able to arrange the same flight with Mrs. Beecher and Frank Baker so we all flew to New York together. We observed the Feast together while flying over the Atlantic.

After flying half way around the world via all kinds of air lines in beautiful flying weather, we got as far as Chicago and were unable to land because of a terrific snow storm and were taken back to Detroit.

Luckily we were able to get the last plane out for Milwaukee and arrived home about 10:00 p.m., tired and hungry but extremely happy.

The Beloved Guardian

While waiting to meet the Guardian for the first time, we were all filled with apprehension. The minutes were ticking by when we were about to meet the most important and greatest man in the world - God's representative on earth! Finally, the call came and we went downstairs to the dining room. He was seated at the table, but when he saw us; he rose. He greeted us with a firm hand clasp and said "Welcome". At that instant all of our apprehensions faded and our whole being was enveloped with love. As he started to speak we were all held spell-bound and hung on every word almost afraid to say anything lest we deprive ourselves of even one precious word from him. We were impressed with his spontaneous kindness and charm. When he speaks: you feel his eagerness and firm determination; His vision of the Cause is beyond our 'imagination and when you see what he has accomplished in a few short ears you realize as never before that he is indeed divinely inspired and guided - no mere man could do what he as done. 'He is truly the "balance of the Cause" because without him at the helm, guiding us I'm sure the Faith would fall apart. We realize how really immature and materialistic we really are "The Guardian puts us on a pedestal and treats us like the mature individuals we should be. He takes for granted that we are "seeking the Kingdom of God first", that we are not concerned with the security of a home or our health or our investments. We are supposed to have attained the maturity of faith in God that He will protect and take care of us if we arise to serve Him. Words to this effect we had read many times but the true impact of the meaning was not brought home to us until after we had listened to the Guardian.

What the Guardian said;

“Disperse!”

There are two plans working in the world today: Non-Bahá'í plan - evolution of the human race starting with Adam. Bahá'í plan - Divine Revelation starting with Adam.

‘The Guardian is only concerned with the Bahá'í plan which is constructive and will culminate in the Bahá'í World Commonwealth - a pure Theocracy. The non-Bahá'í will work parallel to the Bahá'í plan and will culminate in political unity or the Lesser Peace, but during the rise of the political unity: the world will decline spiritually and after the world catastrophic upheaval» they will be spiritually starved and then turn to God. The catastrophic upheaval will be socially, politically economically and every way. He used the example of the Roman Empire and said that the fall of the Roman empire was a local catastrophe – this one will be universal.

Now; as to the Bahá'í plan, he explained that the Genesis - was the coming together of the law of Bahá'u'lláh with the mind of ‘Abdu'l-Bahá; i.e. Mother and Father.

Seed - was the framework laid down by ‘Abdu'l-Bahá before His ascension - 1921.

Embryo - begins with the forming of the Local and National Assemblies and the Universal House of Justice - Formative Age - which we are now in.

Child - World Order - Political Unity of Lesser Peace.

Adult - Bahá'í World Commonwealth or the Most Great Peace. This will not come about in the Bahá'í Dispensation. The growth from the child to the adult is a long and painful process and not until the Bahá'í plan absorbs the non-Bahá'í plan will we have the Most Great Peace. As the Bahá'í population of states and countries become the “majority”; then will the world become Bahá'í.

To show how the Faith has progressed in the Formative period, the Guardian reviewed that we first established the Local Spiritual Assemblies: then the National Spiritual Assemblies and he hoped soon the Universal House of Justice would be formed, the forerunner of which was the appointing of the Hands of the Cause. He said first we had Conventions (National), then Conferences (Continental) and he hoped in 1963, a World Congress (World). Before that. however, we will probably have an all Africa Conference, also Oceanic Conferences - islands, not continents.

The World Congress will have 60 National Spiritual Assemblies participating.

The Guardian said that up until now it has been necessary for the Bahá'ís to concentrate on local and national affairs. Now they must concentrate on the international and he used the example: local was the foundation: national was the pillars; international is the dome. We now have to complete our building by finishing the dome.

He went on to tell us of the plans for the International Headquarters or World Order. We now own 120 acres of land - 60 at Bahjí and 60 on Mt. Carmel, and are in the process of buying more valuable land which IS sold to us because the Jews want dollars. Each N.S.A. will own some land as their Israeli Branch.

Miscellaneous Subjects.

The Guardian said we should leave the large cities before we get trapped in materialism. There was a time for consolidation, but now is the time to scatter. No community should have more than 15 members. Move to a new place, stay until the membership reaches 15, then move again, thereby establishing the Faith in many places., It is better to have three groups than one assembly except in places where we are trying to establish N.S.A.s .

Difference between Theocracy and Democracy: Theocracy is Divine in origin. One difference is that in a Theocracy those elected are not responsible to those people who elected them, but are only responsible to God.

Marriage and Divorce: Before marriage the couple must get the consent of all four parents. Divorce is frowned upon but not prohibited. The parties should separate and live apart for one year, then live together again. If they still cannot agree and live harmoniously, they should then divorce.

Politics: Bahá'ís should absolutely avoid involvement in any political entanglements or even discussions. They should not express an opinion one way or the other. The Bahá'ís belongs to God's Party and exercise His politic. Bahá'ís must cultivate good relationship with the authorities without interfering in their affairs. We must not have our plans because this creates suspicion. We must not take sides in politics for this will create problems for other countries, as Bahá'ís in the world live under different forms of government and some governments are hostile towards each other: therefore by mixing with politics, Bahá'ís might split the Faith and endanger the essential unity. If we explain properly to the governments why we keep away from politics, they will understand, be convinced, admire us and have greater confidence in us.

It is impossible for Bahá'ís to clean up corrupt politics by entering into it. They will be submerged" Politics are too corrupt for them to be able to counteract them and they are becoming more and more confused.

Temple Site: There will be an obelisk erected on the Temple side on Mount Carmel. Beneath it will be buried a scroll with the name of Mason Remey , the architect of the obelisk and Temple and Millie Collins, doner of the land., an Indians and Gypsies: The Guardian stressed the importance of teaching minority groups The Faith must be carried to all peoples of the world.

Bahá'í Culture: Bahá'í culture - arts, music, etc. will be an evolutionary process. When someone asked the Guardian if future Bahá'í Temples would be as beautiful as the one in Wilmette, he said, each new Temple will be more beautiful because we will be developing Bahá'í architecture.

Bahá'í Laws will be applicable only to the Bahá'í Dispensation.

It will always be known as the Bahá'í Cycle because Bahá'u'lláh was the One who established it, but the name Bahá'í will not be used after the coming of the new Manifestation in 1,000 years. The followers will then take on the name of the new Manifestation. In that day, the majority of the people will accept the new Manifestation and the minority will reject.

The Guardian said that the Germans were too thorough, the Americans too hasty and the English a happy medium. He wonders if the Americans even take time to read his messages.

The Guardian recommends studying the book "The Epistle to the Son of the Wolf". He said it is the cream of Bahá'u'lláh's writings. It would be well if the friends would memorize it especially the part on progressive revelation.

One night the Guardian said that he was very happy but exhausted because he had been writing a long letter to the Persian Friends since 3:30 a.m. without food. It was then 7:30 p.m. He had been giving them a full report of the progress of the Crusade. He had been telling them (and he told us to share this good news with all the friends) that in three quarters of a century during the lifetime of the three Central figures less than 40 countries were opened to the Faith: during the next quarter of a century to the Jubilee year of 1944, more than 40 new countries were opened to the Faith: in the nine succeeding years to the beginning of the 10 Year Crusade, 50 new countries were opened; and then on ONE year, 90 more countries were opened and he was very much hoping that the number would be raised to 100 by Ridván.

He pointed out that this demonstrates the power latent in the Cause because the time was obviously not superior to the time when the Founder of the Faith Himself was living.

On another occasion he was talking about a government servant who was a covenant breaker and how such a single person could poison the minds of so many, and yet, he said, there is something mysterious about this Cause which promotes and safeguards it - fit is the spirit of the Cause. He said that in the Báb's time, 2 countries were opened to the Faith: in Bahá'u'lláh's time the Faith reached the continents of Asia and Africa: in 'Abdu'l-Bahá's time the Faith reached the fringes of the five continents: now we were reaching the fringes of every country in the world and the next plan will be the diffusion and suffusion of the Light within the countries. In the time of the Central Figures, a step was taken, now it has become a stride, next it will be a jump and then (here he hesitated a moment and then said) an explosion! First the spark was kindled in the Síyáh-Chál, in Baghdád it became a lamp, and then in Adrianople a crystal globe.

The Guardian another night compared the development of the Faith first with a point, i.e. an isolated believer, then, when points move about and attract other souls they become letters, groups of believers, then the letters become words - LSA's and then sentences - NSA's, and then a book - The Universal House of Justice. The point is the starting thing, the word a beginning, the sentence has an idea and the book a theme.

Opening the virgin territories was fast, but the next step will be slow. It will take time for the Assemblies must function and learn to work harmoniously.

We are now building the Administrative Order which is leading to the World Order. Then will come the fruit which is Bahá'í Civilization.

In Russia five territories have had Bahá'ís and eleven have remained virgin. For the opening of Russia, Japan must enter from the east and Germany from the west - must join hands and link up in Russia. From the south the Persians must enter Russia and from the north, through Alaska, the Americans.

The order of work to be done is:

1. Multiplication of centers.
2. Formation of NSAs.
3. Framing of the Bahá'í National Constitution.
4. Presenting to the authorities, i.e. incorporation.
5. Establishment of the Israel Branch and transfer of some of the property on Mount Carmel in the name of the Israel Branch of the NSA.
6. Establishment of Hizirat'l Quds
7. Endowments by Bahá'í architecture is developing on new and original lines. All the temples are to be original but each is to be circular in shape and nine-sided. These were the only limitations imposed by 'Abdu'l-Bahá. The side for the Temple in Panama came under discussion as there were two possibilities. The Guardian unhesitatingly told them to buy the cheaper, one as it was quite large enough and the difficulty of clearing and levelling the land could be attended to later. He stressed that the thing to do was to buy now within our means. He went on to explain that at this stage he was urging the points of the 10 year plan which were easiest to accomplish, that it was always his method of working so that he cleared as much as possible from his mind as soon as possible and then he had plenty of time to devote to those matters which were going to be difficult to accomplish.

African beliefs came to them through a corrupt form of Sabianism which was corrupt at the time of Abraham who rebelled against it. Shinto is a corruption of Buddhism which was a divinely inspired religion. Shinto was not, but it had the greatest number of followers. It was a corruption like the various forms of Christian Faiths of today. Of all Faiths, Islám is the least corrupted.

Capitalism and communism are both forms of materialism.

The Guardian told us he had been urging Mr. Mobine on his return to America to encourage the New York believers to go to Cyprus where Mírzá Yaḥyá opposed Bahá'u'lláh, and to Fezzan because of its association with 'Abdu'l-BaQa. (The enemies of the Cause wanted to banish Him there). He said the people of New York had been especially privileged by 'Abdu'l-Bahá because He had singled out this community for the City of the Covenant and proclaimed His Covenant there. To go to Cyprus and Fezzan now (would be an act of fidelity, and this they must prove by their actions. "Yet, neither New York with its privileges, nor Chicago, the oldest Bahá'I (Community had done anything to set an example.

The Guardian hopes that the Bahá'ís in South Africa will not do as they (have done in America, that is, to concentrate on the white population. (Their only hope is to attract the Africans, taking Uganda as their example. He said the Americans at home were too soft and lacked the spirit of adventure.) They are too busy thinking "What shall I do when I get there? What comforts can I take with me? Shall I have a refrigerator? Will there be television? Which of my possessions can I take with me?" The longer they postpone, the harder it will be. They are (becoming like jellies, and it is difficult to displace a jelly, isn't it? They should learn from the British who led the world in pioneering. 60% of all the British BAha'is had become pioneers either at home or abroad. In percentage of pioneers the Persians were at the bottom and the Americans followed them in slowness.

The American negroes are becoming more and more materialistic and as standards improve they become more and more attached to these things.

They have become passive (a) because of the example of materialism of the whites: (b) the attitude of the white believers towards them which has not been wholly free from prejudice and they feel it in their hearts and get discouraged. The example set by the white believers must enkindle their spirits, but they have set a bad example and have done the opposite. There is a great material force attracting them and not sufficient force to attract them away from these things.

Notes

Extracts from her book, Memories of ‘Abdu’l-Bahá, Recollections of the Early Days of the Bahá’ís of California (Bahá’í Publishing Trust, Wilmette, 1980).

[unedited online version provided by Robert Stauffer, 1998.]

Ramona Allen Brown was born in Boulder Creek, California, on August 10, 1889, the only daughter of Dr. Woodson and Frances Orr Allen. In 1904 she heard about the Bahá’í Faith, which she embraced immediately. ‘Abdu’l-Bahá’s visit to California in 1912 only deepened her commitment to her Faith. Except for a short trip to Hawaii, Mrs. Brown remained in California, raising her family and teaching the Bahá’í Faith - until 1954. In that year she made a pilgrimage to the World Center of the Bahá’í Faith, then settled in Majorca and later in Austria. In 1963 poor health forced her to return to California, where she lived in La Jolla until her death on February 23, 1975, at the age of eighty-six. To the end of her life she continued to share her memories of the beloved ‘Abdu’l-Bahá.

In 1946 my husband, Arthur Brown, and I moved into a new home in Oakland. Shortly afterwards Agnes Alexander spoke at our first meeting, and on that day Arthur and I dedicated our home to the service of Bahá’u’lláh. Many Bahá’í activities took place in our home; friends enjoyed the meetings where Ella Cooper, Mark Tobey, Marziah Gail, Bahia Gulick, Loulie Mathews, and many others spoke. It was from this home, after the passing of Arthur, that my daughter [Barbara], my granddaughter ["Bobbin"], and I attended the dedication of the Bahá’í House of Worship in Wilmette in 1953. After this I went to the International Conference in Stockholm, Sweden, and visited the Bahá'ís of Oslo and Copenhagen for several months before returning to my home in Oakland in December. My desire was to arrange my affairs quickly and go pioneering. However, to my surprise and joy, I received an invitation to make my pilgrimage in May, and I deferred my other plans.

It was early afternoon on May 10, 1954, when I arrived in Haifa. As my taxi approached the Eastern Pilgrim House, suddenly through the treetops I caught a glimpse of the golden dome of the Shrine of the Báb. Never will I forget the exhilaration of that moment! After my first outburst of joy, I was silent. Other fleeting views of the Shrine appeared, but I was too overcome to utter a sound. {{p112}} Arriving at the Western Pilgrim House where we were to stay, I was greeted by Jessie Revell, who told me that she would accompany me to the house of ‘Abdu’l-Bahá where I had been invited to have tea with Rúhíyyih Khánum. As I walked up the steps, I was thrilled by the thought that the Master had for years climbed these same steps, and I entered the large main room where He had so often received His guests. As Rúhíyyih Khánum came toward me with outstretched arms and lovingly embraced me, I could feel the very presence of ‘Abdu’l-Bahá. Later I was able to spend some time alone in prayer and meditation at the side of the iron bed in the modest room nearby where the Master had slept and passed away in 1921.

Soon it was the dinner hour at the Western Pilgrim House, and my dream of being in the presence of our beloved Guardian was coming true. Shoghi Effendi and Rúhíyyih Khánum had already entered the dining room. I stood with the group of friends outside the dining room waiting for others to go in. They said to me, “Go on in. Go in!” But I hesitated. Then I was gently pushed by Milly Collins into the room. There I saw him — “The sign of God,” the “priceless pearl!” My heart stood still. I could not speak or move until he came toward me smiling and took my hand, saying, “Welcome, Mrs. Brown. We are very happy to see you and have you with us. Please sit here”; he indicated a chair opposite him at the dinner table. The warmth of his greeting and his gentle courtesy made me feel comfortable and happy. I sensed his quiet, deep, spiritual strength. Shoghi Effendi asked me about my daughter. He looked a long time at the pictures of my family, and I gave him the message each one had sent him his greetings and a special message, which I relayed to him. He said, “Tell your son that I hope his wishes to serve and help will be gratified.” Looking again at the photographs, the Guardian said that he would pray in the Holy Shrines for my family.

[^] ‘Abdu’l-Bahá, Will and Testament of ‘Abdu’l-Bahá (Wilmette, Ill: Bahá’í Publishing Trust, 1944), pp. 11, 3.

Then in a gentle and loving manner he inquired about the believers in California and spoke of some of the early Bahá'ís whom I had known — Helen Goodall, Ella Cooper, Phoebe Hearst, and Lua Getsinger. {{p113}} Often as we sat with Shoghi Effendi he seemed to know what was in our hearts, for he answered questions that were in my own heart but which I had not asked.

In the morning of the second day at Bahjí I went with Mary and Alan Elston, two pioneers from Africa, and [the gardener] Sala to pray in the Shrine of Bahá'u'lláh. To enter the Shrine one passes through a beautiful, small, wrought iron gate and steps on a short path of white pebbles leading to the handsome bronze door of the Shrine. On either side of the path is a pillar. I put my hand on the ledge of the pillar to steady myself as I removed my shoes before entering the Shrine, and my hand fell upon three glorious white carnations! I was surprised and exclaimed over them because I had not seen any carnations in the gardens. I was deeply touched when Sala said, "Shoghi Effendi put them there yesterday when he visited the Shrine, and I am sure he meant them for you!" When Sala said this, I wondered whether Shoghi Effendi knew that carnations have a special significance to me and are very dear to my heart. I remembered that Zikr'u'lláh Khadem, a Hand of the Cause of God, had once said to me, "The beloved Guardian knows the heart of each one of us."

Each evening at dinner Shoghi Effendi wore a light tan camel's hair overcoat, a white shirt, and a black tie. His complexion was a soft tan and his large brown eyes expressed his every emotion. From under his black fez, on each side, a few white hairs were mingled with the black. He was not a large man, but his presence filled the room. When the Guardian spoke of the accomplishments of the Bahá'ís the world over, he never included himself. He was a humble, gentle person and generally spoke in a soft voice; but when he explained the Administration, he spoke with a firm tone and great authority. When he was not speaking in a serious vein, he often made us laugh as he related some funny incident or experience that he or someone else had had, and then his eyes twinkled as he laughed. Nothing made Shoghi Effendi happier than news of the unity among the believers. {{p114}} During dinner he often spoke of what was occurring in many parts of the world. Some evenings he would stay after dinner was over and tell us of good news he had received or explain some special Teaching.

Each evening after the Guardian had left the dining room, Rúhíyyih Khánum and we three pilgrims would visit in the sitting room, and she would tell us of some special news or incident that had made Shoghi Effendi very happy. After she left, we would recall the words of the Guardian and later compare our notes. One evening Shoghi Effendi said, "Please share your notes that you have taken here with the friends when you return home." This I have tried to do ever since, and following are some of the important and interesting things which he said to us while we were his guests in Haifa:

Bahá'ís must have a new way of life. They need to be different from other people. They must be distinguished. The more distinguished, the more they will attract people. The greater the distinction, the greater the attraction. They must read the Tablets of ‘Abdu’l-Bahá, study the text of the Teachings. It is not enough to be good and kind and to lead a religious life today; it does not count for much unless one accepts the Manifestation of God, if one has heard of Him; it is almost wasted. One must accept the Manifestation in His day. If one has not heard of Bahá’u’lláh, they are not to be blame; the blame lies with the Bahá’ís. If the Bahá’ís fail to teach the Faith, the people who do not hear of the Faith are not to blame. The blame lies with the Bahá’ís.

All men are not of the same capacity. {{p115}} To serve to full capacity is meritorious with God. God judges men by how they use their capacity.

Every city, every town, and every village will have a [Bahá’í] Temple and a House of Justice in the future.

There are three processes in teaching: the first is to attract the people; the second is to convert the people; and the third is to be consecrated. There must be attraction, conversion, and consecration. The teachers must not be unwise. There are three Charters to be used: (1) the Covenant of Bahá’u’lláh, or the Divine Plan; (2) the Will and Testament of ‘Abdu’l-Bahá with the plan for world administration; and (3) the Tablet of Carmel, the Charter for the development for the World Center of the Faith. the Tablet of Carmel is the symbol of the House of Justice. The Ark is the symbol of the Administrative body. The higher cave of Elijah is the real one where Bahá’u’lláh revealed the Tablet of Carmel in such a loud voice that the priests heard it.

[^] See Shoghi Effendi, God Passes By, rev. ed. (Wilmette, Ill: Bahá’í Publishing Trust, 1974), p. 194 and Bahá’u’lláh, Tablets of Bahá’u’lláh Revealed after the Kitáb-i-Aqdas, comp. Research Department of the Universal House of Justice, trans. Ḥabíbu’lláh Taherzadeh and Committee at Bahá’í World Centre (Haifa: Bahá’í World Centre, 1978), pp. 3-5. —Ed.

It is essential that the youth of today study deeply the Faith as they will usher in the Most Great Peace. The Lesser Peace will be established within this century. The Most Great Peace in the next century. The Global Crusade will establish the Bahá’í Faith the world over but will not have a direct influence in establishing the United States of the World. The first period will be that of suffering and cleansing; the second period will be that of unification; and the third, the establishment of the Bahá’í World Faith. After the International State is established and wars cease, the money now being expended for destruction and war will be used for education and science, and a method will be discovered for interplanetary communication, even interplanetary conferences. The time will come when people can cross the entire nation in one hour and eventually beyond the continent into interplanetary travel. The cycle of six thousand years of city building has come to an end, and now we will have a new pattern starting with villages, etc. Material civilization is becoming like the ancient city of Babylon, and it must be destroyed.

The young people must disperse far away, the old ones to outlying places; they must settle goal cities. {{p116}} Sell your property and pioneer!...The young people of America should go out into the country on farms and work with their hands and produce food for their families.

Americans are exposed to great dangers. Today the power of America is in the hands of the masses.[^] There is a terrific power in the press, and the people are swayed by it. The United States, on a national scale, sets the pattern for an international pattern... There will be a world civil war followed by the establishment of a world state; all the nations will be part of it and will have to conform to it. This war has already started in Korea. Mankind cannot be purified and cleansed without suffering... It is positively dangerous to live in cities. The cities are doomed. They will evaporate... The Bahá'ís must disperse from the cities...why do they not disperse? If they do not respond and disperse, they will suffer spiritually, materially, and physically...In America the destruction will be great!... They must disperse for their own protection. the cities are doomed: New York, Chicago, San Francisco, Los Angeles. They must flee from the United States because America will become the storm center of the future... Buy property in Central Africa! Those with independent means must pack up and go.... Those with spirit must pack up and go.... There must be a mass response... I can warn them, but I cannot make them go.... The Cause will triumph in spite of the actions and inactivity of the believers. If one country falls down, another will make up for it. The Bahá'ís have been given the method. Now they must have the spirit. It is hopeless for capable teachers in the cities (the people will not listen).... The friends are calculating too much, and there is too much emphasis on nonessentials. [^] See Shoghi Effendi, God Passes By, p. 218

People are flocking to churches through fear. Americans must have a totally new way of life, become a race of wholly devoted souls, devoted to God and His ways. {{p117}} They must get to a simpler way of life. The standards of America must be lowered, have fewer luxuries.... Americans do not have enough belief in God, not enough detachment. They must be more spiritual, disencumber themselves from things, have Bahá'í standards, not American standards. Americans are too materialistic, too mechanized, too attached to family, health, and death. There must be less materialism, less intellectualism, and more spirit... America is the most disturbed nation, politically, on earth... There is too much organization in America and too little spirit.

Joseph Smith was a seer, not a Prophet of God, neither major nor minor Prophet. He had a high standard... but the Bahá'ís have a higher standard coupled with God's power that comes direct from God for this age.

We must encourage the marriage of blacks and whites... Bahá'u'lláh was sent to bring about world unity, and world unity is the cornerstone of the Faith of Bahá'u'lláh.

It is not enough to go pioneering; one must start immediately teaching the Faith... For pioneers to leave their posts means the next to arrive will have to go through the difficulties all over again, and it will be twice as difficult for them... {{p118}} As soon as the community is strong enough, one should leave and pioneer elsewhere.

The new race will be wholly devoted souls.

As the hours passed in the presence of Shoghi Effendi, I became more and more aware of his tremendous vision of the Faith and of his one aim to establish good will and peace throughout the world. He was modest about his efficiency, but one could not ignore it. He lovingly encouraged the friends in every country. Rúhíyyih Khánum said that gossip did not influence the Guardian. No one received any special things for serving the Cause; whether they did it well or poorly, the principle was the same.

Before departing at the end of my pilgrimage, I asked Shoghi Effendi if there were any service I could render him. He said, "Please visit the Bahá'í pioneers on the islands in the Mediterranean and give them my love, cheer them up, and beg them to remain at their posts; for if they leave, those who come to replace them will find it much more difficult. Share with them the spirit of the Holy Places here, particularly that of the Sacred Shrines, and tell them of the latest developments of the Ten Year Crusade."

According to the Guardian's wishes, I traveled among the Mediterranean Islands and visited the pioneers in many places. Wherever Shoghi Effendi asked me to go, I felt secure under his protection and shelter and had no anxiety although I traveled alone through these foreign lands, amid strange surroundings, and spoke only English.

AMERICAN BAHÁ'ÍS — Anything can happen at any time! It all depends on the political situation. In America the Cause is stifling. The American Bahá'ís need shock medicine. They do not obey. They need a shock. They have fallen down on the job. They are inactive — over administrative. Their home front is an absolute failure. They were given the DIVINE PLAN first. The Administration was given to the American Bahá'ís. The whole world plan depends upon America.

The basis of the Administration is the Local Spiritual Assembly. It must function liquidly; all matters must flow through the LSA, first, then to higher or other Administrative bodies. The LSA should not divert their funds nor scatter their energies; they must not expend money for local expansion, rent a center, have paid advertising, nor paid publicity. The members of the LSA only have authority when in session. American communities must maintain all present LSA's, concentrate on the home front, and go to the Goal Cities.

The Bahá'ís must disperse from the cities, for the people in the cities will be trapped when they want to get out. They must disperse for their protection — the cities are doomed — New York, Chicago, San Francisco, Los Angeles. They must flee from the United States, because America will become the storm center of the future. When asked, “Should the pioneers go back home after the calamity and help reconstruct,” Shoghi Effendi replied, “Reconstruct what?” The young people must disperse far away. The old ones to outlying places — they must settle the goal cities. Sell your property and pioneer! Buy property in Central Africa! Those with independent means must pick up and go, and not wait for the committees to move them. Those with spirit must pack up and go. Take their passport and go. “I will be the one to direct them. I can warn them, but I cannot make them go. Those who will not arise to serve create unhappiness for me, and danger for the believers. There must be a mass response. When I see no response, I am paralyzed. 3,000 should have gone out from America; 495 offered, but only 200 went. The Cause will triumph in spite of the actions and inactivity of the believers. If the country falls down another will make up for it. The Bahá’ís have been given the method — now they must have the “spirit.” It is hopeless for capable teachers in the cities (the people will not listen). There should be 1,000 American, self-sacrificing, consecrated, loving, interested, well-organized, conservative teachers to pioneer. In America there are few Bahá’í teachers equipped to teach and the capable ones are suppressed — the committees keep them from teaching. I instantly act as soon as I can find someone I can use. If I have the right tools, I can act. An artist cannot create without tools to use. When I want something done, I ask the American Bahá’ís to do it. There is not enough dedication on the part of the masses. The friends are calculating too much and there is too much emphasis on non-essentials. Bahá’ís must have a new way of life. They need to be different from other people. They must be distinguished. The more distinguished, the more they will attract the people. The greater the distinction, the greater the attraction. It is not enough to be good and kind and to lead a religious life today; it does not count for much unless one accepts the Manifestation of God — if one has heard of Him. One must accept the Manifestation in this Day. If one has not heard of Bahá’u’lláh, they are not to blame -the blame lies with the Bahá’ís. If the Bahá’ís fail to teach the Faith, the people who do not hear of the Faith are not to blame. The blame lies with the Bahá’ís. {{p2}}

All men are not of the same capacity. To serve to full capacity is meritorious with God. God judges men by how they use their capacity. The new race of men will be wholly devoted souls. Bahá’u’lláh was sent to bring about World Unity, and World Unity is the cornerstone of the Faith of Bahá’u’lláh. Every city, every town and every village will have a Temple and a House of Justice in the future. There are three basic processes in teaching — the first is to attract the people; the second is to convert the people; and the third is to be consecrated. There must be attraction, conversion and consecration. The teachers must not be unwise. There are three Charters to be used (1) the Covenant of Bahá’u’lláh, or “The Divine Plan” — (2) the Will and Testament of ‘Abdu’l-Bahá with the Plan for World Administration, and (3) The Tablet of Carmel — the Charter for the development for the World Center of the Faith (see God Passes By, page 194, and Gleanings, pages 14-16). The Tablet of Carmel is the symbol of the House of Justice; the Ark is the symbol of the Administrative Body; the higher cave of Elijah is the real one where Bahá'u'lláh revealed the Tablet of Carmel in such a loud voice that the priests heard it.

We must encourage the marriage of blacks and whites; black men and white women, and white men and black women. If black women married white men and domineered them, it would make a great impression. American women should marry German men to tone them down and German women should marry American men to tone them down. American women domineer their husbands and make them work and play. In the Bible it speaks about the “half-baked race” — that refers to the Americans.

There are 400 Negro Bahá'ís in America. Maybe we should send Enoch Olinga to America to teach the American Negroes. If he were sent, we should send him to the deep South. The Negroes are sensitive, suspicious and distrustful. The Africans are pure-hearted, like children, but immature. They accept the Americans because they are also pure in heart and simple.

The African Bahá'ís keep asking why they have not been given the Faith before — why it was so long in coming. Why don't they ask the American Bahá'ís that question? Especially the American Bahá'ís. Do the American Bahá'í women hold the Negro babies in their arms and really love them?

“A community sent a bulletin saying they had obeyed me — they had done the Íqán. Obey? Obey? Obey? Whom do they obey? Why do they not read my cablegrams? Why do they not disperse? If they do not respond and disperse, they will suffer spiritually, materially and physically.”

Suffering purifies people. Those who do not respond will lose everything for all eternity; those who do respond will gain everything for all eternity.

For pioneers to leave their posts means the next to arrive will have to go through the difficulties all over again and it will be twice as difficult for them. You must persevere and do not think of “home sweet home.”

The new race will be wholly devoted souls. This is the Age of the maturity of the human race — a spiritual emergency between man and God. There are three stages in the evolution of mankind. The first stage is that of infancy and childhood. The second stage is that of manhood, at the age of 21. The third is that of Maturity, at 40. Humanity has now reached the third stage. The human race is now 40, and has reached the age of Maturity and must perfect God's work.

The Guardian was asked, “Have you ever been in America?” He answered, “No, but I hope to go.” {{p3}}

Rúhíyyih Khánúm (his wife) said “Apathy, corruption, decadence, creates unhappiness for Shoghi Effendi and danger for the believers. They must pack up and move out of cities, go to small communities or villages. No one has the right to prevent them.”

AMERICA: For America, the best medicine is shock medicine. America is exposed to great dangers. It will be the storm center of the future. Americans do not have enough belief in God — not enough detachment; they must be more spiritual, disencumber themselves from things, have Bahá’í standards, not American standards. Americans are too materialistic, too mechanized, too attached to family, health and death. There must be less materialism, less intellectualism, and more spirit. America has become isolated. anything can happen at anytime. America is the most disturbed nation, politically, on earth. The people are living in a fool’s paradise.

Excesses in America are causing animosity and making enemies — this is due to their independence, ruthlessness, bad manners and aggressiveness. Manners, art, music, literature and morals are corrupt. America goes to extremes on sex. The Tower of Babel is not a building but carrying things to excess. There is too much organization in America and too little spirit.

It is positively dangerous to live in Cities. The cities are doomed. They will go up in smoke. They will evaporate. People are flocking to churches through fear. Americans must have a totally new way of life, become a new race of men wholly devoted souls, devoted to God and His ways. They must get to a simpler way of life. The standards of America must be lowered — have fewer luxuries. It would be better for the Americans to go back to the old ways, live a more easy life and stop tearing around to make money.

The husband works all day, comes home at night tired; the wife has been resting all day; she makes him dress up and go out and stay up late, then the next day, go to work again. The men die early and leave insurance, the widows use the money to travel and have a good time. The Master also spoke of this.

The young people of America should go out into the Country on farms and work with their hands and produce food for their families. Americans are pure-hearted, simple and child-like, enthusiastic and industrious, but do not carry things through. They do things with the most leisure.

Americans are exposed to great dangers. Today the power of America is in the hands of the masses (see God Passes By, page 218). There is a terrific power in the press and the people are swayed by it. The United States had a civil war and a federal state was forged not to be dissolved. The United States, on a national scale, sets the pattern for an international pattern. The United States must be united to preserve the “oneness.” There will be a world civil war, followed by the establishment of a world state; all the nations will be a part of it and will have to conform to it. This war has already started in Korea. Mankind cannot be purified and cleansed without suffering.

It is essential that the youth of today study deeply the Faith, as they will usher in the Most Great Peace. The Lesser Peace will be established within this century. The Most Great Peace, in the next century. The Global Crusade will establish the Bahá'í Faith the world over, but will not have a direct influence in establishing the United States of the world. The first period will be that of suffering and cleansing; the second period will be that of unification, and the third, the establishment of the Bahá'í World Faith. After the International State is established and wars cease, the money now being expended for destruction and war will be used for education and science, and a method will be discovered for interplanetary communication, even interplanetary conferences. The time will come when people can cross the entire nation (The whole world one nation) in one hour and eventually beyond the continent into interplanetary travel. The cycle of 6,000 years of city building has come to an end, and now we will have a new pattern, starting with villages, etc. Material civilization is becoming like the ancient city of Bábylon and it must be destroyed. In America the destruction will be great!

ISTANBUL: It is much more important to concentrate on Istanbul than on Ankara, the capital, because Istanbul is associated with Bahá'u'lláh. It is the key to the whole Black Sea area, the melting pot of East and West. It is the ancient capital before Constantinople, and the place of suffering and persecution of Bahá'u'lláh. A national assembly must be established there, as Istanbul will be the seat of the N.S.A. and the Ḥaẓíratu'l-Quds in the future.

RUSSIA: There are 16 republics in Russia. The Bahá'í Faith was established in five. There are no Bahá'ís in Russia now; all the Bahá'ís were scattered and banished and exiled to Siberia. In the future the Bahá'ís will enter Russia — they will pour into east Russia through Alaska, to northwest Russia from Norway, Sweden and Denmark, to southeast Russia from Japan and to west Russia from Germany.

SCANDINAVIA The Scandinavian countries, Norway, Sweden and Denmark have a great destiny ahead. Stockholm is very important and that is why the Temple will be built there. The Danish people have wonderful qualities — the good qualities of the German and English without their faults. They are strong-hearted and determined, tenacious and devoted. They have a great future.

ISRAEL: The Jews await the Kingdom of God; the Christians await the end of a 6,000 year process. We are assured that the Jews will get all of Palestine; 'Abdu'l-Bahá mentioned this in "Some answered Questions"; also, the British Secretary Balfour in his declaration mentioned it. The Jews are establishing their home in Palestine. The word "Israel" means "Hastening to God." "Isra" means "hastening" and "el" means "God." The Jews suffered for 2,000 years for persecuting Christ, "The Son of God," for 3 years; the Moslems and the Arabs persecuted Bahá'u'lláh, "the Father," for 50 years, so they will suffer more and endure greater sufferings. The time of banishment is now over for the Jews. They will return to Palestine and Palestine will be their home forever. The Moslems and Arabs will be scattered. The Arabs suffered severe defeat because they did not respond to the call of Bahá'u'lláh. One million Jews came into Israel and one million Arabs went out of Israel in 1948 and 1949. The Jews will get all of Palestine because the Arabs will make trouble with the Jews and the Jews will drive them out. The standard of Israel must be raised — there must be more cleanliness — become cleaner — but have no luxuries. The Christian Spiritual Center was in Israel, then in Greece, then in Rome, where it is now, and the Pope is still its head (he is shaking in his boots). The administrative center of Islám is Mecca. The Land of Canaan was under Bábylon before the time of Saul, who made it the first Civic Kingdom. After Bábylon, India, Persia, then the Greek, and later, the Roman Empire, then came the English Mandate and the free state of Israel. This is the Spiritual Center of the Bahá'í World. The Shrine of the Báb is the Spiritual Center of the Bahá'í World. The Jews are coming into the Faith to support it, but they do not know it yet. The House of Justice is the Administrative Center of the World. It will be built on Mount Carmel in close proximity of the Shrine of the Báb, overlooking the Shrines of the Greatest Holy Leaf and those of the Mother and brother of the Master. The first edifice to be built there will be the International Archives — later the Universal House of Justice and those of the Guardianship and the Ḥazíratu'l-Quds. These will form an arc above the Monument Gardens. All will be located on Mount Carmel. The House of Justice legislates on subjects not revealed in the Holy text. The Shrine of the Báb has two factors — (1) because the Báb was martyred and his body was brought there, (2) because Bahá'u'lláh was banished there by enemy governments causing changes in Palestine.

THE LATINS, PERSIANS AND TURKS: are immature and unstable and cannot carry things through. They get enthusiastic and then it fades away.

AFRICA: There are 200 localities in Africa. Shoghi Effendi would like to have a picture of all the African Bahá'ís. He said this can only be accomplished by having a conference, but it is not yet time for that — the government would become suspicious and the believers are not yet firmly enough established, but later it will be held in Kampala. He asked about the Ḥazíratu'l-Quds in Uganda. “Busy like a beehive, with Friends coming and going constantly. But the English neighbors ignore us and the cross the street to avoid speaking to us,” was the answer. Shoghi Effendi said, “We long needed such a center in Africa. The Ḥazíratu'l-Quds might be changed and converted into a National Headquarters, or another one acquired — expend as little as possible on repairs.” The Guardian gave a dervish robe that had belonged to Bahá'u'lláh as a gift to the Ḥazíratu'l-Quds in Uganda. He asked if Bill Foster has been heard from — the answer was “No.” Ted Cardell had a very difficult place — Windhock, is in Southwest Africa, but he has courage and determination. He said the Banání family is an example to all Bahá'ís (pioneers) — in fact to all Bahá'ís. He said the Collisons had a fine spirit and what they have done is doubly meritorious because they went pioneering, then went out a second time. It is not enough to go pioneering — one must leave and pioneer elsewhere. The World Order of Bahá'u'lláh will embrace all mankind. There will be four pillars in Africa — four local centers — Kampala, Tunis, Johannesburg and Cairo. Africa and the islands of the Seas will have the greatest future. The Africans are pure-hearted and child-like. But property in Central Africa — there must be 50 centers in Africa. Teach the Pygmy who speak so well and tell him to go to the Pygmies and teach them. The most rapid growth of the Faith is (1) in Africa; (2) Germany, (3) in England.

There are 50 centers in England, Scotland, Ireland and adjoining islands — 200 localities in Africa — only 3 or 4 communities in France. Eventually in the world at the end of the Ten Year Plan, there will be 60 National Spiritual Assemblies.

Christian Scientists are blind and not sure. They think that they are perfect and pure and that they are an example to the world, but they are not. The Bahá'ís use their effort to use God's Plan which is mysterious. The Bahá'ís will build the New World Order relying upon God. The Bahá'ís have no ulterior motives; they do not expect anything from people. The Christian Scientists receive money for their teachings. The Bahá'í Faith is God-inspired, divine in origin, embracing all mankind.

JOSEPH SMITH: was a seer, not a Prophet of God — neither major nor minor. He had a {{p6}} higher standard, (the same applies to the Quakers), but the Bahá'ís have a higher standard coupled with God's power that comes direct from God for this age.

A Pilgrimage to the Holy Land

May 17 — September 17, 1954

Part 1. BRIGHTENING HORIZONS OF ISRAEL

“Come ye unto {{p1}} the House of the Lord with praise and thanksgiving.” The House of the Lord — the Holy Land! The land made sacred by all the Prophets of God — Enoch, Abraham, Moses, Zoroaster, Jesus Christ, Muḥammad, The Báb and Bahá’u’lláh. The land where the Divine Spirit has been poured in greater abundance than on any other place on this planet! What a place to make a pilgrimage with joy and thanksgiving! How the heart yearns to go there. Such were the yearnings in the heart of one expectant pilgrim, Rúḥáníyyih Ruth Moffett as she waved fare-thee-well to her faithful friends, Coranne Willis and Ann Koplin, at the United Air Lines Airport in Chicago. They were up all night with her and helped in innumerable ways in preparation for this momentous pilgrimage to Haifa. The United Air Line plane left Chicago at 7:00 a.m., May 17, 1954 flying over a lovely patch work quilt of green fields fringed by Spring orchards in bloom, arriving at Idlewild airport in New York at 10:30 a.m. In the airport Cafe, Rúḥáníyyih had time for just a bowl of soup before being weighed in for the long Transatlantic oceanic journey. She felt lonesome to start on her first ocean flight with no one to see her off and wish her “God Speed”, but she held firmly to the hand of Bahá’u’lláh with the faith that He would guide her safely throughout the journey.

The Royal Sabena Belgium Air Line plane, standing in the midst of a bevy of world planes ready to take off to far distant parts of the world, moved and “seemed to feel the stir of life along her keel”; she quivered with expectancy as her motors raced for the take off. It was exciting to follow the coastline of New England over Boston, Maine, Halifax and Nova Scotia looking down on the many cities and villages, the crooked roads and the variegated fields of many colours and the immense green forests, lakes, and the many islands off the coasts. She did not know there were so many islands of all shapes and sizes along the East coastline, and mostly unpopulated. Newfoundland was veiled in masses of clouds as the plane flew high over it. The royal Sabena gave excellent service making all the forty-five passengers as comfortable as possible for the long non-stop flight through the dark night crossing the endless ocean far below. It was thrilling to fly 19,000 — 20,000 ft. high at a speed of from 300 — 400 miles per hour over the abysmal depths below. A great curtain of clouds veiled Glasgow, Manchester, and London. A wire broke in the heating system, but the thoughtful stewardess tucked the passengers snugly in warm woollen blankets, until, after crossing the English Channel, it became a bit warmer. Dawn with its rose-gold tints above the clouds is an experience one can never forget, symbolic of the beauty and rose-garden sheen when one rises above the tests and trials of life.

At 10:30 a.m. on Tuesday, May 18, the Royal Sabena glided along the runway to the first stop in Brussels, Belgium, after the long transoceanic flight. There the same plane was reconditioned and flew over Europe, and Brindisi, the tip of the heel of Italy, over the Ionian and Mediterranean Seas, and arrived in Athens, where the plane was again reconditioned, and arrived at 10:30 p.m., May 18, 1954 at the airport at Jappa, Tel Aviv, Israel. This is the modern miracle, to travel thousands of miles from Chicago to Tel Aviv in only thirty nine hours!

As the Royal Sabena plane winged its way toward Israel, Rúháníyyih wondered how it would look in comparison with when she saw it before — a desert land filled with rocks, sand, thorny bushes and confusion, and where everyone seemed to be against his neighbor. As the approaching lights of the Holy Land again came into view, her heart was filled with joyful and reverential expectancy and she thought to the words of the song, “Israel — The Land of Promise Welcomes You”. {{p12}}

As she gazed meditatively at the approaching lights of the Holy Land, the panorama of history seemed to unroll before her mind: of how Palestine was peopled by cave dwellers in about 3500 B.C.; of how Abraham was led to this land, and God made a covenant with Him, “that in the seed of Abraham shall all the nations of the earth be blest”; of the Cananites, and later how Moses led the Israelites out of bondage, and for forty years in the wilderness, and Joshua led them to the Promised Land flowing with milk and honey; how the Jewish people built up the land but turned away from God to gods of their own making. Then Saul became the first king and established a civic kingdom, but he died. David became the king unifying the kingdom and calling them to return to God: and David died and was called to his fathers. Solomon, his son became King. He expanded the kingdom, and to this day, the glory and unity of his kingdom is still sung. But Solomon died and the tribes became divided. Then the Assyrians in 722 B.C., destroyed Damascus and Israel and took the tribes into captivity, and they became scattered. After the Bábylonian invasion in 586 B.C. the remaining tribes of Judah were taken into Bábylonia and scattered. Alexander the Great captured Palestine in 332 B.C. The coming of Jusus, the Christ, had a profound effect on the history of this land, which became a noted center of pilgrimages.

Under the Moslem dominion from 636 A.D. for four centuries, and the long period of the Christian Crusades, one lasting 100 years, there was much destruction and a little progress. It was under the control of the Ottoman Turks from 1516 until the first World War, then it became a mandate of Great Britain, under the League of Nations. "The White Paper" gave the promise that the doors of Palestine would again open to her people. Many outbreaks of violence have occurred between the Jews and Arabs, which have caused this land to become one of the danger spots of the world. After World War II, the Jews began returning in large numbers, until today there are about 1,465,000 Jews, gathered from 75 countries, 125,000 Moslems, 40,000 Christians, and 16,000 Druzes in Israel.

On May 14, 1948, a most remarkable bloodless revolution occurred, when 4,000,000 Moslems fled and 1,000,000 Jews marched in and began tilling their ancestral soil, and a new nation was born. Today the blue and white flag with the star of Bethlehem flutters proudly over the world's youngest democracy — "nation as eternally old as yesterday, as eternally young as tomorrow". Phoenix-like, from the ashes have risen again to build a new homeland, to develop the most stupendous, life-salvaging operation ever undertaken in the whole history of mankind, and to fulfil the promise of the Ages!

Early in the morning Rúḥáníyyih left the queer little hotel, near the airport, where one noticed strange sounds and smells, and where scarcely anyone could speak English, and took the bus to Tel Aviv. Here she obtained a seat in a taxi to Haifa, 65 miles away. Full of eager anticipation to be on Mt. Carmel, the mountain of God, she scanned its slopes and was thrilled to see the gleaming golden dome of the Shrine of the Báb, as it stood in all its beauty and majesty. Arriving at the Bahá'í Pilgrim House, she was surprised to find Allan and Mary Elston, pioneers from the United States to Uganda, Africa; also Lillian Morgan Richards from Turkey; and Clara Edge from Michigan; and others. Rúḥíyyih Khánum, the wife of the Guardian of the Bahá'í World Faith, was giving a luncheon in the home of 'Abdu'l-Bahá to return many social obligations to prominent people of Israel. Rúḥíyyih Khánum greeted Rúḥáníyyih warmly and said she had arrived just in time "to be one of the guests of honour". The Masters house was beautifully decorated with flowers, and many delicious foods were prepared and attractively arranged by Rúḥíyyih Khánum and Millie Collins, Hand of the Cause, who were both charming hostesses to the thirty-five interesting and distinguished guests. {{p3}}

Across the street from the master's house is the Western Pilgrim House, of unusual design, by the architect, Mason Remey. It is the present home of Mason Remey, President of the International Council; Leroy Ioas, Secretary for the Guardian and of the International Council; and his wife, Sylvia Ioas; Jessie Revell, Treasurer of the International Council; Ethel Revell, Secretary for Rúḥíyyih Khánum. also, it is the guest house for the flow of Western pilgrims from Europe and America. The room which Rúḥáníyyih occupied over-looked the colourful Bahá'í gardens across the street, and the home of our Guardian with the deep blue Mediterranean Sea in the background. She was the last pilgrim of the season. The atmosphere of the Pilgrim House is difficult to describe as it is teeming with activities and intensity of interest.

Rúháníyyih was constantly amazed at the many changes which had taken place on Mount Carmel since she was there in 1927, when the Guardian was young, and when the Greatest Holy Leaf was living. Then there were barren rocks and thorny bushes, and only the beginnings of the nine terraced gardens, and the simple, unornamented, stone Shrine of the Báb, resting on the ninth terrace. Today, however, these gardens have been transformed into a fairyland of rare beauty. Even the city of Haifa, itself, seems to be pulsating with new life.

Haifa Calling!

The ancient town of Haifa lies on the southern horn of a magnificent bay, three miles deep and nine miles wide, just where the green promontory of Mount Carmel breaks the 200 mile inhospitable coastline and yellow sand dunes stretching northward from Port Sa'íd to Haifa and around the Bay to the ancient city of 'Akká, the Acre of the Crusades. A mile and a half long breakwater extrudes from Nasel-Kerim. Another breakwater one and a half miles long runs at right angles to the first one. This affords a sheltered haven for every class of vessel. The harbour does not overshadow the town but has been designed to be part of the landscape and fits with good proportion into the entire noble pattern. It is a monument to British engineering genius. It is in the heart of the world — bisecting it between east and west, north and south.

In the days of the Canaanites, Haifa was known as Shikmona, and later to the Jews as Hepha, or haven. Among the Medes, and Persians, and Phoenicians, it was found to be an important station on the highroads of nations. Nature has granted it advantages seldom found in other seaports of the world.

This same soil was hallowed by the footsteps of His Holiness, Jesus the Christ, and all the Prophets of God. It was in 1868, the Messenger of God, Bahá'u'lláh, was sent here as a life-prisoner in exile by the Persian and Turkish governments. Here He lived, suffered, and triumphed until His ascension in 1892, delivering to men His Message of World Unity and Peace, and pointing out the spiritual and practical means by which such consummation might be achieved. From the time this Exalted One arrived in 'Akká, the entire area began to change. The very atmosphere seemed charged with a pruer, more vibrant quality, so intimately related are the things of heaven and earth,, the temporal and the spiritual.

Today we are witnessing miraculous progress and the growing importance of Haifa, 'Akká, Mount Carmel, and this whole area. One of the main causes of prosperity is the gigantic pipe-line, 600 miles long, with oil from Mosul to the refineries of 'Akká, and Haifa, fulfilling the prophecy of 'Abdu'l-Bahá, that Haifa will be "The City of Lights — The City of the Future". "Ere long a railway will follow the pipe-line from Haifa to Baghdád and the great Euphrates Valley, forming a link between the Eastern and Western worlds, forged first, spiritually, by Bahá'u'lláh and His followers in exile. Haifa will become a great distribution center for the world's merchandise," 'Abdu'l-Bahá said, "and a highway of the nations. {{p4}}

We shall ere the long hear of wool from Mosul; barley and grains from 'Iráq and Palestine; dates from Ankara; potash and phosphates from the Dead Sea; rice, skins, hides from Írán; and oranges from Jaffa. Many precious articles from India, the Orient, all passing through Haifa to the markest of the world. It will become one of the first emporiums of the world. The entire harbour from Haifa to 'Akká will be one path of illumination. Carmel itself will be submerged in a sea of light. A person standing on the summit of Mount Carmel and the passengers on the nearing ships will look upon the most majestic spectacle of the whole world." It is destined, increasingly, to become THE CITY OF THE GREAT KING!

MOUNT CARMEL — THE MOUNTAIN OF GOD

'Abdu'l-Bahá said, "The day will come when this mountain will be resplendent with light — lights from top to bottom. On one side of it there will be a hotel, a universal hotel. Its doors will be open to all the people of the world. Whoever comes will be a guest. On the other side of the mountain there will be a university in which all the higher sciences will be taught. On the other part of it there will be a home for incurables. In still another part there will be a home for orphans. All these will be administered with love." — B.M. Jan. 1934, Vol.24, No. 19.

"I forsee that this harbour (Haifa) will be full of vessels. And from here to the blessed Shrine (Bahjí) there will be wide avenues, on both sides of which there will be trees and gardens. On the surrounding land at Bahjí, similar institutions to those on Mount Carmel will be established. And from all these places the songs of praise and exultation will be raised to the Supreme Concourse." 'Abdu'l-Bahá — Mt. Carmel 1/4/20.

"The air here at Mount Carmel is fragrant and the earth is sweet.... I have breathed the air of many country places," 'Abdu'l-Bahá said, "and seen much natural scenery, but the air of this mountain is most wholesome, vitalizing, and its scenery is very entrancing. Purity of air, sublimity of panorama and beauty of landscape are united on Mount Carmel, presenting to the eye a noble and inspiring spectacle of nature; its panorama of sea and land is very unique, its sun is all-glorious, its moon all-beautiful, and its stars are all-sparkling."

One may have three pilgrimages to Mount Carmel in one. First, is Pilgrim of the Eye where one sees the Shrines and Archives, the beautiful gardens, the Bahá'í World center, The International Council and the Guardian of the Bahá'í World Faith. Everyone arriving attains this pilgrimage, if they have become a Bahá'í or not. The second is the Pilgrimage of the Mind, which gathers oceans of informative Knowledge of the developments of the Bahá'í world Faith, the Great Global Crusade, the changing conditions of the world, the answers to seemingly unanswerable problems, and upon request special instructions from the Guardian relating either to one's community, or to the individual himself. The second Pilgrimage of the Mind, in addition to the Pilgrimage of the Eye, some attain. The third is the Pilgrimage of the Soul. This is the sea that tsurges in the heart, melting its joys and sorrows, its ecstasies and failings, its resolves and its and its discouragements that storm through his being. This third pilgrimage prepares the soul by prayerfully walking along the lovely gardens and red — tiled paths leading to the majestic Shrine of the Báb, and there to kneel at the Threshold of the Shrine of the gentle loving Báb, and before the sacred Shrine of 'Abdu'l-Bahá, the Servant of God; and then, the greatest of all, to prostrate in the Blessed Shrine of Bahá'u'lláh. As one enters the Shrine of Bahá'u'lláh, the very air seems to throb with the majesty of His Presence.

One realizes, more and more, the greatness of the station of the Holy Ones, and becomes conscious of Their Sacrifices for Humanity, and Their Mission in bringing forth a new creation. The third pilgrimage begins with the first meeting with the Guardian, when discouraging weakness and failings become transformed into strength and courage, and the heart becomes aflame with the desire to serve in the Cause of God, and enter the service of his Lord. This third pilgrimage, the Pilgrimage of the Soul, only the most sincere attain. We hope that all may achieve the fulfillment of this three-fold pilgrimage and recognize the great station of our Guardian!

Shoghi Effendi occupies a unique position in religious history never before known. Since becoming the Guardian, after the passing of 'Abdu'l-Bahá in 1921, he has guided the world-wide Bahá'í Community Through the early phases of establishing the Great Bahá'í Administrative Order which is destined, ere long, to form the pattern of the New World Order of Bahá'u'lláh. The Universal House of Justice, destined to support this new World Order, as a twin pillar to the station of the Guardianship, is in the process of unfoldment. The function of Shoghi Effendi is to establish and nurse and guide, without precedent, the National Spiritual Assemblies of the Bahá'í world. The station of Guardianship is not a legislative institution, but he has had to guide and develop the basic principles of Bahá'í Administration for use throughout the Bahá'í World, which Bahá'u'lláh has stated is the guarantee of World peace.

The Writings of Shoghi Effendi are exceedingly important and every word is significant. They do not constitute Divine Revelation as do the writings of Bahá'u'lláh and 'Abdu'l-Bahá, nor are they holy in the way Their Writings are holy. However, the Bahá'í World recognizes that Shoghi Effendi received his divinely ordained, appointed and recorded station, as the Interpreter of Their Words. Thus his writings are truly inspired. Therefore, the writings of Shoghi Effendi in this Day become the clearest appointed-divinely-reflected-authority on this planet! The Guardian's writings are universal and specific, eternal and particular. Eternal, because they expound the basic spiritual principles which will forever guide mankind; particularly, because they are applicable to the present state of the world and the progress of the individual Bahá'í, and their part in establishing the new World Order, “The Kingdom of God on Earth.” The writings of Shoghi Effendi are life lines for the present, and a source of unprecedented guidance to unborn generations!” Shoghi Effendi is the Guardian, not the Revealer of the message sent by God to lead mankind to the Promised Day of the Most Great Peace. He is, today, the pure channel of god’s Mercy fulfilling this mighty promise of Bahá’u’lláh. “This is the Day which shall not be followed by night.”

To the Bahá’í, our Guardian is like a ray of sunshine which brings to light whatever is latent on the film of each pilgrim’s heart; transforming fear into courage, discouragement into faith, weakness into strength, passivity into activity, and the way of life into servitude. To the Bahá’í world the Guardian is like an ocean — the home and refuge for all things that have life within it, but it is also a surging sea that casts out from its depths all dead things. The Guardian is like a giant comet, blazing across the sky, drawing into its orbit all matter which can receive the flame of his love and increase its brightness. Those who are not attracted by this magnetic power who are not drawn into the fiery path, may see this blazing ball of fire thunder by. They may try too late to enter therein, but the moment for the junction is past, leaving them in darkness!

INTERNATIONAL RECEPTION

It was on May 20, at 4:00 o’clock, on a lovely day that Rúhíyyih Khánúm and Millie Collins gave an International Reception in the Western Pilgrim house, and distinguished guests arrived from many parts of Israel, including the governor and his wife, the Mayor and his wife, two ambassadors, a number of Israeli officials, doctors, lawyers, musicians {{p6}} and merchants. The Pilgrim House had been beautifully arranged with tea and coffee appointments, flowers, and delicious dainties of all kinds. The pilgrims, all dressed up, assisted the hostesses in this most attractive, heartwarming reception to meet the interesting, friendly peoples of Israel. The sweetness of Rúhíyyih Khánúm, her tact, her grace, her ready laughter followed by her words of wisdom, her sincere unassuming manner, her purity of heart and her warm overflowing love for everyone, together make a beauty and majesty of spirit that captured all hearts. The reception was a brilliant success and long to be remembered in the annals of Israel.

ARCHIVES

So many sincere souls have yearned with a great longing in their hearts, “If only we had one precious hair from the head of Christ, that was part of His very being, or had an authentic word written by His Sacred Pen, but we have not, nor of any Prophet of the past.” Today the world is blessed by the locks of precious hair from the very being of Bahá’u’lláh, ‘Abdu’l-Bahá, and the Báb, the thousands of material things used by Them, tested and proven to be authentic. Never in the history of mankind has there before been such bounty! “In the future,” ‘Abdu’l-Bahá said, “the kings of the earth will come with bare heads and feet to view the most precious relics upon this planet.” It is amazing how our Guardian has gathered them from all over the world, built the archives for these treasured belongings, organized them, designed the cabinets, and artistically arranged the displays for all these sacred treasures!

Dr. Lotfollah Jakim most lovingly and reverently showed us the only photograph of Bahá'u'lláh and the miniatures of Him painted in His lifetime, hundreds of books, epistles and tablets written by His own Pen. His garments, head coverings, slippers, some articles used by the Báb, and hundreds used by 'Abdu'l-Bahá. Their prayer beads, books, combs, and most cherished of all, the white shirt in which the Báb was martyred on July 9, 1850, with the stains of his precious blood still upon it.

No words can describe the spirit that penetrates the soul as we view these sacred objects and the great significance of them began to penetrate our minds. The seven archives where these sacred belongings are preserved are the: 1. Shrine of the Báb Archives 2. Minor Archives in the Monumental Gardens 3. The Twin House of Abud in 'Akká 4. The Most Great Prison in 'Akká 5. The Garden of the Ridván 6. The House of Mazariah 7. The Mansion of Bahá'u'lláh in Bahjí

Thousands of years will pass before such precious bounty with the outpouring of such spirit into material things can again take place! We thank Bahá'u'lláh for the priceless privilege of being able to view these sacred objects in this Day.

THE HOLY SHRINE OF BAHÁ

How can one describe the ethereal, intangible, spiritual beauty that enters into the very soul of the pilgrim as he steps out of his shoes and kneels with head touching the floor and heart humbly bowing, at the Holy threshold, in the Shrine of the Blessed Beauty, and walks on the very soil, hallowed by His precious feet?

What a bounty from God to kneel in the very spot, and the Threshold in the Shrine of The Báb, where the Master went almost daily to kneel and chant. {{p7}}

What a blessing to kneel in the Shrine of 'Abdu'l-Bahá, the Servant of god, in fervent prayer! It was like a benediction!

In the Shrines, the human spirit reaches up and by earnest prayer, touches the Divine Spirit in supplication, in praise, in gratitude, until it becomes so purified that the supplicant is lifted in spirit to communion with God. his soul, or human spirit, makes the brief contact with the Divine Spirit. From that moment on he is reborn and his life begins to change. It changes as to methods, motives; yes, everything! The more you turn to that Divine Spirit, touching it with your humble, sincere human spirit, the greater will be the results in your life. The more you turn away, or half turn, you will find your life full of frustrations!

In 'Akká, in the House of Abud, where Bahá'u'lláh and his family were imprisoned for seven years, the mind is awed by the many personal things used by both Bahá'u'lláh, and 'Abdu'l-Bahá. there, Dr. Lotfollah Hakím took us into the simple wood-panelled bedroom used by Bahá'u'lláh during those years of darkness and sorrow and suffering. Lotfallah tells you that this is the room in which the Kitáb-i-Aqdas was revealed, your heart and breath almost cease, and a great wave of veneration and awe floods the soul. You remove your shoes and bow your head, and kneel before the divan, for this is holy ground! God creates law, The Prophet of God reveals that law — and the corner of this blessed room is where it streamed, gushed, and poured to unite mankind in a world civilization of unity and peace! This is the book which Bahá'u'lláh said is “The Breath of Life to all created things.”

The Most Great Book, the book of Laws for 500,000 years to come! The little human mind cannot grasp its significance, but the pure heart floods with reverence and awe, overpowering awe. In such a manner hath the Kitáb-i-Aqdas been revealed. “The Pen can not move at the Splendour of this Revelation.” Every place blessed by the presence of Bahá'u'lláh seemed charged with a sense of majesty, greatness, power and authority in a greater degree than any other place on earth.

The Guardian has written, “The writings of Bahá'u'lláh, during the years of His confinement in the Most Great Prison, surpass the outpourings of His Pen in either Adrianople or Baghdád...This unprecedented extension of the reigns of his writings, during His exile in that prison, must rank as one of the most vitalizing and fruitful stages in the entire evolution of His Faith!”

How grateful we are that the Guardian has organized, and clarifies, and evaluated these basic points. The Guardian is a strong rope to which we not only can, but must cling. At all times you feel the motion, action, speed, power of His presence, that seems to grow more powerful the longer you are with him, with an inner peace that means both tranquility and power. He is like a hurricane. The closer you are to the center or heart, the greater the security and peace; the farther from this focal center, the more violent the reactions. We must move with the power, not against it or even indifferent to it, else we will be shattered by the impact.

It is here in ‘Akká that the eye of the spirit could picture — “The beloved of our hearts walked here!” “The Blessed Beauty’s feet pressed this soil!” “The Beloved Servant of God knelt here!” Muḥammad foretold that all of them, the companions of The Báb, should be slain except One, Who would reach the plain of ‘Akká, the Banquet Hall of God.

THE WEIZMANN SCIENTIFIC INSTITUTE — (REHOVOT ISRAEL)

Next in importance to the Bahá'í World Center and the Shrines of other Faiths for Rúḥáníyyih was to visit the now famous Weizmann Scientific Institute. Started by Dr. Chaim Weizmann, the great scientist and first President of the new State of Israel, it is a remarkable educational institution doing research in the fields of: I. THE FIELD OF MATHEMATICS A. The theory of helium 11 B. Problems of diffusion and separation of isotopes C. Development of a new type of geophone D. Gravimetric and seismic exploration of Israel II. THE FIELD OF OPTICS A. This includes atomic polarization of molecules. B. Study of the glucosides of citrus fruits, and their absorption spectra. III. THE FIELD OF ISOTOPE RESEARCH A. The study of chemical mechanism B. the study of physical mechanism IV. THE FIELD OF BIOPHYSICS A. The study of the biochemical properties of all the liquids of the body. V. THE FIELD OF POLYMER RESEARCH A. The study and development of plastics, etc. B. The mutual and interaction of polyelectrolytes and the study of their action with living tissues and soils C. Water-soluble polyelectrolytes VI. THE FIELD OF ORGANIC CHEMISTRY A. the study of the chemical and medical properties of plants of Israel. B. Survey and exploitation possibilities of local bituminous stone; research on the constituents of petrol products obtained by cracking.

- VII. THE FIELD OF BIOCHEMISTRY A. The study of acids B. The study of cell action and reaction C. The study of fermentation
- VIII. THE FIELD OF GENETICS (PLANT) A. The study of the castor bean species of industrial value for nylon production
- IX. THE FIELD OF MICROANALYSIS AND EXPERIMENTAL BIOLOGY A. The study of cancer, its causes and control B. Beginnings of human life

It is a marvelous institution, remarkably well equipped. Dr. Benjamin M. Bloch, General Director, took me to his office, (the only one he selected out of fifty or more people) gave me a lovely book and literature and said as I was leaving "I beg your pardon, but I wonder if you are a Christian or a Jew, you seem so different!" I replied, "Both and more; I am a Bahá'í!" His face lighted up. "Oh, are you? I would like to talk to you. Can you remain a little longer?" Then he asked many questions with great eagerness, and urged me to come again so that we could talk further of these great basic things.

The Guardian was happy to learn of the surprisingly warm response of Dr. Bloch, the General Director of the Weizmann Scientific Institute, to the spirit of our Bahá'í Faith.

JERUSALEM — THE LAND OF PROMISE

Jerusalem — The Golden! A tour to the Christian Shrines in Jerusalem and in Galilee is like a pilgrimage through the New Testament. Every place where Jesus the Christ walked is Holy Ground! It is thrilling to bend the knee in the Holy Sepulchre, to enter the caves on Mount Carmel, to tread the paths of the Mount of Beatitudes, Mt. Zion, the Mount of Transfiguration, The Mount of Olives, Cana and Nazareth, and to stand by the waters of Jordan where Jesus was Baptized of John... and John said, "But I have need to be baptized of Thee!" And Christ said, "Suffer it to be so now!" Then the Holy Spirit appeared in the form of a dove and said, "This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased."

These scenes, and these hallowed by all the Prophets of God, make this truly the Holy Land.

Zechariah 8:22 foretells a great future for Jerusalem. “Yea, many people and strong nations shall come to seek the Lord of Hosts (which means Bahá’u’lláh) in Jerusalem and to pray before the Lord.”... and ... Genesis 15:18... “And in the same day the Lord made a covenant with Abram saying, “Unto Thy seed have I given this land, from the river of Egypt to the great river, the river Euphrates.”

Today these prophetic statements of the Prophets of the past are being fulfilled, and Jerusalem is ... “The Land of Promise.”

THE COMMEMORATION OF THE ASCENSION OF BAHÁ’U’LLÁH IN BAHJÍ

Our beloved Guardian had invited Rúháníyyih to return to Haifa to commemorate the ascension of Bahá’u’lláh with the family in Bahjí. What a bounty to have two of the most important Bahá’í Feasts come during her pilgrimage — the Declaration of the Báb, May 23, and the Ascension of Bahá’u’lláh, May 28!

It was a hot, sultry day. At 5:00 P.M. the Guardian and many of the Bahá’í men from surrounding cities in Israel left by taxis for the all-night commemoration. At 9:00 p.m. the ladies of the household went to Bahjí, Rúháníyyih tucked in between Rúhíyyih Khánúm and Millie Collins. As we approached Bahjí, the lights of the gardens, many just completed for the occasion, were turned on. It was a fairyland of light and beauty that almost took the breath away. Thirty-five Bahá’í women, mostly dressed in black, knelt in prayer, wept and chanted in the Ascension Chamber of Bahá’u’lláh. At midnight tea was served in the Pilgrim House in Bahjí, and saintly Rúhíyyih Khánúm spoke about the life of Bahá’u’lláh and His passing, interspersed with readings and chanting. After midnight, circumambulating the gardens in prayer, all prayerfully entered the Shrine of Bahá’u’lláh; — the thirty-five women kneeling all night in the women’s alcove, and the fifty men kneeling in the garden room, in the Shrine, in prayer. The beloved Guardian chanted on his knees at the Holy Threshold the rest of the night, until first flickering gleams of rose-gold light of the rising sun began to appear, and the thrilling notes of the morning songs of the mocking-bird sympathy warbled forth heralding the dawn.

It was a never-to-be-forgotten, heavenly, soul-stirring experience to knee all night in the sacred Shrine of Bahá’u’lláh, with our souls soaring on the wings of prayer as our Guardian chanted in that Hallowed Spot! Another experience for which to be grateful throughout eternity!

“Come ye unto the House of the Lord with joy and thanksgiving” has entered our souls with a new and richer meaning and we go forth to spread the glad Tidings of the new Spiritual Splendour with radiant joy. {{p10}}

‘Abdu’l-Bahá said, “And from all these places the songs of praise and exultation will be raised to the Supreme Concurrence!”

THE GUARDIAN TO RUHANIYYIH RUTH MOFFETT

May 17, to June 1, 1954

The following {{p11}} are notes of table conversations given by the beloved Guardian in the presence of Rúḥíyyih Khánum and the members of the International Council who heard them all. Most of these notes were given when Ruth Moffett was the only remaining pilgrim. The notes are not verbatim and not given in sequence, but were verified by Rúḥíyyih Khánum, and members of the International Council at the table after the departure of the Guardian, and checked each night until midnight by Jessie Revell from her stenographic notes to be sure that the intent is correct, and expressed as accurately as possible, in the words of the beloved Guardain.

Rúḥíyyih Khánum wrote that if the friends could realize the selfless devotion, the justice and loving forbearance of the Guardian, “They would love him with a consuming, weeping tenderness and devotion, as indeed so many of them do. He is so golden-hearted, so pure-hearted, that sometimes when I catch a glimpse of it I am stunned.” As was this Pilgrim!

Now that our beloved Guardian has gone to his great reward in the Abhá Kingdom, every word of his is more important and precious than ever, and should be so soul stirring that we rise and spread the great, glad message of Bahá’u’lláh “as one soul in many bodies.”

Our Guardian, Shoghi Effendi had, on her first visit, asked the Greatest Holy Leaf, the only daughter of Bahá’u’lláh, for the spiritual names of Ruth and Robert Moffett, She said “For Ruth, Rúḥáníyyih, which means ‘spiritual beauty’, and the name of Robert is Ḥabíbu’lláh, which means ‘beloved’. Then the Guardian said that it is good to use these spiritual names as much as possible as it puts that spirit out into the others.

PART II “A”

Rúháníyyih Ruth Moffett

OUR GUARDIAN, SHOGHI EFFENDI SPEAKS

The Guardian greeted Ruth with unusual warmth and the first night placed her at the head of the table, which is a courtesy given to each new incoming pilgrim. As he did so, he said, “Welcome!” “It has been such a long time that we have looked for your return to Haifa. You will find things much changed from the time that you were here before. Did you see the Shrine of the Báb? I hope that you can go there tomorrow. How are the friends in America? How is the assembly in Chicago functioning now? What progress is there now? You say better. I am glad to hear that they are progressing better now. I hope that all the friends of America are progressing.” {{p12}}

Ruth said, trying to change the subject, which the Guardian knew she was doing, “I think, Shoghi Effendi, that you would be pleased to see the signs of maturity that were at the last convention.”

The Guardian said, “Signs of maturity! What signs? Everyone smiled.

Ruth replied, having to think quickly, “There seems to be less wordiness, and more of a desire for action and for pioneering.”

The Guardian said, “This enthusiasm is very fine during the Convention, but it seems that afterward they forget so soon. The Americans are very enthusiastic and industrious but they do not carry things through like the British. I am not referring to Mrs. Moffett. You are very industroius and sincere, and you are very persevering, even against great obstacles. This is an excellent quality. I hope that you can instill it into others.”

“Everything is declining in America. Art, music, money, manners. Everything. Especially in the great cities. You and the friends should leave the cities and disperse, that the Faith of God may grow and save mankind. Those who do not respond will loose everything. Those who do will gain everything.”

“You are greatly needed in the teaching field throughout America. I hope that you will continue as you have been doing so effectively, teaching college students, groups, communities, individuals, as well as in public lectures. This is very important. Although you have been asked to assist in many countries, you are most needed in America now.”

“There is too much emphasis upon Administration and not on spirit in America. Too much emphasis upon intellectual concepts and not upon spirit. Some do not know the difference. There is too much delving into mysticism and occultism, “idle fancies and vain imaginings.” This is not the Word of God and leads people into the web of vain immaginings from which it is very difficult to become extricated. The only hope for mankind is to turn the word of God as revealed by Bahá’u’lláh in this Day, and obey His laws and precepts. The occultists, like the Christian Scientists, are not pure in heart as they do not recognize the station of Manifestations, and like the Quakers they are not united in the Divine Focal Point, the Manifestation, so they do not have a direct power from God. I hope that you can help them to understand this.”

“Mrs. Moffett, what is your success with the Jews?”

Ruth replied, “Shoghi Effendi, many times I have been very successful for I love working with them. It seems that when a Jew truly turns to Bahá’u’lláh, he has a deeper sense of the Realities than do those of other backgrounds.” {{p13}}

The Guardian smiled and nodded and said, “That is good, and what you have said is true. The Jews are very devoted as are the Catholics, when they really turn to Bahá’u’lláh. I hope that you can work more with them Mrs. Moffett, and with the youth. This is very important.”

One evening the Guardian began speaking about the unity of the home and the many homes that are disunited today. He said, “Nothing should be done to disrupt the unity of the home. Each should fulfill his responsibilities to the home and by the law of constant consultation and cooperation and prayer maintain that unity. The one who disrupts it will surely suffer. The family is the institution of God. Everything should be done to preserve it.” Several times the Guardian spoke on this point. Later he said, “Nothing should be done to upset the family unity. Try to interest the unBahá’í husband to leave the city and go to some goal city to pioneer, where there is a new environment and a needed goal. Do everything possible to uphold the family unity and to win him to love and service in the Faith. That is the greatest success and protection for both. There will be a world civil war and after that a great unification. This must begin with the unity of the family and the friends. Mrs. Moffett, help the friends to understand this and to accept and serve the Word of God in this Day, as it is the most important thing in life.”

“In America there is too much emphasis upon Administration and not enough on spirit. We should remember that progress is made from crisis to crisis. We must learn to meet the crisis in the right way. The crises can not be avoided. The law of crisis is noted in all phases of life. We are now entering a new phase of life. Now is the time of the change of the tide of human history. It is the time of individual as well as world crisis. It can be met in the right way only by the power of Bahá'u'lláh in the Day."

The Guardian many times spoke of Africa and the remarkable progress there. One evening he ended his remarks by saying, "Africa is the country of greatest opportunities to teach the Faith and the safest of countries."

"Yes, Mrs. Moffett, move out of Chicago to a small city or village. The city people are deaf and blind and the village people are open to the Truth. Your Seminar method is very good. I hope that you continue as you have been doing as it brings results. You have been developing and perfecting this method for a long time and it is good. Concentrate on confirming souls as you have been doing. God has given you this greatest of blessings. Thank Him continually for this great bounty."

"Do not worry about pioneering and serving the Cause. You have been and are doing it. Do not worry about jobs and means. Go and you will find that means will come. Have faith and put the faith into activity." Ruth said that her money had all been going instead of coming, but she had the Faith in that great spiritual law, "According to thy faith shall thy powers and blessings be." She said that millions of things had come, more than money could possibly buy. Undreamed of things had miraculously worked out, thanks to Bahá'u'lláh. She prayed for strength to keep faith unwavering at all times.

One day Ruth received a letter from Josephine Kruka from Finland, asking her to ask the Guardian if sometime she (Ruth) could come to help in Finland. Ruth showed the Guardian the letter. He said, "Yes it is god for you to go to Finland sometime, but not right away, not on this trip, but later, and not to settle permanently. Yes, it will be good for you to go there later. Yes they would like to have you help in Australia, but you are not needed as much in Australia as elsewhere. You would be of great help in many countries but you are need most in America."

"You, Mrs. Moffett, have already rendered historic service. You not only convert, as many do, but you confirm. The most important work in the entire world is to Quicken souls and to inspire them into active service. You are one of the few people who are able to confirm souls. Many lecture, but that does not confirm. You have a long and enviable record of bringing souls to confirmation, which few others have. You lead them gently and lovingly up the necessary steps. In teaching, these steps are necessary. {{p14}}

1. Favorable Attention: 2. Interest: 3. Desire to do something: 4. conviction or Conversion: 5. Confirmation: 6. Service: 7. Consecration. Too many teachers stop before the step of confirmation, the step which stirs into action, service. This is much more important than Administration.

Anyone can administer, but only a true teacher can teach and confirm. You have been greatly blessed by this gift from God. I hope that you will continue as you have been doing. You are greatly needed in America to help make the goals. I am very disappointed in America. They have failed this past year. I am not referring to you, Mrs. Moffett. You have continued in spite of the difficulties, and you will be rewarded by God."

"Those who will not disperse will suffer physically, economically and most of all, spiritually because they have not listened and obeyed. They have not listened to the warnings of Bahá'u'lláh and 'Abdu'l-Bahá, who warned that 'the fire of materialism will devour the great cities, which are like Bábylon and Ninivah and Sodom and will be destroyed,' Christ warned, "Come out of her my people that ye be not partakers of her plagues." Canada is doing fairly well but U.S.A. has failed. America must be saved and America must rise to meet her great destiny. she must become the moral and spiritual leader of all the nations of the world. You must help her to rise to her great destiny. 'Abdu'l-Bahá will help you."

Continue to "Send your reports to the N.S.A. and to the A.N.T.C. and to the Area Committees. I had asked you when you were in Haifa before to send me reports regularly. This you have done and I have greatly appreciated them, but I have become too busy to read and enjoy them. I can no longer even write to the N.S.A.'s. Can only send cablegrams. Have you made an effort to reach the Jewish people and also the youth? This important. Perhaps sometime you can work with the Jews in Israel. I hope that you will continue in just what you are doing in larger and larger fields. Bahá'u'lláh will guide and bless you in our selfless and sacrificial efforts."

"In the Bahá'í world especially, we do not want to see homes broken up, especially Bahá'í homes. Try to help the friends to live the life, and try to win the blind and resistant husband or wife to the teachings for this Day, the observance of which will bring true happiness." Then turning to Ruth he said, " You are needed in America more than any place else. You can speak in universities and colleges and clubs as few other teachers can do. You are needed in many places. I hope that nothing will interfere with your teaching work."

One evening the Guardian said, "I have written and praised and warned and spoken with great firmness, and yet the friends of America seem to pay no attention. They seem concerned only with their own interests* spiritually for being so heedless and so immature. Now they must mature more rapidly and not act like other children." Ruth must have looked downcast for the Guardian smiled and said, "I do not mean you, Mrs. Moffett, but you must warn them in no uncertain terms for their own good. The heedless ones in the big cities are already trapped."

Several times the Guardian spoke of the great destruction in the world. One evening he said, "There will be a great amount of destruction in the world, in Europe, Asia, in the U.S.A., in the Pacific, along the coasts and even in Africa, wherever bases have been established. The White race will be diminished to almost nothing and will be unimportant in the future. We can do nothing about the calamities. We can do everything about the Faith. There is a great need for the awakening of the Assemblies. The more Administration in the form of committees, etc., the less the spirit and the slower the Teaching work. We need only enough Administration to bring results and to hold things together. The hands will have charge of all the teaching work. The Auxiliary boards will be representatives, assistants, and advisors to the friends. Keep in close touch with them. The Hands will assist you.”

*Insert — “and possessions. They will suffer physically as well as materially
{p15}

“Everything is declining in America. Things are so trivial and amaturish, and casual. We should express dignity, poise, and maturity for the things related to the Faith. Nothing is too good for the Faith, and it should be in good taste and appropriate. They should leave the great cities and disperse that the Faith may grow and save mankind. Those who do not respond will loose everything, London, Paris, New York, Chicago, San Francisco, will all be bombed! Yes, they will evaporate! Everything! America is stagnant! America must be saved! This is why the believers must disperse that the Faith may live and that they may not wither and die. Those who now fail to answer to the summons of the Ten Year Crusade will suffer both materially and spiritually.’ Those who do not respond to the Command of God will feel the double suffering. Bahá’u’lláh and ‘Abdu’l-Bahá both warned of this. This is very grave challenge and those who do not meet it will deeply regret it. Help the friends understand this. It must be presented to them wisely.”

Shoghi Effendi said that he had been told that some of the friends are disturbed over reports brought back by the pilgrims concerning the dangers facing America in the future whenever another world conflagration breaks out. He says that he does not feel that the Bahá’ís should waste time dwelling on the dark side of things. Any intelligent person can understand from the experiences of the past world war, and keeping abreast of what modern science has developed in the way of weapons for any future war, that big cities all over the world are going to be in tremendous danger. This is what the Guardian said to the pilgrims.

He urged the Bahá’ís, for the sake of serving the Faith, to go out from these centers of materialism... He strongly believes that the field outside of the big cities is more fertile, and that the Bahá’ís will in the end be happier. If the friends are concerned about obedience to civil government, how much more should they be concerned about obedience to the laws of Bahá’u’lláh and the directives of our Guardian.

He reminded us of the powerful words of Bahá’u’lláh in Prayers and Meditations, 208, “Armed with the power of Thy Name nothing can ever hurt me and with Thy love in my heart all the world’s afflictions can in no wise alarm me.” P&M p-208

It is better to use the words “Devotional Gatherings” or “Hour of Devotions,” rather than “Sunday Service.” Be creative, not just imitators. and a new way to chant prayers, that is more inspiring and not so monotonous.

The most Holy Places in the order of their importance are: 1-‘Akká, 2 — Haifa, 3-Baghdád, 4-Shíráz, 5-Ṭihrán, 6-Istanbul or Constantinople. 7 — Adrianople.

The Persian Temple will be larger than the one in Germany but smaller than the one in Wilmette. The American Temple is the mother of the West. The one in Ishqubad, is the Mother Temple of the East. Bahá’u’lláh is the Divine Youth foretold by the Báb. He was only 27 when He made His declaration. He expresses youth and vitality of the Spirit.

It is a sacred duty to pay one’s debts, if possible, before becoming a Bahá’í.

There will be great destruction, yes world civil war in Europe, U.S., Israel, the Islands of the Pacific, even in Africa, wherever bases are established. The White race in Africa will be almost diminished and will be unimportant in the future. The difficulty will be racial, civil, religious, all over the world. There is nothing to keep the Soviets from marching into Israel. Ṭihrán and Baghdád are also in great danger. Oil is the goal. The Heart of the Bahá’í world, Haifa, and the Cradle of the Faith, Chicago, and the greatest strongholds of the Administrative Institutions are all in danger. The Bahá’ís must pray that God will mercifully protect the Faith, as in the past. This is all due to the decline in religion and of materialism and of spiritual decadence. {{p16}}

Love, self-sacrifice and devotion bring results in the Faith rather than plans, ability, and any universal status.

It is very important to reach the native people whenever possible. It is more important to concentrate on Istanbul than on Ankara, even though it is the Capital, for six reasons. 1-Because Istanbul is the city where Bahá’u’lláh suffered and was imprisoned by the Sultán. 2-Because it is the key to the whole Black Sea Area. 3-Because it is the meeting point between East and West. 4-Because it was the ancient capital. 5-Because the Ḥazíratu’l-Quds will be built there. 6-Because the N.S.A. of Turkey will be established there.

Ruth spoke of the lengthy article by a group of radio active geiger counter scientists during the geophysical year, who are opening up some knowledge of past cycles of human history. They state that all larger cycles seem to be divided into 6000 year cycles, and at the end of each great changes take place, as at the end of this 6000 years, not of building great over-crowded cities, but on a pattern of village building adapted to the new age of science. The Guardian smiled and remarked, “Yes, I am glad that the scientists are beginning to discover what Bahá’u’lláh stated almost a century ago. Science is making progress.”

Our Guardian, Shoghi Effendi, stated that the United States was chosen as the Cradle of the New World Order, not because of its spiritual qualities, but because of its corruption, the same as Persia was chosen for the Revelation of Bahá’u’lláh because the Persians were worse than the African savages and far more barbaric.

After the coming calamity the United States will fulfill the prophecy that the United States will suffer, then it will lead all the nations spiritually. He said that he has given up warning the friends, as they paid no heed to either the warnings of ‘Abdu’l-Bahá nor to Shoghi Effendi. They must suffer to awaken.

It is too late to save the world. The Message of Bahá’u’lláh has been in the world over one hundred years to save mankind, but it has been rejected all over the world. The calamity will be sudden. He spoke of the American statesman from the President down, all are helpless and impotent. The United States is not now an altruistic nation. You help others to help yourselves.

The Russian submarines will paralyze Great Britain, the United States, Europe, the Atlantic, Pacific and Mediteranean seaboards. The Bahá’ís have failed with the Negros in the United States. Intermarriage is good, between races. It brings out the best in both races. Americans love money, wives, family, friends, possessions. There is a sad decline in home life, morals, art, music, money, everything.

Bahá’ís should not only leave their homes but go away as far as possible from the coasts and to where they can serve the Cause of God. Victories come only from sacrifice and self-abnegation. The greater the sacrifice the greater the victory. Bahá’ís should lower their standards of living in order to give more to the Faith.

We must be careful with governments and reckless with missionaries. More settlers should go from the United States to France and to the Scandinavian countries. Do not think that you can rest on your oars after this ten year crusade. The Guardian has 19 new teaching plans to be launched after this Ten Year plan is completed.

We should use Dr. George W. Townshends latest book, “Christ and Bahá’u’lláh” because it is the most scholarly and portrays the Kingdom of God upon the earth. (This note was added later after Ruth Moffett had visited Dr. Townshend in Dublin, at the Guardian’s request, and delivered his message to him, all of which caused or enabled him to complete the book at a time when he could no longer write. This again shows the cosmic power of prayer and love and faith. It is a wonderful story.) {{p17}}

The coming calamity will be worse than war! Whole cities will evaporate! Especially in those cities here it is harder to teach the Faith such as New York, Chicago, San Francisco. People will loose all their possessions and homes over night. They will simply evaporate! Americans will become refugees in other countries and continents. The United States will suffer most because it is the most materialistic. Europe was the cradle of materialism but the united States is the stronghold of materialism. Russia will also suffer greatly. There is little difference between the United States and Russia in their systems because both are materialistic. Capitalism is purely materialistic, and Communism is purely materialism. both control the proletariat. Both will suffer greatly. The calamity will be retributive.

The earth will be covered mostly by dark skinned people and these of the so-called uncivilized nations, not submerged materialism, "The limbs of mankind shall quake" will apply more to the U.S.A. because of the importance of the U.S.A. and her great destiny. Many countries are over populated with people of bad blood. This must be cleansed. Science in the future will solve the food problem. The calamity will happen before the Lesser Peace. If the U.S.A. and Great Britain fail on the home fronts the Baghdad Conference may not take place. America must become the moral and spiritual leader of all the nations!!!!

Another evening, the Guardian said, "London, Paris, New York, Chicago, San Francisco are already trapped. There are Russian submarines along the Atlantic and Pacific coasts now." Some of the friends find it difficult to leave their homes and to pioneer, even to move to goals within their own country. They do not see that we are not asking them to sacrifice. We are protecting them from great difficulty and from themselves. We are not only protecting them from the calamity that is rushing toward them outwardly, but from the calamity that is rushing toward them inwardly."

One evening the Guardian spoke of certain National Committees. He said, "They did fine work in fulfilling their goals in such a short time, but like an unwise mother training her child, leaving it a little well dressed, polite nonentity. Some of these National Committees have not brought any new souls into the Faith, but are over-administered as was the N.S.A. of America."

"England went through a period also when it was too over administered, but they have a good balance now. In America they still repress some of the best teachers and build up a certain individual. Every good teacher that can teach should be encouraged and assisted. The progress of the world depends on the way we teach and the way we function today in our untied efforts. We must know the Teachings and how to best present them. We must have loving understanding, consultation, cooperation, and prayer together and for one another. Each one is important and has his part to fill. We are all bits of mosaic in the great Divine plan, and must not mar the pattern by failing to fulfill our part."

"In the Western world the people do not like to be commanded or to obey. They say, 'No one can push me around!' The Guardian does not command anyone. The Guardian wishes only to guide and protect the friends." That night Ruth wrote in her notebook: Here you lose the forever the feeling that so many in the West seem to have, of rebellion against command, and you long to have the Guardian command you to do something that you may obey. His words are always suggestions and pointing the way. You see obedience in the new light of protection, and in the joy of service, of accomplishment and of attainment.

Rúháníyyih Khánúm inquired about Ruth's husband Robert and said "I have always admired and loved him. He has the capacity to do great things for the Faith. That means power and success! Go to a goal city and build it up. As the Guardian suggested, leave Chicago and never mind about the job first. Move first and the new opportunities will open up for you as you are ready for them.

As one serves the Cause and has the faith he will find that all will be well and work for the best. As you work together your efforts will be crowned with power and success. Remember, Ruth, the Guardian said that your work is outstanding. Together you can make it even more so.” {{p18}}

Several times the Guardian spoke to Ruth about teaching through-out the Near-East and Europe on her return from Haifa. One evening he said: “I hope Mrs. Moffett, that you will go throughout the Near East and Europe and the British Isles, meeting as many of the friends as you can and help them to understand the spirit of the Shrines, the nature of the Ten Year Crusade and the Divine plan. I hope that you can teach as many Summer Schools as possible both in Europe and America. You have something that they very much need. Stress the points in my recent cablegrams and help them to understand the importance of the global Crusade, and that this is the most important decade in all human history. The future is dependent upon the events of this decade. The future of mankind is dependent upon what the friends do today! If they do not arise as they should today, Bahá’u’lláh has stated that he will raise up another people and our opportunity shall be lost forever. Please stress these things in no uncertain terms, but wisely.”

“Help the pioneers and friends to understand all the points that I have mentioned and especially these nine points. 1-Persevere, 2-Sacrifice, 3 — Remain in your post until an Assembly is well established, 4-Live the life, 5-Keep active, 6-Love all the people, 7-Teach! Teach! Teach! 8-Establish a strong Assembly, 9-Pray and meditate continually!”

“Your book, ‘Do’a The Call To Prayer’ is very helpful. More should use and study it, especially the Five Points of Prayer which I gave to you when you were in Haifa years ago. One cannot succeed without prayer. Help the friends to learn more of the prayers so that they do not have to depend upon a book. also they should speak the words. Thinking the words is not sufficient. If you are where you cannot speak the words aloud, speak them without putting the voice into them. They are much more potent in that way.”

“Mrs. Moffett has developed a very fine chart, The Cause of the Rise and Fall of Civilizations.” As the Guardian said this, Rúhíyyih Khánum rose and handed the big chart to the Guardian from a serving table. He unrolled it and pushed aside his plates and silver and anchored it down with his cup and water glass. He said; “I had advised against the use of certain charts that have been sent to me that were incorrect and misleading. I did not advise against all charts, as I use the chart method myself. Mrs. Moffett’s chart is in a special class. It is based upon history. It is a graph of the cycle as one would illustrate the solar system. It is a chart which establishes relationships. It is very fine. She has permission to use it wherever she feels there is a need. It is the result of her search and not a Bahá’í chart, as it was not made by ‘Abdu’l-Bahá nor the Guardian. Bahá’ís need it and it is good for use in college classes and for those of a Christian and Moslem background. It is very convincing.”

“Every Bahá’í should teach according to his ability and all who teach groups and speak in public should be trained in classes for that purpose. The Bahá’í must not practice on the public. The very best presentation is never good enough. Teachers should be carefully trained and constantly strive to improve their presentation, giving more and more of the deeper realities, with the spirit that has been released in the world by Bahá’u’lláh. The time has come when the friends must study more thoughtfully and teach and travel to all parts of the world. Love and sincerity will take you anywhere. Teach with warm, loving enthusiasm and dignity. It takes concentration and purity of heart to teach. We are being called to higher standards, and to greater unity of spirit. This is our protection.”

On the last evening the Guardian said: “It is good for you to go to Germany and to Vienna if you can. The German people have suffered much, and need what you have to give them. Go to as many places as you can throughout Europe and the British Isles. It would be well for you to teach in as many Summer Schools as you can, both in Europe and America. You will be of great help to them. You have something that they much need. But work in the U.S.A. where you are needed most, all over North America. I am disappointed in America. They are too much interested in administering something or somebody and in publicity rather than in reaching souls with the only healing remedy, the remedy for mankind. I hope that you can help them reach souls, with the love and spirit of Bahá’u’lláh.” {{p19}}

The Guardian turned directly to Ruth and said; “Mrs. Moffett, your work has been outstanding!” Then he turned to the members of the International Council and said; “There are few that have brought others into the Cause as has Mrs. Moffett. There should be a thousand like her. She is self-sacrificing, loving, understanding, well-organized, sincere and consecutive. She leads her students step by step until she firmly brings them into the Faith. Then she trains them to carry on. She is like Martha Root and Dorothy Baker, and speaks in the universities and colleges. Few are equipped to do that. Her work is historic. I am proud of her. She is the Martha Root of America!

The Guardian rose, and all at the table rose. As he held out his hand and said, “Farewell,” to Ruth, he said; “Be not discouraged, Mrs. Moffett, your work is historic. I am proud of you. Go on just as you have been doing. May Bahá’u’lláh lead you into even greater work and bless you! I hope that you will come again to Haifa where you will always be most welcome.” Then the Guardian took both of Ruth’s hands in his hand, and with the sweetest smile said, “I shall pray in the Shrines that you may become an unobstructed channel of great power reaching thousands of people.” Then he pressed her hand in farewell and said with the most heart-warming smile; “I am expecting great things of you, Mrs. Moffett, and please tell the friends that I send them my love and greetings, and tell them that I am expecting great things of them also during our Global Crusade. God Speed!” Then he was gone!

Ruth stood speechless and breathless after the powerful last words of the Guardian. She felt stunned by all that he had said about her work, that he was proud of her, that her work was historic. She felt that she would strive even more to measure up to what the Guardian said of her. Rúhíyyih Khánúm said; “The Guardian seldom speaks with such power and fire.”

As Ruth stood stunned and speechless, her eyes drank in hungrily the last glimpse of the beloved Guardian as he disappeared in the doorway. She thought happily that he had invited her to come again to Haifa. Then a staggering thought flashed through her mind. “Bahá’u’lláh has endowed you with one of the greatest gifts — the power to confirm. Thank God for this great gift and bring Him even greater fruitage.” In that moment, when her heart seemed to be torn out by the roots at parting, she dedicated her life in greater service to the beloved Guardian, even should he not be visible among us, and breathed a prayer; “O God, forgive my weakness and failings and help me to know and do Thy will!”

It was heavenly to be alone and kneel at the bed of the beloved Master and feel His loving presence. And to have the last midnight hour with dear Rúhíyyih Khánúm and Millie in Millie’s room in prayer, and meditating on the words of the beloved Guardian. This hour was most precious! Throughout all eternity I shall be grateful for these heavenly days in this blessed spot.... the spiritual Kaaba of the world. ALLAH’U’ABHÁ! {{p20}}

Part II “B”

OUR GUARDIAN SPEAKS

Many people have visited the Guardian at Haifa, yet each one brings back a little different impression of the Guardian and of his statements to the pilgrims. Therefore, these notes are the personal, individual impression of this pilgrim, written down daily with the help of the secretaries of the International Council.

One night the Guardian said, “Pilgrim notes are very important. They should be eagerly received as they bring the Spirit of the Shrines, and the station of the Guardianship, and the first-hand impressions which the cablegrams and letters cannot convey. Of course they cannot be authoritative, as they are not written by the Master or the Guardian, but they are very important, and should be so considered.”

It is a joy and a privilege to share with you some of the wisdom and rich experiences and the knowledge from His Excellency, Shoghi Effendi Rabbání, our beloved Guardian.

Rúhíyyih Khánúm said she had a dream one night: she dreamed that the dam had burst and that there was a great flood, She rushed down to the water’s edge to try to save someone, but the current swept them past. She reached out to try to grasp and save another. She grasped one by the hair, and, with great effort, brought that one to shore. Then she tried to reach another, but the current swept him by. She looked up at the side of the mountain, and there she saw ‘Abdu’l-Bahá, who looked like a Prophet of God, with his white turban and flowing beard, with his back to the flood, working very hard. She rushed up the mountain side, grasped His sleeves and said, “Oh, ‘Abdu’l-Bahá, come and help me save some of these people who are drowning in the flood.” ‘Abdu’l-Bahá went right on, working very rapidly and said nothing. She grasped his sleeve again and said, “Oh ‘Abdu’l-Bahá, these people are drowning, come help me save some of these people who are drowning in the flood.” ‘Abdu’l-Bahá, without stopping his work turned to her with a smile and Sa’id, “‘Abdu’l-Bahá is building the machine to stop the flood.” (That is what is taking place in the world today)

The Guardian said, one evening that world unity will be securely established in the twentieth century. Bahá’u’lláh does not wish the countries to be deprived of kingship, so when there are enough Bahá’í states, they will follow the injunction of Bahá’u’lláh. Then he made the surprising statement that America will one day have a king. Kingship, as known at present, will disappear, but will later be re-established. Then he stated that fourteen or fifteen kings have fallen as the result of the unawareness and the resistance to the message of Bahá’u’lláh.

Muhammad, who wrote to the kings said that if Ceasar did not respond to the Tablet that he wrote to him, that Constantinople would fall to the Moslems, and this tradition is in a tablet on the wall of St. Sophia.

Kings will not have political power in the future, but will be honorary, and they will represent the majority of the people who have turned toward God. They will be in a position that will be in harmony and cooperation with the Universal House of Justice.

After the passing of ‘Abdu’l-Bahá, we know that the Persian dynasty completely changed and the Turkish Empire fell. The Guardian said that we must base our work on the Divine Plan and use the Divine Institutions to do it. These, only, will bring success. These Institutions were not created at the same time when our beloved Martha Root lived, and so there was not success at that time in the creating of groups.

The Guardian spoke of the evolution of the World Order; that the L.S.A. and Institutions in the days of the Master were the germ of World Order. The Administrative order, is, itself, an embryo; the World Order is the child and the offspring, World Order will gradually develop in the Golden Age and reach the stage of “the coming of age” of mankind. This stage will happen at the close of the Golden Age. World Order {{p21}} will evolve in the course of the Golden Age until it will reach its period of “coming of age”; then it will gradually mature. To illustrate — we know that a man matures at the age of forty. It is a short period from the time of boyhood to the “coming of age”, but a long period from the “coming of age” to maturity, and that is the most important time in all one’s life. It is important to know the Genesis of World Order. It is the result of the union of the law of Bahá’u’lláh, the positive generating factor and covenant of Bahá’u’lláh and the mind of ‘Abdu’l-Bahá. The union of the two gives rise to the birth of the Administrative Order which started in the formative age and matures toward the close of the Bahá’í cycle.

Bahá’u’lláh says that there will be in every 500,000 years, only one Revelation that can be compared to his Revelation. The Master established it in the Tablet. We must make a distinction between the station of Manifestations and the Station of Bahá’u’lláh. There will be a series of Major Prophets, each with a book, added laws and truth, and each may abrogate previous ones, but they will be under the Light of Bahá’u’lláh. All will be law givers, Founders of a new Dispensation, major Prophets, and yet they will be under the Light of Bahá’u’lláh. The World Order will mature in the course of a series of dispensations.

So many times it is asked, “But why should Bahá’u’lláh have such a high station?” I will explain. Because His Revelation coincides with a stage unique in the evolution of humanity, namely, the coming of age of the human race. This has never happened before and could never happen again at any time upon this planet.

This planet was not discovered when Muḥammad appeared, and America was not discovered when Christ appeared, nor much even of the Far East; so it was impossible for Christ and Muḥammad, or the Prophets before them, to stress the unification of man. First the world must be discovered, then science must develop, then the world must contract. This makes the coming of age the culmination of the 6000 year process so important.

Nothing more important could happen to man than reaching the age of 21. something happens inside of him, physically, psychologically, and spiritually. Maturity is reached at the age of 40, and that is due to the change that came over him at 21. What happens at 21 is more important than what happens at 40, or any other time of life, because what happens at 40 is determined by what happened at 21. that is why the Revelation of Bahá’u’lláh is so important; that is why those that recognize it and turn to Him are alive and those who turn away are as dead!

This is the answer that Bahá’ís must give when people object to the Bahá’ís saying that other Prophets will appear under the Light of Bahá’u’lláh. This is the only answer that we can give adequately just now. No Revelation after Bana’u’llah will be final. It is progressively and indefinitely so, but future Revelations will be under the light of Bahá’u’lláh and be less in spirit!

Bahá’u’lláh’s claims are tremendous, challenging, but reasonable. The claims of the Moslems and Catholics are neither challenging, nor reasonable, nor tremendous. No one had made a greater claim in our history than Bahá’u’lláh, and no one has made a lesser claim than Muḥammad, because he stressed the less challenging aspect of God.

In the Íqán, page 178-181, Bahá’u’lláh gives all the stations of the Manifestations of God. He quotes them. He says, “If We say We are servants, We are right. If

We say We are God, We are right. Muḥammad claimed only to be a Messenger of God, the least challenging. Bahá'u'lláh did the opposite, He claimed to be the Revelation of God, the Glory of God! All reflect the Divine Spirit tho' the mission of each is different.

When one claims a very high station, all lower ones are included in that statement. Previous Prophets were all preliminary Manifestations, preparing the way for the Promised One and those under His shadow, like John in the Revelations to Christ, and the Báb to Bahá'u'lláh. Because this is the Cycle of Maturity. {{p22}}

The process of World Order starts only with the Bahá'í Revelation; the Administrative order, the L.S.A.'s and institutions are the embryo. We are now entering the third stage. It will gradually lead to World Order, the offspring. It will pass through seven stages. 1 — Obscurity, 2 — Repression, 3—Emancipation, 4 — Recognition, 5—Establishment, 6—Sovereignty, 7 — Emergence of the Bahá'í World Commonwealth. That means the coming of age of the human race, the establishment of the Most Great Peace. This is the Golden Age and the evolution of humanity. These processes will join and they will reach the stage of the birth of World Civilization!

This is the starting point for a succession of dispensations, culminating in the maturity of the human race. The maturity of the fruit of the Tree of Progressive Revelation, and the maturity of human society will progress all together.

The World Order of Bahá'u'lláh is purely Bahá'í now, but at the same time the world is progressing, divine revelation, also is progressing. World Order and human society can no longer be a separate process. The Bahá'í World Commonwealth will begin to mature near the end of the Bahá'í dispensation, not cycle. This leads to the birth of the fruit of the golden Age!

The coming of the Báb is totally different. This is another process. It starts with Adam; in a way it is the evolution of Divine Revelation, but this is a different simile; From Adam to the Báb is represented by the Branch, the Leaf and the Flower. The olive tree is mentioned in the Qur'án, not without reason. It is a different simile altogether. The Guardian spoke of it in his message to the American convention last Riḍván. He called for this message, and after considerable search it was found and he read this passage; "This is the station of the Báb. I compare it to the fruit, the olive tree sacrifices itself for oil, the oil is ignited. This is Bahá'u'lláh! The fire becomes Bahá'u'lláh." The Dispensation of The Báb is the beginning of the process of diffusion of the Light of Bahá'u'lláh throughout the planet.

The Qur'án refers to the tree which belongs neither to the East nor the West, whose oil is so powerful that it ignites itself. This refers to The Báb; when ignited the light becomes Bahá'u'lláh and this happened in the Siyyih Chal. Read Súrah of Muḥammad called the Light. Quote: "Alláh is the light of the heavens and the earth, a likeness of his like is as the pillar on which is the lamp. The lamp is in a glass and the glass is, as it were, a brightly shining star, lit from a blessed olive tree, neither Eastern or Western, the oil whereof almost gives light, though the fire toucheth it not. Light upon light. Alláh gives light when he pleases, and Alláh sets forth parables for men, and Alláh is cognizant of all things.” These are the words of Muḥammad.

In the Siyyih Chal there was only a faint flicker of Divine light, soon enveloped by clouds. For ten years it was obscured and eclipsed by calamities. Then, in Baghdád, when Bahá’u’lláh went to Adrianople the light was lighted in a crystal globe, meaning the stage of proclamation of His Mission in Adrianople. It shone more brightly then.

The light was confined to the East all this time. When Bahá’u’lláh ascended, or passed on, through the Covenant, ‘Abdu’l-Bahá, the Light struck the fringes of the continents of America, Europe, and Australia. After the Master passed on, as a result of the Light, Shoghi Effendi, the Administrative Order was established. Its father is the Law of Bahá’u’lláh, and its mother, the Covenant of ‘Abdu’l-Bahá. The Light spread all over the continents through Shoghi Effendi.

This is the stage that we are in now, and we are witnessing its unfolding. It is now diffusing its light over all the continents; then, later, it will envelop the whole planet; then in the course of the future, successive, generations, light beams will penetrate. when the Administrative Order is firmly established in every country, this firm establishment will cause the penetration of the Light that gave its first flicker in the year “Nine”. {{p23}}

In the Qur’án, the olive is symbolic of the Christian Dispensation, and the fig in the Mosaic Dispensation. In the Tablet of Lawh-i-Ra’ to the Prime Minister of Turkey, Bahá’u’lláh said that “once We appeared as an olive tree and the Mount of Olives, or Zetah; and once We appeared as the fig.” In another passage in the Qur’án, Muḥammad swears by the fig and the olive, the Mosaic and Christian Dispensations, and by this noble city, which means Mecca. The Moslem Dispensation is not symbolized by a tree, but by a mountain...Mount Paran, near Sinai.

Missionaries have derided Muḥammad for saying that He was swearing by trees, whereas, in reality He meant Dispensations.

All three mountains are mentioned in Deuteronomy... Mt. Siani, referring to Moses, Mt. Paran to Muḥammad, and Mt. Sier to the Christian Dispensation and the ten thousand saints, and Mt. Carmel refers to Bahá’u’lláh.

The light of Bahá’u’lláh is now diffused through Shoghi Effendi over 268 countries and dependencies of the world; and here, in the year 1954, it is almost inconceivable that 110 have been opened, in ten months, the Great Light of Bahá’u’lláh... that means 11 countries per month this year! There is nothing like this in all religious history. The Light of Bahá was not spread by the sword but by the love, sacrifice, effort, education and spirit of the followers of Bahá’u’lláh.

Palestine has undergone many changes and influences. First, it was the Land of Canaan; then King Saul made it a civic state; then David and Solomon were kings expanding its territories. For a long time it was part of Ancient Bábylon; then it became a part of the Medo-Persian Empire... and when that fell, it became a part of the Grecian Empire and had the influence of that civilization. It was then taken over by the Holy Roman Empire, and it was at that time that Jesus, the Christ, came... when Palestine was under the heel of Rome. Following that, it became a Moslem country controlled by the Moslems., the Turks, and the Arabs. Then it was an English mandate, in 1918; and from 1948, after the revolution, Israel has been a free state, the Moslems holding the old city of Jerusalem, and Jordan.

It was in 1948, during the remarkable bloodless revolution, that 4,000,000 Moslems fled from the land, and less than a million Jews marched in and began developing the land. The Jews have suffered for nearly 2,000 years because they persecuted Jesus, the Christ, for three years. How long do you think the Moslems will suffer when they persecuted Bahá'u'lláh, the Glory of God, for fifty years? They will be scattered and persecuted greatly.

The borders of Israel will be extended far beyond where they are today. The Jews do not know why they have been called "The chosen people." They have been chosen to come and build the state that will become the chalice, holding the precious jewel of the Bahá'í World Center, the Capitol of the World! What a great bounty is theirs! Some day they will know and appreciate the reality of being "chosen" for such a great service!

On page 75 in S.A.Q., 'Abdu'l-Bahá said the time would come when the whole of Palestine would be returned to the Jews. The Jews are now materialistic and very nationalistic, and not at all spiritual. The fundamental reason why the Jews, after 2,000 years of dispersal, returned to Palestine is to become the supporters of the Faith of Bahá'u'lláh at its World Center. This is their destiny; their immediate destiny is to build up their state which is very valuable to the faith.

The Arabs would not do this. The Jews are cousins to the British in tenacity and courage. They fought very bravely when defending their Faith. They have great thinkers and scientists among them. They have good scientists and keen business-men, and this is needed to build this state which will become the "chalice for the precious jewel of Bahá'u'lláh".

I asked the Guardian, "Which is the correct cave of Elijah on Mt. Carmel?" The larger {{p24}} is claimed by the Moslems; the smaller, higher cave, by the Christian Carmelite Monks, over which is the Carmelite Church. The Guardian said that the smaller, higher cave is the correct one... the cave in which all the Prophets, major and minor, had been. It is in this cave in which the monks have kept a candle constantly burning for over 1700 years, and a monk in constant attendance, looking for the Promised One of the day at the end of the days. It was in this cave, in 1888, that Bahá'u'lláh revealed the Tablet of Carmel in a loud voice, so that the priests and monks could hear Him.

“It is important,” the Guardian said, “to memorize the Tablet of Carmel. It is on page 14 in the Gleanings.” then he continues and said that Bahá’u’lláh is the Founder of the Shrines on Mt. Carmel, and much more. He is the Founder of the whole set of Institutions on Mt. Carmel. He is the Founder of all the Administrative and Spiritual centers of the World Commonwealth. The Tablet of Carmel is the Charter of the World Center of the Faith. The Will and Testament of ‘Abdu’l-Bahá is the Charter of the Administrative Order. We will build according to the directions of this Charter and the Divine Plan, or third division, which is the Charter for the Propagation of the Faith. All these form The Charter for World Order.

It is almost six years since the armistice between the Jews and the Arabs, but there is no peace. The Arabs have no intention of establishing peace. They are hostile and vindictive. Fortunately, they are not united. This saves the Jews and protects us as well.

There are 4,000,000 Arabs in seven states and yet they were defeated by less than a million Jews, and the Jews defeated the British also with their great armies. Then the Guardian smiles, and explained how they did it without adequate men or means.

We are assured that the Jews will occupy all of Palestine. ‘Abdu’l-Bahá said this in S.A.Q. Also, the British Secretary Balfour stated it. Israel, to many, means home. Israel means “Blessing”, means “God”, “Israel hastening to God”, or “the Blessings from God”. The decline of Islám is beginning.

The Arabs suffered great defeat because they persecuted and did not respond to the call of Bahá’u’lláh, and millions of Arabs left Israel and one million Jews moved in. How will the Jews get the land? The Arabs will make trouble and the Jews will drive them out, and the country will be extended. The destiny of Israel is to become a Bahá’í state. They will support the International Institutions of the Faith. World opinion is now pro-Arab. It will later become pro-Israel. This will happen on a world scale. There will be a World Civil War and then a great unification!”

Did you ever dream that such results would come from Africa, the dark continent? Kampala has set the example for the whole Bahá’í World. America is stagnating and Africa is full of vigor and vitality! Everything is declining in America, the arts, music, the money, the manners. Fear, frustration, disillusionment are everywhere. America is a stagnant pool. There are signs of stagnation everywhere, because it is a materialistic civilization like Bábylon, Ninevah, and Rome. They must become more spiritual in America, and less materialistic. Irreligion and godlessness are increasing everywhere, causing more crime. Fear is causing some to go back to church, while in Africa there is vigor and vitality. I am very grateful and proud of Africa. After 50 years in America, there are only four Indian tribes that have been touched, while in Africa 70 tribes have been influenced by the Light of Bahá’u’lláh. {{p25}}

The Guardian said to Mr. & Mrs. Elston, pioneers to Africa, that he wanted a picture of all the African believers together. This can only be accomplished by a Conference, and All-African Conference. It is not yet time, as the Government might become suspicious seeing so many together, but it will be held in the future.

Mary Elston said that the neighbors were ignoring them, but the Ḥazíratu'l-Quds was like a beehive!

You are familiar with 'Abdu'l-Bahá's Divine Plan, which is divided into three seven year divisions. The first two of these have been successfully completed. We have now recently entered into the third division of the Divine Plan, which is our Ten Year Global Crusade, which will be completed in 1963.

The Guardian gave me very specific directives for the accomplishment of this Ten Year Plan. He asked me to stress some of these objectives in this Plan and the way by which we can bring this about successfully. These are very, very important. He asked me to stress these various points throughout my travels in Europe, America, and the British Isles. 1 — The first is systematic and energetic teaching, saying that teaching work is the most all-important part of the Ten Year Plan. 2 — Second to that, at all cost, the prizes that have been won must be maintained, with emphasis on the "at all cost". 3 — The third is that Assemblies that are now functioning must be maintained, and he emphasized, "by every available means". Then he emphasized the fact that during the next nine years 48 new N.S.A.'s should be established.

We know how long it has taken us to establish just twelve N.S.A.'s, and so today it looks utterly, completely impossible that within nine years 48 new N.S.A.'s shall be established... But we know that it will be done.

Then he emphasized the prompt purchase of the sites for the future Bahá'í Temples. He did not say the Temples would be built during the Ten Year Crusade, but the prompt purchase of the sites that are mentioned in the Divine Plan must be made.

The sixth point is that the funds must be built for the establishment of Ḥazíratu'l-Quds in the capitol cities, and the next dependencies that are in the Plan. He does not say that they must be built, but the funds must be built during this period.

Another point is the translation of the literature mentioned in the Divine Plan by 'Abdu'l-Bahá. This is already started, and we know that it will be completed ere the nine years are finished.

The next is the acquisition of all the Holy Places in Írán. The Persian friends, as soon as the Guardian suggests something that should be done, they go and do it. Already all of the Holy Places have been purchased save one, and that is the Shrine of Assiyiyih Khánum, the beautiful devoted wife of the Báb. It is a Muḥammadan Mosque which they had been unable to get. Recently we learned that the Shrine has been purchased, the remains removed and placed on a new shrine erected for her.

The tenth point is the construction of a Mashriqu'l-Adhkár in Tihiran and that will be built within the Ten Year Crusade. He stressed the erection of the Mashriqu'l-Adhkár in Frankfort, Germany, and we know that it will be completed. Just recently, when I was there, with the N.S.A. of Germany in Nechargumund they purchased the site for the first temple. We had a beautiful celebration in commemoration of the purchase of the site. They are anxious to build as soon as possible. What an example after all they have gone through!

The next point is to build a Dependency in Wilmette, which we know is an Old People's Home. He said, "Build it, and build it promptly!" This might indicate something of the need and the emergency of the times. [page 26A]

Then the Guardian stressed the need of establishing L.S.A. endowments and other needs. This we know has already started Ñ the endowments for the L.S.A.'s and the N.S.A.'s and we have a new direct form of giving for the endowments to take care of the Institutions for the Hands of the Cause in the future.

The next point he raised was to lend a fresh impetus that L.S.A.'s become incorporated. I found in so many cities in which I travelled that the communities had no idea of the importance of having and L.S.A. incorporated. The Guardian said that when there are fifteen members, if possible, they should become incorporated; without it they are a nonentity, and with it they are an entity and can hold property. In these days it is very, very important.

The fourteenth point is to establish a Bahá'í Publishing Trust in each of the five continents. "This", he said, "is next in importance to the teaching work".

Then the Guardian spoke of the objective of the Ten Year Plan in relation to the World Center of the Faith in Israel. His first point is that the preliminary steps be taken for the construction and beautification of the Sepulcher of Bahá'u'lláh in Bahjí; following that will be the purchase of land for the building of the Temple on Mt. Carmel. This has already been accomplished, and a pointed monument on a pedestal will be placed upon that site until it is time to erect the Temple. The names of Mason Remey, architect, and Millie Collins, doner, will be engraved upon it.

The next point was the importance of establishing an International Bahá'í World Court. This is most wonderful, for we know that the World Court of the League of Nations did during a brief period. It was very important and effective as far as it went, but not all nations were members and therefore it was not truly a World Court. Also, it was involved in political affairs in a way that it would not become a perfectly just court. So we can see what it will mean when we can establish an International Bahá'í Court to which any nation can go for advice and help.

"Then the next directive", he said, "is the construction of the International Bahá'í Archives. This will be built on the Tenth Terrace, over-looking the Monumental Gardens on Mt. Carmel in Israel. The drawings are already completed." "It was my privilege to watch Mr. Mason Remey make the drawings day by day while I was there. Ere long the construction of the Archives will begin. This will be a great asset to the Cause.”

The next point is the extension of the International endowments. The Guardian has already mentioned it, first the extension of Bahá’í endowments, and then the extension of the service of the Hands of the Cause. It has been a year since they were appointed, and now we know that they will be a very important part in establishing forms, methods and systems by which the teaching work can go forth with much greater efficiency.

The codification of the Laws of the Kitáb-i-Aqdas is very important because we can break a commandment or an injunction, but when it comes [page 26B] to a law, we must obey it to the last letter. When we have the codification of the laws of the Kitáb-i-Aqdas, we can see how that will begin to establish unification in the world greater than any other single means can bring about.

Another point is to unify the ties binding the community to the United Nations. We know this is already started in the non-governmental committee, but it is not very effective yet. The ties must be strengthened and reinforced, so that through this means, also, world unity will be established.

The Guardian spoke of the establishment of the Israeli branches of the seven N.S.A.’s on Mt. Carmel. In other words, this is a very important means by which the N.S.A.’s can be linked to the hub of the whole Cause at its Center, owning property in the World Center. This committee will be established to take care of these new institutions and methods of unification.

The last of these ten points relating to Israel Ñ He said there would be a great world convocation after several world conferences. There will be many Oceanic Conferences. These conferences will be the North Sea Conference, then the Mediterranean Sea Conference, the {{p27}}

North Pacific, the South Pacific, then the Atlantic and the Indian Ocean Conference. These will all be swept into a great World Conference Congress in Baghdád in 1963.

The Guardian said that material civilization is doomed; that all the nations have become corrupt politically and that America is the most politically disturbed nation on earth. The Americans are now living in a fool’s paradise, thinking they are safe in overcrowded cities that are full of noise, dirt, and crime. The Bahá’í Friends should leave the corrupt cities, get a bit of land, establish a Bahá’í Community and establish the Bahá’í spirit in preparation of the glorious World Order of Bahá’u’lláh. There will be great distruction, and the Friends should move out of the cities and see what will happen when they build Bahá’í communities in villages.

“If the Friends of America do not disperse,” the Guardian said, “they will suffer materially and spiritually. After 50 years in America, there are only 500 Negro Bahá’ís and in one year there are over 700 in Africa. Those who do not respond to the call and disperse will loose everything, and those who do respond will gain everything. The former will be caught in a trap. London, Paris, New York, Chicago, San Francisco will be bombed. This he repeated several times and said that 'Abdu'l-Bahá warned the believers to solve the racial problem. Because they have not solved it, there have been two wars. The situation is very grave. The believers do not have enough trust in God and detachment. Yes, great cities will evaporate. Everything in them will evaporate!!! The standards which have been so materialistically high and superficial will be lowered and Africa and her standards will be raised.

"The Global Plan and Bahá'u'lláh will triumph in spite of the neglect of its supporters. If one country falls short, another will make up for its failure. The Friends will loose, but the Cause will go on. If I have the right tools, I can work. I cannot create. God creates. In some mysterious way the instruments are developed. An artisan cannot create the tools he works with. Give him the right tools and he will do the job."

"There is not enough dedication in the Cause. Intuitively act as soon as I find something that can be used. There is dedication of a few, but dedication must permeate the masses, not just a few. They should study their instincts, habits, environment, prejudices. In the U.S. emphasis is in such trivial things and non-essentials. The Bahá'ís must be quite different from the masses. They must have a new way of life in big as well as in small things, and remember that demonstration will speak louder than words."

The Guardian said there was too much emphasis on Administration and not enough on the Spiritual. Too much emphasis on intellectual concepts and not enough on the spiritual, and some do not know the difference. Delving into occultism, mysticism are idle fancies and vain imaginations. The words of Bahá'u'lláh are words of God, but occultism or mysticism is not the Word of God, and lead people into a web of imagination from which extraction is very difficult. The only hope for man is obedience to the laws and precepts of His chosen Messenger, Bahá'u'lláh!

The young people should go out on the farms and work with their hands, The new race of men will be wholly devoted to the service of Bahá'u'lláh.

America has become too mechanized; other countries not enough. The husband should have more leisure to develop his soul qualities." "Should a man do so much for religion that he should neglect his family responsibilities?" The Guardian was asked. "No, He should fulfill his family responsibilities; he should never do anything to disrupt the unity of the home."

The Guardian was asked about the Mormons. He said that Joseph Smith was a Seer, not a Prophet, neither major nor minor; that he had high standards Ñ but we have the power that comes from the Word of God for this age, which they do not have until they turn to Bahá'u'lláh. {{p28}}

The Prophets are the Mirrors reflecting the attributes of God. The Quakers do not have a Prophet, therefore they do not have the power, though they think they do.

The L.S.A.'s should not, at this time, spend money on big advertising campaigns, expansion, or on renting big centers.

The Shrines become the spiritual center of any religious Faith. The spiritual center in the Christian world was first Palestine, then moved to Greece, then Rome, and the Pope is still the spiritual Head of the Catholic world.

In Islám, the Spiritual Center was first in Mecca, Medina, then Damascus, then Turkey but for centuries the spiritual center has been in Mecca.

In the Bahá'í World Faith the Shrines will always be the center of the Bahá'í World.

One evening the Guardian said that President Wilson had taken the fourteen points out of the Bahá'í writings, with which he established the League of Nations; that President Roosevelt had done much for the world in getting foreign ministers together at the zero hour to establish the U.N. and then he said that President Truman was weak and not an efficient diplomat. England was too smart for him; they outwitted him. Today I feel very, very sorry for the President of the U.S., President Eisenhower. He is very sincere, but he is caught in a political web.

Rúhíyyih Khánúm spoke to the Guardian about publishing my book, "The New Keys to the Book of Revelations." She said, "Get it finished, documented, and polished as soon as you can, but there is no money now to publish it. There are other important books that are being held back because of the need of pioneers, and because of lack of funds. That it will be a very valuable book to the Christian world as well as to the Bahá'í world, the Jewish and Moslem worlds. Make it the best you can and finish it as soon as you can. This is very important.

"The whole foundation of the Administrative Order rests upon the proper functioning of the L.S.A.'s and the Guardian said "Let the old people go to close-by villages, and the young people go pioneering in virgin areas."

"The Bahá'ís of Asia and America need shock treatment. American Bahá'ís need a shock, and it will have a shock. The American Bahá'ís must be different. They must act as though they were distinguished, above the people of other types and means."

Then he described the processes in teaching the Faith. "First, there is attraction; then there is interest, then there is conversion, then confirmation, and after that, consecration. "Many become converted but they do not become confirmed. The confirmation comes when the spirit is set on fire to arise to to serve God. The consecration may be after conversion, but more especially after confirmation."

Why do people have to suffer so much? "Because suffering cleanses and purifies. Suffering is the interior decoration of the heart. The greater the distinction, the greater the attraction. To gain detachment, one must translate the experiences of life into the lessons of the soul.”

The Christian Scientists are blind and they are not pure. They think they are pure, and that they are an example to the world, and that they have a plan.

The Bahá'ís use God's plan. They have no ulterior motives. They do not expect anything from other people. We do not work for reward in kind. We do not expect money for our institutions

The American Bahá'ís do not have enough detachment. They need shock treatment. They are in great danger. They will be trapped when they want to get out of the cities.

The Americans have made many enemies with other countries because of their thoughtlessness, their aggressiveness, and their bad manners. They are purehearted, but immature.

The Negroes have accepted the Americans because their hearts are pure, childlike, and sensitive.; that is, I am referring to the Africans. Because we are purehearted we can get over the jump. The Africans, also, are purehearted; they are sensitive, suspicious and distrustful. The luxuries will disappear in America. America is a clean country, but Israel is very dirty. Israel must be made clean, but America must have fewer luxuries. The Africans have pure souls and they are not full of nationalism as are most countries.

It is impossible to describe the Guardian in words any more than one can describe the molten rose-gold of the sunset by saying that it set. The Guardian is like a symphony, so full of music, power and rhythm. He is unique to this planet. It is a spiritual language above description which he seems to emanate. When you speak with him you begin to understand. He is like heavenly music speaking in the language of the spirit. He is not tall, but he seems to grow taller the longer you are with him. His hair is dark and greying at the sides. He has dark eyes that seem to become darker and burn with an inner fire. He has strong, fine regular features and is smooth-shaven, with a small dark mustache. He is sturdy and full of energy. Most expressive are his hands, and we were told they were much like Bahá'u'lláh's.

His gestures are very graceful and exceedingly expressive. He wore a rust-coloured top coat with a matching tie, usually Ñ though sometimes he wore a black coat with a black tie. He wears a slender gold Bahá'í ring on the second finger of his right hand, and he wears a fez with a black button in the center of the top.

Almost every evening he brought a cable, or a drawing, or some kind of a document which he laid on the tablecloth and explained. The dinner talks are long, and the table usually seats ten people. The incoming pilgrim is seated at the head of the table the first night, and the second night directly across from the Guardian. Madame Khánum Rúhíyyih sits at his right and the other pilgrims are sitting around him at the table. Thus, the pilgrim is only three feet from him and yet at times it seems a world away.

The process of the Faith makes him very happy, and we reflect that happiness in our faces and hearts. The reverse makes him go into the valley of Gehenna, and we also. When word comes that we have opened up some new territory or country, and now we have 225 opened to the Faith, you can imagine how rejoiced is the Guardian.

He never says, I or Me, he always says we, or the Friends do or say such and such. No one speaks English as does our Guardian. Each word is a jewel of perfection. He spoke frequently of the Shrine of the the Báb as the Queen of Mt. Carmel, seated upon her white throne with her garments of white trimmed with ermine, and her crown of shining gold.

We all listen to his vibrant words with rapt attention mixed with awe at his vast knowledge and wisdom and with a growing consciousness of the meaning of the authenticated words of ‘Abdu’l-Bahá Ñ “He is the sign of God upon the earth! Hear ye him!”

The Guardian’s works, each one, is like a miracle! For example, when the Israeli court awarded the house in Bahjí which had been occupied by the Covenant Breakers, to the Bahá’ís, that very same day that the decree was awarded, the Guardian had the house demolished and every portion of it carried away and within four and a half days had created a formal garden twelve and a half meters wide and eighty meters long! In the process of making the garden he had a row of large trees uprooted by bulldozers, raised the garden one meter, built roads, paths, planted flowers and shrubbery according to a beautiful design.

All this monumental work was accomplished in four and a half days!

The power and capacity of our beloved Guardian! “He is the sign of God upon the earth!”

PART III

AFTERGLOW OF HAIFA

“An epoch in its sublimity, its fecundity and duration by any previous Dispensation, and characterized, except for a short interval of three years, by half a century of continuous and progressive Revelation, had terminated. The Message proclaimed by the Báb had yielded its golden fruit. The most momentous, though not the most spectacular phase of the Heroic Age had ended. The Sun of Truth, the world’s greatest Luminary, and had risen in the Seya-Chal of Ṭihrán, had broken through the clouds which enveloped it in Baghdád, had suffered a momentary eclipse whilst mounting to its zenith in Adrianople, and had set finally in ‘Akká, never to reappear ere the lapse of a full millenium. God’s newborn Faith, the cynosure of all past Dispensations, had been fully and unreservedly proclaimed.” G.P.B. — 223. {{p30}}

Our Guardian clearly, fully, and unreservedly elucidated to the eager pilgrims this excerpt from God Passes By.

It is like pulling the heart out by the roots for most of the pilgrims to leave Haifa, the Guardian and his spiritual family, and the blessed Shrines. He usually gives the departing pilgrim loving and helpful suggestions and instructions that not only prove most helpful, but again proves the great, loving understanding, and great wisdom of our Guardian.

To this departing pilgrim on that memorable evening he said, “I hope you will help the friends wherever you go to understand these important points: 1 — To persevere even in the midst of difficulties; 2 — To sacrifice with joy and gratitude; 3 — For the pioneers to remain at their posts, and great will be their blessings; 4 — Make every effort to establish an Assembly; 5 — To love the people with a warm, encircling love; 6 — To keep active; 7 — Exceedingly important is to live the life; and 8 — To Teach, teach, teach! adhered to, will bring success and blessing to one's life." One of the last statements made by the Guardian, "Tell the friends I am expecting great things of them in the Glorious Crusade."

The parting words of dear Rúḥíyyih Khánúm that last evening were: " 'Abdu'l-Bahá said, 'There are usually two pilgrim's visits: The first is for blessings and encouragement to go forth in God's vineyard; the second, you come with banners flying like soldiers in gladness and triumph to receive your reward. The pilgrimage is given that you may take in and then give out, to receive and then impart, to absorb and then bestow. Without these there has been no pilgrimage. It will dissolve into nothing. The Holy Land is the heart of the Faith. The heart purifies the blood stream with enriched life. The pilgrim comes laden with the impurities of the world to the heart. Here he becomes refreshed and purified to carry the life-bestowing Word of God to the world. May you be richly blessed and assisted in sharing the life-giving stream.'"

At the last moment of departure, one learns the supreme lesson that nothing really matters but your complete consecration to Bahá'u'lláh. From this moment on, all else seems secondary. From now on all your talents and efforts seem valueless unless devoted to His service. If you do not rise in consecrated service, Bahá'u'lláh will raise others who, however humble, untrained, or unlearned, have this greatest virtue of dedication. They will do what you, with all your gifts, have failed to do. These soul-stirring words ring in your heart. "The hour has struck'. Beware lest by turning back He may change you for another people who shall not be your like, and who shall take from you the Kingdom of God.

It was a loving but sad farewell as one left this Heaven of Heavens and Bahá'í World Center, the Kiblaat of the World! As our plane circled over Haifa, the golden dome of the Shrine of the Báb, the Queen of Mt. Carmel, shimmered in the glorious sunshine and seemed to reflect the light in the golden heart of our Guardian. Yes, that golden dome seems a harbinger of the Golden Age just ahead!

THE ISLAND OF CYPRUS June 2, 1954

It was a beautiful trip across the deep, lovely Mediterranean Sea with the lighter blue of the sky overhead. The Holy Land with all of its precious treasures faded from view, but its spiritual treasures were stored eternally in the heart. As we flew over the great island of Cyprus, we could see it was a flat desert land. There was famous Mt. Olympus, 6,500 feet high, the home of the mythical gods and goddesses who, it is claimed, were the heroes of Atlantis. We landed in Nicosia, the capitol of Cyprus, this historical old city, and spent a few hours there, but felt the need of hurrying on to Ñ

THE ISLAND OF RHODES June 3, 1954

We passed over what seemed a series of barren islands, of submerged mountains, and arrived at the beautiful airport of the Island of Rhodes. Here we saw the place where one of the seven ancient wonders of the world stood Ñ Colossus of Rhodes, with one foot on the mainland and the other on the island which forms the harbour. Here we met Romona Brown from California, and Elizabeth Bevan, a pioneer to the Island of Rhodes, who had become very discouraged because, after six months, she had been unable to obtain a work permit. Ruth was able to assist them and to leave some of the last words of the Guardian to “encourage the pioneers to remain at their posts.”

ATHENS & KIFISSIA, GREECE * June 4, to June 7, 1954

Elizabeth Bevan, Romona Brown and Ruth Moffett went to Athens to try to help Elizabeth to obtain a work permit for the Island of Rhodes. We lived in the beautiful resort hotel in Kifissia and went daily to Athens. We saw many of the ancient monuments, with an excellent guide....the Parthenon; the Temple of Athens, ancient Grecian theater, the Museum of Athens, the Acropolis, the Temple of Baccus, the prison of Socrates, where Paul spoke to the Athenians on Mars Hill in 54 A.D., and where the Chairman of the Court, Dioneceius became the first Christian in Athens. Sandwiched in between all the interesting historical sights were the eager questions as to the messages from the Guardian, the observance of the Feast of Núr Ñ Light, with Dwight and Carol Allen, pioneers, long talks on how to spread the great, glad Message of Bahá'u'lláh.

ROME June 7 to June 12, 1954

In Rome, the Eternal City, Ruth was a guest of Dr. Ugo Giachery, Hand of the Cause, and his wife, Angeline. This was a blessed experience. Each day there were teas and firesides, and a large public meeting with very warm response, particularly to the messages from the Guardian. Some of the friends guided us through St. Peter's, the Vatican, the castle of St. Angelo, the Colliseum, the palace of Nero, the Roman Forum, the graves of Keates and Shelley and the huge building of Ministry of Propaganda for the Catholic world. It was a great privilege to again see Pope Pius X as he lay in state in his gorgeous robes, golden slippers, gloves and golden mask; the most saintly and beloved of all the popes, who was beautified in 1950. It was Ruth's privilege to have had an interview in his private audience chamber in 1927, along with four cardinals, and had some remarkable experiences. She also received the blessing of the present Pope Pius XII. Dr. Giachery and Angeline were most hospitable and helpful in making all these things possible, and great blessing comes from their sincere spirit and the rich experiences with the friends in Rome, who said they could feel the spirit of the Shrines, brought by Ruth.

THE ISLANDS OF ELBA June 12, 1954

We reluctantly left the dear friends and the fascinating city of Rome at 10 am via Swiss Air Lines, flying over the many off-shore islands straight for the mountainous, unwooded Island of Elba, the largest of the Tyrrhenian archipelago. It is 18 miles long and 3.7 miles broad and has an area of 86 square miles. It is part of a sunken mountain range extending from the Italian mainland to Corsica and Sardinia. {{p32}} the highest point of the Island is Mt. Capanne, 3,350 feet high. The climate is mild and the soil fertile and rich in mineral deposits. From ancient times, Elba has been famous for her iron and tin mines. Historically, it is noted as the residence of Napoleon after his first abdication., from May 14, 1814 to February 26, 1815, just before the birth of Bahá'u'lláh. During that time Napoleon was the Emperor of the Island, and after his departure it was restored to Tuscony and became a part of Italy in 1860. The total population is only about 32,000, made up mostly of mining and fishing villages.

It was near this historic, treeless island where our beloved Dorothy Baker, Hand of the Cause of God, and International Bahá'í teacher, when returning from New Delhi Conference was blown to bits in the fateful jet plane which exploded over Elba, shocking the entire world. The plane was piloted by the president of the company, himself, which was the cause of our plane dipping low in his honour as we flew over this destiny-laden spot. To the mind of this pilgrim, Ruth, it was in honour of this one of the Hands of the Cause of God, our beloved friend and co-worker, who had the key to our home for 25 years, and who left a trail of inspiration wherever she went Ñ Dorothy Beecher Baker, that we dipped in tribute.

Her beautiful spirit ascended at the height of her lustre to serve in greater realms of glory in the Kingdom of Abhá. Many prayers were offered in her behalf as we approached the Island of Elba and dipped low in her honour and then rose high to scale the towering Alps. Many of the words spoken just a few weeks before, to Ruth, in loving Counsel, were so clear and vivid it seemed that our Dorothy was actually standing beside her in the plane, radiant and beautiful. In the midst of such deep prayer for her, you can imagine the startling effect when the stewardess spoke, offering tea. That experience will never be forgotten, not will the experience of flying over the highest peaks of the snow-capped Alps and over Mt. Blanc, standing agelessly in her majestic splendour.

GENEVA, SWITZERLAND Ñ June 12, 1954

Beside beautiful Lake Geneva, poetically called Lac Lemán, on the two-way River Rhone in the far-stretching green valley between snow-capped mountain ranges, lies the historic, old city of Geneva, noted for her eleventh century Romanesque cathedral of St. Peter, the great University of Geneva, and where the writer took a course of study on her previous trip to Europe. Geneva was the home of Calvin, who in 1535 helped to establish the "Reformed Religion", as it was called. It was the home of the League of Nations, established by President Woodrow Wilson in 1920. The same year witnessed the founding of the International Labor Office, the International School of Studies under Dr. Zimmerman. While a Special Delegate to the League of Nations, Ruth had the privilege of attending the sessions in all of these and other International Institutions, and learned much in appraising values and relationships. She was glad to be in this key city again during the Prickly International Conference, which was in session, and to which our Guardian had referred as unable to achieve its purpose.

There was a warm welcome by the Bahá'í friends who gathered in the apartment of Honor Kempton, eager to hear every word from our beloved Guardian. Sunday was spent with the Ashraf family and their remarkable children, 5th. generation Bahá'ís. The oldest child, 13, was with 'Abdu'l-Bahá. Sunday night, 17 were again in Honor Kempton's apartment, begging this pilgrim to remain longer saying that she had brought so much from Haifa, for which they were so hungry. After the lectures we discussed ways of making contacts,

In America, {{p1}} the power is in the hands of the masses, and they follow what they see in the press. Much better that there be a three-way election as in the Faith.

National Civilization will improve as soon as emphasis is placed on spiritual instead of material values. To bring about a spiritual civilization there must be [a] period of suffering. There will be great destruction. Encourage the friends to move to the villages and get out of the big cities. As well as American cities, London was also mentioned. The Guardian, referring to the enthusiasm of the friends at Conventions, said that afterwards they forget and do not carry through. The question was asked what nation was the most stable and carried through the best, and the Guardian said, the British. He said the Latin, Oriental and Turkish do not carry through.

The Guardian asked L. Richards who was a pilgrim to Turkey, about the Jews in Turkey. The Guardian said the Jews would have a great sense of reality when they came into the Cause, and the Catholics would have a great devotion.

It is always most important to teach native people wherever one is. While Ankara is the capital, Istanbul is where the future Ḥazíra would be. There were three believers in Ankara who should move to Istanbul; one of them had a good position but he should give it up. The friends always move where business is most convenient and their lives at the moment are safe. They should move where the Faith needs them.

Material civilization is doomed and will be destroyed. Mankind cannot be cleansed and purified without its going.

The Lesser Peace will be established in the 20th century.

Question: Will it be established by Bahá'í youth? He said the youth must study deeply to bring about the Most Great Peace, but the time of it is a mystery.

Will the global crusade help establish world civilization? He said, it would establish the Bahá'í Faith but would not have direct influence upon world civilization.

Question: Would the pioneers be asked to return to America to help with the reconstruction? He said: "Reconstruct what?"

2nd Night

He reminded them of the statistics of believers in certain counties, making comparisons with the last year and now (1954)

Growth in Kampala is phenomenal. France (1954) has only 3 or 4 communities and they are very apathetic. Dr. Giachery said (April News) there were only two, and only one strong one.

Bahá'í Burial: Should bodies be embalmed? They should not be embalmed, but we must obey the laws, and at many places, particularly in the U.S., embalming and also placing in some kind of cement vault is obligatory. However, the time would come when you can go half way across a continent in an hour and then the believers could be taken where it was not required.

Question: About Bahá'u'lláh referring to Himself as "this Youth". The Guardian said He was only 27 years old when He was a Bábí, and 35 when He declared Himself.

He spoke of the many changes in Palestine, once a land of Kings. The Jews have suffered so long, 2,000 years for 3 years persecution of Christ. The Moslems persecuted Bahá'u'lláh for 50 years; they will have far greater punishment than the Jews endured.

Bahá'u'lláh came as the Father, Christ as the Son.

Mary and Allen Ellston were there from Africa. The Guardian said to them: "I have extended your stay another day and shall give you a treasure to take back to Kampala." The next day he told them it was one of Bahá'u'lláh's coats.

The Guardian was very tired but spoke with great emphasis. He was discouraged with the American believers (he lashed out at them). He said: "I can urge them but I cannot create the spirit. He was speaking of the lack of response to go out and pioneer. "It is unhappiness for me and danger for them. That is the results. "Those who have means should pack and go. No one has the right to prevent them. The Cause will triumph in spite of the inaction of a large number of its supporters.

There are 700 believers in one year in Africa. If America does not respond they will suffer materially and spiritually. The Cause will not suffer but the believers will. {{p2}} In 50 years only 500 negro believers in America but 700 in Africa. Those who do not respond will lose everything; those who go will gain everything.

Large cities are the centers of materialism. Those believers who remain there will be caught in a trap. 'Abdu'l-Bahá warned the people in 1912 about the danger of the race problems, but they did nothing. The situation is very grave.

The Bahá'í believers calculate, — there is not enough detachment, self-sacrifice and trust in God. While they are calculating they themselves will evaporate, they [will] go up in smoke, yes they will (evaporate and go up in smoke were the Guardian's own words).

The American Continent will suffer, particularly North America.

To Mary Ellston: "Did you ever dream of such results in Africa?"

The Guardian said, the Cause is stagnating in America. America is a stagnant pool. Everything is declining, manners, art, music, and even the money is depreciating. There is terrible corruption. There are all the signs of collapse.

The friends should be less intellectual and more spiritual, less materialistic and more spiritual. There is so much Godlessness and it is increasing.

Someone said so many people were going to church now in America. He said they go in fear. An ordeal will shake them.

He said the home front is an absolute failure. There is too much organization but no spirit.

The friends read superficially. People say "I have read the Íqán" like some tourists who say 'I have done Paris, or I have done London! They have too many preoccupations. They read many magazines which are full of nothing.

They should throw them in the waste paper basket. There is great danger in them.

To Mary Ellston: "You should be very grateful about Africa. After 50 years there are only 4 tribes represented in the American believers (Indians). 'Abdu'l-Bahá told the American believers of the wonderful results if these people were brought into the Faith.

Africa has a representation of 70 tribes who entered in two years.

Those with independent means should take their passports, pack and go. They do not have to ask the NSA, they can go anywhere. They must have the urge, the spirit of consecration. I cannot create the spirit. All I can do is to use the material that is given me. I am the person who will direct those who arise. When I receive no response I become unhappy, paralyzed. I cannot do anything. This created unhappiness for me and danger for the Bahá'í believers.

The Americans feel they must have cars, radios, refrigerators and the latest TV, and in some mysterious way the Cause will triumph.

The Summer Schools bring in American standards of education instead of driving them out.

America is stagnate and the believers reflect it. They must vitalize it by getting out.

There were 495 volunteers at the American Conference; 200 left! 3000 should have left.

The Bahá'ís must promote the Bahá'í standards and drive non-Bahá'í standards out.

'Abdu'l-Bahá told certain things when he was there in 1912, then he gave them the Divine Plan. He told them that when the Indians of North and South America accepted the Faith, it would sweep America.

When we teach we must be so dedicated and consecrated that we inculcate in the new Bahá'í believer not only the acceptance of the three central figures but a knowledge of the will and Testament which is the Charter of the New World Order and the Administrative Order.

The Guardian reiterated: "Those who stay in the big cities will be trapped, They will evaporate. They will lose everything materially and spiritually. He said they should pioneer or go to the villages.

The American people calculate too much, they say: "If I stay a little longer I will have just so much more." but they will lose everything. They must not get just a little way out of the city where they can still enjoy the city. They must really get out. The destruction will be so great that the cities will be hopeless. There could be earthquakes and the people of America and Persia will be the worst sufferers. But out of it all will emerge a new people.

We cannot point to one word in the Bible which Christ wrote and left for posterity: {{{p3}}} but Bahá'u'lláh left volumes.

Someone asked the Guardian if the Bible Prophecy which said that one third only of the population would be left were true. He did not answer outright but said it was quite possible.

America has big standards of living: “they must be lowered, and many other countries must have their lifted, such as Israel. Americans must alter their standard of living. They ride in cars, they have much more leisure to do non-essential things. They should go to Africa and lead a strenuous life.

What is sacrifice? We must go at any cost

Africa and the islands of the sea will have a great future.

If one country fails another will _ake [make?] up for it.

If the friends do not go and if they delay they will lose everything.

There are 195 centers in Africa, 700 colored, 70 tribes and 30 languages (1954)

Last Night

The Guardian had in his hand a letter from a young man who wanted to pioneer. He said the man was very spiritual. He said that if the man had independent means he should go anywhere he wished and the NSA should assist him when he arrived at his destination. He did not need the O.K. of the NSA or a Committee if he had the means.

Ultimately it is the spirit that counts. This is a spiritual Crisis.

The Bahá'í NSA and committees are occupied with details which are dry and empty. He said; “I can visualize these things. Time is occupied with trivial matters. They are immersed in material affairs.”

In big cities people become preoccupied with things. Large cities have a very bad effect on morality and spirituality. It has become positively dangerous to live in cities; even non-Bahá'ís know this. We must get to a simpler life. Today it is literally like Rome, Babylon, and Pompeii.

‘Abdu'l-Bahá warned about the racial problem, There have been two wars and it had not ended.

‘Abdu'l-Bahá said that in Central Asia there are cities which had been destroyed leaving no sign of how they were destroyed.

For 50 years the fortunes of men have been declining. There are two reasons. (1) Mankind did not heed the Master. (2) Materialism.

The last war was only the beginning. The next war may give the non-whites a chance to contribute their share. Cities are doomed. The white people have don great harm and they will suffer for it. America will become the storm center. The situation is very grave. Anything can happen.

America is the most disturbed nation on earth. This is reflected in the Bahá'ís of the west and their activities. They are living in a fool's paradise. Their excesses have raised up enemies. It has induced hatred. Who would think that the day would come when America would have such fear? Anything can happen at any time, quickly.

The Tower of Babel was not a building.

A new race of men will appear after the cataclysm. We must have a totally new mode of life, simpler, with new cities.

Quotation from Shoghi Effendi, Given by Mr. Samandarí at the African Conference 1958.

Tempestuous winds of tests and trials will assail the Cause of God, and the friends shall not waver, be fearful or be doubtful if such tests should come, whether from within or from without the Faith of God. Let them be sure that at the climax of world convulsion and revolutions, attacks on the Faith, rebellions, the rebellion of the government and the people and the tribes of the world, the greatness of the Cause of God shall be made manifest through ways and means mysterious, unexpected, strange and sudden, its victory and conquering value shall reveal itself in full glory, its unity and firmness of foundations and the Glory of its Name will be revealed to all the people of the world The Blessed Beauty is the defender of Justice. He is the protector of the friends and He is the destroyer of the foundations of injustice and enmity.

Haifa Impressions

Valera Allen

December, 1954

To try to put on paper one's pilgrimage to Haifa is at once a joy and a sorrow. `{{p1}}` A joy, because one wants more than anything else to share with those unable to go the inestimable bounty of visiting the Blessed Spots and the heart-warming privilege of being in the presence of the beloved Guardian. It is a sorrow not to be equal to the task of putting into words the real experience of the Pilgrimage.

As we flew over the blue Mediterranean dotted with its many isles of various shapes and designs we could not help but think of the great heroine, martyr and champion of the Bahá'í World Faith, Dorothy Baker, who had so recently fallen in that vicinity, and to say a prayer for the progress of her soul and to thank God for her beautiful life of service and outstanding example of devotion to the Beloved Faith.

Nearing the shores of Israel we strained our eyes to see if perhaps we might catch a glimpse of the Shrine of the Báḇ, little realizing that we were miles and miles away from Haifa Bay, farther up the Coast, flying in toward the new and modern city of Televiv.

We arrived at Televiv about 3:45 P.M. and took a cab to Haifa, which we discovered was about 65 miles away and took over two hours in the old dilapidated Chrysler car which was minus the shock absorbers. For those who are contemplating a pilgrimage, I might say that the best way to make the trip into Haifa from the Lidda airport is via sherut or a jitney as it is known in San Francisco. These cars take about four or five people thus cutting down on the expense of the trip and is the way that most people travel from place to place in the Holy Land. Transportation is really a problem and one sees people of all ages, types and sexes standing along the sides of the roads trying to “hitch” a ride.

The country impressed us as looking very much like Greece and other countries of the Mediterranean area, with rolling hills of a desolate sand color without much vegetation or trees and covered with rocks that are painstakingly cleared from plots for the planting of crops. Houses and buildings are made of stone, rock and mortar — more recent ones are constructed of cement block.

Driving along toward Haifa we saw to the right a cliff rising, rather bare and uninviting, and the driver surprised us by saying, “This is where Mt. Carmel starts.” It continued in rather broken lines for some 30 miles before we rounded a section of the mountain that rose in a large promontory overlooking the Bay of Haifa. We later discovered that this is the site of the future Mashriqu’l-Adhkár and is so situated that it will be immediately seen by anyone approaching the Bay and certainly will fulfill the Biblical prophecy in Isaiah. 2:2: “And it shall come to pass in the last days, that the mountain of the Lords house shall be established on the top of the mountains, and shall be exalted above the hills; and all nations shall flow unto it.”

That night at table we mentioned to the Guardian our surprise that Mt. Carmel was a range of hills rather than one single mountain and he answered, “Yes, Mt. Carmel is an extensive mountain. {{p2}} It has a head, a heart and a tail. The Shrine and Gardens are the heart of the Mountain.”

When we arrived, it was dark and the driver took us to a gate, honked and tried to raise someone to let us in but all was dark and silent. We tried to tell him this did not look right to us and that we should go to number 10 Persian Street, the Western Pilgrim House, but he insisted this was the place as he often brought people here — one doctor in particular. Finally, he ran around and soon came back through the Gardens accompanied by a young Persian man who directed the driver to the Western Pilgrim House. We later that he had brought us to the entrance of the Shrine Gardens which leads to the Eastern Pilgrim house — and the doctor that he had so often brought to this spot had been our dear Dr. Luṭfu’lláh Ḥakím, now Keeper of the Shrine of the Báḇ.

As a matter of fact, Dr. Luṭfu’lláh Ḥakím was the first to greet us when we alighted at the gate of the Western Pilgrim House, and then Jessie Revel appeared asking “what has kept you so long? We expected you earlier this afternoon.” She showed us to our room saying we had about an hour until dinner. Next we were greeted by Hand of the Cause, Ugo Giachery and his lovely wife, Angeline, whom we had last seen in Rome on route to Africa.

We refreshed up a bit and by then Leroy Ioas, another Hand of the Cause and Secretary — General of the International Council, had come in and took us to his apartment. How wonderful to be with him again although by now it was all seeming very much like a lovely dream! We missed Sylvia although we had the good fortune of having seen her in California just before leaving for Haifa. Leroy looked very tired but we soon discovered that “being tired” is a constant state that all of the “staff” are in at Haifa, and of course, tired and over-worked are the beloved Guardian and his precious wife, Rúhíyyih Khánum.

Just before dinner, Rúhíyyih Khánum “breezed” in and chatted until dinner was called. She was quite concerned because she had invited Josephine Baker, the American Negro singer, to come to visit the Shrine and Gardens and to remain until dinner. She had received an affirmation answer which had said, “We will be very glad to accept.” So Rúhíyyih Khánum did not know whether “we” meant two or twenty.

Dinner was called shortly after seven, and John and I, as the latest arriving pilgrims, were asked to enter first. After reaching the foot of the stairs, we could look through a passage room and see the Guardian seated at the table. On his head was a black “taz” and he wore a tan coat. He looked so very far away and I felt even more as though I were walking in a dream. As I made my way through the room leading to the dining room, I was vaguely aware of large dark objects on each side in the semi-darkness. Later I found they were monuments and ornaments for the Gardens at Haifa and Bahjí that the Guardian had purchased while he was away. We were told he gets many things for the Gardens from old estates which are being sold. Upon reaching the dining room the beloved Guardian rose to greet us most cordially saying we were most welcome and kissing John on both cheeks. His eyes shone and one feels an encompassing love as if returning home after a long journey.

He asked about our trip and then launched into the subject of Africa. How many believers were there now? How was the work progressing? We stumbled around a little bit saying we were not too up-to-date on statistics as we had been to America and were just now returning to Africa, and the picture changes very rapidly. He smiled and said, “Then I shall tell you.” And we sat absolutely amazed as he told of the progress of the Faith in Africa without the least hesitation or uncertainty. We thought that surely he must have had a letter just that day to have it so absolutely at his finger-tips. And our amazement grew as we would hear him speak with equal knowledge and understanding of any and all places connected with the world-wide Crusade. {{p3}} He knew exactly who was where and what was happening. He paid great tribute to Mr. Musa Banání, Hand of the Cause for Africa, saying his great love and sacrifice were responsible for the rapid progress of the Faith in Africa.

We asked Leroy and Ugo their opinion about the progress of the work on the new gardens and told some of his plans as to how the building should be laid out. He showed us the artist's drawing of the Archives Building and discussed various features about it. We mentioned that we had seen his most recent cable (November 24) about the expropriation and acquisition of the land that had been owned by Mrs. Sprague (Faríd's sister) and now one of the Covenant breakers. He was exceedingly pleased that the transaction was completed and now the work on the Archives Building could go ahead.

A little history of the Spragues was given. Years ago when Mr. Sydney Sprague was travelling in India with Mason Remey, he contracted the plague. One of the Indian believers [ed. note: actually, an Iranian believer living in, and having been born in India, Friborz Roozbehyan] upon hearing of it asked that he might be allowed to go and nurse him. He did so but fell ill from the plague himself. Mr. Sprague recovered but the Indian believer died. Both Mr. Remey and Mr. Sprague were very touched by the sacrifice.

Later Mr. Sprague became acquainted with Faríd and his family and married the sister. Eventually Faríd became a Covenant breaker and the sister influenced Mr. Sprague until he became alienated from the Faith. However, before his death he was reinstated but Mrs. Sprague became more and more antagonistic and when approached about the land, she refused to allow the Bahá'ís to have it in spite of the fact that it had been bought in her name many years ago when 'Abdu'l-Bahá had advised that land be purchased in the name of various Bahá'ís so that it would be available when it was needed for the development around the Shrine. It lay in the vicinity of the Monument Gardens where the Greatest Holy Leaf, Bahíyyih Khánum; the wife of Bahá'u'lláh, Navváb; the Purest Branch, Mírzá Mihdí; and the wife of 'Abdu'l-Bahá, Munírih Khánum are all buried and is part of the building site for the Archives Building. Because she had left the country when the Jews were at war with the Arabs and because of her refusal to part with or sell the land and was thus holding up the development on Mt. Carmel, the land was expropriated by the Israeli Government and sold to the Bahá'ís.

The Guardian suggested that strings be placed as an outline of the building so he could see and determine the right and exact location for it. Ugo Giachery and John volunteered to place some string for his consideration.

Rúhíyyih Khánum asked the Guardian to tell the friends at the table about the progress of his work on the codification of the Aqdas. He responded by telling us it was proving to be quite a difficult and time consuming task and he was doing it in outline form. It will include five parts, dealing with the following: (1) Appointment of 'Abdu'l-Bahá as Center of the Covenant and Interpreter of the Writings. (2) Laws and ordinances which comprise eighty per cent of the Aqdas. (3) Exhortations, admonitions and warnings. (i.e. Admonitions on marriage and divorce — no one can interfere in marriage before choice is made, and divorce is not actually forbidden). (4) Tablets to the Kings, Ecclesiastics and Rulers. (5) Miscellaneous. (This last includes the section of Questions and Answers which was added by Bahá'u'lláh to clarify certain points.) In all there are some 200 items to be classified and an additional 100 in the Question and Answers section.

The Guardian mentioned the fact that the Persians had long had the Aqdas because it helped them to break away from the Muḥammadan laws and gave them laws of hygiene which they had needed.

The Guardian told a story in connection with the time when 'Abdu'l-Bahá had been appointed the Center of Bahá'u'lláh's Covenant and His Successor. {{p4}} He said that Muḥammad-'Alí, 'Abdu'l-Bahá's half brother, who was attempting to undermine 'Abdu'l-Bahá's authority, once admitted to 'Abdu'l-Bahá that he might not be the legal successor to Bahá'u'lláh but he said, "Neither was Omar the legal successor of Muḥammad." To which the Master replied, "Yes, but Muḥammad-'Alí is not as clever as Omar nor is 'Abdu'l-Bahá as timid as 'Alí."

He loved talking about the Ten Year Crusade. He spoke about the two processes going on outside and inside the Faith. God's plan was the one going on outside the Faith and this would eventually lead to the establishment of the Lesser Peace. At the same time our task was the development of the Ten Year Crusade which was clear cut and definite. He spoke of the exemplary service of the Hand of the Cause in Africa, Mr. Banání, and his family. He reiterated the need for concentrating on teaching the Africans and not wasting time on the Europeans. We asked about having mixed Assemblies in South Africa and he answered the ultimate goal was to have only Africans in all Assemblies. For the present we would have to be guided by the conditions that existed in each territory. In the Union of South Africa the decision would have to be left to the Spiritual Assembly of Johannesburg but he thought it was better to have no mixed assemblies in the Union.

When the Guardian, who had already triply endured himself to us in the short space of one dinner, left us, we felt very bereft but Rúḥíyyih Khánum, Leroy and the others tried to fill in the gap and stayed with us and talked over what had been discussed at the table. One of the surprising things to us was that there was considerable difference in opinion as to just what the Guardian had said or meant to imply. It made us acutely aware of why Pilgrim's notes must always remain on the basis of personal understanding and cannot have any official standing. We talked far into the night as it seems in Haifa no one (at least the Pilgrims) ever wants to go to bed. But when finally the last good-nights were said and all retired to their rooms, we found tucked in the foot of the beds hot water bottles that were placed there by the loving hands of Homa or Sheyda, the two Persian girls who assist with the work in the Western Pilgrim House. Most of those selected to serve in the Guardian's household and also those in charge of the various Shrines and Gardens are from families of outstanding and steadfast Bahá'ís which go back several generations.

Thursday morning, the 16th of December, we were up bright and early. Everyone is allowed to rise as he feels and to take care of his own breakfast. John enjoyed getting up and cooking bacon and eggs for everyone which the Revel Sisters and Leroy appreciated very much as they were in the habit of hurrying in, eating a few bites and rushing off to their manifold duties.

After breakfast we were conducted to the Shrine on Mt. Carmel by Jessie and Ethel Revel — those two staunch and efficient workers who were sent for by Shoghi Effendi in the spring of 1951 — and then at the Shrine given over into the capable hands of Dr. Luṭfu'lláh Ḥakím, the Keeper of the Shrine and Gardens, who explained many things of intense interest to us.

To try to explain the experience of entering the Shrine of the Blessed Youthful Martyr-Prophet is not possible. It is only something that one can experience. However, to me it was like entering into a sanctuary that completely shut out the world and one felt absolute peace, except for the anguish of one's own heart while meditating upon the tribulations and eventual martyrdom He had suffered for our sakes. We said prayers for all our friends, relatives (living and dead), for the progress of the Faith in America, Africa and all the world. One had the feeling of being really in contact with the "Prayer-Hearing, Prayer-Answering God."

Certain afternoons the Shrine and Gardens are open to the public, and people flock there from far and near. There is always an attendance of from 200 to 500 or more, and various Bahá'ís are stationed around to watch that nothing is destroyed or the plants trampled. It was my privilege to stand at the door of the Shrine and hold the cameras of those wishing to enter and to instruct them to remove their shoes. Some rebelled at removing their shoes but would walk around trying to peer into the Shrine without actually going in, but in practically every instance their curiosity overcame them and finally they would remove their shoes and go in. Many stayed a long time in the Shrine and when they came out, there was reverence and respect written on their faces, and one could see they were deeply moved. Many stayed to ask questions or wanted literature, but the Guardian prefers to let the Shrine and the Gardens speak for themselves and we give answers as briefly as possible — now is not the time to give the Message to the people of Israel, but rather we show friendship and cooperation to the new Government. Two young girls dressed in the Israeli army uniform (girls must give two years compulsory military service along with the men) stayed for a long time watching the crowd and waiting to ask a question. Finally they approached and asked why I, an American, was serving at the Shrine of a Persian religion. The act itself had been a teacher, so all I answered was, "This is not a Persian religion, it is a World Religion and you will find coming here Bahá'ís from every country of the world." I told them also that I thought they were very privileged to have in their country the World Center of a World Religion.

They asked to know more but I gave them only some of the Principles and the barest outline of the Faith.

The Jewish Nation seems to be quite happy at having so many tourists coming which brings business to their land and great consideration is given to all Bahá'í pilgrims arriving either by sea or air. Their luggage is never opened by custom officials and they are made to feel very welcome. When we left Leroy and the Giacherys went with us to the airport. Leroy invited the manager of the airport to visit the Shrine and Gardens as his guest and he would personally conduct him around. The man was very pleased and when it was time to leave he conducted us personally ahead of the other passengers to the plane and asked the hostess to show us every consideration.

Another nice thing the Israeli Government has done for the Bahá'ís in appreciation of the beautification of Mt. Carmel was to purchase the land that extends on from the Shrine Gardens and connects with the section on which the Mashriqu'l-Adhkár is to be built, with the plan to develop it into a garden similar to the already existing gardens around the Shrine. This had made the Guardian and all at Haifa very happy.

Next we visited the Shrine of 'Abdu'l-Bahá, the One so close to the heart of the Americans because of his visit to our shores and because He had been visited by many of the American friends in the Most Great Prison who had told us countless stories of the Holy Family and particularly of the greatness and humility of the Master. He seemed very close and we said many prayers here at this precious Threshold of the One who is the Centre of Bahá'u'lláh's Covenant, for the success, Triumph and speedy fulfillment of His Divine Plan and that the Bahá'ís the world over would arise as one person, imbued with His spirit of selflessness to steadfastly carry out His instructions to "hasten to all parts of the world. . . travel through all the continents and islands of the globe. . . raising the cry of 'Ya Bahá'ul-Abhá'" One was so aware of the fact that 'Abdu'l-Bahá longed to travel throughout these regions Himself, but since He was not able to go He wanted more than anything else to see the believers shouldering their responsibilities and accepting the great privilege of taking this Blessed Message for Him. His "Tablet of Visitation" took on new and deeper meaning when we said it in this Holy Place. . . "Lord give me to drink of the chalice of selflessness; its robe clothe me and in its ocean immerse me. . ."

The rest of the morning we viewed with intense interest everything there and were deeply thrilled to stand on the spot where the Archives building is to be erected and to calculate where the "arc" for the buildings mentioned in the Guardian's cable of Nov. 24th, would be erected with the Memorial Gardens as the pivot.

In the afternoon we all "fell in" to help Rúhíyyih Khánum in preparation for the dinner party to be given in honour of Josephine Baker. {{p6}} We helped to polish silver, wash dishes, arrange flowers, set tables, clean house and do the "million and one" things that need to be done for such an event. One cannot help but have the greatest admiration for the dear Guardian's wife for the way in which she runs her house under the most trying circumstances and yet carries out all her responsibilities socially. I should say two houses as there is both the Pilgrim House (Western) and the Guardian's House.

In all there were 22 or 23 quests who attended the party so it was quite a function. The American Consul and his wife, the Italian Consul and his wife and various other dignitaries of Haifa were there besides Josephine baker and her entourage. All in all it was a very nice party and Miss Baker was very impressed, I am sure, and the next day when she visited the Shrine and Gardens with Rúhíyyih Khánum she expressed her appreciation and a desire to know more about the Faith. Our only regret was to have miss one evening with the beloved Guardian as he does not attend such functions but we were compensated by being allowed to stay an extra night.

Early Saturday morning there was a great deal of hurrying around, food was packed in baskets and the station wagon was loaded with various and sundry things. One had the feeling that a picnic was in the offing. We were told to take our warmest clothes, wool socks to wear to the Holy Places, and a hot water bottle was a must. In other words we were going to Bahjí for the week end. When the party finally got off the two cars were carrying, four Hands of the Cause, Rúhíyyih Khánum, Amelia Collins, Leroy Ioas and Ugo Giachery, and three other members of the International Council, Jessie and Ethel Revel and Dr. Luṭfu'lláh Ḥakím, Iráj Ḥakím, Angeline Giachery, Mr. and Mrs. Esfandiar Bakhtiari, Persian friends from Pakistan (He is a member of the NSA of Burma-Pakistan — India), Shadah, the Persian girl who came from along to help with the meals, John and I.

We were met by the radiant Keeper of the Shrine of Bahá'u'lláh, Saladín Jaharrah and welcomed warmly to Bahjí. The first thing we did was to enter the Shrine in the company of such outstanding servants and loved ones of His Cause. We took off our shoes and reverently stepped into the Holiest Place in the universe, and again that "peace that passeth all understanding" encompassed us as we listened to the "Tablet of Visitation" chanted by Sala, followed by prayers from all present. It was indeed a moment that we will never forget for our minds go back constantly in memory to this "Holiest of Holies" to which all hearts must turn in adoration during prayer.

After a walk around the Gardens that are enthusiastically described by Sala as a miracle wrought by our dear Guardian in the short space of a week, Rúhíyyih Khánum and Millie Collins left us to go back to Haifa. Leroy, Dr. Luṭfu'lláh Ḥakím and Dr. Giachery made the hours rich indeed telling us stories at the table of the building of the gardens, the trials encountered through the machinations of the covenant-breakers, the early history of the Faith, and trying to straighten out in our minds all the various families who are serving at the Mansion of Bahjí, the Garden of Riḍván, the House of Abbúd, etc.

After dinner we went to the Mansion, to the up-stairs, and first of all visited with awe, deep reverence and love in our hearts the room where Bahá'u'lláh passed away. It is a lovely room, large and airy and spacious with things replaced just as they were when the Blessed Beauty occupied it. Even though the covenant-breakers robbed the room of its original pieces of furniture the room has been refurnished in the same manner and many of His own things are there. It is the same room where Bahá'u'lláh received Professor Browne, who wrote his impressions thus: "The face of Him on whom I gazed I can never forget though I cannot describe it. Those piercing eyes seemed to read one's very soul; power and authority sat on that ample brow; while the deep lines on the forehead and face implied an age which the jet-black hair and beard flowing down in indistinguishable luxuriance almost to the waist seemed to belie. No need to ask in whose presence I stood, as I bowed myself before One who is the object of a devotion and love which kings might envy and emperors sigh for in vain!"

We were privileged to say many prayers here and then were shown the beloved Guardian's room, and rooms holding all the relics that the Guardian has collected — pictures, pictures and pictures of many and varied events and persons — the disciples of Bahá'u'lláh, the Disciples of 'Abdu'l-Bahá among whom were several of the early American believers, documents of incorporation of Assemblies, temple models and hundreds of other articles and books of special interest to Shoghi Effendi and the Bahá'í world. The rooms were all build around one large central room that is supported by eight pillars. {{p7}} You have seen pictures of it.

After memorable prayers at dawn in Bahá'u'lláh's room and a quick breakfast the station wagon was again packed and we started off for 'Akká. Dr. Luṭfu'lláh pointed out the "plains of 'Akká" where Napoleon met his defeat, the Hill of Napoleon that he built in an effort to get an advantage in attacking the walled city of 'Akká, "the hills of Lebanon", the old aquaduct that was restored at the request of Bahá'u'lláh to bring fresh water to the city that was so vile a "bird flying over it would fall dead", and many other things that we had read about and never expected to see.

In approaching the "Most Great Prison" of 'Akká, Dr. Luṭfu'lláh Ḥakím took us first beyond the moat overlooking the Prison from which the worn and weary pilgrims in days gone by had traveled hundreds of miles on foot hoping to catch a fleeting glimpse of the face of the Blessed Perfection and a wave of His hand from across the moat. The moat, toady, is filled and a highway goes past the door of the Prison which is partially used to house the mentally deranged, and the window from which the white handkerchief of Bahá'u'lláh waved is considerably larger than in the days when the Blessed Beauty was incarcerated there so we were told, but as one gazes toward that window and hears the lapping of the sea behind him, it takes little imagination to put oneself in the place of those early pilgrims and one almost expects to see a hand wave from the window and then with a guilty start you realize you have not trudged the long weary miles to deserve such a bounty but rather you have flown in swiftly and comfortably to Haifa airport and then were brought by the luxury of a car the rest of the way. The same feeling of unworthiness goes with you as you climb the steps to the cell that has been set aside as a Holy Place. The Cell, itself, is adorned with lush Persian rugs which look very much out of place except that they have been placed there by the loving hands of the followers who wished to bring some gift to their King, as in days of old precious gifts were brought to the Christ child in the manger. But the beautiful carpets do not completely cover the cold, hard, rocky floor that had been the resting place of the beloved of the World for over two years, and snatches of the “Tablet of Aḥmad” jumps into your mind. “O Aḥmad, forget not My bounties while I am absent. remember My days during thy days and My distress and banishment in this remote prison.” We are told this much beloved Tablet was written in Adrianople yet it seems also to apply to “the Most Great Prison.”

As you leave this sacred room after reaching out through the medium of His Holy Communes to that Holy Presence that you know is the Hope of All Mankind and is felt so strongly in this Spot, you visit the room occupied by ‘Abdu’l-Bahá and some of the others. You visualize the loving ministry of ‘Abdu’l-Bahá during the times of sickness and near starvation suffered by fellow-exiles privileged to share this living martyrdom.

Outside your these rooms your attention is called to the spot where the Purest Branch, Mírzá Mihdí, fell to his death while reciting prayers on the roof of the Prison. You try to recall the beautiful Tablet revealed by Bahá’u’lláh on this occasion for His beloved son, “I have, O my God, offered up that which Thou hast given Me, that Thy servants may be quickened, and all that dwell on earth be united.” You remember that this lovely youth, “created the light of Bahá” chose that his life not be spared but rather that it might be offered as a ransom for “all those who were prevented from attaining the presence of the Beloved.” and you pray you, too, might become worthy to lay on the altar of sacrifice some gift that might help hasten the unity of mankind and dispel the darkness of error.

When the barracks of the Prison were needed for quartering the Turkish soldiers who were being mobilized, Bahá’u’lláh, His family and followers, were shuttled around from house to house, still within the Walled City until eventually they were placed in the House of Aboud, as it is now called. It was so insufficient for the needs of the party that thirteen persons of both sexes were forced to stay in one room. Dr. Luṭfu’lláh told the story of one night when one fell out of an upper bunk onto the ones below and caused no end of commotion.

It was in this house, overcrowded in the extreme, that the Kitáb-i-Aqdas, the Most Holy Book of Laws, was revealed by Bahá’u’lláh and written down by the pen of ‘Abdu’l-Bahá. You see the room where this Mighty Work was born.. Our Guardian tells us in “God Passes By”, p.213, that provisions of this Most Holy Book of the Bahá’í Revelation, “must remain inviolate for no less than a thousand years, and whose system will embrace the entire planet, may well be regarded as the brightest emanation of the mind of Bahá’u’lláh, as the Mother Book of His Dispensation, and the Charter of His New World Order.” {{p8}} And again “the Kitáb-i-Aqdas, revealed from the first to the last by the Author of the Dispensation Himself, not only preserves for prosperity the basic laws and ordinances on which the fabric of His future World Order must rest, but ordains, in addition, to the function of interpretation which it confers upon His Successor, the necessary institutions through which the integrity and unity of His Faith can alone be safeguarded.” We felt fortunate indeed, to be in Haifa and hear the Guardian discuss his work of codification of this Most Mighty Book and has difficulty in getting it condensed into outline form.

We were served lunch in this house of Aboud, at the same table where the Master had so often served Their guests and then were taken into the courtyard where ‘Abdu’l-Bahá had distributed alms and bread to the poor. We walked along the little winding streets that were little more than alleys. We saw tiny shops where trinkets and food are now sold or a cobbler sits on a stool mending or making shoes. It might be termed “picturesque” if it were not so tragic to see human beings living in such unsanitary conditions and see small children so poorly clad and all crowded into these dirty little streets — the only place to play. In one of these crowded little “flats” we were served tea by a man who was doing some work on the Shrine of the Báb.

As we left the City of ‘Akká with all its poignant, heart-stirring memories, we passed the Muḥammadan Mosque where ‘Abdu’l-Bahá was wont to go and pray: We went inside for a quick tour of its nice garden and to appreciate the lovely tile that was in such evidence. It was sacred to us because ‘Abdu’l-Bahá’s eyes had looked upon it and he had come here to pray.

Riding from the City of ‘Akká to the Garden of Riḍván, Dr. Ḥakím and Leroy Ioas told stories of happenings at the world center which had taken place during the time they had been associated with its development. It was all most intensely interesting.

Arriving at the Garden of Riḍván, called by Bahá’u’lláh, “Our Verdant Isle”, is, in reality, a small island in a river, covered with pomegranate, tangerine and various other fruit trees. It is truly a bit of paradise and as one sits by the softly flowing fountain and walks the paths that you know were trod by the feet of the Blessed Perfection and attempt to capture the feeling that one would have being confined within prison wall for nine long years you see added beauty to every leaf, flower and drop of water. The custodian of this lovely spot is a tried and trusted follower who is the father of one of the girls employed in the household of the Guardian. He lives at the garden with his wife and his greatest joy is to show the pilgrims every “nook and cranny” of the lovely Hallowed Garden.

It was growing late as we walked around the “Verdant Isle” and we had to hasten back to Bahjí to be there before too late. Sala had taken the day off and gone with us to ‘Akká but in no time he had the lights on in the Shrine and we all went in and again lifted our hearts in thanksgiving for having been “quickened with the water of life.” the “Tablet of Visitation” took on a new and deeper meaning as we prayed, “May my spirit be a sacrifice to the wrongs Thou didst suffer, and my soul be a ransom for the adversities Thou didst sustain.”

As this was the last night we were to spend in Bahjí we decided to rise at dawn and go to the Shrine for prayers. And what a rewarding experience! It is, in truth, the place where “the holy ecstasy of prayer may fill our souls — a prayer that shall rise above words and letters and transcend the murmur of syllables and sounds — that all things may be merged into nothingness before the revelation of Thy splendor.”

After breakfast we all felt a little sad for we knew that soon we must leave this Most Holy Place and we walked around the garden trying to saturate our minds and hearts with its beauty and spirit. We wanted enough to last a life time, if need be, of this heavenly atmosphere. We wanted to absorb every detail so that we might share it with others and carry it always in our hearts. We were told that in days to come no one would be allowed to enter the Shrine itself but would only circumambulate it. The Gardens, now are taking on a circular shape with paths going out like spokes of a wheel. We took pictures and pictures.....

On our way back to Haifa we went by the house to which Bahá'u'lláh moved when He first left the Walled City. We were served tea and cakes that were most delicious and were told stories of the early days when the Blessed Beauty lived here.

Soon we were reminded that we were expected for lunch at the home of two of Shoghi Effendi's cousins in Nazareth. {{p9}} The luncheon was in the nature of an occasion because the transaction had been completed that had given to the Bahá'ís a section of land adjoining Bahjí. It is one of those strange events that convinces one that “God works in mysterious ways His wonders to perform.” It seems that the land had once been owned by a staunch Christian who used to observe Bahá'u'lláh and ‘Abdu'l-Bahá and was impressed enough to recognize that these men were not molded of ordinary clay yet he was antagonistic in the extreme. So much so that he made his son promise that the land would never be sold to the Bahá'ís. The son was very friendly to ‘Abdu'l-Bahá and in order to cover up his friendship he would tell his father that he was associating with ‘Abdu'l-Bahá in an effort to convert him to Christianity. However, he did promise his father not to sell the land to them. Time went on and the old man died and the son needed money so he sold the land to some Arabs. When the war between the Arabs and the Jews broke out the owners of the land fled from the country and the Government took it over. Now the cousins of Shoghi Effendi lived in Jordan and their farm land was appropriated by the Government because it was in the war zone. The cousins made application for an exchange of their farm for the land adjoining Bahjí and it was granted to them. They immediately gave it to the Guardian and this was the event we were going to Nazareth to help celebrate. And what a celebration! The luncheon had been prepared for Rúḥíyyih Khánum, Millie Collins, Leroy Ioas and the Giacherys and John and I were invited because we happened to be on pilgrimage so were included. Rúḥíyyih Khánum came down with a very bad cold at the last minute and could not go and I could see well why one with a cold would not, or could not eat the terrifically rich food that was served to us. There were courses and courses of all kinds of delicacies we had never heard of or tasted. We ate from 1 o'clock until 3 and then had to go over to the other cousins house and had sweets which lasted for another hour. We really had difficulty rising from the table when it was over! They were really two of the loveliest families one could ever want to know, and with them was living a little old lady who was a relative of Bahá'u'lláh and looking very much as if the least breeze would blow her away yet her eyes shone with an inner brilliance as if she might have 1000 watt lights concealed behind them.

While we were in Nazareth we were able to see some of the spots that are sacred to the Christians. We were mindful of the fact that here Jesus spent his early youth as a carpenter. We saw the well where Mary used to go and draw water — still in use. It really is a very pretty little town nestled in hills and not nearly as barren as the section around Jerusalem. We were sorry that we did not get to visit more of the Holy Land but were able to spend Xmas night in Jerusalem. The only indication that it was Xmas were the strings of colored lights that were strung from the tower of the Y.M.C.A. building directly across from the King David Hotel where we were stopping and Christmas carols were played over a screechy loud speaker. But, I think, if we could have been allowed to go over into Old Jerusalem we would have found more of the Christmas spirit as we were told that if tourists applied in time they were granted permission to visit Old Jerusalem and Calvary. But this was war territory and many sections were surrounded with barbed wire entanglements. The next day we started on the road to Galilee but had to turn back because it was too far for the amount of time we had before our plane took off for South Africa.

It was nearly dinner time when we arrived back in Haifa from Nazareth but were still uncomfortable and only because we would not miss seeing the beloved Guardian did we go to the table.

He was very happy and jovial and showed great interest in our trip to Bahjí and 'Akká. He spoke again of the Covenant Breakers and how they were all being punished and their efforts to destroy the Faith brought to naught. While he was speaking he was heaping our plates high with pilau. We told him how much we had for lunch and begged for small helpings but he continued to heap food upon our plates kidding John about always having a good appetite. He is extremely hospitable and usually serves the pilgrims himself but takes very little notice of what he eats or scarcely is aware of the food in front of him. Rúhíyyih Khánum told us that often he forgets all about lunch and only because she gets so faint from lack of food will he stop working or suggest that she take time out to eat.

After serving our plates he started to speak about marriage in different countries. He told us that 'Abdu'l-Bahá had observed much on his trip to America although he said little. He said that in America the husbands were slaves to their wives. {{p7}} The husbands would work hard all day to make money which they turned over to their wives and then when they came home from work wishing to relax and be comfortable the wives insisted on dragging them off to a cocktail party or the theater. Then the husbands would die young and the widows would travel. He commented that Americans for the most part like to travel but were not such good settlers. He said that intermarriage between the Germans and the Americans was good because the Germans dominated their wives too much and the wives were the slaves. He mentioned that in America we over-emphasized everything. Machines run people and even our administration is excessive. The British he believes are the most balanced although they are afflicted with class prejudice and in America there is race prejudice. He said in Italy the women dominated the men just as they did in America and he mentioned that the kissing of hands must be abolished.

He spoke about Bahá'í elections and said the minority of the community should always be given preference in a tie vote. There was no need for a recasting of a vote in the case of a tie but the one belonging to the minority group should automatically be chosen. This applied to either religious or racial minority groups. He cited Egypt as an example. The Persians were the majority among the Bahá'ís in Egypt so the Egyptians should be given the preference in case of a tie vote. It is not good to have a stronger group dominate a community. In America the minority race is negro and one of the minority religions is Jewish.

He spoke frequently about Africa. The pioneers must remain free to move about as the African should be deepened and encouraged to take the leadership of his people as soon as possible. The pioneers should convert the African and then move on.

The Ten Year Crusade was always very much in his conversation and obviously in his thoughts. The various homefronts were frequently discussed also. He stressed strongly that the Cause should not be just another occupation. It must be THE occupation. That is the reason that living in a village is better than a city as there are not so many distractions. He told us that in Persia there were 600 centers and in America there were 1300 yet the numbers of believers were in reverse. And if one-tenth of the Bahá'ís of Persia would disperse it would double the membership of the world.

He said that after this Crusade there would be others. There would be a series of epoch and a series of plans. The virgin areas in the course of successive plans would have to be consolidated and the administrative order would have to be developed until NSAs were formed everywhere. In future the plans will take in more Sovereign States and other Islands. now we have reached only the Chief Dependencies and the Chief Islands.

We are now in the 2nd epoch of the Formative Age. Probably this will last much longer than the first. {{p11}} The Golden Age of Bahá'u'lláh will end with the coming of a new Prophet when there will be new laws.

He said the important thing in teaching the Christians is to stress the things we have in common with Christ. It is good to quote from the Gleanings. Teach that religion is progressive and religious truth is relative and not absolute. Always identify the Bahá'í Faith with the maturity of mankind. The Bahá'í Teachings could not possibly have been given in another age. The world has passed through its age of infancy, its adolescence and now it is in its maturity.

The friends from Rome presented their plan for the purchase of an Ḥaẓíratu'l-Quds which was a suite of offices in one of the down town buildings. It would cost $17,000. He said that was too much. If he accepted that plan for Rome then he would have to accept equally central and expensive Ḥaẓíratu'l-Quds for all the capital cities. It would be nice for Rome to have a nice Ḥaẓíratu'l-Quds as it is an important center but all they had to think about was Rome and he had to deal with the whole world and they would not understand. After all these places are all temporary. Even the Temple sites may be temporary and can be exchanged. The Persian Temple must be larger than the one in Germany and not so large as the one in America.

On the evening of the 23rd of December, two new pilgrims arrived. Laura Davis from Canada and Olivia Kelsey from Monoco. He asked Olivia about the pioneering work in Monoco and she told him some of her problems. He gave suggestions. Then he asked about Canada and the friends. He said many wonder things about the Canadians. They have the best qualities of both the Americans and the English. He said that the Center of Canada was Toronto and the heart was in Montreal where the Master had visited. Then again he spoke on the Ten Year Crusade and the succession of plans that would be given until the whole earth would have been reached by the Teachings.

When dinner was finished he cleared the place in front of him and said that he had read a most important news item. He produced a copy of the "London Times", December 16, 1954 and read to us the following excerpt: "Mr. Wyatt asked the Prime Minister (Mr. Churchill) whether he could state with greater exactness the number of atomic and nuclear explosions that he was advised would make lethal the atmosphere over substantial areas of the world and whether he had now studied the evidence that he (Mr. Wyatt) had submitted to him." The Guardian called attention to the reference in the Tablets of Bahá'u'lláh, "Words of Paradise", (B.W.F. p.183) where He wrote: "A strange and wonderful instrument which has the power to change the atmosphere of the whole earth, and its infection causes destruction." He said the word "wonderful" was not right, a better translation would be "astonishing" and "instrument" was also a wrong translation but he could not put his finger on the right word. We all tried to help out with suggestions but he said none was exactly right. He told us that there is a difference in translating a word correctly and using a term to explain the meaning. Just to explain the meaning he said that probably "substance" would be the nearest word.

The Guardian said he was impressed because of the use of the word "atmosphere" in the paper and the idea that the "lethal" properties could cover large areas of the earth. Bahá'u'lláh had prophesied a third stage — covering the whole earth. The beginning or the first stage was the explosions in Japan that had effected the immediate areas. The second stage was the covering of large areas of the globe such as the article in the "Times" referred to and the third was the one anticipated by Bahá'u'lláh as a teaching point. And added as an afterthought that one could easily see how the prophecy in Daniel regarding 2/3 of the earth being destroyed could come to pass.

The last night of our pilgrimage, December 24th, was a sad one for us. The beloved Guardian was very tired having had a hard day. He told of the work on the Gardens and the progress on the ground work for the Archives Building. He said the plot of ground owned by Faríd's sister was already an integrated part of the landscape.

The question was asked if the Guardian when in his recent cable (Dec. 24th) he mentioned that the completion of the buildings housing the institutions of administration of which the Archives Building was the first would synchronize with the establishment of the Lesser Peace, if that meant all the buildings of the "arc" must be built before the Lesser Peace would come to pass. He answered that by synchronizing meant that the Lesser Peace would be developed simultaneously with the erection of the institutions. These were the two processes going on. One was on the outside and one was within the Faith. {{p12}} A third process was the further development of the local and national institutions.

He went on to explain that the culmination of the one process would be in the evolvement of the Lesser Peace into the Most Great Peace and the evolvement of the World Center Institutions would culminate into the World Order of Bahá'u'lláh. These two processes would finally emerge in the World Commonwealth.

He stressed the point that the Bahá'ís must always point out that the Message of World Unity is unique in that the world is coming into maturity and therefore needs a Message such as Bahá'u'lláh's. Up until this time it had not been possible because the world had not all been discovered, therefore could not have been united.

He mentioned the seven stages of development through which the Faith would pass. These have frequently been discussed in other Pilgrim Notes and are mentioned in "Advent of Divine Justice, p. 12) so will only mention them briefly. These stages are not in chronological order in every country for the Cause is developing through different stages in different countries and some countries skip various stages. The stages are: 1. Obscurity. 2. Persecution. 3. Emancipation. 4. Recognition. 5. Establishment. 6. Assumption of rights and privileges as a Bahá'í State. Institutions of the Cause will assume the function of government. 7. World wide Bahá'í Commonwealth.

Just now in teaching we refer only to the first four points as misunderstandings may arise from the last three. The stage of obscurity is always the protection of the Faith until it is firmly established then it can enter subsequent stages. Obscurity was also the protection of the Faith of Christ. When it became known the Romans persecuted the Christians until the time when Constantinople instituted it as the State Religion.

He said the Bahá'í Faith would develop into the World Commonwealth but would still be under the Bahá'í Cycle.

He was asked if interplanetary unity would be the goal of future Dispensations or if it might be achieved in the Dispensation of Bahá'u'lláh. He answered it would be a goal of the future but science is developing so fast that it was difficult to know how soon it would come, but it might at least soon be possible to observe life on other systems that are in various stages of development — some lower and some higher than ours.

The Guardian was asked if the meaning of the verse in the Bible “the day that would not be followed by night” meant that succeeding Manifestations would not be persecuted but immediately accepted by the people. He answered, “No, there will always be evil in the world and doubtless the succeeding Manifestations would be persecuted though in a lesser degree.” The meaning of the verse was that the Guardians would be sources of guidance and protection for the Faith until the coming of the subsequent Manifestation which might not be for 6000 years although He might come any time after 1000 years — depending on need.

We became slightly involved as to why the people would probably not accept the new Manifestation if they had the Guardian to guide and direct them which led to Shoghi Effendi recounting for us the functions of Guardianship. He stressed the Infallibility of the Guardian as being the essential thing that kept schisms from developing the Faith. One could not say that he was infallible only as Interpreter of the Writings but he was infallible in anything that he stated he was infallible in. He was the only one who could know when he was guided infallibly. That was the very nature of infallibility. Regardless of what he talked about if he gave his word as an infallible statement then it was so — if it were a suggestion he would say so. In speaking of the Guardian as the Head of the Universal House of Justice he said that the Universal House of Justice was bound to accept the Guardian's authority if he spoke from the Station of Infallibility, because of statement in the “Will and Testament of ‘Abdu'l-Bahá” which says: “It is incumbent upon the members of the House of Justice, upon all the Aghsán, the Afnán, the Hands of the Cause of God to show their obedience, submissiveness and subordination unto the Guardian of the Cause of God, to turn unto him and be lowly before him.” He spoke with great power and authority when he mentioned the Station of the Guardian and the functions of the Guardianship. We had the feeling that he does not think that the Americans or the peoples of the West have a true concept of the Guardianship but take it a little too lightly and taking it too lightly we have a tendency not to appreciate its true worth and the great bounty that is ours in this Day of Days. We are too close to the source to fully and rightly evaluate the tremendous dynamic power behind that personality. Just as one gazing at a spring cannot realize the power and force of the river that makes possible the running of great dynamos that send out light, heat and power to countless homes and factories and brings life giving water to vast areas. We see and love the personality of the Guardian but only vaguely sense the power at such times as these or glimpse it through the scope and compelling force of his writings. All pettiness and non-essentials fall away in the light of this understanding as shadows fall away from the sun. Only future generations and historians can rightfully place him in the scheme of the unfolding World Order of Bahá'u'lláh. Ours is a privilege that we MUST NOT TAKE LIGHTLY but pray for illumination and understanding.

He told us of the conflict within himself when he first heard that he was the appointed Successor to 'Abdu'l-Bahá. Already burdened with grief over the passing of his beloved grandfather this was suddenly thrust upon him. He said that he knew himself, and it was most difficult for him to see himself in the role that 'Abdu'l-Bahá had placed upon him. Yet he had no choice but to accept. He said it was easy for the Bahá'ís — all they had to do was to obey the "Will and Testament." But he had to reconstruct the whole plan of his life and his idea of himself. He spoke with extreme humility and conviction. He had fought his battle and is now confident and assured. (Old time Bahá'ís will remember that Shoghi Effendi went into retirement after the passing of 'Abdu'l-Bahá and the Greatest Holy Leaf took over the reigns of guidance until he found himself). He said that the Manifestations, too, had fought the same kind of battle only their responsibility was still greater but they, too, had a human station.

All of us know how little he speaks of himself and if at all possible he gives the credit to the believers of the various countries for the victories that really belong to his unerring guidance and planning.

How well 'Abdu'l-Bahá must have realized the calumnies that would be heaped upon him and the machinations that would be devised to pierce his heart because he, too, had suffered a living martyrdom so in his effort to protect Shoghi Effendi he stated in his "Will and Testament": "to take the greatest care of Shoghi Effendi.... that no dust of despondency and sorrow may stain his radiant nature....(and) He that obeyeth him not, hath not obeyed God." Yet as we sat at the table and listened to the accounts of viciousness of the Covenant Breakers we knew that he had been tried in the same crucible as the Master. We prayed to God as we sat there that we would never be the cause of bringing him one moment of unhappiness but rather we wanted to rush out and do something that would help relieve the burden of his heart.

When the meal was finished we all sat teary-eyed and speechless — our hearts overflowing with love and gratitude that God had given us the Institution of the Guardianship and the Guardian who was the embodiment of all those virtues we were striving for and fell so short of, he broke the tension by bringing out gifts that he wanted us to take to the friends in Johannesburg and sending messages of love to all along the way — with special love for the Banání Family and Mother Fisher. He said to assure Mother of his prayers and he considered her residence in the pioneer field again as highly meritorious.

When he had left the remaining friends again gathered around trying to make the last few hours of our pilgrimage a happy occasion. We cannot speak too highly or lovingly of the great consideration and kindness heaped upon the pilgrims by the "staff" at the World Center. They spare no effort to fill to overflowing every moment with treasured memories. Rúhíyyih Khánum, always breathless, at times full of fun and happy, at others deeply serious; Millie Collins, not at all well, yet exerting every effort to be with us and going personally, with us to visit some of those Holy Places that through her explanations they might be more meaningful to us; the Revel Sisters, Jessie and Ethel, in their wonderfully sweet and loving ways made us so at home, looking after all our needs, going with us on shopping tours, and doing many kindnesses for us each day; Dr. Luṭṭu'lláh Ḥakím at the Shrine of the Báb was always the perfect host and regardless of the time of day when we visited the Shrine insisted on serving us tea with his own hands; Leroy Ioas who we knew sat up long hours into the nights to take care of the work that piled up because he was devoting too much time to us. But what a joy to have the privilege of looking at the Blessed Shrine through his eyes and hear the stories of their experiences during the construction and realizing the problems that could have been resolved only through the guiding influences of Unseen Powers. {{p14}} It was really wonderful seeing him again, talking over old times in California, recalling old memories, half forgotten, hearing news of mutual friends and speaking of the many changes that had come into our lives since we had last met, wondering what the next few years would bring and thrilling to the thought that regardless of whatever happened to any of us personally, the glorious Faith was marching on! We greatly marvelled at the speedy acceleration of the last few years and were deeply grateful for the unerring leadership of our beloved Guardian. Then there were those we met who were the loving keepers of the Holy Places and the Persian friends who were on pilgrimage with us. I enjoyed the afternoon teas as Rúḥíyyih Khánúms for the ladies. She was our interpreter and we had lot of fun as well as serious discussion. All in all we were so showered and saturated with LOVE that we felt as if we had left this world of darkness and tribulation and entered the happy realms of eternity.

We shall always remember how happy the Guardian was when he surprised us at the end of one of the dinners by bringing out the Roll of Honor that had just been returned that day by the artist. It was all done by hand, beautifully illustrated and complete except for those names that must be added as the still remaining Virgin Areas are filled. There was a note of sadness over those who had left their posts and we all mentioned the fact that many names not there were certainly inscribed on another and a higher roll of honor because as we all know some of the consolidation areas were far more bleak and hard to enter than some of the virgin areas. Incidentally, it is not to be hung in the entrance of the Shrine of Bahá'u'lláh but is to be placed beneath the floor of the entrance. But it is beautifully and artistically done although the design is simple.

These are just some of the highlights of our pilgrimage and is not a complete account by any means. The treasured relics have not even been mentioned — the famed sword of Mullá Ḥusayn, the blood stained garments, the precious hand work and first copies of the Tablets of Bahá'u'lláh, the Báb and 'Abdu'l-Bahá and the lovely portraits and photographs of Bahá'u'lláh, the Báb and 'Abdu'l-Bahá and many other things that soon will be placed under glass for preservation when the new Archives Building is complete. It truly is urgently needed.

It was not easy to take notes and it is not encouraged except on rare occasions. We all know the confusion that arises from putting too much emphasis upon “Pilgrim’s Notes” so they encourage us to take back “Impressions” more than factual things because the Guardian sends in his direct messages those things which are the yard sticks for Bahá’í consultation and decisions. So my notes are mostly from memory written down after we had retired to our room for the night and there were many things that were not set down because we did not want to give wrong “impressions,” and it is very easy to give the wrong slant to what has been said. However, our feelings many times were that Shoghi Effendi was almost quoting from “God Passes By” so now when we want to hear him speak it has become a great incentive to read and re-read that valued and instructive book. One sees things never before noticed and the pilgrimage is relived over and over again in those pages.

But if we gained nothing else other than the welding of our hearts more firmly to the Center and Focal Point of Bahá’u’lláh’s Mighty Covenant and the deepening of our understanding of just what the Guardianship can and does mean to us and to the world with a fuller loyalty to all that it implies then our pilgrimage was rich beyond measure. And our greatest desire now is to share these convictions with all who we come in contact and it is a source of tremendous joy that the heart of the African is so understanding and receptive to those Divine Assurances.

nd if our friends in America could realize how GOLDEN are their opportunities and could see the joy that any achievement or victory by the friends always brings to the beloved Guardian they would not rest for a moment nor grow discouraged but press on until the whole of America was aflame!

April 1, 1954

Each pilgrim makes two pilgrimages in one: the pilgrimage of the head and the pilgrimage of the heart.

The first is the pilgrimage of the mind. Notes are taken of special information, new developments of the Faith, instructions from the Guardian to be applied to one's community or one's own self. This is the pilgrimage of "What the Guardian Said".

The second is the pilgrimage of the emotions: the sea that surges inside the pilgrim from the moment he or she catches the first glimpse of that glistening, golden dome. This is the warm flooding tide that soon will fill every empty inlet along the cold coastline of the spirit. This is the pilgrimage of joy, ecstasies, sorrows, shames, repentances and reformations that storm through one's being.

It is the first meeting with the Guardian, the first walk along the tile-red path that leads to the Shrine of the Báb, the moment that holy door is swung inward for the first time and you enter the presence of the gentle, lovable Báb, the very air of Whose Shrine throbs with the blood of the martyrs. This is the pilgrimage of reunion with the welcoming arms of the beloved Master. It is above all, the awe-stricken moment when the impure heart dares to present itself before that other sanctified spot where the Supreme Manifestation is enshrined: the pilgrimage of Bahjí, Masra'ih Riḍván, the house at 'Akká, the prison cell, the sufferings, the triumphs that are relived again through the eyes of each pilgrim who looks upon this land so much beloved.

It is of this second pilgrimage, the pilgrimage of the emotions, that I wish to speak here. The following is my recollection of that first and that last meeting with our Guardian.

These, of course, are a pilgrim's notes. I have tried to be as accurate as possible in recording my impressions, but they remain only the impressions of one pilgrim. If it were written by another pilgrim on the same day, they might present an entirely different aspect. Shoghi Effendi is like the rays of sunlight. He expresses whatever subject matter is latent on the inner film of each pilgrim. The same sun on the same field will warm and raise up many different flowers.

The following are my personal recollections of what Shoghi Effendi was like, some of the things he said, and some of the things I was told he said. Nothing more.

I arrived the morning of April 1, 1954. In addition to my 44 lbs. of airline luggage, I had in my pockets, two tins of potatoes, a bottle of catsup, a small tin of coffee, a large bottle of coffee, 50 Greek pamphlets, seven notebooks, four bottles of toilet articles and an eight-pound automatic electric water heater.

I spent the day doing things that are written elsewhere. Now I cannot remember them. I recall only the deep longing in my heart to see the Guardian.

I wanted to take a long pole and push the sun down into the Mediterranean so that evening would hasten.

My feelings were of mingled fear and courage. Fear, to stand before him and look into those eyes that must see all the stains that darken the inside of a person; courage, that if only I could look upon him, tell him of my love and beg forgiveness in my heart, nothing else would really matter.

Darkness stole away our lovely view of the Báb's Shrine from the Pilgrim House window. By then I had stiffened my liquid knees for the moment of going through the dining room door into his presence. My business life had been filled for years with "first nights" but never had there been one such as this. Never had I so hoped that an audience might find some merit in me, and I knew that approval could not be won this time by "performing" — only by not performing. This was a different world, not a shadow but reality. I had tried to prepare myself to meet him by praying with such fervor as I had never used before in all my Bahá'í life. At this point I realized that if I had used that fervor before during all my Bahá'í life, I would have been prepared to meet him now without it. A number of other things came to my mind, all of which led me to want to pack my bag and flee to a pioneer post.

Then word came that the Guardian was still at Bahjí, would stay the night there and not be with us at dinner. I felt as though I would weep before everyone. However, I didn't. It was just as well that I did not. In the days to come, I would learn what it was to shed tears, both of joy and repentance.

Haifa without the Guardian is like an eye without its sight. Dr. Luṭṭfu'lláh Ḥakím's whimsical comment is a virtual truth, "It is the Holy Land in his presence and the 'helliland' in his absence."

When we were told that Shoghi Effendi was making plans to illuminate the inner Shrine of Bahá'u'lláh at Bahjí, our emptiness was soon forgotten. Rúḥíyyih Khánum was so kind and loving. She knew the inner disappointment that each pilgrim tried not to show. Millie Collins, Leroy Ioas, Mason Remey — everyone bestowed upon us a special love that first night.

Dawn prayers at the Shrines, weed-pulling in the gardens, laughter at lunch, recording first impressions, transferring books for a new library, tea, bathe, shave, dress — evening!

Some of us were upstairs in the north sitting room when there was a scurrying about, the sound of rapid footsteps, a light tap on the door and the words, "He is here!" Magic words. The quiet house comes to life. It is like opening a faucet. All attention flows immediately toward the Guardian. No precious second of his presence must be lost. `{{p3}}` Everyone hurries to the head of the stairs, merging into a single-file line as they descend. At the foot of the stairs, the Hands of the Cause and the others step aside to permit the pilgrims to enter first.

We walked quickly along the lower hallway toward the dining room door, still exchanging places for the proper order. I tried to peek around the back of the pilgrim in front of me for my first glimpse of the Guardian. Her back prevented it.

Then, I was in the room. I heard his voice for the first time as he greeted her and shook hands with her. "Good evening," he said.

She replied, "Good evening, Shoghi Effendi."

She stepped aside, and I was revealed to him in all my unworthiness. There was no place to hide.

Dr. Giachery had told me in Rome that each time he approached that door he got cold shivers down his spine, and that he felt like a little boy caught with jam on his face. He told me this, but he didn't tell me that it was such a very cold shiver and that there was so very much jam.

Our eyes met. "Good evening," he said, and I replied...

What I said, I can't remember, because I saw him coming toward me. He held out his arms and embraced me. "We have been expecting you for a long time," he said as he kissed me on the right cheek, then the left, then the right.

I clung to him ever so tightly. My predominate feeling was, "I have come home." My chest hurt it felt so big. My throat was stopped up. My eyes tried to shed tears that were pouring from every part of my being, but the task was too great for them. They stored up and blinded me.

“We have heard much about you,” he said. I held him hoping I need never let go. “Now we are happy that you are with us at last.”

I turned back to the table to find my seat. It was directly opposite him, so close I could have reached over and touched his hand. When my vision cleared, I could see that every other eye was also misty. When the next pilgrim arrived, I would know why. Every Bahá’í heart is knitted to the other here and shares this ecstasy when the Guardian greets the new pilgrim for the first time. When I saw the next pilgrims come, I too wept with joy for them. I thought of the words of the Long Obligatory Prayer, “burn away the veils that have shut me out from Thy Beauty and [be] a light that will lead unto the ocean of Thy Presence.”

My fears had all vanished now, and I felt only a transcendent happiness. I watched the Guardian with wrapt attention and ever increasing devotion. This was as close, in our day, as man could come to the direct source of the power of God, His Majesty, His Justice, His Mercy and His Love. I felt them all flowing from the Guardian.

When he asked me about my journey I answered him and my words shamed me. I had made my living by words, but could think of nothing to say in his presence. {{p4}} My words were feeble, clumsy and uncertain. It was as though a glib tongue had been made fearful that it might try to say something witty or clever. This Guardian could be impressed by only one thing: service to the Faith. Nothing would ever influence his judgment — not wealth, position, power or friendship. The only gift that could be given to him was the gift of service.

One thing was apparent to me at once. My life was changing. My concept of the Faith, of teaching, of service — none of these would ever be the same again after that moment when he had said, “we are happy that you are here with us at last.”

I knew the terror in the words of Bahá’u’lláh, “I fear lest bereft of the melody of the dove of heaven, ye will sink back to the shades of utter loss.” I had gazed upon the “beauty of the rose” and could never again be content to return to “water and clay.”

One thing is certain; the being changes while at Haifa. Though one may fail to live up to the promises of this great blessing, though one may fail to serve as God requires, the price will be paid. Having seen the light, darkness is abhorrent. Only an unending sorrow can be the reward for those who, having tasted of the pure crystal stream, turn aside and drink from another.

The Guardian calls you to a higher service. He lifts you up to heights of limitless joy, and then sets you gently down. Having revealed the treasure, he requests the payment, which is service to the Faith of God.

Your only fear now is that you may fall short of the possibilities he has made you see in yourself.

He is a different thing to different people, I feel sure. He is a different Guardian to the same people on different days. Yet you feel that he is always the same at the center. He is like an ocean — a shelter for the fish that live upon his bounty, a storm of destruction for those who sail against his tide or into forbidden water. He is truly the Sign of God on earth. He is the present form of the Most Great Ocean of Bahá'u'lláh. 'Abdu'l-Bahá told us that the Covenant was this ocean. If we live within its strengthening grace, we prosper as fish gain strength in the waters of the sea. If we venture beyond its waters, we perish. If we do not feed upon its waters, we die within the sea itself; and, like dead bodies in the ocean, the waves of God spew us up and wash us onto the sands to wither and waste away.

You feel this power in the presence of the Guardian. I have heard it said that 'Abdu'l-Bahá once told some American believers when He was in their country, "Now you have my love. Some day you will have my justice." This justice is personified in the Guardian. You say, "Thank God for this Guardian!"

You know at once the strength of the Covenant, that Shoghi Effendi is the strong rope to which all must cling. Whenever I write of the Guardian and come to the pronoun, "he," I instinctively want to capitalize it. He wouldn't approve, as I do not. {{p5}} Still, in a small way it explains the need one feels for more lofty terms to express his presence.

I will try to describe him for you as he appears to the outer eye. Now, I know why there have been no adequate descriptions of him by the pilgrims. It is completely unimportant. It is describing a mirror when you can't behold the sun that shines in it. It is describing a symphony by saying it has four movements when you can't express the exhilaration and joy that its music stirs in you. This is more true of the Guardian. His is music unique to the planet. It is a spiritual language that transcends even a musical language. 'Abdu'l-Bahá said there was a spiritual language as different from our language as ours is from the cries of animals. This is the language of the presence of the Guardian. It cannot be expressed — it must be experienced. What is written here is but the shadow of the reality. Only a pilgrimage of your own will clothe it in flesh. If you have seen him, you will understand this.

The Guardian, as I remember him, is short in stature. His hair is dark, graying on the sides. He is of medium to dark complexion. He has dark eyes that seem to become a shade lighter when they are most animated as though they burned with some inner fire. His features are regular. He is smooth shaven except for a dark moustache. There is an energetic quality about his person, even when at rest. He is very sturdy. I judge this by the firmness I felt when he embraced me. He has small, slender hands that are shapely and expressive. All of his gestures are extremely graceful. He wore a rust-colored topcoat over his inner clothes all during the time I was there. His tie was always brown. He wears a slender gold Bahá'í ring on the second finger of his right hand.

Almost every evening he brought some new cable, map, drawing or document with him to the table. Frequently he discusses the work of the Faith with the Hands and the members of the International Council. The dinner table is long and narrow. It seats ten comfortably. The latest pilgrim used to sit at the head of the table. Now, Mason Remey sits there. The Guardian sits on his right and the latest pilgrim on Mason's left, opposite Shoghi Effendi. Rúhíyyih Khánum sits on the Guardian's immediate right. The pilgrim is only three feet away, yet a world away from him.

My time with him was doubly blessed because he was very happy throughout. The work of the Faith was progressing well, and this is the barometer of his spirit. He laughed much, chuckled very often, and, on two occasions, burst into hearty laughter. His joy carries everyone's spirit soaring aloft with him.

Frequently he will nod his head up and down as though to emphasize a point he had just made. When word came of the opening of three new territories in West Africa, he was delighted. "Now," he said, "we have opened two hundred and twenty five countries to the Faith." Then he nodded his head as if to say, "yes, it's true." {{p6}} He never says, "I" or "me." It is always "we" or "the Bahá'ís" or "the Faith" has done it.

No one speaks English as Shoghi Effendi speaks. There may be a moment's hesitation as he searches for a word. Yet, each time he brings forth a jewel that inspires a quiver of delight.

One evening the Shrine of the Báb was surrounded by a white mist. The Guardian asked me if we had seen it. "The Shrine," he said, was "the Queen of Carmel, seated upon her throne, robed in white and crowned with gold."

As the evening passes, your fear increases that soon he will leave. He touches his serviette-ring with his eloquent finger, then, with a characteristic gesture of finality, he pushes it forward toward the center of the table. This means that he is about to leave. The moment you dreaded has arrived. Each time he touches that serviette-ring, you say quietly to yourself, "don't let him leave just yet." You try to think of some earth-shaking question to ask that will delay his departure. Nothing comes.

He rises. All rise with him. He bids us each a personal good night with the wish that we may sleep well. Sometimes he will refer to the next day's plans.

"I hope you have a good night's rest. Tomorrow you will go to Bahjí, to the Shrine of Bahá'u'lláh. Yes."

His head nods up and down. His lovely eyes bestow upon each of us a loving glance. He smiles again and leaves.

The overpowering feeling of emotion, which you associate with the Guardian, never leaves you after that first meeting. 'Abdu'l-Bahá's words live in the Guardian. We must go forward; we can't stand still; that is stagnation. Movement, speed, action — yet all accomplished in an atmosphere of assurance and calm. The closer we are to him, the more active we become, the more accelerated our pace; yet; the more sublime our attitude and the less panicky our methods. [^] ‘Abdu’l-Bahá, Paris Talks, p. 90: You must ever press forward, never standing still; avoid stagnation, the first step to a backward movement, to decay.

The Guardian moves across the vast spaces to be conquered by the Faith as a cyclone moves. Its speed is astounding, yet at the heart of the cyclone all is peace as it moves. The farther one is from this tranquil center, the more violent the reaction. If we have withdrawn from the center and are on the outer fringes, we are torn to bits and destroyed. We must move with the power or be shattered by the impact.

This is what it is like to be in the presence of the Guardian. He is the power of electricity that can heat, warm, comfort and light our lives, but if we misuse it we are destroyed. {{p7}} He is the breeze that cools you when you are feverish, the wind that sails your craft speeding on its way, the gentle breath that shakes the ripened fruit and drops it at your feet, the gale, the hurricane that rushes in to crush what has become a vacuum.

You can feel the heat of his pace, you are shaken by the draft of his passing, and you can see the light of his spirit. He is a giant comet that blazes across the sky, drawing into his orbit all the bits of matter that can feed the flame of his fire. All that can burn with this same fire are drawn in to increase the brightness. Those who are not attracted by this magnetic power, who are not drawn into his orbit to burn with the rest, see this blazing ball of fire thunder past. They may try, too late, to enter, but the moment for the junction is passed. The fiery tail of the comet sweeps by them and they are left in the darkness.

This is the Guardian. I have emphasized the feeling of action most of all because it predominates the others. Action — then results. Not big projects planned, but small projects completed. He does not interest himself in what you are going to do, but in what you have done.

Even more important than this urgency for action, is the need for obedience. The very breath of life within the Faith, you feel, is obedience. Bahá’u’lláh said of ‘Abdu’l-Bahá that whoever obeys Him, obeys God. The Master said of Shoghi Effendi in His Will and Testament that whoever obeys him, obeys God. [^] “He that obeyeth him not, hath not obeyed God...”, Will and Testament of ‘Abdu’l-Bahá, 25

You know now that there can be no partial obedience to God. If there is, you have only a partial understanding of the Faith, and you get only partial results. You have investigated and made your choice; you have exercised your independence in coming to the Faith. Now is the time for obedience. In the well-known words of the Faith: “Instant, exact and complete obedience.” We must be like the great cypress trees standing outside the Shrine of Bahá’u’lláh. They bow and bend low before the breeze of God from whichever direction it may blow.

The Guardian said that the friends feel that it is difficult to leave their homes and pioneer, even to move to the goals inside their own countries. They do not see that he is not asking them to sacrifice. He is protecting them from themselves. He is protecting them not only from the calamity that is rushing toward them outwardly, but he is protecting them from the calamity that is rushing toward them inwardly.

“America,” he said, “is no longer even actively quarreling. They are passively stagnant.” This is why, he said, that he asked them to disperse — so that they may become alive again and not wither. They will now be punished, he told a pilgrim, both materially and spiritually if they do not disperse. Those who now fail to respond to the summons of the Crusade will suffer both materially and spiritually. Those who do not respond to the commander, he said, will feel this double suffering.

You are in the Guardian’s presence but a short time, and you wish to saddle your horse, buckle on your sword, and, casting aside the joy of rest of your pilgrimage, cry out, “Mount your steeds, O heroes of God!” Rûhîyyih Khánûm, herself said one night, “Shoghi Effendi, if you keep on speaking so movingly, I’ll have to leave and pioneer.”

You have the desire to be commanded in order that you may obey. Here you lose forever that feeling, so common in the West, of rebellion at commands. {{p8}} You see obedience in a new light: a light of protection, service, accomplishment and joy.

When Shoghi Effendi leaves the room after the evening meal, the room becomes quite silent for some time. All eyes are watching the door through which he has gone. Parts of our hearts have gone with him. It is a good thing because the part he has left with us is too much for us to carry. We must share it with each other or burst. Eyes slowly, unwillingly, turn from the door of his departure. We look at each other as though we remember for the first time who we are.

Deep sighs are heard on every side as we breathe out the last of that air of his presence. These sighs are more eloquent than words. They say, “Isn’t it wonderful! Oh, if only we could be worthy of him!”

Gently we stir about. We have come back from a different world. It is empty in this one without him. You wish it were tomorrow night already. You seat yourselves at the table, or you go up to the sitting room where you can repeat to each other all that he said.

These sweet sighs of tenderness and love stay with you long into the Haifa nights. You relive each moment with the Guardian over and over again — wide eyes in the dark night. You do not wish to close them or to waste these precious, intoxicating hours in sleep.

It is now the last night of your pilgrimage. Your cup is running over. There is no more room. This wonderful Water of Life is running down the sides. You are eager to rush off to your post before any is lost or wasted. Your eyes hungrily drink in this last glimpse of your beloved Guardian.

Finally the moment of heartache comes. The Guardian pushes his ringed serviette forward for the last time. His eyes look across the table and into yours. He understands. You feel that you are an arrow pulled back to the farthest stretching point in his bow. He now has only to let go and you will speed on your way to the task he has assigned.

Yet, anxious as you are to be about his work, you long to remain in his presence. Eager as you are to try your newfound wings, you regret leaving the nest.

He rose. We followed. He came to me. Our beloved Guardian took both of my hands in his. Warm love streamed from his thoughts into my very being. The Sign of God on earth looked into my eyes: love, kindness, forgiveness surrounded me. I, who had given nothing, had received everything. {{p9}} I, who had neglected God and failed repeatedly, had been welcomed as an only son at this table of God, the fragrant perfume of which shall never leave me.

I was being sent out into the vineyard of God as one worthy of his hire. The banquet was ended and he now was placing upon my shoulders whatever burden I wished to bear for Bahá'u'lláh's sake.

A pilgrim is reported to have told 'Abdu'l-Bahá that he would love to be near Him always. 'Abdu'l-Bahá is said to have replied, "The way to be near to me, is to be far from me. Service in the Kingdom is nearness to God."

"There are two visits," 'Abdu'l-Bahá had said to one of the very first pilgrims to the Holy places. "The first is for a blessing; then ye come and are sent forth to walk in God's vineyard; the second — ye come with banners flying, like soldiers, in gladness and triumph to receive your reward."

Our beloved Guardian told us, "The pilgrimage is given to you that you may take in and then give out, to receive and then impart, to absorb and then bestow. Without this there has been no pilgrimage. It will dissolve into nothing."

This Holy Land is the heart of the Faith. The heart purifies the bloodstream. The blood, filled with impurities, finally reaches the heart. There it is purified and restored, and is pumped back out into all parts of the body with enriched vitality so it may feed the tissues and give them life.

The pilgrim comes to the land of his Beloved, to the heart of the Cause, laden with the impurities of the world. Here, he is refreshed and restored, so that he may go back into the vineyard to bring the love-creating, life-restoring word of God into all parts of the earth.

In this last moment, you learn the supreme lesson: it does not matter what you have done, who you may be, what your powers, talents and background in the Faith may have been up until now. Nothing matters except your complete consecration to Bahá'u'lláh from this moment on. All else is secondary. Without this, all your gifts are valueless. Bahá'u'lláh will raise up others who, however humble, unlearned or untrained, have the virtue of dedication, and they will do what you, with all your gifts, have failed to do. The hour spoken of by the Báb has come again: “Beware, lest by turning back, He may change you for another people, who shall not be your like and who shall take from you the Kingdom of God.”

This is what it means to be in the presence of Shoghi Effendi.

Sad, sweet music filled my being, and I looked upon my Guardian. My pilgrimage is over. I must go from this heaven of heavens.

The Guardian came around the head of the table to take my hands in parting. I clung to them, trying to drain courage from them. He said he would pray for the success of the work in South Africa.

Then he embraced me! He kissed me upon the cheeks. {{p10}} I pressed him to my heart. He smiled lovingly at me.

“I hope when you make your next pilgrimage,” he said, “that you will bring some of you African children with you.”

Then he was gone!

Since you can’t hold back the sun, four o’clock the next afternoon rushed in upon me. Everyone gathered on the white marble steps of #10 Persian St. to say farewell.

Of Rúḥíyyih Khánúm, Leroy Ioas, Millie Collins, Mason Remey, Luṭḥu’lláh Ḥakím, Sylvia Ioas, Jessie and Ethel Revell, Muḥammad Tabrizí, Muḥammad Bahá’í Sola and all these dear friends, I have written elsewhere. Here let me say only this: whoever the pilgrim may be, he is surrounded here by an affection and kindness unparalleled. Each pilgrim is made to feel that he, and he alone, is the one pilgrim for whom they have all been waiting all these long years to welcome.

I entered the cab. The tender kiss of Millie Collins helped to heal the pain of parting. “We shall pray for you,” she said.

As we left Haifa, I watched the Shrine through the window of the cab. I twisted my head with each turn of the taxi keeping that gleaming dome in sight to the very last moment. I recalled the words of the Guardian, spoken to us the night he had seen the Shrine in the mist. “She is the Queen of Carmel,” he said, “seated upon her throne, robed in white and crowned with gold.”

The pilgrim suddenly was whisked from the world of God back into the world of man.

Pilgrimage to Haifa

William Sears

April 1-10, 1954

COPY

This is the part of the pilgrimage with which we are most familiar in “Pilgrim’s Notes”. This is the pilgrimage of what the Guardian said at the dinner table. We have utri860 record as faithfully as possible and in a much detail as possible the substance of the dinner table conversation.

What a unique and rewarding experience. There we begin to understand the meaning of Nabíl’s words about the moments the believers spent with Bahá’u’lláh, in Baghdád and we echoed them, “O for the joy of those days, and the gladness and wonder of those hours!”

The Guardian’s first words, the first night, were about the urgency of teaching ether. This was a subject about which he spoke in great detail. After a loving welcome, recorded elsewhere, the Guardian spoke to us as follows: The pioneers have come to Africa, he said, in order to increase the number of native Africans in the Cause. We want them to become members of Assemblies. If our presence makes trouble for the African, tell them we will migrate and move on.

We have come to help, not to hinder. We must efface ourselves. The Negro has been subservient in the past, now we must be. We have come so serve them. We must make them understand and believe this by our actions, not our words.

The British went to Africa for their own advantage, not that of the native African. The missionaries have not gone to Africa because they love the African. But, this is the one and only reason that the Bahá’ís have gone. They primarily have to think of the African. If they fail to do this, they will have failed in their mission, and it would have been better if they had not come to Africa at all.”

If we are true lovers of the Cause, we must love the African.

First, because of their purity of heart; second, because they are downtrodden; third, because they have suffered so much. We must serve them, nothing else and our statements must be confirmed by our actions.

The test of our teaching is the reaction of the Africans to us. If the reaction is good, our method is good. If they do not respond, our method is wrong.

The Guardian said that he does not want too many whites in Africa.

It is very risky to approach the whites in Africa, particularly in South Africa.

We must concentrate on the element which is in the majority in each country. We want the people to testify that the Faith has touched the hearts of the element that is the majority.

Find out what they did in Uganda and emulate it. You will find that it was small things that have touched the hearts. Not speeches, but love. South Africa will be more difficult, but the principles of approach is the same. South Africa is most difficult. The most difficult countries have been given to the United States. Find out what was done in Uganda and then follow this example.

The Guardian constantly re-emphasized the urgent need for teaching the native African people. This is the main objective of the pioneers at all times, he said. Whatever other administrative tasks we may have to accomplish, underlying them all is the vital, pressing importance of reaching the native African, not the European, unless we recognize this paramount obligation, so have completely misunderstood the purpose for our presence in South Africa.

Our work or consolidation should proceed as follows, he said: First, a local Assembly in Johannesburg, fifteen, fourteen, or thirteen stalwart believers can hold it, then the rest should scatter. Second, a local Assembly in Cape Town. Third, isolated believers, then groups, then Assemblies in the large centers - Durban, East London, Port Elizabeth, Pretoria, Bloemfontein. Always going hand in hand with this is the pressing responsibility of reaching the African people. They are the ones who will have to take over the administration of the affairs of the Faith in South Africa. They will be the ones who will eventually make up the Assemblies in these areas. Then the white believers should disperse and scatter and begin the process all over again in a new area. Uganda is the spiritual heart of the Continent. It has been the center of the activity. It is because of love and lack of prejudice or any kind that the work has progressed so rapidly there. The concentration was on the native African. This is the emphasis that must be followed in South Africa. Center all our energies on reaching the African people.

The Guardian spoke several times in praise of the work in Uganda.

It is important, he said, to understand that the real reason for the tremendous accomplishments of Uganda was that there was a Hand of the Cause there. The Hand, he told us, was the spiritual heart of the teaching work, just as Uganda was the spiritual heart of the continent. The Hand of the Cause in Africa, he said, was absolutely without prejudice and possessed a truly pure heart.

We must emulate Uganda. It will do more difficult, but the principle will be the same.

Establishing a Hasirat'ul-Quds is important. It was the rallying centre for all the work in Uganda. Soon it will be the center for the Central and East African work, a national regional center. In South Africa this will be more difficult as the white and black cannot meet together. Having a center is essential, but it must be done wisely.

If the number of African believers becomes so great that they can form their own Assembly, and they have deepened sufficiently to conduct their own affairs, this would be splendid. They could meet together and have a Halisat'ul-Quds; in their area. Then the white believers could move on to a new area and begin the teaching process in a new place.

We want, he said several times, a solid mass of African believers.

We have been thinking too much about the white race and not enough about mankind in general, he said. Now is our chance to contribute our share to the conversion of these races.

We must work in order to have the majority of believers belong to these races. Only love can do this. Complete elimination of our own wishes and supplanting these with service to the African. This is the keynote to be sounded.

Teaching has stagnated in America because of materialism. The American Negro has caught the disease from the whites. The American Negro does not want to go to Africa. They do not want to give up their possessions and their materialism. Africa is not like that. There, the African are more detached. The Americans love the Cause, but they not love the Negro.

Shoghi Effendi said, the ratio of Negroes to whites in the Cause in America was about one to five. The ratio of Negroes to whites in the country was about one to ten. The ratio in the Cause was good. The ratio was fine, he said, but the rate of increase was very slow.

The spread of the Cause among both Negro and whites in America had stagnated because of lack of love. We must love the Cause truly; he said we will do this if we love God truly. 'Abdu'l-Bahá always said that the believers must have this truly, we will love His children and we will love most of all the downtrodden among His children. The most essential thing: is to have the love of God in your heart.

This complete lack of prejudice will attract the African. We must prefer them to ourselves. Wherever possible, whenever possible, we must accept them into our homes. Not accept them on the platform or yet public functions, but privately in our homes on a social basis, and on a basis of absolute equality. In fact we must not demonstrate just equality. We must show them preference. For two reasons: First, they are a minority and the Faith wishes to increase minorities and protect them. Second, because of the attitude of the world in the past.

The balance must be restored. This is the most effective way to teach the Faith - demonstrate a complete absence of any prejudice. Learn to demonstrate it without being aware that you are demonstrating it.

Shoghi Effendi said that as soon as the local Assembly in Johannesburg formed, it must area keep as eye on the work in the rest of the southern part of the continent. It is a local Assembly, but it is a embryonic Regional National Assembly. It must always think in these larger terms. It is the most important center in South Africa.

It is a local Assembly, but it must immediately have a wider viewpoint.

It must think in regional National Assembly terms from the beginning and must have this larger viewpoint. The believers there, when the numbers are sufficient, must disperse not only to South Africa, but (if needed and it is possible) to Northern and Southern Rhodesia, Mozambique, Angola Nyasaland, South West Africa, Bechuanaland, Swaziland, Zululand and Basutoland.

When we approach the Negroes in Africa for the first time, they are open-minded. Nothing must be done to discourage them or disillusion them.

It will be very difficult to establish confidence if it is once lost. We must meet all situations and suspicions with pure motives and love, otherwise they will see no difference, and we will be classified with the missionaries. The Negro Bahá'ís in Africa will have "tests". The whites must help them. We must test them thoroughly. We must make them eager to serve the Faith and than our task is finished and we must leave. We should say to them "We have come for one purpose only; we have come from America to serve you" This is the message in a nutshell, the message to take back to South Africa. We must serve them and convince them that it is so, that it stems from love - from a desire to aid them to know God and to serve Him. We have come to enlist them under the banner of Bahá'u'llah.

Select a few carefully and then teach them thoroughly. Strengthen them in their underctanding.* Give them the message in such a way as to create in them a desire to teach. Then the task is accomplished. Then let the whites disperse.

Tell the Negroes, the believers who are deepened, that if their presence (the white believers presence) will make obstacles or difficulties, the white believers will move on.. They have come to assist - not to hinder. They have only one purpose in Africa, to bring the Negroes into the Faith.

We all must choose and select our African contacts with great care before we begin to teach them. 'We must observe the greatest care in selecting them. Then we -must investigate them thoroughly. In this stage, he said, investigation is even more important than teaching. We must be very careful not to involve the Faith in any publicity or any risk. We must be sure of our contacts before we decide to teach them.

Once we have made the decision, then we must concentrate on them with great intensity. We must know who their contacts are in their own affairs. We must know with whom they associate, who their friends are, if they mingle with the authorities, radical element, churches or communists. If so, we must avoid these contacts always. We must find those who are capable, who have pure hearts. We must be extremely cautious in our pre-selection of contacts, but we must concentrate our teaching on those we do select with great intensity.

Allow the native Africans to assert themselves. Create in them the desire to spread the Faith, and let them also disperse, and teach the Faith among their own people. We must constantly demonstrate our sincerity. We must serve, not dominate. Let them teach their own people in their own way, not the pioneer's way. Let them use their own methods to teach, not your methods. If your methods were so effective, he said, America would be full of Negro believers. Permit them to insert themselves. Serve, do not dominate. Do not enforce your methods upon them.

The pioneers have come to Africa for one purpose only, to bring the native Africans into the Faith. They have no other goal. This is their single mission. They must teach the African. I would like to see a solid mass of African believers, he said.

Shoghi Effendi particularly cautions all African pioneers (not only South Africa) not to take sides in any political disputes in Africa, not even indirectly. Do not side against the authorities, he said. Do not even appear to side against them. Do not permit the Africa to feel that you are siding with them against the authorities. They may even say, then, "The Bahá'ís are on our side." This will infuriate the Government and the authorities. This could cause great difficulties and hard.

We will never sacrifice a principal to gain a convert. We must explain this point very carefully to the African so he will know why we feel as we do and will understand it. We must clearly explain to him that this is purely a political matter and that we are above politics. We should never take-sides. The best course to pursue in these matters is silence. Strict silence. This is very important.

The Bahá'ís, he said, must be very careful in teaching not to compromise the principals of the Faith in any way. The principals of the world are weakening, and ours must be more uncompromising. As their principals continue to weaken, ours must continue to gain strength.

We teach the African because they are the native inhabitants of that continent. We do not teach the Africans in the Pacific, we teach the brown-skinned people there. We must reach the people who are in the majority in each area. This is why we teach the Africans in Africa. Do no waste time on the European. Teach the American in America, the Hindu in India, the British in England, but teach the African in Africa. We don't want a colony of American believers in South Africa. We want a majority of African believers. After all, he said with a smile, the American whites there are an undesirable element.

Do not waste time on the European. It is not worth the energy and the results will be negligible. Teach the Africans. This is your single mission, your purpose for being in Africa. The European will not respond and might involve the Faith in difficulties and publicity. This is to be avoided at all times. It is dangerous to teach the European.

Do not waste time on the political leaders, he said. (Leroy Toss told us that the Guardian had said to an earlier pilgrim, 'Abdu'l-Bahá said that the leaders were ashes, and that's what they are, ashes, nothing more.') The leaders, Shoghi Effendi told us, can do nothing about the world problems now. -They are helpless, useless; they cannot prevent the coming crisis. We, the Bahá'ís, must be completely above the world crises. We are not concerned with this. This is God's plan, and He will work it out in His own way. We must take care of our plan, which is the ten year crusade. We have a clear-cut, well-prepared plan. we must execute it. The outside world we leave to God. Whatever happens it will reinforce our plan.

It doesn't matter, he said, if they call it a Negro Faith. The pioneers have gone to Africa for one purpose, to bring the Native Africans into the Faith. If we do not do this, we might as well have stayed at home. Teach the Hindus in India. The whites in America and Europe, the brown-skinned people in the Pacific, the yellow in the Far East. Reach the majority. we are lovers of mankind, he said, not lovers of whites. The balance must be redressed.

Select a few. Teach them. Send them out prepared to carry the Faith to their own people, their own way. By their methods, not yours.

If yours were so good, the Faith would have grown faster in America.

Teach them thoroughly. Prepare them to carry the message to their own people.

Rúhíyyih Khánum said at this point that if Shoghi Effendi kept on talking so strongly, she would have to leave and pioneer.

Publicity, he said, is to be avoided at all times. There must be no publicity. There is no exception to this rule.

If the believers belong to clubs, associations, etc., it is all right, provided they do not bring the Faith into it in any way. It is dangerous to the Faith. Be discreet, be wise, be cautious. We must not mingle too much with white groups. As much as is necessary for our profession and work, but no more. Be extremely cautious in teaching.

Someone who at first seems to be interested and a friend might not be truly sympathetic, and might later become an enemy of the Faith and cause difficulties. Be alert. It is dangerous to disseminate literature indiscriminately and in large amounts. It might fall into the hands of the wrong people and make difficulties.

We must be sure that it will not be passed on without our knowledge.

(When the Guardian speaks, you see everything clearly and in its right place. Things the believers may have stumbled over in the dark, obstacles that something unavoidable are disclosed as tiny and unimportant. When the light of the Guardian words illumine the scene. Immediately, you see the only door to take and everything falls into its proper place in proportion to its importance)

Soghi Effendi was asked if the spiritual depth and devotion of the Bahá'ís in South Africa could be such as to make their efforts rival the spread of the Faith and the teaching work in Uganda. Because of the greater oppression, stricter separation and more consuming hatreds, would it not be possible for the teaching work in South Africa to bring about proportionately greater reaction for the good? Might not this greater thirst result in more seekers eager to quench that thirst? He replied, it could be so. The message could spread like wild-fire in South Africa, he said. It depends entirely on the believers, the pioneers, who are in South Africa. It depends upon their emphasis on teaching the African. It depends of their consecration, their self-sacrifice, their devotion, and above all on their absolute lack of all prejudice. The opportunity in South Africa, he said is 'GOLDEN' He repeated this three times. He said. "It is Golden, Golden, Golden."

Caught up in the fire of this great teaching wave, it was possible to see the Africans coming into the Faith in such droves that we could not handle them all. Shoghi Effendi was asked about the administrative problems involved when these wonderful African people began to pour into the Faith, eager but unprepared, are in such numbers as to swamp us.

He said, "when the times comes, get me know about it, and I will tell you exactly what to do." He enjoyed this thoroughly, with much laughter, as did everyone at the table.

Someone used the word "service" in connection with the Sunday meetings at the Temple Shoghi Effendi said we must never use the word "service" in connection with our meetings. The combination of "Sundays" and "service" is particularly undesirable. We must find some new word - "devotional gathering" or "Hour for devotions" or some similar, but original expression. We must never imitate. We must always see original terms. We must never follow the patterns of the churches or missionaries.

The Bahá'ís must be creative and original in everything they do.

It was mentioned that a Jewish cantor had been invited to chant in the Temple. Shoghi Effendi said that this was fine occasionally; but that we ourselves must encourage the Bahá'ís to chant the verses (sing the verses). We must consult experts. We must find a new way to recite these words. Just as we called in experts to help us build the Temple, we must also seek the advice of experts in this field. The USA should appoint a special committee to consult experts on this matter to help to develop a technique and then to train believers in this matter of reciting (chanting or singing) the verses.

The Persian Temple, Shoghi Effendi said, will be larger than the one in Germany but smaller than the one in America. The American Temple is the Mother Temple of the West but the one in Tīhrán is not the Mother Temple of East - that honor belongs to Ashgabat.

There will be a great amount of destruction in the world: in Europe, in the United States, the Pacific, even in Africa where the bases have been established. However this will all help the Cause, he said. It will also give the Negroes a chance to play a predominant sort in their future. After all he said the white race is only a minority. It will be quite unimportant in the future. Its influence will diminish to almost nothing.

The Negro has been subservient to the whites. This must be reversed now. We have come to serve the African people. We must make them understand this.

The new African believers will have many tests, and the white believers must help them. There will be difficulties and obstacles placed in the path of the work in South Africa. The friends must expect this. South Africa is a very difficult place. There will be trouble. The civil authorities will use the missionaries as tools.

They use them now for their own purposes and they will use them later as tools to oppose the Faith; and the missionaries will be very willing to be used as tools as they are anxious to stop the spread of the Faith as well.

The difficulties that the friends will face will be civil, racial and religious. The Guardian was asked if it would be possible for the Bahá'ís in South Africa to stop the unrush of the seemingly inevitable racial upheaval in South Africa. Would devotion, consecration and concerted action help to stem the tide? No, he said. It is not possible to alter the coming struggle in South Africa. It is like the catastrophe. It is too late now. We cannot even get converts in such numbers as to mitigate the upheaval. The native African believers will be swamped by their non-believing brothers. We cannot stop it: we cannot soften it. But if does not matter. Whatever comes will in a mysterious way help the Faith. We must persevere and go forward, unaffected by the prospect of these things of what might happen, or is happening. No one knows the time the type or the conditions of the catastrophe. It is all speculation. The believers must be absolutely confident in the ultimate triumph of the Faith. We must execute our plan and leave the rest to God. We have a ten-year crusade. About this, we can do everything. About the other, we can do nothing.

Teach the African. This is our gravest responsibility. It is our reason for being in Africa. It is a responsibility we can never set down or allow to rest until the mission has been accomplished.

Select our contacts wisely, teach them thoroughly. Choose carefully. Teach a selected few. Deepen them in the Faith. Prepare them to teach their own people. Reinforce their understanding. Concentrate on these few. Make the deep-rooted, firm and full of zeal to spread the Cause among their own people. One believer such as Enoch Olinga, the African pioneer from Uganda to West Africa, he said, can do more to teach the Faith than one hundred transplanted pioneers.

In response to a question asking what countries would make up the Regional National Assembly of South and West Africa, the Guardian replied that this would be determined at a later date. Later that same evening, the Guardian began talking about this subject again. He discussed the possible make-up of territory. The following places are those which he said he felt would be linked together: South Africa, South West Africa, Basutoland, Zululand Swaziland, Bechuanaland, Angola, Northern Rhodesia, Southern Rhodesia, Nyasaland, Mozambique, and all the islands within this orbit, and perhaps Madagascar.

It there are six believers in Cape Town and three, for example, in another city, it would be desirable for the three to go to Cape Town to form the Assembly. First, an Assembly in Johannesburg, then in Cape Town. Johannesburg, he repeated, although a local Assembly must think in territorial terms. They must disperse even to the surrounding territories of Rhodesia, Bechuanaland (and the others mentioned above.)

They must serve and scatter, serve and scatter. "when there are fourteen or fifteen in Johannesburg, the others must move on. Their purpose in being in Africa is but one purpose - to bring the native African into the Faith. They should try to make it possible to have an all-African Assembly, and all move. Some, of course, will stand by to assist, if necessary. Disperse, scatter, far and wide.

Rúhíyyih Khánúm asked about those who would have started businesses and might find it difficult to move on. Shoghi Effendi replied, they needn't go far. If it is impossible to leave for distant areas they can go to nearby areas. Move to cities near their hush business, commute to business, and teach the African in these new areas where they live. It is most important to disperse. If they do go far, he said, so much the better. It is heroic. I will not restrain them. I will applaud their service.

The pioneers must be selfless. They must serve the African people with a complete lack of prejudice." They must lose their identity. They must completely efface themselves. They must not form an American colony in South Africa. They must not form a Pennsylvania colony in South Africa. disperse, scatter, lose your identity. If the pioneers plan teach only the white-skinned, they would have been better off to have stayed at home. Disperse and scatter. They must not think of Johannesburg as their home. They must not think of South Africa as their home.

Disperse. Illumine souls. Bet alight new torches. Confirm, deepen, and then move to light new torches in new fields. Johannesburg must look to the surrounding territories. As soon as there are enough believers in one area, they must leave, move on, and ignite fresh fires.

Teach a few selected Africans; let them take the message to their own people. When the number of believers in each area has reached the right level, disperse and begin again according to the same plan. Your home is Africa; not Johannesburg.

The great task for Uganda, he said, must now be to consolidate.

They must persevere along the path they have already made. He asked one of the Pilgrims to express his (the Guardian's) deepest appreciation to Uganda for the work they have accomplished, especially to those pioneers who had left their homes to carry the message of Bahá'u'lláh as far as the West Coast of Africa. Now, he said, Uganda must consolidate.

In all areas, he said the first thing to do is to disperse.

This is the beginning step to all successful teaching. The believers must disperse and form new centre of activity. This is the first step.

This brings isolated believers into new, virgin areas and communities.

The next is for the isolated believer to convert new friends and new friends and to become a group, the group must become the Local Assembly. This is very important. Forming of the Regional National Assembly in Central and East Africa depends on the formation of local assemblies, not upon many groups and isolated believers. It depends upon local assemblies.

These assemblies are the foundation upon which the pillars of the National Assemblies are raised. Until the National Assemblies are raised, the Universal House of Justice cannot come into being.

Dispersion, he said, is the first step. It will lead to the Universal House of Justice. Dispersion leads to isolated believers. This leads to groups, which lead to the Universal House of Justice.

Tell the friends, the Guardian said, if they wish to hasten the forming of the Universal House of Justice, they must form local assemblies and consolidate the work they have already accomplished. The starting point for all this motion, he said, is dispersal. Disperse far and wide. The farther, the better. The sooner, the better. The sooner you disperse and scatter, he said, the sooner will you consolidate the isolated believers to groups, groups to assemblies, local assemblies to national assemblies, and the sooner will come the Universal House of Justice. It all depends on the believers.

New York and Chicago are very dangerous places to be, he said.

It is better for the friends to go from them. It is better for them and for the Cause. "But not to go to the suburbs. This is not the time to open suburbs. This is the time to open territories. We must be conquerors, like the Dunns in Australia. They conquered a whole continent. There was not a single believer in Australia when they went there. Now there is a National Assembly. They are buildings Ḥazíratui'l-Quds and they have bought the land for the Temple Site in Sydney.

Shoghi Effendi said that the American Bahá'ís contact the tribes, but they do not convert them. In Africa, he said, the believer contact the tribes, they also convert them. This is what must in America. If it is impossible for the Bahá'ís to settle with the Indians on the reservations, they should migrate to these areas and settle on the borders of these areas. They must scatter and move to the cities and villages near the Indians and then make contact with them from there. They must teach them and convert them.

The American believers, he said, have a great opportunity to demonstrate to the American Negro their self-sacrifice, to show that they will arise and leave their families, jobs, homes, everything, to go to Africa to help the Negro people of Africa to embrace the Faith and elevate their station. While the American Negro (non-Bahá'í) remains at home too attached to his material interests to arise and help his own race. It is necessary for the believers to arise and go in order to make this impression on the American Negro.

Shoghi Effendi said that the African may well have to arise and go to America to teach the American Negro for the American believers have not been successful in doing so.

The Guardian said that reverence is a quality in which the American; are lacking. Their over-accentuation of democracy and personal independence in the cause of this. The Persians, he said, carry it to the other extreme. The Americans have too little reverence while the Persians are overly demonstrative. It needs a balance. Reverence and self-respect go together, he said. The Americans think so much of their self-respect that they are lacking in reverence. The Persians, on the other hand, go to such extremes in trying to express their reverence that they forget their self-respect. It is necessary that we have both reverence and self-respect.

Shoghi Effendi said that there was a great need for the re-awakening of the assemblies. He said that the more tools of the administration that we had, the slower the work of teaching progresses. (He was speaking at this time of committees.) This is not the fault of the tools, he said, but of their manner of functioning. They are vital.

However, they must function properly as they were designed to function.

(We cannot use them for New World Order purposes with Old world Order methods; we must not block the channels with personalities and then blame the channels for not carrying the “water of life”.)

The Aqdas, the Guardian said, will be published long before the majority of the people or the world are Bahá'ís. The state of society will be able to appreciate the provisions and laws of the Aqdas much better then, than they can now. The provisions and laws may seem harsh now, but it is premature to that this is so at this time. We must wait for the new society. What seems harsh now, will seem just right then. What appears to be lenient now will be just what is needed then, neither more nor less we have both laws and principles in the Faith. The laws are given by-Bahá'u'lláh in the Aqdas and other tablets. The principles are given by 'Abdu'l-Bahá in His addresses to the Test. We have laws and principles.

The principles are of two kinds spiritual and administrative. Perhaps it would be more exact, he said, to say administrative and non-administrative principles. The non-administrative or spiritual principles are found in the addresses to the West. The administrative principles are found in our constitution, the by-laws of the National and Local Assemblies.

Bahá'u'llah established the local and Universal Houses of Justice.

'Abdu'l-Bahá established the Rational or Secondary House of Justice.

'Abdu'l-Bahá in His will and Testament said that the Secondary House of Justice will elect the Universal House of Justice. In just what manner it will be elected, will be determined later. Whether they will come together to do it, or divide into certain countries and do it by areas, will be determined at a future date. Bahá'u'lláh established the Institutions and the embodiment of the principles and laws will be found in the Universal House of Justice.

The first auxiliary buildings to the Shrine on Mount Carmel will be the building which houses the International Archives. Shoghi Effendi showed us the design of the International Archives Building. It is Creek Classic in style, somewhat similar to the style of the Parthenon. The second edifices will be the Universal House of Justice. The Auxiliary buildings will be in the form of an arc with a series of buildings. All together they will form the World Administrative center of the Faith.

The Shrine is the spiritual center, these auxiliary buildings will be the administrative center.

In the Tablet of Carmel, Bahá'u'lláh laid the foundation for these World institutions. The will and Testament of 'Abdu'l-Bahá is the charter of the Administrative Center of the Faith.

The believers, Shoghi Effendi said, should now pay more attention to the needs of the Fund at the World Center of the Faith. Now we are building a World Center. We built upon a local scale for years, but now it is upon an International Scale. The Auxiliary Boards appointed by the Hands will link the National Assemblies to the Hands of the Cause, he said. These satellites (members the Board) that circle around Hands will have three-fold function to discharge in connection with the hands. They will be to representatives, assistants and advisers. They will travel constantly.

All Africa, he said, is now looking toward Kampala and toward the Hand of the Cause there, Mr. Banání. British and American believers are all looking toward

Mr. Banání, an Oriental, A Persian and a Jew. But a Jew All the Bahás'is of Africa are under his shadow.

They are also under the shadow of the nine whom he selects. This station lie great, for the satellites are the representatives of the Hands of the Cause of God. The function of the auxiliary beards, he said, at the present time is to aid the various National Spiritual Assemblies, through the Hands, in carrying the task of the ten-year crusade.

The National Spiritual Assembly, as the plan progress, will take on its true function which is to regulate the administrative affairs of the Faith, to govern the Faith, to supervise its internal affairs. It will develop into an organ of government and will keep order.

Shoghi Effendi showed us the original copy of the world directory which he is working on. It lists all the areas, centers, groups, isolated believers. It showed all the tribes and languages. He said that they had thought they would have this directory ready at the end of ten years. Now it is being finished at the end of one. He said Zululand would be the 259th territory to be opened. (It was last on the list alphabetically) He said, that he thought he might ask the various National Assemblies to send him a new list of territories not mentioned in the plan. Then he would add enough new territories to make three hundred.

We saw two wonderful maps. One of the world with all the territories: (virgin and consolidation) that have been claimed for the Faith. Another map of Africa with the history of the work there. All the names of the pioneer who went to virgin territories are on the map. The languages is translated or to be translated, the assemblies, groups, the isolated believer, all these are on the map. The islands around Africa, and the Crusaders who conquered then are shown. There is a gold circle in the Mediterranean where Dorothy Baker's plane fell into the sea. And another gold circle at Tripoli where martyr, Ella Bailey, lies buried. Both map, he said will be published. They will give the friends a review, of what has been accomplished, so that they may be encouraged and stimulated to do more.

Johannesburg must form its local assembly and must incorporate. It is necessary for the assemblies to incorporate in order to be able to have endowments, local or national. Johannesburg cannot incorporate now, however as it would be dangerous, this would necessitate going to the authorities which might result in difficulties. When it is incorporated, Johannesburg may have to be incorporated as a commercial organization, rather than as a religious organization. Some other places have had to do this because of opposition. We should study how this could be done so that we will know how, when the time comes. But now, he said, is not the time for incorporation in Johannesburg.

When the Assembly is formed, he said, the first thing they must do is purchase the land for the Temple. This should be done quietly and unobtrusively. Once it is purchased it should be forgotten. This is not the time to think of building the temple. That is for the future. Teaching is the vital thing now. Concentrate only on the goals of the ten-year crusade. Reaching the African is most important. One native can do more than one hundred Americans in coming to Africa. Choose carefully, select, teach, and deepen. Concentrate on the Africans who are being taught. Teach than thoroughly., Fill than with the desire to teach, than let them scatter and disperse, and spread the Faith, among their own people.

Unless the Americans accomplish their single, vital mission, which is to reach the Africa, Shoghi Effendi said he would have some of the African: from Uganda come down and do it for them. Perhaps even from West Africa. He said it would be an invasion from the north. He said that if we were unable to conquer the Bouts African problems and convert the black race, he would send us to the tar cast and let us try to teach the yellow skin people. And if we hero unsuccessful there, he would send us to the Pacific Islands to teach the brown skinned people. However, he concluded, with a twinkle in his eye (we hoped) he felt certain we would be successful in South Africa. He was confident, he said, that we would find a way to meet and teach the Native African. After all, he said, this was our reason for being there, nothing else. It would be difficult, but the opportunity was golden. The success would depend on the sacrifice, consecration and absolute lack of prejudice demonstrated by the believers.

Rúhíyyih Khánum told Shoghi Effendi that she thought that one of the pilgrims was being too spiritual and that the pilgrim should not go up to the Shrine and dawn each morning but should remain in bed the next morning and rest. Shoghi Effendi replied that it is good to be both spiritually active and administratively active, both spiritual and material. Both essential, he said. We must have both. Actively he said, increases spirituality. But he added, it is possible to be active without being spiritual. We must pray, supplicate, the serve. We have our spiritual center, The Shrine, now we are erecting our administrative center, the auxiliary buildings. It is like the Temple, and its dependencies, where this spirit can be put into operation. Both are necessary. Both, he said are necessary, for the life of individual, as well as for the life of institution or the life of society.

These were the notes taken of the Guardian's words on teaching, and his general comments on the Faith as best as we could recall them. We did not take notes at the dinner except upon special occasions when we were asked to take them order to convey special messages to certain areas in Africa. Each evening, after dinner, we would remain at the table or go upstairs or go up to the sitting room. There we would discuss everything that the Guardian had said. We would compare our thoughts, our recollections of what he had said or how he had phrased it. From these moments, the above notes were written each evening before retiring. Each wonderful evening, the Guardian would leave us with much to meditate upon. We would arise, bid us each a loving goodnight, and leave us to sleepless hours of wonder, joy and excitement as we re-lived each moment, each sentence, each question and each answer. Sleep usually came one step ahead of dawn.

Part Three

William Sears

April 1-11, 1954

It was our last day in Bahjí. We have written elsewhere of our first to the Shrine of Bahá'u'lláh of the Garden of Ridván and of the Masra'ih Mansion. Today we were to visit all these precious places associated with Bahá'u'lláh and the Master in prison city of 'Akká.

In a large, modern station wagon, fortified by a delicious breakfast, we drove leisurely toward the city famous since the day of the Old Testament, the Crusaders, Richard the Lion-hearted, Saldin, Napoleon; a city that has to be as renowned in the future for the love of humanity city that had arisen there as it had been in the past for the hate which had encamped there.

We stopped the car along the seashore outside the gate of the old city near the spot where the sailing vessel which had carried Bahá'u'lláh from Haifa had anchored. Soon we began to resent the ease with which we travelled, the comfort, the tasty food, the fine clothes. We began to abhor everything of luxury about us. With each additional step, the longing increased to share in the sorrows and hardships that had been the lot of Bahá'u'lláh.

The eyes looked out across the blue-green bay toward Haifa. Where Bahá'u'lláh had arrived on board a steamer, had been transferred to a sailing ship which had carried Him and His family and followers to this very shore before us. To our right, the sea splashed high up against the walls of the old city in distant thunder. A few feet in front of us, the swells rose and broke with a gentle rush along the beach. An overturned row-boat was drying its healthy timbers in the wind alongside a broken skeleton of past glory – yesterday and today side by side.

The Beloved of our hearts had come to this very shore where our feet now stood. Somewhere near His own dear footsteps had passed over this same rough land, fulfilling prophecy each step along the way. Muḥammad had said, “All of them (the companions of the Báb) shall be slain except one who shall the plain of ‘Akká, the Banquet-hall of God.”

The eye of the spirit could picture again that weary band of exiles passing through that hostile crowd of city-dwellers who had gathered here on this shore to see the “God of the Persians.” They had been warned against this _____ from a far-off land, and was through the midst of this atmosphere of prepared hatred (which one took the place of the sweet, free April air we were now breathing) that Bahá’u’lláh and His loyal friends walked to and through the gate of the city, that was to close its cold prison walls _____ him for nine years.

With closed eyes and the sound of water beating its rhythm on the shore, we said the “Remover of Difficulties”, and we could feel about us the presence of those who brought the seed of life to this barren land over eighty years ago.

Ahead of us lay the city of ‘Akká with air so putrid, according to the proverb, that a bird when, flying over it would drop dead. This was the penal colony in which the Turkish and Persian authorities felt that Bahá’u’lláh and Ma Faith would pass away forever. Before the eyes of the Pilgrims in our party was the great iron gate of the walled city, the gate which had closed upon the Blessed Beauty and had shut him up, they hoped, forever until He would waste inside this “most desolate of cities” as Bahá’u’lláh. Himself, had called it, a city “most unsightly in appearance, most detestable in climate, foulest in water” this “metropolis of the owl.”

We drove through the newer part of ‘Akká down to the great sweep of sandy beach where a stormy wind lashed the great breakers and drove them as far up on the land as possible. We turned left and would our way over the down into the hill down into the old city again and parked our car just inside the great wall. As we got out, the wind blew everyone’s coat collar up around the neck. The day was still gray, misty and chill. The cold crashing of the surf punctuated the silent spots in our conversation as we stood, our backs to the seawall, gazing across the way to the House of Abbúd.

The sea, the wind, the swirling mist, none could cool down the ardour that stirred inside the Pilgrim as we looked upon this grey shell of a house that once sheltered the Supreme Prophet of God. This was once the sanctuary of the Supreme Pen. Its walls had resounded to the words of the Most Great Book, the Mighty Acids; Here were formed the laws which would stand inviolate and unaltered for a thousand years Here were fashioned the provisions which would lay the foundation for the greatest structure in the social history of mankind. Here those ancient prophetic words had come true, “The Government shall be upon His shoulder. Here the Author of the Bahá’í Faith, protected by these blessed walls from the stinging wind of the sea, had poured out the fairest fruit of all His Revelation, the Aqdas — among all the writings which had streamed forth in never-ending river from His holy pen.

What a plain, structure. Two stories in height with a small balcony around the second floor front, drab grey in color, bleak in appearance – beautiful to the believer!

We were staring silently up at the balcony which surrounds the bedroom of Bahá'u'lláh. Many long hours He placed this balcony, looking out over the sea and down upon the very earth where we were standing. This small balcony which can be crossed in less than ten places, furnished almost the only outside exercise for Bahá'u'lláh in seven long years of imprisonment within the walls of this house.

There was a long quiet pause as the Pilgrims looked up in thanksgiving to the Almighty for this humble house, this simple setting for the Most Precious Jewel of God.

No doubt every mind was filled with different memories, stories recalled from various books. Once these stories had been but words caught between two covers, but now during the Pilgrimage they were all coming alive with reality.

Finally one of the Pilgrims coughed. The spell was broken. Cameras appeared on all sides. We had come back from that other sweet real to this plane to laugh and talk and walk. This experience is repeated time after time throughout the Pilgrimage, as the poor pilgrim with his weak human body flies back and forth between these two worlds so unlike, one of God and one of man. The transfer is shattering, and by the end of one's stay it has completely exhausted these untrained spirits. To be alone, solitary and uninterrupted, becomes an overpowering need. The being too is saturated. Tiny incidents, small happenings, perhaps a glimpse a view, a smile, a comment later – you will recall these surprising even yourself. You had lost them in the Olympian presence of these momentous; sights and Memories. These are the ocean, the others happy little rivulets. But later you will find a beauty and a joy in them, too, that will cheer and comfort you. This account is being recorded more than a month after the pilgrimage, and forgotten corners are constantly being illuminated. Everyone will tell you that it takes some time for your pilgrimage to have its full realization. Believe them!

Before entering the House, we walked to the small public square in the rear. Our gracious host, Leroy Ioas, holding his hat and coat-collar against a wind that whirled cyclones of 'Akká dust across the courtyard, shoved us the exact spot Master had stood and distributed alms and food to the poor.

Whenever the Master would be mentioned, a blanket of warming love would fall about our shoulders. We hoped in our hearts that our feet were Walking where ate had Walked. Never could we follow in His match-less footsteps, but if only we could walk in fits shadow. We knew we must try. Then, as if by telepathy, Leroy said, "You are walking in the footsteps of the Master.

"No one can ever fill those heaven-sent shoes again."

No, but we must do our best. "Look at Me" 'Abdu'l-Bahá, told us. 'Be as I am."

Just then an entirely out of place 1953 vey Chevrolet brought us rudely back to this era as it made its way around a hat-brim curve lead ins off the square. With .gratitude we saw a tiny cart drawn by an adorable little-donkey lumber into view. We captured many of these scenes permanently on color-film.

Sala led is back between the houses and into the aide door of the House of Abbúd. We crossed an inner court and started up a flight of stairs turning to, the right twice and continuing to climb until we reached the living quarters of the Holy Family. We saw the small room that held thirteen believers the first night spent in this house. We saw the upper shelf which one of the friends had slept upon that first night, and, following over too far to one side, had toppled down upon the Master. . We removed our shoes and walked across another room of soft carpets, through a small hallway and then turned left into Bahá'u'lláh's bedroom. Against the wall on the sea-side of the room was a long cushioned bench. Upon the South end, toward Haifa, rested the taj of Bahá'u'llah marking the place where He would often sit. A few feet away, along the South wall, was a rocking chair which He used. Upon the floor, a precious carpet brought with them all the way from Adrianople.

As I write this now in Johannesburg, I am back there again. I can feel my pulse accelerate and my heart beat strong. The atmosphere of these holy places never leaves you. It comes rushing back whenever you turn to 'Akká and Haifa.

Hour after hour, month after month, year upon year, Bahá'u'lláh had moved back and forth in this room. At times He would turn left in the doorway and go ode onto the balcony while runs across the front of the house. After Sala chanted a prayer, we followed Bahá'u'lláh's path to the balcony and looked out upon the turbulat sea. The wind, it seemed to us, was still whipping up the indifferent Mediterranean and driving to us it toward the shore, where in mighty rollers it bowed and prostrated itself before the throne of Majesty.

We stood on the balcony and as mentioned in the Epistle to the Son of the Wolf, we counted forty waves while repeating each time "God is Most Great!". If the heart is pure, we are told, God will forgive ones sins, both past, and futures.

We knew that these blessings were beyond the heart that we had brought to this shore. It felt, as heavy as the big fragments of broken sea wail lying off to the left, lifeless and useless beside the great opening from which they had been torn. Like those huge lumps, the heart felt as though it too, were failing to be part of the great wall of protect ion that guards the shores of Bahá'u'lláh's Faith. Too many times had it been covered over and soaked in the sea of materialism and rolled away from its place in the Great Wall. Separated thus there could be but one end; soon it would crumble and be washed away into the sea forever.

When you first arrive in the Holy Land you think, "What a banquet I have been invited to enjoy soon you realize that this is mi special banquet for your presence. This nourishing soul-rebuilding food you are receiving is the daily bread of the Faith. This is the power that makes for accomplishment. You understand clearly that you have had only partial success because you have been a partial, or part-time channel for this spirit that works the miracle. Now you fully realize that nothing less than a complete reordering of your life, your methods and especially your motives can be acceptable to God and to yourself. The Pilgrimage is not an eye-opener. It is an eye-lid remover. Never again will you be able to close that curtain of comfort upon your shortcomings. There is no escape! They are exposed and, you cannot shut your eyes upon them. The structure of this personality you so much admired has been levelled to the ground. Frantically you scurry through the ruins, searching for some worthwhile and useful fragment to help you to rebuild at once upon than old. It is a pitiful, sad spectacle to behold the helpless little places that are left to you and that are worthy of going into the new structure. Thoughts such as these fill your moments between places of pilgrim-age: in the darkness of your bedroom at Bahjí, in the car as it whizzes to Masra'ih, in the moments you sit alone in the Pilgrim House gazing out of the window up at the Shrine of the Báb, or now as you stand here on this balcony with the wind burning the tears to your eyes, tears that your heart has-been longing to shed. What are the other Pilgrims thinking? You do not know, but your love for them increases a hundred-fold. You are certain that somehow, you are all undergoing the tumult of this reformation. They send for you. It is time to visit the room where Bahá'u'lláh revealed the Aqdas. The room of revelation is quite different from the others. It was also 'Abdu'l-Bahá's bedroom. It is panelled in wood, which is to be found in other places associated with the Master. This bedroom is in the back corner of the House. We could look down' into the back courtyard. The donkey and the cart were still there. We saw many of the books of 'Abdu'l-Bahá, His writing equipment, the simple iron bed, many things that were much loved by Him and are revered by all who look upon them. Above all else, the mind tried to take in the staggering truth that here in this room, a room that is simplicity itself, was revealed the Body of Laws, the Most Great Book, the Mightiest written testimony since the beginning of our recorded time. Its Author could cast His Shadow of guidance for five hundred thousand years'. It is too much to understand. The mind willingly surrenders and turns to name the surroundings, the little things it can comprehend.

'Abdu'l-Bahá sat here, He knelt here He looked out this window. But irresistibly your thought keeps coming back to what inescapable fact: It was here that Bahá'u'lláh revealed the Aqdas.

Emptying yourself of every single thing that the mind can cling to, you ask Almighty God into your heart a true appreciation of this experience you are undergoing. The body is incapable. There has been too short a time. The presence and significance of these holy places are like hammer-blows to those of us who have lived in a world so remote from the spirit. The spirit is a living breathing overpowering reality.

Those veritable spiritual thunderbolts: the Shrine of Bahá'u'lláh of the Báb, and, of Abdu'l Bahá, the room at Bahjí where Bahá'u'lláh passed away, the mansion of Masra'ih, the Garden of Ridván all had numbed the senses until the cup could not contain the flood. Not cup, but thimble, one should say, with no thought of false modesty or humility. These vanish at Haifa end Alas. Assumed virtues cannot live in this pure air and one acutely feels that no receptacle is tiny enough to describe the amount of this atmosphere<sup>4</sup> which he is capable of holding. You have removed your shoes, bared your head, and pressed your forehead to the floor. These feeble expressions are helpless even in an outward way to convey the inner wanker of your heart. The air seems to throb with the lingering presence of the Holy Spirit which pervades all the Manifestations of God. The book that is the unerring balance for a thousand years flowed out in ink upon immortal pages here. This Book, Bahá'u, Himself, has said, is "The breath of life to all created things." In gush manner hath the Kitáb-i-Aqdas been revealed that it attracted and embraced all the divinely appointed Dispensations. Blessed those who peruse it! Blessed those who apprehend it! Blessed those who meditate upon it! Blessed those who ponder its meaning "So vast", He says, is its range that it hath encompassed all men and their recognition of it. Ere long will its sovereign power, its pervasive influence and the greatness of its might be manifest on earth.

Each of us said a prayer before departing from this area of future civilization. Then we made our way downstairs. There was additional conversation, but none of it registers. The hearing was working, but the comprehension and recording Instruments were unable to function. This was a mercy from God. The body must be much like an electrical system. It can successfully carry its normal load of power, but when subjected suddenly to an incredibly strong current, it "blows out" the fuse at its point of protection. A similar phenomenon happens to the pilgrim, several times, in fact. Loathing breaks the connection and permits no more impulses to register. The system cannot bear them. Bahá'u'lláh has written of this writ, saying of the wine of revelation that it is so inebriating to the Prophet, Himself, that the pen is stilled and can move no more.

If the Creative Channel cannot *attain its impact, pity the poor created clay.

The stet came out gaily for a brief moment, for the first time, as we strolled through the picturesque struts of "Old 'Akká". It splashed against the drab earth-colored walls and transformed them into a happy tan. We traced our way along many of the favorite walks of the Master. We paused and took photographs in the doorway of the house of the former Mufti of 'Akká. He had been a bitter enemy of Bahá'u'lláh. Sala, the caretaker of Bahjí, told us the Story of the two attempts on the life of Bahá'u'lláh made by this Mufti while Bahá'u'lláh was in prison. Once with a hidden dagger, but Bahá'u'lláh before admitting Him to His presence, said, "Let him first cleanse his hands." A second time, the Mufti planned to strangle the Blessed Beauty and Bahá'u'lláh said before admitting him, "First, let him cleanse his heart." The Mufti became an ardent believer and collected all the "Traditions" to be found in his Faith about 'Akká.

We twined our way through the streets, under the archways, through the gateways, past the fragrant smell of baking bread. The fires of the ovens looked inviting on this bitingly chill Sunday morning. We entered the courtyard of the, caravanserai called Khan-i-Avamid. This was Where the followers of Bahá'u'lláh, who were unable to accompany Him when He was transferred from the prison barracks, were lodged. We stopped to rest at a little, out-door tea shop by the sea. The inhospitable weather drove us inside. There Leroy was our host for steaming cups of Turkish coffee. What a delightful city "Old 'Akká" Is to visit. Sala, who was born within its wall", greeted almost everyone. He told us many intriguing stories about the non-Bahá'í history as well. We entered a small door built in one of the lower walls of the prison, walked to the center of a cellar-like cavern. Below us excavation had been started. How strange to know that beneath the prison lies this famous church built by Richard the Lion-hearted. The peaked earth on which we stood was high up toward the top of the Gothic arches. The pillars were buried many, many feet in the solid earth below us. We visited the Mosque where 'Abdu'l-Bahá used to pray every Friday. We had seen its delicate minaret against the sky from far-off Bahjí the day before. Now, following in the way of the hater we removed our shoes and went up to the spot where 'Abdu'l-Bahá would kneel. We prayed that the day might hasten when these people would recognize the One for whose coming they offered their supplications in this Mosque.

The Mullá took us into the administrative office. He showed us the huge oil painting of a vial; Moslem scholar and writer who had collected so many prophecies about the city of 'Akká. They told us about his life and they were very proud of great things promised by God for their city of 'Akká for the future, little knowing that as they await their future, they are in reality living in the past while the others waited at the Mosque, Sala and this pilgrim returned to the House of Abbúd to bring back the station wagon. Sala showed me the house where the Guardian had been born, where the very first Pilgrims to 'Akká had come before this century began. Sala stopped. He pointed out the house to which Bahá'u'lláh had been taken in custody when some of His followers had disobeyed His commands, quarrelled with three enemies of the Faith and slew them. Bahá'u'lláh was dictating Tablets to His secretary when troops surrounded His house. Crowds gathered quickly. They allotted to Bahá'u'lláh as the Governor, sword in hand, led him away for questioning. His innocence was established and Bahá'u'lláh was freed, and the Governor apologized for his own bad behaviour.

"That is the house, there on the left, where it all happened", said Sala.

Of this event, Bahá'u'lláh wrote, "hot captivity cannot harm Me. That which can harm me is the conduct of those who love Me, who claim to be related to Me, and yet perpetrate that causeth My heart and My pen to groan."

We drove back to the Mosque and while Sala went in to collect the others, there was time to, cross the street and examine the Mosque from afar. The entrance is but a short distance from the beak of the prison fortress. This Is the Mosque where the imperial farman of Sultán 'Abdu'l 'Azíz had been read, proclaiming Balla' u'llah and His family and followers to be the object of the hatred of everyone. It decreed that none should associate with them and that they should not be allowed to associate with each other.

The dome of the Mosque to not quite visible from the opposite side of the street, but the tall, slender minaret to the right, the dome points like a finger to the sky. Just at this moment, the muezzin began to circumnambulate the outer wall high aloft on the minaret. His voice called the faithful to prayer. It would alternately swell and fade as it was favored or neglected by the breeze from the sea.

“Alláh’ulAkbat”

Bahá’u’lláh from his prison-cell must have heard this summons many, many times. As we watched the muezzin circle the minaret, we thought, “He was calling men to prayer, while he one who was calling them to God lay imprisoned within the sound of his voice.” Muḥammad, Himself, had foretold, these days. He had called ‘Akká a “city in Syria to which God hath shown His special may.” “Blessed is the man that hath visited the visitor of ‘Akká.” There arose inside the pilgrim a great, surging desire to mount the many steps of the minaret and to change the call from .Alláh’u’akbat” to “Alláh’u’Abhát The Promised One has come The Sun of God has risen again’. Alas, that it is shining upon this city of the blind. Open your eyes before it is too late. This is ‘Akká, the city that David in his psalms called the ‘strong city’. Hosea offered it to mankind as a ‘door of hope’.” By the time the tumult inside the bread had subsided, the muezzin had descended. The others rejoined us, and we began our approach to the prison itself. The steps up which Bahá’u’lláh had walked do enter the fortress that first time have been taken down. They have left their soar across the body of the prison wall. We all stopped and gazed up at the marks of that old stairway. This was as far as we could retrace the steps of banishment. In order to enter the prison, we had to drive around the city to the front by the sea wall. This was to be the last stop of the day before we returned to Bahjí for lunch with Rúhíyyih Khánum and Mason Remey.

We parked by the gate, passed the guards, and walked about three hundred yards up to the prison entrance. As you cross the small bridge over the moat, you can see the cannon-balls of Napoleon embedded in the walls. They are splashed with red paint to make them easily visible. Passing through a small arched entrance, we approached the courtyard. The prison is now a hospital for the insane and feeble-minded. You can see them exercising in the very Courtyard where the believers were herded together that first day. The pilgrims turned sharply to the right and were up a long flight of outside stairs, then up a short flight to the left. This brought us to the outer entrance to the cell-block. Out beyond the roofs lay the timeless blue bay of Haifa.

There was a sound of heavy keys rattling in a meal door, the door swung open, and you entered the prison barracks. Passing through an ante-rod of poor, unfortunate sick ones, you enter the cell-block. In the far left-hand corner is a plaque, which reads: Bahá’í Holy Place. This is the cell of Bahá’u’lláh. The plaque is written in both English and Hebrew.

We removed our shoes outside the great door, and then entered the prison-cell where over two years Bahá'u'lláh had been shut away from the world. This was the heart of the “most Great Prison.” Even the Black Pit in Tīhrán, the Siyyih-chal, a place foul beyond comparison, a dungeon wrapped in thick darkness so dreadful that no tongue could describe its loathsome smell, had not been called by such a name.

Upon coming to this penal colony in ‘Akká, Baba’ u’llah had said, “Know thou that upon our arrival at this spot. We chose to designate it as Most Great Prison. Though previously subjected in another land to chains and fetters. We yet refused to call it by that name. Say: Ponder thereon, O ye endued with understanding.

It was of this spot that Bahá'u'lláh had breathed the prayer, “we pray that, out of His bounty. — exalted be He — He may release, through this imprisonment, the necks of men from chains and fetters..!!

The cell was barren and desolated in Bahá'u'lláh's day. Now there is a Persian carpet in the corner where He used to sit. There are five straight-backed chairs upon which the Pilgrims sit. One window looks out upon old ‘Akká. The other two windows look out upon the sea. These are the windows shown in most of the photographs. From here Bahá'u'lláh would look out toward that spot beyond the moat where His followers would stand hoping for a glimpse of His hand waving from the window. We all stood and peered out at that same spot and to the white-capped sea beyond it. Later we walked out to that place of bliss and sorrow and looked back up at these two forlorn windows. The face of the prison is bruised and scarred from shell-fire. Slowly the conversation hushed. Memories came back of the eager Pilgrim from Mosul who had stood here so long ago. As he had done we too gazed in wrapt adoration at the window of the Beloved. We shared again his heartbreak when we reached the long hours he had stood here waiting to see the face of the Blessed Beauty, only to turn away disconsolate and go back to the talle in which he lived on Mount Carmel. We could see the place from which the Holy Family of Bahá'u'lláh, from afar, had watched the frustration of his hopes. They were unable to reach the pilgrim to tell him that his Beloved was at the window and had waved, and that it was only his own feeble eyesight that had kept him from seeing Bahá'u'lláh. The Face Is no longer at the window and there is no Hand to wave to the pilgrim of today, but the pulse still throbs with wonder and feels those powerful radiations of love that flew back and forth across this desolate barrier.

Inside the prison-cell itself, the heart is touched and saddened by the sight of that bleak, unfragrant room. True, it has been cleaned and restored, but here and there upon the floor are small fragments of paint and plaster which have fallen from the ceiling and walls. These are a grim reminder of the chilling dampness of this dismal place.

Here in this cell, where but a few places carries you from and to end, Bahá'u'lláh spent over two years of His precious life. Here it was that Bahá'u'lláh, Himself, said that His sufferings had reached their culmination.

Our eyes bestowed loving prayers upon each of these places of anguish. After all these years, and even with the reformatations, it is still unsanitary and foul in three barracks. The mind refuses to try and picture the misery and abomination that must have surrounded Bahá'u'lláh upon His arrival here. We know that they were herded together, deprived of food and drink, that malaria, dysentery and the sickening heat added to their sorrows. All were ill but two. It was here that the two brothers had died the same night locked in each other's arms. Bahá'u'lláh sold His carpet to provide for their winding sheets and burial, but the guards had kept the money and cast them in a pit unwashed and enshrouded.

"None", Bahá'u'lláh has written, "knoweth what befall Us except Gods the Almighty, the all knowing... from the foundation of the world until the present day cruelty such as this hath neither been seen nor heard of.

The heart of the pilgrim is unbearably heavy. Not only at the contemplation of the agonies borne by Bahá'u'lláh, but even more so be of the shameful emptiness of the cup of service he has brought here to the Faith to repay these hours, of grief.

This is where Bahá'u'lláh's young son, Mírzá Mihdí, the Purest Branch, was killed. He was pacing the roof at twilight reciting his prayers. He fell through an unguarded skylight onto a wooden grate below which pierced his ribs and took his life in less than a day. It was here that this sweet son pleaded with his Father, Bahá'u'lláh, that his life be not saved, but that it be offered as a ransom so that the pilgrims, who so longed for His healing presence, might be permitted to attain their heart's desire. Now, we stood here in this prison at 'Akká, the latest of an endless flow of pilgrims admitted to this blessing by his sacrifice, with what pangs of tender sorrow we had stood among the archives at Haifa and looked down upon his robe stained with that final flow from the red river of his sonorous heart. We cried quietly inside at the sight of the small stone pebbles found in his picket. He was so close to us then. A boy, yet a man, a ransom of God. At his tomb in the Monument gardens, we repeated the words, of Balla'u'llah written about him.

"Thou art the trust of God and His treasure in this Land. Ere long will God reveal through thee that which He hath desired."

"I have, O My Lord," Bahá'u'lláh said in a prayer revealed in memory of Mírzá Mihdí, "offered up that which Thou hast given me, that Thy servants may be quickened, and all that dwell on earth be united." Inside that wondrous prison-cell, one felt not only the privations and hardships of Bahá'u'lláh, but one felt also the overpowering sense of greatness that charged the air, the majesty, the potency, the authority that had poured forth from here unto all the world. Within a few feet of where the pilgrims eat, perhaps on the very spot where we rented, Bahá'u'lláh had revealed some of His most weighty tablets. This was the scene of which the Guardian has written, "His writings), during the years.

of His confinement in the Most Great Prison, surpassed the outpourings of His pen in either Adrianople or Baghdád... this unprecedented extension in the range of His writings, during His exile in that Prison, must rank as one of the most vitalizing and fruitful stages in the evolution of His Faith."

From here Bahá'u'lláh wrote many of His tablets to the kings of the earth, proclaiming that the only remedy for the ills of the world was the union of all its peoples in one common faith and that only a Divine, inspired physician could bring this to Pass.

Many were the wholesome truths that flowed from that Sum' Ale Pen within this prison cell. Each of these tablets and writings took on a near .force since we had come to the scene of their origin.

We bowed to the cold stone to offer thanks to. Almighty God for bestowing upon us the eyes that see His glory and the ears that hear His music for granting us the inner sight that makes us cherish this simple, barren cell as a Throne of Majesty, ma. I beautiful and enduring than the most priceless palace outside.

Alone, imprisoned, persecuted, outwardly powerless, Bahá'u'lláh had hurled His challenge into the World. This message of Justice now had conquered the meadows and hearts of men in over two hundred countries. His Power, His Majesty, His Dominion increase with each sunrise while the names and memorise of those Who Him here and who opposed Him recede farther into oblivion each day. Truly "from out of prison He has come to reign."

This illustrious Being," 'Abdu'l-Bahá stated, uplifted his Ca se in the Most Great Prison." "His light at first had been a star; no t became a mighty sun." "Until our time," He added, "no such thing has ever occurred." "The Almighty...hath transformed this Prison-house into the Most Exalted Paradise, the Heaven of Heavens."

The pilgrim feels this transcendental greatness each step along the Oath of pilgrimage. When the time comes to leave this prison-cell, the heart rebels. It is reluctant to depart from this scene of the culmination of Bahá'u'lláh's sufferings. There are so many prayers still left unsaid, such a deep yearning to share in these tribulations still left unfulfilled. The door, that did not open for Bahá'u'lláh for two years, swings wide for you, then grinds closed upon its hinges. We put our shoes, everyone stint, lost in the weight of their thoughts which hold words down, unformed. This was the last stop today in 'Akká. we were grateful. We wanted no conversation; no invasion of that please the mind had set aside for reflecting upon this unequalled experience.

There was no receptiveness to truly appreciate the stories told as we descended the stairs; the room below where the rest of the pilgrims had been gartered the Place where the Master had made broth for all — made broth with little more than air for ingredients. His words spoken in London sent another sliver of pain into the body. Ha had made so mush broth in those days, He said, that He could make a very good broth with very little. How the Master loved

His wonderful Father. He told of this loathsome prison: how Bah'u'llah would call the pilgrims together, would make them laugh at their troubles, until they forgot their stone beds, the leak of food and water. He banished the pain of their illness and the ravages of their fever. He would tell them stories and lift their hearts. He would start them to laughing so loudly that they must be cautioned for tier the sentinels would believe they were mad, that they could laugh and enjoy themselves in these conditions of utter dreadfulness. What tenderness must have been in the Master's eyes as He placed His graceful hand upon the luxurious furniture of the western world and said, "We had no chairs such as this in the prison of 'Akká; no soft beds to lie upon; no delicious foods to nourish us. But I would not exchange all of these days for one moment of the sweetness of those hours in the presence of the Blessed Beauty."

Dear God: The pilgrim's heart must break beneath this weight He searches every corner of his life for the slightest ray of explanation why he in all this world of created beings should be one of those so enriched as to recognize and accept the Manifestation of God for this great day of the Lord, to be blessed thus beyond any dream of wealth. The pilgrim knows in this hour, as he has never known before, that where Bahá'u'lláh is, there is life. Where His Faith is there is hope. Without Him life is an empty, sightless thing; with Him it is ever green and beautiful whether in a prison or a mansion.

Seeing these poor, misfortunate inmates of the asylum for the last time, one thinks, How like the entire world is this prison barracks. These pitiful wretches, unbalanced, living in another dead world (like all humanity) are within: but a few paces of the Holy Place of Bahá'u'lláh, Healer of all ills.

There had been too much to receive in one day for so weak an instrument. The pilgrim felt a desperate need to depart at once from the Prison. There was actual pain. It was like looking directly into the high noon sun with the naked eye. It blinded, it hurt, it could not be accepted, even though the one who gazed knew that this was the source of all life. One could hear nothing that was said for some time. The senses were numb from this spiritual anaesthesia. One was physically sick inside, a fragile glass into which had been poured, and was still being poured, the Most Great Ocean. We knew that this Faith we had embraced could never be understood or contained by this feeble frame called man. We crossed the moat and walked out into the open air. Leroy loas put a comforting arm around my shoulder. He said Now you know why we came here last."

The clouds were gone . The sun was out ruling the blue sky all by itself. How happy a thing. The sea, a deeper-blue, was still charging up to the old seawall and plunging against its rocks.

As we entered the station wagon to return to Bahjí, there was a queer, mingled feeling in possession of me. It was half of joy and half of sadness, gladness and heavy-heartedness, happiness and sorrow. Perhaps it was the accumulation of the day's emotions, unsettled and unabsorbed within me. Each experience taking charge of my being at alternate, intervals, just as the sea sent alternate breakers against the wall.

I did not look back. It was all locked forever in my heart. Oh, these sweet-scented shores. Will I ever return?

The Story of my First Pilgrimage

Table of Contents

The memories of my pilgrimage at the end of January 1955 and the effect of my meeting with the beloved Guardian have been treasured and, for the most part, kept safely locked away in the recesses of my mind, to be shared only with the closest friends who were prepared to understand their significance and uniqueness to me.

One of those friends and his lovely wife, whom I met in New Zealand during the time I was there from 1973 to 1976, wrote to me some two years ago from Lillouet where they now live, asking me in the strongest terms to write the story of that experience as his children had little opportunity to meet anyone who could describe Shoghi Effendi and what it was like to be in his presence. Then, very recently, a group of young fellow staff members at the Bahá'í World Centre, having learned that I had met the Guardian, asked me to share with them the fragrance of those nine days. Their heart-warming enthusiasm for what they heard, and the memory of my promise to Ken and Joanne Oakes, brought me to a realization that I should put the memories on paper, before I got too old to do so with any degree of accuracy.

I have hesitated to do this because in the recounting, I cannot avoid showing my warts. Perhaps that is healthy. For background - I first heard of the Faith in the course of an all-night train journey from Melbourne to Adelaide on 214 April 1945 and became convinced of its truth during the ensuing three months, but did not declare my allegiance until May 1947 after my return to New Zealand. Shortly after this I moved to Tauranga where I was an isolated believer and the nature of my work left me no time for any Bahá'í activities. twenty—seven months later I returned to Auckland where there was a very small community, so that I was elected to the Local Spiritual Assembly the following Ridván. This is mentioned only to include a vivid lesson I learned at the first Asseblý meeting

I attended. I developed a cold and telephoned the chairman to say I would not be there and gave the reason. The reply was calm and unhesitating: "This is the Bahá'í Faith; don't you realize that Bahá'u'lláh will see that you come to no harm?" From that day, I had to be bedridden to miss an LSA meeting. But my administrative experience at that time was brief as in 1952 I went to London where I spent the next three-and-a-half years.

In those days the Bahá'í Centre was in a below-ground set of rooms in Earls Court and on Thursday nights there was a public meeting. What a training ground! One week the speaker would be Mr. Ḥasan Balyuzi, another it would be Mr. John Ferraby, another it would be Mr. Ian Semple! At a special meeting I witnessed the spellbinding effect 'Mrs. Meherangiz Munsiff had on those who heard her tell of her pilgrimage, on another occasion Dr. John Mitchell was unable to describe his reactions to meeting the Guardian and visiting the Shrines and Holy Places. He ended by saying: "You must go and see for yourself!" So the desire was born and when I was considering returning to New Zealand I came up with the absolutely naive idea of writing to Shoghi Effendi saying that I would be going 'through the Suez Canal en route: could I leave the ship at Cairo and come on pilgrimage') I received a reply (to my disgrace I did not keep it) that this would not be possible, but that perhaps I would come at some future date. As, in answer to a question I had raised, the letter stated that believers were badly needed in England, I remained there, but did not think to communicate this decision to the Holy Land.

Late in December 1954, I received a letter from Haifa inviting me to go on pilgrimage in mid-January 1955. . The letter had gone to the National Spiritual Assembly of Australasia - it had been sent on to New Zealand and by the time it could be re-directed there were only three weeks for preparation. My first was "impossible". How could I raise the funds, how could I get vs as I had just been ill and had been granted three months' sick leave. Fortunately I discussed the situation with Mrs. Backwell, the backbone of the London community. She said unequivocally: "Do everything you can to go, if you do not, you will regret it all your life." Such was my confidence in her, who herself at that time had not been on pilgrimage, that I did just that. Through the immediate response of my spiritual parents in Australia, the money was provided (by the grace of God a small legacy I had been awaiting arrived the day their funds were received, so that the debt could be promptly settled), my employers gave me leave, an air booking was made, and then...

The Hand of the Cause Leroy Ioas was in London for the dedication and opening of the new 1:Ī;iratu'l-Quds at Rutland Gate and there was great excitement and activity. At the first session the chairman announced that all those who were going on pilgrimage in the near future should speak with him. We were told that all pilgrimages were cancelled!! I duly cancelled all my arrangements, wrote a terse note to the Guardian confirming what I had done, only to find out two weeks later that I was expected in Haifa. The cancelation cable had referred to one particular pilgrimage. not all. In the bustle at the Ḥazíratu'l-Quds no one thought to advise me. So finally I arrived at the airport in Tel Aviv where I stayed the rest of the night and in the morning set out for Haifa.

I was waiting for a sherut, but when a bus came along, packed with people, goats (on top) and bicycles, I got on and had a most unusual and leisurely trip to Haifa, arriving just after 11 o'clock. It was like coming home - the Revell sisters took me in and immediately said "There is just time for you to go to the Shrine of the Báb, the beloved Guardian will be glad you have had your first visit there before you meet him this evening". So Ethel literally ran me up the slopes of Mt. Carmel and I had the great bounty of being alone with her for that first magical experience. I remember I tried to read a prayer for forgiveness through the tightest throat I had ever experienced. We strolled back down to the Pilgrim House, Ethel filling me in with badly needed advice, and I told her my Bahá'í life story.

The Cause Mason Remey and the two other Western pilgrims, one an older woman from the United States, the other from Canada who had just returned from a brief visit, at Shoghi Effendi's direction, to Nazareth which, in those days was very much like the pictures Dorothy had seen in the back of her childhood Bible, camels in the street, children everywhere, and the flies!! Our lunch was hilarious as she described in shocked accents the things she had seen - nothing like that happened in Canada!! This luncheon table set the pattern for many more intimate gatherings - there was warmth, laughter and a wonderful sense of togetherness as the three of us got to know our very special hostess and the staff.

But the moment we had all been waiting for came at the hour for dinner. We had assembled in the breezeway ready when Rúhíyyih ílgénúm came to tell us that Shoghi Effendi had arrived from the Master's House across the road and led us down the stairs to the dining room. At the entrance stood the beloved Guardian to whom we were in turn presented. His beautiful eyes danced as he heard my name and I am sure he was aware of my apprehension as I went last of the group down the stairs - I had recollected that the note I had written about my cancelled pilgrimage had been formal, even brusque. What would he say to me? He greeted me with a smile that would melt any heart and did not then, or at any later time, refer to it. He was only glad that I had arrived in time to 'visit the Shrine of the Báb. During the afternoons it was reserved to the male Persian pilgrims who had the great privilege of visiting it with the Guardian.

This was the start of nine blissful days. Each evening we would listen as the Guardian told of the progress of the Faith - stirring messages were coming in of victories in Africa, and these and other news he shared with us. At that time he was busy with plans for the possible building of a Mashriqu'l-Adhka'r in Tíhrán and we all examined the various parts of entries that had been sent in by architects world-wide. Would that I could remember what was said round that table - all I can recall is the exhilaration of it. One night Shoghi Effendi spoke about deep and stirring matters and we were all alert to its importance and after the Guardian left to return to his home we went upstairs to the breezeway, Amatu'l-Bahá, Mr. Ioas, Jessie and Ethel, Amy, Dorothy and I, and discussed what had been said. Each of us had heard something different. Rđhiyyih ganum undertook to ask the beloved Guardian and next day we found that not one of us had grasped the salient point!! So much for instantaneous pilgrim notes!

Also each evening we would be told where we would go the next day, and we were driven to 'Akkzi, to visit the House of Abud and have lunch, to go to the Prison. Another day we went to the Ridvén Garden and were welcomed by the gardener, the grandfather of today's Head Gardener, Firuz Behbahani. It was violet time, and' he gave us each a fragrant posy. We also had the inestimable bounty of spending the night in the Mansion at Bahjí, after we had sat in the room where 'Abdu'l-Bahá used to entertain pilgrims, it was open to the sky and the birds flew in and out, the whirring of their wings making a fitting accompaniment to the stories Mr. Remey told about incidents related to the Master's visit to the United States. In the cool of the afternoon we circumambulated the segment of the Haram-i-Aqdas that was then available, and entered the Most Great Shrine.

For me this was peace upon peace, joy upon joy.

One evening Amatu'l-Bahá and Mr. Remey had to fulfil a dinner engagement and we three pilgrims had dinner with the Guardian. He had told us with great happiness that we were going to have pomegranate stew - a first for the three of us. when we went into the dining room, he dismissed the maid and served us himself. The stew, to our surprise, was delicious despite its purple hue and when we were offered another helping and eagerly accepted, once more Shoghi Effendi served us. There was a very special atmosphere of happiness that I carried away from the table and I wondered at the cause. Twenty-five years later I read some articles written by Mr. Faizi and one of them told the story of two Persians who planned to walk to the Holy Land in the hope of seeing Bahá'u'llah. They were poor farmers who had nothing to bring as a gift - except a large watermelon from which they scooped the seeds and planted in the flesh 144 pomegranate seeds. They carried this on their shoulders (in turns) and each evening would attend to the seeds before they saw to their own comfort. After a while the seeds sprouted, some grew, others withered and died. But when they reached 'Akita they had 24 healthy plants. I have recently heard that in the time of Bahá'u'lláh the pomegranate population in 'Make had become diseased and was destroyed. The pilgrims knew that the Blessed Beauty loved pomegranates and it was through the efforts of these pilgrims and others like them that the groves were re-established and the farmers from round about sought seeds to plant in their farms. In my heart, but this is definitely a pilgrim note, I am sure that the joy of the Guardian was in remembrance and recognition of the love and sacrifice of the pilgrims.

My recollections of this pilgrimage are of warmth and "home" and pure love. We had many examples of Shoghi Effendi's insight and understanding. If there was ever a hint that anyone's feelings could have been hurt, there was an immediate and gentle balm. One evening one of the pilgrims repeated to the Guardian what she had told us all earlier. She was a grandmother, but she was so enthralled by her pilgrimage -that she told him that when she got home she was going to see to it that she and her husband had a Bahá'í wedding. This idea had amused us all so when she made this announcement at table, we all smiled a superior little smile. Shoghi Effendi looked solemnly round the table at all of us, reprovingly, and said "Such is her love for the Faith that she would do this thing."

Each afternoon we were in Haifa we would go over to the Master's House to be with Amatu'l-Bahá and the Persian lady pilgrims. I recall sitting in the mandar room often in tears at the stories that were translated of the sufferings they had endured. They were busy in and out of the kitchen making Persian delicacies for the household. I also had my turn at making enough dessert for thirty people out of a packet with no instructions on it. More by luck than anything else it set! I also gaily offered to make a cake for the visit of a United Nations VIP the day after I left. I had to remember the recipe which called for rose essence (easy) and cochineal (not easy).

They sent me to a nearby store where I had a most hilarious time trying to make myself understood. But one man realized what I wanted and I ran back in great glee and the cake was duly made and came out just the right degree of pinkness and light as a feather. There must have been a cordon bleu among the Concourse on duty that day!

After lunch on our final day, Amatu'l-Bahé asked me what I was going to do when I got back to England. I didn't know, and said so, adding that I had wondered whether I should go to Africa - everyone was going to Africa, but I had always imagined that one day I would go to India (no doubt because of my Presbyterian missionary background). She said, "Well, the decision is yours. All I can tell you is that if you don't want to go to Africa, don't let Shoghi Effendi hear you mention it."

The afternoon was very busy (remember the pink cake?) and I gave no further thought to the matter. Dinner that night was a festive affair. Mr. and Mrs. Ioas had returned from their trip to Europe and the joy with which the beloved Guardian greeted them, especially Mr. Ioas, and the love that obviously existed between them, was something that I will never forget. Conversation was eager and sparkling as Mr. Ioas gave an enthusiastic report of the dedication of the Ḥazíratu'l-Quds in London, his visit to Ireland and so on. In the general excitement I took heart - no one would notice me at the end of the table, I would not have to make a commitment. Then why did I allow Shoghi Effendi to catch my eye and call to me "And what are YOU going to do?" I heard a squeaky voice say "I wondered if I should go to Africa". My reward was to see his lovely eyes light up and his face become wreathed in smiles. He said, "Wonderful. You must not go to Kenya, Uganda or Tanganyika. There are enough pioneers there already. To go to an island would be good - but anywhere where there is great need. When you get home, write to Mr. Banání and ask his advice." So I did and very soon I had a reply written by Mr. 'Alí Naghjavéni, as Mr. Banání spoke no English. I was told to consult the Africa Committee in London, which I did and they advised me to apply to the Crown Agents for a Civil Service post in one of the British colonies. Very soon I was interviewed and appointed to a secretarial post in Nyasaland (now Malawi). The Committee was delighted – my efforts at Seychelles had not been successful and I was not brave enough for St. Helena. Then I received word that the job in Nyasaland was cancelled as the Government did not have sufficient funds. Would I ‘consider Kenya? It was Mau Mau time and I feared they would think my refusal meant I was lily»livered. Finally I was offered a secretarial post in Northern Rhodesia (now Zambia) and on 6 October 1955 landed shakily at Lusaka’s Nissan hut airport to begin 19 years of pioneer service.

The Guardian rose to greet us, and his warmth seemed to reach out. He shook Roberta's hand and told her she was welcome. And as he welcomed me, he embraced me in the Persian fashion and kissed me on both cheeks. My concern dropped away and I felt at home. He placed Roberta at the head of the table next to him, and all seven nights that we had dinner with Shoghi Effendi, he had us keep these same places.

The Guardian is difficult to describe. He wears a simple, black Persian hat (a kulah). His long jacket coat this first evening was brown. Otherwise his clothes were western. His face is handsome and expressive. His eyes seem to be those of the Master; they look into you. His voice is strong and clear, and he speaks at times with rapid fluency. His short stature I noticed only at first. After that I was aware only of the man himself, a man with unlimited reservoirs of strength and power ready for instant use.

He asked us if our trip had been pleasant. His whole manner, simple, direct and loving, puts one immediately at ease. He himself served the food on our plates this first evening.

The Guardian showered us with kindness. He was loving and appreciative. He emphasized that we are in the Valley of Search and must be patient.

It is difficult to adjust to the flow of his idea; the scope and range is staggering. I found at times that I was not clearly aware of the sentence he was then speaking because I was still reaching out with my mind to grasp the last thought.

The Guardian talked of how the Faith should first be established in a country. It should always be with the majority of the people, not first with a minority. The minority of a majority is more important than the majority of a minority in teaching the Cause in a country. This has been why the Faith developed solidly in America. Americans became Bahá'ís and became dedicated to the Faith. In Egypt for seventy years the Bahá'ís were almost exclusively Persians. When the real effort was made to attract Egyptians and confirm them, the Faith in Egypt began to grow. This has been true also in India. But in India and Pakistan now the condition is changing.

The Guardian talked at great length about the Major Plan and the Minor Plan. The Major Plan is God's plan; it works mysteriously and we cannot understand it but we know that the result will be the unification of the world. The Minor Plan is Bahá'u'lláh's Plan; it is at present the Ten Year Crusade. One plan is disorderly, the other is orderly.

America is becoming more and more corrupt. The American people are pure-hearted but they need suffering to develop capacity. The American people, through suffering, will become purged and thus really purified. Afterwards they can lead the world spiritually. He used the phrase, "Welded in the fire of adversity." The racial question is becoming worse. Even the Bahá'ís are tainted with prejudice.

He emphasized the function of the Hands — to protect the Faith and to propagate the Faith. He said that the propagation of the Faith was the most important thing. He explained the functions of the Guardian — to interpret what has been explicitly stated in the Writings. The International House of Justice will legislate on what is not explicitly stated. He talked of the levels of administration from local to national to international.

He spoke of the three charters. The first is the Tablet of Carmel of Bahá'u'lláh, which is the Charter of the World Center. The reference to sailing the Ark of God's Law on Carmel is an allusion to placing the World Administrative Center there. The second is the Will and Testament of 'Abdu'l-Bahá which shows how to construct the Administrative Order. And the third is the Tablets of the Divine Plan for the propagation of the Faith throughout the world.

Roberta asked about "this remote prison" referred to in the Tablet of Ahmad. Shoghi Effendi said that this referred to Adrianople; this was a remote place in relation to the birthplace of the Faith in Persia. Bahá'u'lláh refers to three prisons in His Writings — the Síyáh-Chál in Tíhrán, Adrianople, and 'Akká. Bahá'u'lláh was in Constanople only a short period and did not have restrictions on Himself while there. 'Akká he called the Most Great Prison. The Síyáh-Chál was the lesser prison.

I asked about the recurrent phrase in “Prayers and Meditations” — “the good of this world and the next.” He said it meant spiritual blessings, material and spiritual bounties. He emphasized the word bounties.

Shoghi Effendi talked much of the Ten Year Plan. It is the first world plan. It will be followed by other world plans in succession through the Formative Age and into the Golden Age of the Cause.

Africa is the only continent with all its territories open, plus all the surrounding islands. Then he quickly enumerated all the islands off the other continents which were still to be opened. His vision of the Cause includes the minutest details and also transcends the limits of generations and time.

When I said something about there not being many islands or territories not included in the present plan, he corrected me gently, saying that there were many. The next plan will include these islands and will concentrate on firmly establishing the Administrative Order. I asked if this would be similar to the objectives on America during the first Seven Year Plan, and he said yes.

He said that up to 1953 the teachings had been translated into 90 languages. Now the total is over 180, and 30 of these are supplementary languages. Clearly any supplemental task achieved brings him great joy.

He explained carefully that the Ten Year Plan was to have two Bahá'ís as a nucleus in each of the new 133 territories, islands, and countries. In many cases this has already been surpassed and there are even assemblies.

He said that there are over 2,000 Negro believers in Africa. Four years ago there were none. I commented that this would soon surpass the number of American believers. He hesitated a moment and then said, yes, very soon. He went on to point out how fitting this was because the dark races outnumber the white in the world. We go by majorities.

He talks much of moderation. This is essential in everything. In material and spiritual things.

Shoghi Effendi talked about the persecutions in Persia. Thanks to our enemies, they gave us publicity which has helped make the Faith known throughout the world. They were publicity agents. Now we have hired a publicity agent in America. Our first publicity agents were a God-sent; the second we are paying for. It comes from American generosity.

He mentioned the leading English papers — the Times and the Manchester Guardian, which would not publish anything about the Faith after the passing of the Master. But they reported the persecutions, and they continue to print articles.

The clergy and government of Persia hoped to wipe out the Faith in one blow. They did not realize what the result would be. They gave the Faith unparalleled publicity. The persecutions were reported in newspapers all over the world. The government and clergy would not have attempted to harm the Bahá'ís if they had expected this result.

He told us how the father of the present Sháh of Persia was deposed by the western powers at the end of the war because he had been friendly to Germany and anti-western. This former shah had been an opponent of the Bahá'ís. He had closed the Terbiat School. The shah was exiled to the Maritius Islands and then to South Africa. He died in Johannesburg, and now we have a flourishing center there.

He talked about the sections of Russia. He enumerated the countries in the Soviet Union. He told us of the three sections of the Caucasus where the Faith had formerly been established. The believers there were dispersed, but there are probably still some.

The Guardian talked at great length about the various stages of the development of the Faith. He pointed out that in Africa there are over 3,000 believers, over 2,000 of them are Africans, and over 1,000 of these Africans are in Uganda. Uganda is the heart of Africa — this is fitting. The Faith in Africa is still in the stage of obscurity.

In Persia the Faith went from obscurity almost immediately into the stage of persecution. It has remained in this stage for over 100 years. The situation in Persia is very unstable. Persia might go directly from the second stage (persecution) to the fifth stage (establishment) . This is a possibility because the situation in Persia is so unstable that anything can happen.

In America the Faith started in obscurity. There was some persecution through the attacks of missionaries. The Faith in America is emancipated and now in the fourth stage — recognition.

The Faith in Egypt is in the third stage — emancipation — which came about through the court case. The Faith in Israel is in the fourth stage of recognition.

I asked the Guardian about the time of the proclamation of the Faith. This, he said, is the final stage. The growth is successively from (1) obscurity, through (2) persecution, (3) emancipation, (4) recognition, (5) establishment as the official religion of the country with special privileges, to the creation of a (6) Bahá'í State when a majority of the people in a country become Bahá'ís and the religion assumes temporal power, following which is the uniting of several Bahá'í States into the (7) Bahá'í Commonwealth. After this comes (8) the proclamation of the World Order of Bahá'u'lláh, and the birth of a world civilization. Then a new process of evolution is like the emergence of the United States from thirteen small colonies, he explained, culminating in American civilization.

There are two vast processes at work in the world. The world is creating the means of unity. The Bahá'ís are building the Administrative Order. These two processes are simultaneous. When the political means for uniting the world are complete and established, this will be the Lesser Peace. When the Administrative Order and the politically-united world fuse and coalesce, this will be the Most Great Peace. It will give birth to a world civilization.

Israel is the meeting place and crossroads of three continents. The Shrine (of the Báb) is on Mount Carmel, facing north to ‘Akká and Bahjí, and beyond to Tiberias, the scene of the ministry of Jesus Christ. Here He met and summoned His disciples. To the west is the Cave of Elijah. To the east is Bethlehem, the birthplace of Christ, and Nazareth, where Christ spent His childhood. To the south of the Shrine, back of it, is Jerusalem, the scene of the passion and crucifixion of Jesus Christ.

Jerusalem is sacred to three of the world’s great religions. To the Jews, because it was the seat of their temple. To the Christians because of the passion and crucifixion of Jesus. To the Muslims, it is the third holiest city, Mecca is first, Medinah is second, and Jerusalem is third. Farther south is Mount Sinai, which is the birthplace of Judaism. Farther south still is Arabia, with Mecca and Medinah, the holy cities of Islám.

He began to speak of capitalism and communism. America is the leader of one, and Russia the leader of the other. Because the Cause is literally world-wide, we must be above politics. We have Bahá’ís in countries on both sides, so we must not act in such a way as to endanger them. We are not against any government. We do not indulge in politics at all. We are not pro. We are not anti. We are super.

The Cause is supranational. It is above politics. The Cause is supernatural. It is a revelation. The Cause is superlative. It is the fulfillment of all religions. The corollary of being supranatural [sic] is that we are non-political. One follows the other. It is a natural relationship.

From this, he went on to the subject of American materialism. He said that materialism was at an extreme in America, that Americans must suffer to be welded with the rest of the world. There must be blood-letting. This is essential for America’s destiny.

Rúhíyyih Khánum asked if this would be as extreme as Isaiah had said. He answered that it probably would be. He commented on isolationism in America, on the sufferings of Woodrow Wilson. He pointed out the warning in the “Hidden Words” of unforeseen calamity that would come suddenly. The first two world wars have been the beginning of this. But there will be great blood-letting.

American business is so materialistic that it has grown into a vast machine. Businessmen are slaves to it. This is true in England, too. If they have any leisure, they waste most of it in useless activity. The cinema and sports. These are not bad in themselves, but they give too much time to them. There is too much time and energy put into sport. Leisure must be used wisely.

He emphasized the blood-letting and suffering that must come in America because of its excessive materialism and the necessity for it to be welded with the other nations. Isolationism is past, and America is joining the world in many ways. Through intense suffering she will be welded with other nations and develop the capacity to lead the world.

He talked of professors, saying learning is a veil, and he asked if I had not found this true of professors. Just as the Guardian was getting up from the table, he looked at me and said that I was a professor and a Bahá'í and a Knight of Bahá'u'lláh. And of these three, the most important was being a Knight.

The Guardian spoke of the significance of the Archives Building. He said that the local spiritual assemblies were the foundations, the National assemblies, are the pillars, and the New Archives Building is the beginning of the foundation of the dome of the International Administrative Order. He talked of the two spiritual centers here — the Shrine of the Báb on Mount Carmel and the Shrine of Bahá'u'lláh at Bahjí.

The Guardian then talked again of the persecutions in Persia. The enemies of the Faith have helped us. If they had understood what would happen, they would have been quiet. Now that they understand, they are calm. Our enemies never expected such a world reaction. The American government through the State Department exercised pressure. Noted people in a private capacity protested. But God's mysterious plan works in our favor. The United States and other countries did not want any disturbance in Persia. So they forced the Persian government to reverse its policy. The relationships of nations gave us this protection. Whatever happens, we win.

I asked the Guardian if it were true that the Israeli government had offered assistance. (He had detailed the threats that the Persian government made against the Faith, threats which it was prevented from carrying out. One of these threats had included exiling one third of all Bahá'ís.) He answered that the Israel government had offered assistance, but he had refused the assistance, saying that God would protect us.

He said that the Shrine of Bahá'u'lláh is the holiest spot on the Bahá'í world. Bahá'u'lláh's prison room in 'Akká has not been changed. The Síyáh-Chál was the Lesser Prison; there Bahá'u'lláh suffered from external enemies — the government, the clergy, and the people. Adrianople was the remote prison. 'Akká was the Most Great Prison; here Bahá'u'lláh not only suffered from external enemies but from internal ones as well.

The South Pacific will be like Africa — there the Faith will grow rapidly, as it will in Japan. The Pacific will soon have five National Assemblies. There will be two magnetic poles there — the Japanese in the north and the Australians in the south. The peoples of these countries are antagonistic; they do not trust each other. But with the Bahá'ís it will be different. Spiritual competition, but friendly relations.

Speaking of the present, the Guardian said that conversion comes first and after that comes dedication. Conversion is passive.

The world needs two things — unification and spiritualization. This is highly reasonable; in teaching intellectuals, begin with unification. This, too, is how the Master taught. Whenever the Master was asked what is new or unique in the Faith, His answer would concern the oneness of mankind.

Rúḥíyyih Khánum asked the Guardian a question I had asked her one day. In the future would non-Bahá'í scholars be permitted to see the manuscripts in the Archives? He said, yes, of course. There is no secrecy. We are proud of our manuscripts. The only thing such scholars cannot see will be the portraits of Bahá'u'lláh.

It is such an enormous privilege to be gathered here with all of you wonderful people and to be able to share no matter how adequately my own humble impressions of Shoghi Effendi and then perhaps to say a little more than that about him. It always seems strange to me that only a minority of people during his lifetime recognised his greatness or even knew anything about him, or if they did, they only smiled and did not recognise his station. Because what man on this earth after the ascension of 'Abdu'l-Bahá could even come up to him in any importance whatsoever. To read his writing, to know about his life, to examine what he said and the instructions that he gave to the Bahá'í community, which were indeed instructions that fitted the entire world, was to open up a new level of consciousness in all of us who have done so. To read his writing once is only the beginning. A second time, a third time, and then to carry on with the work that he did.

As I sit here now, I can see plainly in my mind's eye, the presence of Shoghi Effendi as he sat in the dining room of the Western Pilgrim House during the second week of January in 1955. As we entered the room for the first time and looked at him, we could see in his face an expression that we had never seen in any human being's face before. It was suffused with deep thoughts, with feeling and sensitivity of the finest kind. And as he stood up and greeted us and asked us to come near to him and put our faces next to him, I could sense he was not just a spiritual person, that he represented the entire universe since the passing of his Grandfather.

I felt, of course, as if I was in the presence of the Manifestation of God, which he was not, but he was the Sign of God on earth, and the power that exuded from him was overwhelming, and yet at the same time, it made you completely happy to be in his presence and to listen to what he had to say. He was very informal. He spoke in a clipped Oxford accent. He spoke at first about the British believes and their progress in the Faith at that particular time. He said that the British had been exemplary in the way in which they pioneered and he was very pleased with what they had done. And he was delighted, too, with the progress of the Bahá'í Cause in Africa, which he said had outstripped the Guardian's expectations.

Naturally, we were inclined, some of us, to ask him questions and, being an American, I was used to that because in no way did I feel constrained in his presence. I felt only that I wanted to absorb all that he had to give us at that time. And I was aware, too, of this enormous privilege that I had, undeserved completely, in being in his presence. I said, among other things I asked him, Shoghi Effendi, why is it that the clergy, and before I had a chance to say more, he said, 'I recognise that question and the reason that they do not accept the Messenger of God for this Day is because their understanding of Christianity is superficial.' And then I said, 'Shoghi Effendi', and he answered me so graciously each time and as he looked at you with those wonderful eyes that seemed to penetrate into your heart – I can see them now. I'd never seen eyes with an expression like that. He seemed to look at you and understand you with complete perfection and yet without one iota of criticism in his glance.

And I said, 'Shoghi Effendi, many people whom you admired and learned to like and believe in as people do not come into the Bahá'í Faith, do not show interest and then many who we have not really known or regarded in one way or another, do.' He said it is a quality of the soul.' And then he said, 'Mankind has just left the age of puberty and is now in the very early stages of maturity. But gradually, we will have world order and finally world civilization for which we are all striving.' And then he thought a minute, and I could feel when he thought that he could see into the future in a way that no one else could on this earth. 'It'll take a thousand years to usher in the Most Great Peace.'

And I was rather naïve at the time, as I am still, and hadn't been in the Faith very long. I hadn't realise what Shoghi Effendi had been through. Many of us in the West came in at that time, and this was about 1950, and although we loved Bahá'u'lláh and loved 'Abdu'l-Bahá and accepted the Guardian, we didn't realise completely, though we had read about it, exactly all the suffering that they had endured. What Shoghi Effendi had been through for a period of thirty-three years at that time. And I said, 'Do the Messengers of God, Shoghi Effendi, know a great deal more about the worlds of God than they tell us?' Well, a very naïve question. He said, of course they do. They only tell us what we can understand.

And to every question, to every type of remark that anyone made, Shoghi Effendi would reply and, just to be a little light-hearted for a moment if I may, I asked him, 'Shoghi Effendi', 'Yes.' 'What do you think of Winston Churchill?' Well, Rúhíyyih Khánum, that wonderful lady, was sitting next to him and she said, 'Oh Zebby, now don't get the Guardian started on Churchill!' He said, 'Churchill is very capable, but lacking in principle. More capable than Eisenhower or Roosevelt.’ And then he added, ‘President Woodrow Wilson was very pure hearted.’ And you know, from that remark, as a result of that remark, I began to study a good deal about President Woodrow Wilson and a book that I can really recommend to you to show to you that there is good American character existing, who did at least imbibe many of the principles of the Bahá’í Faith and had an integrity that Shoghi Effendi admired, or he never would have said that, called ‘When the Cheering Starts’. Woodrow Wilson, we believe, had read some of the Bahá’í books, but the Guardian said not to say this because you couldn’t be perfectly sure. But unquestionably he did have in his plan, which he had delineated for the League of Nations that somewhat was similar to the Divine Plan that Bahá’u’lláh had revealed in the nineteenth century. So, as a result, I have done some study on this man who the Guardian commended.

He saw into the heart of the world, into the heart of everyone and although he had been through such sufferings as we cannot understand or could not possibly have endured, yet I could feel in him a happiness, a spiritual happiness which was not possible for the rest of us to attain and yet we can hope to go nearer and nearer to that goal as we go along. He was very amusing about America. He said that in America, the matriarchal system existed. He said in America, the man works very hard all day for his wife and in the evening he returns home tired and wishes to rest. She has been relaxing most of the day and wishes to go out to dinner and attend the theatre. He is very tired, indeed, and would like to rest, but he loves her very much, doesn’t want to lose her, so he takes his bath, gets dressed and accompanies her there and comes home more tired than before. He dies young. She is sad for a while then with the money he has amassed, she starts to travel and travels all over the world. Now this, of course, situation is greatly changing, but he had sensed it at that particular time and of course it was true.

I asked him, ‘Shoghi Effendi, is there any difference that you can make in the Writings of Bahá’u’lláh.’ He said no. All are of equal importance. All the Writings of Bahá’í are the Word of God and we cannot discriminate between them as to their importance for one way or the other. In the early time of the Faith, the early time of the Guardianship.

I think it is interesting to remark on a story that Mr Faizi gave in his essay on Mrs Collins, that wonderful woman. She had gone there – I may have the date wrong – in about 1922 and she felt that the Guardian was going to talk about eternal life only and the soul and all kinds of very attractive subjects about how we would live here, maybe happily and go to the next world and what Bahá’u’lláh said about eternal life and what ‘Abdu’l-Bahá had said about it. Instead of that, Shoghi Effendi gave her some letters that he had already written for the American community on the administrative order and how it could be formed. Oh, she was astounded and thought, what could this be? And she read these papers, which described the foundation of the Assembly and the voting of the National Assembly, the voting at the National Convention and all the administrative matters that we now about now. And she read it. The next day, he asked her what she thought of it. She said she didn't know what to think of it. She couldn't understand it at all. And so he was very patient with her and took her on a long walk through some of the Holy Places in the Holy Land there and he described it to her again and still he made no impression on her at all. She still wanted to hear about the eternal life and the wonderful things we might do here. And finally, she began to read it and she began to think, well, there is something in this. So he dispatched her to go home to the Convention in Wilmette and explain these letters to the friends and this is what is so extraordinary. She went home and gave a marvellous explanation of the letters on the administrative order that he had written in about 1923, I think it was, 24, and she was the one who went from community to community and explained how the administrative order was going to be formed. I think this is a most interesting story to show how a person could have gone there believing in Bahá'u'lláh at that time, and a woman of enormous capacity, and yet she didn't yet quite understand the organisation of the administrative order.

And isn't it interesting, too, that our beloved George Townshend, who first really recognised the station of Bahá'u'lláh in about 1916, and was completely changed by this recognition, and yet he went through this difficult stretch which he described in his essay on the Seven Valleys, on the soul. Until he realised the necessity of the administrative order and realised the Church could not be reformed by Bahá'u'lláh, but that finally it would become a very important thing of the past. He, with all his spirituality, with all his brilliance, with all his scholarship, took this time to do it. We can see in his books. My favourite book that he wrote, thought I know that it is not the most important book that he did, is The Heart of the Gospel, in which he explains to a Christian audience how much the Bahá'ís love Jesus and how Bahá'u'lláh is the return of the spirit of Jesus in the station of the Father of all mankind. And yet in the last book which we know gives the history of the Faith and the explanation of how the world will be run in the future through the Revelation of Bahá'u'lláh.

I would like to read now, if I might, just a short, well, it isn't an essay, but a little interview I had just briefly before the passing of Ḥasan Balyuzi. (6:09 skipped, story of his meeting with Mr Balyuzi)

When I was in the Holy Land, I had the opportunity on the last day I was there of meeting with Rúḥíyyih Khánum in her sitting room and we were talking about marriage and she asked me if I ever thought I'd marry to which I said I had and explained a few experiences I had had and made some mistakes. I said, 'Rúḥíyyih Khánum, I must ask you a very personal question. Did you have any intimation at all that you were going to marry Shoghi Effendi when you were a young girl?' And she said, 'Zebby, I don't mind answering that question at all.' And the answer is so beautiful that I just have to recount it now. I'm sure she wouldn't mind

One night when I was here at the age of sixteen, I dreamt that I had rescued the Guardian from a burning house. I took this dream very seriously and when I came downstairs that night for dinner, I looked at Shoghi Effendi and I thought of what I had seen in my dream. He looked at me very stirringly and I dismissed the thought. And then he turned towards me and smiled. And that was the only intimation that I had.

And when he asked me to marry him, I thought first that this would be very good for the Cause. And then I thought to myself, I love him anyway. Of course I want to marry him.

And she said this so simply, though what a tremendous, important thing that was in world history that she married Shoghi Effendi.

Now, during the pilgrimage, Shoghi Effendi, of course, made many, many fascinating remarks which I'd like to quote directly from because in the matter of time, one can sometimes make some mistakes. John Ferraby changed the subject to Prayers and Meditations. The Guardian explained, in Prayers and Meditations, Bahá'u'lláh was often referring to the Báb. We must realise that when He refers to the Báb as the last prophet, Bahá'u'lláh wrote this particular meditation before He Himself had become a Manifestation. I asked the Guardian this final question, 'Is it alright to teach immoral people the Bahá'í Faith?' Rúhíyyih Khánum spoke quickly, 'What about Mary Magdalene?' 'I mean people, Shoghi Effendi, who almost like the gangsters.' The Guardian gave a delightful smile. 'If you don't get robbed', he said. He rose then and walked out of the room. As he did so, the Guardian looked like a deeply sensitive and happy young boy of extraordinary charm.

On that evening, the last evening at dinner, John Ferraby sat opposite to the Guardian. As soon as I'd entered the dining room, he said to me, 'This is your last night, isn't it? I am glad to see that you do not look unhappy.' After I'd taken my place on John's right, Shoghi Effendi said, 'I hear that you have an old mother that you are looking after.' I said, 'Yes, Shoghi Effendi.' 'How old is she?', he asked me. 'She is 83', I answered. 'Oh, then you cannot pioneer', he said without hesitation.

The Guardian said, 'When you get back to New York, tell the Bahá'ís to disperse, but not to the metropolitan areas, rather to the rural sections.' 'It is hard to do even what one should do in New York', I remarked. 'Of course', he said. 'There are many distractions in the big city.' Anxious to know what the Guardian would say about the Bahá'í activity in the next mentioned city, I said, 'I came into the Cause in Los Angeles. The Bahá'ís are doing a great deal of work there and in the surrounding territories.' 'Yes', he declared, 'but Los Angeles is very materialistic and the cities around it are becoming the same. Materialism in the United States has started in the big cities and has spread to the small cities. That country is now successfully materialising the world.' 'A materialistic society is certainly dull', I remarked. 'Dull!' he said. 'They are very dangerous.'

There were no changes in the Guardian's instructions: the believers should disperse. 'I have asked the Persian believers to disperse and only 3% have obeyed the Guardian's instructions. The Americans should disperse in great numbers. If they would do so, it would have an enormous effect on the Cause.'

Then', he said, 'first tell the believers in New York disperse and then anoint them with this attar of roses.' I was so moved by my little present, by this present he gave the attar of roses, that I could hardly say, 'Thank you, Shoghi Effendi.' He rose from his chair and walked to my side of the table. Now, I just want to mention this little bit now, not of course because of any compliment he gave to me, he didn't at all anyway. But when he got up that last night and he approached me and said, 'I will give you my special prayers.' It was just as if lightning had hit the room. The entire atmosphere changed when he said this. And you know I can feel it now as I sit here, the atmosphere that he conveyed. It is completely unearthly in a sense because I could never experience it in any other way at all.

Years ago, long before even Shoghi Effendi even knew that he was going to be the Guardian or knew such a thing as the Guardian existed, he was going to Baliol College Oxford and during that time, he often visited the Manchester community. And one evening when he felt that the atmosphere was right he said, 'The Greatest Holy Leaf has given me a vial of attar of roses and she has asked me that when I felt the atmosphere was right that I should use this and anoint the friends with it and I want to do that tonight.' Now, everyone said that at this particular occasion the atmosphere was wonderful and they could sense an extraordinary quality about the young Shoghi Effendi that other people did not have, although they had no idea of the station that was soon to be conferred upon him. And he used to visit there quite often. I do not think that he was entirely happy at Oxford. The atmosphere was rather cold. I think the professors were probably too academic, but imagine that young man of genius who had gone there through his Grandfather's admonition to learn – well, he already wrote beautiful English because he had already translated a great number of 'Abdu'l-Bahá's Tablets – but to learn even more about English and yet whom did he have to talk to, who would understand him. So at times he would visit the communities. I believe he knew Lady Blomfield and John Esslemont, whom he loved very much.

And he heard, of course, at the end of his time there this terrible news in a most cruel thing that happened, the ascension of 'Abdu'l-Bahá. Imagine how he must have felt. But he had always gone to England, thinking that he would see the Master again and now he would not see him on this earth and he was alone without him. And he did not know anything about his appointment as yet. And when he arrived in the Holy Land, he had another shock, which was meaning that he was appointed Guardian. Can you imagine what he went through at his age and realised the tremendous responsibility that he had been given, that the whole future of the planet rested on his shoulders. With that sensitive young man with many around, they didn't understand him at all. Some fortunately who did. He was able to establish a great deal before he was naturally forced to take a rest, which wasn't really a rest, but a time of meditation, prayer and study. Of many months away from the Holy Land.

But think of what he went through and what he came back and did. Dr Giachery has expressed in his book, which doesn't try to cover the whole life of Shoghi Effendi, as Rúḥíyyih Khánúm has really covered his life, but in Dr Giachery's book, he marks out the wonderful talents that he had, that God endowed him with. Look at the way he wrote. Who ever has written in a style that Shoghi Effendi writes. Every paragraph has so many meanings in it. It's like when you read it, it evokes so much to you. It stirs you up inside and it is a model of modern writing that he has given us. He was a reader of Gibbon, a reader of McCoy, a reader of Carlisle, indeed. But when you read Gibbon, and then you read Shoghi Effendi, you turn to Shoghi Effendi. You don't turn back to Gibbon. All he used him as a model of style. The talent of people, the administrative talent and the deep, human quality which he had. When you met him, you could feel this, as I've said before, this quality which was unearthly.

You know Doris Holley told me this interesting little story that when Horace went on a shortened pilgrimage – which is shocking that he didn't go for a longer one really, because he should have. She wondered how he would react to Shoghi Effendi. Those are two very strong personalities and they had worked together a great deal over a period of years. As you know, Horace was the secretary of the National Assembly of America and naturally, he was in correspondence with Shoghi Effendi constantly and the ideas that Horace had Shoghi Effendi always acted upon. I'm sure Shoghi Effendi inspired them originally, but he seemed to catch the idea. He started the Bahá'í World, he helped with the administrative order, everything. And they had met finally after a period of how many years, 50 or 60 years work of this kind. 50 years anyway. And when he came back, Doris said, 'Well, he said just one sentence: "You would die for him."'

Now think of this strong-minded Yankee man with a brilliant mind, well educated and the Guardian said the greatest authority on administration in the world, saying about the beloved Guardian, you would die for him. This is the quality he invoked in people who loved him. And nothing that I can say is in anyway adequate.

When I read my little pilgrim notes over again, I realise how inadequate they are because when we think that after the passing of 'Abdu'l-Bahá that he was the sign of God on earth. That he was the one that all the world should turn, and will turn in the future. And what a tragedy it is, as wonderful as the Faith is doing now, that more people didn't know who he was and have the opportunity of loving him.

Now we have the opportunity of reading his books. God passes by is the history of the first 100 years of the Bahá'í Faith that he wrote. Now it was a very long job to do. Tremendous book. We read it and it has so much in it. So much of wisdom, too, and understanding and the story of the Báb, Bahá'u'lláh, 'Abdu'l-Bahá. Shoghi Effendi said to me once, 'Did you enjoy the Dawnbreakers?' I said, 'Yes, Shoghi Effendi, I did, but you know, frankly I like what you write even better than the Dawnbreakers.' And he smiled and he said, 'Well, The Promised Day is Comewill not be at all popular with the clergy because it is very hard on them.'

He was utterly humble about his achievements and yet we live only a brief time after his passing. I think that Dr Giachery's description of the Guardian's funeral is one of the most moving I have ever read in my life. And it showed the deep sorrow that everyone felt for him. And yet I am awfully happy, I suppose many of us are that London has got the great privilege of being near his resting place. And how now, even though at first there were not huge numbers coming to the grave, now there are and when you go there now you find every day more and more people coming to what will be realised in the future as really the most spiritual spot in the entire British Isles. And next to that will be the resting place, of course, of George Townshend, Ḥasan Balyuzi and the many other great people who have died here in England and were good Bahá'ís and followers of Bahá'u'lláh.

Forgive me for not saying very much, only expressing my feelings and emotions and skipping around so much, but when you think about Shoghi Effendi, there is so much in your heart that it is hard to stay on just on little point, aspect of his life. All we have to give him is our love and all we have to give him is thankfulness that he existed and that we are here today because of all that he did for us. Again, I can see his face before us. I'm sure watching everything we do and trying hard to help us.

(a bit skipped – applause and chair speaking. Goes to questions)

He didn't mention John Esslemont. I knew about his love for him, of course, and his deep feeling for him. The only personality that he actually mentioned was – well, I will say what he did say. I had been very grateful to someone who had helped me in the Faith, Helen Bishop. You probably know who she is. A very brilliant woman. And I said to Shoghi Effendi, hoping to be able to return a compliment to her, that I enjoyed Helen Bishop's introduction to the Kitáb-i-Íqán. He said, 'Yes. Not in the same category as George Townshend's writing, the best of the Bahá'í writers.' And then I mentioned one or two other people: Mrs Kinny, Carrie Kinney. You probably know about her who had been a believer since 1898 in America. And he said she is celebrating 50 years service to the Faith by pioneering in a neighbouring town.

I mentioned also Willard Hatch, who had been a believer since the time of 'Abdu'l-Bahá. He is a very old believer. I don't know why he isn't much known about, but I was in the same community with him and I certainly remember he said to me once – and this is the kind of thing he would do. I was studying about the Faith in Los Angeles. We had a lovely centre in those days. It was very different than it is now frankly. And he said to me, 'Now, Zebby, you're sincere. You read the Dispensation of Bahá'u'lláh carefully and the Will and Testament. Now you be good boy and do that.' And I remembered that, you know. He said just the right thing. Of course, what Shoghi Effendi has given us in the Dispensation is absolutely very important for us to study and I've always believed that ever since that particular time. It helped me so much to know it. Of course the Will and Testament is imperishable, too.

He didn't mention any particular personalities. I wonder if I could say one thing he did say. I hate to mention names because there was someone in the Cause there at that time who had led the Cause, a very, very great believer. And at the end of his life he defaulted. Let's not even mention his name. It's depressing. We know. We hope Bahá'u'lláh will forgive him in the future because he was a very old man when he defaulted and who knows what happened to him. He looked at me and I don't mean for a moment he was sending me out, 'You must learn to defend the Faith from enemies from within and from without.' And I often wondered what he meant. And later on I realised what he meant. I said, 'Shoghi Effendi, what makes a Covenant-breaker?' He said, 'Ambition and arrogance. Arrogance and ambition.' And he said, 'I hope that anyone who breaks the Covenant will realise what they have done before they go to the next world. Because if they don't, they will suffer so much when they get there.' But it didn't seem to be at all animosity, just sorrow, disappointment and grief that anyone should break the Covenant.

That's the way he looked at it. He had suffered enough from the hands of the people who had broken the Covenant on this earth. I suppose we never know, none of us know why a person gets sick. People do get sick and we have to pray for them and we can't, of course, associate with Covenant-breakers, but this is a terrible thing that has existed and has caused, naturally, 'Abdu'l-Bahá and the Guardian great suffering. The Guardian had said that he had translated all the necessary abstractions that we needed in the Gleanings, which were taken from 12 volumes in the Persian. But that in the future, more abstractions will be translated and some will be more obscure and more difficult to understand.

He also said – I can mention this – that we should gain understanding from reading the Kitáb-i-Íqán and also of the Qur'án. It is most extraordinary how the Guardian could translate the words of Bahá'u'lláh so beautifully and also write books of his own in his inimitable style and also write letters to the believers, of which there are many thousand, I believe . . .

It will be quite an achievement when the Faith is recognized in Catholic Spain. I am looking forward to the day when it is legalized.

We should store literature in Switzerland until things are settled in Spain. In other words, don't put your eggs all in one basket.

We must be very careful in any correspondence either in Spain or going in or out of Spain.

We have two great enemies, Catholicism and communism. I wouldn't be surprised if communism fought the Pope to the weakening of both. It is like in modern warfare—there is no victor; both sides are weakened.

Spain should send people to Rio de Oro and Spanish Sahara. The Persians have tried to enter and cannot, but the Spaniards can do so easily.

The friends on the islands should correspond with neighbors (like Canaries with Spain) to strengthen bonds with the [Bahá'í] world.

There will soon be oceanic conferences in preparation for the world conference; i.e. after the African conferences, the islands will have conferences. The islands of the Mediterranean may meet in Cyprus in the Atlantic it may be at Madeira.

Later each island will be allocated to a LSA.

The Canaries are now under Africa but later will be Spain this is because Spain is now weak and Africa is strong.

The legalization in Spain will be a GREAT victory. We have our difficulties and we have our victories; first the seizure of records and the jailing of the [Bahá'ís], then the investigation then; then the legalization, then the victory.

[Shoghi Effendi] wants a picture of Las Palmas and Santa Cruz assemblies for Mansion of [Bahá'u'lláh].

Persians must learn administration from the Americans. The Americans know how to administer. The Persians will not face problems.

The Persians will understand the Spanish; they are alike in many respects.

Pioneers must not move on until LSA is FIRMLY established (15 in one place, and more than 9 active)

Deep in the heart of every soul is a longing to know his God and to draw ever nearer to Him. In the House of Worship in Wilmette during the dedication, one had a slight implication of the feeling of the spiritual fragrances which supasses all space and time-it is as if one is suspended in one moment of eternity, and one wishes to stay there forever.

When the pilgrim first enters the Shrine of the Báb and kneels before that sacred Threshold, there seems to rush upon him such a force from the Supreme Concourse that he can neither withhold his tears nor restrain his emotions. Coming from the outside world to that sacred Spot, he immediately senses the divine beauty, the perfection, the all-embracing tenderness of the Báb, and the vastness of spiritual love that was showered upon the earth at His coming. As he touches his forehead to the threshold, he feels that at last he has come home, that no matter what his achievements or failures, God will accept him as he is and guide him along the pathway.

Here, in the "heart of Mt. Carmel" one senses so well that it is the spiritual heart of the world, and from this center anew has throbbed the inspired Words of a Prophet of God. Here one feels the majesty, the peace, the tranquility that the whole world is seeking, and one sees the beautiful gardens being readied for the day when the rulers of mankind will mount the terraced stairs to pay their respects to the Prophet of God.

The Guardian spoke of the arrangement of the gardens and buildings on Mt. Carmel that first night saying that both in Bahjí and in Mt. Carmel there were the outer gardens, then the inner gardens or Holy Precincts, and then the Holy of Holies where lies the remains of the Prophet. The gardens in Bahjí, he said, were started by Adbul-Bahá who brought many plants from Haifa. 'Abdu'l-Bahá and a number of pilgrims carried the flowers in their robes, and pots of water on their heads, from Haifa to the gates of 'Akká. They camped there overnight and in the early dawn, lighted their lanterns and chanting as they went, carried the flowers into 'Akká.

At the present time, the Rivan feast is held in the outer gardens, following which the believers progress to the Shrine of Bahá'u'lláh. In the future, because of respect, the feast will be held at an even greater distance from the Shrine itself.

The Guardian asked if we had noticed that there is not one single bench in the gardens of the Shrine of the Báb. "It is a place of worship, not recreation," he said. "If there were benches, the people would bring their lunch and leave litter. There would be litter around the benches, under the benches and on the benches. Even now we have difficulty keeping the ice cream vendor away from the garden entrance. We must be firm about this and prevent his entry.”

The Shrine of Bahá'u'lláh to be erected in 'Akká will be more ornate than that of the Báb, it will have columns of yellow marble to match the bricks; it will have balustrades and urns, and something else. It must be very ornate.

The endowments in Israel now are valued at $4,000,000.00 (4 million) and it is the only religion (Christian, Jewish, Moslem) which is allowed to have its properties tax exempt. This is because we do not sell or rent the property, and we give the produce to the poor. I.E. the others built houses and rent them, or rent out the property. We make olive oil from the olives, save a part for household use, give a portion to the workers for their labor, and give the rest to the poor.

The International Endowments in the 10-year plan were taken care of at one blow (49 thousand dollars), enabling the believers to purchase the ground for Hazratu'l-Quds listed in the 10-year plan.

In Persia they are now working on a 5-year plan to build their Temple. This Temple will be more elaborate than the one in Wilmette, but this will be easy especially since the dome is to be of gold like that of the Shrine of the Báb. This was a diplomatic move. The Temple in Germany will be more difficult to erect and money must come from outside. Also the believers in Germany have invited non-Bahá'í architects to submit plans.

- line missing

ground for the Hazratu'l-Quds was nearly done. 108 of the 131 virgin territories are settled, and only 7 islands remain (one of which is Spitzbergen) the remaining territories being mostly behind the Iron Curtain. There is now the in Sikim a believer waiting to go to Tibet. Now we need to build the administration and do the teaching. The most difficult work is the work of teaching. In the U.S. by the end of the 10-years, the assemblies should number not 171 but 300. The Persian believers all want to converge on Tíhrán and I am trying to get them to disperse. In Persia in Tíhrán there are over 50,000 and if only one — tenth of them will disperse, the job of teaching would be all over. If the believers will disperse and ACTIVELY teach the receptive souls, it will be easy. The number of LSA's all over should be doubled.

The Guardian said he hoped the government will not prevent the building of the Temple in Persia. He said that it would be a miracle if the world congress can be held in Baghdád in 1963 because the Shí'ahs oppose us there. Already they have seized the house of Bahá'u'lláh and the government wants to build a hospital on the spot of the Garden of Rivan. As they are enemies to the Cause there is no use protesting because this would make them more determined. This is one of the things that distresses the Guardian. “But,” he said, “we have problems and we have victories.”

Teaching is the most difficult of all the things to be accomplished in the 10 year plan; but if the believers will disperse and teach, it will be easy. Teaching and the formation of Bahá'í courts will be difficult.

Of the 49 Ḥazíratu'l-Quds, 21 are now purchased and 28 will be purchased during the next Bahá'í year.

The building on Mt. Carmel will be in the form of an arc. It is both the ark spoken of in the Bible, and the spiritual arc. In the Western part of the mountain, at the head, will be the Temple, and on the East, the administrative buildings: the Archives, the Seat of the Hands of the Cause, the Seat of the House of Justice, the Seat of the Guardianship, and other buildings to come later.

This is just the beginning. The friends do not realize how great and extensive it is. It is the first time in the history of the world that there has been a spiritual crusade on world lines. There has been political crusades, but never a world spiritual crusade. Following the 10-year plan there will be other crusades on and on not only through the formative age but also into the golden age.

The work territorially (expansion to virgin areas), administratively, spiritually and legally and financially are all progressing splendidly. But the work on teaching and the Bahá'í courts are not.

The embellishing of the Shrine of Bahá'u'lláh will be even more beautiful than that of the Báb. This goes on AFTER the 10-year plan. We are doing preliminary work now only. Mr. Romey has made a few drawings but this is not enough. Temple land not purchased include: Columbo, Rome, Stockholm, Jakarta.

The Guardian told the pilgrims before us that there was now only one line between the US and Russia and that things may happen at any moment. That all large centers of materialism are in danger from not only the East and the West but also from the North. After the suffering in the US it will lead and bring about the birth of a new civilization, and help to establish the Faith. The US will be the leaders.

Regarding the Temple Plan in Persia, the Guardian wanted the pinnacles to follow more the lines of those in Westminster in London.

As some of the pilgrims related comments of visitor to the Shrine on the Báb, the Guardian said, "Those who are unorthodox appreciate it the orthodox don't like it." Of the children who came to the Shrine he said, "Children are innocent and have good hearts. We have friends and we also have enemies. Now we are adding another building which will add to their jealousy."

The Bahá'ís revere the holy sites of all religions; we are not narrow-minded. We should visit Nazaret, Tiberias and Jerusalem.

The Jewish Bahá'ís have done very well lately in both the East and the West.

Jackarta is to have a NSA and will be the most important center in S.E. Asia. We have? [Bahá'ís] in Saigon, Soloman Is, 2 in Malaya, [Bahá'í] literature in Vietnamese, Indonesian, Burmese. “The friends are not content in the number of languages listed in the 10-year plan,” said the Guardian, “They have translated the Teachings into 24 supplementary languages.

Siezure of literature and jailing of believers ends in a victory. It started with disterbances and ends in victory for the Faith. We have a plan and all the [Bahá’ís] know it. Our plan is clear cut and definate. God has His Plan, which is mysterious and works in a disorderly way. They are complementary processes, but have the same end.

One should visit Nazareth, Jerusalem, Tiberias, Bethlahem — four places associated with the life of Christ.

The Persian government has helped Persians come on pilgramage inspite of the fact that they are not friendly with us.

Johannesburg is the most un-Bahá’í city in the world because it is impossable for the races to meet together. The job of pioneers is to teach the negroes, establish the center, and move on. Bahá’ís should be constantly on the move. They should inspire their new believer to arise and teach in their turn; not just be dead believers. This is necessary if pioneers are to achieve their purpose.

The Guardian said, “We are now establishing the Administrative center on Mt. Carmel. We have already established the spiritual center.” We have more than 50 acres on Mt. Carmel. The nine terraces below the Shrine and the 9 to be built above the Shrine will be named for the 18 Letters of the Living.

The four NSAs to be formed in Africa will be four more pillars in the Universal House of Justice. (Cairo, Tunis, Kampala, Johannesburg). Johannesburg was chosen because it is the second largest city.

The Guardian said that he would announce the 13 pillars more to be formed, in the Rivan message which he is now composing.

Regarding Americans he said: “Tell them to pay attention to my repeated messages. Tell them to disperse — the farther the better and the longer the better. They should not just stay a few years like tourists but settle and make their homes abroad. They should not plan to return to the States.

In teaching, one should make a wide association of friend and search (like in the Valley of Search) for receptive souls. Look for the sincere regardless of class, those with sincere hearts and purity of motive. Be discriminating. Then concentrate on the few and teach them thoroughly. Bring them into the Faith and instill in them the desire to promote the Faith. This is the slow way but the sure way. It is the good foundation. Artificial LSA’s are not successful.

The Spanish are warm-hearted. The Spanish temperament and American temperament are quite different. But in Africa where the American Bahá’ís went they have already changed to be more like the Africans. The same can be true with the Americans in Spanish territories.

One must have moderation in all things. There should be a regional NSA of Spain and Portugal until it can be divided into two NSA's because they are not strong enough. This is only a provisional measure.

It used to be hard to find the Bahá'ís. Now it is difficult to find a place where there are no [Bahá'ís]. The Guardian said that his records are out-of-date from one day to another because things are changing so fast.

He said not to take literally the suggestion of reading 5-10 non-Bahá'í books to 1 Bahá'í book: that we should read to deepen and to widen. To deepen with the Bahá'í writings, to widen with other books. For deepening use DAILY Dawn-Breakers, God Passes By and Some Answered Questions. Prayer, meditation, study and Action = Read history etc. to compare the times

But the most important thing is to TEACH. Cook Islands reports its first native believer. First native in Cyprus is ready to come in.

Establish LSA then bring in natives; establish administration as a tool through which to work. Choose people of good character and good heart to avoid problems in the community. Natives must have preference. The Spaniards are sensitive. The Persians would understand them. (R.K. said example of her mother's great love can consume all disagreement.

Japan & Australia are the two of focal points of the Pacific. In expansion (territorial plan) the believers did in 1 year what they should have done in 10 yrs.

This is the first spiritual crusade on the world basis. This is only the beginning. There were political crusades etc. but never spiritual crusades on this basis. There will be other crusades going through the formative age and golden age.

Hainan Island is important. Bahá'ís must leave their homes FOREVER and settle elsewhere.

All kings must go.

The pioneer is in the forefront until the LSA is firmly established, then the pioneer is in the background. Better still he must go elsewhere and form another LSA. This is doubly meritorious.

Establish NSA's then Bahá'í government... but do not speak of this, especially in [Africa] right now. We can talk about this in England because they won't believe us.

Guardian will advise us, such as things of the Faith. But on secondary things such as buying land and building etc. he never advises.

"The friends did in 1 year what they were to do in 10 years." "They would have, too, if you had let them", R.K. said to the Guardian.

The negroes have broken all records.

For 10 years there were no pilgrims to Haifa.

Seek the pure of heart and good character. Don't be in a hurry to get the in. Make a wide acquaintance. Sort out a few and concentrate on the receptive ones. Try to et all classes represented.

Believers in the large cities will be evaporated if they don't move. People in the villages are more receptive.

Africa leads. It is the only continent where all territories And islands were opened — 55 territories and 12 islands.

"I am glad I don't have to pronounce on the atom or space ships. Thank goodness there is notheing in the Writings about this.

Temple site on it. Carmel overlooks spot where Bahá'u'lláh pitched tent and revealed Tablet of Carmel.

America leads because it has 1) Temple and has started dependency. Then comes 2) 'Ishqabád which has the Temple then 3) Persia & Germany which have purchased land and are starting plans and 4) Mr. Carmel which is now in the process of being purchased.

Olive trees around Shrine of Bahá'u'lláh are very old; some go back to the time of Christ. Some will be left & some removed for the work of enlarging gardens.

Gold on pinacles of Shrine of Bahá'u'lláh to be carried down to give effect that the gold comes from dome to permeate building.

"I have many things to do, little things, big things, all kinds of things, and am exhausted... but good news revives me."

Some expert must be found in Israel to study authentically the races in the Faith. We have 30 now and maybe 15 more.

5 years ago there was no negro Bahá'ís in America. Now there are more than 1,000 in 230 localities, in 52 territories and speaking 40 languages.

One woman who came to visit the Shrine said, "It is so beautiful it makes me weep."

One man said, "It is the most beautiful thing in the holy land. In fact, is the most beautiful thing in the whole world." (some kind of architect)-went up on foot to see it... his wife and he having viewed it from the sea as they docked.

One man said, "My wife and I came to the Holy Land to see the Holy Places. But after being here 3 weeks I am less a Christian than I was before. This is the first ray of hope I have seen since coming here and it is so marvelous I want to bring my wife. She didn't come because she thought it was just another one of those dull tombs and she was tired and stayed in the hotel this morning."

CANADA, Anticosti Island

- “If it is impossible to settle Anticosti pick another island — not one which is really an integral part of something already existing. This island can be anywhere in the world. There are many such islands but don't forget Anticosti. If necessary settle it after the Crusade. I don't give up easily.”

*

I said that when I brought this message to the NSA it would necessarily be treated as a pilgrim's note. He replied that due to the urgency of the situation the NSA could treat this as an exception. (The message has since been confirmed in essence in a letter from Shoghi Effendi)

On another evening he was discussing Spain and asked about the gypsies. Upon learning that there are gypsies in most countries of the world he said — with a smile, and a twinkle in his eye, that he would welcome a gypsy convert who would settle in Anticosti.

Temple Grounds

He reminded me that Canada does not yet have its Temple grounds. I relayed to him a remark of one of the friends. This friend wondered if the Divine Hand of Providence were preventing us from finding Temple grounds because possibly we were ignoring ‘Abdu’l-Bahá’s statement as quoted by Mrs. Maxwell that the Temple would be built on the slopes of Mt. Royal.

He said that ‘Abdu’l-Bahá was not necessarily referring to the National Temple of Canada. He directed that if it becomes clearly impossible to find Temple grounds in Toronto, the NSA should seek the property in Ottawa — not Montreal.

One evening he told us that he had just received good news. Italy had purchased its Temple land. He then said, with a smile as he turned to me, “Italy is off my list — only Canada remains on my list — my black one. I have two lists, a black one and a white one”.

Incorporations

“Canada has not enough incorporated assemblies. I want assemblies incorporated because only incorporated bodies can own land or hold it in trust.”

(It is my impression, although it is impossible to remember the details of the discussion, that he believes that there should be fifteen adult believers in the community before an assembly attempts to incorporate).

Canadians Other Than Anglo-Saxons

Canada, he said, must concentrate on attracting French-Canadians — that French-Canadians are doubly difficult. First, because they are Roman Catholic and second, because they are French. When I asked how their “Frenchness” made them difficult, he told me that the materialism and natural conservatism of the French make them difficult people with whom to cope.

Canada should also make a special effort to attract those residents of Canada who come from countries behind the iron curtain thus, when the time is ripe, they will be able to teach in their native lands.

He was highly pleased with the Canadian effort to proclaim the faith in the Ukrainian language.

Canada must do more work among the Eskimos.

He was displeased with the progress apparently being made among the Canadian and American Indians. During one conversation he said that Indians take preference even over Negroes.

He requested that Canada not only continue its work on the Indian languages included in the Crusade by commence to work on supplementary Indian languages.

During another conversation he said that he was sorry Canada, in particular, had not more success in teaching the Indians. I attempted to explain the position as I saw it. I told him that we had, to the greatest extent possible, been kind and loving to them; had invited them to our homes; had visited them on their reservations; but all to no apparent avail. He said that there was a lot more to it than inviting them to our homes but did not say to what he was referring. He did, however, say that at the root of the Indian situation is the Indian's jealousy of the material progress of the whites.

During my last evening he reiterated much of what he had previously said and included it in the following message to Canada.

Canada needs:

More believers — more assemblies — more consolidated assemblies — more incorporations. It is particularly important that existing assemblies be consolidated and strengthened, thus paving the way for incorporations.

Canada must:

1. Get someone back on Franklin Island calling on U.S. help, if required.
2. Replace those who, for some reason or another, have had to leave virgin territory.
3. Have a National Children's Teaching Committee.
4. Retain its present 118 centres. Each country should settle the virgin territories assigned to it. Only when this is impossible should they be settled by another country.

PROGRESS OF THE FAITH

Future responsibility of the Assembly

In time the responsibility of the assembly will be:

- (1) To humanity
- (2) To the Faith and its propagation.
- (3) To individuals.

The assembly must not, however, allow individuals to become learners (leaders?). It must find a balance.

The assembly, until the Faith is stronger, must necessarily concentrate on the propagation of the Faith.

Financially, the responsibility of the assembly will be similar.

- (1) To humanity (through contributions to worthy causes)
- (2) To the Faith.
- (3) To individuals.

At present, however, lack of funds prevents such contribution, save to the Faith.

A View of the Future

A completely isolated Bahá'í is a Point. Around the point forms a group — the Letters. The organized assembly is the Word. The NSA is a verse made up of Words. The International House of Justice is a book made up of verses.

He compared the elective bodies to the Shrine of the Báb. The International House of Justice is like the dome. The NSA the pillars, and the LSA the foundation.

The Lesser Peace will be established by the nations of the world, to be followed considerably later by the Golden Age brought in by the Bahá'ís.

The culmination of all is the Bahá'í World Civilization. All, right from the point of the Letters to the Word to the Verse to the Book, have to do with the ushering in of a World Civilization.

The Law of Bahá'u'lláh, coming together with Covenant bring forth a germ, which results in the embryo — the Administrative Order — on which we are now working. This will become the Child or Bahá'í Commonwealth. This Bahá'í Commonwealth will mature into the Bahá'í World Civilization — a spiritual civilization.

At the same time, an entirely different process is taking place — the harmonizing of the nations, which will be carried on outside the Faith and will result in the Lesser Peace. In due course, will come the Most Great Peace which will merge with the Bahá'í World Civilization.

He referred, as he does on page 12 of “Advent of Divine Justice”, the successive stages through which the Faith will pass — from Obscurity to repression and persecution, then emancipation, and acknowledgment as an independent faith, followed by establishment not just as a religion but as a State religion and, in due course, a Bahá'í State, culminating in the Bahá'í World Civilization, a spiritual civilization, based entirely on the laws and principles of Bahá'u'lláh.

When asked about the effect of persecution on the Friends in America he said he did not believe that such persecution would mean loss of life but it would mean confiscation of Bahá'í books, ostracism, etc.

Miscellaneous

One night he told us he had received good news from Persia that day. The government had agreed to return the Ḥazíra in Ṭíhrán within six months. I believe he also said that the authorities had agreed to return other haziras in due course but no time limit was mentioned. Before completing his remarks on this topic, however, he said “I will wait until they have kept their promise before I rejoice, I know the Persians”.

PERSONAL LIFE

Balancing Ones Activities

Below is a record of questions asked of the Guardian and his answers to them on the above subject.

Question: The individual serves God in a fourfold manner, through his vocation, his avocation, rearing his family and in his family life, and through direct service to the Cause. How does he avoid succumbing to the temptations to concentrate on the Faith and neglecting the other three.

Answer: One cannot neglect his responsibilities for his privileges.

Question: In this sense are not all of these activities privileges in that all are service to God?

Answer: One cannot neglect any, he must find the balance.

Question: If everyone were to follow that, would there be any martyrs?

Answer: Martyrdom comes only at special times, under special circumstances. We are not in that time. Sacrifice, yes — but not martyrdom.

Materialism

Patriotism is good. Excess of patriotism is wrong. It is nationalism. Liberty is good. Excess of liberty is wrong. It is license. Acquisition of material things is good. Excess of emphasis on the acquisition of material things is wrong. It is materialism.

The friends should not rationalize themselves into the position of accumulating of material things for the sake of “business promotion”. Sometimes the acquisition of material things for the sake of business is well justified and results in substantial profit but the profit should not necessarily be spent on the acquisition of more material things. A Ford will do the job as well as a Cadillac.

It’s the motive that is important. Is the acquisition of material possession truly for the promotion of business, or the inflation of the ego, and because of an excessive love of material comforts? Only the individual can decide what the true motive is.

To a prospective pioneer “Don’t be rash”. “Don’t be too calculating”.

Life After Death

Question — I understand from the teachings that it is inadvisable to attempt to communicate with, or contact, those who are in the next world. Nevertheless I have been told that there is a difference between “communicating” or “contracting” and “having communion” with those who have passed on. Is there any difference?

Answer — There is no difference. Only in very rare cases is it even possible to communicate with them. Wishful thinking, however, and imagination cause many people to imagine they can do

Result of Inactivity

One of the Friends asked whether or not the Crusade would be delayed by the inactivity of individuals. Shoghi Effendi replied that the individuals and communities concerned would lose, but the Cause would not lose.

“I desire for you distinction”

He was asked about the above statement attributed to ‘Abdu’l-Bahá. ‘Abdu’l-Bahá, he said, wanted distinction for the friends in all aspects of their lives, distinction in conduct, distinction in morals, distinction in self-sacrifice and detachment, distinction in their integrity and honesty. He wanted them to have distinction in their respective occupations, provided they could do so honestly and provided they have the ability to do so.

Prayer and Meditation

One night he spoke briefly on this subject. He said that prayer and meditation although closely related are two entirely different spiritual activities, neither of which is adequate without the other and both of which are inadequate without study. Prayer, meditation and study are fruitless unless they result in action.

PILGRIM NOTES

Charlotte Stirratt – written to the Lisbon friends

April 30, 1956

My thoughts and prayers were with you constantly during my pilgrimage – I mentioned you each individually at the Holy Shrines and prayed for the speedy victory in Portugal.

In speaking of Lisbon, the Guardian was most emphatic on this point: He said that the believers – all of them without exception – must abide by the majority vote. The decision of the Assembly must be explicitly and wholeheartedly followed. He spoke again and again about the urgency for strict discipline and obedience to Assembly decisions. He stressed that lack of obedience to any Assembly decision is one of the most serious offenses. If a believer consistently refuses to obey the majority vote, then he must be warned and warned and warned. If he persists, then sanctions must be applied and his voting privilege taken away. There is no more serious step than taking away the voting rights – in fact, this is the gravest decision that can ever be taken by an Assembly at this time. It must not be done lightly. If the believers cannot obey the administrative order which is a divine institution, he said, then they would never be able to obey the world order and laws of Bahá'u'lláh. In all the time I was there, I never saw the Guardian speak with such power and authority. His eyes snapped and the very air was charged. It was at this moment that I saw a different Guardian – no one would dare challenge his authority upon the subject under discussion. “If a decision is not just and all the believers abide by it with strict discipline, then God can change that decision.”

The Guardian then began to speak on the subject of morality. Everything he speaks about, he repeats at least three times so that there can be no misunderstanding as to what he meant. He says that any act which affects the community or harms it in any way, should be investigated by the Assembly – even though it is a personal matter. In the West, the Bahá'ís do not like to submit personal matters to the Assembly. In Persia, they go to the opposite extreme. In America, they are too individualistic. The youth especially must exercise the greatest vigilance in regard to morality – they must have the highest moral standards in order to be an example to the world, in this day moral standards are so low. “But when any moral issue affects the community, the Assembly must interfere.” The youth must be disciplined and disciplined in their moral conduct and attitudes. If for example a believer drinks, he must be warned and warned again. If he does not heed the warnings, then his votes are taken away. Any act that harms the Community must not be tolerated.

As the Guardian spoke, one realized that this Faith is far from being just a religious organization, as we have known them in the past, but completely new and wonderful order with the highest standards of morality, the highest standards of discipline, courtesy, and behavior, and the purest motives and thoughts. Otherwise, how can there be a new race of men? and a new world order? and peace on earth? and until all the things which go to make up the Kingdom of God on earth?

The Guardian spoke on these subjects in regard to Portugal for about an hour, repeating again and again what he had said. I am sure it would be well if each of the believers would consider these words as applying to him – each search his conscience well to see if any act of his or hers could be interpreted to mean a violation of Assembly decision, or a laxity of the high moral standards of Bahá’u’lláh, or any act which is bringing harm to the Cause.

If you could have met the Guardian, looked into his eyes, heard him speak from the station of Guardianship, observed the infallibility with which he is invested in action, watched the extreme humility the effacement of his own personality, felt the power of his love and kindness – well, you would want to do everything in your power to make him happy even for a moment. His happiness is the most precious thing in all the world – it’s real, tangible, eternal, somehow. How I wish that you all might someday know him.

The Guardian said that the Spanish and Portuguese will now have to learn to work together – he seemed so pleased as he said this – anticipating next year. They should do everything possible to cement understanding and happy relationships – learn to work and think together. It is an extremely important step – one of far – reaching implications.

Our Pilgrimage to Haifa

Elmer and Gladys Beasley

May 1956

A lady from one of the Scandinavian country has gone to Spirtzenberg and one of the islands is a leper colony and the other a penal institution. The Guardian says the Soviet countries will be open before too long.

The L.S.A. are the foundation of the New World Order, the N.S.As are the pillars and the International House of Justice will be the dome. Everything is representative of an institution, and we can not put the dome on until the foundation is strong enough to support it. So it is up to the Assemblies to become strong.

Blood will run in the streets of America from Racial prejudice. He says the Bahá'ís have failed on this subject. We said that we were having some racial trouble here now and he said "YES", but it will get worse.

The Western Pilgrim House can accommodate 5 Pilgrims at a time, the Eastern House 8 and the Pilgrimage lasts 9 nights. You strain so hard when the Guardian is speaking, trying to get every word and remember it until you can jot it down in notes, that it tires you out. You can't possibly remember all the figures and statistics as they seem to roll from his lips like water from a fountain.

He says the Jews are expecting the return of Elijah but you cannot tell them now that He has returned in the Báb. Their destiny is to return to their homeland. They are natural administrators and when they see the Bahá'í Faith they will be the upholders of the administrative Order.

Freddie Schofflager and Msi Banání were the only two hands of the cause who received their appointment face to face with Shoghi Effendi. All the others received their appointment by mail, except Rúhíyyih Khánun, and she said the Guardian had to tell her because she was right there, The first Hands of the Cause were appointed by Bahá'u'lláh.

No one knows who's names are on the Pilgrim list. The Guardian attends to that personally and very often the friends do not know who is coming until they arrive. We were told that he has over 500 persians waiting to be called.

Occasionally some one asks about some of the mystical questions. He does not answer only when he has the exact writings in front of him. He says that he is not the Guardian of the Mysteries but of the Administration, and if we cannot understand that, how could we understand the mysteries. No doubt a future Guardian will answer these questions.

He had just received two cartoons from Bill Sears in Africa and he was much amused by them. Rúhíyyih told the stories at lunch. Two Bahá'ís who had pioneered to a desert island, both very bedraggled under their one lone palm tree, with their feet hanging in the water. A bottle comes floating by and as one grabbed at it, the other very anxiously said, "What does it say?" On reading it they found it said "Stick to your posts."

Also two Bahá'ís walking down the street in a middle eastern town when they saw a skull hanging from the eaves one of the shops, said one to the other I told you Sam didn't know enough about Administration. The Guardian had a wonderful sense of humor, and it probably provided a chuckle in his very busy life.

On our next afternoon dr. Nakin (caretaker at the Shrine and Eastern Pilgrim house took the 3 Western Pilgrims thru the Archives. It takes about 3 hours and they have so many precious relics. All of the writings of the Báb, Bahá'u'lláh, and 'Abdu'l-Bahá. The writings have all been illuminated which makes them very beautiful and they are all in beautiful frames.

In the afternoon when there are Persian believers there, Ruhuyyih Khánun has tea for the ladies at 4, and Shoghi Effendi goes to the Shrine to be with the Persian man. While at tea you talk very informally about most anything and if there is any work to be done you help with that. My first day we all cleaned little berries, very much like our currants, which they use in making pillau, some days it might be mending, or sewing something for the household. Then the Guardian returns a five and he talks to the Persian ladies and the Western ladies goes home to get ready for dinner.

Shoghi Effendi has three aunts still living in Haifa, in fact one of them lives just across the street from the Western Pilgrim house, and they and their families are all covenant breakers. Also he has 2 sisters and a brother living there and they too are Covenant Breakers. This again proves the power of the Faith, as he had no help with those who should have been firm.

The friends who are able to make the pilgrimage now are very privileged because in the future the Shrine of the Báb will not be open even to Bahá'ís. Also the Pilgrims will not be allowed to eat with the Guardian.

There are four steps for service to the Faith. Prayer, Mediation, Study and serve. Prayer with out action is not good. We need deeper concentration closer association and then the body of the believers will grow.

There are 2 duties in the Faith. The Faith comes first and we should think of ourselves last. If we have the means to take care of ourselves then we must omit the last duty. He is very unhappy with the American believers because they do not respond.. They are tainted with materialism. We should study more because we work the Administration backwards. We are want to be captains in America and that proves our immaturity. He said we would never ask for that position for ourselves if we knew the responsibility it entails.

There are three covenant breakers left at Bahjí. Perhaps you wonder as I did how this could be, but in the early days, Bahá'u'lláh urged the friends to buy property and they took it out in their names. Bahjí is like what we would call an estate, a large mansion and several of the buildings and in tone of the buildings these people live. They are slovenish and have allowed their property to become run down. The day after we arrived Leroy Ioas returned from Jerusalem where he had just finished signing the necessary papers to oust them. He was elated when he related the details to Shoghi Effendi at dinner. But the Guardian said now Leroy we must be generous and we must be patient. When this property is finally restored to the Bahá's they will restore the building and this part will be beautified too. The gardents at Bahjí defies all description as their beauty and the immense amount of work that has been done there.

We visited the Monumental gardens where, the Greatest Holy Leaf is buried, as well as 'Abdu'l-Bahá's wife and Mother and Brother. A most wonderful place to rest for those who served so long, and so well.

One day each city will have three institutions. The local Spiritual Assembly, Ḥaẓíra and Archives.

'Abdu'l-Bahá was the Center of Bahá'u'lláh's Covenant as well as the Shield for Bahá'u'lláh.

There are two distinct copies of the Bayán in the Archives. One in Persian and one in Arabic. Their implications are entirely different as well as the two copies of Hidden Words.

Bahjí is the Greatest Holy Place i the world. The Shrine of the Báb is the second. At the present time the Báb's is the most ornate, but no doubt Bahá'u'lláh's will exceed it in the future.

When Bahá'u'lláh left the conines of 'Akká to go to Bahjí, all of his wives children, sisters and in-laws as well as the relatives of the Báb went with him. His wife Navváb, Greatest Holy Leaf and 'Abdu'l-Bahá stayed in 'Akká. It is said that 'Abdu'l-Bahá was broken hearted because he wanted to be with his father, but the ones who went with Bahá'u'lláh became the covenant breakers and only those who stayed behind were firm in the Faith. No doubt Bahá'u'lláh was aware of this and took those he had to keep his eye on. Most of the ones who went with him to Bahjí died of strange diseases.

Most Bahá'ís pray and then jump and do things or go to work. This is not good as one must meditate. We are so busy that we don't hear the answer when it comes. The Americans do not know how to meditate but we must learn.

The center of the temple is for worship, the alcoves for meditation.

The question was asked, What day do the Bahá'ís observe as the Sabbath? Shoghi Effendi says that in your Bahá'í Life all days are worship days, but in all the Holy Books it is said we must work 6 days and rest one, so the Bahá'ís observe whatever day is the Sabbath in the country in which he lives. It presents quite a problem in the Holy Land, as there are so many religions the Moslems observe Friday, The Jews Saturday and the Christians Sunday, so those who want to take advantage of all of them do so.

There are so many ways to show respect to the Faith, some wear long sleeves, head coverings, veils, kneel, stand and many methods of display. He does not want any ritual, but pray in the way your heart tells you. That is respect for the Faith. The Persians all prostrate themselves when entering the Shrine and are provoked that the Westerners doesn't. The Guardian says if they are offended, that is good. In that way they can develop their own spirituality. He doesn't want the Persians to think this is a Persian Faith.

Bahá'u'lláh once said in a poem that he wrote that He was Gods shadow and he hoped this shadow would illumine the world. Isaiah has said that Mt. Carmel is the mountain of Lord to which all nations shall flow. Bahá'u'lláh pitched his tent in the vicinity of the Carmelite monastery, and visited Mt. Carmel 4 different times, one time staying four months. As he sat in the grove of Cypress trees, he pointed his fingers to the spot and said to 'abdu'l-Bahá, " This is where the Báb must be buried." Mt. Carmel is unique in that it is quite a large mountain and quite steep. About half way down from the top, there is a shelf and that is where the Shrine sits. Certainly it was designed that way by the hand of God, for no setting could be more perfect. The Shrine is illuminated every night for a half hour, and it reminds one of a jewel in a ring.

We must encourage minority groups. He wants the white race to be the minority, as a minority group should not be the majority in a major religion. He wants more interracial marriages, and wants more assembly representation. Jews must be attracted and they are very receptive. He should teach and work with his own race.

The man who established the first Bahá'í community in Chicago became a Covenant breaker also the first one in Germany and Canada. He says the Covenant breakers are working diligently and warn the believers to BEWARE. Ahmad Sorab is making a list stand and is working under cover. He has now established the Caravan of the East and West, and one can join for $.50. It is some thing like a pen pal club, but its works within is destructive. The Guardian is not worried because he says it is the work of a dying order.

Warn the believers so do not innocently become involved.

The cradle of western civilization (Europe) is declining and America is worried about it. America is greatly exposed to danger. The time for destruction can happen anytime. It will come fast and no one knows just when this can happen.

When people oppose the Faith they purify it for eventually they leave it. When they are inside they act like poison. Those who reject Administration loose their judgement. They act hastily and make mistakes.

Many pioneers choose places they can live comfortably, and pleasantly. He chuckled over this and said I wonder why the — -Chose Brazil.

The Bahá'í property is the only property in Israel that is exempt from taxes.

A man from Chicago was the only Westerner present when the Báb was interred. 'Abdu'l-Bahá asked that no photographs to be taken but this party sneaked a camera in and took a picture. Shoghi Effendi help bury the Báb. He was a very little boy and was down in the grave when they lowered the coffin. The Báb is in a marble sarcophagus.

Shoghi Effendi does not say what the nature of the catastrophe will be but says it will be more disastrous than the fall of the Roman Empire. Says he has done everything to wake people up but they still sleep.

The persecutions in Írán have practically stopped with the exceptions of some isolated areas. He says that during the Ramaḍán Fast Period, the Moslems work themselves up into a frenzy and then their cruel nature come out and they must kill. A the Bahá'ís are a real threat to them now, that is where they struck. While it is to bad for the believers the Faith received more publicity then it cold have had if we had to buy it. Regardless of what happens it is good for the Faith.

You know that while you are in the household of Shoghi effendi you are protected by his love, and one can feel it, because you feel utmost peace of mind, but the minute you step your foot from there you have a very great responsibility. You won't know until you pray and meditate about it, then the door will be opened.

Everything the Guardian does denotes Unity. For instance in one of those gardens next to the Shrine, one sees Cactus growing from the tropical countries and red roses from the cold countries. If the flowers can grow and flourish from different parts of the world, then surely humans can.

The Guardian tells you at dinner at night when you go to Bahjí. He says it is the culmination of your pilgrimage no matter at what time during your stay, you might go. The pilgrim from Mew York, Millie collins, Mason Remey Elmer and myself went. We arrived there about 5 in the afternoon, and went first to the Shrine of Bahá'u'lláh. It is similar inside to that of the Báb and 'Abdu'l-Bahá must have welcomed them after his many years of confinement. It is in the Shrine of Bahá'u'lláh that I felt I wanted to say prayers for the many different new who had asked to be remembered. AS for myself I could not ask for anything other than understanding and tolerance to be able to serve.

To ask for material things does not enter your mind. In the evening we visited the Mansion. The room where Bahá'u'lláh passed away and the same one Prof. Browne visited him in. It is just exactly as Bahá'u'lláh left it, even to his slippers being placed beside the bed. There are many beautiful things at Bahjí, along with priceless relics belonging to the different members of the family. Here, I think where one feels the individuality of your pilgrimage. Needless to say I did not sleep the first night. A thousand questions thru my mind, and I pictured many things back over the years. Then to the nightingales sang so loud all night, that sleep was impossible. I remembered the passage in God Passes By, where Bahá'u'lláh made that statement. I would have thought that I imagined it if the pilgrim from New York had not mentioned it too. One wonders if they are greeting you or issuing a warning. This I can not answer. The second night the birds did not sing, and I did not sleep either. Elmer being very tired slept like a babe. So I will still wonder. The questions were all gone in the morning. The house reeks with a great power and it seems to descend down upon you.

The second day we visited 'Akká. First to the prison. The government now is using it for a mental hospital and no doubt has fixed it up, but it is most distressing. I know that all I needed to see was the prison room where Bahá'u'lláh spent two years of his life, to convince me that the e Bahá'í Faith is God's Bounty for today. No one but a Holy One would have given up a life of luxury to spend his life in this place. It was here the Purest Branch fell through the roof and the family was confined in two adjoining cells. The room is bare with the exception of a pallet on the floor. From there we went to the house of Abud, so named because Abud was the man who owned it, Here again one sees many things belonging to the family. Also the room where the Azdas was revealed and the room where 'Abdu'l-Bahá was married.

Selah took us on a tour of the ancient walled city and the air is so foul that it makes me sick. It is an Arab city with many strange habits. Veiled woman and turbanned men. The streets are narrow and dirty. We measured one street and found it to be 5ft. wide. The great thick gates that clanged shut when Bahá'u'lláh entered the city. Here also we saw the mosque of Eskar, meaning Butcher, it was so named because the governor who built it was so called and caused so many people to be put to death. It was here we heard the call to prayer at 6:30 from the minaret. The Arabs come in their garbs and wash their hands and face in the fountain and then wash their feet. They take their shoes and place them in front of the Mosque and go in to pray.

We saw several of the houses Bahá'u'lláh lived in for short periods of time when first released from prison, along with the house where Shoghi Effendi was born.

From 'Akká we went to Mazreth. The first house Bahá'u'lláh lived in after he left the prison city. One is greeted with such hospitality by the lady who lives there. She shows you through the house and the rooms occupied by the Holy Family. Fresh flowers are kept by the bed at all time. She served us a delicious lunch, including a pudding she makes, which looks and tastes something like cornstarch pudding, This she put the greatest name on top in chocolate.

Then we next went to the garden of Riḍván. Again perhaps you wondered why they spoke of the garden in different ways. The garden of Riḍván where he spent 12 days with his family is at Baghdád. This garden of Riḍván is about 5 miles orth of 'Akká, and where he used to wander and sit in the shade of the trees. Anice stream runs through the place and no doubt it was cool and pleasant to sit in. Then back to Bahjí. The second morning at Bahjí, we all visited the Shrine by ourself. One can stay as long as one likes. This is a great privilege because Shoghi Effendi says the time will come when even Bahá'ís cannot go there. I hope I shall always keep the high ideals I realized at these Holy Places.

About smoking. The Báb forbade it... Bahá'u'lláh revoked the law and never spoke of it again... The Tablet of Purity was written by 'abdu'l-Bahá and it was his wish. However He was not the lawgiver. The Guardian says if you want to smoke... go ahead and smoke. No one is going to stop you. How ever it is still a dirty, expensive habit, and is better if we quit. The greatest Holy leaf, who is the highest symbol of Purity, smoked up until she died at about 85 years old. 'Abdu'l Faz'l was a chain smoker. It is not forbidden.

They were tearing down an old building at Bahjí that was owned by the Covenant breakers that the Bahá'ís had been trying to buy. It was finally condemned by the officials and torn down. They found in a small room at one end of a building a grave and a Christian Altar. Built by the man who built Bahjí, Shoghi Effendi says this must be preserved.

The first night back at the Pilgrim House Shoghi Effendi explains things connected with the shrines. The Most Great Prison is at 'Akká. The remote prison spoken of in the Tablet of Achmad is at Adrianople.

The catastrophe is inevitable and needs be to purge the world. It will be something the world has never seen and will effect every nation country class and creed. The world has high blood pressure and this will be the e blood letting. Blood will run everywhere. It will purge the world and then cement the remnants together. The Administration is the Embryo of the New World Order. The New World Order is the child and it will mature into the World Civilization. There will be no decline in the future. It will be like a spiral, ever upwards. Tehre may be moments that stop, but no decline. This is &The day that is not followed by Night."

There are many ways that people pray. He wants no set ritual. Pray according to your heart. This is not a Persian Religion, but Divine in Origin, world embracing in scope, and spiritual in character. Once materialism is wiped away, it will not return, but a more spiritual world will exist. There will always be evil but it will be more restricted. Man will always have an opportunity to use his will. The next prophet will be persecuted and will bring His own book and laws. There will always be tests. We are approaching the darkest before dawn. no one knows when this can happen but any time/ It will come fast. Anything that happens even to the destruction of the temples in this world for they knew their reward was greater in the next world, but suffering is our greatest development. It gives us the chance to develop our greatest opportunity, The Life God gave Us to live.

In the future there will be no white race.

The new York pilgrims last night came and Shoghi Effendi told her that the first part of her pilgrimage was over and the 2nd part was to impart. Go back and tell the people of New York to get out and particularly pioneer to France. Stay out of Paris. It is the only way to save the individual and also the Faith. Regardless what the government does it cannot prevent the catastrophe.....12,000,000 people in New York cannot be saved. It will come swift and sudden and whole cities will be leveled to the ground.

New York is named the City of the Covenant because it is the most corrupt city in the world..therefore it needs the greatest transformation. Persia is the cradle of the Faith, America the cradle of Administration. America is named because it is the most corrupt nation. Bahá'ís are wasting their time in cities. They must go out to small towns. Cities will not respond until after destruction.

America and Persia must suffer. Bahá'ís must suffer. Bahá'ís must learn to sacrifice because this materialism is hindering our progress in the next world. Life in this world does not matter.

Lack of love in communities hinders our growth.

Bahá'ís cannot belong to the Masons because it is a secret organization and there can be no secret meetings in Bahá'í. Also their policy is not Universal...it is different in the East than the West. Even if your old age depends on it, you must give it up. In no way can you sacrifice Spiritual Principal. A member of any organization must first ask the L.S.A. if they can belong. Even though they are not political in character, their implication may be political. If the L.S.A. cannot answer, contact the National and they must investigate and report back.

I had been noticing the non-use of the Pronoun I. Shoghi Effendi has used it twice both times in referring to "I have incorporated that in God Passes by".

If a believer should be forced to quit his job and is destitute because of an organization the L.S.a. must see that he is taken care of, even to raising a special funds. This is good for the Faith. So many organizations today are corrupt but only the top authority knows the full extent of their principals. The Faith should always come first, regardless of what hardship it entails. We must remember that now all World Forces are against the Bahá'í faith, so Bahá'ís must learn to lean on one another, show forth love that people will be attracted.

There is too much lethargy in American committees. To much committee activity which hampers teaching work and kills the spirit. Teaching is the most important and it is the duty of each believer to teach.

Guardian says he feels things and no doubt but what he knows everything going on in the Cause.

The new Pilgrims arrived from New York, Bob and Keith Quigley. Once again the Guardian talked of the catastrophe. Says America is the most corrupt nation in the world and is contaminating the other nations; therefore it will suffer the worst. I asked if this was war. He said yes and other things too. The most fiery ordeal the world has ever known. The whole world will be like a compulsion. This must be so that it can be cleansed. The flame will cleanse and also weld.

The Báb gave the mandate to scatter, assistance was promised by Bahá'u'lláh. The desire by Bahá'u'lláh. The desire by 'Abdu'l-Bahá and now the Administration says we must disperse. The foundation of this cause was laid by God, the Administration by the institutions and the teaching by individuals. He says: Maintain the Heroes, increase the Saints and lessen the Administrators.

The Islands in the Pacific is most important, and the brown race. He wants young people to go these places and they will be difficult.

Go back and tell the people to disperse. He says it is not enough to be converted to the Faith, You must have the desire to serve and teach.

The first night after we returned from Bahjí, Shoghi Effendi said "Now that you have been to acca, read the two chapters in God Passes By about 'Akká" and before you go to Baghdád read the Chapter referring to Baghdád. The friends told us afterward that they had not heard him make that remark to any other pilgrim. So now we wonder if ours will be the privilege to make that journey.

When the Guardian realizes you have absorbed to capacity, he makes a humorous remark which breaks the tension. One listens so closely.

In the Shrine of the Báb over the Arcade there are blocks designed with a green border and spots of red in it. This denotes the lineage of the Báb and the red denotes blood. In the future there may be inscriptions in these blocks.

Finally the last night of our pilgrimage came, and I felt a little nervous because I was wondering what our duty would be. The Guardian talked at what seemed lengths about the latitudes and longitudes where the Faith was now established. One wonders how he had all the figures at his finger tips. He said those that reject the Administration lose their judgement. They act hastily and make mistakes. Sa'íd to take our filled cup back to Spokane and let it spill over. A plan without organization is not good; and an organization without a plan is not good.

Then quickly he turned to us and said "now tell me your plans for pioneering. We told him that we had thought of going to Central America and as far as we had gotten with plans and He said that is good, that's what I want you to do. You have the special blessing of Bahá'u'lláh and I will say special prayers for you. Life will be different and there will be many hardships but do not get discouraged and be patient and you will be very successful. We both knew that is what we must do and we are proceeding with our plans hoping they materialize quickly.

He gave us each a vial of attar of roses and asked that we anoint the friends with his love. The pilgrims from New York wept uncontrollably, as did the rest. Rhuyyih Khánun said later, that some times the Guardian got her down. It is a very tense moment and one realizes that the first part of the pilgrimage is over and you dread to leave, but one surely feels better prepared to face the next task.

Rhuyyih gave me a pair of prayer beads that had been in the Shrine and Elmer a key ring made from an old persian coin of the Guardians and also a picture of the Guardian when he was a baby.

A few after notes. While in Haifa we visited the cemetery where Esselmont is buried.

Went shopping with Rhuyyih Khánun one afternoon.

When Shoghi Effendi was a little boy he used to say to 'Abdu'l-Bahá that he wished he had a name, as people in that part of the world was known by the name of the place that they lived, but Shoghi Effendi wished it so hard that 'Abdu'l-Bahá gave him the name of Rabbání.

Shoghi Effendi spoke one night at the dinner table that the Faith progressed like an automobile it needs a motor and a battery and Rhuyyih Khánun said "But Shoghi effendi it must have a driver too", and he said #Yes, that is the finger of Bahá'u'lláh. No glory for himself, He is truly humble.

I do not feel that my notes would be complete without telling you of Athens. As we were planning to stop there anyway, we delivered some books to the friends there. It is so difficult to mail anything as mail is censored in Greece. The evening of the Declaration of the Báb, the first Bahá'í in Greece was enrolled. A young man of about 25 years old, and as he did not speak English and they did not speak Greek he was taught through a paid translator. Note: this translator is now studying the Faith for enrollment. This enrollment completed the last virgin territory in Europe. It was a thrilling evening for all.

When we arrived in England, we were so tired of large cities, castles, palaces, and churches, we decided to go to South Hampton, where we would stay for four days until time to embark on the Queen Mary. We had been there about an hour when a man spoke to us and offered to direct us to any place we might want to see. Sa'id hewas just walking around and recognized us as strangers. One does not pick up with strangers in strange countries but he looked so kind that we talked a long while with him. He finally invited us to his house for tea. So after calling his wife we call da cab and went. She was just as lovely and while drinking tea they asked the reason for our trip. So the conversation turned towards telling them of the Faith. They were most receptive, and to make things brief we spent all of our time with them. They got special permit to board the queen Mary so they might be with us and brought a bouquet of roses for our cabin. AS they went up the gang plank their last words were, "You are the first BAha'is we have met but you won't be the last for we will hunt them up." AS our boat sailed we received a telegram from them. We feel that this visit was a wonderful part of our pilgrimage and hope that the first to Bahá'is in SouthHampton will be the lovely friends we met in England.

It is our wish that each one of the friends can some day make the pilgrimage and we know that no sacrifice, in order to make it.

Gladys and Elmer Beasley.

The following {{p1}} points are things which the Guardian said which concern Latin America:

When I conveyed to him the loving greetings of the Bahá'ís of South America, he said: "I am pleased with Latin America." Then he asked: "How are the friends in South America?" "Are they working? Are they progressing? Are they firm in the Cause of God?" I answered: "Yes, but we still have a long way to go before we can say it is satisfactory."

Then he asked: "Are they now familiar with the Institution of the Hands?" I said, yes and that we had received the visit of some of the Hands. He said: "I am looking forward to the time when there will be a Hand in South America and one in Central America."

I asked: "How can we create a greater sense of individual responsibility in South America?" He said: "They must be encouraged to have it. They need much encouragement. The Assemblies there are nascent, not even infant yet, just nascent. that is why we must be patient."

He said one Ḥaẓíra was destroyed (referring to one in Tīhrán) but 40 were gained. He asked me about the countries that had their Ḥaẓíras and endowments in South America. He then said: "It is very important that they all get these before April. The present Ḥaẓíras are only temporary. This is just a start. They will be improved upon in the future."

It is essential that the Bahá'ís do not become involved in politics especially in Latin America where the governments are very unstable. The Bahá'í Faith is supra-national, supra-natural. It is divine. We are above politics. Becoming involved in politics is particularly dangerous in Latin America. We are patriotic but not nationalistic. We are more than patriotic. We uphold patriotism but maintain that it is not enough. We are above nations and above parties. “We are,” ‘Abdu’l-Bahá said, “the party of God.” We are promoting God’s policy. We love the world and by loving the world, we love our own nation. Bahá’u’lláh said: “Let not a man glory in that he loves his country but rather in that he loves his kind.” By making this statement, this is what Bahá’u’lláh meant: A Bahá’í can be a candidate for Parliament providing he does not become affiliated with a party.

It is not enough to convert to the Faith. The new believer must develop spiritually and arise to teach others. Conversion should not be the goal of the teacher. The goal is that the new believer should arise to teach others. This is why progress in Africa is so extraordinary. The new believers go out and teach others.

The friends must teach with determination and patience. If the process is slow, they must not become discouraged, but to have determination is important.

As to how to attract the Indians, he said: “Attract them through friendliness and kindness. Give them preference in everything; not only equality but preference, preferential treatment. Teaching the Indians is very important. Not only establish contact but convert them. Then they must take part in the administrative activities of the Faith. Do you remember what the Master said about the American Indians? He compared them with the Arabs at the time of Muḥammad. The Indians must be given preferential treatment. The Bahá’ís must treat them just the opposite of the way the others treat them. Amongst the Bahá’ís, the minorities in any country must be given preferential treatment. If there is a tie between two believers for anything, and one is of a minority group, there must not be a second vote. Preference must be given to the believer of the minority group. {{p2}} The Spanish and Portuguese speaking people must not monopolize the field (he said with humor). The Indians must be attracted.

This is very important. In north america, the minority groups are the Negroes and the Indians. In Latin America, the only minority group is the Indian.

A Bahá’í cannot practice spiritualism or be a medium. In the case of a Bahá’í who does this, don’t expel him immediately; give him time and be patient. Quietly and gently point out to him that he must give up this practice. Spiritualism is a fancy. In most cases, they think they are communicating with the spirits, but they are not. As to the question as to how to approach the spiritualists, the GUARDIAN said: “Avoid them and look for the people that are seeking the Faith. There are many that are seeking that are not involved in these practices. One must search for the seeking ones. In looking for these, do not limit yourself to your own group or friends. Associate with others. Association is different from affiliation. Live and associate with the natives of the country in which one is pioneering. Attract the local element.

If the believers are firm in the Faith, they will leave other organizations. A person cannot belong to something that has principles and teachings that are in conflict with the Faith. Otherwise, he is not faithful to either the Faith or the other organization. Firmness in the Faith is what is needed. The more attracted the Bahá'í becomes to Bahá'u'lláh, the more dedicated he will become. Increased attachment to Bahá'u'lláh is what is needed and this will draw them away from other things.

- From another Woolson Pilgrim Note manuscript, this passage appears here: *

Enkindle the heart; touch the heart. If the approach is the intellect they will not detach themselves from other organizations. If the heart is touched they will make the sacrifice. Much tact, much patience is needed. Do not tell them from the beginning that they have to leave their organizations. They can be taken in while still belonging to them but eventually and finally they will have to detach themselves from them. Much tact, much wisdom and patience must be used.

In the case of Masons who want to become Bahá'ís, tell them that there are things in Freemasonry that are not in accordance with the Bahá'í Faith, for example, secrecy, and see what their reaction is. Don't be rigid. Don't make it hard for people to come into the Faith. Let them come in and then continue deepening them and touching the heart until they are firm. Give them a chance. First: Touch the heart by creating love for God and for Bahá'u'lláh, attachment to Bahá'u'lláh. Second: be creating love for their fellow-men. Then they will become re-created. They are moving too slowly in South America.

The National Assembly of South America must encourage the believer, it must stimulate them. They must become re-created, become aflame. It is easy for the Latin Americans to be set aflame, They must not lean on the North American. We must have unity in essentials, but in non-essentials we must stimulate diversity so that each country will have its own spirit in the work and not the North American spirit.

Latin America has a great future. The Latin Americans are "associates" of the North Americans. The North Americans are the "champion builders". The Canadians are the "Allies". The Latin Americans are the "Associates". All the rest are "auxiliaries".

Work with the weak places, not the strong ones. Give special attention to the weak ones until their roots are firmly planted.

More sacrifice is needed. The more sacrifice is involved, the more effective the Bahá'í work will be. Of course, all work is effective, but the degree of effectiveness is greater when sacrifice is involved. In Latin America, they do not exert enough effort.

The Guardian spoke of four steps in the progress of the Faith:

- 1) Consolidation (building the Administrative Order)
- 2) Extension (of the teaching)
- 3) Publicity
- 4) Proclamation

Publicity has been given to the Faith all over the world due to persecutions in one country. {{p3}} The persecutions have given the Faith more publicity than the consolidation work and more than the teaching work. Publicity and proclamation are associated with the enemies of the Cause. If there has been world publicity through persecution in one country, what will it be like when all the countries persecute us; not only the ecclesiastics but the civil authorities as well. The Master has prophecies that both the ecclesiastics and the civil authorities would persecute us. The Bahá'ís of Latin America must be prepared to face this persecution and accept that it must come. The enemies will be the ones to give publicity and to proclaim the Cause. We will handle the consolidation and the propagation, and the enemies will handle the publicity and the proclamation." "Proclamation" of the Faith is different from "publicity." "Proclamation" will come only after persecution of the churches and the governments. In America, Australia, Africa, Europe, all except in Persia, we have not been persecution. Proclamation can only come after persecution.

The question was asked: If all the Prophets teach the same spiritual teachings, why does Buddha teach the existence of reincarnation and Bahá'u'lláh not? The Guardian answered: "Not Buddha — the Buddhist priests. We do not have the original writings of Buddha, nor of Krishna, nor even of Zoroaster. We have the Gathas of Zoroaster which are authentic but these are only prayers. That is why Bahá'u'lláh and the Master do not quote these Prophets as we do not have their original writings. There are many books in these religions but they are not the original works. Bahá'u'lláh and 'Abdu'l-Bahá quote the Qur'án which is authentic, and authentic verses of the New Testament, but do not quote these other Prophets for this reason. The Bahá'ís must be very appreciative of the fact that we have the original authentic works of the Báb, Bahá'u'lláh and 'Abdu'l-Bahá.

He again said: The believers must become recreated, must be set afire, then they will leave these beliefs. They must become enkindled, they will accept all Bahá'u'lláh's sayings just because just because He says it. If they are afire, they will accept all that we say, and they will become detached from these beliefs. The important thing is to set them afire.

Then he said, it should be easy for the Latins to become enkindled because of their temperment. I said, yes, but they don't always stay lit. He said, The NSA must encourage them.

He turned to me and said, referring to South America: do the friends realize that the Ĥazíras are the seats of the future Houses of Justice? They are a combination of Washington Pentagon and the Supreme Court. The Ĥazíra is one building which is the seat of either national or local Assemblies. In Haifa, the series of Administration buildings would constitute the World Ḥaẓíra. He then referred to the four world Administrative buildings that would be constructed in Haifa, saying, the Archives Building is for preservation; the Guardianship building is for Interpretation; the Building of the Hands is for Propagation and the Building of the Universal House of Justice is for Legislation.

The Institution of the Hands is superior to the Universal House of Justice and the NSAs, just as the cabinet is superior to Parliament. The Hands are like the Ministers of the cabinet. The Institution of Hands constitutes the eyes. The Auxiliary Boards will have their Auxiliary Board under them. {{p4}} These institutions will evolve.

The A R K (he spelled this out) will be built around the Arc. We are building the seat of the Ark of Safety. The only Ark of Safety is the Administrative Order. Noah's Ark was built and the deluge came. This Ark is being built and the deluge will come. A Persian pilgrim, pioneering in Arabia, told me this afternoon (the Guardian was relating to us) that he had found a Muḥammadan tradition which says that two-thirds of the world's population will be destroyed. How exactly this coincides with the prophecy of the New Testament regarding the destruction of two-thirds of the people. I wouldn't be surprised if this literally happens. There are too many people in the world anyway, and many of them are corrupt. But there will be enough left to build the world Order of Bahá'u'lláh. Latin America is relatively safe because it is far away from the danger zone. The U.S. is in danger, Ṭíhrán is in great danger, also North Africa.

The Towers of Babel today of today are the sky-scrappers. These will be destroyed. the people of the tower of Babel were haughty, proud, filled with vain-glory; they had turned away from God and were arrogant and God punished them. This will happen again for the same reason. The world is in the same condition today. The protection for the Bahá'ís is in dispersing. This is good for the Cause and for themselves. (Then he repeated Protection for the Bahá'ís is in dispersal.

The lesser peace will come will come not through a Federation of Nations, but through a world federal government.

In three years, the 2500 centers we had in the world were raised to 3700. One-hundred of these were in Latin America. The Faith is now established in 243 territories. There are four islands left that do not have pioneers and it is because they are privately owned. We are now entering into the third phase of the world Crusade which will be the most brilliant phase as its objective will be to create 50 NSAs to amplify the basis for the Universal House of Justice. We have 12 NSAs now, we will have three more in Africa this year, and 13 next year, four of which will be in Latin America and one in Alaska.

The first phase of the world crusade lasted one year and consisted of the opening of the virgin territories. One-hundred were opened. The second phase lasted two years, during which time forty Ḥaẓíras were purchased. the third phase will have as its main objective the widening of the basis for the Universal House of Justice. by establishing more NSAs.

Then Shoghi Effendi asked me, “which country of South America do you think would be most envied if it branched off with its own NSA. I said, I did not know. He said, “Chile has the most centers, hasn’t it?” And I said yes. Then he said, “a country that would branch off with its own NSA would be a great stimulus to the others to do the same thing.

Bahá’ís from northern countries of South America should reinforce the islands near them, like the Galapagos Islands, Juan Ferandez, Margarita and Trinidad. These are near the coast. I’m not asking them to go somewhere in the middle of the sea.

Just as Africa excelled Latin America, the Islands of the Pacific will excel Africa.

The last day I was in Haifa, the Guardian said to me, “I want you to emphasize wherever you go, that the friends must not make an effort to teach the Syrians, especially in Brazil, particularly in Sao Paulo. Many have migrated there from Palestine and they are envious of the Faith. They will cause trouble later. Latin America is not mature enough yet to face the difficulties that these people would create. Latin American must develop normally and healthily. It would be unhealthy for the Latin American communities to have these troubles at this time. Later, when the communities are stronger, they can take the risk, but not to antagonize them. If one meets up with them, treat them kindly. They will create much trouble in the future so it is better to make no effort to attract them.

- This appeared here from another Woolson Pilgrim Note manuscript: *

Personal note: The Syrians of Palestine hate Israel as that land was taken away from them to be given to the Jews. {{p5}} Now they see how the Bahá’í Faith is beautifying Israel with its World Center building gardens and it has made them envious. in their effort to attack Israel, the Bahá’í Faith will also be a target.

In reference to Ahmāḍ Sohrab, the Guardian said, “He is trying to copy our organization. At first he attacked organization, now he sees it is more effective. We have Assemblies, he has chapters. We have a fund, he established a fund. We have conferences, he has conferences.” The Guardian asked me if he has spread his organization to South America. I answered, a little literature, but not much. He said when you meet a member of this group (the New History Society or Caravan) ignore them. Do not try to convert them, it is no use now. When he dies, they will all become Bahá’ís. Our enemy is doing us a favor. Ignore them and be confident. Do not be afraid.

The Guardian asked me, “Do the believers in Latin America keep the Fast?” I said, some do and some don’t. He said, “They must be encouraged to observe the Bahá’í Laws.”

The more we dominate our instincts, the more successful our work is.

It is more meritorious in the sight of God to go as a settler than as a visiting teacher. It is more effective.

The enemies are vigilant for anything to attack.

He gave Leroy Ioas some instructions concerning the arc and the spiral garden connected to it which is being developed now, then he said, "The arc is very important as the administrative buildings are around it."

Another day, after talking about a new star in the new garden (an eight pointed star outlined by the short shrubs) he said, "There are many stars going up on Mount Carmel. The stars of heaven have fallen on mount Carmel (Smilingly), This fulfills the prophecy that the stars shall fall from heaven. The eight pointed star in the gardens at Bahjí surrounding the Shrine of Bahá'u'lláh, represents the submission of the Báb to Bahá'u'lláh.

One of the Persian pilgrims at Haifa when I was, told me that one of the Persian men in their group had asked the Guardian about his descendants, about a son, and the Guardian answered, "Everything that is written in the Will and Testament will be fulfilled. The Bahá'ís must not be anxious about this."

Extracts of comments of the Guardian:

Latin America: Shoghi Effendi said that in Latin America the foundation on (of the Faith) is small but firm - the administrative foundation is good, the friends are united and that is good. The Guardian said on another occasion that Latin 'America is being affected by the materialism of the U.S.A. On yet another occasion the Guardian said that the big problem of North America is that it is corrupt, and of Latin America is that it is immoral.

On the occasion of last dinner with our beloved Guardian, he spoke much about Latin America. He said the Latin Americans are a very warm and sensitive people so we must be very warm and affectionate with them. We must make no distinction in our conduct toward them. Do not let them imagine that we prefer Americans or Europeans. They will respond to genuine affection. He said a great deal of patience is required and care not to offend them. He said: You must love them. He said that Latin America had a great future. He also said that the North Americans and the Latin Americans could learn much from each other. The Americans can demonstrate their initiative and administrative ability and imbibe the warmth and affection of the Latin; .

...The Guardian left the dinner at nine o'clock and Rúhíyyih Khánum stayed and talked with us until 10. She spoke about the great importance of making friends for the Faith — all friends who are influential in the countries. She said we cannot afford to ignore the non-Bahá'ís. We make friends by showing kindnesses and hospitality. She spoke much about the importance of action. She said that Shoghi Effendi works like a machine, and the whole Cause goes forward — action, action, action. She said we cannot afford to be introspective and worrying about whether we are doing our 'best but rather to remember that ‘Abdu’l-Bahá said that the road to self-mastery is self-forgetfulness. She said that Shoghi Effendi is always stressing the golden mean — balance, balance, balance. The Guardian is organizing the forces of the Bahá’ís to spread the Cause. The need of the hour is for action. She said it is a duty to teach everybody to give them the opportunity to hear about the Faith. They are culpable for not having sought. She said that we depend too much on ourselves in doing our teaching and not enough on prayer. She told about a woman who Confirmed contacts by offering the Tablet of Ahmad every morning at dawn 9 times. These contacts had the experience of awakening at that time according to their own later testimony and experiencing thoughts along the lines of the Bahá’í teachings, and wonderful inspirations. These contacts became Bahá’ís.

Regarding prayer, Rúhíyyih Khánum stressed the importance of the quality of the prayer. She said she felt that another important use of prayer was for changing the character. We can pray for the great qualities and those can be received. And then of Course we must exercise them. She said that our prayers are always answered, but not always in the way we expect. Prayer can remove the “worms” from the heart. ‘Abdu’l-Bahá said that prayer removes the dust from the mirror of the heart...

That night at dinner, the Guardian...spoke eloquently on world development according to the Plan of Bahá ‘u ‘llah. He said that the World Order of Bahá ‘u ‘llah is the Kingdom — the promised establishment of the Kingdom of God on earth! He said that the great world civilization which would follow would be the consequence of the establishment of the World Order.

The Revelation of Bahá ‘u ‘llah he said, like the seed — the fertilized germ. The Administrative Order which we are establishing today, is the embryo! The Birth of the Child would mark the beginning of the World Order of Bahá ‘u ‘llah; and this would also mark the beginning of the Golden Age of Bahá ‘u ‘llah’s Revelation. When this allegorical child reaches maturity, we will then be launched upon the stage of the World Civilization!

The fertilized germ was bestowed in the Heroic Age and nourished by the blood of the martyrs. The embryonic is also termed the Formative Age — the World Order will usher in the Golden Age!

The Guardian proceeded to restate this in another allegory — that of the plant. The Revelation is the seed, — the Administrative Order is the growing plant; the World Order is the flowering of that plant, and the World Civilization is the fruit of that plant! We were told that the world civilization will come under succeeding Manifestations, Who, although They will be under the shadow of Bahá ‘u ‘llah, will bring new laws and new ordinances for the new world!

The Guardian — assured us that the World Order of Bahá ‘u ‘llah will never decline: It will have difficulties and some regressions (or set-backs) but it will continue to advance into the fulfillment of the World Civilization — the first World Civilization of this planet!

Shoghi Effendi said on the occasion of my last night in Haifa, that the World Civilization will witness the realization of the development of the great capacities inherent within man, of which we at the present time have absolutely no conception! He said that the evolution in t o each of these stages creates new unities, both within and among men and releases great potentials for further development.

This great vision of the future is what we in the Formative Age are working for!

He said that the immediate future of mankind is very dark — the distant future unimaginably glorious! He said that the world must suffer greatly first — especially America — especially her great cities.

Haifa Notes Of Mohtadi

Fridays November 23:

While visiting the Holy shrines at sunset, the Guardian evoke thus: “More teen half a million square meters (a third of a million meters in Haifa are a third in the city of ‘Akká) are in possession of the Cause, and the government has exempted all this property from taxation. The purchasing began at the time of His Holiness, ‘Abdu’l-Bahá but was limited. In spite of the great increase in area, even now the Israel government has not taxed the property & neither has the municipality. Therefore, we do not pay a cent. The NSA and LSA in Japan must endeavor to get the endowed properties exempt from taxation. According to the ten-year plan, the friends must establish 49 Hasirat’ul’quds. At present, 46 have been founded. There must be three more, one of which must, by all means, be in Venezuela. Also one in Stockholm (and according to Dr. Giachery in Rome, the third is to be in Lisbon.) All this will testify to the endeavors of the believers.

According to the 10-year plan, 11 Mashriqu’l’Adhkars must be built, ten of which have already been scheduled and there must be one in Sweden. The world is upset, but the Cause is at rest (The affairs of the Cause are orderly.) The Mashriqu’l’Adhkars for spiritual affairs and the Hasirat’ul’quds for administrative affairs are complements of each other.

November 27:

(On eve of the ascension of ‘Abdu’l-Bahá, at about 10 O’clock while the Guardian was walking, towards the shrines, he said, “You are visiting on behalf of the Persians, the Japanese and the American friends. During the Master’s time, one of the maid-servants of God (Agnes Alexander) went to Japan for spreading the teaching. The result is seen now”. After returning from the Holy Shrines the Guardian came to the Oriental pilgrims’ house and spoke about the prophecies of Bahá’u’lláh and ‘Abdu’l-Bahá. Among other things, he said, “The Cause is progressing in Japan now. Very soon it must go to China and Russia. The people in Japan and Germany are very receptive now, because for some time they have been afflicted with the revolution. His Holiness, Bahá’u’llá said, “My calamity is providence; outwardly it is fire I’d vengeance, but inwardly it is light, A mercy.” Also He said, “An unforeseen calamity is following you,” and in another place He said, “There shall suddenly appear that which shall cause the limbs of mankind to quake.” Both expressions mean the same: Greatest calamity, greatest justice, and then the greatest peace.

“The number countries blessed by the Cause now totals 250: the number of centers is 4000, the number of Spiritual Assemblies is 1000, and the number of islands reached more than 100. On the Pacific Islands and among the yellow race, the progress of the Cause is very great, like that of the time of the Báb. Such progress has not been seen before in the history of the Cause. Before the beginning of the 10-year plan, the Cause had reached only 30 islands, but after starting the crusade 70 more islands have been added. There are 1500 centers in America. In Latin America, more than 150 centers. In England the number has reached 100. In Germany, the centers have exceeded 150. In Írán there are only 900 centers at present, but this number must be increased to 1000. In India there are more than 150. The friends in Australia have established more than 100 centers. In Africa alone, centers no total more than 1000.”

After a description of the Ascension of ‘Abdu’l-Bahá and the chanting of a prayer at about one o’clock in the morning, when the time came to go to the Shrine, the Guardian, while walking, said, “Some of the articles of the Will and Testament must be printed in Japanese. The tablets of the Will and Testament are steps in the development of the Bahá’í use.

Wednesday, Nov. 28th:

On the grounds around the shrines the Guardian said: “Centers must be increased by All means: individual centers are preliminary to Spiritual Centers; spiritual center are preliminary to National Assemblies. The arising, of the friends in service according to the blessed Will and Testament must be a loving arising; it must be general and serious. After arising in service, they must spread far and wide in different localities like the Disciples of Christ. They must endeavor to develop the Centers into Local Assemblies. This depends upon the degree service and the steadfastness of the friends. Then soon the Local Assemblies will evolve into National ones. During next year, 13 National Assemblies will be added to the 12 existing ones, and must, according to the 19-year plan, total 60: t Three assemblies in Europe, one in Scandinavia, Finland and Denmark; one in Holland, Belgium and Luxemburg, and the third in Spain and Portugal. Five Assemblies in America: two in Central America, two in South America and one in Alaska. One Assembly in Japan. One in Indonesia and one in Pakistan. One assembly in Arabia, with the efforts of the Persian friends in Bahrain; the first center in that region with Faizi, the founder. The Thirteenth Assembly is to be in New Zealand.

The Persian friends must influence the Japanese friends to rise in spreading the Cause. The Persian friends must rise and go to places where no one has gone before. Naturally, in the beginning it is very hard, but little by little it becomes easier. Miss Alexander went to Japan during the lifetime of ‘Abdu’l-Bahá and was the only one; see the difference now. The friends must pay attention to the promises of the Blessed Perfection.

Thursday, November 29:

“In all countries there must be archives; National and Local. National archives must be in the capital and local ones in towns and villages. One section of the Ḥaẓíra must be specified for Archives.

“The Cause has become widespread and my responsibilities are increasing. The world too, is upset. The Blessed Perfection has said that “after a while the governments of the earth will all change and persecutions will dominate.” The evidences have already been manifested. Then Bahá’u’lláh makes mention of revolution and says that Wafter revolution the sun of justice will rise from the hidden, horizon.” By the “Sun of Justice” is meant the most great justice. The persecutions will bring, about the Most Great Justice of God. Bahá’u’lláh also says, “The world’s equilibrium hath been upset through the vibrating influence of this most frost, this new World Order.” Notice there are two orders; the first is the order of the world. The second is the New Order, friends must be confident and strive to establish the New Order. The 10-year plan is for this very purpose. This plan consists of spreading organizing, strengthening, and beautifying. Conquering the continents and the island; is to spread the Cause of the Blessed Perfection. Then administering and strengthening the affairs pertaining to the Cause, i.e., establishing Ḥaẓírat’ul’Quds, founding endowments, enlarging the scope of publications, and forming assemblies is for strengthening the New Order. After this comes the beautifying, such as the building of the Holy Shrines of the Bah and their surroundings, which are silent teachers to all observers. They consist of establishments and enlargement of the Holy places and their beautifying. It must be like this in other countries also.

The more severe the revolution the greater the conquest. The blessed Beauty was imprisoned, but God willed and the place of the Shrine of His Holiness, the Báb, was established. In the midst of the antagonism of the Covenant breakers, His Holiness, ‘Abdu’l-Bahá placed the body of the He on Mount Carmel. At the very time of greatest interference on the part of the Turkish Government inspector, ‘Abdu’l-Bahá started the construction of the Holy Shrines. During the conflict between the Arabs and Jew the Holy Shrines were built.

Friday Nov. 20:

“The land for ten Mashriqu’l-Adhkárs has been bought. Now the friends must work for their construction. In Írán the building of the temple has been postponed. In compensation, two more temples must be built which will make these in all. I have given instructions to Mr. Charles Mason Reney to choose the plans for the tempi in Africa. The one in Australia, which according to the Will of the Master is to be built in Sidney, I mean to have built soonest. The land has been purchased. Endeavoring to obtain land for temples, Risings and endowments are all tasks for the Crusade. In Latin America, also, the localities are chosen; one in Panama and one in Chile. Today, I received the glad tidings that one of the Argentinian friends has donated the land for the Mashriqu'l-Adhkár. Therefore, the property for two temples is at hand; one in Argentina and the other in Chile. In Canada also the land has been set aside. In Cairo, too, the land has been purchased by the river of the Nile. The temple property in Baghdád is on the shore of the River Tigris, and is land blessed by Bahá'u'lláh's passing over it. In the capital of India, also the temple property has been bought. Property for three temples have been set aside in Africa, one in the north (Cairo); one in the center (Kampala, Uganda), in the very heart of the continent, the one chosen to be the mother temple of Africa; and the third in the south, in Johannesburg."

"In America, three temples properties are in hand; one in Canada, one in Penang and one in Chile.

"In Asia two temples, one in India and one in Baghdád. In Europe three, one in the north Stockholm of (which the land has not yet been bought); one in Frankfurt, the heart of Europe, chosen be the mother temple of Europe; and one in Rome for Southern Europe. In the Kitábi-Aqdas mention is made of the Mashriqu'l-Adhkár. In the Holy Land the spacious property purchased on the summit Of Mount Carmel is for the Temple. The Mashriqu'l-Adhkár is for worship, the Shrines are for visitation, and the Administrative Centers (Ḥaẓíras) are for service. Now the friends must prepare to help build the Temple in the Holy Land."

The construction of the Shrines is two parts; the inside compartments are like unto pearls and outlier parts are the shells used for the protection of the pearls. This shell is both for protection and for beauty. The inner compartments are left as they were, The Holy places in Bahjí & 'Akká are not yet illuminated with electricity; they still have the same old-fashioned oil lamps. They are kept in the original fashion because in that way they are more impressive. In Persia, too, the Holy places must remain in the original fashion, especially the BEIT (House) in Shíráz which is a place of pilgrimage. Most of the Holy Places in Írán have been bought. Endeavor must be made to have the rest purchased as well and around the Holy places there must be gardens and parks especially in Chihriq and Mahku, and the blessed place of Martyrdom in Tabriz. Efforts must be made for the purchase of those in Chihriq and Mahku, but the place of the Martyrdom of the Báb's still hard to obtain.

Saturday, December 1:

"America more than Europe, Europe more than Asia, and Asia more than Africa: All are alarmed and dismayed. Those who are more bound with materialism are more frightened Moderation is best in everything, Excessive patriotism leads to prejudice. His Holiness, Bahá'u'lláh says, "Verily, ere long cities shall burn in its flame." (the flame of prejudice.) The friends are promulgating the New Order, The New order is the child of the covenant of the Blessed Perfection, and is the introduction to the establishment of the Divine Civilization and Divine Kingdom, which shall soon come into existence. The world revelation will give place first to the Lesser Peace and then to the Most Great Peace, the beginning of which was the Year Sixty (1844). First, there was the Declaration of His Holiness, the Báb; then came the Year Nine, B.E. (1855); then came the Declaration of the Gauss in Baghdád; then followed the Announcement of the Cause to the Sovereigns and the Clergy in Adrianople; then came the founding of the Covenant; and now we have the New Order which is the Child of the Covenant of the Blessed Perfection. After the establishment of the New Order will come the Lesser Peace, which is the forerunner of the Most Great Peace. After that will come the Divine Civilization. This Divine Civilization will rise in future generations as the result of the Most Great Peace. In this Dispensation the New Order is established. The present phenomena are • the introduction to the New Order. The Unity of Mankind will not be proclaimed until the Lesser Peace is established. The Unity of Nations will be the result of the Divine Civilization. The principle of unity leads to the Divine Civilization. Now is the period of discord, a time of contention and warfare, a time of purification. This strife and warfare will purify and unite. They will purify the hearts and unite the nations. That is why the friends must not be upset. They must have the assurance of the heart. They must know as clear as day light that all this is the fulfillment of the promises of God.”

Sunday, December 2:

“Today I was occupied in assigning the number of representatives of the 13 Spiritual Conventions of America, Europe, Asia, Africa and Australia. Last year 5 NSA’s were formed in Africa. Now in the four other continents they must establish NSA’s. More than 300 representatives will take part in the 15 Conventions in electing the 13 National Assemblies. The representatives will be elected from places where Local Spiritual Assemblies are established; e.g.; the number of representatives in Japan and surrounding islands, such as Korea, will be 19, because the number of Local Assemblies total more than 9. Also in Southeast Asia and in Pakistan. Now there are 20 Local Assemblies in Pakistan. Hence, 5 representatives will be elected in Pakistan because the number of Local Assemblies has exceeded 19. In New Zealand the representatives will not be more than 9 because it is the beginning of the week there. Also in Arabia.”

On the continent of Europe, three NSA’s will be established. For the election of these three Assemblies, three Conventions will meet. The number of representatives in these conventions will vary. In some it is 10 while in others 9 or 38.

“In South & Central America more than 50 Local Spiritual Assemblies will take part. The number of representatives is 38 (2 x 19). In South America 76 representatives will take part to elect two National Spiritual Assemblies. Each Convention has 58 representatives. The total number of representatives in South and Central America is 152 (2 x 76). The total number of representatives in the Conventions of the four continents, America, Europe, and Asia as Australia exceeds 500. I will give the glad tidings at the time of Ridván; you may tell the friends orally now.”

“The NSA’s will be elected by the electors, men and women. The limper varies according to the number of believers. This is the principle of the New Order.

It is not by preference. It is general and free.

“The election of the representatives of the Universal House of Justice is of the third degree-form; NSA’s: second degree form, and Las first degree form, the last elected directly by the people from among 9 or more. The NSA’s are elected by representatives of the communities. The MIAs will then elect the representatives of the Universal House of Justice. This is according to the instructions in the book of the Will & Testament, wherein is mentioned the special House of Justice, which are these very NSA fee are now in the third stage of the IQ-yr Plan of the Great Crusade. In the first stage, about 100 countries and islands were conquered. In the second year of the Plan, the friends entered the second stage of the Crusade. In this second stage the friends started to establish Ḥaḏíras, endowments, the buying of Temple grounds and the Increasing of the centers and forming assemblies use goals were the second stages of the Crusade and lasted two years. In the third stake, friends must centralize their efforts in forming NSA’s. The first duty of the crusaders in the third stage is increasing the NSAs. The first duty of the Crusaders in the third stage is increasing the NSA’s. In the second year (third stage), the establishment of 13 NSAs, and also the initiation of the founding of the Mashriqu’l-Adhkárs. This great Crusade is in stages. It is for the establishment o Na and also the founding of Temples. More than $600,000 has been expended for the purchases of Ḥaḏíras, and 100,000 for endowment together about 5/4 of a million dollars. Of the • 49 Ḥaḏíras, 46 have been bout, and 3 are still to be purchased. And of the 50 endowment which are to be bought only 7 countries remain in which they have not as yet been purchased. The friends must now concentrate their efforts on the founding of the Temples on subscription to funds for their construction. (Endowments, Ḥaḏíras & Temples) The Land for ten Temple has been bought for more than $100,000.

His Holiness, the Báb, says “Leave your cities to help the Cause of God.” This is the clear command of the Báb. It is a Spiritual crusade, not political. It is for the arousing to life of the people, not for killing them. The obvious promise of the Blessed Perfection in regard to pioneering is The Holy Spirit will help and assist those who leave their homes.” Also, is the most earnest exhortation in the Will of ‘Abdu’l-Bahá, Who said, that after Him they should follow the example of the Disciples of Christ. The command of the Báb. Promise of Bahá’u’lláh and the Will of ‘Abdu’l-Bahá. Now is the time of fulfillment. The establishment of the Cause developing the Administrative Order, and spreading out these together are fulfillment.

“The number of colored believers in some localities exceeds 500. In the Pacific Ocean, the brown race has localities with more than 500 believers. The adherents among the yellow race of China and Japan and the red-skinned race of America are ever increasing.

“After the conflict between the Arabs and the Jews, I encouraged the friends to buy the land about the Holy Shrine; otherwise, today it would have been impossible to do so. The Holy Shrine would have been surrounded by the dwelling-places of the Jews. The friends took advantage of the opportunity. The head and the heart of Mount Carmel are in possession of the friends and the tail is in the hands of the Jews.

Monday, December 5:

“In Venezuela there is one Spiritual Assembly in the capital and only four isolated centers, but in Brazil there are 3 Assemblies & 11 centers; that is pioneering in Venezuela is preferred to pioneering in Brazil. In Latin America, there are 20 republics, but the number of Assemblies & centers is few. The friends must spread out and go to places where there are no Bahá'ís. Those coming from outside too, must start new centers. When you travel to South America you must not live in the capitals. None have entered towns and villages yet; that is individual centers must develop more in Persia also, the development of individual centers must be emphasized by Mr. Furútan, and members of the Spiritual Assemblies. Living in capitals is dangerous. The world is upset. And people to travel to Europe must prefer villages to towns because they are more peaceful. The friends in Írán must endeavor to increase the centers and bring them up to 1000 or more. They must strive to get into Afghánistán by way of Korassan which is near it. Afghánistán has preference but it is necessary to pioneer in Afghánistán & Baluchistan.”

I asked, if in future calamities the friends in Írán would be safe. The Guardian benevolently answered, “It is my hope that they may be safe, but they must leave the Capital.” Then he continued, “In the last ten years the land on Mt. Carmel has been purchased and endowed to the Holy Shrines. A part of this property was turned over to and registered in the name of branches of the NSA's branches of the NSA of America, England, Canada, Australia and Írán. The land above the Shrine is registered in the name of the branch of the NSA of Írán, although the Assembly itself is not acknowledged by the Government of Írán as yet, but its branch is registered here. $18,000 was paid for this property. Henceforth, little by little, endowments will be made in the name of other branches of other Assemblies. All will be joint land-owners in the Holy Land. This is the beginning of endowments in the Holy Land. More than 180 Assemblies are formally registered in the Bahá'í world. Of this number, 80 are in one country, the USA. In Írán & Iraq none is registered yet. Ten NSAs and 140 LAs are registered. In Írán, too, the NSAs and the LAs should be registered. The registration of the Assemblies is for the endowments. Local endowments in the name of local Assemblies, & national endowments in the name of NSA: will be registered. Afterwards, in the Holy Land, endowments will be registered in the name of the Universal House of Justice. The land owned around the Shrine of Bahá'u'lláh (Haram'i'Aqdas) is also registered. The premises about the Shrine of the Báb are called Haram'i'Ashraf. All this is the effect of the Tablet of Carmel. In America, Bahá'í endowments have exceeded $3,000,000, and all are registered in the name of the NSA Temples, Ḥaḏíras & schools are all in the name of organizations & not individuals. Here we do not pay a cent of taxes, although the government has taxed other endowments, even those of the Jews. This privilege is granted only to the Bahá'ís.

“Friends must travel for pioneering. They must start new centers, from assemblies. Registration comes after formation, and transferring after registration endowments are transferred to the name of the Assemblies. The principles of the Bahá'ís endowment is powerful indestructible.

Tuesday, December 4:

“The Tablet of Carmel was written on the premises of the Mashriqu'l-Adhkár lot (on the Mount). The tent of the Blessed Perfection was pitched on this lot which was blessed by His steps. In the future, the Mashriqu'l-Adhkár on Mt. Carmel and that in Írán will be constructed. When the time comes it will be made possible.” Then the Beloved Guardian spoke about a new pilgrim, Mr. Bill Carr, who had arrived the day before, and said “This person is a pioneer in Greenland. He is a Canadian. The future of the Dominion of Canada is very great, and the events connected with it infinitely glorious.” “His Holiness, ‘Abdu'l-Bahá, said these very words.”. Greenland is situated 78 degrees above the Equator. The good news of the opening of the Franklin Island, 75 degrees above the Equator, was formerly given. The pioneering locality of this person is 7 degrees above. In Europe pioneering has extended as far north in Norway as 75 degrees. I am now encouraging friends to go to Spitsbergen which is 80 degrees north (10 degrees below the North Pole.)

The Beloved Guardian also quoted these votes of the Blessed Perfection: “In the western and northern regions people will arise!” meaning the time has now come for this to be realized.

At the time of the writing of the Kitáb'i'Aqdas, not even 15 localities had been opened (and the Faith had not reached the northern regions. It was only in the temperate region. Now, the meaning of the phrase, “Worship must be performed by the clock & not by the sun” is made evident.

“Friends have sent Bahá'í books and literature to centers as far north as 80 degrees. Doctor Esselment's book was translated into Danish & sent to 45 centers in Greenland Island (above the Arctic Circle). Give this new to the friends in South America and Írán. Greenland is mentioned in the Tablet of the Master. In regard to the Eskimos, He says, “These people must be guided; both they & the American, Indian, the Pre in the minority as a result of the friends' pioneering, a few of them have accepted the Cause. The circle of the Cause has been extended from the northernmost regions to the southernmost in the republic of Chile (Magallenas). A chain (range) of Bahá'í centers is established from the north (Greenland) to the Southern region of Chile. 1500 center in the USA, 100 centers in Canada, and 130 centers in Latin America. In Russia and Asia beyond the same lotitudinal regions must be established.

“American, Persian and German friends whose regions are adjacent to the Russian Republic should attempt this. Alaska from the north, Persia from the south, and Germany from the west should later enter the republic. The Russian Republic has 18 divisions, the names of which are recorded in the 10-year plan. In five of these friends are already living. Recently, one pioneer went to Tibet.

“There are four countries which are subjects of the Russian Republic Romania is a virgin territory. No one has yet set foot init. One pioneer is at present in Serbia. There are a few believers in Bulgaria; also in Albania. Friends must go pioneering in these regions. The Americans - Germans are translating the Bahá'í Teachings into Russian. With the hope of their being circulated by the pioneers. In Persia, also, Bahá'í literature must be translated into the Russian language. Emphasize this when writing to Mr. Furútan. Numerous Bahá'í works have been translated into more than 210 languages. Before the great Crusade, translations of the works into other language had reached 88 in 100 yrs. Now, according to the Plan, in 3 yrs translations have been made into more than 70 languages. According to the Plan, it must reach. 90 languages in 10 yrs. But already translations have been made into more than 50 languages which as not Included in the Plan. In these years, translating has been done, altogether, into 120 languages.

It has been said over and over again that if one-tenth of the Bahá'í of Tíhrán, should leave that capital, the Blessed Cause will soon encompass the world. If they would leave Tíhrán & New York & spread out, they would be much safer.

This does not refer to cities whose Babel population is small. The Blessed Perfection has plainly said, “Cities will burn”. The first sign was seen in the last war. Has warnings came into 'reality. It must be emphasized that the friends should go from town to villages. They are safer themselves and the result is better for the Cause because the people have greater capacity in smaller places and are more receptive. The call of the Cause is widespread but not yet worldwide. The principle of the Teachings is re yet deep-rooted in the newly opened territories. When the pioneers arrive they must take care that the new order be well founded. Increasing h. strengthening the centers are both needed. Pioneering and earnest effort must parallel. It vial in that case be satisfactory e glorious. It must be impressed upon the friends, especially the pioneers, that the principle object in pioneering is striving and endeavoring; that is to say, teaching; Pioneering is for teaching and not for business. The friends must not mix in political & governmental affairs, so that they may be protected. The well-being of the pioneers is in service to the Cause & keeping away from politics. Otherwise, they will be bereft of the help of God & the final result will be regret & repentance.

Wednesday, December 5:

At 3:00 P.M. at the time of saying farewell to the Beloved Guardian of the World he spoke thus: "The Iranian friends should endeavor to conquer towns in South America, but should never mix in politics, so that they may remain unharmed. Who so obeys the blessed Perfection shall benefit by God's help & assistance. If friends do not endeavor in the matter of pioneering, assistance will be withdrawn from them. Friends must especially scatter about. I do not mean that they should fo.5'allit each other, but they must start new centers."

The Guardian then gave me a piece of a curtain formerly used in the Shrine of the Báb, to take us a present for the Ḥazírat'ul'-Quds of Caracas (when purchased). Tie said that he had sent one to the Ḥazírat'ul'Qud's of Brazil, also.

"The friends must now try for the foundation o the Mashraq'ul'Adhkar there (in Brazil both Ḥazírat'ul'Quds and Temple.

He also said that the Cause was brought to Brazil in the Tin, of the Master by Leonora Holsapple (Arstrong). "Ommol-Moamenine Val Moamenate")

Translated: "Mother of the Men & the Women believers." - Convey to her on my behalf Abhá' greetings."

1956, Momtazi (excerpts)

Our car is taking the TEL-AVIV Haifa road. We are near to our Beloved Guardian now. The time of attainment is near: our hearts; me and my wife's: is beating fast, all we are thinking of now is how we must present ourselves before OUR BELOVED GUARDIAN.

We have come a long way but the DOME of the SHRINE is not visible yet. We cannot wait any longer and everyone is anxious to meet OUR BELOVED GUARDIAN.

Alas: here is the DOME; we can see it clearly now. Our hearts are beating faster; this sign speaks to us: it tells us that the time of attainment is near and that we do not have to wait much longer.

We are now in Haifa but we do not know where to go in this strange place and yet in this Holy city: to the pilgrim's house or to the sacred Residence of our BELOVED GUARDIAN. One of us suggested that we ring to his residence and ask for his advice but while this state of confusion was prevailing FUGITA called a taxi and told him to drive toward our BELOVED GUARDIAN'S Residence.

We got into the taxi and with an extraordinary speed the driver took us to his sacred residence.

When entering our Beloved Guardian's residence we saw the familiar "ABD-UL-BAHÁ... 'ABBÁS..." all of which were reminding me of my previous visit to this Holy place in 1920 - 35 years ago.

We kissed these sacred words while we were Hell over Head in confusion. The sacred door was opened and FUGITA who was walking ahead of us was the first to enter it. From a far distance we could see our sacred second MARY AMAT-UL ROUHIYIH-KHÁNUM

We are now in complete ignorance and no one knows when we are destined to meet our Beloved Guardian: who as we learned later was already informed that PILGRIMS from too Far-East the farthest place to the HOLY-LAND: have come to Him and with humble hearts are waiting to MEET HIM.

His ocean of mercy was touched and we were immediately called in HIS presence.

Dear Readers,

As the English language is not my maternal language, please be so kind to apologize every mistakes which you will find in these notes.

THE VISIT

The time had come when the voice of son would speak to us. Finally our sufferings came to an end and HIS DOOR WAS opened UNTO US. FUGITA and I had lost our minds and all we knew was thus we were on his HOLY FEET; He tried to lift us up but Alas; our hands were tightly bound to his HOLY FEET. FUGITA and I had each of as; one of his HOLY FEET in our Hands. FUGITA was told to leave his HOLY feet and to stand up: but since he was told so in English. I took it as being addressed only to him and not to me: and I was told to stand on FUGITA took advantage of the situation: and thus each of us was holding one of his HOLY FEET in his ARMS.

Here was my reward after 35 years of depression and sufferings: I was depressed since I had been so far from our Beloved GUARDIAN; and yet I had suffered greatly as I was unable to attend and serve HIM from close.

This was our situation for a few minutes until FUGITA and I were somehow unconsciously and with the help of our BELOVED GUARDIAN lifted up and stood humbly at his presence.

We were all wet with tears at this moment and only those who had the happiness and privilege to visit him know what these tears meant to us.

It was at this moment that my wife arrived too and ignorant of our presence threw herself on his HOLY FEET; and since she was alone she had HIS two feet in her Arms. She was kissing his feet and her voice; which was coming deep from her heart; was repeatedly heard: saying "MY SOUL BE SACRIFICED TO THOU" ; until one too was unconsciously lifted up with HIS help and stood humbly at his presence; it was then and there that one observed us in his presence.

Our BELOVED GUARDIAN asked us to seat: and then his HOLY VOICE APOKE TO US:

"You had come a long way leaving seas and skies behind yourselves to come to me, you are welcome; I was waiting for you. Then he asked us if we had any delay in our way to the HOLY-LAND: stressing that we had come a little late."

Thanks to God that you have pioneered to Japan: said our BELOVED GUARDIAN. The faith of GOD has made great progress in Japan and with your efforts; devotions and determination BAHÁ'Í centres have been set up all over JAPAN for the activities of our friends in this country.

I had always looked with appreciation to your services; all of which will be recorded in the history. Now we are at the beginning of the administration ORDER of JAPAN; in future you will face big victories and successes in this country. I am happy and delighted at your faithful services in JAPAN: do not weep now it is the moment of your happiness. Thanks GOD that you have made a great progress in JAPAN: this progress is both in spirit and in organizing the administration ORDER in that country.

Then our BELOVED GUARDIAN asked me: How are our friends in JAPAN:

All of them are continuing their sincere services to THOU with faith and diligence; I replied: and all they ask for is YOUR help and blessings.

Thanks God; said our BELOVED GUARDIAN; that our friends are all determined and sincere to the faith irrespective of their nationality and no matter whether they are IRANIANS JAPANESE OR AMERICANS.

Our Friends in HIROSHIMA are presenting to your HOLINESS their humble and sincere devotions. I said to our BELOVED GUARDIAN.

(The people of HIROSHIMA said our Beloved Guardian have suffered greatly during the recent war and they are therefore prepared to accept the faith simply. This is a new centre which was set up and opened to the faith of GOD after Mr. KHADES visit to the FAR EAST.

You have had the great privilege of visiting the HOLY-LAND; said our BELOVED GUARDIAN; while this visit was very difficult during the time of BAHÁ-U-LIAH. Our friends had to travel for six months in those time in Order to come to the HOLY-LAND: while they could only be here only for a few minutes and his HOLINESS BAHÁ-U-LLAH could only have a look on them. They could never stay in his presence more than a few moments. Now the situation is changed but you must value this, precious occasion.

Turning toward JAPAN again He said: you must treat the Japanese with kindness: since as our BELOVED BAHÁ-U-LLAH says, "A KING WORD CAPTURES A HEART ". After speaking these HOLY words our Beloved Guardian up and left us.

After his departure we got up too and started walking the KARMEL Mountain.

On the way to the mountain we were praising GOD: while we were all astonished: Now we his humble servant are called here in this HOLY—PLACE.

It is obvious that as everyone else we were all desire to come to the presence of HIS APOSTLE but the amazing thing now was that THE APOSTLE at the moment was waiting for us and he wished to see us.

“It is for ease occasions that the IRANIAN POET said:

“There in nothing unusual when a HUNTER follows a DEER: “

“But it is quite different; when our Fear deer comes to meet its HUNTER”

“It in only the work of GOB and the wishes of our MASTER that such miracles happen”

After all these spiritual inspirations which HIS presence had inspired in us we departed toward the BÁB—SHRINE through a guide; MISS REVEL. We walked through beautiful gardens and nicely decorated avenues until we arrived near the SHRINE.

OUR PILGRIMAGE TO THE SHRINE

It was a sweet dream for us. We were in doubt whether it was our own persons here before the HOLY-SHRINE:

Now beautiful are these flowers; and what an enchanting views we are facing now. The whole earth is now attractive and beautiful for us: with a sort at beauty and fascination that we not seen or touched before.

A spiritual breeze is blowing on us. Here is the promised paradise of human beings: appeared onto us in the face of those enchanting Gardens.

Thin garden with its beautiful flowers in it is the sacred residence of our Beloved Guardian and a single flower or everything which it has in it is a symbol of him and brings HIM into our memories. But above all those in the GOLDEN DOME OF THE SHRINE OF BÁB which according to our Beloved Guardian is “The White Dress of mankind’s Bride decorated with a Golden Grown. “

We are now before the SHRINE and the doors were opened UNTO US, Suddenly all the lamps are lighted and the whole sacred Place turned into 3 piece of Bright-jewel.

We all fell into worship and prayed for the prosperity of mankind; our Japanese friends and for our close relations. A spiritual enchanting breeze is blowing on us while our heads are bowed on the THRESHOLD of HIS HOLY PLACE. We feel as if the spirit of all GOD’S prophets are now pilgriming in this HOLY PLACE.

In our hearts addressing his HOLINESS BÁB we were repeating the words:

“OH DEAR BÁB OUR SOULS BE SACRIFICED TOT THY SACRED BLOOD and THEY OPPRESSED BODY: THOU WERE PRISONED IN TCHERIGH and MAKU while thou HAD NONE BESIDES YOU THERE WAS not even a servant to light A LAMP FOR THOU and finally THOU WERE MARTYRED IN AZARBAIJAN BUT SINCE THOU GAVE TO THE WORLD and PROMISED YOUR ETERNAL & FUTURE KINGDOM TO

MANKIND; THOUSANDS LAMPS ARE NOW LIGHTED IN YOUR HOLY PLACE LIGHTING OUR HEARTS”

Although our Beloved Guardian is not with us in this PILGRIMAGE but his first visit had such a spiritual effect on us which is if he is always with us and we now feel his presence.

THE PROGRESS OF THE CAUSE OF GOD IN JAPAN

In the afternoon of 27th Dec. 1955, our Beloved Guardian came toward the Gardens of the Pilgrim House and called us unto his presence. We now had the privilege to walk with HIM. He was a shining STAR before the dark sky of our lives. The light of his appearance had given a special dignity to these gardens and it was at this time that our Beloved Guardians mind and spirit turned toward JAPAN and said,

“The faith of God will make a great progress in JAPAN as our Beloved BAHÁ-U-LLAH has promised us: he says If you cover the light in the middle of the EARTH it will come out from the middle of the OCEANS and SEAS and it will speak unto you saying: BEHOLD’ I am the light and the saviour of the world.”

Our Beloved Guardian then explained what this meant: by the Middle of the Earth; he said Our Beloved BAHÁ-U-LLAH meant ÍRÁN which is in the middle of ASIA and by: the middle of OCEANS and SEAS he meant JAPAN which is an Island among the ocean and seas.

He then added that if they would try to hide the faith of GOD in PERSIA it will appear and come out from Japan saying, “That I am the true light and the savior of mankind. Still; said our Beloved Guardian; they have not been successful in eliminating the faith of GOD in ÍRÁN and the same situation will continue for a time.”

HIROSHIMA: I then spoke to our beloved Guardian of our NEW center in HIROSHIMA which is set up by the local Japanese inhabitants of this city.

Of course; said our Beloved Guardian such Centres must be set up though the efforts and determination of the Japanese people: as in the case of AFRICA where our friends are so active and enthusiastic in their works that they extended their activities and pioneered to other countries. Japan; he then told us; will become a second AFRICA one day. Our faith was introduced in this country fifty years ago but now it is the moment of obtaining positive results from our activities.

ADMINISTRATION ORDER: The National Spiritual Assemblies in AFRICA this year. One in the heart of AFRICA; second in the WEST and the third one is SOUTH.

Turning to the question in Japan: our beloved Guardian said: the surrounding Islands will be ordered to send delegates to Japan to participate in selecting the members of the National Spiritual Assembly (N.S.A.) of Japan which is to take place next year.

Then this National Spiritual Assembly can be called the National Spiritual Assembly of Japan and the FAR EAST Island, I said.

But our Beloved Guardian corrected my statement by saying “not all the islands” as there are too many of them in the Far East: but only the National Spiritual Assembly of Japan and the surrounding islands.

NEW BELIEVER IN KOBE JAPAN

I then informed our Beloved Guardian that in Kobe a prominent educated personality; newspaperman in career has been recently converted into our faith: and has registered his name just before our departure to the HOLY LAND.

This is very important said our Beloved Guardian after blessing the New Believer; (Mr. SAKO).

Editors, authors and educated people are important provided that when converted to our faith they leave aside all their political activities and never interfere with such affairs again. Politicians and political affairs: said Our Beloved Guardian must never be an attraction to our friends but on the contrary their activities and work must be of such nature as to convince these politicians of GODS great work, the Importance of their Motto and the nothingness of their worldly ambitions and activities before HIS wishes.

THE NATIONAL SPIRITUAL ASSEMBLY OF JAPAN AND NEW ZEALAND

The National Spiritual Assembly of JAPAN; said our Beloved Guardian is the foundation of the NORTH PACIFIC for our Administration Order and the National Spiritual Assembly of the NEW ZEALAND and the foundation of the South Pacific for this Administration order. And between these two; he then added; we will have two National Spiritual Assemblies: One in PUGI in EAST of Australia and the Second in Indonesia: EAST of Asia.

Therefore we will have four National Spiritual Assemblies as followed:

1. One Spiritual Assembly for Japan and the surrounding Islands: to be set up in Japan.
2. One Spiritual Assembly in SOUTH: to be set up in NEW ZEALAND.
3. The third National Spiritual Assembly will be set up in the East of Australia at the FUGI Island.
4. Another N. S. A. or the Fourth one is to be set up in INDONESIA.
5. And finally the fifth N. S. A. in Australia.

Then he turned to the Iranian pilgrims and said:

These five National Spiritual Assemblies will form the foundations of our ORGANIZATION in PACIFIC OCEAN.

A HAZIRAT-UL-GUDS is now set up in Tokyo through Mr. Momtazi's efforts and devotions and the Local Spiritual Assembly of this city is already REGISTERED.

The HAZIRAT-UL-GUDS has been purchased and the Local Spiritual Assembly is registered in Tokyo: both of these works: again confirmed OUR BELOVED GUARDIAN have been carried out are completed now.

And all these had come to us through the efforts and devotions of Mr. Momtazi who is the DISTINGUISHED servant of the FAITH OF GOD.

These all: I replied had been accomplished through THOU blessings and guidance; and through the Spiritual Inspirations that THOU has extended to your humble servant.

You have come a long way; almost half of the GLOBE said Our Beloved Guardian and he then Blessed me.

BAHÁ'Í NEWS FOR JAPAN

Are you receiving the Bahá'í News in Japan regularly and in time: asked our Beloved Guardian;

Yes; Our Beloved Guardian I replied.

Through which channels he again asked?

Through U. S. A. regularly and sometimes from ÍRÁN: I replied

Our Beloved Guardian then gave Instructions so that we may translate the Main parts of our News and circulate them.

We have a BULLETIN, I said; which is called the Bahá'í News and this is printed in Japanese Language in Tokyo.

Although this is published in Japanese language; said our Beloved Guardian you should send a copy of it regularly tot the HOLY LAND.

Praise be to THY knowledge and wisdom; I said to myself: THOU surely knowest Japanese too.

TRANSLATION OF THE BAHÁ'Í LITERATURE IN THE JAPANESE LANGUAGE

Our Beloved Guardian: then pointed out that the BAHÁ'Í literature has been translated into most languages while up to now very little of it has been translated into Japanese Language.

The translated of this literature: I replied is very difficult but still our translators are working on it with keen interest.

You must be very careful; said OUR BELOVED GUARDIAN so that these translations are accurate and correct; these translations must be very accurate and precise expressing all the expressions and the beauties of our literature. They must be translated in such a way as to leave the real meaning the spirit of the original text untouched.

He then asked us to send a copy of everything we translate there, to the HOLY LAND. I will keep these works; said OUR BELOVED GUARDIAN; since I have books from 180 languages in the international ARCHIVE of the HOLY LAND.

THE NEW ORDER OF JAPAN

Now the Bahá'ís of JAPAN said; our BELOVED GUARDIAN must think of selecting their National Spiritual Assembly. Hitherto they were selection of the Local Spiritual Assembly. Now they must make preparations for their National Spiritual Assembly.

We have two Local Spiritual Assemblies in Japan said OUR BELOVED GUARDIAN. One in Tokyo and the other in ... he waited a few moments to name the second place; while I said the local Spiritual Assembly of Hiogoken. I then explained to our BELOVED GUARDIAN that in Japan the collection of several cities in one place is called KEN; I wanted to give further explanation to our BELOVED GUARDIAN about the type of organization in Japan starting with KEN I was going to explain the rest; but before being able to continue our Beloved Guardian said; and after KEN comes FU and after FU.. TO and TOKYO is TO; Is not so? I bowed and it was at this moment that I realized that Our Beloved Guardian knows everything.

SPECIAL ATTENTION TO JAPAN AND ITS REASON

I said to our Beloved Guardian:

Previously and when our Beloved Guardian informed us that on 1957 the JAPANESE National Spiritual Assembly will take place: we were all amazed and were wondering how this is to happen. We had no Local Spiritual Assemblies in Japan; the believers of the Cause of God were so few and many requirements were to be met. But now that through GODS Grace and Our Beloved Guardians Blessings and assistance this is going to take place we are all certain that this has become a possibility from a DREAM through the blessings of our Beloved Guardian. It is obvious that the cause of God has worked its way in this matter.

Our Beloved Guardian then turned his face toward me and said: Do you know why and how all these had come into reality? It is because of the obedience to the Administration Order that all this have been performed; he then replied to his own question.

By the Administration Order our Beloved Guardian meant that one must be faithful to his covenant as it is the wish and desire of our Master ABD-UL-BAHÁ.

THE UNITY OF THE BAHÁ'ÍS OF JAPAN

Are all the BAHÁ'ÍS of JAPAN UNITED and FAITHFUL to the cause of GOD; our Beloved Guardian asked me then.

Although they are different Nationalities and Races; such as Iranians, Americans, Japanese and the Unity of these divert types and races is difficult thanks GOD all of them are united and faithful in our GREAT MOTTO and the Cause of GOD.

Our Beloved Guardian was delighted at hearing this and we could see happiness and delight in his face and in his whole appearance.

THE JAPANESE YOUTH AND WOMEN

The Japanese youth and women must be encouraged to be brave in serving the Cause of GOD: said our Beloved Guardian while he was turning his face to me.

Have you many young people in TOKYO?

Our Beloved Guardian was told that we have not many young people in TOKYO.

Special and private committees must be organized for young people and woman: added then our Beloved Guardian. The privilege of our faith he said, is that women will progress and improve far above men in the EAST.

How are the BAHÁ'Í women of JAPAN; he then asked me?

All of them are active and faithful to the cause of GOD: I replied: especially the young girls of Japan who are newly converted. They take an active part in our organizations and have become members of the Local Spiritual Assembly.

You must encourage them very much; said then our Beloved Guardian.

I pointed out then that the Japanese women are mostly educated.

I know it: said our Beloved Guardian.

They are very polite, hardworking and patient when being oppressed: I then added.

Still they are oriental; said our Beloved Guardian and more or less under the influence of man but you must encourage them; make them brave; and change their conditions.

Again our Beloved Guardian added: that the young people and BAHÁ'Í women must be very CLEAN and Virtuous: especially in Írán.

Our Beloved Guardian then pointed out that the moral of society is Low in U. S. A., Is it the same in Japan?

“Yes” I replied; it is the same in Japan.

People have realized themselves from fanaticism in twentieth century but on the other hand they have turned to material and have become materialistic. They escaped one disaster but are now involved in another one.

NECESSITY OF OBEDIENCE OF JAPANESE BELIEVERS FROM UNITED STATES N. S. A.

The Japanese organizations are under the supervision of U. S. A. Organizations and I have entrusted JAPAN to U. S. A. as I have entrusted TURKEY to ÍRÁN. The National Spiritual Assembly of JAPAN must be organized by U. S. A.'s organizations: confirmed our Beloved Guardian.

Then our Beloved Guardian asked if the BAHÁ'Í'S of JAPAN are obeying the BAHÁ'Í's of U. S. A.?

“Yes” I replied: our Beloved Guardian;

Our Beloved Guardian then confirmed again; that the U. S. A. Organizations are supervising and taking care of the JAPANESE Organizations and that this is the NEW WORLD's ORDER.

The L. S. A. of Tokyo must be an intermediate between the U. S. A National Spiritual Assembly and the BAHÁ'Í's of JAPAN. It must take the required information from the U. S. A. and give it to the BAHÁ'Í's of JAPAN. As now it is the beginning of JAPAN's organization: said our Beloved Guardian; all the measures and the steps which we take with regard to forming these Organizations must be progress of the Cause of GOD: said our Beloved Guardian depends on having plans and means: plans he then added are very important in performing this Great work.

THE IMPORTANCE OF YOKOHAMA AND KIYOTO

Yokohama and Kiyoto said our Beloved Guardian are two important cities in JAPAN and you must pay them a special attention.

THE PROGRESS OF THE CAUSE OF GOD IN JAPAN

Thanks to God said our Beloved Guardian; that the cause of GOD has made a great progress in JAPAN. Then he turned to the IRANIAN PILGRIMS and added: Mr. MOMTAZI is the distinguished SERVANT OF THE CAUSE OF GOD; and turning to me he said: You must assure that the Japanese people that their country will turn into a second AFRICA one day: the fire started from U. S. A. but its flames are now appearing in JAPAN. Like ÍRÁN, many BAHÁ'Í centres will be formed in JAPAN: It will have an N. S. A. and the National Spiritual Assembly of JAPAN is formed the faith of GOD will make a great progress there. There will be a convention for selecting the members of the National Spiritual Assembly of JAPAN.

Are the members of the Convention to be selected by the Local Spiritual Assemblies or by the BAHÁ'Í believers of JAPAN I asked?

The members of National Spiritual Assembly: said our Beloved Guardian will be selected by the members of the convention; and the members of the convention will have already formed and established their Local Spiritual Assemblies.

Are the members of the convention to be elected by the Centres which have Local Spiritual Assemblies or the other centres with no Local Spiritual Assemblies can also participate in selecting these members: I asked?

Only the centres which have formed their Local Spiritual Assemblies must take part in selecting the members of the convention: replied our Beloved Guardian. This decision has been taken for the purpose of encouraging all our centres to set up their Local Spiritual Assemblies as soon as possible.

How many Local Spiritual Assemblies we must have in JAPAN to set up a National Spiritual Assembly: I asked?

The more Local Spiritual Assemblies you have in JAPAN; the better replied the BELOVED GUARDIAN.

THE REGISTRATION OF THE NATIONAL SPIRITUAL ASSEMBLY OF JAPAN WITH THE GOVERNMENT'S CONCERNED AUTHORITIES

First of all said our Beloved Guardian: we must set up the National Spiritual Assembly of JAPAN and then comes a question of registering it in JAPAN and finally comes the question of registering the same in the HOLY LAND.

The Government of JAPAN has already register our Assembly: I replied at this moment.

This is the Local Spiritual Assembly which is registered: said our Beloved Guardian when the National Spiritual Assembly of JAPAN is set up you must try to register it too.

This will become a problem for us: I replied as the government of Japan according to their Laws and regulations must have one person responsible for this assembly and not a Committee.

Our Beloved Guardian replied: that the Assembly must be registered in the name of a Committee and not a person. He then added; that first of all we must investigate about this matter: secondly we must consult and ask the advise of specialists and finally to work hard for the solution of this problem – and when you do all these; He said you will certainly succeed.

ENDOWMENTS OF JAPAN

Thanks God; said our Beloved Guardian that we have now two HAZIRAT-UL-GUDS and our endowments too must be included to them.

With the blessings of GOD; I replied; the required land for JAPAN's Endowments is already prepared.

I know it; said our Beloved Guardian; thanks GOD that the privilege of contributing this land for this purpose has been yours too. These are important matters; said our Beloved Guardian; they will be recorded in HISTORY, both the contributed land and the name of the contributors.

THE DUTIES OF THE 1957 L. S. A's

It is the order; I said that only the Local Spiritual Assembly which were set up in 1956 are entitled to select delegates for the National Spiritual Assemblies: in this case what the duties of the Local Spiritual Assemblies of 1957.

These L. S. A.: replied our Beloved Guardian must wait for a year and then they will select the delegates of the National Spiritual Assembly of 1958. The same applies in U. S. A.: added our Beloved Guardian.

We have very little for setting up the National Spiritual Assembly of 1957 and therefore we are in great need; for THEIR BLESSINGS AND ASSISTANCE.

The time is short: said our Beloved Guardian: but the blessings and assistance of GOD will come in time.

THE SYMBOL OF THE JAPANESE BAHÁ'Í'S LOVE IN THE MANSION OF BEHJI

We then presented a symbol of Japanese BAHÁ'Í's love to our BELOVED GUARDIAN; an embroidered piece of cloth of PUGI maintain at the bottom of which the following words were embroidered.

"THIS PIECE IS A SYMBOL OF OUR MOST EXALTED LOVE TO THOU; OH OUR BELOVED GUARDIAN"

We then thought of the extraordinary work and the many occupations and important matters which our Beloved Guardian has and the correspondence which he must carry out with 242 countries; and were of the opinion that He will come to our present after a period of at least one or two months. But a wonderful thing happened on the day of tomorrow; when we re visiting the MANSION OF BEHJI.

The servant of the Mansion told us the good news that our present was accepted and that our Beloved Guardian had ordered him to hung it in a visible place in his own private ROOM in the Mansion; together with a picture of NIKKO's conference: which was to be hanged somewhere in his sitting place.

All I was wishing now was ; that all our BAHÁ'Í friends of Japan could be here to see us present in the HOLY PLACE.

I started crying and was going almost to faint when I heard the servant of the Mansion speaking to us: saying that “We have all received the special blessings of HIS HOLINESS and that despite all the occupations and the troubles which our Beloved Guardian has to bear to MANKIND; He has noticed us so early and has given us his special blessings.”

THE PROGRESS OF THE CAUSE OF GOD IN THE WORLD

In our second visit on 27th Dec. 1955 our Beloved Guardian spoke of the progress of the Cause of God all over the world saying:

The faith of GOD has made a great progress in the world: 160 assemblies: some of which are National Spiritual Assemblies and others Local Spiritual Assemblies are registered ; and you will see their respective Documents in the BEHJI mansion.

Our literature; then continued our Beloved Guardian; is translated into 190 languages; our Centres have reached the figure of 3700 throughout the world; of which the 1500 are in U. S. A.: Then comes ÍRÁN which has between 700 to 800 Centres. But our Friends in this country must try to bring the figure to 1000. Also we have more than 400 centres in Africa; 100 in Canada and another 100 in England.

OUR PIONEERS IN THE NORTHEAST PARTS OF AMERICAN CONTINENT

Our pioneers; said our Beloved Guardian: have reached to the 73 latitude above the equator ZONE. This is the Northeast BAHÁ'Í world: It is around the Northern POLE. The highest inhabited point above equator is 68: but our BAHÁ'Í friends have reached to 73.

But in Europe they have reached the 70 latitude above the Equator ZONE. Then Our Beloved Guardian added; “HIS HOLINESS BAHÁ-U-LLAH in “KETABE-AGHDASS” has spoken to us about these Islands... in that book he has ordered us to pray the OBLIGATORY PRAYER in regular intervals in the places and cities where they have long nights and long days.”

This saying is for such Islands: since in the middle of winter there is no SUN in them; and in the middle of summer the sun disappears from them.

The number of the countries where the faith of GOD has reached them is now 242. In the ten years crusade it was originally planned that another 131 new countries should be open to the faith of GOD.

You must communicate these GLAD TIDINGS to our BAHÁ'Í friends in JAPAN: then said our Beloved Guardian.

Two countries which are newly opened in the faith of GOD and which were not mentioned in our plan –the ten year crusade: are TRINIDAD and SAIGON. Another country which was not originally named in the ten years crusade is TIBET which is a country beyond the IRON CURTAIN and the centre of BUDDHISM.

THE RACES WHICH HAVE BEEN CONVERTED TO THE CAUSE OF GOD

The various race converted to the faith of GOD are above FOURTY now: the white race comes first and has the majority but later the NEGRO race will take over the Majority as the number of the believers of the BLACK race has exceeded the figure of 2300 within a period of less than 3 years.

After the black comes the RED race or the natives of America: of whom only few have been converted up to now.

THE ISLANDS OPENED TO THE FAITH OF GOD

The converted Islands are over 95 of which 30 were converted before the ten years crusade. Another 65 Islands were converted to the Cause of GOD while 65 Islands were converted during the period of crusade.

During 100 years only 30 Islands were converted to the Cause of GOD while 65 Islands are converted and opened to the faith of GOD during three years.

Our delight was beyond description when we heard all these GLAD TIDINGS; and we all wanted to have all our BAHÁ'Í friends from all over the world to hear HIS words and to share our Delight and Happiness.

There is so much Good News arriving from all over the world; said our Beloved Guardian; that I have not time either to write or to communicate it.

I am therefore communicating these good news to our pilgrims who are visiting the HOLY LAND so that in their turn they may communicate the same to our BAHÁ'Í friends all over the world.

PURCHASED OF NATIONAL HAZIRAT-UL-GUDS's ALL OVER THE WORLD

In the ten years crusade we had planned to purchase 50 national HAZIRAT-UL-GUDS : while up to this moment thanks to GOD 32 National Ḥazírat-UL-Guds are purchased and during less than 3 years; including the Ḥazírat-UL-Guds of Tokyo.

THE BAHÁ'Í NEW ORDER

Then our Beloved Guardian said: His Holiness BÁB in His HOLY BOOK has spoken to us about the BAHÁ'Í NEW ORDER.

In his prison at MAKU at the time of distress and depression His Holiness said:

“HAPPY BE THOSE WHO CAN SEE THE NEW ORDER OF BAHÁ-U-LLAH”

His Holiness BAHÁ-U-LLAH in his turn had spoken to us about the NEW ORDER and says:

“The Order of the OLD WORLD HAS BEEN ABOLISHED AND REPLACED BY THIS NEW ORDER.”

His Holiness BAHÁ-U-LLAH has spoken of two orders: said our Beloved Guardian: the first is the OLD order which will be abolished and the second is the New Order which will replace this abolished order.

In his “WILL & TESTAMENT” his Holiness ‘ABDU’L-BAHÁ has spoken to us about how this New Order is to be performed.

It is through organizing Local Spiritual Assemblies and National Spiritual Assemblies and the International Houses of Justice that the NEW ORDER will be put into work all over the world; said our Beloved Guardian.

The foundation of the NEW ORDER which is the establishment of LOCAL SPIRITUAL Assemblies; are already performed on the other hand: the pillar of this construction namely the National Spiritual Assemblies are ready and therefore only the ROOF of construction: which is the International Houses of JUSTICE is left to be constructed.

The members of the International-Houses of Justice; said our Beloved Guardian must be selected by the National Spiritual Assemblies. Now it is the beginning of this NEW-ORDER: he then added.

His Holiness BAHÁ-U-LLAH: has ruled this NEW ORDER and his Holiness ABD-UL-BAHÁ has explained to us how this will be performed; in his WILL & TESTAMENT.

Now it is the time to perform it This is the GREAT HAPPY TIDINGS.

PILGRIMAGE OF THE SHRINE OF BÁB AT THE PRESENCE OF OUR BELOVED GUARDIAN

While speaking with us our Beloved Guardian was proceeding toward the HOLY SHRINE OF BÁB and we were following him. At intervals he would worship the place and when entering the SHRINE he worshiped and kissed the THRESHOLD of the SHRINE. Following him we kissed the places which he had kissed and by this; as the Iranian PUET says: we were performing two performances by a single ACT: both of which had given us a great delight and happiness. I wish all our friends from all over the world could be here to hear our Beloved Guardian’s Voice; while he was reading with HIS OWN SACRED VOICE the TABLET OF VISITATION.

We fell into a sort of unconsciousness and we were almost going to faint when HIS heavenly MELLODY was heard. Our souls were flying in the skies and HIS HOLY VOICE had taken us into HEAVEN and in the DWELLING PLACE of the Angels.

We are sure that whatever we had asked from our LORD-GOD then and there it will be GRANTED unto us: since we had all these blessings and were received with kindness; affection & mercy by our Beloved Guardian.

OUR BEELOVED GUARDAIN's SPEACH AND HIS WALK WITH US

Up to now we had been always presented to our Beloved Guardian while he was walking in the garden. He was speaking to us; while making these walks and we knew in our hearts that all tune kings of the world were envying us as we were at the presence of our Spiritual King and had his blessings.

PURCHASED OF LAND FOR MASHREGH-UL-ASKAR IN THE HOLY LAND AND OTHER COUNTRIES.

Our Beloved Guardian said: that 100,000 Meters of land has been purchased at the TOP of the month KARMEL and a MASHREGH-UL-ASKAR will be build there soon. In the ten years crusade he added: we were supposed to purchase 11 pieces of Lands in 11 countries for this purpose while up to this time 10 pieces of these lands are purchased and only one is left.

HE KNOWS ALL THAT IS IN OUR HEARTS

One day when I was at our Beloved Guardians presence I thought of telling him about my visit to the HOLY LAND and our MASTER ABD-UL-BAHÁ which took place 35 years ago on 1920.

You have been hero on 120 and have visited our MASTER 35 years ago; said our Beloved Guardian; before I could say a word to HIM and open my mind.

TWO PLANES FOR THE PROGRESS OF THE CAUSE OF GOD IN THE WORLD

We have two plans; said our Beloved Guardian to improve the faith of GOD in the world. One of these plans is our ten years crusade which is to be performed by National Spiritual Assemblies and Local Spiritual Assemblies and by our committees and BAHÁ'Í friends all over the world.

This however is our Minor project and the second plan which is our Major plan is the of the unseen hand of our GOD: which at his order word out through the recent revolutions all over the world.

While entering his CAR; the corner of our Beloved Guardian eyes would turn UNTO US and it was then and there and at o-serving snob affection by HIM that our souls and BODIES would not have the capacity to swallow all this affection and HIS WEDS. Then the door of his CAR would open and he would leave us: at those moments we would fall into a state of unconsciousness; a state which is spiritual and which can not to explained by words. This state was the effect of his HOLY WORDS and his Spiritual power on us. Here with our own eyes we were observing the Riding of the King of KINGS. He would lift up HIS hands and would look with affection to HIS devoted servants through the corner of his MS. We vented to have hundred lives at than, moments and sacrifice them all for his and before HIM.

THE BEGINNING OF THE RISE OF ISRAEL AND THE FALL OF ISLÁM

Since the Melons of Arabian countries have not realized the valuable and outstanding privileges of the faith of GOD; said our Beloved Guardian; GOD has blessed the I SRAELS victorious over that. The Arabs were 40,000,000 and the ISRAELS 700,000 but still as GOD was with the ISRAEL people they succeeded. All these lands added our Beloved Guardian has been purchased from the ISRAELS and these endowments are declared FREE from all sort of TAXES by the ISRAEL government.

The ISRAEL governments Endowments are not free from taxes while our endowments are. It was the work of His Holiness BAHÁ-U-LLAH that the ARABS were defeated.

JAMAL PÁSHÁ opposing the faith of GOD was killed in PARIS: both the OSMAN Empire and the OSMAN religious Centre - Khalafat - were disappeared and destroyed from the world. SULTAN ‘ABDU’L-RAMID and SULTAN ‘ABDU’L-‘AZÍZ both of whom had opposed the CAUZE OF GOD were detrowned and prisoned.

All the enemies and opponent; then added our Beloved Guardian with dignity and authority were defeated and destroyed.

THE REVOLT AND OPPOSITION OF THE NATIONS OF THE WORLD AGAINST THE BAHÁ’Í’S ALL OVER THE WORLD.

The opposition against us; said our Beloved Guardian; has started from ÍRÁN. First it was only from SHIA sect but later the SONI’s too; joined in and started their opposition. Then came the turn of Protestants who started opposing us in U.S.A. Later the Anglican CHURCH joined this movement and began to oppose us. And finally came the turn of the Orthodox Church. The Catholics too will oppose and revolt against us one day. POP will start opposing us but at the end he will be DEPOSED.

His holiness our Beloved ‘ABDU’L-BAHÁ has spoken to us about those events; saying “Soon the voice of AMERICA & AFRICA will be heard”. This sentence means; added our Beloved Guardian: that the Christian missionaries of America and Africa will start to oppose us. Again our Beloved ABD-UL-BAHÁ says; that “the VOICE OF PARANG and TAJIK will be heard” and by FARANG; said our Beloved Guardian his Holiness meant the countries of EUROPE and by TAJIK he meant RUSSIA: who will oppose us when the time comes.

Then the Voice of India and China will be heard: says His Holiness ‘ABDU’L-BABA. This means that the INDIANS whose religion is HINDU will oppose us. Then comes the turn of CHINA whose inhabitants are BUDDHISTS and finally the opposition will reach to JAPAN.

Our Beloved Guardian then turned to me and ordered as to communicate these all to our BAHÁ’Í friends in JAPAN so that they might expect these oppositions and events.

Then our Beloved Guardian spoke to us again: “Great opposition will, start against the Cause of God all over the world; but as his Holiness ABD-UL-BAHÁ has informed us in advance at the end at the wishes of GOD the Soldiers of Truth and the APOSTLES OF his Faith will appear all over the world and will defeat this revolt and opposition. In JAPAN; I replied; the BUDDHISTS are not fanatic and they are not opposing us.

Because the Cause of GOD has not made a great progress there yet; replied our Beloved Guardian. But when the Cause of God will progress there they will start to oppose us. And when they start opposing us they will be defeated.

Only if they do not oppose us they will be safe and will not face defeat.

I am waiting for these historical events: added our beloved Guardian. There is no doubt about these events; they will all take place in due course and when the time comes.

I asked then if the opposition was to begin soon.

No; replied our Beloved Guardian; “it will take some time. It will certainly take place in due course. but the movement will be gradual. This movement has already started in ÍRÁN; where it had ended to the advantage and victory of the CAUSE OF GOD. The Iranian Governments policy is changed now; In the beginning it was a policy of attack now it is a policy of defense. This and our victory is due to the Unity of our BAHÁ’Í friends all over the world.

THE BEAUTIES OF KARMEL MOUNTAIN AND THE BUILDING, WHICH WILL BE CONSTRUCTED THERE

During the period of our stay in the HOLY LAND; one day our Belated Guardian turned toward to SHRINE OF BÁB and said

“This is a beautiful dignified and outstanding SHRINE it is all light; there are step of light in this mountain; and in future it will be turned into a mountain of lights.”

While speaking these words to us; his holiness Chair was placed in a high place and we were ordered to sit in his presence.

Here was the MASTER OF THE WORLD Shining like the SUN and speaking to us; telling us of the past and the future of the WORLD. The future of the world; the events which will take place for the cause of GOD were spoken to us in such a dignified way and with such a Spiritual power and authority which was as if we could almost see and observe them with our own eyes.

We will have two CENTRES in this mental; said our Beloved Guardian: One is the Spiritual Centre and the second our Centre for the Administration order.

The Spiritual Centre is the SHRINE OF LAB but we will construct here the following buildings for maintaining & organizing the Administration ORDER.

- A building for the International Archive whose construction has already started.
- A Building for the International House of Justice where the unwritten Orders of our HOLY BOOK: KETABE-AGHDASS will be composed and ruled for the people of the world.
- A building for the guardians of the cause of GOD where they will explain the written but unknown orders of the HOLY BOOK - KETABA-AGHDAS.
- Also a building is to be allocated to Science-industry and Scientific researches.
- And finally there will be constructed a building for teaching the Cause of GOD. The hands of the Cause of GOD will meet in this Building.

I asked; if the building for Teaching – The Cause of GOD is a spiritual Building or &irk Administrative CENTRE. It is an Administrative Building; replied our Beloved Guardian.

Is the SHRINE OF BÁB our Spiritual centre only; I asked then.

Only the SHRINE OF BÁB in the month of KARMEL and the SHRINE OF BAHÁ-U-LLAH in AKA are spiritual Centres; again confirmed our Beloved Guardian.

BAHÁ-U-LLAH's Revert: Extension of BAHÁ'ÍS IN THE WORLD UNTIL 500,000 YEARS

The orders of our HOLY BOOK, said our Beloved Guardian; are only for 1000 years and it is possible that after 1000 years we might have new orders and New advents; but for 500,000 years no prophet who could be compared with His Holiness BAHÁ-U-LIAH will appear in the world.

We will witness the coming of prophets during this period; said our Beloved Guardian but all of them will be under the guidance of his Holiness BAHÁ-U-LLAH.

THE REGISTRATIONS OF THE BRANCHES OF NATIONAL SPIRITUAL ASSEMBLIES IN THE HOLY LAND

Now we have 10 National Spiritual Assemblies in the world but in the ten years Crusade we have planned to have another 50; and this will bring the total figure of Our National Spiritual Assemblies to 60: said our Beloved Guardian. In future all the properties & Lands of the HOLY-LAND will be registered in the name of these 60 national Spiritual Assemblies. Through this registration we will unite the National Spiritual Assemblies of the world together. The National Spiritual Assembly of Japan is one of these Centres and we will register a piece of Land here in its name.

We have already registered the branches of U.S. A.'s N. S. A.'s here. Later the N.S.A.'s of England; Canada; India; AUSTRALIA and finally ÍRÁN were registered here; said our Beloved Guardian. A piece of land has been purchased here for 28,000 Dollars and it is registered in the as of the IRANIAN BAHÁ'Í's; but still the IRANIAN government has not recognized the BAHÁ'Í faith.

OUR PILGRIMAGE TO HOLY CITY OF AKA

At the order of our Beloved Guardian; we then left for the HOLY CITY of AKA; together with a Group of BAHÁ'Í PILGRIM from U.S.A. and ÍRÁN.

At entering the city the first thing we did was to visit the GREAT prison of HIS HOLINESS BAHÁ-U-LLAH "GHESHLE". We were walking in the same dark narrow streets where our Beloved Oppressed APOSTLE; HIS HOLINESS BAHÁ-U-LLAH had walked guarded by the soldiers of the OSMAN Empire. The tick Walls of that historic prison could be seen now from the distant: We are now closer and have entered it through the Front Door.

While we were entering ha prison old memories came back into our minds; we remembered the period of HIS Holiness when people were forbidden to approach and enter the place.

We could see shadows of those soldiers accompanying his Holiness and forbidding people to approach HIM: and then we could see among them Mr. JARAH AFANDI who became converted to His Holiness and who prayed that he is given the privilege of serving the cause of GOD. Now his Grand Children are blessed and honored by being privileged to serve the cause of God as Gardeners of the SHRINE OF BAHÁ-U-LLAH.

We entered the prison with a confused and disordered mind. The humble and sad atmosphere of this prison are signs and symbols of the oppression which our Beloved BAHÁ-U LLAH had endured.

After going up through narrow and unregular steps; We entered the special room where his Holiness BAHÁ,U-LLAH was prisoned. This Dark and small room is still covered with a rough Mat as a souvenir of those days.

The OSMAN Empire was in vain using this prison with Tick Wails as a mean to prevent the world from being informed of his appearance and advent. No one knows whether there was ever lamp in this Prison where our Beloved One was prisoned for years; but every observer is sure of one thing and that is: the Sun has never touched HIS PRISON.

But it was in this dark room that his Holiness made preparations for the salvation of the world: and He set up here and in this dark and sad Room the foundations of an international and world, peace.

We sat there for some minutes and reminding the oppressions which he had endured said a PRAYER. We worshiped the place and kissed the round; and then we left the prison and went to the HOUSE OF ABBUD.

THE HOUSE OF ABBUD

Although His Holiness was a little comfortable here with his family but still the HOUSE a ABBUD was humble small and unsuitable for HIS HOLINESS.

Our Beloved One lived here with his family for seven years: we saw his BED; hat and several other Items of his Household belongings and furniture: there. We than went to the ROOK where the Holy BOOK KETBE-AGHDASS had descended. It was in this room that the foundation of the NEW ORDER of the world was set up; and the old ORDER was destroyed and abolished. After worshipping the place and kissing its HOLY THRESHOLD we left the HOUSE.

THE GARDEN OF REZVAN

I have not seen a Green grass; said his Holiness BAHÁ-U-LIAH for over 9 years. When his Holiness ABD-UL-BAHÁ heard this ne went and prepared the garden of RUYAN where his Holiness BATA-U-LIAH was walking in it sometimes. Now we had the privilege to walk in this garden: We sat under the Brook where his Holiness BAHÁ-U-LLAH used to sit in those times and we were feeling a sort of delight at this simple and yet noticeable privilege. One chair and a BED was left there from his holiness personal belongings: We kissed them. There was also a written Tablet from is Holiness there; we read it and while reading it; it ware as if his Holiness is present there and is watching us. After visiting this Garden we left it to go to the Garden of FERDOWSS.

THE GARDEN OF FERDOWSS

The garden of Perdownss has a swimming pool where his Holiness would sit in front of it sometimes: We visited this garden too and enjoyed its beauties.

THE MAZRAE MANSION

We then entered the MAZRAE mansion and visited some of the personal belonging of His Holiness BAKA-U-LLAH. It was after this visit that we realized..."

that his HOLLINESS was not very comfortable here; the mansion in which he dwelt after his release from prison.

We saw beautiful views in this Mansion.

THE MANSION OF BAHJI

This mansion is a symbol of his kingdom.

Now there are beautiful gardens and wide avenues with the shadow of big trees in this Mansion; all of which have come into existence through the special attention which our Beloved Guardian is paying to the residence of HIS HOLINESS.

The beautiful flowers & the extraordinary Handsome Statues of the mansion took our breath away from us. The wide avenues shadowed with its big trees are something which a visitor can never forget.

The Mansion is lighted with strong projectors in the evenings. We visited it in the evening when all its gardens were full of light.

We then visited the ROOMS of the mansion one by one. In the HALL of the mansion were the certificates of the registrations which the governments of the world had issued in recognition to the BAHÁ'Í faith and religion.

There was a written Document from every country; & pictures of His Holiness family were decorating the HALL. We visited all the rooms until we entered the private ROOM of His Holiness. This is the same Room where the British Professor and Historian BROW 14 had been presented to His Holiness BAHÁ-U-LLAH and who said; when visiting his Holiness BAHÁ-U-LIAH I could obviously see that kings of countries were envying me as I was visiting the King of the Kings and the One WHOSE Kingdom is eternal.

The Bed of his holiness was still in this room and his slippers were laid down near it. Also there we could see his hat hanged in his sitting place. All the rooms were lighted with electricity except this ROOM which had still a petrol lamp in it as a matter of tradition and remembrance of those Old historic days. We were all confused; our minds could not work any longer. Are we the humble servants of our Master here present in this Historical PLACE.

THE SHRINE OF BAHÁ-U-LLAH

At intending to enter the SHRINE we first made a tour around it humbly until we came to a street which was leading from us to the DOOR of the Shrine. Far away we could see the SIGN BAHÁ-U-LLAH set up on the top of the entrance.

MY GOD what an extreme happiness THOU has given to us; we said; while crossing these streets. Beautiful Statues and Big Bowls of flowers are located on both sides of the streets. They are wide and beautiful and it appeared to us that somehow our Beloved Guardian has provided them for the future KINGS who will come to pay HOMAGE and pilgrim to this HOLY SHRINE and who will walk through these streets.

We were approaching toward the SHRINE humbly. All the way to the SHRINE we were praying humbly until we reached the DOOR of the Shrine. We took off our shoes and the door of the Urine was opened unto us. All the Shrine was lighted and full of flowers- and the whole place wee smelling with a sort of Fine Spiritual scent which I am unable to explain it in words. This scent and the spiritual HOLY Atmosphere of the SHRIAS took our souls to Evan right in the presence of his Holiness BAHÁ-U-LLAH. Automatically our heads bowed and we kissed this sacred place which had been kissed so many times by our Beloved ABD-UL-BAHÁ and Our beloved Guardian We were wondering in heaven; soul and BODY now: I wish all our BAHÁ'Í friend could be here to sea what a privilege we have had at this moment. We prayed for all the people of the world asking OW to grant them the same privilege and blessings.

OUR NIGHT STAY IN THE BAHÁ'Í MANSION

Every Pilgrim is allowed; through the kindness of our Beloved Guardian to sleep one night in the BAHÁ'Í Mansion. But here a special blessing case to us from our Beloved Guardian.

It was Dr. LUTFOLLAH HAKIN who gave us this good news; “that our Beloved Guardian has given orders... that I might be allowed to spend the evening alone in the reception ROOM of his Holiness .BAHÁ-U-LLAH. My wife too was allowed to spend the evening at the special ROOM which our beloved Guardian had in the Mansion of BAHJI. This good piece of news rind a great and surprising effect on me and my wife and we were almost going to faint from the extras pleasure which this good piece of news had b t to us. We were both crying like children when we had leave our companion pilgrims to go to our ROOMS.

I can find no words to explain the blessings and privilege which we have had in those two ROOMS. It was something beyond explanation and a whole BOOK will net suffice to express and explain those merciful and kind blessings and the privilege which had come to us during that night. We could see all the profits of GOD in the presence of his holiness BAHÁ-U-LLAH.

It was for such occasions that the Iranian PORT said:

- Like MOSES all the prophets of GOD are here standing before THOU And all of them are impatient to see THOU
- I am also among them; among THY LOVERS
- But if THOU would refuse to show THYSELF to me; I won't leave THY
- I will stay and stay until I see THY

We were praying and worshiping Gad all that night and this was the only night in our lives which will be remembered throughout all our lives.

From the special blessings extended to us during that night we hope that we may all succeed in our pioneering service all over the world.

THE EFFECT OF AKA VISIT

Have you visited all the places; asked us our Beloved Guardian; after returning to HIM? Have you enjoyed this visit?; he again repeated? Have you kissed all the HOLY thresholds?

“Yes” I replied; but in all these HOLY PLACE we were first seeing THOU; and then we were kissing these HOLY PLACES. Whenever we were with THOU; the guardian of the cause of GOD. AL11 your thoughts must be toward the SHRINE only; replied our Beloved Guardian; at this. have you prayed for all your JAPANESE friends; ne then asked us? Our beloved Guardian; I replied. Were you very glad at seeing all these HOLY PLACES he then asked?

We do not deserve all these kindness and affection: we had not done anything to deserve all THOU blessings; I replied. This is the reward of your sincere and faithful service in the FAR EAST; in TOKYO and is other JAPANESE cities and also the reward of your service in other countries replied our Beloved Guardian. I was standing humbly before HIM and felt a sort of shyness at hearing all this from our Beloved Guardian.

Your services are very important; said our Beloved Guardian; since the organizations of JAPAN must help us in the latter of establishing the International house of JUSTICE.

OUR FAREWELL

The time of Fare well had come. The period of our stay in the dreamed paradise had come to an, end. Our Beloved Guardian called us alone to his presence to Bid us FAREWELL.

At entering the ROOM I throw myself at his feet; embraced them and started kissing his feet. God forbid it; was saying Our Beloved Guardian. Do stand to BID Fare-Well to me. HIS behavior was similar to His holiness ABD-UL-BAHÁ’s treatment with the PILORIAB. When I stood up; I saw my wife too had entered the ROOM. And since she intended to throw hers unto his feet; our beloved Guardian opened his hand and kept them before her so that she may not be able to throw herself at his FEET. But my wife who was on her knees now was crying and asking HIM to be allowed to kiss his FEET. The more he was preventing her the more lens would cry and beg HIM. I was witnessing am astonishing sight. It was the scene of an Ant asking to throw itself at SOLOMONS FEET.

Our Beloved Guardian was saying: “this is prohibited but my wife was saying: My soul be sacrificed to THY; allow to kiss THOU feet; to throw myself under THOU PUT only Once. The argument was going on for several minutes and at the end my wife’s devotions and her sincere prayings touched his ocean of mercy and no removed his hands; and my 't4'0Aliin,nerself on his FEET. After kissing his feet my wife and I were ordered to sit; and while we were both crying from joy and happiness; Our Beloved Guardian said Thanks to GOD that you have succeeded and have come at visited tee HOLY LAND and enjoyed tae spiritual breeze of the SHRINE.

I was very eager to see you: fie said then: I had always blessed your sincere service and praise to GOD that you have succeeded and are both: the organizer of the faith of GOD and its teacher in JAPAN.

Be sure of the future and give confidence to everyone that the future of JAPAN is bright.

We have nothing: we are week; and need THOU guidance and blessings; we said while we were both weeping. Be sure that the blessings of his holiness BAHÁ-U-LLAH are with you; said our Beloved Guardian. Row it is the beginning of the organization of JAPAN; and you have succeeded in such a difficult time. Japan will make great progress especially now that the National Spiritual Assembly is to be set up there. This Rational Spiritual Assembly is one of the foundations of the International house of Justice. The faith of GOD will be extended from JAPAN to all the surrounding Islands and it will then be extended to RUSSIA

All the population of JAPAN: 90 million people are anxious and in need of THOU blessings and guidance; I said to our Beloved Guardian. Give assurance to all of them; said our Beloved Guardian that I will pray for you and for the population of JAPAN: especially when I go to the Shrine of Báb. The pioneering of our believers to JAPAN is very important; then added our Beloved Guardian.

In your way to JAPAN; in ÍRÁN; India encourages our friends to pioneer to JAPAN; specially you must encourage our BAHÁ'Í friends in ÍRÁN and give them the good news of the HOLY-LAND. Then our Beloved Guardian stood up with the purpose to leave us: he came near and kissed me; again and while leaving us his voice of Blessing was repeatedly heard to assure us of HIS blessings until he disappeared. We then did not hear his BOLT voice; neither saw his HOLY face again; or his walking away from us: but his Bright and HOLY FACE were engraved in our hearts; and we hope to keep this spiritual blessing and wealth throughout all our lives. I forgot to mention that at the time of leaving um he said give my love and blessings to our Old and New JAPANESE friends; especially to Miss. Alexander and Mr. Robert Imagire.

(End)

Translation of a letter dated 6th January 1956 written by Mr. Núri'd-Dín Momtazi from Tíhrán to his son Bouhollah on the instruction of the Guardian.

If I wrote thousands of letters like this I would still not be able to explain one thousandth part of the men, and bounties that we received. To see the face of our Gordian ammo is enough for a whole life time. The tidings which we heard frail his make our spirits cheerful therefore; we prayed that all the friends in Japan might receive the same bounty and succeed in visiting our Guardian. The very day that the Guardian explained about the future of the Faith, especially in Japan, we felt special joy, and told the Guardian of my deep feeling that I wished to cable to the friends in Japan and let them know the inspiring news as soon as possible. Guardian replied it is better to write them and explain.

The following is a brief report:

1. Guardian is especially very, very happy, and it is not now possible to explain.
2. Guardian made special reference to Japan and each time we visited him told us "Japan will be same as Africa. Bahá'u'lláh said "If they want to conceal the light in to this land it will rise from the sea. And call I am the reviver of the world." Then Guardian said, "this is a reference to Írán and Japan. Recently the enemies of the faith tried to persecute the friends in Írán, but now the light of the faith of Bahá'u'lláh has arisen from Japan, which is the ocean. Japan will be the forerunner of guiding human beings spiritually and Japan will revive mankind."

We told him now in Hiroshima there is a Bahá'í Group, and they have a Bahá'í Center. He became very happy and said the Japanese believers have to work for the Faith themselves and you must encourage them." He said that we in Japan have nothing, however, the Faith has spread. He said, "this is because of obedience to the administrative order" (As yesterday he had explained to us the importance of obedience and also about the Will and Testament.)

About the election of NSA he specially gave instruction I shall explain When I am in Japan. The essence of said Will is that the only centers which can send delegate for the election of the NSA in IW are those which have an LSA in 1966. We asked about the centers which do not have enough believers to establish an L.S.A and he said "they are deprived and this is for encouraging the friends to try to have enough believers for an L.S.A in 1956.

The Guardian instructed us on the way back to Japan to visit the friends of Írán, Pakistan, India & Hongkong, therefore we have to do that. We told him about the new believer, Mr. Sako. Guardian said "assure him that I will pray for him."

The Guardian said "I will instruct the friends in the Islands around Japan to attend the convention when the N. S. A is to be formed in Japan. I shall give special instruction in the regard later. Each time the Guardian was telling us about Japan his face was full of joy and he was actually seeing the bright future of the Faith in that country.

At the time of leaving we were weeping, and told him we have nothing in Japan and time is short, we need inspiration. He answered, "Assure all the Japanese believers they will have it"

The good tidings about the spreading of the Faith all over the world which we heard from the Guardian were the following:

1. The countries which up to this time have been opened to the Faith are 242. The countries planned to be opened to the Faith during the 10 year crusade are 131, and 111 of them have been opened within 3 years. When he was saying this he was very, very happy.
2. The races which have cons into the Faith are 40.
3. The languages in which the Bahá'í Literature has been translated are 190.
4. The Bahá'í Centers up to this time are 3700, 1600 Centers are in United States, 750 Centers in Írán, 400 in Africa, 100 in Canada, 100 in England and the balance in other countries.
5. The total Ḥaẓíras which were to bought during the 10 year crusade were 60, and now 32 have been bought already. He said "the enemy destroyed the dome of one Ḥaẓíra in Tíhrán, but 32 Ḥaẓíras were bought in other parts of the world."
6. The Islands which have been opened to the Faith are 90. 30 were opened daring 100 years and 60 Islands have been opened in last 3 years. About the future institutions on Mount Carmel the Guardian explained to us and shall tell you about them in Japan. One of those is the International Archives which has 62 columns; 7 of them have been already erected. Bash of the columns is 7 esters in height an 71 tons in weight. The other institutions are the Guardianship, the Sands oaf the Cause, the International House of Justice, end the Institute of Higher Sciences. These I shall explain to you when I am in Japan. The other splendid building is the Mother of Temples in Holy Lend which will be built on the top of Mount Carmel. 7. The other news is that in all Islámic entries, be separate from Government. In Egypt they have already separated and no transaction will be made through the religious Notary Public. He said "in Írán and other countries it will be the same in future."

When I was in Haifa on the pilgrimage recently, the Guardian gave me the commission to visit isolated believers and you were on the list he gave me. I think he intended for me to visit places not too far away from here. But I thought you might like to hear a few items. He gave me a phial of perfume to anoint each one and I shall save some for you. Perhaps after consulting you may have some suggestion – there are conferences and things _____ and there may be something closer to Monte Carlo_____.

I arrived December 23rd, was there 9 days and spent one day in Nazareth while waiting for the boat for Marseilles. Laura Davis from Canada arrived a few minutes after I did. _____ roomed together and she stopped here on her way home, after a tour of Israel and some points in Europe. She took 200 snapshots and promised to send me all that turn out – a complete set. We plan to make up a scrap book. There were some excellent post cards. Views of the Shrine of “‘AKKÁ and Haifa” – at a camera shop in Haifa. These along with the houses will tell and illustrate the story of those who haven’t been there as yet. I’m sure you will and get there eventually.

I’m enclosing copy of Laura’s poem, written on her way here. We felt greatly favored; here are some of the special things:

1. We heard the Guardian chant at the Feast of the _____ of the Báb (according to eastern calendar, it came _____ December 30th) at the Shrine of the Báb and ‘Abdu’l-Bahá _____
2. _____ Khánun and were permitted to _____
3. _____ is for the Guardian for dinner _____ the next day!) as he contemplated it he said _____ American or Europea?”
4. We spent 2 nights at Bahjí with Persian pilgrims _____
5. We rode in the new car, a _____ John Allen to the _____

6. The last day, we were there The Guardian had Leroy Ioas take us to the top of Mt. Carmel and show us the site of the future Hashriqul Adhkar – best piece of property in Haifa.

7. We helped to _____ Dr. Ḥakím was occupied elsewhere _____ on Mt. Carmel.

We saw the archives, the drawing of the new archives building, to be erected in the fan-shaped section of the Memorial Gardens. The picture of the Bahá'u'llah and Báb in the major Archives. The Shrines, the Mansion at Bahjí, Masra'a, Rizqan, House of Abbúd, Months crowded into nine days. The lights are turned on at the Shrine of the Báb at dark and so my little ship sailed out of the harbor. I watched for the lights to go on, wondering if it was Dr. Ḥakím or his son Iradj. And I watched till they went off.

When I sat down to write Bahá'í friends I told them I had been in Paradise and found that the people there were not sitting in golden chairs, but working, building, working, building. How they work. The Guardian did not stop for a real meal for hours, one period when he was especially when he is deep in the codification of the Aqdas. It will be very difficult to translate, he says.

We should teach first the principle, then Unity of God, of his Prophets and Unity of Mankind. Do not give the laws at first, they shock. When the student knows and loves Him, tell who He is. The book to use is the French translation of Gleanings – excerpts, I believe. In future Monaco will be under French NSA.

Dr. Ḥakím says to him the Guardian is exactly like the Master – except for one thing – He is the Master grown young! I noticed that he is once a distinct entity – different. His _____ are indescribable – Dr. Ḥakím says, like Bahá'u'lláh's his nose is like the Báb. One night He spoke of the Guardianship – all he had expected to do was to convene the _____ of Justice. The terrible burden when he realized what was given to him with no directive from the Master Organization is Accessory in the Cause. It is growing so fast that it must have good organization. India and Persia need organization and do not have it. Africa is _____, Canada next _____ then US. In France the teacher should consult with the NSA. Material Civilization is not it is placing too much importance on physical comfort. _____ interested in something just given out in House of _____ out the bomb poisoning the atmosphere much time was _____ first night on the _____ of Bahá'u'lláh (See p. 294 World Order Book and p.). He was asked if he would sponsor a release and he said yes: the translation as at present is not correct: something 'Abdu'l-Bahá said while in US is to be located – the word "instrument" will not do. There have been 3 _____ it was found to extend over a larger area: (_____) it is known to affect – contaminate – vary great areas of the earth's atmosphere. Good to use inteaching this prophecy.

25 Thurs: Arr'd, Haifa – Taxi to Pilgrim House – 10 Pers__ St. Homa opened door – Millie greeted me, _____ came, Laura Davis from Toronto arrived few minutes later; Then Jessie came; Laura and I were givin room together. Next we met Mrs. Giachery, then the John Allena (from Africa) and then Rúhíyyih Khánum; she talked with us until lunch was announced. She sent us to bed to rest before meeting the Guardian; then we had ____ with her at 5: P.M. in the apartment occupied by Giacherrys. At dinner – about 7:30 we met the Guardian. He asked how we came, how long it took and served pilau to us. I spoke of latest news from Elizabeth stamp which interested him and he asked for her address. Said he was glad John Roberts was going there. The main topic after dinner was finished, was the prophecy of Bahá'u'lláh about the BOMB (see p.183 BWF.193 BWWB _____) much time was spent over the phrase “instrument exist in the earth.” Mr. Ioas asked about a release for the press as coming from the head of the BWF and the Guardians approved; words used by ‘Abdu'l-Bahá in a _____ explaining this prophecy. The Guardian asked Mr Ioas to write for this. NY most _____ city in the world will be rebuilt after bombing. Asked if Paris was nt the most evil – he said no – it is the most immoral – but not the most evil. Jan. 2- returned to Haifa to rake ASTRA

January 14, 195__, Monte Carlo, Monaco

The Little streamer "ASTRA" (3,314 tons) sailed from Marseilles for Haifa on Dec. 17th and I went alone this time. The "QUEEN ELIZABETH" on which Florence and I came over was 80/85,000 tons! But the little boat got me there and back and I wasn't so seasick as on the big one. Six days going, six returning, 9 days there and one 1 Nazareth. We passed the volcano Stromboli, towering out of the Mediterranean and the Island of Elba, where I breathed a prayer in remembrance of Dorothy. It is larger than I supposed. On our return trip we stopped for a day in Naples and I succumbed to the tour and saw the ruins of Pompeii, gazed on Vesuvius and bought a tiny cameo from the famous factory there.

Landing in Marseilles early in the morning of Jan. 9th, I took a taxi to the home of the friends there as requested by the Guardian. It was a thriller. Many travelers on the way to Haifa have stopped there but this was the first visit from a returning pilgrim. I wish you could have been there that day.

Laura Davis from Toronto arrived par avion a few minutes after I got to Pilgrim House and we shared the same room 9 days. She is due here now anytime on her way home. We went to Nazareth together and she returned with me (taxi) to the boat which sailed Jan. 2nd. Then she went to the Jerusalem, a tour of Israel, then to Athens, Rome, Monte Carlo, Germany and England where she will take off for Canada. She took 200 snapshots and has promised to send me a complete set of all the turn out – taken of course during the 9 days. We had dinner six nights with the Guardian; teas with Rúhíyyih Khánúm; spent two nights in Bahjí in Persian Pilgrims, by special arrangement of the Guardian; saw the tomb of the Báb and 'Abdu'l-Bahá in the glorious Shrine on Mt. Carmel, the Memorial Gardens, the land (fan-shaped) being prepared for future institutions that will be built there – the first the Archives Building, which drawing the Guardian showed us; and by special direction of the Guardian Mr. Ioas took us by taxi to the top of Mt. Carmel to show us the newly acquired land for the Temple; we lived at Pilgrim House (Western), visited the Eastern Pilgrim House; saw Masra'a and it's keeper and had tea there; we're guided through the House of Aboud (East and West Houses), and lunch there in 'Abdu'l-Bahá's bridal chamber; lunched, breakefasted and dined at Bahjí and met Salah, the keeper, and his mother, the hostess. Rode in the new car that belongs to the Guardian, gift of John Allen, prayed in all the Shrines for the long typed list of friends, communities and our families, and Bahá'ís and pioneers throughout the world; heard the chanting of the Tablest of Visitation by the Guardian at the 30th (which is the feast of the declaration of the Báb in the Eastern Calendar); read our prayers in English and heard the Persians chant theirs, when we were together in the Shrines; saw the Major and the Minor Archives; the little house near the Eastern Pilgrim House where the ladies were served the Feast Tea the afternoon of the 30th and had the Feast dinner in the Guardian's House that day with Rúhíyyih Khánum and dinner that night with the Guardian and saw the Scroll of Honor; gathered handfuls of flowers to lay on the Shrines so that we might share them; had the loving hospitality of the Guardian; Rihíyyih Khánum, Millie Collins, Leroy Ioas, Jessie and Ethel evell, were conducted through our tours by the saintly, the _____ and wonderful Dr. Luṭfu'lláh Ḥakím; saw the blood-stained shirt of the Báb, the ring of oddus, the sword of Ḥusayn; relics of the Greatest Holy Leaf; saw the endless beauty in the collections and arrangements of Gardens, the tapestries, pictures, vases, furniture, Tablets, framed and unframed; bookcases full of books, beautifully arranged; the framed incorporation papers of Local and National Assemblies of the World; the models of the Temples in Bahjí's Mansion; Canon Ball from Fort Ṭabarsí; pictures of 'Abdu'l-Bahá, of the Greatest Holy Leaf, the Purest branch, the paintings of 'Abdu'l-Bahá, of 'Akká and many things by Marion Jack; personal relics of 'Abdu'l-Bahá, Bahá'u'lláh, Báb, Purest Branch, Greatest Holy Leaf, Navváb and even of the Father of Bahá'u'lláh. The PHOTOGRAPH AND THE PAINTING OF BAHÁ'U'LLÁH and the PAINTING OF THE BÁB, one -hundredth part of the treasures still to be placed in the Archives of the built; looked down the 9 terraces toward Haifa where the kings and queens will walk up to the Shrine, take off their crowns and their shoes and circumambulate the Shrine; terrace steps in future years to be paved with gold. We're greeted by the 85 year old gardener at Masra'a who does as much work as a youth; ate oranges from the tree near the Shrine of Bahá'u'lláh and the Garden of Riḍván and gazed at the place where Bahá'u'lláh used to sit and talk with the friends, prayed in the room He occupied there; always in the Shrines it was Tablets of Aḥmad. In the Shrines the vases of fresh flowers, the lights, framed Tablets of Visitation in English and Persian, the gleaming, magnificent chandeliers, the exquisite rugs and tapestries and the fragrance of the flowers and nearness of the spirit. We visited the prison room and prayed there, too. The nurse (it is a hospital now and this room is reserved as sacred Bahá'í property) conducting us through took off her shoes and sat quietly as we prayed and chanted. Everywhere framed pictures of the _____ NAME and the Temple. All this and more, the work of our Beloved Guardian who always says "The Bahá'ís did this."

We wrote many notes but I cannot find mine. It would be a deep grief except that Laura has hers. We brought pebbles from the Shrines and the monument Gardens, Pilgrim House, the house of the Guardian with the nameplate on the gate ‘ABDU’L-BAHÁ, ‘ABBÁS NO. 7’

You may imagine how I felt when the Guardian’s ____ came. Everyone was wonderful....

OUR BELOVED GUARDIAN

He is distinctly an entity-different. His effect upon us is indescribable but I try to define it as the effect of absolute PURITY, CHASTITY, and INTEGRITY. He was never severe. He wore a black taj, a brown coat and black tie, except on the occasion of the Declaration of the Báb, he wore a black coat and brown tie and he was beautiful beyond description. His hair shows on the Temple and is white. His eyes are indescribable – like coals of fire when he speaks or when he thinks they seem to look into the unknown. His hands are always eloquent. His voice low and melodious. He was happy and smile often. He is codifying the AQDAS and working very hard. Once he did not have a real meal for 48 hours. The translation will come later – it will be very difficult to translate the AQDAS.

We are planning a scrap-book each with the snapshots and notes... to share with others, for the Guardian said “You have taken in, you have imbibed, now you must share – give out...”

Arrival at the Pilgrim House

Pilgrimage in 1956/7 Cable arrived Monte Carlo from USA NSA, from Guardian on Nov. 26, 1956.

Left on Artza, Jewish boat from Marseille in December; nine day visit.

At the last dinner, the Guardian would say to pilgrim “You have imbibed; now you must share” Meaning that the Pilgrim must relate to those at home what he/she had learned, seen, heard.

American pilgrims stayed at Western Pilgrim House. Eastern pilgrims stayed at Eastern Pilgrim House. West Pil. House is now used by the IHJ; East Pil. House is used for another purpose now and go to hotels; at that period in Bahá’í history we were guests of the Guardian.

(Pilgrimage was set up by the Guardian’s list of applications; space was limited at the World Centre and we were guests)

The Guardian had tea with the Eastern Pilgrims and dinner with the Western Pilgrims.

We were instructed to assemble in the room above the dining room and to come down quickly when called, for the Guardian was standing ready to greet us;

he had come over from his apartment atop ‘Abdu’l-Bahá’s House at 7 Persian Street, diagonally across from West Pil. House

Table: Guests: A long table with white linen tablecloth and napkins. The Guradian and Rúhíyyih Khánum sat side by side at the opposite side of the table, facing the entrance. Those present were: Dr. and Mrs. Giarchery: Mr. and Mrs. John Allen from Africa; Mr. Allen had brought a present of a new car for the Guardian. (Mr Allen was running Mr. Ioas around doing a lot of errands and getting a lot of things accomplished.) But the Guardian stopped that for he wanted Mr. Allen to get more spiritual value out of his visit.

The Guardian: They said he was taller than Bahá’u’lláh, but not so tall as ‘Abdu’l-Bahá; his hands were like Baba’u’llah’s. The Persians called him but ‘Abdu’l-Bahá grown young.

He was very much like his photographs. Oval face, tan olive skin; short, closely clipped black mustache. He wore a long brown tweed-like coat over an Englishman’s regular suit and a black tie. H wore a black fez.

He greeted us all warmly: At table he serves us pilau. Saying it was a Persian dish and asking if we ever had it, something like that. He was very loving and warm. His voice, I had looked forward to hearing his voice; so I glued my ears on him when he spoke; I noticed it began to interfere or something; so I stopped. I heard that his accent was English. It was rather more American, but in reality, neither English or American. His voice was gentle and melodious.

His eyes were extraordinary; R.K. described them in Priceless Pearl; exactly as I would. They were dark, it seemed, but in reality they were huge. When something profound came up, his eyes grew large (protruded, that’s the best word, I can think of to describe the effect) and like rubies – red.

Not like blood or a color ruby, full of fire or lights.

I forgot to finish those at table; Mr. Ioas, Jessie Revell, Laura Davis from Toronto, Canada, who arrived a few minutes after my arrival and we shared the same room. I can’t remember if Millie Collins was there but there wasn’t room for one more, so Ethel Revell ate elsewhere.

Mrs. Collins told us there were two angels in Haifa; Ethel Revell and Dr. Ḥakím. “They want nothing,” she said.

In days of the beloved Guardian, when we made the pilgrimage and that last evening at dinner with he came - you see the pilgrims from the West had dinner with the beloved Guardian at the Western Pilgrim House and the pilgrim from the East had afternoon with Him at the Eastern Pilgrim House. He went to the Shrine of the Báb to chant for two hours in the afternoon and pass by and had tea with the Eastern Pilgrims. We asked questions and He taught us many things around the world. So, on that last night, we would say : you have imbibed, now you must share. He meant that all that he had learned, heard seen and experience during those precious days, we were to take back and share with all the Bahá'ís of our Community.

He spoke of the flow from the communities to the world Centre and the outpouring of the spiritual forces of those consummated places back into the communities.

That last night of his life on earth, they are in that third-class hotel in London as he worked on the progress of the Ten-Year World Crusade – so ill, so weary he spoke of many things he had to do and he said he was not going to do them when he went back. But one thing he would do – he said he would receive the pilgrims.

There is a tablet unpublished, and that time revealed by Bahá'u'lláh telling them to receive the pilgrims.

Now let's look back a moment to the beginning of the Ten-Year Plan. I know how the Bahá'ís were affected – and so it must have been all around the world – they were stunned, amazed, electrified. I knew right then that I would go. Besides I had been saying for pioneering for some time and was ready. Then one day, I received a _____ from Edna True, oh of the European Tech. Com. In the U. S.; she said Nellie Franch had passed away in Monte Carlo and the Guardian had cabled that her post should be filled immediately – taking precedence over everything else. He said he did not want the momentum she had built up there, lost. I was asked to go. I must think it over. All right – write me tomorrow. And so I went.

Now I had written for the pilgrimage, as it meant our name was on a list waiting for a year. But his letter came granting the pilgrimage immediately. It was impossible for me to get my passport and be there in the time stipulated, as I was in the midst of packing and working out details to go to Monaco. So I write him and he replied “Go, get settled and write me from there.” So that is why I sailed from Europe instead of America. I went to Marseille to get the little boat Arza, of the Government of Israel. Six days it took and we saw the land all the way to Cyprus. Then we struck out and away from all sight of Land. No storms but a terrible windy night. We were told to be ready to disembark next morning.

That morning I looked out of the window (tourist) and there stood the Shrine of the Báb in the Centre of Mount Carmel. Ruy. Khánun describes it as one of the most beautiful pieces of architecture on the Mediterranean Sea.

I hurried upstairs; the deck was crowded; and there in the Centre was the minister from Australia (many groups were going to spend the Christian holiday here.) He pointed to the Shrine and said to his followers, perhaps a dozen: Now that is Bahá'í. I don't know much about it. But they're for peace.

Haifa and ‘Akká Port

Now, something about the Port of Haifa. The Guardian described it as semi-circular. By steamer you can see the coast stretching all the way to ‘Akká. I would strongly recommend ending the journey to the World Centre by steamer just to see the Shrine in the Centre of Mount Carmel and the Port of Haifa.

One day in the Eastern Pilgrim House, ‘Abdu’l-Bahá looked out of the window and prophesied the future of ‘Akká and Haifa. He said they would unite, forming one mighty metropolis. He said Israel would become the Centre of Culture of the world. Mount Carmel and the Shrine of the Báb would be flooded with lights extending down into the Bay of Haifa. Much he foretold has already come to pass is now in progress and much greater things will happen in the future. ‘Akká and Haifa are 15 miles apart. His prophecy is in the New Era. The Guardian drew his model plan for the World Centre from the Tablet of Carmel.

He said that Israel is the meeting place of three continents: Europe, Asia and Africa. It is also the Centre of four great religions: Judaism, Christianity, Islám and the Bahá’í Faith. For the Bahá’í Faith it is also the Administrative Centre. I have been told that other religious leaders have asked the Government there for the same privilege the Bahá’ís have and they were told they could have them – on the same conditions...

The climate is not healthy. I remember Jessie Revell was ill with a cold and the Guardian sent her to Switzerland, because it just hung on. Also a Persian man working in Eastern Pilgrim House was ill from arthritis. The Guardian sent him away, too to recover. There is very little iodine in the Mediterranean Sea, not like the Atlantic which is health. Look at the children in those Mediterranean countries are sent to the mountains in the summer for their health.

The atmosphere of the World Centre is something. It is a blending of the spirit of repose and peace of the East and the vital and progressive spirit of the West. The climate is semi-tropical and resembles somewhat Florida and Monaco.

So I disembark and get a taxi and say “Eastern Pilgrim House,” of course the driver knows. So there I was. I ran up several cement steps, the porch was cement; no roof; no trimming; two big black shining doors and shining brass knocker. I rang and a little girlish person answered, I told her my story and she understood not a word. Then she spoke and I understood not a word. My heart sank. But then she turned and looked around behind her, and there between the two pillars in an alcove in that beautiful room stood Millie Collins. She said, “I didn’t know anyone was coming today, but I thought I’d better come over.” How beautiful to see her.

About twenty minutes after my arrival, Laura Davis from Toronto, Canada arrived. She had come by plane to Tele-viv and to Haifa by taxi. They put us together in the same room. There were other guests and the rooms were all filled up.

Now something about Western Pilgrim House

The building of this house was started by Charles Randall. ‘Abdu’l-Bahá warned him to give more care to his business affairs, but he did not heed. And so he was not able to finish the building. Time passed and then one day, Milly Collins and her husband came to Haifa, Mr. Collins was a millionaire, he liked to travel by freighter instead of steamer and at that time, it was fashionable to take the trip down the Nile. So by steamer, they went to Egypt and took the trip down the Nile; then to please Milly, they went to Haifa.

When they arrived he said “We will register and then go up and leave our cards.” But it didn’t work out that way, because the Holy Family was watching and nothing would do but they must come in. so Mr. Collins met the Beloved Guardian. And that brusque businessman liked him – he liked the Guardian. Later on he asked Milly about that unfinished house, he felt that was not right for the Guardian; so he gave the money to finish building Western Pilgrim House. But as he was not a Bahá’í he gave it to Milly and she gave it. He gave her a home up in England; and the National got short of money; so Milly sold it and gave the money to the Faith. And Mr. Collins never asked a question. Never mentioned a word about it. When he died, he left his entire fortune to Milly, knowing she would give it all to the Faith. He was proud of Milly. Proud of her because she had courage to do some things different.

The House of ‘Abdu’l-Bahá is diagonally across from the Western Pilgrim House. No. 7 Persian St. and it has orange trees on the ground behind it. There was an olive grove near the Pilgrim House. There were beautiful flowering trees such as you find in semi-tropical climate.

You step from the porch, as I remember, right into the large room; it’s long, not square to the left end was the living quarters of Mr. and Mrs. Ioas. It was probably a sleeping and sitting room combined; he had a small reception room; there was a desk; and a stove he had just brought from United States. You see there was no such thing as a central heating. They told us – Rúhíyyih Khánúm and Jessie and Ethel Revell. How they suffered for lack of heat when they first went there, but they had become quite used to it.

Going to the left there was another room used as a business office but also I think a bedroom; then Jessie’s room; then the two large doors; and the room occupied by Laura and me was next. Then you looked at your right and saw another large room at the end of the beautiful central room; it had a glass window and window seats; there was a stove and a large, round table in the Centre and it was there that the pilgrims gathered and waited for the call to go down to dinner with the Beloved Guardian. On that side was a bathroom, the descending stairs, some planks on some steps, the room it led to was used at that time as a store room. The large central room that you entered from the porch was beautifully finished; there were pillars and alcove.

The dining room also was not square but long; there was a long table, with a beautiful linen cloth, exquisite china and silver. (Rúhíyyih Khánum told us there were many sets of dishes; the Holy Family, her mother's and more)

The guests at that time were Dr. & Mrs. Giachery, Mr. and Mrs. John Allen from Africa; Mr. Allen brought the Guardian in automobile and he was running Mr. Ioas around to get things done. But the Guardian stopped that. He said that Mr. Allen was not getting the spiritual value of his privilege.

Ehtel led the way. Rihíyyih Khánum, Mr. Ioas and Jessie Revell were standing in their places; the Guardian stood a few paces away. Ethel shook hands with him, taking his hand in both of hers. All in turn shook hands with the Beloved Guardian as he greeted us with "Welcome, welcome." Rúhíyyih Khánum told us to find our places, but she helped us. Mrs. Giachery that was seated at the head of the table; to her right sat the Guardian, then Rúhíyyih Khánum, Mr. Ioas and Jessie, at the other end of the table sat Mrs. John Allen, then to her right, Mr. Allen, Isat next to him, Luara sat next to me and finally Dr. Giachery. Milly did not come, she was not feeling well and Ethel ate elsewhere, as there was not room for another person.

The Guardian served each guest; that Persian Pilau, showering on us his hospitality and love. How describe him? A friend once said to me: if you could make him a little plainer to us. That is not possible. Dr. Katherine True told in her pilgrim notes, about the man who met him 14 times. When he came out the first, he said "He is short." When he came out the last time, he said "He is a giant."

In stature, the Guardian resembled Bahá'u'lláh; 'Abdu'l-Bahá was taller than they were. His face was oval, olive skin, a closely clipped black mustache; he wore a fez; a black soft white collar (I think it was) and black tie. He wore a long tan robe; loosely woven with a bright figure in it. I have imagined that it was the same one he wore when Mrs. Sears was there, according to his description.

His voice was melodious and his speech not English, as I had been told but rather Harvard. Just pure English. I have a phobia about voices and instantly glued my ears on his voice. It must have interfered, for I noticed an imperceptible something and stopped that right there. His eyes; Rihíyyih Khánum said they were hazel. To me they looked dark. An extraordinary thing happened one evening. She spoke of this I do not remember what subject we were on; suddenly his eyes became two immense orbs; protruding, they seemed to me to be ruby red with shafts of fire or light. It lasted – I can't say, perhaps 30 seconds. There was silence – no one moved. Then he continued as usual. It seemed to me he was witnessing something. But I don't know. Perhaps he was listening.

Onw evening, Mrs. Giachery asked him if "Abdu'l-Bahá had left him any instructions. He answered "I had none. I had to find my way alone."

First dinner with the Guardian

Part I

The first evening at dinner with the Beloved Guardian, the conversation turned on the automatic bomb. For thirty years the Guardian had been reading the London Times and at that morning the scientist had something to say about “chain reaction. The scientists are catching up with Bahá’u’lláh” he said.

There are three stages in the bomb; 1. Destruction - right then and there; 2. Radiation – devastating; 3. Chain Reaction – that we haven’t had yet.

Bahá’u’lláh said that “some day man would draw out of the earth a colossal force which would render mankind happy if it knew how to use it” so if the bomb – the energy thereof would be used to serve humanity, that would be good. But it would be necessary to create a world council of wise men elected by the people, to control it. (Trans. from French notes)

Shoghi Effendi to what Bahá’u’lláh wrote about material civilization. “The civilization so often vaunted by the learned exponents of arts and sciences, will, if allowed to overleap the bounds of moderation, bring great evil upon men... If carried to excess civilization will prove as prolific, as source of evil as it had been for goodness when kept within the restraints of moderation. The day is approaching when its flames will devour the cities...”

What is material civilization? Arts, Sciences, Government, Progress, Education, Enlightenment. Nothing wrong with that. But unless combined with Divine Civilization, ‘Abdu’l-Bahá said “There will be no results.” What is Divine Civilization? When ‘Abdu’l-Bahá was in Paris, they asked Him : What is the purpose of our lives? He said: “To acquire virtues. That’s divine civilization.

About the bomb, Bahá’u’lláh said: A strange and wonderful instrument exists in the earth but it is concealed from the minds and souls. It is an instrument which has the power to change the atmosphere of the whole earth and its infection causes destruction.”

The Guardian said the word “instrument” was not a true translation and he set us to work to find the word. We found nothing right: force, substance, element; I suggested: radiation; No, he said, it’s not radiation. Rihyiyih Khánúm finally said “There is a thing.” And we left it at that.

He said “All the nations have suffered from the bomb, now it would be America’s time.” He said America is like a child that has gone astray. It has to be punished.

Americans too are attached to their possessions. No harm in material civilization. But attachment to it is wrong. That is materialism and that is evil. It has come to such a pass that even the materialists are saying that materialism is bad. It began in Europe, he said, but was perfected in America.

In case of war, the big cities be the first to be bombed. New York, Chicago, Los Angeles, San Francisco. The Báb was the first to say that his followers must forsake their homes in order to “Aid My Cause.”

The large cities have had great bounties bestowed up them. They were visited by Shonghi Effendi.

Americans are too used to luxury and comfort. Persia has learned this materialism from America through Europe. Persians are leaving the villages because they cannot get rich fast enough there. I remember Mr. Baghdádí returning from a trip to Tíhrán when I was in Montpellier, France and he said they were “everyone is made making more money.”

Part II Dinner with the Guardian

One evening, at dinner, the Guardian spoke of the buildings to be erected on Mt. Carmel. He took his pen and draw a semi-circle, marked in the corner to the _____, I think where the archives building would be; it was just beginning, the foundation. Often he would refer to the drawing on an easel in the corner of the dining room. One could see his joy and pride in it. Then there would be the Universal House of Justice and a building resembling the Pentagon – offices and assembly rooms. There would be offices for the Hands, for NSA branch offices; every National Assembly will have a branch office at the World Centre (at that time there were seven, I think)

Different types of Architecture, but harmonizing...

Mr. Ioas interposed a question, between a statement and a question: There will be a home for the Guardian? There was a silence. He did not reply. Afterwards, when he passed away, I recalled that strange silence. He knew then that he would not live in that house.

A house will be built for the Guardian – a symbol of the Guardianship. One evening, he told us that the future of Guardianship will be very great. We did not understand that he meant that when he was gone, his writings, interpretations, the administrative order that he had reared would be our eternal guilines in the Guardianship did not suffer any decline when he left us.

Now a few things that came up at table.

He said that Kings and Dictators will again come into power, because of the chaos as civilization breaks apart.

Bahá’ís must expect all sorts of difficulties and troubles but should be strong of heart and have great faith. We should be filled with the spirit of consecration and dedication, such as animated Martha Root and Hyde Dunn. America is in great danger because of materialism. Too much emphasis is placed on material well-being. Through it, we become soft and attached to things. Even the American Negro has almost become as materialistic as white. Africans will come and teach Negroes in America. We must use moderation in all things. Godlessness creates a vacuum and materialism fills it.

Steadfastness, enthusiasm in our efforts, purposefulness, these are our essentials.

A proof of the greatness of the faith – that it was spread from prisons. This never happened, from the beginning of history. ‘Abdu’l-Bahá told this to a British admiral who have asked for a miracle that had happened in the Cause.

Committees: must encourage individuals; must be a partnership between official bodies and individuals but we must remember that we are serving the Cause of Bahá’u’lláh and not the committees or bodies. We must be internationally-minded about the faith. The Báb emphasized the spiritual unity of mankind. And Bahá’u’lláh said it would be definite reality. There are prophecies concerning this. It will come during the Formative Age of the Faith. A super-state will be established and the Lesser Peace will first be realized. The first super-state will be non-Bahá’í. But the second will be Bahá’í World State. That is under the Auspices of the Bahá’ís.

The most Great Peace marks the birth of world civilization and will continue to develop throughout the ages and cycles for 500,000 years and will embrace the whole planet. We are now in the administrative phase of this Formative Age which will culminate in World order.

NSA is given full authority as a body; but members are not infallible.

Part III at Dinner with the Guardian

The Guardian

Quote from tablets of “‘Abdu’l-Bahá Vol. II, p. 484: to an American believer.

A Maid of servant of God, verily, that infant is born and exists, and there will appear from His Cause a wonder which thou wilt hear in the future. Thou shalt see him with the most perfect form, most great gift, most complete perfection, most great power and strongest might. His face glisteneth with a glistening whereby the horizons are illumined. Therefore, forget of this account as long as thou art living, in a such as there are signs for it in the passing centuries and ages.

Shoghi Effendi was the sign of God on earth. He was descended from the Twin Lote Trees – Báb and Bahá’u’lláh - from Abraham; the Báb, Hagar, Ismael and Muḥammad and the Báb; Bahá’u’lláh, through Keturah, Zoroaster and the Lord of Hosts, Bahá’u’lláh.

He was appointed in the Will and Testament of ‘Abdu’l-Bahá as Centre of the Covenant and Interpreter of the Bahá’í Teachings after Him.

Bahá’u’lláh revealed the Administrative System, the New World Order; ‘Abdu’l-Bahá elaborated in it and delineated its functions and powers, and the Guardian erected the visible structure – which is the New World Civilization – throughout the world. For thirty-six years he was World Leader of the Bahá'í Faith. When he began his mission, the Faith had reached 35 countries; when he passed away it was established in, there were 12 national Assemblies, only one could be said to function, the one in the United States; when he passed away there were 48, well developed NSA and many regionals which would soon become nationals in their own right, and are long we would read cables from the World Centre saying they were 81 National Assemblies and translations into hundreds of languages.

His mother was the eldest daughter of 'Abdu'l-Bahá and his father as descended of the Báb, the Ainan, His name Mírzá Hádí Shírází; his mother Diya'iyyih (BW Vol. 13, p. 59)

Shonghi Effendi Rabbání was born in the prison city of 'Akká, Mar. 1, 1897. (In Feb. 1975, the property was purchased by the Universal House of Justice. 7000 sq. m.)

He passed away in a third-class hotel in London, Nov. 4, 1957, and I believe that has been reserved in his memory. I know that Bahá'ís from many lands go there when they pass through London.

One night, he told the pilgrims that the date 1957 mentioned in the new era was not referring to a world event but to a major crisis in the Cause. All life, he said, is made up of crisis and victory. And then with a smile he added "Without the crisis, you do not have the victory"

One evening, at dinner, Mrs. Giachery asked if he had any instructions from 'Abdu'l-baha and he answered "I had none – I had to find my way alone."

It was the Greatest Holy Leaf to whom he returned for help, support, and consolation. Dr. Katherine True said that his mother used to stand at the foot of the stairs all day long just to catch a glimpse of him. You see, she was told to send for him by 'Abdu'l-Bahá, when at Oxford and she didn't.

The austerity of the Guardian thrills me to core. I swell with pride. He was real. "You're true brother" he sign his letter; "Your true and grateful brother, Shonghi."

Part II: The Guardian

He traveled second/third-class; stayed in second/third class hotels, ate in the cheapest restaurants, the cheapest meals.

We had dinner with him six evenings; two nights on codification of the Aqdas. But with one exception he wore the same robe. Only once did he change; that was a holy and chanted in the Shrine.

That night he came to diner in that robe, and he radiated a radiance. When Laura and I retired to our room, we stood thoughtfully, then turned suddenly and in chorus, we said "Isn't he beautiful!"

That day we rode in the new car Mr. Allen gave to the Guardian; the driver picked us up at the Western Pilgrim House and then stopped in front of ‘Abdu’l-Bahá’s house for Rúhíyyih Khánum. After a few minutes, she came hurrying and got into the car. “The Guardian and I can never enjoy these things,” she said “we were always rushing things from one to another.”

They told us that the Guardian would suddenly go away – be gone a day, two days, a week; nothing was said – he just went. And when he returned the same – nothing was said. They understood from these that there had been a crisis in the Faith somewhere and he had gone to take care of it.

One night, he told us: I dissolved the Assembly in Damascus; the money for Ḥazíra was being used for personal interests.

When ‘Abdu’l-Bahá was on earth, the believers were on Paradise. When the Guardian began his mission, he put us to work. But there was still wonder in this world, prompt and thrilling.

When Mrs. Maxwell returned to the United States after the marriage of her daughter and the Guardian, she told us about him, “That Holy Man” she would say, “The world is a mat at his feet”. The burden he carried alone. Until Rúhíyyih Khánum came to help and worked beside him. She protected him.

Letter from Jessie Revell, Oct. 8, 1954. At table with the Beloved Guardian “Shonghi Effendi said that the story of Noah is reacted now with Godlessness and materialism. Bahá’ís must be different from others not only in big things, but in small things. This is what attracts more than anything else – to find this demonstrated in the actions of the believers. Coupled with God’s plan with our efforts, Bahá’ís must distinguish themselves, because Bahá’ís have no ulterior motives. Sincerity and Devotion will eliminate suspicion, distrust and sensitivity. The sacrifice, the Guardian speaks of is that we will serve the Faith at any cost.”

(Once [another occasion], he said devotion is not enough, we must have character)

The Guardian: Part III

His functions: To maintain the integrity of the Teachings

The unity of the believers

To interpret the writings

To give infallible guidance

The Guardian set himself to accomplish two major tasks:

1. To steer the believers all over the world into working purely organized administrative channels, as indicated by Bahá’u’lláh and defined by Bahá’u’lláh.

2. To see that year by year they become more emancipated by the bonds of the past, whether identification with former religious doctrines and organizations or the following of the outworn and corrupt patterns of conduct current in the society of their various nations and alien to the new standards. (Twenty-five years of the Guardianship p. 28)

Shoghi Effendi concerned himself with three divinely revealed Charters, which have set in motion three distinct processes in the unfoldment of the World Order of Bahá'u'lláh.

1. The Tablet of Carmel, revealed by Bahá'u'lláh, charter for the development of the Institutions of the Faith at its World Centre.
2. Will and Testament of Bahá'u'lláh, charter for the establishment of the Administrative Order throughout the world, including the establishment of the supreme edifice of the Universal House of Justice.
3. Charter of the Divine Plan, constituting the charter for the propagation of the Faith and the spiritual conquest of the planet.

Another function of the Guardian, especially at the World Centre was to win recognition of the Cause as a world religion entitled to the same status and prerogatives that other religions such as Christianity, Islám, Judaism, enjoy. (p. 250)

Another great major achievement of his life was the development of the World Centre and can only be compared in importance to the spread of the Cause itself, throughout the entire globe under his leadership.

The second greatest concern of the Guardian was the construction of the Shrine of the Báb.

The Will and Testament of Bahá'u'lláh is in three parts. The Guardian was appointed when he was a little boy. He was nine years old. (Notes of Miss Rosenberg, London, LSA; describing the reading of the Will; she said, there were old grey-haired men present who had been in the movement for many years and if there had been the slightest doubt of the authenticity of the Will, they would have known it.)

The Guardian was aware of 'Abdu'l-Bahá's great love of him. It was veiled to protect him. 'Abdu'l-Bahá told him never to drink coffee in the house of the Bahá'ís.

Tough abounding with spirits, the Guardian was not strong as a child. He grew up to have an iron constitution which coupled with phenomenal force of nature and will power enabled him in later years to overcome every obstacle.

Talk on Pilgrimage – The Beloved Guardian

“... a structure at once massive, simple and imposing, Nestling in the heart of Carmel, the Vineyard of God; flanked in the cave of Elijah in the West, and by the hills of Galilee in the East, backed by the plain of Sharon, and facing the

Silver City of ‘Akká and beyond it, the Most Holy Tomb, the heart and Quiblih of the Bahá’í world.”

He doubt more buildings will be built as time goes on but arch ARC the way that buildings will be placed as the ARC of the law Bahá'u'lláh mention in hid tablet of Mt. Carmel, The Law of God out Mt. Carmel mentioned in the Old Testament.

My second thrill was in the Báb's Shrine. Mr. & Mrs. Ioas took me up there. As we all bowed our heads in the threshold inside the shrine. Suddenly I started to cry and tears came so fast and furious, I could not stop. I don't know what happened to me. Perhaps my soul was so overjoyed that my body though unaware of the bounty just cried for joy. So much my tears run over a tie and collar I looked like I was caught in the rain. At the Báb's Shrine I prayed for all friends I could remember. First I started thinking of all the Bahá'ís in Phila, individually. Then all the Bahá'ís near Phila. Then all the Bahá'ís in the West Chester, and all friends in surrounding territory. I found that only when I prayed for others did I feel something warm in me. As soon as I started praying for myself that something left me. So in order to keep that something I felt within me, I had to keep on praying for others.

What a thrill the first evening meeting our Beloved Guardian, He took me in His arms and kissed me. The latest pilgrim always sits at the head of the table. Shongi Effendi is served first, then Rúhíyyih Khenum, then the latest pilgrim. Here is the way we eat when I was there. Mrs. Collins was not well and she did not attend the dinner here.

What a thrill it is to sit near our Guardian a sign of God. Whose station we are not spiritual enough to understand. I was fortunate to sit near Him four evenings until another pilgrim arrive – then I took another's place who left.

My next great thrill was in the Shrine of Bahá'u'lláh. I got down on my knees, bent my head on the threshold on the inner room where His Holy bed is – floors and petals were strewn all over. In fact when I raised my head, my forehead was full of petals that stuck to the skin. I was with the seven other pilgrims at the Shrine of Bahá'u'lláh. Each one of us made prayers in turn out for the prayer books. Six of the pilgrims were Persians. We slept two nights in the Mansion of Bahá'u'lláh in 'Akká. Here we gathered in His room where He ascended and prayed in turn. My next thrill was in the Garden in Bahjí where He sat so often. Here the aroma is wonderful. We picked lemons of the lemon tree – fresh lemon smell like flowers.

Another thrill is to sit in the prison room where Shrine Bahá'u'lláh and family lived for awhile. In the “Son of the Wolf” I believe Bahá'u'lláh speaks of some words of Muḥammad where He says “Blessed are they that stand at the shores of 'Akká and say ‘Alláh in 'Akká’” with each wave for 40 waves.

Well after we got out of the prison walls we went over near the sea and standing in a rock we said that – therefore fulfilling another wish I had I mind. Then we visited other places where the Holy family lived. The house was where Bahá'u'lláh got married – here we had a cooked pesian very good dinner in the same room 'Abdu'l-Bahá had with his wife. When we got back to Haifa I felt so refreshed. When my nine days were up I still had five days before my ship was due to leave, so the Guardian suggested that I take a trip around Israel. So I went to Nazareth. Mostly Arabs live there. All kinds of churches are there. It is very hilly. Our Beloved Guardian told us to come back and spend the 10th day in Haifa. SO I had the pleasure of the meal He handed me a metal closed vial of Attar of Rose and kissed me again goodbye.

The Guardian works very hard - his responsibility is great. He is in a way impersonal, He feels that one: a person has become a Bahá'í and made covenant with Bahá'u'llah the word come again in the station of the Father - that station has assumed also responsibility in the cause of Bahá'u'llah. He believes that it is our duty to help to carry the burden putting the Faith across to the whole world. That is why he calls us Co-workers. Of course Bahá'u'lláh speaks of our station-so high that were we to realize our station we would pass away and die. when one travels around as I did and observing people in various countries - how uncertain they are - actually what little religion they have, Most people in the world believe in God or religion only through tradition. It is a social function with most people rather than spiritual. As one so speaks to various people no matter what education» a Bahá'í realizes that he has certain knowledge that all others lack. I meet many students here as my place is close to the University. I have given out pamphlets to the ones that are interested. Usually the students of Philosophy will take a pamphlet because it is in their field of study.

Well, I guess that I have bent your ears long enough. Again I want to thank you very much for your letter. I send my love to all of you and will keep in touch with you from time to time.

Bahá'í Love

Bonn Shrieberman.

Happy New Year

Bahá'í Year 113.

P.S.

Please say the Remover of Difficulties so you can read my handwriting.

P.S. 2.

I am giving the next Feast Bahá in Heidelberg. I am going to buy some small cards and write Hidden words in German so that all the friends here will take part. It will be something new to them.

SPAIN AND PORTUGAL

The beloved Guardian promised to pray for Spain.

Spain and Portugal shall form a Regional National Spiritual Assembly for the time being in Riḍván 1957. Although Spain has enough Local Spiritual Assemblies, Portugal has not; so they will have a Regional. Later separate National Spiritual Assemblies must be formed. (1963). If it is impossible to meet for the election of the members, the delegates may vote “in ausencia” (absentee votes). Even though the Faith is not incorporated in those two countries, the Regional N.S.A. must be formed. Even an incomplete number of persons can make a Convention, the rest voting by mail, or as well as they can.

Question: If such a meeting must be held clandestinely (and others also), do we have to observe strictly the rule of meetings, i.e. that only twenty persons can meet at a time, unless official permission is asked? And this is impossible for the Bahá'ís.

Answer: We should proceed with the meetings having as many people attending as possible without attracting attention. Later we would have instructions as to where the Convention would be held, Madrid or Lisbon, depending upon the conditions, and the number of delegates. Dr. Ugo Giachery, Hand of the Cause would attend the Iberian Convention.

INCORPORATION (Legalization of the Faith).

We must continue to try, if we can't get it done as a religion, then we should try to form some kind of society which can manage funds and properties, buy the Ḥaẓírat'ul-Quds, the Endowments, etc. When I told him of the difficulties, he counselled hiring a lawyer. However, if all this impossible for the time being, the properties could be put in the name of an individual Bahá'í or Bahá'ís; but all properties willed to an Assembly. This has been done in other places, such as Rome. In Spain this can be done too. The most important thing is that it be done as soon as possible. Later on the titles can be transferred to the Assembly.

Things will change in Spain; the Catholics who become Bahá'ís are, and will become, very faithful and devoted.

ANDALUZIA

The Guardian is very happy over the fact that Guy Murchie, the American Bahá'í author of “Song of the Sky”, is living in Malaga. He says it doesn't matter if Andalusia is settled first in Malaga or Seville. (This, because the Guardian had before mentioned Seville). {{p2}} The work in Linares interests him very much, and he is praying that the marriage of Tony and Mercedes can be effected, and that his work be fruitful.

GYPSIES

The Gypsies must be contacted. This is very important. When they become Bahá'ís, their characters will change. The "Writings" must be translated into the Gypsy languages, even if only a pamphlet to begin with. One Gypsy converted will communicate the Faith to others. It is very important to convert the Gypsies. It will be a great victory. I told the Guardian that we had some Gypsy contacts in Granada.

The Guardian, when told that the Spanish authorities had refused to renew my residence visa, and had given me eight days in which to leave the country, said that I must return to Spain. This "invitation" was later withdrawn, due to a letter from the U.S. Consul.

MARRIAGE

Whoever has gotten married in the Church, (not saying he was a Bahá'í, and participating as a member of that Church in the ceremony), and having therefore been deprived of his voting right, must simply pay the consequences. Bahá'ís cannot go against the Law and still expect to be pardoned.

Question: Is there no pardon for these people?

Answer: "It is useless to make laws if they are not obeyed."

I asked, then, what Bahá'ís should do then, as a legal marriage in Spain is impossible, unless performed in the Church. He answered that, if they could not do it legally, (according to the law of the Church, which in this case is also the law of the land), they can simply have a Bahá'í ceremony with its certificate, and wait until times change, when this will be considered legal. (In a cable to Spain, the Guardian had said, let the Spanish follow the heroic example of the Egyptian friends.)

Should a Bahá'í marry a non-Bahá'í in the Church of the non-Bahá'í, and swear that the children of the marriage will be educated as members of that Church, the Bahá'í must be deprived of his voting rights.

ROMAN CATHOLICS

Strive to convert the Catholics. Provoke the Church with astuteness and caution. The Church will definitely begin its downfall when it persecutes the Bahá'ís. It will be the same as with the Caliphate and the Imámate. Whoever has attacked the Faith has always fallen.

DEVELOPMENT OF THE CAUSE

The Guardian emphasized that the Faith develops through sacrifice. The Faith develops the way a man does:

The embryo is the Revelation (Heroic Age). The child is the Social Order (Administrative — Formative Age). The adolescent is the World Order of Bahá'u'lláh. The mature man is the World Civilization.

And because it is a World (Global) Civilization, it is without precedent. {p3} The Global Civilization of Bahá'u'lláh can never decline. It can suffer setbacks, but can never decline. It will continue to progress and ascend indefinitely.

GUARDIANSHIP

Question: Is the Guardianship mentioned in the Bible prophecies?

Answer: It is mentioned only in one place, where in Isaiah it says: “A little child shall lead them.” (This was also in a letter that ‘Abdu’l-Bahá wrote, saying that the “child” was alive.)

The “twenty-four Elders”, do not refer to the Guardians, but to the Eighteen Letters of the Living and others whose names will be known in the future.

The Guardian’s name, Shoghi, does not mean “zeal”. “My name means, ‘yearning’”, said the Guardian. (This was a very poignant moment, as indeed he is yearning — to see the Bahá’ís become Bahá’ís indeed; and he is yearning to see the Ten Year Crusade become fulfilled. Indeed, his whole life has been one of intense YEARNING.)

The “zeal of the Lord of Hosts”, refers to Bahá'u'lláh, it has nothing to do with the Guardian.

BABYLONIA

Question: Does the Babylonia of the Apocalypse (Revelation) refer to Rome and the Church?

Answer: Yes. It is Rome, but it is also all the modern cities which are materialistic — (Such as New York, Paris, etc.)

BAHÁ'U'LLÁH'S WIFE NAVVAB (Ayesha)

His first wife, lived after the Ascension of Bahá'u'lláh. She and ‘Abdu’l-Bahá lived in the Masra’ih and did not go to Bahjí to stay. The Greatest Holy Leaf also lived with them.

[Corrections added in Virginia Orbison’s handwriting]

“See Chosen Highway p 93-4 — Tuba Khánun daughter of ‘Abdu’l-Bahá — Navváb died before Bahá'u'lláh.”

MARRIAGE

Question: What can be done about two persons who before they became Bahá’ís lived together and had children, and who cannot legally get married? (as divorce in Spain is not permitted).

Answer: If they are sincere believers, they can have a Bahá'í wedding and be Bahá'ís.

The marriage ceremony of the Bahá'ís must take place on the same day as the civil ceremony, where the civil ceremony is permitted. {{p4}} Consent of both parents is obligatory.

BOOK OF “THE AQDAS”

Question: What is meant by the goal of “codifying the “Aqdas” by 1963?

Answer: “The Aqdas” will be codified, that is, an index of its contents will be made. It [the goal] does not mean that it will be translated into other languages, nor be in vigor at that time. This is because many of the Laws are impossible to observe at present. Some of them are quite contrary to the laws of the nations. The Persians do not have the complete “Aqdas”, nor even a complete compilation, as it is not yet a “book”. The laws are encountered in many Tablets written by Bahá'u'lláh. For example, in a Tablet written to a certain person, He would suddenly announce a new Law. Some day, all of these will be compiled into a single book. “The Aqdas” will have to be translated by experts. The present Guardian will not do it. When the Bahá'í State is formed, “The Aqdas” will be promulgated. The Laws are few but very strict. There will be capital punishment, but mercy will be permitted. A person who commits arson will be burned — it is up to the Bahá'í Court of Justice to decide.

There are twenty-six volumes of the Tablets directed to persons, which contain parts of the “Aqdas”. These will later be included in the “Aqdas”. A person who commits adultery will suffer in this world and in the next.

The Guardian said: I have indicated some of these laws for present observance. I shall see how the people obey them and give them out gradually. Little by little the Guardian will indicate those Laws which are obligatory, binding, and those which are recommended.

Some of the laws such as abstinence from alcohol is obligatory and binding. Also, not to get married in the Church is obligatory and binding. Marriage is a law, but not obligatory. It is recommended that people marry, but not binding upon everyone to do so. Others: Obligatory prayers. There will be laws which are only for the Orient, not for the Occident. Games of chance are forbidden, but as for National Lotteries, it will be up to the International House of Justice to decide. Some to the laws cannot be observed at present.

“GOD PASSES BY”

The title indicates that God passed or is passing through the earth, or has come to the earth in the form of His Manifestation, and is recognized by few. It is difficult to translate into some languages. The phrase has nothing to do with any Biblical passage.

VIRGIN BIRTH:

Question: There are many legends and stories about previous Prophets being born of virgins, are there any other Manifestations of God beside Jesus, born of a virgin?

Answer: The Bahá'í Writings do not mention any, therefore we consider that all other accounts can be inexact, or legendary. Every revelation (religion) has its mysteries. The mystery in Christianity is the birth of Jesus by a virgin. That of the Bahá'í Faith is 'Abdu'l-Bahá. We only accept that fact that Jesus was born of a virgin, and not that Mary was exempt from sin, since original sin does not exist. {{p5}} The idea of "original sin" is the invention of men, Naturally, we do not believe in it.

THE KINGDOM OF GOD

The Kingdom of God is not the Revelation of Bahá'u'lláh, but the result of its coming — which is the Global Civilization.

MY SERVANT WHO WILL CONSTRUCT THE TEMPLE

This Biblical passage does not refer to 'Abdu'l-Bahá. It refers to Bahá'u'lláh. The Temple is the body — material and spiritual. The "Súratu'l-Haykal" deals with this theme. It is in the form of a five-pointed star, and is the fulfillment of prophecy. It is very badly translated into English. (In the "Bahá'í Scriptures").

THE GREATEST NAME

The Guardian says that in the Writings there is nothing about the connection between the name JEHOVAH (the Tetragrammaton, or word of Four Letters), and the Greatest Name, Abhá.

LORD OF HOSTS

When the "Lord of Hosts" is referred to in the Bible, it ALWAYS means Bahá'u'lláh.

DURATION OF THE BAHÁ'Í WORLD FAITH

Question: Have other civilizations more advanced than ours ever existed on this planet?

Answer: This (Bahá'í) civilization is the most elevated and advanced ever known on this planet, or ever to be known; as it is the first one to be GLOBAL. It is the first time that any civilization, no matter how advanced, has been completely global and united.

Question: Will the Bahá'í Cycle decline, and will future Prophets who come under the shadow of Bahá'u'lláh have to revive it as has been their function in the past?

Answer: No — There can be set-backs in its development from time to time, but IT CANNOT DECLINE. The Guardian spoke several times about this, and each time emphatically stated the above. I expressed pain at asking this question which seems to me amply and frequently answered in all the Writings, and most specifically in the Guardian's writings, but did so ask it, so as to hear from his own lips. "This is the Day which shall not be followed by night." — it is the Kingdom of God on Earth.

INTERPRETATION OF BIBLICAL PROPHECIES

The Guardian said that when we deal with these, we should not try to interpret them all as referring to this age, unless necessarily they are indicated as referring to it, to the Faith, etc. {{p6}} "The Churches will thank us for this!"

POWER OF SACRED DUST

Asked about the meaning of the power of the sacred dust, as mentioned in "The Íqán" in connection with the dust of the Imám Ḥusayn, the Guardian said that there exists definitely this power, but that we cannot analyze it at present, nor will he give any explanation about this statement or theory. He said, however, that the "philosophers" of the future would study the matter and explain these things.

rites and ceremonies in Bahá'í Faith

The Guardian said that there should be no kind of rites. No one is permitted to establish any special manner of doing things connected with worship. There is no special position or posture to assume while praying, excepting those indicated in the Obligatory Prayers. One can stand, kneel, prostrate oneself, as he wishes. The Báb stayed respectfully OUTSIDE of the Tomb of Ḥusayn, although His Own position was loftier.

ORIGIN OF MAN

We cannot prove scientifically that man has always been man, as 'Abdu'l-Bahá states, but we must accept His words as being the Interpreter.

THE LETTERS WHICH PRECEDE THE SURAS OF THE QUR'ÁN

The Guardian answered George Spendlove's question, saying that Bahá'u'lláh had written a Tablet which is not yet translated into English, which makes it very clear that the mysterious letters deciphered, indicate that 'ALÍ was truly the real successor of Muḥammad.

THE YEAR 1957

The Guardian when asked the significance of this year, said in a rather offhand way, Oh, that refers to a happening within the Cause, and not in the world outside.

THE CIVILIZATION OF BAHÁ'U'LLÁH

This Revelation (Dispensation) being the Kingdom of God on Earth, can never decline. However, there will never be a time when absolute perfection will have been attained, because if this were reached, there would be no more Prophets. Bahá'u'lláh once stated that there never would be a time when the world was without Prophets.

TEACHING

We must increase the number of believers. Teaching has three aspects:

1. Attraction.
2. Get them to sympathize with the aims of the Faith.
3. Convert them.

Endeavor to make active believers who will support the Bahá'í Institutions. More wisdom mixed with audacity is necessary. {{p7}}

TOMB OF BAHÁ'U'LLÁH

The Tomb of Bahá'u'lláh on Bahjí will have a very large and ornate mausoleum built over it. Larger than that of the Báb. It will be in Bahjí and not on Mount Carmel. It will always be in Bahjí. (The sarcophagus built for Bahá'u'lláh is still in storage in Egypt.)

THE TOMB OF THE BÁB

The chamber which contains the sarcophagus of the Báb is very, very deeply built into the mountain. 'Abdu'l-Bahá insisted that it be very deep, even after solid rock had been struck.

ELECTIONS

The members of the communities elect the Local Spiritual Assemblies. The Local Assemblies elect the delegates who in turn elect the National Spiritual Assemblies and they in turn elect the International House of Justice. These members can be any believer whether of a community or isolated. The International Tribunal of the International House of Justice will decide the term of office of the members of the International House of Justice.

KINGS

There will be kings, but different from what they are now. Bahá'u'lláh addressed Himself to the Kings, indicating their station, not to republics, not the presidents, saying that the kings are the shadow of God on earth — He did not say this about the presidents. However, royalty will marry commoners. (This question was asked on account of the controversy over the possibility of the marriage of Princess Margaret of Britain with a commoner.) The Guardian, however, did not elaborate on the theme.

RACIAL PREJUDICE

Racial prejudice is one of the major defects of the United States, and class prejudice that of the British.

CANADIANS

The Guardian praised the Canadian highly, said they should study the Teachings more profoundly. Although Rúhíyyih Khánum says she is American, the Guardian called her a Canadian. (Perhaps in praise of the Canadians and of her father, Hand of the Cause, William Sutherland Maxwell).

KOREA

The Guardian said that Korea had a great future. He told Bill Schmits that he should return there.

PRAYER

We should pray more. 1. Pray. 2. Meditate upon the prayers said, and think about them. 3. Study constantly the Teachings. {{p8}} 4. Put into practice what we learn — Action.

HAZIRAT'UL-QUDS

Ḥazírat'ul-Quds means, “Sacred Fold”. The Ḥazírat'ul-Quds should be devoted to Bahá'í work only and to things which pertain to the Faith. The Ḥazírat'ul-Quds is for administration.

MASHRIQ'UL-ADHKAR

The Mashriq'ul-Adhkar and its dependencies are for the people in general — for all of Humanity. During the Ten Year Crusade a few Temples will be built, but in the future all the countries will have them, and many more.

TRANSLATIONS

The Guardian made it very clear that we should not put too much confidence in translations not done by him. (He is the infallible interpreter of the Writings).

Translations made by other persons can be excellent, and be of much interest, but they are all subject to error. Only the translations made by the Guardian are considered authoritative. These are our authorities. The Guardian said that we now have all the information about the Faith necessary, and the instructions given or translated by him. Some of these are: “The Will and Testament of ‘Abdu’l-Bahá”, translated by Shoghi Effendi and Lady Blomfield; the “Dawn Breakers”; “The Administration Letters”; “God Passes By”; “The Dispensation of Bahá’u’lláh”; “The Epistle to the Son of the Wolf”; “The Íqán”; “Gleanings”; “Prayers and Meditations”, etc. When asked about the value [value?] of “Bahá’u’lláh and the New Era”, and “Some Answered Questions”, he said that they are recommended [recommended?], but have errors. “The Seven Valleys” is full of error, principally of interpretation, and “The Four Valleys”, impossible to understand. Many of the Writings of Bahá’u’lláh were written, addressing specialists in one field or another, such as mysticism, poetry, theology, etc.

When Bahá’ís translate Bahá’í Writings into other languages, Spanish, French, etc., they should do them as well as they can and then consult specialists in the language so as to be sure of the literary value and grammatical correctness of the translation. He said they should be as perfect as possible, first in meaning and then in style. If possible, the experts should be versed in Biblical language.

One evening in answer to questions put by a pilgrim, the Guardian said that “The Seven Valleys” had not been translated by him, and therefore was not always exact in meaning. That is why many passages were impossible to understand or interpret correctly, as the faulty translation prevented this. He also emphasized the fact that ONLY translations made by him are absolutely correct, (naturally, as he interprets as he translates). Also, if a questionable passage is referred to, the Guardian does not say that it is incorrect and then proceed to give the correct meaning. He never does this. If he wishes to give the exact translation and meaning he gets the ORIGINAL writing, and then compares it with the translation to show the difference. He does not simply read off the way it should be! This was very important. He said that we have enough works translated by him to last us as long as needed, without resorting to outside translations. Although they can be authorized, and useful, they are not to be considered as exact authorities. “Bahá’u’lláh and the New Era” still has faulty passages, and so has “Some Answered Questions”; however, they are so important and useful in their present imperfect form that they are recommended. {{p9}} There simply is no time to correct them entirely, or do new translations. “The Seven Valleys” is one which is too faulty to be considered too seriously, and “Four Valleys” simply impossible to understand at all! So the poor pilgrim had to remain unsatisfied in regard to his wish to know all the hidden meanings of “The Seven Valleys” — they are so hidden, that they shall remain so until an authorized Interpreter can translate them properly.

On one occasion a passage from, “Promulgation of Universal Peace” was quoted to him, and he said — that is not correct and in that case remarked that “Confucius was not a Prophet;” but he did not correct the passage.

BURIAL

Bahá'í prayers should be said for any Bahá'í even if the funeral must be conducted in a Church, on account of non-Bahá'í relatives. The burial stone should be used when possible, but if one is not available, then the usual Bahá'í ring is used. The body must be buried within an hour's journey. Bodies must not be cremated.

HOLY PLACES IN ORDER ARE

1. 'Akká-Bahjí, "the Qiblih of the Bahá'í world." (The Tomb of Bahá'u'lláh.)
2. The Tomb of the Báb.
3. The Most Great House, in Baghdád.
4. The house of the Báb in Shíráz.
5. The Síyáh-Chál in Tíhrán.
6. Adrianople.

INTERPLANETARY UNITY

The Guardian spoke about America's primacy — but that more suffering was needed. We are struggling to attain a world civilization and world unity. I asked: And will all this lead to interplanetary unity? "Of course," he said emphatically, "After that, interplanetary unity." I said: But we have an awful lot to do here so as to reach a unity!" "Of course — I was just about to say this!", said the Guardian. The human race will become fused into one, one color, etc.

LAWS

Not to lie is a law, but it is one that Assemblies cannot easily deal with.

Not to take alcohol is an obligatory law. Divorce is frowned upon, but permitted under certain conditions. Smoking is considered dirty, and it is undignified to smoke in a Feast. Smoking during the devotional part of the Feast should never be done, but during the social part, if one HAS to; however this is not recommended. (The Guardian naturally, does not smoke; but there are persons in the household who do, but never in the Guardian's presence. Rúhíyyih Khánúm does not smoke.)

CIVIL LAWS OF THE LAND

The Bahá'ís must obey the civil laws of the country in which they live or happen to be. If there is an investigation by the police, the Bahá'ís must not lie. They must answer truthfully what they are asked, "this is very important," he said. I asked him what we should do in case of occupation by another country, and they should ask for lists of the believers, information, etc. He answered, that God would help us when necessary, as He did in the case of the German Bahá'ís, protected from the Gestapo and the Nazis, during World War II.

Resorting to the “black market” is forbidden.

DISPERSION

Bahá’ís must disperse, so as to spread the Cause and also to be in safer places. p10 New York, Paris, London, “and Madrid”, said the Guardian, with a swift and emphatic look at me!

THE GUARDIAN

A published picture of the Guardian showed him with glasses on. Only this picture shows him with them. I never saw him wear glasses, nor any sign of them. He often read things in front of us, and he did not require glasses.

POLITICS

The Guardian was very emphatic in saying that the Bahá’ís must not sympathize with any political party. We are not in accord with the materialistic countries, that is to say neither with the United States of America nor with Russia. When we mention these two countries, we must make this very clear, and mention both at the same time as materialistic. We cannot be members of any political party nor in favor of any. If our country is occupied by another, we cannot become in agreement with their ideology, but we must obey the laws of the conquering power. The Bahá’ís are not national, nor even international, they are SUPRA-NATIONAL. If they are firm, they will triumph in the end. [Signed in hand]

Notes on Pilgrimage to Haifa

Alice Dudley

April 15-23, 1957

The following notes are based on table conversation of the beloved Guardian during the period April 15-23. They are not verbatim and are not in sequence, but I verified them for accuracy after the Guardian had left the table with members of the International Council, Rúhíyyih Khánum and other pilgrims to be sure the intent was accurate.

One of the characteristics of the Guardian is his amazing memory. He has statistics of every kind pertaining to activities in all areas of the world at his finger tips and he quotes them constantly. He is especially happy over the progress of the Faith in the Pacific area. It surpasses even Africa now. The beloved Guardian kept reiterating the goals of the various areas stating what progress had been made, what goals had been surpassed or when they had lagged.

To give an idea how fast the Guardian works — when the Israeli court awarded the house of Bahjí which had been occupied by Covenant Breakers, to the Bahá'ís — that very same day the decree was awarded the Guardian had the house demolished the same day and every portion of it carried away and inside of 4-1/2 days had created a formal garden 12-1/2 meters wide and 80 meters long. In the process of making the garden he had a row of large trees uprooted by bulldozers, raised the garden 1 meter, built roads, paths installed lighting, made terraces, placed statuary planted shrubbery according to design. All this monumental work was accomplished in 4-1/2 days.

The Guardian described the uniqueness of the dome on the tomb of the Báb. It is Renaissance with a blending of Italian architecture.

The decline of Islám is beginning — they will be punished for their treatment of the Báb and Bahá'u'lláh.

One evening the Guardian began speaking about the coming calamities. He was very emphatic and after he left, Rúhíyyih Khánum and the members of the International Council stated they had never heard him speak with so much force or so decisively. He said the coming calamity would be worse than war. Cities would evaporate, especially in the cities where it is hardest to teach the Faith such as New York, Chicago and San Francisco. People would lose all their possessions and homes overnight — would simply evaporate. Americans would become refugees to other continents. The U.S. would suffer the most because it was the most materialist. Europe was the cradle of materialism but the U.S. was the stronghold of materialism. The U.S. would suffer greatly, He said, and who would Russia. He said there was no difference between Russia and U.S. in their systems because both are materialistic — capitalism which is purely materialistic and communism which controls the proletariat. The coming calamity would be retribution.

‘Abdu’l-Bahá went to the U.S. to specifically waken the nation to its dangers. His mission was a failure — both from the standpoint of the Bahá’ís and the Americans. That can be discerned by reading between the lines of His addresses in America.

The Faith will be spread by the dark-skinned races, by the so-called uncivilized peoples.

The Bahá’ís in the US are going through a transitional period and they will be in a position of spectators in the spread of the Faith in comparison with the spread of the Faith in Africa and among the yellow-skinned races. Speaking again about the calamity, the Guardian said it was retributive referred to the passage in the H.W. “All of a sudden the unforeseen calamity” to the quotation about the “Limbs of Mankind will quake.” It especially applies to the U.S. because of the importance of the U.S. It is no America’s turn to suffer. Referring to the coming cataclysm, the Guardian states that the world needs a blood-letting because of over-population of such countries as China, India, Japan. Refers to it as high blood pressure also to the unhealthy condition of many of the people bad blood. Sally S. asked if in the future, when there would be no more wars, would there be a problem of overpopulation the Guardian replied that science by that time would have solved the food problem.

The Guardian stated that the U.S. was chosen as the cradle of the World Order (the Administrative Order) not because of its spiritual qualities but because of its corruption, the same as Persia was chosen for the Revelation of Bahá'u'lláh because they, the Persians were worse then the African savages, far more barbaric. After the coming calamity, the U.S. will fulfill the prophecy of ‘Abdu’l-Bahá that the U.S. would lead the nations because of its suffering. The Guardian said he had give up warning the friends because they paid no heed to him. Furthermore, that this calamity had been destined. The Guardian stated ‘Abdu’l-Bahá warned the friends, he warned the friends, but they were heedless. It is too late to save the world. The message of Bahá’u’lláh has been in the world for over 100 years and has been rejected. The calamity will be sudden. He spoke of our statesmen from the President down, all were helpless impotent. Also stated that we were not an altruistic nation, we were only helping other countries to save ourselves. Said the submarines built by Russia will paralyze the United Kingdom, Western Europe, the Mediterranean, the Pacific and Atlantic seaboard. He stated the U.S. did not wish to coalesce with other nations — only to protect herself. Bahá’ís have failed with the Negro race in the U.S. There should be more intermarriages. Speaking of love — the Americans love money, their wives, their homes, their possessions, their friends. Just as there is a decline in the value of the American dollar, there is also a decline in their morals, home life.

He spoke of the American Bahá’í Newsletter. Said it was a most uninspiring organ. It contained only agenda, programs. It is now an international bulletin, but does not present news in an interesting way. Also spoke of the large deficit of the Fund. (Jessie Revell said we should give every month, the size of the contribution has nothing to do with it. One contribution to the International Fund recently was for $1.35.)

The Guardian said the calamity would happen before the Lesser Peace. He said Bahá’ís in America should not only leave their homes but should go as far away as possible. Victories come only from sacrifice self-abnegation. The greater the sacrifice the greater the victories. Bahá’ís should lower their standards of living in order to give more.

I asked the Guardian if the calamity could be averted. He replied “no”. I asked if it would be all of North America. He said mainly the U.S. The night of Ridván the Guardian started the conversation by saying he had received over 100 telegrams from Assemblies all over the world, mentioning specifically Salzburg, Innsbruck, Milan Hiroshima. Edna True cabled to say Luxembourg and acquired its Ḥaḏíra. The Guardian cabled back asked her “What about Stockholm, Lisbon, translation into Lapp language.”

The Guardian then asked us how we enjoyed Bahjí, and when I said “I shall never be poor again” he smiled and asked me how I had slept in the mansion.

When the Guardian writes letters to the Persians, he always chants as he writes, Isabel Sabri asked what attitude towards missionary should be. The Guardian replied we must be careful with Governments reckless with missionaries. The Guardian repeated many times that more settlers should come to France and the Scandinavian countries from the U.S.

Sally Sanor asked the Guardian if he thought there would be interplanetary travel he replied “Yes, perhaps not to the entire universe but to the nearest planets.” She also asked what employees of the American Army should do in case of an alert as we would be evacuated. He said if our jobs interfered with our remaining at our posts, we should change jobs.

One evening the Guardian mentioned there had been 6000 years of prophetic revelation or prophet appears. He continually stressed the goals of the Faith as outlined in the Advent of Divine Justice on page 12 — the 5 steps before it assumed its rightful place in the world. The Guardian announced also that he has 19 new plans for teaching work in the various positions of the globe.

Agnes Alexander has been appointed a Hand of the Cause to replace Dr. Townshend. The Guardian said that Dr. Esslemont Dr. Townshend were the two greatest Bahá'í writers in the West, that Abu'l-Faḍl was the greatest Bahá'í writer in the East. He thought Townshend's latest book "Christ and Bahá'u'lláh" exceeded Dr. Esslemont's book in greatness. Said the English should be very proud of both of them, that we must use Dr. Townshend's latest book because it portrays the Kingdom of God upon earth. We must tell people that it is already here but in the embryonic stage. When the Kingdom of God has flowered it will be the World Order of Bahá'u'lláh. From the W.O.B. we will have its fairest fruits, World Civilization, but that will not be until the next prophet appears.

The Guardian said that unless the home fronts (U.S., England) improved, we may not have the Baghdád Conference. He said that all virgin areas far exceeded their goals but the home front lagged behind. Then he showed us maps he had made of the supplementary goals. One map showed only the goals which had either exceeded original goals or victories which had not even been included in any of the plans.

When he asked me if I had been the Shrine of the Báb yet, I told him I had gotten up at 4 A.M. To see it he was surprised that an American had gotten up early! He jokingly replied that it was because I was a Scandinavian. He expected early rising of the English and not the Americans.

One morning Leroy Ioas drove us to see the Temple site which is situated on the very top of Mount Carmel about 2 miles from where the Shrine is located. The site is shaped like a peninsula, overlooking water on three sides. The Guardian says the Shrine of the Báb is the heart of Carmel the Temple will be the head of Mt. Carmel. The Guardian said Bahá'u'lláh had stood on this site revealed the Tablet of Carmel is such loud ringing tones that the nuns in the Carmelite Nunnery, situated further below, could hear Him. This site is also near the Cave of Elijah. One evening I asked the Guardian about the reference in the Gleanings to the sister of Bahá'u'lláh. The Guardian replied that some of the half-sisters of Bahá'u'lláh were loyal to Him and some were disloyal. She was a loyal sister.

The Guardian stressed many times that there has not been a Christian civilization — only a materialistic civilization.

PILGRIM'S IMPRESSION OF THE WORLD CENTRE
BY

MR. BILL WASHINGTON

WHO MADE THE VISIT DURING

“Foremost among my impressions of the pilgrimage, which I passed on briefly to an informal gathering of Adelaide friends, is that the beloved Guardian is at present very happy with the world crusade and the worldwide achievements of the Faith. Another pilgrim, Mr. Ḥabíbu’lláh Sabet of Ṭíhrán, commented that in the many visits he had made to Haifa, he had never seen the Guardian happier and this would be easy to conceive - as he was continually smiling, laughing and even at times joking with the pilgrims. It was really wonderful to see.

The beloved Guardian outlined the spread of the Faith during the past four years of the World Crusade. The number of centres now totals 4000 throughout 250 centuries, territories and islands. 102 islands have now been embraced in the spread of the Faith, 40 of these lying within the vast Pacific area. Of the 131 territories named in the Ten Year Plan, more than 100 were opened during the first year and now the Faith has spread to the entire world with the exception of four islands and portion of the Soviet territory. One pioneer has carried the Faith to Thule in Greenland, to a latitude of 76 degrees north and literature has been circulated among the Eskimos up to 80 degrees north. Literature has also been sent to McMurdo Island in the Antarctica, almost the same latitude south. Translations now total 220 languages.

The Faith now includes in its membership approximately 3000 members of the Black race - Negroes from Africa, and 2000 members of the brown race - Polynesians from Gilbert and Ellice and Indonesians from Mentawai. These have greatly gladdened the Guardian's heart and he Spoke many times of the spread of the Faith amongst these people - as he says, the World's population is predominantly coloured and therefore the Faith must also comprise a majority of these people.

We have nearly finished Our Ten Year Plan in the first four years, was our Guardian's summing up. But this is only the first plan; and not the last. These nuclei must be firmly established and expanded.

The most important phase of activity at present, stressed the beloved Guardian, is the teaching of new believers. The Faith has spread over the entire globe and has proved its world-embracing scope. Now the greatest importance must be placed on increasing the number of individual believers. The individual believers are the first step and are essential in the formation of the Local Spiritual Assemblies. These assemblies are then the foundation of the Administrative Order and on this foundation will be erected the Pillars - the National (Assemblies). On these Pillars will rest the Dome of the Administrative Order - the Universal House of Justice and the World Centre of the Order of Bahá'í-

The first stone of this Dome has now been erected on Mt. Carmel this is the new Archives building, now nearing completion, which will form part of the World Centre, together with the other administrative buildings - the Universal House of Justice, Institution of Guardianship and Institution of the Hands of the Cause.

The Holy Shrine of the Báb is to be between two mighty edifices on Mt. Carmel. To the north, the Administrative Arc, circling on the Tomb gardens, with the new Archives building on the southern end of this Arc and to the south the Mashriqu'l-Adhkár and its dependencies on a promontory of Mt. Carmel. This will form the twin centres of the Faith - the Administrative and Spiritual.

Our Guardian spoke several times of two mighty plans operating in the world at present - God's Major Plan and the Minor Plan. He warned that God's Major Plan may interrupt our own Minor Plan but this should be no cause for worry. God's Major Plan works in very mysterious ways - ways that we cannot comprehend - and uses calamities, disasters and natural upheavals, as part of its means. It is not a thing to speculate upon because we cannot comprehend it - we must go on striving to promote the Minor Plan, and leave God's mysterious workings in His Own Hands. The mass acceptance of the Faith which must come sooner or later will be through this major Plan of God.

The beloved Guardian pictured a great spiritual future for Australia and Japan, who must work in the closest harmony, relinquishing all racial prejudices. The Faith had been firmly established, in both Australia and Japan, during the lifetime of the Master, in response to the Divine Plan and because of this, they will be the spiritual leaders of the Pacific. It is their destiny.

Our Guardian also spoke very lovingly of Mother Dunn and said that she must be very proud of her many spiritual children, both in Australia and many far flung places.

It would be my greatest desire to convey to you the atmosphere of those Most Holy Shrines of Haifa and Bahjí. Their physical description is simple but conveys nothing of their atmosphere - and that I am afraid, is far beyond the scope of my words.

The Holy Shrine of the Báb is much visited by the local people of Israel and even these, unacquainted as they are with the depth and significance of the Faith and the station of its three central Figures are obviously affected by the potency of that sacred spot. At first frankly curious as any Sightseer, once they have entered the Shrine of the Báb, their whole attitude is so obviously transformed, their questions come in hushed tones of reverence for a majesty they cannot comprehend and the attitude of many is one of puzzlement and awe, so much are their hearts affected by that holy atmosphere, which they cannot but feel even though they understand it little.

To me, the Holy Shrines were vastly different in atmosphere. The Shrine of the Báb filled as it seemed to be, with a feeling of sorrow, with the atmosphere of the Heroic Age and the deeds and wondrous steadfastness of the martyrs, so close. The Shrine of the Master seems to hold an air of happiness, as before your mind is the picture of ‘Abdu’l-Bahá’s smiling compassionate face and his constant exhortation to the souls sheltering under his spiritual wing, to ‘be happy.’

But the Most Holy Shrine at Bahjí is pervaded with the mightiest atmosphere, far beyond the compass of any mortal word or expression, - an air; that overwhelms the pilgrim, dispells all thought of the outside world and seems to fill the heart well beyond capacity. It can only be described - and then in failing words - as an air of deep joy, beyond the confines of this world and a very deep spiritual peace. Perhaps ‘peace’ is the word, for was not this Bahá’u’lláh’s constant longing for that Most Great Peace and it is in this Most Holy Shrine that the pilgrim realises with a certainty far too powerful and complete for expression, that the triumph of Bahá’u’lláh is already here, though still as yet forming before our eyes, and the Most Great Peace will be the consummation of that triumph.”

PROFESSOR OF RELIGION WRITES ON MEETING SHOGHI EFFENDI.

Dr. Marcus Each of the School of Religion, University of Iowa, has written a book reporting his personal interviews with five religious personages. They are Therese Neumann, Shoghi Effendi, Helen Keller, Pope Pius XII and Albert Schweitzer.

The author’s experience in meeting the Guardian is described with dignity and reverence. For the Bahá’í, this chapter is made additionally interesting by the author’s account of his visits to the Prison in ‘Akká, Bshji, and the gardens, and by his meeting with Rúhíyyih Khánum, Mrs Amelia Collins, Dr Luṭṭu’lláh, Mrs Leroy Ioas and Jessie and Ethel Revell.

Entitled “The Circle of Faith” the book is published by Hawthorn Books Inc.,

New York.

REFLECTIONS FROM A PIONEER

The following is quoted from the New Zealand Newsletter, published by the R.T.C. for New Zealand, and is an extract from a letter of a Pacific pioneer.)

“There are certain words and phrases in constant use among Bahá’ís which should be forever eliminated from our vocabulary. This is not hair-splitting over phraseology. Words clothe a thought, express an attitude or an emotion. These words and phrases, borrowed from the high-pressure salesmanship of the business world, are:- “contacts”; “handling contacts”; “making contacts”; “technique of...” etc...

Ponder over these for a while and I think you will recognise the picture they conjure up.

Then contrast this with the words of the beloved Exemplar, One Whose ways of teaching stand the test of passing years unxtlessly. What does He say? “Walk a little way with the friend until he has learned to love you; then will he turn and walk with you.”

“Hast thou love? Hast thou sympathy? Then all the stars will sing thy praises.”

“Look into the eyes of every soul as if he were a letter from God.”

“Consider the candle, how it weeps its life away that it may shed its light.”

“The Divine Teachings should be offered as you would offer a cup to a king.”

How different.’ How very, very different.’ . . . .

Notes

Manually keyboarded and submitted by Robert Stauffer, 1997.

In a note, Stauffer explains: "The Beasleys were an elderly Bahá'í couple from Spokane, Washington. The original mimeograph notes were extremely faded and some words were unfortunately not decipherable from the Seattle copy. I'll have to check the Beasley notes from the Spokane Archives to see if its possible to decipher some of those words. The other notes they mentioned in these notes dealing with details of travel and stats have not been discovered to date. I edited this in 1979. - R.S." - J.W.

Our Pilgrimage to Haifa

On the eve of March 15th we received the unexpected telegram, telling us that Shoghi Effendi would welcome us as pilgrims the second week in May. We only knew one thing and that was that we would make the trip not even thinking of the ways and means necessary for such a long journey. We immediately set about the next day to obtain passports, vaccinations, itineraries and all the details needed. After days of this procedure and all was in readiness we waited the slowly passing time when we could take our departure.

On the eve of May 1st we boarded our plane at Geiger Airport (Spokane, Washington) which was to take us on our journey. Needless to say we were excited, thrilled and a little concerned.

The details of our wonderful journey, other than the Pilgrimage, I have written in a separate account. We feel that we can tell you of the places we saw, the things that were said, but we cannot give you the spiritual experience that each of us had. That part of the Pilgrimage belongs to the individual, and no doubt each experiences it in a different way.

We arrived in Tel-Aviv, Israel at 11:30 PM, May 7th. Being so late we decided to stay the night there and go to Haifa in the morning. Then Tuesday morning we got what is known as a collective taxi (sherut) to travel the 90 miles to Haifa, arriving there at about 11 o'clock AM. We took a taxi and drove to the Pilgrim House and were met by Fujita. He welcomed us with outstretched arms and immediately served tea. Fujita is the little Japanese with a great big sense of humor. He was 'Abdu'l-Bahá's houseboy and has served the Faith well all these years. {{p2}} After a hard struggle in Japan, Shoghi Effendi asked him to come and be part of the household in Haifa, so Fujita is happy in his new home. He takes care of the gardens at the Western Pilgrim House and at the Guardian's home as well as serving dinner at night.

Everyone was up at the Shrine as they were having a fair in Haifa and all hands were necessary to help with guiding. So after tea, Fujita called a taxi and we all went up to the Shrine. It is several blocks from the headquarters and up towards the top of Mount Carmel. One can see the dome for miles as you ride towards the city, and naturally that is the first thing the pilgrim wants to see. We went first to the Báb's Shrine and then to see 'Abdu'l-Bahá's Shrine. Both are so beautiful that it is hard to visualize it to be the burial place of anyone.

As you know, the shrine itself consists of rooms of equal size, the Báb's Shrine in the middle and the Shrine of 'Abdu'l-Bahá to the north and the Archives to the south of the building. The Shrine is open from 9AM to 12 noon each day, and we are told they conducted 600 persons through that morning. No one except the Bahá'ís are allowed to go in where 'Abdu'l-Bahá is buried. The visitors are given a short talk on the outline of the place and asked to remove their shoes before they enter also asked not to talk as it is a place of meditation and no one should be disturbed. I cannot possibly record in these notes the reactions of those who go there, but one thought comes to mind: A lady and her two small children went in, and when they came out the little girl, about six years old, said "I feel this is a Holy Place." A great many ask questions and one hears very few who make adverse statements. {{p3}} As the Guardian does not allow any teaching in Haifa and only Holy Days are observed, one cannot go into the Teachings. Shoghi Effendi says the Jews are building a new nation and he does not want the fulfillment of their religious teachings to be disturbed at this time. So there are no Bahá'ís in Haifa except the ones in the household. The Jews are very proud of the Bahá'ís and have a great regard for Shoghi Effendi as he has done much to beautify their city.

When we returned to the Pilgrim House we met Mason Remey, Millie Collins, the Revell sisters and the pilgrim from New York, Marie Nadler. All were on hand for lunch which is served every day at 1:30 PM. Rúḥíyyih Khánúm always has lunch with the friends and a very pleasant lunch it is. She is kind and gracious and yet makes you feel right at home as if you were all one big family. Most of the food served in the household is Persian, and so much of it, such as sweets, are sent from the Persian friends. Our first meal consisted of a soup made from yogurt, raw, whole cucumbers, cheese and Arab bread then cakes and salted nuts for dessert. The bread is a flat loaf made from whole wheat and made by the cook then taken to a central oven here it is baked. It is very delicious and no doubt very nutritional. During the afternoon we visited the Guardian. He has dinner with the friends every night. Dinner is always served at 7PM. The newest pilgrim always goes first so you feel a little self-conscious. When you enter the dining room, which is in the basement, the Guardian is already seated at the table, and he gets up and shakes hands with you and then each one in turn shakes hands with him and then takes their place at the table.

Before I go on with the conversation at the table, I would like to describe the Guardian the best that I can. I think he must be a lot like ‘Abdu’l-Bahá and walks like Him. {{p4}} He was shorter than I had expected him to be, olive complexion and a small moustache. His eyes, of course, are brown and very expressive and one has the feeling the Guardian sees everything. His hands are small, and without any doubt, the most beautiful hands I have ever seen. He is dressed in a black aba which fits more closely than those we have seen in pictures, and he wears a small cap about 3 inches in height rather tipped over one eye very striking and his hair is gray over the temples. As the Guardian does not have private audiences, and all work is done at the table, the friends say they have never seen him any different than we see him. Rúhíyyih Khánúm is the liaison officer, and any problems as to the work or questions concerning their activities is first taken up with her and she in turn relays it to the Guardian.

The Guardian greets you like this: “Did you have a nice trip and how is your health?” then I think his first question was: “Did you go to the Convention?” We had not, and he seemed disappointed, as I believe the U.S. was the only report he had not received. He was anxious to know how many Assemblies were lost and how many formed, and he seemed disturbed that we hadn’t heard. He had just received the report of the African believers and he was so happy. So his first conversation with us was to relate the progress in Africa. They had just elected 3 National Assemblies and the one already formed in Egypt, making four in that continent. He gave us statistics and figures that one wonders how he could remember so many.

He said that when the Báb was martyred there were [undecipherable] in Africa and since he opened that continent to the Faith [undecipherable] there are over 3000. In fact the 7 have complete their Ten Year Plan, and he said: “Do you know what I did? I gave them another Seven Year Plan!” He said then ‘we do not need any more white pioneers there, and he thought he would let the friends come to the United States to teach us! They definitely can stand on their own feet.’

He spoke of the many Ḥaẓíras that we have and the money appropriated for them as well as the finances for the Temples. {{p5}} These notes we find in our [undecipherable] so I won’t repeat them here.

‘There are 3 places remaining to be settled plus the [undecipherable] ten.

A lady from one of the Scandinavian countries has gone to Spitzbergen and one of the islands is a leper colony and the other a penal institution.’ The Guardian says ‘the Soviet countries will be open before too long.’

‘The Local Spiritual Assemblies are the foundation of the new World Order, the National Spiritual Assemblies are the pillars and the International House of Justice will be the dome. Everything is representative of an institution, and we cannot put the dome on until the foundation is strong enough to support it. So it is up to the Assemblies to support it.’

‘Blood will run in the streets of America from racial prejudice.’ He says ‘the Bahá’ís have failed on this subject.’ We said that we were having some racial trouble here now and he said ‘Yes, but it will get worse.’

The Western Pilgrim House can accommodate 5 pilgrims at a time, the Eastern House 8, and the Pilgrim lasts 9 nights.

You strain so hard when the Guardian is speaking, trying to get every word and remembering it until you can jot it down in notes, that it tires you out. You can’t possibly remember all the figures and statistics as they seem to roll from his lips like water from a fountain.

He says ‘the Jews are expecting the return of Elijah but you cannot tell them now that He has returned in the Báb. Their destiny is to return to their homeland. They are natural administrators and when they see the Bahá’í Faith they will become the upholders of the Administrative Order.’ {{p6}} Freddie Schopflocher and Musa Banání were the only two Hands of the Cause who received their appointment face to face with Shoghi Effendi. All the others received their appointment by mail, except Rúhíyyih Khánúm, and she said, ‘the Guardian had to tell her because she was right there.’ The first Hands were appointed by Bahá’u’lláh.

No one knows whose names are on the pilgrim list. The Guardian attends to that personally and very often the friends do not know who is coming until they arrive. We were told that he has over 500 Persians waiting to be called.

Occasionally someone asks about some of the mystical questions. He does not answer only when he has the exact Writings in front of him. He says ‘he is not the Guardian of the mysteries but of the Administration, and if we cannot understand that, how could we understand the mysteries. No doubt a future Guardian will answer these questions.

He had just received 2 cartons from Bill Sears in Africa and he was much amused by them.

Rúhíyyih told these stories at lunch:

‘Two Bahá’ís who had pioneered to a desert island, both very bedraggled under their one lone palm tree, with their feet hanging in the water... A bottle comes floating by and as one grabbed at it they found a note it said “stick to your posts”.

‘Also, two Bahá’ís walking down the street in a middle-eastern town when they saw a skull hanging from the eaves of one of the shops, said one to the other: “I told you Sam didn’t know enough about administration”.

The Guardian has a wonderful sense of humor, and it probably provided a chuckle in his very busy life.

On our next afternoon Dr. Ḥakím took the 3 western pilgrims through the Archives. It takes about 3 hours and they have so many precious relics. All of the Writings of the Báb, Bahá’u’lláh and ‘Abdu’l-Bahá. {{p7}} The Writings have all been illumined which makes them very beautiful, and they are all in beautiful frames.

In the afternoon when there are Persian believers there, Rúḥíyyih Khánúm has tea for the ladies at 4 PM, and Shoghi Effendi goes to the Shrine to be with the Persian men. While at tea you talk informally about most anything and if there is any work to be done you help with that. My first day we all cleaned little berries, very much like our currents, which they use in making [undecipherable]..some days it might be mending or serving something for the household. Then the Guardian returns at 5 PM and he talks to the Persian ladies and the western ladies go home to get ready for dinner.

Shoghi Effendi has three aunts still living in Haifa. In fact one of them lives just across the street from the Western Pilgrim House and they and their families are all Covenant breakers. Also he has two sisters and a brother living there and they too are Covenant breakers. This again proves the power of the Faith, as he has had no help with those who should have been firm.

The friends who are able to make the pilgrimage are now very privileged because in the future the shrine of the Báb will not be opened, even to the Bahá’ís. Also the pilgrims will not be allowed to eat with the Guardian.

‘There are four steps for service to the Faith..prayer, meditation, studying and serving. Prayer without action is not good. We need deeper concentration, closer association and then the body of the believers will grow.’

‘There are two duties in the Faith. The Faith comes first and we should think of ourselves last. If we have the means to take care of ourselves then we must omit the last duty.’

He is very unhappy with the American believers because they do not respond. ‘They are all tainted with materialism. We should study more because we work the administration backwards. We all want to be captains in America and that proves our immaturity.’ He said ‘we would never ask for that position for ourselves if we knew the [undecipherable] {{p8}}

There are 3 Covenant-breakers left at Bahjí. Perhaps you wonder, as I did, how this could be, but in the early days, [‘Abdu’l-Bahá] urged the friends to buy property, and they took it out in their names. Bahjí is like what you would call an estate, a large mansion and several other buildings. and in one of these buildings these people live. They are [undecipherable] and have allowed their property to become run down. The day after we arrived, Leroy Ioas returned from Jerusalem where he had just finished signing the necessary papers to oust them. He was elated when he related the details to Shoghi Effendi at dinner. But the Guardian said, ‘now Leroy we must be generous and we must be patient.’ When this property is finally restored to the Bahá’ís they will restore the building and this part will be beautiful too. The gardens at Bahjí defy all description as to their beauty and the immense amount of work that has been done there.

We visited the Monumental gardens [The Arc of Carmel] where the Greatest Holy Leaf is buried as well as ‘Abdu’l-Bahá’s wife and mother and brother; a most wonderful place to rest for those who served so long and so well.

‘One day each city will have 3 Institutions: The Local Spiritual Assembly, Ḥaẓíra and Archives.’

‘Abdu’l-Bahá was the Center of Bahá’u’lláh’s Covenant as well as the Shield for Bahá’u’lláh.’

‘There are two distinct copies of the Bayán in the Archives, one in Persian and the other in Arabic.

Their [undecipherable...].

‘Bahjí is the Greatest Holy Place in the world; The Shrine of the Báb is the second. At the present time the Báb is the most ornate, but no doubt Bahá’u’lláh’s will exceed it in the future.’ {{p9}} ‘When Bahá’u’lláh left the confines of ‘Akká to go to Bahjí, all of His wives, children, sisters and in-laws, as well as the relatives of the Báb, went with Him. His wife, Navváb, the Greatest Holy Leaf and ‘Abdu’l-Bahá stayed in ‘Akká. It is said that ‘Abdu’l-Bahá was broken hearted because He wanted to be with His father, but the ones who went with Bahá’u’lláh became the Covenant-breakers and only those who stayed behind were firm in the Faith. No doubt Bahá’u’lláh was aware of this and took those He had to keep His eye on. Most of the ones who went with Him to Bahjí died from strange diseases.’

‘Most Bahá’ís pray and jump to do things or go to work. This is not good, as one must meditate. We are so busy that we don’t hear the answer when it comes. The Americans do not know how to meditate, but we must learn.’

‘The center of the Temple is for worship, the alcoves for meditation.’

The question was asked: “What do the Bahá’ís observe as the sabbath?” Shoghi Effendi says ‘that in the days of your Bahá’í life all days are worship days, but in all the Holy Books it is said we must work 6 days and rest one, so the Bahá’ís observe whatever day is the sabbath in the country in which he lives.’ It presents quite a problem in the Holy Land, as there are so many religions. The Moslems observe Friday, the Jews Saturday and the Christians Sunday, so those who want to take advantage of all of them do so.

There are so many ways to show respect to the Faith: some wear long sleeves, head coverings, veils, kneeling, standing and many methods of display. He does not want to set ritual, but pray in the way your heart tells you. This is respect for the Faith. The Persians all prostrate themselves when entering the Shrines and are revoked that the Westerner doesn't. The Guardian says 'that if they are offended, that is good.' In that way they can develop their own spirituality. He doesn't want the Persians to think that this is a Persian Faith. {{p10}} Bahá'u'lláh once said in a poem that He wrote that He was God's shadow and He hoped this shadow would illumine the world.

Isaiah has said that Carmel is the mountain of the Lord to which all nations shall flow.

Bahá'u'lláh pitched His tent in the vicinity of the Carmelite Monastery and visited Mount Carmel 4 different times, one time staying 4 months. As He sat in the grove of cypress trees He pointed to the Spot and said to 'Abdu'l-Bahá: "This is where the Báb must be buried."

Mt Carmel is unique in that it is quite a large mountain and steep. About half-way down from the top there is a shelf, and that is where the Shrine sits. Certainly it was destined that way by the hand of God, for no setting could be more perfect. The Shrine is illumined every night for a half hour, and it reminds one of a jewel in a ring.

'We must encourage minority groups.' He wants the white race to be the minority, as a minority group should not be the majority in a major religion. He wants more interracial marriages, and wants more Assembly representation.

'Jews must be attracted and they are very receptive.' {{p11}} [undecipherable sentences follow] 'The cradle of Western Civilization (Europe) is declining and America is worried about it. America is greatly exposed to danger. The time of destruction can happen anytime. It will come fast and no one knows just when this can happen.'

'When people oppose the Faith they purify it, for eventually they leave it. When they are inside they act like poison. Those who reject administration lose their judgement. They act hastily and make mistakes.'

'Many pioneers chose places they can live comfortably and pleasantly.' He chuckled over this and said "I wonder why the [undecipherable] choose Brazil."

'The Bahá'í property in Israel is the only property that is exempt from taxes.'

A man from Chicago was the only Westerner present when the Báb was interred. 'Abdu'l-Bahá asked that no photographs be taken, but this party sneaked a camera in and took a picture. Shoghi Effendi helped bury the Báb. He was a very little boy and was down in the grave when they lowered the coffin. The Báb is in a marble sarcophagus.

Shoghi Effendi does not say what the nature of the catastrophe will be, but he says 'it will be more disastrous than the fall of the Roman Empire.' Says he 'has done everything to wake people up but they still sleep.'

'The persecutions in Írán have practically stopped with the exceptions of some isolated areas.' He says that 'during the Ramaḍán fast period the Moslems work themselves up into a frenzy and then their cruel nature comes out and they must kill. [undecipherable] the Bahá'ís are a real threat to them now, that is where they struck. While it is too bad for the believers, the Faith received more publicity than it could have had if we had to buy it. Regardless of what happens it is good for the Faith.'

You know that while you are in the household of Shoghi Effendi you are protected by his love, and one can feel it, because you feel utmost peace of mind; but the minute you step your foot from there you have a very great responsibility. {{p12}} You won't know until you pray and meditate upon it then the door will be opened.

Everything the Guardian does denotes unity. For instance, in one of the gardens next to the Shrine, one sees cactus growing from the tropical countries and red roses from the cold countries. If the flowers can grow and flourish from different parts of the world then surely humans can.

The Guardian tells you at dinner at night when you go to Bahjí. He says 'it is the culmination of your Pilgrimage no matter what time during your stay you might go.' The pilgrim from New York, Millie Collins, Mason Remey, Elmer and myself went. We arrived there about 5 in the afternoon and went first to the shrine of Bahá'u'lláh. It is similar inside to that of the Báb and 'Abdu'l-Bahá. In one of the rooms there are beautiful live ferns growing and at last one knows that even the Shrines have life. You eat your meals in the house of 'Abdu'l-Bahá lived in when He used to visit His father, I think it must be a lot like those days for when the windows are open the birds fly in and out. It seems strange to us with such beautiful Persian rugs on the floor, but I am sure 'Abdu'l-Bahá must have welcomed them after His many years of confinement. It is in the Shrine of Bahá'u'lláh that I felt I wanted to say prayers for the many different ones who had asked to be remembered. And for myself, I could not ask for anything other than understanding and tolerance to be able to live. To ask for material things does not enter into your mind.

In the evening we visited the Mansion. The room where Bahá'u'lláh passed away is the same one Professor Browne visited Him in. It is exactly as Bahá'u'lláh left it, even to His slippers being placed beside the bed.

There are many beautiful things at Bahjí along with priceless relics belonging to the different members of the family. Here, I think, where one feels the individuality of your Pilgrimage. Needless to say, I did not sleep the first night. A thousand questions went through my mind, and I pictured many things back through the years. Then too, the nightingales sang so loud all night, that sleep was impossible. {{p13}} I remembered the passage in God Passes by, where Bahá'u'lláh made that statement. I would have thought that I imagined it if the pilgrim from New York had not mentioned it too. One wonders if they are greeting you or issuing a warning. This I cannot answer.

The second night the birds did not sign, and I did not sleep either. Elmer being very tired, slept like a babe. So I will still wonder. The questions were all gone in the morning. The House reeks with great power and it seems to descend upon you.

The second day we visited 'Akká, first to the prison. The government is now using it for a mental hospital and no doubt has fixed it up, but it is most distressing. I know that all I needed to see was the prison room where Bahá'u'lláh spent two years of His life, to convince me that the Bahá'í Faith is God's bounty for today. No one but a Holy One would have given up a life of luxury to spend His life in this place. It was here the Purest Branch fell through the roof and the family was confined in two adjoining cells. The room is bare with the exception of a pallet on the floor.

From there we went to the House of Abbúd, so named because Abbúd was the man who owned it. Here again, one sees many things belonging to the family also the room where the Aqdas was revealed and the room where 'Abdu'l-Bahá was married.

Selah took us on a tour of the ancient walled city, and the air is so foul that it makes one sick. It is an Arab city with many strange habits; veiled women and turbaned men. The streets are narrow and dirt. We measured one street and found it to be five feet wide. We saw the great thick gates that clanged shut when Bahá'u'lláh entered the city. Here also we saw the mosque of Esker [?], meaning the butcher. It was so named because the Governor who built it was so called and caused so many people to be put to death. It was here we heard the call to prayer at 6:30 PM from the minaret. {{p14}} The Arabs come in their garbs and wash their hands and face in the fountain and then wash their feet. they take their shoes and place them in front of the mosque and go into pray. We saw several of the houses Bahá'u'lláh lived in for short periods of time when first released from prison along with the house where Shoghi Effendi was born.

From 'Akká we went to Mazarih, the first house Bahá'u'lláh lived in after He left the prison-city. One is greeted with such hospitality by the lady who lives there! She shows you through the house and the rooms occupied by the Holy family. Fresh flowers are kept by the bed at all times. she served us a delicious lunch including a pudding she makes, which looks and tastes something like corn starch pudding. She put the Greatest Name on top in chocolate.

Then, we next went to the Garden of Riḍván. Again, perhaps you wondered why they spoke of the garden in different ways. The Garden of Riḍván where He spent 12 days with His family is in Baghdád. This Garden of Riḍván is about a mile from 'Akká, and where He used to [undecipherable] and sit in the shade of the trees. A nice stream runs through the place and no doubt it was cool and pleasant to sit in.

Then back to Bahjí..the second morning at Bahjí we all visited the Shrine by ourselves. One can stay as long as one likes. This is a great privilege because Shoghi Effendi says 'the time will come when even Bahá'ís cannot go there.' I hope I shall always keep the high ideals I realized at these Holy Places.

About smoking: The Báb forbade it...Bahá'u'lláh revoked the law and never spoke of it again..The Tablet of Purity was written by 'Abdu'l-Bahá and it [non-smoking] was His wish. However, He was not the Lawgiver. the Guardian says 'if you want to smoke, go ahead and smoke. No one is going to stop you. However it is still a dirty and expensive habit and it is better if we quit. The Greatest Holy Leaf, who is the highest symbol of purity, smoked until she died at about 85 years old. 'Abu'l-Faḍl was a chain smoker. It is not forbidden.' {{p15}} They were tearing down an old building at Bahjí that was owned by the Covenant breakers that the Bahá'ís had been trying to buy. It was finally condemned by the officials and torn down. They found in a small room at one end of the building a grave and a Christian altar. Built by the man who built Bahjí, Shoghi Effendi says this must be preserved.

The first night back at the Pilgrim house, Shoghi Effendi explains things connected with the Shrines. 'The Most Great Prison is at 'Akká. The remote prison spoken of in the Tablet of Aḥmad is at Adrianople.'

'The catastrophe is inevitable and needs be to purge the world. It will be something the world has never seen and will effect every nation, country, class and creed. The world has high blood pressure and this will be the blood letting. Blood will run everywhere. It will purge the world and then cement the remnants together. The Administration is the embryo of the new World Order. The new World Order is the child and it will mature into the world civilization. There will be no decline in the future. It will be like a spiral, ever upwards. There may be moments that stop, but no decline. This is the Day that is not followed by night.'

There are many ways that people pray. He wants no set ritual. 'Pray according to your heart, this is not a Persian religion, but Divine in origin, world embracing in scope and spiritual in character.'

'Once materialism is wiped away it will not return, but a more spiritual world will exist.'

'There will always be evil but it will be more restricted. Man will always have the opportunity to use his will. The next Prophet will be persecuted and will bring His own Book and laws. There will always be tests.'

'We are approaching the darkest [hour] before dawn. No one knows when this can happen. but anytime. {{p16}} It will come fast. Anything that happens, even to the destruction of the Temples and Shrines, will be for the good of the Faith.'

‘The Prophets did not mind Their suffering in this world for They knew Their reward was greater in the next world.’

‘God always gives us our just dues, if not in this world, then in the next, but suffering is our greatest development. It gives us the greatest chance to develop our greatest opportunity the life God gave us to live.’

‘In the future there will be no white race.’

The New York pilgrim came last night and Shoghi Effendi told her that the first part of her Pilgrimage was over and the second part would begin. The first part was to absorb and the second part was to impart.

‘Go back to New York and tell the people to get out, and particularly to pioneer to France. Stay out of Paris. It is the only way to save the individual and the Faith.’

‘Regardless what the government does it cannot prevent the catastrophe. One million people in New York cannot be saved. It will come swift and sudden and whole cities will be leveled to the ground.’

‘New York is named the City of the Covenant because it is the most corrupt city in the world. Therefore it needs the greatest transformation.’

‘Persia is the cradle of the Faith, America the cradle of the Administration. America is named because it is the most corrupt nation. Bahá’ís are wasting their time in cities. They must go out into small towns. Cities will not respond until after destruction.’

‘America and Persia must suffer.’

‘Bahá’ís must learn to sacrifice because this materialism is hindering our progress in the next world. Life in this world does not matter.’

‘Lack of love in communities hinders our growth.’

‘Bahá’ís cannot belong to the Masons because it is a secret organization and there can be no secret meetings in Bahá’í. Also, their policy is not universal; it is different in the East than in the West. Even if your old age depends on it you must give it up. In no way can you sacrifice spiritual principles. {{p17}} A member of any organization must first ask the Local Spiritual Assembly if they can belong. Even though they are not political in character, the implications may be political. If the Local Spiritual Assemblies cannot answer, contact the National Spiritual Assembly and they must investigate and report back.’

I had been noticing the non-use of the pronoun “I” .. Shoghi Effendi has used it twice, both time in referring to “I have incorporated that in God Passes By.”

‘If a believer should be forced to quit his job and is destitute because of an organization, the Local Spiritual Assembly must see that he is taken care of, even to raising special funds. This is good for the Faith. So many organizations today are corrupt but only the top authority knows the full extent of their principles.'

'The Faith should always come first, regardless of what hardship it entails. We must remember all world forces are against the Bahá'í Faith, so the Bahá'ís must learn to lean on one another and show forth such love that people will be attracted.' 'There is too much lethargy in American communities. Too much committee activity which hampers teaching work and kills the spirit. Teaching is the most important and it is the duty of each believer to teach.'

The Guardian says he 'feels things' and no doubt but that he knows everything going on in the Cause.

The new pilgrims from New York: Bob and Keith Quigley. Once again the Guardian talked of the catastrophe.

'America is the most corrupt nation in the world and is contaminating the other nations, therefore it will suffer the worst.'

I asked if this was war, he said 'yes, and other things too; the most fiery ordeal the world has ever known. The whole world will be like a convulsion. The flame will clean and also weld.'

'The Báb gave the mandate to scatter, assistance was promised by Bahá'u'lláh, the desire of 'Abdu'l-Bahá and now the Administration says we must disperse. The foundation of this Cause was laid by God, the Administration by the Institutions {{p18}} and the teachings by individuals.'

He says 'maintain the heroes, increase the saints and lessen the administrators.'

'The islands in the Pacific are the most important, and the brown race.'

He wants young people to go to these places, they will be difficult.'

'Go and tell the people to disperse.'

He says 'it is not enough to [be] converted to the Faith. You must have the desire to serve and teach.'

The first night after we returned from Bahjí, Shoghi Effendi said 'now that you have been to 'Akká, read the two chapters in God Passes By about 'Akká, and before you go to Baghdád read the chapter referring to Baghdád.'

The friends told us afterward that they had not heard him make that remark to any other pilgrim. So now we wonder if ours will be the privilege to make that journey.

When the Guardian realizes you have absorbed to capacity he makes a humorous remark which breaks the tension. One listens so closely.

On the Shrine of the Báb over the Arcade there are blocks designed with a green border and spots of red denotes blood. In the future there may be inscriptions in these blocks.

Finally the last night of our Pilgrimage came and I felt a little nervous because I was wondering what our duty would be. The Guardian talked at what seemed lengths about the latitudes and longitudes where the Faith was now established. One wonders how he had all the figures at his finger tips.

He said ‘to take our filled sup back to Spokane and let it spill over. A Plan without an organization is not good; and an organization without a plan is not good.’

Then quickly he turned to us and said ‘now tell me your plans for pioneering.’ We told him we had thought of going to Central America, and as far as we had gotten with plan, and he said ‘that is good, that is what I want you to do. You have the special blessing of Bahá’u’lláh and I will say special prayers for you. Life will be different and there will be many hardships. But do not get discouraged, and be patient and you will be very successful.’ {{p19}} We both knew that this is what we must do and we are proceeding with our plans hoping they materialize quickly.

He gave us each a vial of attar of rose and asked that we anoint the friends with his love. The pilgrims from New York wept uncontrollably as did the rest. Rúhíyyih Khánum said later ‘that sometimes the Guardian got her down.’

It is a very tense moment and one realizes that the first part of the Pilgrimage is over and you dread to leave, but one sure feels better prepared to face the next task.

Rúhíyyih Khánum gave me a pair of prayer beads that had been in the Shrine, and Elmer a key ring made from an old Persian coin of the Guardian’s and also a picture of the Guardian when he was a baby.

A FEW AFTER NOTES

While in Haifa we visited the cemetery where Esslemont is buried.

We went shopping one afternoon with Rúhíyyih Khánum. When Shoghi Effendi was a little boy he used to say to ‘Abdu’l-Bahá he wished he had a name, as people in that part of the world were known by the name of the place that they lived. Shoghi Effendi wished it so hard that ‘Abdu’l-Bahá gave him the name of Rabbání.

Shoghi Effendi spoke one night at the dinner table that ‘the Faith progressed like an automobile. It needs a motor and a battery; and Rúhíyyih Khánum said ‘but Shoghi Effendi, it must have a driver too,’ and he said ‘yes, that is the finger of Bahá’u’lláh!’ No glory for himself. He is truly humble. {{p20}} I do not feel my notes would be complete without telling you of Athens. As we were planning to stop there anyway, we delivered some books to the friends there. It is so difficult to mail anything as mail is censored in Greece. The evening of the Declaration of the Báb, the first Bahá’í in Greece was enrolled. A young man of about 25 yrs old, and as he did not speak English and they did not speak Greek, he was taught thru a paid translator. Note: This translator is now studying the Faith for enrollment. This enrollment completed the 1st virgin territory in Europe. It was a thrilling evening for all.

When we arrived in England, we were so tired of large cities, castles, palaces and churches, we decided to go to Southampton, where we would stay for four days until time to embark on the Queen Mary. We had been there about an hour when a man spoke to us and offer to direct us to any place we might want to see. Said he was just walking around and recognized us as strangers. One does not pick up with strangers in strange countries but he looked so kind that we talked a long while with him. He finally invited us to his house for tea. So after calling his wife we called a cab and went. She was just as lovely and while drinking tea they asked the reason for our trip. So the conversation turned towards telling them of the Faith. They were most receptive, and to make things brief we spent all of our time with them. They got special permit to board the Queen Mary so they might be with us and brought bouquet of roses for our cabin. As they went up the gang plank their last words were, "you are the first Bahá'ís we have met but you won't be the last for we will hunt them up."

As our boat sailed received a telegram from them. We feel that this visit was a wonderful part of our Pilgrimage and hope that the first two Bahá'ís in Southampton will be the lovely friends we met in England.

It is our wish that each one of the friends can someday make the Pilgrimage and we know that no sacrifice is too great, in order to make it.

P.O.Box 369 Santa Paula, Calif.

I arrived in Haifa, Israel, shortly after midnight, the early morning of April 23, 1957. On the previous evening at dinner, the beloved Guardian had spoken most powerfully on the condition of the world. As an American, I was told by other pilgrims, I should most certainly have heard this talk. Isabelle Sabri made her notes available to me, and I am starting off my notes of the dinner talks of Shoghi Effendi with Mrs. Sabri's notes, since they were repeated almost in their entirety during my first night at the dinner table.

ISABELLE SABRI'S NOTES OF THE GUARDIAN'S TALK

ON APRIL 22, 1957 (THESE NOTES WERE CORROBERATED

BY OTHERS PRESENT, BOTH MEMBERS OF THE INTERNATIONAL COUNCIL AND PILGRIMS)

A retributive calamity worse than war will come. Americans will be the worst affected. Their homes will evaporate overnight. They will become refugees to other continents. Russia will also suffer. When Russia gains military equality, America will be trapped. Both the Russian and American systems are wrong. Both are materialistic. Russia has a system of control by the proletariat; America by capitalism. Both are wrong.

The Master said, in connection with the Negro problem, that the streets would run with blood. "If you want to know the truth, the Master's mission to America was a failure, because of the lack of response of the American nation and American Bahá'ís. He went to America to warn the Nation and appeal to the believers. Because of their lack of response, He was very sad when He died."

Possibly two-thirds of the earth's people, as prophesied in the Bible, will be annihilated. This is quite possible. The world is over-populated and the blood of the people is impure. There needs to be a bloodletting. The retributive calamity will correct the over-population. When the world is remade, advance of technique and science will solve the problem of over-population. This will be the Golden Age. Now so much money is being used for amusements that there is no money to solve the population problem.

Shoghi Effendi spoke of his appeals to the American friends in the past years, "But why should they respond to my letters when they did not respond to the Master when He went in person."

He spoke of the fact that the American Bahá'í Community will go through a period of transition when they will be almost spectators instead of participators. "Look at them now! How many items of American news is in my Convention Message about the United States as compared to Africa and the Orient? Their News Letters contain only programs, agendas, marriages, deaths - and they do not even seem to know how to present the new of the victories of the Faith in other areas. The American Bahá'í News has become an international organ of news - but the Committee does not even seem to know how to report victories all over the world!"

PILGRIM'S NOTES

The Guardian spoke of the materialism of America. He said that Europe is not the seat of Christian civilization, not by any means. It is the seat of material civilization, and America is the stronghold of material civilization. Bahá'u'lláh established this Faith in Persia, the most decadent nation on earth, more barbarous than the savages of Africa. The World Order of Bahá'u'lláh will be established, and has been started in America because it is now the most corrupt politically. The Americans are not altruistic in what they do. They lend money to protect themselves; and other nations know it, and resent it. But they take the money. America is trying to find friends.

It is too late to change the course of of the world - the world needs a bloodletting.

The retributive calamity will appear suddenly, not by degrees. America's motives are not pure because they do not want to coalesce with other nations -far from it. America must be purified by tribulations. Read the talks of 'Abdu'l-Bahá between the lines. He gently, tactfully warned the Americans. But they did not heed.

In connection with the race problem, Shoghi Effendi said that New York's streets would run with blood. He spoke of inter-marriage, and asked if there had been any. When told there had been, he said that even then, "If you took it couple by couple and examined their individual motives, you would probably find impure motives." Rúhíyyih Khánúm interrupted to say that people in America only marry for love. The Guardian replied: "Yes, they idolize love! They think only of love! They idolize their wives, their money, their friends, their homes - they idolize their possessions only! Not principles, just possessions."

He said that it is a sign of the times that the Faith is stagnant in Europe and America.

He said that the black and brown races would lead the world. They would rise up, through nationalism or other means, and the white race will go down. An equapoise will be established, and the world will go forward on the basis of equality between peoples.

The American people are too fond of their central heaters, their comfort. They are not willing to sacrifice. "Victories only come from self-abnegation and sacrifice." The American believers should not only leave their homes - they should go as far away as possible - to the other end of the earth. Otherwise they will go as refugees, bankrupt both materially and spiritually. The Bahá'ís should be willing to lower their standard of living in order to teach the Faith. The Americans already have far too high standard of living.

The retributive calamity will burn, purify, and weld.

To leave one's home to go to a foreign country, this is dispersal. It is going to save one's self. But it is not pioneering. Pioneering is to sacrifice one's self - self-abnegation, to teach, to achieve victory. Victory is essential. The emphasis is on victory.

Many pioneers actually better their material living. They better their living. This is not pioneering.

What is dispersal without victory? One must have: 1. Self-abnegation; 2. Sacrifice; 3. Willingness to lower one's standard of living.

If the Americans want to safeguard their wealth, let them take it to the other ends of the earth. But this is not pioneering.

In the Formative Age, the spirit of the Faith born in the Heroic Age must incarnate itself in the institutions. The building of the administration, the building of the World Order, and the flourishing of the world civilization is a three-fold successive process. "Civilization" means the working of the Spirit of the Faith through human institutions. Also the development of new architecture, art, science, the letters.

The World Order of Bahá'u'lláh must absorb the outer world.

In answer to a question as to the impact of the Faith on Africa, the Guardian said, "Yes, certainly, the destiny of the black and brown races is very great. The brown, black and yellow races are the majority in the world; and one day perhaps to the majority of believers will be from the brown, black and yellow races; and the white race will be in the minority; and this is right."

The Master said that the destiny of the American Indians is very great and told the American believers to concentrate on them; but they have not done enough. 'Abdu'l-Bahá compared the American Indians (original Americans) with the original inhabitants of Arabia. The Arabs were murderers. They killed their girl children. The urine of the cattle was their perfume. But they became saints and heroes.

About services in the Temple, there must be no tape recordings; the sound of the human voice only, not the sound of a machine.

FLORENCE MAYBERRY'S NOTES

APRIL 23, 1957

Shoghi Effendi said we must be very exact in teaching, in small things as well as in large matters.

He spoke about the Lesser Political Peace occurring in this century; also the world administration of the Bahá'í Faith will be established in this age, in this century. This is the Formative Age.

Then the world must become spiritualized. Toward the end of this Dispensation, the Golden Age will appear. The world must become spiritualized. but even though there will be great advancement in spirituality, this dispensation will not make this world into God's Footstool. This has a more exalted meaning than the golden Age. This will be a development of other Dispensations, which will come in the shadow of Bahá'u'lláh.

The Guardian, being infallable, will know the next Manifestation when He appears and will point out the Manifestation to the Bahá'ís. This does not mean there will be instant acceptance. But the Guardian will know.

Armageddon will not necessarily be only a war. It will include an unknown calamity. It will burn the world and weld the world.

In answer to questions from Isabelle Locke Sabri about missionaries in Africa, Shoghi Effendi said: "We must be careful with governments, and reckless with missionaries." I mentioned the fact that Bahá'í pioneers had been attack, to a degree, by the Anglican Bishop in the Yukon Territory of Canada, and that the attack had brought good publicity to the Bahá'ís. Shoghi Effendi reiterated that we must cause a challenging response from the churches.

Shoghi Effendi asked me if I ran into many cases in America of breaking the law of abstinence from alcohol - "Do you find this, Mrs. Mayberry?"

I said no, Shoghi Effendi, I did not. In the main, the Bahá'ís kept this law. But that there were a few sad cases of alcoholism, in which the people involved were ill and struggling with this disease.

Shoghi Effendi said, "No, using alcohol is not one of the weaknesses of American Bahá'ís. Their weakness is not the drinking of wine. It is materialism."

As on the previous night, before I had arrived, Shoghi Effendi repeated that Europe is the cradle of materialism, and america is the stronghold of materialism. And Americans must pioneer to France. American Bahá'ís must go to France.

then after establishing strong communities there, they must go on to the Baltic States.

He commented that 'Ishqábád Bahá'ís are in Siberia. And the Bahá'ís must go on into the Iron Countries.

I asked this question: "Shoghi Effendi, you say that America is the most materialistic nation, and Europe is next, with perhaps France its most outstanding example. Then, Shoghi Effendi, when this most materialistic people go to the next most materialistic land to teach the new spiritual law, will this be the means of expiating America's sin of materialism? Is this how we will purify ourselves?" Shoghi Effendi said this was true.

He said the Hands of the Cause must meet with the Auxiliary Board to discuss problems. And the Auxiliary Board members must meet among themselves in addition to discuss common affairs. "Do you do this in America?" He asked me. I stated that we did at Convention time, with those members who attended the Convention. He said this was insufficient - how could we know best what methods to use, how could we develop without sharing our work and having consultation?

He stated that the Auxiliary Board must cause the friends to pioneer to France and on the Home Front. This was part of their task. They must promote the Ten Year Crusade.

I then offered Shoghi Effendi a hypothetical case. I said, suppose all American Bahá'ís were absolutely obedient to the Guardian. Then would this be the true situation: All Bahá'ís in large communities about the number of 15 would move to goal cities, or groups, or isolated centers on the Home Front. Shoghi Effendi interrupted to say that we must not be too rigid on the number 15.

So I changed that to an approximate 15 - saying that all above that approximate figure would go to Home Front goals, and cover the United States with a thin layer of Bahá'ís, in every community possible; and all the residue above those home front needs would pioneer into foreign goals. And the approximate 15 who remained in the large cities would remain only as martyrs - not as people who would not move, but as martyrs to the Cause of God, knowing they would lose their lives because of the calamity which would trap them. Shoghi Effendi said that was correct. With absolute obedience, this would be a true picture.

Rúhíyyih Knanum said, "But Shoghi Effendi, you wouldn't ask those people to remain in the cities until the very last minute if you could save them, would you?" And the Guardian said no, that they would be permitted to go to escape the calamity - if they had time.

Shoghi Effendi spoke of rectitude of conduct. Unless Bahá'ís act differently than other people, they cannot hope to attract believers. An organization is not enough. We have many organizations. We must live this Faith.

Bahá'u'lláh speaks of the Most Great Justice. There must be complete justice, individually as well as in Assemblies. Assemblies must create justice. Individuals also must be just.

He spoke of greater informal social life between races. He said that formal social intercourse is insufficient. To share in public meetings is not sufficient, it is too formal and cold. There must be informal social meetings in the homes. Such affairs must be arranged and cultivated. They must be of warm feeling and with no barriers.

Shoghi Effendi was asked by one of the pilgrims about forming an Assembly when its membership is shaky. For example, suppose nine Bahá'í were in a community on April 21, but it was definitely known that in a few weeks some of those Bahá'í would be leaving - should one not form the Assembly since the number would soon be disrupted? The assembly should be formed, said the Guardian, Assemblies must be formed as quickly as possible, with no hesitation. Expect that the Assembly will remain. Expect a miracle.

He said that Assemblies must establish unity, following a comment that many of the Assemblies were unstable because of disunity. He said it was clear that if an Assembly had no unity, it had no religion. Did not the Teachings state that if religion did not produce unity, it was better to have no religion?

GENERAL NOTES (NOT DINNER NOTES)

Shoghi Effendi's Aunt, the Greatest Holy Leaf, used to take his hand and say: "These are the hands of my Father." it was a general comment in the Holy Land that Shoghi Effendi looked much like Bahá'u'lláh. They were approximately the same size, both very small. On the first night when I met the Guardian, I gripped his hand so hard that I was frightened for a moment. His hand was so small and delicate. But it is a very strong hand. Everything about the Guardian seems strong. And within a few minutes after meeting him, he has no size - he is neither large nor small, thick or thin - he is the Guardian. He is a force. He is a power. He is overwhelming. In the sight of this man, one comes to judgment. From this man comes infallibility. Who can know the size of judgment or infallibility?

His eyes are large, luminous, deep set, but full orbbed. They are hazel, but change color according to light, from brown-grey shades to almost blue.

Rúhíyyih Khánum's Bahá'í ring is also her engagement ring and wedding ring. She said that Shoghi Effendi put it on her finger when he told her they would be married. But he said that she must let no one see the ring until they were married. So she wore it around her neck, suspended from a chain. Then when they were married at the Shrine of Bahá'u'lláh, Shoghi Effendi put it on her third finger, right hand. This ring was given to Shoghi Effendi by the Greatest Holy Leaf, and the Guardian had worn it for years. Rúhíyyih Khánum stated that it was her most precious possession. She had a similar gold ring, with the Bahá'í ringstone insignia on it, made for Shoghi Effendi which he wears.

Rúhíyyih Khánúm says we must be like Shoghi Effendi. We must keep our eyes on the ball. First, we must pick out what the “ball” is. Then we must follow it undeviatingly. This is what brings Shoghi Effendi success. Nothing intimidates Shoghi Effendi. To him, success is inevitable.

It was stated that for some 30 years, George Townshend stayed in the church, although a Bahá’í. Then Shoghi Effendi told him he must leave the church.

Rúhíyyih Khánúm says that the Guardian is utterly impervious to personalities. He ignores such differences. He is quite likely to put people working closely together who are not speaking to each other.

FLORENCE MAYBERRY’S DINNER NOTES

APRIL 24, 1957

As soon as we had seated ourselves at dinner, Shoghi Effendi asked me where I stayed most of the time, California? I replied, no, that although I lived in California, I traveled much more in other areas. I said that I traveled in Canada, western United States, had been twice in Alaska and once in the Hawaiian Islands, that I was away from my home about six months of the year. Shoghi Effendi said that was very good, that he hoped I continued to travel like this. He said that the Auxiliary Board of America had done better than the Hands. And as he said this, he gave me sudden, direct, piercing look. What he truly intended by this look, I cannot say. But what it seemed to mean, to me, was that he was searching for any emotion of self-pride in me engendered by his statement. He said that the Hands must travel more - that the Hands of the Cause and their Auxiliary Board must travel to all Bahá’ís, and encourage them. Again he added emphatically that the Hands must travel more!

Shoghi Effendi continued by saying that this Bahá’í Faith is a new God-given Institution. The Christian Cause is represented by the Catholic Church. In the Catholic Church the teaching is done by groups, under the Pope. There are large teaching groups. The Pope interprets, and the group teaches. The Cardinals, Archbishops, Bishops, et cetera, administer the church. Therefore, the individual administrators. The Cardinals do this under the Pope.

This Christian Hierarchy is opposite to the Bahá’í. In the Bahá’í Faith, the group administers, the individual teaches. It is opposite from the Christian.

The Hands of the Cause, according to the Will of the Master, must propagate the Cause and protect it. Of the two functions, the most important is protection. It takes precedence. Naturally one of its, this protection, is in regard to Covenant breakers.

The Hands of the Cause must not administer. They must not interfere with administration. (Later on the Guardian said that the two functions, the Hands and Administration, must be separate. When the Hands have administrative duties, they must fulfill them, but separately from their more important function.) The Hands must not report to the Bahá'ís, nor to any administrative body. It is inconceivable that the Hands should report to an administrative body. Administration is a lesser function. It is, instead, the duty of the administration to report its needs to the Hands. The NSA must submit its needs to the Hands. Then the Hands must instruct the Auxiliary Boards.

The Hands of the Cause are the hands of the Guardian. The Auxiliary Board members are the hands of the hands of the Hands. Also, and most important, the Hands must be the Eyes of the Guardian. "They must report everything to the Guardian!" Shoghi Effendi declared vehemently. "Everything!" In their turn, the Auxiliary Board members must report everything to the Hands. "The Hands must see everything!" Shoghi Effendi said again.

There are four divisions or functions in the Bahá'í Faith, the Guardian said: 1. Interpretation; 2. Protection; 3. Propagation; 4. administration. The least important of these is administration, but all must be used.

The Guardian interprets. The Hands of the Cause protect and propagate. The Administration administers. In the future, in the Bahá'í Faith, the Administrators will do nothing but administer, and this concerns the more worldly, outward affairs. It will have nothing whatsoever to do with teaching, as it now does through its committees. The Hands with their Auxiliary Boards - and the Auxiliary Boards in turn having further extensions - will protect and propagate the Teachings.

Shoghi Effendi said that the Guardianship and the heirarchy under the Guardianship was such a good idea that the Christians invented the Papacy and the Cardinals for the Christian Dispensation when no such institution existed, in order to fill the gap in authority. But the Christian institution was not Divine, it was man-made. The Bahá'í institution is Divine.

"The Bahá'ís must not be ashamed of having a hierarchy," Shoghi Effendi said. "We do have a hierarchy. But it is different than other hierarchies. It is God-given. It is God's plan. It is Divine."

Shoghi Effendi spoke again of America's materialism. This was the third night running. He said America was the most materialistic of all nations. France was also materialistic. Europe was materialistic, but the worst was America.

He said the place most in danger from the calamity was the United States - then all places touched by Western Civilization. Even Africa is in danger in those areas touched by Western civilization, particularly North Africa. The Bahá'ís must disperse from the materialistic centers. No place in the world is safe, except in those pure-hearted, primitive areas where western civilization has not reached - but the most dangerous spot is America.

Shoghi Effendi turned sharply to me and said, "It is the function of the Hands and their Auxiliary Board to cause the Bahá'ís to disperse! Have they done this, or have they talked about administration? They have nothing to do with administration in this function! The two must be separate. When the Hands or Auxiliary Board have administrative duties, they must fulfill them - but but separately from the more important function."

He stated that America is undisciplined. It is too democratic. And he said, "Too democratic" like a whiplash. England, he said, is too conservative.

America is too democratic. America has gone so far with democracy that it is undisciplined. but the calamity will discipline America. It will be purged, and will emerge a transformed nation with an entirely new form of Government. It will not disappear. It will be purged and changed.

The Africans are undisciplined in regard to administration, Shoghi Effendi said in the answer to mention from a pilgrim about the Africans' weakness in administration. The Africans must assume their responsibilities, and become disciplined. The American Bahá'ís also must learn discipline. This is why they have disunity. This is why they lack respect for their Hierarchy - they must respect their Hierarchy.

The Bahá'ís must watch to see how non-Bahá'ís act and do the opposite. America is decadent. It has no discipline. Parents have no control of children. They must watch how non-Bahá'í parents rear their children, and do the opposite.

The Bahá'í mother must teach her child the truths of religion. The child must be trained. The mother is answerable to God if she does not teach her child the Bahá'í Faith.

I brought up this question - that frequently Bahá'í parents say that since our first principle is independent investigation of the truth, they feel they should not be too strict with their children but rather let them investigate all kinds of religious teaching so they can independently investigate the truth. Shoghi Effendi stated, in answer to this, that this is not investigation of truth, it is investigation of falsehood - since the truth cannot be found in man-made divisions.

He repeated with great force that the Bahá'í mother is responsible to God for training her child. She must train the child in Bahá'í Teachings; she must so train the child that he will accept and uphold this truth.

Children must be reared strictly, the Guardian said. They must venerate their elders. And the Bahá'ís must venerate their hierarchy.

The parents are undisciplined. Their children are undisciplined. This causes a mass weakness and insecurity. In many respects, the South Americans are better than the North Americans. They have respect for parents. This lack of respect of children for elders in America is disrupting and weakening their entire social structure. This is the cause of juvenile delinquency, which in turn produces flouting of all civil authority. It is democracy turned into a disease.

The most important thing is to develop morals. Bahá'ís must learn moral laws. They must have moral rectitude. This is more important than administration. Moral rectitude will be the cause of good administration.

Therefore, children must be taught moral laws.

The people of America are continually concerned about giving material benefits to children, adding to their possessions, making them secure in a worldly way. This is copied by Bahá'í parents. Bahá'í parents should watch what non-Bahá'í parents do - then do the opposite!

Then, going back to his emphasis upon pioneering and dispersal, Shoghi Effendi asked, "Do the Auxiliary Board members encourage pioneers on the home front and in France? It is part of the Ten Year Crusade to have pioneers in France and abroad. Are you emphasizing this?"

DINNER NOTES APRIL 25, 1957

Shoghi Effendi talked again about association with Negroes. He repeated that this association should be friendly, consistent, informal - chiefly it must be informal gatherings.

Bahá'ís in America must be more aggressive in teaching Negroes. They have miserably failed in the South to carry out such aggressive teaching. They have too many committees - they need more confirmations.

Isabelle Locke Sabri asked about white women teaching the Faith in Africa. She pointed out that there was social criticism of women who traveled about freely, so men did most of the teaching, but there were not enough men. Shoghi Effendi said the women must teach, and if there is talk it will probably stir up interest about the Faith.

He warned Isabelle they must avoid Muslims in their teaching. The Muslims are treacherous! Especially avoid the Ismaili. Absolutely avoid the Ismaili!

Also he said to avoid the leaders in Africa. Seek out the people. Seek the pure-hearted. Avoid African Chiefs. The Chiefs can not only lead the people into the Faith - they can also lead them out again!

Persians, he declared, make the best African pioneer. They have no prejudices. They become one of the people. And they remain. If the Americans cannot make a living, they go home.

PILGRIM NOTES - APRIL 26, 1957

The Guardian talked tonight on statistics about temples to be procured, and the NSA's and their responsibilities. Most of what he said is to be found in his Convention Message of 1957 to the Bahá'í World.

He did state that there were to be no restrictions on believers obtaining further Ḥaḏíras, except in Canada and the United States.

He said that the United States must help other NSA's in buying their Temple grounds. Other believers, particularly those of the East, helped the U.S. to procure their Temple - now the believers of the U.S. must help the others.

The believers in the United States must help the fund. They must sacrifice the non-essentials. They must use a lower standard of living. They must contribute thus: 1. They must sacrifice; 2. The contribution must be voluntary; 3. It must be steady. It is the sacrifice which counts, he said.

I spoke of the interest shown by the Mormons recently in the Bahá'í Faith. Shoghi Effendi said we should have another committee to concentrate upon work with miscellaneous minorities, with a sub-committee for each minority.

He said that the Canadians had offered an alternate for Anticosti, since Anticosti Island was too difficult to place a pioneer upon it. He stated that he would rather this new choice of island be a supplement and not an alternate for Anticosti - that it be in addition to Anticosti. (This carries out Rúhíyyih Khánum's statement that Shoghi Effendi never accepts defeat, he considers success inevitable.)

DINNER NOTES - APRIL 29, 1957

(The Persian pilgrims, Isabelle Sabri and I spent April 27 and 28 in 'Akká and the Most Holy Shrine at Bahjí, returning to Haifa in late morning on April 29. It was on this day, the Ninth Day of Ridván, following a noonday Feast that the beloved Guardian chanted the Tablets of Visitation in his soaring and lyrical voice at the Shrines of the Báb and 'Abdu'l-Bahá).

The Guardian spoke of America only settling three more centers this year, an infinitesimal part of the large number of new centers settled in the world. (These figures were not the final ones from the United States - the American National convention had just started and final figures were not in.) The Guardian stated that America's lost Local Spiritual Assemblies and new Local Spiritual Assemblies merely balance each other. (Also, figures for the end of the year were not yet complete.)

He spoke of good new throughout the Bahá'í World - but not in America. America must multiply its isolated centers, its Assemblies, must send out pioneers, must support the Fund, must strengthen the new NSAs just established.

Americans are so materialistic that the Bahá'ís are infected. They are protecting their dollars. The American NSA is sending token contributions to the new NSAs. These are so small that they are an insult. An insult!

The American NSA recalls its pioneers instead of sending new ones. The Americans are deteriorating - they think only of their dollars, their possessions.

Up to this point, the the Guardian's voice had been comparatively mild, held in leash. Now, abruptly, Shoghi Effendi spoke out in righteous wrath, like a whiplash, concerning information which he had received that Dr. Ugo Giachery was to be removed from subsidy. To treat Ugo Giachery in this fashion - Ugo, who was almost a saint, almost a saint! - Ugo who had done so much for the World Center - to remove him from subsidy depicted the impudence, the lowness of the concept of the American NSA. "They have gone too far!" he cried out, "They should have realised that it was a privilege to provide for a Hand of the Cause of God, they should have been grateful for it." With incredible rapidity and force, he ordered Leroy Ioas to send a cablegram to the American NSA to instantly apologize to Ugo Giachery. He also instructed Mr. Ioas to write to Dr. Giachery apologizing for this condition, to thank him for all his work, to assure him that the subsidy would remain. To recall the pioneers was bad enough, the Guardian stated. But to insult a Hand of the Cause was incredible, insufferable.

Shoghi Effendi said the NSAs should humbly - HUMBLY - ask the Hands of the Cause of God for help, not the other way around. He declared emphatically that the Hands of the Cause are immeasurably above any administrative group.

I then told Shoghi Effendi about the chart being used in Canada and in the United States which depicts twin pillars - one the Guardianship, and the other Universal House of Justice. Side by side, of equal size, in equal status on this chart, they uphold the edifice of the Faith. So I asked Shoghi Effendi if the hands of the Cause were above the Universal House of Justice. Certainly, he replied, they are above all administrative groups. "Then this chart is wrong, isn't it?" I asked, "For if the Hands outrank the Universal House of Justice, the Guardian outranks all. But I was told this Chart had the approval of the Guardian."

"Certainly it is wrong," said the Guardian. "Besides I do not like charts. The Guardianship is immensely above the Universal House of Justice." he stated that the Universal House of Justice merely takes care of administration, freeing the Guardian for more important tasks of interpretation, protection and propagation. The Hands who take care of protection and propagation are above any administration. The administration is so much lesser that the Guardian may send a representative to sit in on the sessions of the Universal House of Justice. "Does it not say so in the Will and Testament of the Master?" he asked. "Do you think that the Guardian will leave his more important tasks to sit in such meetings? He will send a representative because it is so much less important."

Then he stated that in future the Guardian would send word to the Universal House of Justice to remove the voting rights of any National House of Justice which showed impudence and was not obedient.

But the Guardian's wrath was still only partially vented. For he then told about the situation in _____, in which _____ had apparently permitted himself to be listed as a Christian instead of as a Bahá'í. "And he is a former member of the American NSA! Perhaps this is an indication of how tainted they have become."

The Guardian said to me, "You must go back to America and be firm with the friends about not compromising with their Faith. Voting rights may be removed for compromising, such as stating that one is a member of another religion. In Persia, it would not merely be voting rights. One's spiritual rights would be removed."

"Be firm!" he repeated.

Again he castigated America for producing such a situation. He said that America's love of money and possessions taints even pioneers.

And again he gave a powerful talk on the high station of the Hands of the Cause, who are the towering figures of the Cause after the Guardian.

In relation to the situation in _____, the Guardian stated that he had called the Persians the physical descendants of the Dawnbreakers, and the Americans the spiritual descendants - "Are these the spiritual descendants who do such things!" They (the American Bahá'ís) make no sacrifice, do not support the fund, and even insult a Hand of the Cause!

Persia is materialistic too. The Guardian spoke of Covenant breakers going out of Persia to America - this was why he did not want Persians to go to America.

The Guardian stated that Sohrab was getting more active. Sohrab feels the weakness in the Americans. One does not have to associate with Covenant Breakers to catch the disease, one has only to be near it. This is why the Faith does not grow in New York. This is why the Faith is nothing in New York! They are tainted.

The Covenant breakers are getting more active, not only the New History group, but other groups. They are spreading over the country, tainting the country.

Then Shoghi Effendi turned to me, fixed me with his luminous and piercing gaze, and asked in a powerful voice, which seemed to impale one, "WHAT ARE THE HANDS DOING TO PROTECT THE CAUSE! This is their chief function. ARE THEY PROTECTING THE CAUSE!"

During a pause, desiring so much even by thought to bring my family into this Holy Land and into the presence of the wonderful Guardian, I said to Shoghi Effendi, "Before I leave, I want to bring to you the loving greetings of my family." Then I was struck with guilt at having so much, at accepting the sacrifices of my family who had aided me to come on this pilgrimage and who aided me to teach. I was impelled to mention each one of them. I said, "All my family sends these greetings. My husband, David, who sacrificed so that I could come on this pilgrimage while he remained at home. My mother, who takes care of our son and our home while I go on teaching trips. And our young son, who does without his mother a great deal."

For a minute the Guardian was silent, considering. I cringed inwardly a little, expecting that he might point out that I accepted too much from my family. "Tell your family to scatter and teach! Scatter and teach!" he exclaimed abruptly. Another hesitation. Then he said, almost as though he were talking to himself, "It is like a running brook, and a stagnant pool."

Earlier in the evening, the Guardian asked me why American believers are inactive. I said I didn't know. But that sometimes I thought they were frightened and were waiting for the calamity to do the work for them, to cause large bodies of humanity to enter the Faith. He said this was true, the American believers were paralyzed.

He said, "I have been forgiving, forbearing. I have pled with the Americans, I have praised them. And I have failed to arouse them. Mrs. Mayberry, perhaps you can do what I have failed to do." And if his eyes had not held me so powerfully, I would have looked behind me to see if another Mrs. Mayberry were not standing there. I was almost afraid that he was laughing at me - except that our Guardian was in a mood of both wrath and sadness, he was not laughing.

He said I must be firm with the Americans, but wise. Do not discourage them, he said, but be firm. AND DO NOT GO HOME AND PUBLISH YOUR NOTES!

APRIL 30, 1957

The Guardian asked me what I had done during the day. Usually, each evening, he asks what the pilgrims have done. He likes them to visit the Shrines and Gardens. But his question seemed perfunctory tonight, as though his attention was on other matter.

And indeed it was! Immediately after these brief inquiries, he lashed the American NSA for recalling pioneers. And at the table, in a voice that was as rapid and positive and lethal as machine gun fire he ordered cables sent to countermand this.

He said if necessary the American NSA should close all summer schools, especially Greenacre. "Tell them that," he said. Especially Greenacre! "Greenacre is only a social meeting place," he continued, "dances, swimming games, entertainment for the young - the young have too much entertainment!"

The American NSA spends too much money on committees. For instance, the Child's Education Committee! Wasting money on committees and recalling pioneers! And all these Area Committee reports - pages and pages of nothing!

And spending money on the American Bahá'í News. This has no new, nothing but deaths and marriages. No new. And when news comes in from abroad, it does not know how to report the news it has.

Wasting money on all those bulletins - and of all those, the San Francisco Bulletin is the worst! And then to recall pioneers!! They (the American NSA) must be ordered not to do this. And if the American NSA persists, the Guardian will fix their budget himself, and start by cutting off the summer schools. "Would this not be a shameful thing, that the Guardian would have to arrange and adjust the budget of such a body as the American NSA?"

Shoghi Effendi referred scathingly to the $40,000 spent on the public relations agency to publicize the Iranian difficulty. He referred to it as wasting $40,000.

The Guardian made an oblique remark, which he did not clarify and which I did not understand, about “old ladies in their dotage” holding back the action and aggressiveness of American important bodies. What case he referred to, I do not know, but the International Council seemed to understand.

Then the Guardian angrily drew forth a copy of the report received from the Benelux NSA, in which the American NSA representative, Mr. Borah Kavelin, was mentioned before Dr. Hermann Grossmann, the Hand of the Cause who was present. A stiff letter of inquiry was dictated to Leroy Ioas to be sent to Mr. Kavelin to ascertain if he had anything to do with this.

Once more the Guardian spoke on the transcendent station of the Hands, forcibly underscoring all he had previously said. In any meeting, the Hands (unless the Guardian should be present) outrank all others. In any list, they must be placed first. To the Hands come the first attention and honors. He spoke of the impudence in placing the Hand of the Cause beneath an NSA member.

He then read a cable from the new NSA of the Pacific, formed in Japan. Although Miss Agnes Alexander was not chairman, nor elected as any officer, her name was listed first. “This is the correct way,” said Shoghi Effendi. “Miss Alexander is a Hand of the Cause, and her name leads all the rest. She is not an officer, but her name leads.”

PILGRIM NOTES

When the cable was received from the Convention of the Bahá’ís of the United States, in reply to the Guardian’s Convention Message, Shoghi Effendi read it to us at the table, comparing it most unfavorably with the message from the British Convention. “Words, words, nothing but words!” he said vehemently. “No action, nothing but words.” He then pointed out how different was the British message. The latter referred to the fact that at last British Bahá’ís had met their budget through contributions made at the Convention. He spoke of the great lack of material means of the British friends, and of the consequent great sacrifice these contributions implied. Also the message from the British delineated further definite action they intended to take to fulfill the World Crusade goals. “Here is action,” he praised. “They speak in terms of performance.” He then commented, in bitter disappointment, that once the Americans had contributed sums at Conventions -once they had volunteered to pioneer at Conventions - but now they did nothing but play with words.

Shoghi Effendi told me that I must tell Bahá’ís that 1800 new centers have been established in the world in the past four years. Of these, 1000 were established in the past two years. Of these, according to reports then received at the World Center, America had produced only one. But I must say this from myself, not from the Guardian. It is too strong when said by the Guardian. And in addition, I must point out to the American Bahá'ís the small number of Assemblies gained.

I asked Shoghi Effendi if it were not true that the Home Front of America was now emphasized, above foreign goals. He said this was true, but that foreign goals were very important. I then asked him to which place should I advise a Bahá'í to go if the Bahá'í offered to pioneer anywhere - the home front or France? (This was in 1957, prior to the establishment of the NSA of France in 1958). He answered that the home front should be emphasized, "but never discourage anyone who will go to France!"

Shoghi Effendi commented on the tendency of American Committees to discourage pioneers. He said that instead of urging pioneers to go forth, for various reasons they interfered with the departure of pioneers, and also for inadequate reasons. "Tell the Bahá'í not even to inform their NSA," he said. "They cannot be prevented from going to another country. But of course in these cases, they must be self-sustaining."

He emphasized the warning which was in his cable to the American Convention - a cable sent before he had received the news from the American NSA about recalling pioneers. The Guardian's cable said that upon the sending out of pioneers depends the prosperity, security and destiny of the United States. "Can they not read between the lines?" he cried. "Will they fail to recognize the reality of the warning?"

Shoghi Effendi spoke of Bill Carr of Greenland sending literature, including Bahá'u'lláh and the New Era, to the floating island (Fletcher's Island) at 84 degrees in the north, six degrees south of the North Pole. He was very happy with Bill Carr.

At the end of the evening with Shoghi Effendi, I asked him what I could do for my poor and beloved country, I was part of it and its sins, and I wanted to help it. He said, "Leave it! Don't waste your time on them. Go to France."

But Rúhíyyih Khánum suggested this would be very difficult because I did not speak French. She said that the French people liked to be taught in their own language. Shoghi Effendi said, "Then go to Luxembourg. It will be most meritorious to go to Luxembourg, it is the most difficult place in Europe to establish the Faith. It is 85% Catholic."

I did not know until later that three languages instead of one are spoken in that country -which meant that I would have to learn French, German and Luxembourgese, instead of just French if I went to France. Such difficulties no meaning to Shoghi Effendi. He exchanges one difficulty of three!

Germany - Compromise with principle - "Perhaps this is why the Faith is not growing in Germany." S.E.

PILGRIM NOTES

After the first greeting given to all at his table, Shoghi Effendi turned to me and surveyed me sharply. "Well, were you unable to sleep last night, Mrs. Mayberry?" he demanded.

I was startled, and blurted, "Yes, Shoghi Effendi." he looked at me, with what seemed to me a quizzical glance. I wondered fleetingly if he thought me stolid, phlegmatic. But then I realized that he not doubt sensed what I was better than I know myself. As a matter of fact, once I went to sleep, I slept soundly. I compelled myself to do this much as two nights earlier I had compelled myself to eat. On that night, hearing the Guardian speak so powerfully, my appetite abruptly left me. But with equal abruptness, this thought came to me, "If you do not eat, you will become ill and then you may not be able to come to dinner and hear the Guardian speak in this powerful way which is causing you to lose your appetite." Immediately I began to eat, and asked for a second helping.

It was at this time that I suddenly felt about myself - a self-picture, so to speak - as I never had before in my life. I felt through and through as though I were a rough clumping man of war - tough, strong, not sensitive, meant for slogging along in the front line of battle - armed with a broad sword or a battle axe, not a rapier. Just sense enough to take an order, and obey it. I prayed God this was true.

Shoghi Effendi began the dinner talk by telling me what in turn to tell the American Bahá'ís. He said that I must not quote the Guardian, but use as my own statements comparisons between America's activity and the activity of other nations. I must compare the fewness of centers, the American lethargy with other areas. he told me not to discourage the friends, but to use power when I have to, when I think they can stand it.

I said to him that these statements coming from me would have little effect, because I am merely one small Bahá'í. But the statements coming from the Guardian wield great effect. So I said that I wanted to know exactly how far I could go, for I didn't want to disobey him, but sometimes I wanted to use that power. "Shoghi Effendi," I said, "may I never say that you said any of these things?"

Shoghi Effendi hesitated. And then said I would have to judge the audience. If I thought I had a strong one, I could be very forceful, I could tell them. But if I thought there was anyone in the audience with heart trouble, then I had better be careful.

"May I tell these things to the Hands of the Cause?" I asked.

"Tell everything to the Hands," he instructed. "You tell the Hands, and let me take care of the administration."

“In writing or by word of mouth?” I asked.

“Do not write it to them,” he said emphatically.

“Be very firm with America,” he said. He told me to emphasize that America’s prosperity, security and destiny depends upon sending pioneers into the field.

Rúhíyyih Khánúm had asked me to tell Shoghi Effendi that my sister-in-law was a Basque Bahá’í. For Rúhíyyih Khánúm believed that my sister-in-law was the only Basque Bahá’í currently in the world. So I did, and the guardian brightened. he asked me to tell Mariejeanne that it would be meritorious for her to go to the South of France to work with the Basques. And he said that the committee for minority peoples must have a sub-committee to work with the Basques.

A comparison was introduced between the Alaskan and American Bahá’ís. Shoghi Effendi quoted the cablegram from Paul Haney, describing the Alaskan Convention and the spiritual fire there. Rúhíyyih Khánúm brought out the point that the Alaskan Bahá’ís are also Americans, and asked why it was that they had the great virtues required to brilliantly establish the Faith, but the American Bahá’ís on the mainland were not evidencing these. When there was no immediate answer, I preferred this explanation: that Americans are by nature pioneers; they thrive on difficulties, upon hardships; hard living and problems whet their character and brings out their strength; but city life, soft living, materialism causes them to go to seed. I suggested that Americans still had the capacity and strength to succeed in fulfilling the Guardians’s fondest desires, if they could regain their pioneering element. This interested the Guardian.

Early in the evening, when Shoghi Effendi began to tell me what to in turn tell the Americans, I said, “But Shoghi Effendi, you told me to go to Luxembourg last night. I intended to go to Luxembourg.”

He said then, “I have changed my mind. I am going to give America one more chance. You must tell them these things, and see if they respond. If they do not respond, get out. Go to Luxembourg. But if they do respond, stay with them.”

He called for the World Book, Volume XII, to discuss and examine the various maps within it. Also he called for the Scroll of the Knights of Bahá’u’lláh, and spread it out the length of the table. He pointed out a few empty spaces on the Scroll, and asked me to tell the friends that a few could still win the honor of having their names inscribed on the roll before it is placed in the Shrine of Bahá’u’lláh for all time. And this is a great honor. Earlier in the week, however, he had mentioned Marion Jack in conjunction with the Knights of Bahá’u’lláh, and said, “They are Knights of Bahá’u’lláh -but Marion Jack is the General! She was different than many of the pioneers now. She would not leave her post even when I asked her to do so for her own safety.”

At the end of the evening, Shoghi Effendi arose and handed me a vial of attar of roses. As he says to all pilgrims, he said, “I will never forget you.” He added,

“And I will pray for America.” In a weak voice, I said, “Pray for me, Shoghi Effendi.” I didn’t hear him answer.

Then he said, “I thank you for all your work. And I pray that you go on to greater victories in other continents.”

September 30, 1969

Hand of the Cause Mr. A. Furútan,

Haifa, Israel

Beloved Mr. Furútan:

You asked me to add to my pilgrim notes the part regarding Charles Mason Remey. When I originally set down these notes, I did not put in that part because at the time Mr. Remey was an honored Hand of the Cause and I thought it might reflect upon his dignity. And the significance did not strike me so forcibly until he became a Covenant breaker. The moment I heard he had claimed to be second Guardian, the scene flashed back in my mind.

It occurred on one of the nights when the beloved Guardian was speaking so forcibly about the station and duties of the Hands of the Cause. He spoke on their most important role as protectors of the Faith. He spoke of enemies who would arise both within and without the Faith, and said the Hands of the Cause must be ever watchful. As my original notes state, the Guardian said one does not have to associate with Covenant breakers to catch the disease, one has only to be near it, this is why the Faith does not grow in New York - not only the New History group, but other groups, they are spreading over the country and tainting the country.

Then Shoghi Effendi turned to me, fixed me with his luminous and piercing gaze and asked in a powerful voice, which seemed to impale one, “WHAT ARE THE HANDS DOING TO PROTECT THE CAUSE! This is their chief function. ARE THEY PROTECTING THE CAUSE!”

At this time I was the sole pilgrim present at the Guardian’s table. Others there were Amatu’l-Bahá Rúhíyyih Khánúm, Mrs. Amelia Collins, Mr. Leroy Ioas, Mrs. Sylvia Ioas, Jessie Revell. And serving the Guardian was Fujita. Charles Mason Remey, the Hand of the Cause, was sitting opposite the Guardian. As the lone pilgrim present, I sat at the head of the table, the Guardian at my right, Remey at my left.

The Guardian looked across the table at Remey. Remey was seated steadily, his eyes fixed on his plate, his face smooth and unmoved. The ringing, wrathful voice of the Guardian cried, “MASON, ARE YOU LISTENING? DID YOU HEAR ME?”

The old man raised his head, startled, like an upbraided child. He nodded his head and said, “Yes sir, yes sir!” At the time, having such respect for him as a Hand of the Cause, it was a poignant experience. For the old man was like a school boy before his school master, who was so much younger a man. And I heard that often Remey, who was very deaf, turned off his hearing aid because it bothered him. I had a twinge of compassion for him, excusing him. Then, like a tape recording running through my mind, went the phrase: "The Guardian is the scion of the House of God. Whatever he says is right, right, the old man is a boy before his master."

I am sending a copy of this addition to Amatu'l-Bahá R. ? yyih Khánúm, who possesses one of the only two copies I have ever given to anyone. The other copy I sent with Hand of the Cause Mr. Khadem to one of the last general sessions of the hands in the Holy Land, so that all the Hands might have opportunity to read them. The Guardian had said, "I hope you do not go home and publish your notes." Therefore, these are the only two copies I ever gave. I am also sending a copy of this addition to Mr. Khadem.

Deepest love,

Florence V. Mayberry

Dinner Talks of Shoghi Effendi

Isobel Sabri

19-28 April 1957

Present with the beloved Guardian at the dinner table each evening during my pilgrimage were: ‘Amatu’l-Bahá Rúhíyyih Khánum, Hands of the Cause of God Mrs. Amelia Collins and Leroy Ioas, Mrs. Sylvia Ioas, Misses Ethel and Jessie Revell. Hand of the Cause Charles Mason Remey arrived on 28th April. All of the above-named believers are members of the International Bahá’í Council appointed by the Guardian and are resident in Haifa where they are directly assisting the Guardian in his work.

All present at the dinner table were the following pilgrims, all of whom are Americans: Mrs. Alice Dudley (19th through 23rd April), Mrs. Florence Mayberry (23rd through 26th April), and Miss Sally Sanor (19th through 24th April).

Although some of the notes recorded below appear to be in direct speech, it would be wrong to consider them as quotations of exactly what the beloved Guardian said. They are rather notes of what the writer afterwards remembered the Guardian to have said. Explanations of the context in which his remarks were made are given in parenthesis, as are explanations of his seeming intention or mood in making various statements.

19th April.

(The Guardian's opening words were addressed to this servant — as the most recently arrived pilgrim.)

How are the friends in Africa? How is your husband? He is very active in the service of the Cause, isn't he. How was your flight? Did you fly directly to Lydda?

(Rúhíyyih Khánúm mentioned to the Guardian that the night before my departure I had been reading the message of the Guardian to the National Convention, received that day.) Are you pleased with the progress of the Faith all over the world? (Then, with eagerness and remarkably keen memory, the Guardian repeated numerous items of information and statistics of the Faith throughout the world which are contained in that long, detailed and historic message.)

Each of the 13 new National Spiritual Assemblies to be formed will have a six year plan as the three new National Assemblies in Africa had seven year plans (assigned to them at the time of their formation in 1956). Each National Assembly will have its own objectives. In South America each of the 20 Republics will have its own temple land. Also temple land will be bought in London on the Thames, in France outside Paris on the River Seine and in Switzerland outside Berne. By the end of the Ten Year Crusade it is my intention that land will have been bought for 50 temples — instead of for only 12, as originally planned.

Have the excavations of the Kampala Temple begun? Yes, the National Spiritual Assembly cabled me that they have. (The National Spiritual Assembly of Central and East Africa had asked me to convey to the Guardian a photograph of the commencement of temple excavations, as he had earlier asked that the work be started by Rídván 1957. I had sent the photograph to the Guardian earlier in the day. At the dinner table he enquired about it.) Does the photograph show the excavations for the temple or the cutting of the access road? It looks like the road. In Australia they hope to begin their temple this Rídván.

The teaching work in Africa must not suffer with the formation of the National Spiritual Assemblies and the building of the temple. These other activities must not cause the teaching work to suffer.

How many centers are there in Uganda? (Rúhíyyih Khánúm replied by giving the current Uganda statistics.) One hundred ninety? That is good. (The Guardian compared Uganda and the Mentawai Islands of Indonesia — and, with a decided twinkle in his eye, thus sought to stimulate competition between two areas.) Uganda was opened six years ago, Mentawai four years ago. Uganda has 1,200 believers, Mentawai 1,100. Mentawai has two schools, Uganda none! The Faith is going ahead very rapidly in the South Pacific.

(I asked when the “Regional National Assemblies would be de-regionalized.) The teaching work is going forward well. The numbers are enough. The Assemblies are enough. But the African believers must gain experience, must learn how to administer the Faith. They must gain experience in administration; they must be trained in administration.

In the formative Age the spirit of the Faith, born in the Heroic Age, must incarnate itself in the institutions of the Faith. The building of the Administrative Order, the establishment of the World Order and the flourishing of the World Civilization is a three-fold successive process. “Civilization” means the working of the spirit of the Faith through human institutions — also the development of new architecture, the arts, the sciences, and letters. The World Order of Bahá’u’lláh must absorb the outer world.

(A question was asked concerning the future of the Faith in Africa.) Yes, certainly, the destiny of the black and brown races is very great. The brown, black and yellow races constitute the majority of the people of the world. One day perhaps the majority of the believers will be from the brown, black and yellow races. And the white race will be in the minority in the Faith. This is right.

The Master said that the destiny of the American Indians is great. He told the American believers to concentrate on them, but the American believers have not done enough. ‘Abdu’l-Bahá compared the original Americans, the Indians, with the original inhabitants of Arabia. He said that the Arabs were murderers. They killed their own girl children. The urine of cattle was their perfume. But they became saints and heroes.

(A question was asked about music in the Temples.) No tape-recordings are to be used, or musical instruments. There is to be only the sound of human voice — not the sound of a machine.

(Rúhíyyih Khánúm asked why the believers could not build modest houses of worship — why did they need such elaborate ones. I took this question to be a reference to the fact that the National Spiritual Assembly of Uganda had proposed the introduction of a wall and doors into the original, simple designed conceived by the Guardian — which had no wall below the drum of the building and no doors. The Guardian’s reply was a general one.) Even modest Temples require money.

(Towards the close of the evening the Guardian asked me.) Did you meet Mr. and Mrs. Yazdí in Nairobi? They are very energetic and successful. Did you meet Mr. and Mrs. Alizadeh — the English lady and her Persian husband there?

20th and 21st April.

(On the afternoon of the 20th the pilgrims were taken to the House of Mazra’ih and then to stay in the Mansion of Bahjí, from where we visited the Holy Places in the City of ‘Akká and its vicinity until the afternoon of the 22nd, when we returned to Haifa. On the 21st we were blessed to be included amongst all those resident in the Holy Land at the celebration of the first day of Ridván at Bahjí and in the Most Holy Shrine. The beloved Guardian was present in the Shrine and chanted in his wonderfully soft, melodious voice.)

22nd April.

(This was a most memorable evening with the Guardian when he spoke at length and with fervor on several important subjects. Because of the swift effort which was needed afterwards to recall and record as much as possible of what the Guardian had said, it was not possible to be certain of the correct order in which the subjects discussed were mentioned nor the exact nature of the transition from point to point. No great importance should, therefore, be attached to the sequence of the paragraphs throughout these notes.)

Europe is not the seat of the Christian civilization — not by any means. It is the seat of material civilization. And America is the stronghold of material civilization — the center of gravity of material civilization. (The Guardian was here speaking in the strongest terms against the excesses of materialism.) Bahá'u'lláh established His Faith in Persia — the most decadent nation on earth. The Persians were more barbarous than the savages of Africa. The World Order of Bahá'u'lláh will be established and has been started in America because it is now the most corrupt politically. The American nation is not altruistic in what it does. The American government lends money to other nations only to protect itself. Other nations know this and resent it, but they take the money. America is trying to buy friends. They won't succeed. It is too late to change the course of the world. The people of the world are impure. The world needs a blood-letting. The retributive calamity which is to come will be like a giant blood-letting through which the non-Bahá'ís of the world will be purified. The Bahá'ís are also impure and they will be purified through the opposition which will come to the Faith everywhere in the world. There are two processes of purification which must take place: purification of the outer non-Bahá'í world through the retributive calamity, the purification of the Bahá'í world through the world-wide opposition to the Faith.

It is quite possible that the two-thirds of the earth's population spoke of in the Bible will be annihilated. This is quite possible. The world is over-populated, and the blood of the people is impure. The retributive calamity will correct over-population problem this time. When the world is re-made, the advance of techniques and science will solve the problem of over-population in the Golden Age. Now, so much money is being used for armaments that there is no money with which to solve the population problem.

I have appealed directly in my messages for many years for the American Bahá'ís to arise and pioneer and fill the needs of the Faith. But they did not respond. But why should they respond to my letters when they did not respond to the Master when he went there in person?! I shall never appeal to the American believers to pioneer again.

‘Abdu’l-Bahá went to America to warn the nation and appeal to the believers. The Master was very sad at the lack of response of the American nation and the American Bahá’ís. This is why he was so sad when he died. If you want to know the truth, history will record that the Master’s mission to America was a failure because of the lack of response of the nation and the believers. (The beloved Guardian was here speaking with considerable emotion; and when he made this last statement about the failure of the Master’s mission to America, he clenched his fist, brought it down soundlessly onto the table and turned side-wise from the table in his chair. The impact of his grief in rendering this verdict was truly heart-wrenching.)

A retributive calamity which will be worse than war will come. It will appear suddenly — not by degrees. It will take place in the twinkling of an eye. You will go to bed one night; and when you wake up in the morning, it will be all over. You will know when it is coming. You will read about it in the newspapers and hear about it on the radio. You will recognize the signs of its coming. Read the newspaper editorial pages. The interpretation of the news is what is important.

The northern hemisphere will suffer most. There will be large areas of the earth that become uninhabitable — unarable. The southern continents will become more important in the future.

North America will be the worst affected — especially the United States. The Bahá’ís should not think that they have any special protection simply because they are Bahá’ís. Their only protection is in their dedication to the Faith. The homes of the American Bahá’ís will evaporate over-night. They will become refugees to other continents.

(Turning specifically to me, he continued) Kampala will be safe — so long as they don’t build American air bases in Kenya. The foothills of the Himalayas Mountains will also be safe.

You have trouble getting enough pioneers for Africa, but at that time the believers will come to Africa happily. They will come as refugees — nothing in their hands. And they will be only too happy to come. You will have more help than you ever dreamed possible.

Russia will also suffer. When the Russians gain military equality with America, America will be trapped. Both the Russian system and the American system are wrong. Both are materialistic. Both are to be condemned by the Bahá’ís. The Russians have a system of control by the proletariat. America has a system of control by the capitalists. Both are wrong.

America’s motives are not pure — because they do not want to coalesce with other nations — far from it. America must be purified by tribulations. Read the talks of ‘Abdu’l-Bahá in America. Read between the lines. He gently, tactfully warned them. But they did not heed his words.

In connection with the race problem in America, the Master said that the streets of New York would run with blood. (At this point the Guardian asked the American pilgrims present at the dinner table if there had been any inter-racial marriages in the American Bahá'í community, but before a reply could be given he continued speaking.) Even when there are such marriages, if you looked at them couple by couple and examined their individual motives in marrying, you would probably find impure motives, (Rúhíyyih Khánúm interjected at this point by remarking: "But, Shoghi Effendi, people in America only marry for love!") Yes, they idolize love; they only think of love. They idolize their wives; they idolize their money; they idolize their friends; they idolize their homes; they idolize their possessions. They have no principles — just possessions.

There are three types of marriage being practiced in the world today. None of them conforms to the Bahá'í principles of marriage. The first is the so-called "romantic" marriage of the west. This is the least successful type of marriage. The second is the marriage of convenience practiced in Europe — in which the marriage is intended to benefit the social or financial position of the partners and there is usually a mistress in the background. The third is the arranged marriage of the east — of which there are several kinds. In the Bahá'í marriage the two people must choose each other, and the four parents must give their consent to the marriage. The two people study each other's character before deciding to marry — to make sure that there are no character traits in the other person which would in time become intolerable and become the cause of separation.

period of transition when the believers will be almost spectators instead of participants. Look at them even now. How many items of American news are in my Convention message — as compared to Africa and the Orient? Their news bulletin contains only programs, agendas, marriages, death, etc. And they do not even know how to present the news of the victories of the Faith in other areas. The American "Bahá'í News" has become an international organ of news. But the Committee does not seem to know how to report the victories all over the world.

The black and the brown races will lead the world. They will rise up — through materialism, education and other means. The white race will go down — through the retributive calamity. An equipoise will be established among the nations, and then they will go forward into the World Commonwealth of the future on the basis of equality. The black race of Africa has been protected by God through their geographical isolation from the rest of the world. The African people will play a very important role in the World Commonwealth of the future.

The American people are too fond of their central heaters, their comforts. They are not willing to sacrifice. Victories come only through self-abnegation and sacrifice. The American believers should not only leave their homes and go pioneering; they should go as far away as possible — to the other ends of the earth. Otherwise they will go as refugees — bankrupt both materially and spiritually. The Bahá'ís should be willing to lower their standard of living in order to teach and serve the Faith. The Americans already have far too high a standard of living.

There is a great distinction between pioneering and dispersal. In the past I appealed to the American Bahá'ís to pioneer — to arise and sacrifice for the sake of the Faith and to meet the needs of the Faith. But when I saw that they did not respond to my appeals and saw in what danger they were, as a loving father I advised them to save themselves. I urged them to disperse to the farthest corners of the earth — and to take with them all those things which they love more than the Faith: their money, their cars, their refrigerators — their wives! (His eyes lit up with amusement and triumph as he added “wives!”) But this is dispersal, and it is very different from pioneering which is done with sacrifice and for the love of the Faith.

(As soon as the Guardian had left the dinner table that night Rúhíyyih Khánum told us that she had never before heard the Guardian speak so strongly and feeling to the pilgrims as he had that evening on the above subjects.)

(Towards the close of the evening discussions the Guardian would sometimes be asked questions by the pilgrims. On this occasion, I explained to the Guardian that a thought has arisen that the African believers could build local Bahá'í centers in the villages, constructed of temporary materials, but that it was not clear to us whether we were permitted to go outside and beyond the goals of the Plan.) There is nothing to prevent you from going beyond the Plan. By all means, go ahead and build local Ḥazíratu'l-Quds if you can. The African believers must not be pressed to build such centers but encouraged. The most important thing is that there should be at least one Ḥazíratu'l-Quds in every country or territory, as in the Plan.

Plans are like blue-prints, skeletons onto which flesh is to be put. Supplementary achievements of all kinds are very desirable and certainly to be encouraged. But of course the specific goals of the Plan must also be won.

(One of the pilgrims, Alice Dudley, an American pioneer to France, was soon to leave Haifa. The Guardian spoke of the work of the Faith in France, which was soon to have its own National Spiritual Assembly.) There is need of extension teaching in France. There are five Local Spiritual Assemblies now. Only those five can participate in the election of the National Spiritual Assembly next Ridván. The believers in Paris should go north to teach; from Orleans they go west and north; from Chateaux, south to Lyon.

Mrs. Dudley should go behind the “iron curtain” to teach — later, after the National Spiritual Assembly of France has been formed. There are six provinces that do not have believers in them: the three Baltic states (Estonia, Latvia and Lithuania), also the Ukraine, Moldavia and White Russia. It would be highly meritorious to open these areas to the Faith.

(The Guardian said that he had been receiving cablegrams all day containing news of the formation of Assemblies in Salzburg, Innsbruck, Milano and Hiroshima. Over 1,000 local Assemblies were elected on the first day of Ridván.

(To me, he said) When the National Spiritual Assembly of Central and East Africa cabled me the progress of the administrative activities, I answered them with an appeal for teaching!

(When asked by Mrs. Dudley if the French Community could go ahead and acquire their temple site even before their new Plan begins, the Guardian replied.) I would not mind if the temple land were bought before the Plan begins — I would think of something more spectacular for you to do!

(The Guardian asked me if I had seen the photograph of the first African Bahá'ís which he had placed on the wall in a room in the Mansion of Bahjí.) Mr. Max Kanierezy is in it, isn't he? Where is Mr. Kanierezy? He is in Uganda, isn't he? He is on the new National Spiritual Assembly. (I had seen the picture to which the Guardian referred. In it are Mr. Enoch Olinga, Mr. Fred Bigabwe and Mr. Crispian Kajubi — three of the first believers in Uganda. It does not, however, include Mr. Kanierezy.)

(As he was leaving the dining room, the Guardian wished us all a very happy Feast of Ridván.)

23rd April.

(When Amatu'l-Bahá Rúhíyyih Khánum arrived at the Western Pilgrim House for dinner, she told the pilgrims that the Guardian, during his meeting with the Persian women pilgrims just ended, had been asked if the hydrogen bomb would be used. He had replied, "Yes." Rúhíyyih Khánum said that that question had not been asked of the Guardian before; and as it was an important question, she thought we would be interested in the Guardian's reply.

Rúhíyyih Khánum later told me that the Guardian, commenting on a quotation from Winston Churchill which had had read in the Manchester "Guardian", a British newspaper, had said that Churchill's warning concerning the contamination of the atmosphere which would result from a nuclear war was the closest forecast he had read by a world statesman of what would be the most serious result of nuclear war.)

(Mrs. Florence Mayberry had arrived as a pilgrim, and the Guardian asked her about the receptivity of the people of America to the Faith.) We should not be surprised if the American people are not receptive, as America is the stronghold of materialism. Europe is the cradle of materialism.

The time has come for the destruction of the world — for the destruction of the systems of the world: political, economic, social and religious. The economy of the world will collapse. The dollar will become totally valueless. The world-wide retributive calamity will burn, purify and weld the people of the world. This is the function of fire — to burn, purify and weld.

The Lesser Peace will come in the Formative Age, in this century. The unified outer world must be merged with the Bahá'í World Order. This will begin the spiritualization of the world. The world must be spiritualized. The Golden Age will appear towards the end of the Dispensation of Bahá'u'lláh. Then the World Civilization will be born and will extend over a period of 500,000 years. The Golden Age of Bahá'u'lláh is only the birth of the World Civilization. After the World Order has been established, the Golden Age will come, and the World Civilization will be born.

(The Guardian was asked a question concerning whether or not the next Manifestation of God would be opposed by the people of the world, as had Bahá'u'lláh and all former Messengers of God.) In the future, when the next Manifestation appears, the Guardian of the Cause at that time will tell the believers who the Manifestation is and will call on them to accept Him. What is the use of the infallibility of the Guardian if he does not do this? This is one of the very important things that he will do. Opposition to the next Manifestation will thus be much less than in former times — that is to say, the area of opposition will be reduced. “This is the day that shall not be followed by night” means that divine guidance will not again be withdrawn from the world. This civilization which we are beginning to build now will not decline. Other Manifestations will change the institutions and the laws, but there will be no decline. The earth will be the footstool of the throne of God. The throne is in heaven and the footstool on earth.

(Mrs. Mayberry is an Auxiliary Board member, and the Guardian spoke to her on the subject of the Hands of the Cause and the Auxiliary Boards.) The function of the Auxiliary Board members is to remind the friends of their Bahá'í duties and responsibilities. The Auxiliary Board members should be in continual close touch with the Hands of the Cause. They should meet together with the Hands several times a year — once is not enough. (In response to a question about the distances and difficulties of travel in Africa, the Guardian said that this frequency of meeting with the Hands of the Cause should be “if feasible”.)

The Bahá'ís must teach the Faith through their conduct — rectitude of conduct. The African people will look to the pioneers to be more kind, more just. You must administer the Faith with justice.

You should not fear the church. You should defend the Faith before the missionaries. The sooner the opposition comes the better it is. But you should do nothing to provoke opposition or cause it to come earlier than it should. The African believers should defend the Faith against the missionaries — after consultation with the National Spiritual Assembly. (The Guardian was notably enthusiastic about opposition.) We must be careful with government — and reckless with missionaries! We must be very careful with the Government in South Africa. (In using the word “reckless” with the missionaries, the Guardian seemed to be expressing his zest for believers' defense of the Faith before the missionaries. He clearly was not implying that the believers should be careless, foolish or rash in their contact with missionaries.)

There are seven stages through which the Faith will pass in all countries in the course of its establishment and emergence: obscurity, repression, emancipation, recognition as an independent religion, establishment as the state religion, the emergence of a Bahá'í state and finally the coming into being of the Bahá'í World Commonwealth. In the various countries these stages may be either long or short, and in some places one or the other stage may be missed altogether.

(Again, as on the previous evening, the Guardian spoke to Mrs. Alice Dudley about France.) More American pioneers are needed in France — pioneers who will settle and stay there whatever happens. We need French Olingas! The pioneers to France and the French pioneers should follow the example of the African pioneers in settling and teaching.

(The Guardian again told Mrs. Alice Dudley to go to the Balkans — later, when it would be possible for her to leave France for a time.) There are the most important places behind the Iron Curtain, as they were once independent states and soon will be so again.

24th April.

(Once again, as on the previous evening, the Guardian spoke of the functions of the Hands of the Cause and the Auxiliary Boards.) The function of the Auxiliary Boards is to encourage the friends, to remind them of their duties and responsibilities, especially their responsibility to pioneer. The National Spiritual Assemblies should report the conditions and needs of the Faith to the Hands of the Cause, and the Hands should inform the Auxiliary Board members of these conditions and needs. The Auxiliary Board members should do what they can to meet these needs — especially the need for pioneers.

The Hands of the Cause should travel as much as possible. When they do not have administrative duties, they should travel as much as possible. This is their responsibility — to travel and encourage the friends. The Hands of the Cause on each continent must work and consult together as a body, and the Auxiliary Board members on each continent are responsible to this body of the Hands of the Cause on their continent.

There is a hierarchy in the Faith. You must not be afraid to teach the people that we have a hierarchy. In the west they do not like hierarchies, but they must understand that the Faith has a definite hierarchy. The Bahá'í hierarchy is composed as follows. At the top is the function of interpretation — the Guardianship; next comes protection — eventually the function of the Hands of the Cause; then comes propagation — now in the hands of the Assemblies, but in the future the responsibility of the Hands of the Cause; and finally administration — the Assemblies. The primary function of the Guardian is interpretation, of the Hands protection and propagation, of the Assemblies government.

The believers should not be afraid to teach about the Bahá'í hierarchy. The Bahá'í hierarchy should be compared with the hierarchy of the Catholic Church — the Pope, the Cardinals, the Archbishops, the Bishops, etc. In the Catholic Church individuals do the administering and groups do the teaching. It is the opposite in the Faith. Individuals are responsible for the teaching work — the Hands of the Cause; and the groups are responsible for the administration — the Assemblies.

Later the Hands of the Cause will have all the teaching work in their charge. The Auxiliary Boards are only the beginning. Later the Hands of the Cause will have their own hierarchy — with the Auxiliary Boards and each Auxiliary Board member having his own Committees to help him. Later the Assemblies are to be concerned only with government, and all the teaching work will be the responsibility of the Hands of the Cause.

I noticed in the Annual Report of the American National Assembly that a report of the Hands of the Cause is printed just ahead of the National Committee reports. This is all wrong. The Hands of the Cause are not on the same level as the National Committees. The friends do not understand. The Hands of the Cause rank far above the National Assemblies. The Hands do not report to the National Assemblies. On the contrary, the National Assemblies report to the Hands. The Hands of the Cause are to be venerated. In America today they do not know the meaning of the word veneration. Look how they treat their parents — especially the youth of America. They must learn to venerate their parents. They must venerate the Hands of the Cause.

In England and Germany and, to a degree, in France the believers are disciplined, but it is not so in America and Africa. The friends must be reminded of their duties. They are holy duties. The African friends particularly must learn to accept their responsibilities. They must teach and take part in the Bahá'í administration.

Concerning drinking, the Bahá'ís must learn to obey the Bahá'í law. They must be told and they must know that eventually they will have to obey the laws. You must tell them the laws; then remind them that they must obey; then warn them; and then warn them again. They must come to know that eventually they will have to obey the laws.

The believers in America should pioneer. The flow of pioneers has almost stopped. This is a great detriment to the Faith. America is a large reservoir which must not dry up. The pioneers should copy the example of Marion Jack — “General” Jack. She was dedicated and consecrated. She did not leave her post — despite the fact that I advised her to go.

(The Guardian was asked by Mrs. Mayberry to speak about child education.) You should look at what the non-Bahá'ís do and do the opposite! That is the general principle. It is good to have Bahá'í children's classes, but the machinery is not as important as to know the principles involved. The machinery is a means to an end, and you should know what the end should be.

The parents, especially the mothers who are with the children more than the fathers, are responsible for the Bahá'í education of their children. The parents must be strict in all matters. The mothers must exercise their influence when the child is young — not wait until it is too late. The parents must teach the children the difference between right and wrong, between good and bad! They must insist that the children do what is right and good. If the mothers neglect their duties, the children, when they come to the age of decision-making, will make the wrong decisions. All that parents think about today is ensuring the child's future financial success, security and position in the world — but not their spiritual character. The principle purpose of Bahá'í children's classes is the training of the children to have a spiritual character.

(The Guardian spoke in a light-hearted manner about Persian food.) Persian food is the richest food — it is poison, delicious poison. All the Persians have liver trouble. Now they are learning to give up animal fats. They are even taking vitamin pills. Do you find the Americans are more energetic from vitamin pills — or more excitable?!

(The Guardian told us of news received of 21 Local Spiritual Assemblies newly formed in East Africa — 9 in Kenya and 12 in Uganda.)

25th April.

(In the morning Rúhíyyih Khánúm had told me that the Guardian had said I was to have an extra day of pilgrimage in gratitude for certain help which I had given to her and because I had had malaria on the first day. That evening the Guardian confirmed this joy-producing information and told me that I would be spending the extra day at Bahjí.

On this particular evening, the Guardian included in his discussion many useful points about Africa. He also spoke again in detail about the international victories and statistics of the Faith.)

Regarding the need of pioneers in the Central and East Africa Region, the African friends will eventually be able to solve the problem of the pioneer needs in the territories other than Uganda. There are avenues open to them for teaching which are not open to the non-African pioneers. The National Spiritual Assembly must consult and solve this problem. (I asked if any pioneers could come to some of our Central and East African countries from other parts of Africa.) It is questionable whether pioneers can be spared from other parts of Africa for Uganda. There are all too few pioneers in Africa now. (Rúhíyyih Khánúm asked which pioneers in Africa we had in mind, and I replied that there were concentrations of Persian believers in some of the coastal areas.) The Persian believers like the coast because it is better for trade. (The Guardian smiled.)

The progress of the Faith in Africa is due to the lack of prejudice of the Persian believers. If you could get the African friends to open their hearts you would find that they have a great love for the Persian pioneers. The British are not as prejudiced as the Americans. The American believers in Africa have had much to learn about teaching in Africa from the Persians. It is very important that association with the African people should be informal, spontaneous, friendly, consistent and continuous — but most of all informal.

It is essential that the pioneers and the African believers visit among the village communities. The National Spiritual Assembly must arrange this. The National Spiritual Assembly must ensure that the local communities receive visitors. Visitors are the life-blood of the Faith. Without the circulation of this life-blood the village communities will die.

(I asked if women pioneers could travel to the villages and whether they could travel alone or should be accompanied.) Yes, the women pioneers can and must travel — along or accompanied. (Rúhíyyih Khánum asked about the effect of this on the missionaries as it might be contrary to the customs of the people.) It does not matter that this is contrary to the customs of the people. The benefits to be gained are most important. But wisdom must, of course, be exercised.

The use of “visual aids” is very important in the teaching work in Africa. These “visual aids” include the pioneers themselves and their cars — moving through the villages; also the Bahá’í buildings, books, slide, photographs, rings, etc.

The African friends must be warned now that opposition to the Faith is coming. You must tell the African friends that the missionaries are their age-old enemies who have long made the African people their tools. They should be told to expect opposition in the form of falsehoods told to the government about the Faith by the missionaries, especially falsehoods about the pioneers so as to have them sent out of the country. They must be urged to remain steadfast.

Some of the pioneers may be made to leave their posts. They should not put their roots down too deeply so that they will not have difficulty or find it too painful when and if the time comes that they have to pull them up again. Tell John Allen not to put all his eggs in one basket. (The Guardian knew that Mr. and Mrs. Allen were friends of mine, and he spoke directly to me at this point.)

You must expect defection among the African believers when opposition comes. But you must not let this worry you. When the opposition comes, it will be like a strong wind blowing the “tree of life”. All the dead leaves will be blown away, and afterwards you will know that the leaves that remain on the tree are strong and healthy. In those days some of the believers whom you thought were strong will completely disappear and others, of whom you were hardly aware, will prove themselves to be the pillars of the Faith.

These points and warnings concerning opposition should not be put in the newsletters or in correspondence — they should not be disseminated in printed form. The traveling teachers must do this work of explaining about the opposition. This subject should be discussed at conferences, the conventions, the weekend-schools, at the gatherings of the believers. These discussions will help the friends to become conscious of Bahá’í community life. It is very important that the African believers should have a feeling that they are members of a strong world-wide community.

The American Negroes are infected with materialism. The African believers will probably have to go to the United States to teach them. But it should not have to be like that. The Bahá'ís of America must be more aggressive in teaching the Negro people of the south.

(I mentioned to the Guardian that a very fine chief, Seth Nyakahuma, had come into the Faith recently in Uganda.) Avoid the chiefs; they are politically-minded; they have impure motives. Chiefs may lead their people into the Faith, but they may lead them out of the faith again as quickly as they lead them in. This may cause great trouble. It is an eastern trait to approach higher-ups — because orientals like association with important people. Seek the pure-hearted Africans. The educated Africans are acceptable if they have no political or material ambitions. You will not find many Enoch Olingas.

(I had been requested by two of the pioneers in Kenya, Mr. and Mrs. Allen Elston, to enquire from the Guardian as to the advisability of Mr. Elston holding a job in a firm owned and run by a member of the Ismaili Community. The Guardian's reply went beyond simply answering my question.) You should avoid the Ismailis. There is no possibility of their becoming Bahá'ís. On the contrary, they are our potential enemies. You should stay away from them. They are jealous of us. You should also avoid the Indians, the Europeans and the Arabs. The Indians want money and the Europeans political supremacy. You should avoid the Arab Moslems — they are jealous of us. They are dangerous to us. You can teach the Faith to the African Moslems — because they are still pure-hearted and can respond. But the Indian Moslems and the Arab Moslems are our potential enemies and are to be avoided. Of course, Mr. Elston should be leave his job and endanger his ability to stay in Africa. But they should not try to teach the Faith to the Ismailis.

(Before the following explanation, which introduced a subject totally unrelated to the previous subjects of the evening, the beloved Guardian paused for quite some minutes in his conversation; and then without any preface to his remarks, he made the following statement.) People wonder what happened to the body of Christ after the crucifixion. It was buried by the disciples under the wall of Jerusalem to protect it from the Roman legions. It remained buried there for some 260 years. (The Guardian gave the exact number of years but afterwards none of the pilgrims could remember precisely the number.) It remained buried under the wall of Jerusalem until the mother of the Emperor Constantine, who had herself become a Christian, came to Jerusalem and had the Church of the Holy Sepulcher built — at which time the body of Christ was removed from under the wall of the city and was placed under the Church of the Holy Sepulcher. And that is where it is today. The Bahá'ís should be aware of this fact when they visit the Church of the Holy Sepulcher, which is the holiest place in Christendom.

The Bahá'ís when they come to the Holy Land should come first to Haifa and ‘Akká for their pilgrimage to the Bahá’í Holy Shrines. Then after their pilgrimage they should visit the Jewish, Christian and Moslem Holy Places in the Holy Land so that they can compare them with the Bahá’í Holy Places.

The Bahá’í pilgrimage is to the Holy Shrines and the Holy Places. (This remark was made in the context of the pilgrimage not being for the purpose of meeting the Guardian — but for the purpose of worshipping at the Holy Shrines.) In the future, the pilgrimage, which will be obligatory for the men, will be to nine Holy Places and will be performed in this order: the House of the Báb in Shíráz; the House of Bahá’u’lláh in Tíhrán; the place of the Martyrdom of the Báb in Tabriz; the House of Bahá’u’lláh in Baghdád; the House of Bahá’u’lláh in Istanbul (Constantinople); the House of Bahá’u’lláh in Edirne (Adrianople); the Shrine of the Báb in Haifa; the Most Great Prison in ‘Akká; and the Shrine of Bahá’u’lláh at Bahjí. Special visitation prayers have been revealed which will be said when approaching each of these Holy Places.

(I had been speaking to Rúhíyyih Khánum in the morning and had asked her if the Guardian had ever been asked about the permissibility of contraception. She said that he had told other pilgrims that there is nothing in the Holy Writings about it. In the evening, Rúhíyyih Khánum asked this same question of the Guardian.) There is nothing in the Holy Writings on this subject. It will be up to the Universal House of Justice to decide about it.

26th April.

I have been receiving and answering cablegrams all day. (The Guardian appeared to be very tired. The cablegrams he referred to were those sent to him from the various National Conventions throughout the world.)

There are now 252 countries opened to the Faith. Chagos Archipelago has been opened by a believer from Mauritius Island. The Faith in the capital of Mauritius, Port Louis, has been registered. The Canadians have offered an alternative to Anticosti Island, but I would rather that it be a supplement. Nothing that happens in territories other than those mentioned in the Ten Year Plan will be added to the Plan.

There is no restriction on what the believers should do. I have encouraged the friends to buy more endowments. I have told them where to buy temple land. I have asked them to obtain at least one Ḥazíratu’l-Quds in ever territory. In Africa the endowments can be anywhere in the territory — where the land is cheapest. They need not be in the important cities. In Africa land can be obtained cheaply — not so in Europe. In South America it is not very expensive.

(In response to a question about the organization of the teaching work in Africa, the Guardian commented as follows.) In the northwestern area of Africa there must be a Regional Teaching Committee for the whole region — with sub-committees for the various countries or for smaller areas. This is because the region is so large. The general pattern which is good is a Regional Committee for the whole region and sub-committees for the territories that are within the region. But the other three National Spiritual Assemblies must study the situation to find their own best solutions. It is not necessary for each National Assembly to have the same system. In fact, you should encourage them to try different methods. We insist on uniformity in matters of principle, but we encourage diversity in lesser matters.

If the members of the Committees cannot travel, because of distance and expense, much can be done by correspondence. As with the Convention delegates who need not attend to Convention, Committee members need not necessarily attend all the meetings.

The National Spiritual Assembly of Central and East Africa must ensure that the Pygmies are reached. It is their responsibility. All such minority groups must be reached — the Berbers, the Somalis, the Bushmen of the Kalahari Desert, the Pygmies. In the United States there must be a committee for miscellaneous minorities, with a sub-committee for each minority.

The fund is the individual responsibility of each believer and the responsibility of each Assembly. Contributions must be a sacrifice by the individuals and must be voluntary and steady. Every believer should watch the needs of the Cause and contribute where they see the need is greatest. It is at the discretion of the people how they make their contributions. In Africa the National Spiritual Assemblies should make token contributions to the International Fund in order to be a part of the unity of giving of the world-wide community.

The African friends must learn to sacrifice for the fund. They should be encouraged to contribute to the Temple Fund. Only through sacrifice will the Cause and the teaching work prosper. In America the friends have to realize that they have been helped for fifty years with their temple. Now they must repay their debt. They must lower their standard of living in order to contribute more.

April 27th.

(This was the day and night of my second visit to Bahjí and the Most Holy Shrines.)

April 28th.

(On this last evening with the beloved Guardian, I was the only pilgrim at the dinner table, as Mrs. Mayberry and the Persian pilgrims were still in ‘Akká. The Guardian welcomed Hand of the Cause Charles Mason Remey and asked him if he had a good trip to America.)

How is the Faith progressing in Washington, D.C.? It is very important that the Faith should be firmly established in the capital city of the United States. This is an important responsibility of the American believers.

(The Guardian then spoke of the Temples.) The plans are ready for the Kampala and Sydney Temples. The Kampala Temple can now be widely publicized among the believers of the world. Photographs of the progress of the building work should be sent for publication in the Bahá'í news organs. Publicity among the Bahá'ís of Africa should be constant and wide-spread. But there should be no publicity among the non-Bahá'ís — in the press or anywhere else. It would be dangerous to do that, as the missionaries are very watchful and might try to cause the government to prevent the building of the Temple. Tell the National Spiritual Assembly that they must act quickly and quietly to ensure that the Temple is built.

It is very important that there should be firm, harmonious relationships between the Bahá'ís and the Uganda government. Philip Hainsworth should act as a liaison between the National Spiritual Assembly and the government. It is providential that he occupies a position in the government. It is a very grave and important responsibility which he has — to establish the firmest and most harmonious relationship with the government authorities in order to safeguard the building of the Temple. The National Spiritual Assembly must consult and instruct Philip what he is to do, and Philip must carry out the instructions of the Assembly. Tell this to the National Assembly and to Philip.

Will your husband visit Egypt en route to England? No? I hope he can see his father in Libya. It is many years that they have not met. I hope you will try to meet his father in Libya, and I hope you will go to Fezzan. This is a most important place for the Faith to be established because it is the place to which 'Abdu'l-Ḥamíd wanted to banish 'Abdu'l-Bahá. There is a center there now — there must be a Spiritual Assembly. Tell Fuad Rushdy that he should try to stay in Fezzan.

(Rúḥíyyih Khánúm asked the Guardian if he knew that Fuad Rushdy is my husband's cousin. He said yes, that he did know this.) Abdel Rahman Rushdy and Abdel Fattah Sabri, one in Alexandria and the other in Cairo, are brothers. This is one of the staunchest Bahá'í families in Egypt. Abdel Fattah Sabri is the pillar of the Faith in Egypt. He must be very proud of his son's pioneer services in Africa. Please tell Mr. Sabri to urge the Egyptian friends to pioneer to Libya, especially to Fezzan, as this is a most important place to which they wanted to banish the Master.

(My husband, Ḥasan, and I had wanted to make this pilgrimage together. But the Guardian had replied to our request by asking Ḥasan to postpone his pilgrimage while welcoming me. It seems clear to us at the time that the postponement of Ḥasan's visit to the Holy Land related to the war between Egypt and Israel the previous year, as Ḥasan's country of origin is Egypt. On this final night of my pilgrimage, I asked the beloved Guardian if Ḥasan would be able to make the pilgrimage in the future.)

Yes, Ḥasan is welcome to Haifa. He should come in February or March, 1958, a year from now. Is that convenient? (I replied that he might not be able to have leave from his job so soon again.) No — then he should come in May, 1959.

I am sending with you to the Hand of the Cause Musa Banání a piece of the plaster from the ceiling of the room in which the Holy Báb was incarcerated in the Prison Fortress of Mah-Ku. This is a most important room, for it is the room in which the Báb revealed His Book of Laws, in which book is contained His Covenant. This is the important difference between the Báb's Covenant and the Covenant of Bahá'u'lláh. Both the Báb's Laws and His Covenant are contained in one book. Bahá'u'lláh's Covenant is in a separate book from His book of Laws.

You will yourself carry this piece of plaster to Mr. Banání and will tell him what I have told you about it. Tell him it is to be placed in the foundation of the Kampala Temple on the occasion of the laying of the foundation stone. Mr. Banání will be my representative at the laying of the foundation stone, and he will place the plaster in its position with his own hands. A photograph must be made of this important event. (The beloved Guardian then took from his pocket a small, beautifully inlaid Persian mosaic box wrapped in a many-colored Persian silk handkerchief. He opened the box and removed the plaster which was wrapped in a piece of paper on which was written a statement, in Amatu'l-Bahá Rúhíyyih Khánum's handwriting, explaining what the plaster is. He then replaced the plaster and the paper in the box, again wrapped it in the silk handkerchief and handed it to me.)

Your work has not ended. It has only just begun. When you go back to Africa, you must be active in confirming many more new believers, in establishing many more new centers, and many more Local Spiritual Assemblies. New believers revitalized the Faith; new centers broaden its basis; new Assemblies consolidate it. New believers bring new centers; new centers bring new Local Spiritual Assemblies; new Local Spiritual Assemblies bring new National Spiritual Assemblies; and new National Spiritual Assemblies bring new Temples! (He gave this last series of in a tone of rising enthusiasm and, when he said "bring new Temples", he was smiling very broadly and triumphantly.) I want more believers, more centers, more Assemblies. Now is the time for the people of African to come into the Faith. Africa is like a dry field of grass. The Faith can spread across Africa like a flame.

(As this was the final night of my pilgrimage and my final opportunity for asking questions, I overcome my shyness and spoke to the Guardian of the perplexity which I and some of the other pioneers in Uganda felt at realizing how very little the newly declared African believers really know about the Faith.)

You cannot expect the illiterate African friends to understand much about the Faith. Watch them closely — watch their spirits. If the people are strongly attracted, if they are enthusiastic about the Faith, accept their declarations — even though they know little about the Teachings. This is a most delicate matter. You must watch closely for their reactions to the Faith. If they are enthusiastic, eager and have pure motives, accept them. Tell them that there is nothing to be gained from becoming Bahá'í except the blessing of sacrifice. Do not be too rigid about accepting their declarations — and do not be too right about letting them leave the Faith. They have the right to leave the Faith if they want to, and you must let them do so if they find they really cannot accept the teachings and principles of the Faith as they come to know of them. The doors of the Faith must be wide open for them to come into it, and open also for them to leave it if they really cannot accept the teachings. Some who are weak will grow to be strong and will be good teachers. Some will drop out. It does not matter if they know very little. They cannot be expected to know very much. The work of the pioneers is to keep the doors of the Faith open. And they should not stand in the doorway!

In America they teach the Faith by discussion and argument to convince. This is because the people are so materialistic. In Africa the people are not materialistic — hence they are more pure-hearted and responsive. In Persia they teach through the heart. The American believers must learn to teach through the heart.

(I had been wondering exactly what the Guardian referred to when he so often wrote about the “purity of heart” of the African people. I asked him to elaborate on this theme.)

When I speak of their purity of heart, I mean one thing and one thing only. I mean that they are not materialistic — that they have the capacity to live happily with new material possessions. When you see that the people have become materialistic, you will know that they have lost their purity of heart.

Materialism is like a cancer which is beginning to spread in Africa. It has already started in the cities and is now spreading outward from the cities to the villages. If you want to reach the pure in heart who are the spiritually receptive people, you must go as far away from the cities as possible — to the villages which have not yet been touched by the cancer of materialism. This spreading cancer of materialism will ultimately envelop the whole continent. The people of Africa are entering a long dark valley of materialism. Once this happens, it will be a long time before they come out of that valley. You must hurry. The time will come when the pioneers will be like spectators sitting on the sidelines, hardly able to do anything because of the materialism which will deprive the African people of their purity of heart and their spiritual receptivity. You must hurry, hurry! If you lose this opportunity, it will be a long time before it will come again.

The pagan peoples in the remote villages are the purest in heart and the most receptive people in Africa. You should go to the places which are farthest from the cities and are where the pagan people are to be found. There are still large numbers of pagan people in Africa. Try to find them and attract them to the Faith.

(Some of the Bahá'í friends hold the view that the Guardian is all-knowing and that it is, therefore, not necessary in writing reports to him to include all the facts. This, in my view, could result in reports that do not give a clear picture and could be misleading to the Guardian. I decided to ask the Guardian to clarify this matter. He replied to my explanation and question in a very emphatic tone.) I must be told all the facts. Nothing must be withheld from me. How can I give the best advice if I do not have all the facts before me?

(The beloved Guardian spoke of the Temple designs which were ready. Hand of the Cause Leroy Ioas was asked to bring the designs to the dinner table. The Guardian showed the plan for the German Temple to Hand of the Cause Mason Remey and asked Mason what he thought of it, as it had been designed by a non-Bahá'í German architect. Mason said he thought it was good and that he liked the dome. Then the Guardian showed the Australian design to Mason — with the changes the Australian friends had made in the columns. Then he showed him the Persian plan and told him that its construction was to be definitely postponed. Lastly he showed him and me the Kampala design. The Guardian commented on the shame of the dome being like the Shrine of the Báb and said that he liked the lantern on the top.) The Kampala Temple is being built because the Persian Temple cannot be built. The Persian Temple will cost about £350,000, the German one about £100,000, and the Kampala Temple about £50,000 or £60,000. Millie (Hand of the Cause Amelia Collins) has contributed £100,000 for this project. I have given two-fifths of the cost. So there are two-fifths still to be given by the 4,300 Bahá'í centers in the world. It works out about $18 per center.

The believers all over the world must now start contributing for the building of the Australian and Kampala Temples — especially the Americans for whose Temple the Bahá'ís of the world, especially the Persian, contributed for 50 years.

(The Guardian asked Mason how he like having two of his Temples under construction at the same time. He also asked Mason if he is prepared to draw the plans for forty more Temples, as land is to be acquired for fifty temples during the Ten Year Crusade.)

(Taking from his pocket a small metal phial containing a glass phial of perfume, the Guardian said to me):

I am giving you this attar of roses to take back with you to the friends. Please, share it especially with the African believers. How many African believers are on the National Assembly? Four — that is good.

(The beloved Guardian left the dinner table on that final, memorable evening at 11 PM. As he disappeared through the doorway, I wondered with very heavy heart if I would ever meet him again. Six months later he has “winged his flight” to the Abhá Kingdom, and life has never been the same again.

The zest and zeal, the eagerness and enthusiasm, the certitude and consecration of Shoghi Effendi were the very breath of life to those who served our Lord in his day. The warmth and gentleness of his love and kindness, his encouragement and inspiration were the experience of every pilgrim. But far and away the most distinctive characteristics which were graven upon the memory were the manifest nobility of nature, the deep strength of intellect, the burning single-mindedness of purpose, and the profoundly guided depth of insight and wisdom of the Guardian of the Cause of God.)

In.....when everybody else saw him in Baghdád I never thought that I would be able to see him but He said “Come and bring your mother.” Well Bill sent the letter to me immediately and of course I had to try and find the ways and means to get to Haifa and we begged, borrowed, and saved enough money to get there — to get this excursion ticket to Haifa because we weren’t able to get a ticket that would take us all around to enjoy everything and see everything hand see everybody. We got this ticket that let us stay over in Rome for 2 hr for refueling and Paris for another hour for some more fuel and to remain in Haifa for 9 days and we set out on this trip. Such a trip it was because I had never been on a plane but once before and you know an older person they are just scared of their shadows anyhow and I was just terrified. Of course he was young and young people are daring and he had been over in the army - he’d flown everywhere and done everything. Bill is one of these people who contrives - I think he has some of the ingenuity of Shoghi Effendi. He went everywhere because he was a Bahá’í in the army and I don’t know how he got too much time off but he went to all the summer conferences in Europe and Switzerland and everywhere while he was in the army so he knew all the places in Paris to go in Rome and whatnot but I didn’t know anything. So I was scared on the way and he took much of his time to comfort me on the plane trying to keep me from being so terrified. But there was one thing we talked about on this trip — I said Bill you know I know Shoghi Effendi’s going to say to us — he’s going to ask us — I have always felt very sensitive because there were so few Negroes in the Faith and we have had such difficulty bringing the Faith to them. I said Bill I know he’s going to say to us. “Why Mrs. Allison aren’t there more Negroes in the Faith.” And I said what are we going to tell him. Let’s figure out something now while we have time - figure out some rational thing to say to him and so we did. We took a long time that night trying to figure out the things that would sound reasonable to Shoghi Effendi why there weren’t many Negroes in the Faith. A Y We got to Tel Aviv and I was curious to see how the people looked - we stopped over in those two places for two hours - I didn’t see g anything but the airport you know and I said well I guess its really bad to come through Paris — women want to see Paris and to see some of the smart things there. Maybe I had no business to think of those things - maybe I should just think of my pilgrimage and not let that worry me. But you know it did just a little. We finally got to Tel Aviv and I was interested to see that the Israeli people looked just like the people in America. I mean the women had on that time-they had on peasant blouses way down-they had on these flats that the children the teenagers wear — and the wide peasant skirts and they looked like other people. They were bustling along fast and whatnot but they all did have a(-....?....)and they were all very relaxed looking. They all seemed very happy. The people travel by way of busses there. There are no street cars, no means of conveyances comparable to the ones we have in America so we had to get to Haifa from Tel Aviv by way of this Sherut they call it - it's a taxi.

We arrived there in time for lunch at the Pilgrim House - the western Pilgrim House. To me it was a very lovely place . . . . . the doors the bedroom doors, no that's Bahjí I am talking about, but the western Pilgrim House is very much more elaborate than Shoghi Effendi's own home. It's the place he lives is simple, very simple, very simple and very almost rigid. I mean there are so few conveniences there. They live very simply and to think that Amelia Collins, the beautiful Amelia who has all of this money, all of this stuff who lives in this one little cramped room with a basin and a single bed and the beds are something to talk about. They are you wouldn't want, honestly your worst enemy wouldn't be able to get a good night's rest on them. But she sleeps there and is so happy to be in the house with Shoghi Effendi and who can blame her. Today I- Shoghi Effendi is the last he was the last the last remnant of God on earth and she was just radiant all day every day all night just to be near him. And he was radiant to have her near him. He called her he managed to say something to her at every meal and it made her so happy for him to say something - he called her our Amelia". Well we got there in time for lunch and they asked us to have lunch and honestly I hadn't had a decent meal since I left the plane so I thought maybe here was lunch and I would enjoy that. But they had a lunch made from soup and the soup was made from eggs — some boiled eggs of some kind — and then they made a sort of paste and they cut these eggs up in it. Well by that time I began to think that Shoghi Effendi saw (I didn't eat?) it didn't matter. But if I had been hungry it would have been awful because he had the soup and cucumbers and they have lovely small fresh cucumbers and Arabian, not Arabian, its bread that—I don't know where it comes from Turkey, Israel, someplace- but its just bread but I didn't like it maybe you would have liked it. I didn't get much of a lunch but they were so hospitable and so glad to see Bill and me and they made us so happy. They made us so welcome and we were conducted to our rooms and we rested until about 9:00 o'clock I that is when Shoghi Effendi has dinner and he eats only one time every I day and that is the truth and how he manages to go all day long with one' meal I don't know and that is very late. Sometimes after 9 o'clock and sometimes a little before 9. He has this old Japanese man, Fujita, I think they call him, he knew 'Abdu'l-Bahé- He does everything for him. He waits on him, he I don't know what he does for him. I suppose he does I they say he does everything but he announces him — Shoghi Effendi has come, he says ~ he comes upstairs, that's where we live, and the dining room is downstairs. I had figured well I am going to come behind all the rest of them. When we got there, there was a Canadian pilgrim there, T the Grossmans from Germany were there, Mrs. Kinney I know she's an American but she's in France now she was there and there was a young I Persian pilgrim there. Then the regular household which is made up of the Reveal sisters, and Mr. Ioas and his wife, and Rúhíyyih, and Mason Remey. So when he came for us I started getting in back, getting myself back of Bill, back of anybody I could get back of because I knew this was, the time and I just didn't want to get out in front, I just didn't want to see him then I was scared, I just didn't want to that's all but I was pushed forward .....say every new pilgrim has to get in front so you get in front and Bill comes behind you and that's the way they shoved me into the dining room.

Well it was too late then to get nervous I just had to go forward. There comes a time when you just have to move and I moved and there was this beautiful man standing there. Beautiful I think you would think so too especially if you had seen that picture of in Time magazine that also I guess it was Time and Newsweek you were exposed to it. I had just, I don't know what I was looking for but I certainly wasn't looking for the beauty, the beautiful piece?) of humanity that I saw. The Guardian he was a beautiful man. He looked like - not to me — now Jackie and there are other people here who have been to Haifa too land this is just my impression. You know we are all different people and the impression is colored by the personality so you just bear with me other people might have a very different impression. This is mine only. To me he looked like a tan nordic - he looked like-a very nordic - he didn't look like an oriental to me. His eyes were, I know they weren't black, they weren't an orientals eyes + they were blue and grey, and he was tan with the most delicately chiseled features. Most orientals to me have A mouths.' You know they do have you noticed it — they sometimes they do but his lips were thin and his nose was carved and he was just angelic. He wore this fez ~ a black one with a black - I don't know what you call those robes – and then he had a tan one then he wore his tan robe. And he stood there until I came into the room. He embraces the men he doesn't embrace the women. He put his hands on your shoulders and takes your hand the greatest love on his face and he says “Won’t you sit down there Mrs. Allison opposite me?” The newest pilgrims, of course were given the honor of sitting at the head of the table and I was the newest pilgrim, Well I sat at the head and he sat on my side on my right—hand side and everybody else there were about 15-16 people at table. Mason Remey always sat in front of him because he is especially fond of Mason Remey and he doesn’t hear very well so I I think he reads he is able to read his lips. So he always sat there and he let me sit at the head of the table but by that time I was speechless. I just sat P» and I didn’t even raise my head to look at him - about the 4th one around the table and finally I did I think it must have been the 3rd night before I was able to say something - to ask question or anything of the kind. As I said before he would talk to you ~ he asked me questions and I would nod and many times during that first night he would ask me something and I looked up at him and when I looked up at him — trick in a moment I would say it was a trick — I thought it was a mannerism like he would raise his eyes - that whole eye would the whole thing would go back and the whole eye - the light of the eye would just blind you with its beauty. He would just look at you with compassion and love and the whole thing was there and the lashes were back and they were it was just beautiful and you would just be lost in that eye in the sight of his eyes. That only happened about once every night because you couldn’t stand it — at least I couldn’t. Now the people who were not impressed that way - who didn’t think of it at all - that is What it did to me and I couldn’t eat hardly that night at all.

I didn’t feel anything particular — I wouldn’t say that I was all didn’t eat much that night — I just could not wrought up and whatnot - the life had just gone out of me. It was just like I was when he said on the second night he said “Mrs. Allison did you go to the Shrines today?” I said “Yes Shoghi Effendi I went.” He said But what did you feel? What did you feel when you went into the Shrines to pray? How did you feel? What struck you?” Well I sat there for a minute and I said what should I say to him to sound as if I were really impressed - what shall I say — what words shall I bring out and I said to myself I am going to say the truth. I didn’t feel anything — I was drained - absolutely - there was no feeling I just laid there without any life at Bahá’u’lláh’s Shrine. Just lay there for 20 minutes - just laid there with no thought no nothing and I said that to him I said “Shoghi Effendi I just didn’t feel anything. There was no life in me even. I just lay there with no feeling” and I don’t know what I expected him to say but he said “Mrs. Allison” after a few minutes he said “you old people are fine people. He said they are talented people” he said they are still asleep and pure. Now I don't know what that meant. Maybe because I didn't fabricate, because I just said what was true. I just don't know. That's what he said to me – because I told him that I had no feeling — I was spent. Well the next time I went to the Tomb it was different of course but the first time that was the truth I just didn't do anything. I just laid there and prayed. Until..... and I looked at Bill and he looked at me and then we knew we were in the presence of something that was different. “I don't blame the Negroes in the South for not being Bahá'ís” he said “Maybe if I were a Negro and in the South and in America, I would not be a Bahá'í either.” He was most militant on the race question and I think he talked so much about race because we were Negroes probably he wouldn't have been so talkative about that if we had not been Negroes but that was the first thing he said to me. And the first thing and plus Bill being very vocal and young I don't know whether it was because I wasn't hungry or what but I and daring - you know Bill - when he got, when there was a lull in the conversation I think he wanted to say something to him so he would say “Oh Shoghi Effendi — he said, “the youth in Chicago (he was living in Chicago then) he said, “the youth in Chicago told me to ask you a question. “He said “May I ask it?” and he said “Yes.” And he said They wanted me to ask you how to promulgate the Word in Chicago — how better to attract the youth” and before he could finish his sentence - he didn't allow him to finish it — he said “Oh young man, you're wasting your time in Chicago. He said “Oh young man you're wasting your time” just like that he threw his hands up — “you're wasting your time in Chicago” and poor Bill - I felt so sorry for him. Because he shut him up right away and Bill had nothing to say for 2 or 3 nights after that because Shoghi Effendi was very impatient. I don't know why perhaps it's because he told you to get out of Chicago - he told us get out Chicago - he said you're wasting your time there. And the boy I went back to Chicago and stayed 2 or 3 months and he left.

Well we as I said I'd like to tell you how Bahá'u'lláh — how He (bountly?) extended to even the vanity of an old woman - I got sick while I was - on the last night we were there as we were sitting at table and all at once I got very cold - I had been feeling all right I got Very cold and I said “Bill I wish you would go up” I whispered to him “go up stairs and go up and get me something to put around me and immediately he looked back he said “Mrs. Allison you are ill.” I said “Oh no Shoghi Effendi” I was afraid to be ill - I didn't want to be ill and be in the presence of him — I said “Oh no I am not ill.” He said “You are.” and he said “Take her upstairs and put her to bed and get a doctor.” So I went upstairs and Amelia took me and got a doctor and I had a temperature of 104 and the doctor said I must not move under 5 days. So Bill had 5 extra days with the Guardian and I wasn't sick at all. I didn't feel anything. The temperature was there I suppose but I just stayed in the room and then when we were ready to go home the airline couldn't find anything for us but a ticket that would permit us to spend a night in Paris and 2 days at the expense of the airline. The grandest hotel you could imagine - I couldn't — I'd never been in anything like it before and was all out of place - the beds were just as long as they were wide - just as wide as they were long and the pillows were just as long as they were wide and you could just bury yourself in them they were so wonderful. And I said to Bill I we could never afford this and he said "Mother maybe the airline." I said the airline couldn't afford to do this for us and when we were ready to go we asked what the expenses were and they said "Well you've been the guest of Air France." Breakfast and all of that wonderful room and dinner. Well to me that was a sign of great bounty because I'll never be able to get to Paris again and I never would have gotten there this time but we spent the whole day visiting all of Paris - we did all of Paris - Bill knew every place to go and it was just wonderful for his old mother.

I'll tell you what a pilgrimage consists of - it's 9 days of course - and the weekend is spent at — you go to 'Akká — at Bahjí that's where you live - Bahjí is the beautiful palace - it is a mansion really this man (name inaudible) says it's a palace and it is where Bahá'u'lláh I spent His last days. A beautiful place. Great vaulted halls and a bedroom off of each — I mean about 10 bedrooms off of this great vaulted hall - these magnificent rugs that the pilgrims bring — they bring gifts. They all come and they bring gifts to Shoghi Effendi whenever they come and usually they are these beautiful rugs - Persian rugs and they decorate these rooms - these places. The Bahá'ís have many places that they keep up in the East. We are rich in spots and houses and mansions - I mean places where Bahá'u'lláh once walked or once lived and they are all kept up beautifully by the Bahá'ís and they are all K decorated beautifully with these gifts that the pilgrims have brought- and this Mansion of Bahjí is just a beautiful place. And we stayed there 2 nights — the pilgrims go there and stay 2 nights and there that is your headquarters. You go to Mazriih that is one of the places? That is the place that Bahá'u'lláh went directly from 'Akká and then from Mazra'ih. He went to Bahjí. And then yuo went to 'Akká to the old 1 prison where they knew where He lived. They keep this room under lock and key. It's sealed for the Bahá'ís to make their pilgrimages to.

'Akká is a dirty - it's a filthy city - it's just an awful place and the old prison now is being used by the Israeli government as a hospital for the insane. And you go there and it takes you just about the weekend to make these places with living at Bahjí. Of course you know that the Oriental, the Eastern believers are much more reverent — they have something that we Americans don't have. They have so much humility and so much reverence you can see it in their faces. "We are so brash — I mean you could tell it at table. You could just see it at the table even when we were with Shondi Effendi. The American pilgrims would just talk and they were just gabbering and talk and carry on and the Orientals would wait and ask his permission to ask questions as they would humbly ask the question. But no American would ever do that. They would be talking all out of turn when somebody else was trying to talk, they would be talking too. I was very ashamed of myself and the way as were doing. I was ashamed of Bill for wanting all at once to know something right away and that's spirit. But as I said before the Orientals were very different — they were very humble. And we had the - on this pilgrimage we had a gentleman from Persia and his family who were making the pilgrimage — he had his family - his wife and his daughter and his small son. And they had lived and tried to live in Turkey to pioneer but he hadn't been able to make a living for his family so he went back — he had to go back to Persia and he learned how to make wigs and then he went back to Turkey again and made these wigs and he had accumulated enough to bring his family on this pilgrimage. He was just so reverent and Shoghi Effendi at one time at the table said that he had had a nice afternoon because-I don't remember his name-because he had such a beautiful time with this Persian gentleman. Now he - I just can't imagine his ever saying that about an American that he had had a beautiful time because of an American. But just to show you how their humility is — that night at the - in the Mansion - Dr. Ḥakím ~ he always conducted the pilgrimage tours — he assigned the rooms to the pilgrims. And he was very gracious; he gave me Shoghi Effendi's room to sleep in that night. "I want you to have his room tonight" and I was just dumbfounded and just honestly I just don't know what happened but I had his room. In giving the rooms out and in considering the women-when it came to this gentleman they gave him the room where the Covenant-breakers ~ the pictures of the Covenant-breakers were — well the rooms were all with pictures in them. These were members of Shoghi Effendi's family too but they were Covenant-breakers and he didn't say anything then but all night long his wife didn't sleep. She said "He prayed and hollered all night because he said those eyes were following him. All night the eyes of the Covenant-breakers." And the poor gentleman was, the next morning he was worn out from his tears and his praying because he had to sleep in that room. Jessie Reveal left the next day so they gave him that room. But just to show you how effective — how emotional they are and how reverent and how they love Shoghi Effendi. We could never appreciate the love that these people these Eastern pilgrims show for Shoghi Effendi because to us he was great I mean he was the "sign of God on earth" but he was a man and he is a man and he doesn't want you to do that but they see more in him than we do. At least it seems that way to me.

Now on the-just before I got ready to come I had been there about 5 days, Mr. Ioas said to me one day - we always talked but he left because we just had a fest of talking - you know how you do. You can let down your hair then and talk so he said one day he said "Mrs. Allison I think we've got some chickens. I think the Persian pilgrims have brought some chickens in there. Do you think you could fix us some chicken?" everybody all the pilgrim women, contributed something before they left to a dinner. I know Mrs. Grossmann fixed some icecream and somebody else would do something for the dinner. You know everybody tried. And he said "Do you suppose you could fix us some - do something with those chickens that we have?" He said "Shoghi Effendi loves chicken" and when he said that of course I said "Yes I'll do my very best with them" Well when they brought the chickens out and I saw them I said "My Lord, Bahá'u'lláh You are going to have to help me, I can't do anything with those things" They had been in the freezer for about a month and they were just the color of that fireplace back there and they were just two small chickens and then they had a turkey that had been there a long time. So they dumped the three things in my lap and said now "You see what you can do with them - Shonhi Effendi likes them and he likes gravy" I said Bahá'u'lláh you are going to have to help me" I did a lot of praying with my cooking I had a lot of children and I had to make the oatmeal and Prunes all around all of my life so I knew that I had to pray about them. And another thing they cook on oil stoves. You know if you know anything about oil stoves you know you've got to start before day to get breakfast they are so slow. Well I started with these chickens all the way up in the day and I prayed and I cooked and I prayed and I cooked and then she came over. Rúhíyyih said he likes onions Mrs. Allison — do you suppose you could put some onions in there?" I said yes I'll fix it up as best I can well I stewed and stewed and I put the onions in last so that they would be just crunchy and right and Bahá'u'lláh really was with me because when we got to the table the chickens were just nice — of course they weren't Southern fried chicken — that was what Leroy was talking about — Southern Fried Chicken — and you couldn't fry those things at all but they were stewed so that I put all turkeys and chickens together so that it didn't taste like turkey, it didn't taste like chicken. But it was a mixture of the two. But the gravy was delicious and Shoghi Effendi calls onions Ahnions that's the only Oriental thing I could detect about him. He said ahnions. And he had two or three helpings of the chicken. And I couldn't eat I was so thankful I just sat and thanked Bahá'u'lláh and the next day he said "Ms. Allison I went to thank you I slept last night I slept better than I slept in a long time. I don't know whether he doesn't eat enough or what abut he slept because he had eaten the chicken he said. And'He enjoyed them so much.

Well now that was all I wanted. I was just blessed from then on. Well Rúhíyyih wouldn't let that be enough. The next night she said Mrs. Allison could you make me some corn bread?" I said yes I'll try." Well you know they don't have much — they don't*have much in Israel. I mean they don't have any chickens at all they have all the eggs you could eat but I don't know where the eggs come from because there are no chickens. Just eggs on eggs but no chickens. And the meal (?) wasn't very good — they have milk too. And they have butter. And Shoghi Effendi makes this great concession to the western pilgrims - we have coffee. Every morning you have all the "Nescafe" you can drink. But that's about all and they have these delicious small cucumbers

Mrs. Thelma Allison

Page 8

That you have for dinner always - they always have cucumbers for dinner. They have parsley, a lot of parsley and they make an omelet out of the eggs and the parsley and they cut it - it's green. It's very tasty. And then they eat lots and lots and lots and lots of rice. Big patties of rice they set in front of Shoghi Effendi and he would he just loved it and it was very dry — they put a (end first side)

Shoghi Effendi he just loved it and it was very dry - they put a saffron on it that turns it yellow and then they brown it in that and when it's brown it's crisp and to him that's a delicacy. "Oh let me give you some of this brown saffron Mrs. Allison" and I didn't want it but I took that and tried to eat it — he put all of that stuff on my plate and I'd sit there and try to eat it because put it there. And not until the second or third day when she said to me "You don't have to eat all he gives you. Just because he gives it to you don't try to eat it all" and then of course I stopped. But I would just sit there and eat and eat until I was stuffed up to here with just rice. And then if you want something over it you know what they put over it? Yogurt. And I would try to eat it and I just finally she was merciful enough to tell me I didn't have to eat it and I stopped eating it. But the day we had the corn bread she said "Shoghi Effendi this is something else Mrs. Allison has made - I know you'll like this corn bread." He looked at it and it wasn't nice at all because the meal was — you know how you make corn bread and it sticks together — it wasn't light at all - I couldn't make it light. I don't know why but it wasn't as soggy and (big?) and he looked at it and said "Oh no. I don't want that." He said that, "that is too much starch in that" which was right of course. He could tell. He said "No I don't want that" and I said to myself well I don't care whether you eat it or not I fixed it up with the ..... but they enjoyed it because they hadn't had any corn bread before. Well that was just a little something to tell you how Bahá'u'lláh how good He was to me to allow me to do that for Shoghi Effendi. He was very nice to Bill and me he told me right away that he wanted me to know + “Did you realize that the colored peoples of the world were the apples of ‘Abdu’l-Bahá’s eyes. That they were the apples of Bahá’u’lláh’s eyes --He loved them” and he said “Do you know how much I love them?” Well I just shook my head and the tears just flowed but I think that was a welcome — that he was trying to assure me that we belong too. He said he loved them, Bahá’u’lláh loved them, ‘Abdu’l-Bahá loved them and I love them too. He was very nice in that way. He was very militant - )He said “Go back” - some of the things I can’t think of and I don’t have any notes on — you had a review -(I mean people told you about the pilgrimage last year so I didn’t think there would be anybody who’d want to hear it again so I didn’t bring any notes. Maybe

Notes

Bill has the distinction of being, with his mother, the last Bahá'ís to visit the Beloved Guardian, in Haifa. His mother wanted to do something for our Beloved Guardian, and so went into the kitchen to cook the meals, but she became ill, and then they stayed longer, and Bill had a week alone with the Guardian.

The Last Pilgrim

William Allison

“Our pilgrimage {{p1}} with the Beloved Guardian revealed these significant insights regarding the world; in a clear and strong voice, the Guardian, on the first evening warned that the distant future of Russia was very bright but that the immediate future was very, very dark. He described her downfall as a result of the injustice of her government and that her entire system of government rested on un-Bahá'í principles. In this regard, he pointed out that industrialization was a permanent feature of civilization while the political order was an ephemeral one. He compared the Western civilization to the Fall of Rome. He pointed out that the Russian (the so-called barbarians) will come to support the Faith just as the Huns had done during the early Christian times.

There is perfect logic to all that the Beloved Guardian does and says. He even provides this logic for the pilgrims in establishing an idea, and suggests they point out the logic and wisdom of the counsels he gives the friends in these matters. For instance, he stressed the ascendancy of the colored races in the affairs of the world and the gradual recession of the white races. Bahá'u'lláh has said that the Faith will represent the majority of mankind and since the majority is undoubtedly of the brown and black races, it is to these people that the Cause of Bahá'u'lláh must find new adherents and teachers. This same logic carries in teaching the Faith with concentration on the Negro in the Southern states in America, since his number is greater in some areas than the whites. In these areas, he said, the spiritual assemblies should represent the majority of the people and, therefore, there should be colored assemblies.

His admonitions regarding the future of America and the friends in this country consumed no small part of our pilgrimage. "Great dangers" were the words he used, "are ahead for the American nation." While he made no mention specifically of the calamity, or form that danger would take, he did stress that America would be held responsible for the perfidious injustices inflicted upon the minorities, Negro and Indian. The severity of this (racial) turmoil at present gives no hint to the pent-up tensions, which the Guardian believes will unleash themselves in a revolution that will originate in deepest Africa and spread a trail of blood and destruction through Western Europe and America.

Two ills afflict the American society, the Guardian asserted — materialism and racialism. Reviewing the history of materialism, the Guardian showed where Western Europe had developed materialism and now America was carrying it to the extreme. With a glint of sarcasm in his voice he denounced the so-called American security of giant skyscrapers and colossal edifices. With a swift movement of his hand, he demonstrated how quickly these institutions could be swept away in seconds. How foolish of the Americans, he stated, for them to regard their security in these "towers of Babel". {{p2}} Indeed, he carried this symbology one step further and called New York, Chicago, and San Francisco "Triple Babylons".

In a grave voice the Beloved Guardian uttered a strong warning to the American friends to disassociate themselves from these rampant evils (materialism and racialism) or be swept away with the rest of the American society which must be held accountable. The Faith in America has not grown, the Guardian pointed out, because it has not been opposed, but met no test, — had any crises. It is the courageous and daring action of the friends that produce these very crises. They have a two-fold effect; on the one hand, they purify the Faith, and on the other hand, they cause the Faith to grow, to catch on fire, push it ahead. By making enemies and conquering enemies, the Faith marches onward.

Without any reservations about the matter, the Guardian regards dispersion and teaching the Cause as the most meritorious task the friends can discharge at this time. He stressed the importance of these regions of the world for Bahá'ís to consider in their plans to disperse. The South Pacific now holds primary importance for the friends. Then comes Africa, Europe with France the most needy, the Western Hemisphere and Alaska. Of primary importance for believers in America are the Negroes and the Catholics. He has given the teaching of the Negro in America priority. In this same light he has emphasized the need to seek out Catholics and concentrate on them. He feels this will bring on opposition and tests which are basically good for the Faith. The friends will need to demonstrate courage and daringness in their teaching efforts. They must evince a sense of sincerity in promulgating the Cause so as to attract and not to antagonize. He recounted the spirit and ardor of the pioneers in Africa and South Pacific as an outstanding example of the true Bahá'í attitude and the results it achieves.

Notwithstanding the reasons why the Faith has not grown in America, the Guardian was greatly disturbed over the alarming losses in the U.S. Always he had the figures and facts of the ten — year crusade at his fingertips and called off the exact number of believers in all of Africa at the time. He seemed, imperceptibly, to think of the World Crusade as a contest in which these areas of the world were contestants: South Pacific, Africa, America, Europe, etc. He said the children of the mother community, Africa and South Pacific, were rapidly outstripping her for position and rank. He compared the increase in the Bahá'í fold in Africa over the past four years, some 4,000 believers, and in the South Pacific, over 3,500, to the decrease in the American community in the past year from 8,000 to now less than 6,500. In every country except America the Faith is growing, the Guardian worriedly contended, “Now it remains to be seen what will happen in America.”

One evening the Beloved Guardian envisioned the future World Order of Bahá'u'lláh in terms that are difficult to forget. He began by saying that the Báb had announced the “Plan”. Bahá'u'lláh established the laws of the “Plan”. ‘Abdu'l-Bahá laid out the “blue print” for the erection. Now the Bahá'ís are in the formative phase of establishing the administrative order of the “Plan”. He pointed to the establishment of the Divine “Arc” of Salvation being likened to the “Arc” which the Bahá'ís are erecting on Mount Carmel with the Shrine of the Báb, the Archives Building, the House of Justice and the Temple. Outside of this arc the Bahá'ís are carrying out this plan by their widespread teaching activities which is part of this “Arc of Salvation”. Near the end of the formative period the nations will unite of their own volition and with the non-committant expansion of the Cause become merged into the fabric of the World Order of Bahá'u'lláh. There will be another Manifestation before this will happen.

The Guardian admires the Negro people. He called them sound, sensitive and talented. He said if they had not striven hard and acquired the wealth and power that they possess the whites would have treated them just as they are treating the Indians.

The Guardian said there will be Bahá'í Kings. The Hands of the Cause of God, with their own organization, will be these kings. Their duties, specifically, will be to propagate the Faith and protect it. The Hands of the Cause will outrank the members of the House of Justice.

Huqúq. More will be given on this in later years. It is solely for purification of money and one's income.

The institution of the Guardianship interprets, directs the Hands, heads the House of Justice and defines their sphere of legislation.

The summer schools are too pointless, too much emphasis on dances, picnics and frivolity. Too much committees, agendas, etc.

He upheld the theory of private property. Many features of capitalism correct and many corrupt. The Most Great Peace will not come until the most Great Justice is established. A long time.

Believers in America have a superficial understanding of their Faith. Whites are too preoccupied, shallow. All should study and read more like the English and Canadians. Many whites are prejudiced and not aware of it. Should search their souls and consciences.

His parting words were to encourage the friends. He seemed to be saying as ‘Abdu’l-Bahá before: “If you are not happy now, when shall you be!”

The following address was delivered by Amelia Collins, Hand of the Cause, Haifa, Israel, at the Intercontinental Bahá'í Conference held in Frankfurt/Main, Germany, July 25-29, 1958, which she attended as the chosen representative of Shoghi Effendi, late Guardian of the Bahá'í Faith.

HOW CAN I ever find words to bring you what is in my heart about our beloved Guardian! {{p1}} I feel we must each so fill ourselves at this time with his spirit and his wishes that it will carry us through the next five years of the glorious Crusade he initiated and enable us to consummate his every hope and wish. This, the fulfillment of his own Plan, is the living memorial we must build in his memory.

When I first heard of the passing of ‘Abdu’l-Bahá, I was a very young believer and after the provisions of His will became known, my whole heart and soul turned to that youthful Branch, appointed by Him to watch over and guide the Faith of Bahá’u’lláh. How I prayed that God would help me to make him happy!

In 1923 I first met our beloved Guardian in Haifa. He was just a young man then, full of determination to carry forward the great work entrusted to his care. He was so spontaneous, so trusting and loving and outgoing in the buoyancy of his beautiful heart. {{p2}} Through the years we all watched with wonder and ever-deepening devotion to him and appreciation of his God-given gifts, the unfoldment of Bahá’u’lláh’s Divine Order which he built up so patiently and wisely all over the world. But, oh friends, at what great cost to himself!

In 1951, when the beloved Guardian called some of the friends to serve in Haifa, I began to learn of what he had passed through. His face was sad, one could see his very spirit had been heavily oppressed by the agony he went through for years during the period when the family pursued their own desires and finally abandoned the work of the Faith and their Guardian to go their own way. I can truthfully say that for a number of years we who served him at the World Center seldom saw him smile, and very often he poured out to us his woes and confided some of the things he had passed through. I do not know in any great detail the day to day afflictions of Bahá’u’lláh and ‘Abdu’l-Bahá, but sometimes I wonder if they could have been any more heartbreaking than those of our beloved Shoghi Effendi.

The Guardian had a profound and innate humility. Whenever the Faith was involved, he was fiery in its defense, king-like in the loftiness of his bearing, the authority with which he spoke. But as a human being he was self-effacing, would brush aside our adulation and praise, turn everything we wished to shower on him towards the central figures of our Faith. {{p3}} We all know this characteristic of his how he would never allow any photographs to be taken of himself, or give any of himself, but invariably encouraged the friends to place the Master’s picture in their rooms; how he would not allow anyone to have his clothes or personal things lest they be regarded as relics; how he disliked any signs of personal worship — though he could never control what was in our hearts for him!

The Master said: “O ye the faithful loved ones of ‘Abdu’l-Bahá! It is incumbent upon you to hue the greatest care of Shoghi Effendi, . . . that no dust of despondent and sorrow may stain his radiant nature. . . .” Neither his family, nor the people of the world, nor I am afraid we Bahá’ís, protected that radiant heart of Shoghi Effendi.

After the years of sorrow and trial he went through with the family, after his final separation from them, there came a new joy and hope to our beloved Guardian. The rapid progress made in the attainment of so many of the goals of the World Crusade lifted him up. How can I ever describe to you his eyes when he would come over to the Pilgrim House and announce to us a new achievement; they sparkled with light and enthusiasm and his beautiful face would be all smiles. {{p4}} Often he would send over one of his maps and when it was spread out on the dining table, his finger, full of infinite strength, insistence and determination, would point out the new territory opened, the new Ḥazíratu'l-Quds purchased, the new language translated, as the case might be. I feel it would be no exaggeration to say that it was the progress of the Ten Year Plan that gave him the encouragement to go on working so hard, for he was very tired. More than once he said during the last year of his life, that his ministry had lasted longer than that of either Bahá'u'lláh or 'Abdu'l-Bahá, and complained of the crushing burden, but none of us could foresee it presaged his release, that he was burned out with thirty-six years of struggle, of constant work, of sorrow and self-sacrifice.

His conscientiousness was like a fire burning in him; from his earliest childhood he showed the sensitive, noble, painstaking qualities that characterized him, and grew stronger as he matured and throughout his Guardianship.

The friends should realize that Shoghi Effendi had no foreknowledge that he would be appointed the Successor of 'Abdu'l-Bahá. The shock of the Master's passing was followed by an even more terrible one — the shock of his own appointment as the "Sign of God." {{p5}} He grew in this supreme office, which we know was under the direct guidance of the Twin Manifestations of God, even as a tree grows to full maturity and bears goodly fruits, but at such a cost to himself of sacrifice that no one will ever properly estimate.

Let us review for a moment, however briefly, some of the services Shoghi Effendi rendered the Faith of Bahá'u'lláh.

When 'Abdu'l-Bahá passed away, the Shrine of the Báb consisted of six rooms surrounded by a small piece of land. The Mansion of Bahjí and most of its lands were in the hands of the Covenant-breakers or their friends, except for the Holy Tomb itself, which covers a very small area, and two pilgrim houses, one rented. The Master Himself, though so widely loved and respected, was not known as the Head of an independent religion, but rather regarded as a Moslem notable and Holy Man. The young Guardian, freed by his very youthfulness, armed with the power conferred on him by his Grandfather, cut with one stroke the bonds still holding in appearance the Bahá'ís to Islám — he refused to go to the Mosque. Tender, sensitive, crushed with grief, fighting his own inner battle to be reconciled to the glory of the station so suddenly revealed to him, Shoghi Effendi began to do all the Master had hoped to accomplish and to carry into effect His Words when He hinted that after Him the veils would be rent asunder. {{p6}} The Perfect Exemplar, the loving and forgiving Father, had passed away and the Order of Bahá'u'lláh was now to take shape under the guidance of the Champion of Divine Justice.

With wistful eyes the blessed Master had gazed up at the Shrine of the Báb and said that it was not possible to build the Shrine of the Báb, but God willing, it would be done. The Guardian first added three rooms during the early years of his ministry to make the building a nine-roomed edifice. In 1944, the model of the completed Shrine was unveiled on the occasion of the One Hundredth Anniversary of the Báb's Declaration; it had an arcade and a dome, both of which the Master had stated it should have. By 1953 it was all built. Year after year the Guardian increased the size of the Shrine gardens, himself laying out the design in its minute detail. Patiently, persistently, he had the lands about it bought, designating each area, supervising each transaction, overcoming every obstacle. He got the Mansion of Bahá'u'lláh away from the arch Covenant-breaker, Muḥammad-‘Alí, and turned it into a Museum and Holy Place; he had all the Bahá'í properties exempted from government and municipal taxes; he had the Bahá'í marriage recognized as legally binding; {{p7}} he secured first the British and later, in a much stronger form, from the new State of Israel, recognition of the fact that this is a World Religion, whose Holy Places and whose World Center are in Haifa and ‘Akká, and that he as the Head of this Faith had a higher position than any other religious dignitary in the land.

He chose the design himself and erected the monuments over the resting places of the Greatest Holy Leaf, her mother and brother, and the wife of ‘Abdu’l-Bahá. He likewise specified the International Archives building should be of the type and proportions which it is, approving himself every detail and often changing details until he got them the way he wanted them. He located its exact position on the ground, the size of its walls and stairs, the garden surrounding it. This building will house precious Bahá'í relics such as no previous religion has ever possessed. Shoghi Effendi, appealing direct to high government officials, secured Mazra'ih as a Holy Place for the Bahá'í pilgrims to visit, after it had been promised to other institutions when the Jewish State was formed. It was at his decision that the beautiful Temple site on Mt. Carmel was purchased, in the spot ‘Abdu’l-Bahá had wished; and from the World Center streamed out the translations, the letters, the writings of the Guardian in a mighty flow, in exquisite language, full of power, accurate, profound, inspired.

The hand of the Guardian was a motivating force. {{p8}} Let there be no mistake that any glove ever did the work of that hand. The gloves were poor and unworthy instruments for the most part, well nigh useless judged by human standards. It was his hand in everything, from the littlest to the biggest thing, that grasped every work, initiated every enterprise, never relaxed, never relinquished its grip until the task was done. Many gloves frayed out on that powerful hand, fell apart, were of necessity cast aside, but the work of the Cause went on uninterrupted until the last night of his life!

The Administrative Order of the Faith, the provisions for which were laid down by Bahá'u'lláh Himself and amplified by ‘Abdu’l-Bahá, Shoghi Effendi set out to build. When the Master passed away, there were few Spiritual Assemblies in the world, and only one national body functioning in a very rudimentary manner. The builder, however, had been provided by God; the Great Administrator, with an almost unique capacity for organization, with a wisdom vouchsafed from on High, with a world-encompassing vision, set about his task. Patiently, persistently, painstakingly, Shoghi Effendi reared strong national bodies. He brought into being the International Bahá'í Council — the embryonic Universal House of Justice. {{p9}} He kept the balance, the perfect balance, between a thing too loosely knit, too individualistic to function efficiently, and too much efficiency, too many rules and regulations, too much running into endless and unnecessary detail which is one of the great afflictions of present day civilization. When he had created the system and reared the machinery of the Bahá'í Administrative Order, he suddenly shifted the whole mechanism into gear; he called for the first Seven-Year Plan, the first step in the Promulgation of 'Abdu'l-Bahá's Divine Plan, which is the instrument for the spiritual conquest of the entire globe. Plan followed plan. The scattered diversified followers of the Faith began to take shape as the army of Bahá'u'lláh; guided by the National Spiritual Assemblies. The pioneers, the vanguard as he called them of this great host, began to march out and over the world until, at the half-way point of the mighty Crusade he had launched, Shoghi Effendi could look upon a united, strong, enthusiastic, world-wide community of believers, who had already achieved the major part of the tasks he had set for them.

What gifts he had, what gifts he gave: Gleanings From the Writings of Bahá'u'lláh, The Dawn-Breakers — Nabíl's Narrative, The Kitáb-i-Íqán, The Hidden Words, and the Epistle to the Son of the Wolf, translations of superlative style and power, making available the essence of Bahá'u'lláh's Message to the western world. {{p10}} What life he breathed into us through his own writings, beginning with his World Order letters — the Goal of a New World Order, the Dispensation of Bahá'u'lláh, followed by the Unfoldment of World Civilization, (now The World Order of Bahá'u'lláh), The Advent of Divine Justice, The Promised Day is Come, works which were supplemented by dynamic cables and special messages. To such a long list of distinguished works was added the finest flower of his mind, his masterful review of the first one hundred years of the greatest Dispensation vouchsafed by God to man on this planet — God Passes By.

His was the vision which looked at the Cause as a whole, saw present and future as part of one mighty panorama. He not only collated the teachings, but, with a strong sense of history, assembled the most precious relics in the Bahá'í world into a religious archives such as no previous Faith has ever possessed. He saw to it that all the precious sites associated with the Báb and Bahá'u'lláh and the heroes and martyrs of this Cause were, whenever possible, purchased: the House where Bahá'u'lláh was born in Tíhrán, His father's house in Takur, the Síyáh-Chál, where the first rays of His Divine Mission fell upon Him in the blackness of a dungeon, the House He occupied in Constantinople, and one of the Houses He occupied in Adrianople; the bleak fortress of Máh-Kú, where the Báb revealed the Bayán, His shop in Búshihr, and many other sites associated with Him and His companions. {{p11}} At Shoghi Effendi's instructions an exhaustive photographic record was made of hundreds of these spots associated with the Heroic Age of the Faith.

He encouraged the Persian believers to compile the histories of the early days of the Cause in their provinces, and laid upon the Persian National Spiritual Assembly the great responsibility of collecting and transcribing the Tablets of Bahá'u'lláh and 'Abdu'l-Bahá, thus preserving for posterity a truly priceless heritage.

He was truly the builder by nature; he completed the first Mashriqu'l-Adhkár in America, the great Mother Temple of the West, unique in having had its foundation stone laid by 'Abdu'l-Bahá Himself. He initiated, chose the designs, and set in motion the plans for the erection of the African, the European, the Australasian, the Tíhrán and the Holy Land Temples. He specified the sites for the National Ḥazíratu'l-Quds and the national endowments. {{p12}} He named the languages into which the literature of the Faith was to be translated, and personally encouraged the pioneers to go forth and fulfill 'Abdu'l-Bahá's plan.

Ah, but he did more than this! He made each believer feel that over him watched a just mind and a loving heart; that he had a part to play, was precious to the Faith, had duties to discharge, enjoyed privileges infinitely precious because he was a member of the Community of the Most Great Name. Let us never forget this, never lose sight of this! This oneness he made a reality, this staunch loyalty to our Faith he implanted in our hearts. His work in this world is done. Ours is not.

We are all, in a way, Shoghi Effendi's heirs. We have inherited his work. His plan is completely laid out. Ours is the task to fulfill it. We must, each of us, complete our share of the World Crusade. This is the memorial we must build to our beloved Shoghi Effendi.

Let us love him more now than ever before, and through the power of our love attract his love to us, and bring his blessing on our labors.

Let us not fail him, for he never failed us. Let us never forget him, for he never forgot us.

[End.]
